

*MASTER NEGATIVE
NO. 91-80044-4*

MICROFILMED 1991

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES/NEW YORK

as part of the “Foundations of Western Civilization Preservation Project”

Funded by the NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Reproductions may not be made without permission from Columbia University Library

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the United States -- Title 17, United States Code -- concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material...

Columbia University Library reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgement, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

AUTHOR:

FISCHER, GUSTAVUS

TITLE:

LATIN GRAMMAR ...

PLACE:

NEW YORK

DATE:

1876

Master Negative #

91-80044-4

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES PRESERVATION DEPARTMENT

BIBLIOGRAPHIC MICROFORM TARGET

Original Material as Filmed - Existing Bibliographic Record

877.5
F523

Fischer, Gustavus

Latin grammar, together with a systematic treatment of Latin composition. New York, Schermerhorn, 1876.

2 v.

Contents.--1. Etymology and an introduction to syntax.--2. The details of syntax.

Restrictions on Use:

TECHNICAL MICROFORM DATA

FILM SIZE: 35mm

REDUCTION RATIO: 11

IMAGE PLACEMENT: IA IIA IB IIB

DATE FILMED: 5-15-91

INITIALS M.B.

FILMED BY: RESEARCH PUBLICATIONS, INC WOODBRIDGE, CT

PART 1

PHOTOGRAPHIC SCIENCES CORPORATION
770 BASKET ROAD
P.O. BOX 338
WEBSTER, NEW YORK 14580
(716) 265-1600

CHARLE
LIBR
19

Columbia University
in the City of New York

LIBRARY

CHARLES KNAPP
LIBRARY
1937

A NEW LATIN GRAMMAR AND READER ON A NEW PLAN.

THE ELEMENTS OF LATIN GRAMMAR,

WITH A

CONTINUOUS READER AND VOCABULARY ADAPTED TO EACH SECTION OF
THE GRAMMAR.

BY GUSTAVUS FISCHER, LL.D.

This work contains a Latin Grammar, adapted to first beginners. The Principles of Latin Grammar are presented in lucid and concise language, thorough enough to lay a perfect foundation for the later study of details, and easy enough to fit the capacity of average students.

The Reader accompanying the Grammar may be studied before the pupil has received any grammatical instruction whatever. It consists of a Roman History, from the building of Rome to the battle of Zama. Every chapter of the Reader refers to a chapter in the Grammar, which is to be studied at the same time. The author thus solves THE PROBLEM of a Reader for Beginners, and an Elementary Grammar, reconciling the two apparently contradictory assertions that "Grammar cannot be successfully studied without a previous knowledge of the language," and "the study of a language requires a previous grammatical knowledge."

The two vocabularies appended to the Reader, in connection with those sections of the Grammar which are to be studied with each chapter of the Reader, will enable the student to translate every sentence correctly. The first or special, of the two vocabularies, contains all those words and phrases whose grammatical forms the student is not yet acquainted with at that place of the Reader where they first occur. But it does not suggest any of those grammatical forms which the student should know from his previous studies, according to the directions given in each chapter of the Reader. Thus, in every succeeding section the number of phrases, etc., suggested diminishes, till, towards the end of the Reader, the student must almost entirely rely upon the second (or general) vocabulary, which contains all the words of the Reader as they are usually placed in vocabularies.

To illustrate the method, we reprint the first chapter:

ROMAN HISTORY.

FIRST BOOK.

I. FIRST DECLENSION. STUDY § 32 OF THE GRAMMAR.

Media pars Italiæ, infra fluvium Tiberim, antiquitus incolebatur ab Latinis. Hæc pars Italiæ, ex nomine incolarum, appellabatur Latium, et caput habebat Albam Longam. Octavo sæculo ante Christum, Numitor rex Albæ Longæ fuit. Is expulsus est a fratre suo Amulio, qui filios Numitoris necavit. Quum Rhea Sylvia, filia Numitoris, geminos filios peperisset, Ammulus jussit eos in Tiberim demergi. At servi regii satis habebant, exponere pueros in loco proximo aquæ. Ibi, ut fabula tradit, duo filii Rheæ Sylvie nutriti sunt lupâ, quæ eis mammas præbuit.

In the first (special) vocabulary the student will find the following words for the first sentence:

ab, by; ab Latinis, by the Latins.
antiquitus, in ancient times.
fluvium, the river.
incolebatur, was inhabited.

infra, below.
Latinis, the Latins.
media pars, the middle part.
Tiberim, Tiber.

All the words belonging to the first declension, for instance: Italiæ, incolarum, Albam Longam, Albæ Longæ, aquæ, Rheæ, Sylvie, lupâ, mammas, are only found in the second (general) vocabulary, in the nominative singular, because the student is expected to translate them correctly, according to the lesson just learned.

Since every chapter of the Reader is a drill for some section of the Grammar, the student upon finishing the Reader will have been over the whole of the Grammar in an easy and pleasant manner, while, at the same time, he has acquired that practical routine in the language which alone enables him to study the details of grammar with success.

To write such a Reader is a matter of great difficulty, since it is necessary to employ only such Latin constructions as may be literally rendered into good English, and still be good and genuine Latin. And the thread of the history must be so arranged and devised that in each chapter certain grammatical forms occur in sufficient number to drill the student in that part of the Grammar which must be studied according to the order of the system. Dr. Fischer has met these difficulties. We are satisfied that there is not one sentence in the Reader which might not have been written by a classical Latin author, and not one which will offer any difficulty to the very first beginners.

Fischer's Elements of Latin Grammar, with Reader, 220 pages, cloth, - - - - - Price, $1.25

Specimen copy mailed on receipt of the price.

J. W. Schermerhorn & Co., Publishers,
14 Bond Street, New York.

LATIN GRAMMAR.

COLLEGE OF COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
A SYSTEMATIC TREATMENT OF LATIN COMPOSITION.
BIBLIOTHECA

BY

GUSTAVUS FISCHER, LL.D.

PART FIRST,

CONTAINING ETYMOLOGY AND AN INTRODUCTION TO SYNTAX.

NEW YORK:

J. W. Schermerhorn & Co., Publishers,

No. 14 BOND STREET.

1876.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1906,
By GUSTAVUS FISCHER,
In the Clerk's Office of the United States District Court for New Jersey.

817.5
v.1
Lange, Little & Co.,
Printers,
Nos. 10 to 20 Astor Place.

Prefaces.

A PREFACE to old edn.
(1866)

THE author of the present work submits to the institutions of learning a new method of studying the Latin Language, which neither is a copy of our own previous methods, nor an improved edition of the method prevailing in Germany. This latter country unquestionably produces better classical scholars than other nations. The method employed there, is essentially practical. The student, first of all, acquires routine by reading, and this is continued till the language almost becomes vernacular to him. The whole course is divided in four, five, or more stages, and for each of these, a great number of drill-books have been written, which are calculated only for one or the other of these courses. We, in this country, evidently cannot devote a period of ten or more years to a merely preparatory study of the ancient languages, and hence the use of those German drill-books in our schools would be out of the question, even if they should be essentially remodelled. For, by introducing the drill-books of only one or two courses, our preparation would be very incomplete; and by introducing the drill-books of all the courses, we would by far exceed the limits of time, which we think to be reasonable for a classical preparation.

The author is fully convinced that there is a method which may give us the benefits of the German practical drill and thoroughness in a considerably less time than the Germans devote to their classical studies; but this method is equally distant from the German protraction and the American contraction. Nothing less than a re-writing of Latin Grammar will do for this purpose, and the author, after a long practical experience, has adopted the plan laid down in the present work, as best calculated for insuring an end which our educators always have considered an unsolved problem. The practical success of the author's plan in his own sphere of teaching has been remarkable, and as several distinguished teachers, after using the first edition of the work as a text-book, have endorsed the new system, it is hoped that this second edition, in its revised form, will win approbation in wider circles.

It is one of the prominent features of the new method, that the elementary constituents of the Latin sentence have been reduced to a SYSTEM, and that through this system EVERY POSSIBLE CONNECTION of Latin words has been discovered and presented to the student, so that his familiarity with Latin phrases and expressions does not depend on their accidental treatment in the text, but on the necessity of the SYSTEM. The Latin INFLECTION has been taught as an essential part of the same system. For we believe, that inflection not only may, but must be taught together with construction.

We do not hesitate to make this system the base of ELEMENTARY instruction. For if the classical languages are to teach us the LOGIC of speech, it must be a great mistake to play with the beginner, and accustom him to loose reflection and degulatory learning. But we have tried to temper the harshness of systematic instruction by a practical FORM. For while the RULES are fully adapted to the class-room, the EXERCISES, which by far exceed the rules in size, and which have been prepared with the utmost care, are calculated to reduce the theory of the rule to practical and almost mechanical SKILL. At the same time the progress of our exercises is so gradual as to be almost imperceptible, and since the results of the previous lessons are always incorporated in the next, the growth of the Latin sentence is, as it were natural, and the student becomes thoroughly familiar with the different combinations, which in methodical repetition are presented to him in all possible aspects.

The present volume teaches DECLENSION in all its forms, and with a view to thoroughness, but CONJUGATION so far only, as it was necessary to show the elementary components of the sentence. The experience of the author has shown how easily all verbal forms are acquired after a thorough drilling in those parts of the verb which are taught in the present volume.

It would be beyond the limits of this preface to explain the many deviations from all other text-books, which will be found in this volume. They must defend themselves, and we do not doubt that most of them will be endorsed by those who will use the book. If the LESSONS on PHRASES, on their COMBINATION, on the THIRD DECLENSION, on PRONOUNS and FORM-ADJECTIVES, and COMPARISON, are carefully examined, we hope that interest enough in this system will be awakened to give our book a fair trial.

The work, when complete, is designed to supersede the use of regular grammars and readers, the former of which ought to be used more as books of reference than as text-books for studying the language. The student, upon finishing the whole course, will be able to read Cæsar or other Latin authors, not, as is generally the case, by guesses and with the help of accommodating notes, but with a thorough understanding of the text.

The Vocabularies in the Appendix are arranged according to the different CLASSES of words. We cannot too strongly recommend, that these be used strictly as intimated in the different Lessons. If more than one exercise belong to the same subject, generally one only should be translated. The second and third numbers should be given to students of less talent as separate lessons, or else be substituted, whenever it will not seem desirable that successive classes should translate the same exercises.

The second and third parts of this work will follow in rapid succession.

We cannot omit to express our deep sense of gratitude to many scholars who have assisted us with their advice, especially to Professor REILEY, of Rutgers College, to whose suggestions many parts of the book owe their origin.

NEW BRUNSWICK, December, 1866.

(2) PREFACE.

THIS First Part of our Latin grammar is 'introductory', its object being, to enable the student by a popular and easy statement of the fundamental principles to study the details of Latin according to our theory, which we have minutely presented in the Second Part. Referring to the Preface of the Second Part for our method of grammatical treatment, we would make the following remarks in regard to the three books contained in this first volume.

We are of the opinion that nobody can fully understand or even appreciate the spirit and usages of any language, unless he is able to express himself in it. Hence we have united Latin composition with what is generally understood by 'Grammar proper'. No rule has been presented, in this first Part, without showing its application and treatment in converting English phrases or sentences into Latin. From the very beginning, and in the most elementary forms of the language, the student learns the 'difference of the two idioms', and gradually acquires the art of thinking in Latin, while, at the same time, he masters the art of grammatical thinking both in general, and with respect to his own vernacular.

We have continued this constant regard to composition, even in the Second Part, but according to a plan different from the method followed in the first. On the one hand, the Exercises in composition, contained in the Second Part are chiefly calculated to teach the art of transforming modern thought into classical forms. On the other hand, the connection of the exercises with the body of the grammar is more an external one in the Second Part, so that they may be omitted without at all affecting the grammatical discussion. And the exercises are so framed that each chapter is complete in itself, and especially adapted to the wants of higher college-classes, while all that is contained in the First Part (and also in the Fourth Book of the second) is intended to be studied in the preparatory and Grammar schools.

In devising a proper method for a systematic study of this kind, we had to struggle with considerable difficulties, which are well known to every practical teacher. It was one of our chief points of view, that the student should fully understand every subject presented to him, without drawing, as it were, on the future, and without anticipating many things that, at the given time, could not yet be comprehended. To begin with memorizing the whole of the paradigms of nouns and verbs is, in our opinion, a practice both useless and dangerous. Useless, because all the paradigms thoroughly memorized, will never help the student to translate the very plainest sentence of the easiest authors; dangerous, because it educates the student to mechanical memorizing. On the other hand, we consider the so-called Ollendorf method a most nefarious device, calculated to train the beginner to desultory and loose study. We also wished to keep clear from all theoretical and philosophical expositions, but nevertheless to teach the student the deep meaning hidden under every grammatical form. We hope that there is no page in this whole book which will encourage loose study on the one side, and mechanical drill on the other. We meant to compel the student to think, and to prepare him for understanding even the most difficult of grammatical subjects. We never have tried to evade any of the numerous difficulties in his path, but to show him the right way not only to overcome but to love the difficulties.

How far we have succeeded in this plan can be fully tested now that the whole work is before the public. The first two books, under the title 'Manual of Latin Grammar and Composition', have been for several years in the hands of teachers, many of whom have repeatedly expressed their anxiety to see the work completed. This 'Manual' appears now, under a different title, in a thoroughly revised form. It is increased by the whole of the Third Book, the details of Latin Etymology and Prosody, in the form of seven Appendices to the body of the Grammar. The teacher may either connect their study with that of the introductory lessons, or they may be studied separately after finishing the course contained in the first three books.

In regard to 'etymology' we have confined ourselves strictly to the Latin, and never indulged in the cheap luxury of 'comparative philology', however strongly we had often to resist our inclination to enter upon that field.

To each of the two Parts a separate and complete index is added, in which a full and systematic analysis of every article is contained.

We must acknowledge our deep obligations to D. T. Reiley, Professor of Latin in Rutgers College. To his advice and suggestions many parts of this grammar owe partly their origin, partly their form.

NEW BRUNSWICK, June, 1875.

Contents.

Prefaces.

" 1st Edition.

" 2<sup>d</sup> Edition.

Contents.

Introduction.

I. On the Subject Matter of the Latin Language.

II. Of Letters and Syllables.

III. Quantity, Accent, Pronunciation.

Latin Grammar.

Book First.

The Elementary Phrases and their combination.

Lesson I. Definitions.

" II. The first Conjugation.

" III. The first Declension.

" IV. The Indicative Phrase.

" V. The Collective Phrase.

|           |  |    |
|-----------|--|----|
| LESSON XL | The Attributive Phrase   | 38 |
| "         | IV. The second Conjugation  | 31 |
| "         | VIII. The second Declension   | 34 |
| "         | IX. Quality of second Adjectives  | 38 |
| "         | X. R. Case of the second -  | 43 |
| "         | Declension.  |    |
| "         | XI. The fourth Conjugation  | 47 |
| "         | XII. The third "  | 49 |
| "         | XIII. Indicative Adjectives & nouns   | 54 |
| "         | XIV. Adverbs of manner and time   | 57 |
| "         | XV. The Subject - Infinitive  | 59 |
| "         | XVI. The Objective - Infinitive   | 62 |
| "         | XVII. Construction of Phrases in Gen. & and combination of Attributive-Phrases. | 66 |
| "         | XVIII. Construction of Pred. Phrases.   | 73 |
| "         | XIX. " " Object "   | 77 |
| "         | XX. " " more than   | 82 |
| "         | Two Phrases.  |    |
| "         | XXI. The Apposition .   | 91 |

|             |                                       |     |
|-------------|---------------------------------------|-----|
| Lesson XXII | Coordinate Phrases.                   | 96  |
| "           | XXII. I Copulative Coordination       | 97  |
| "           | " II Adversative "                    | 99  |
| "           | " III Disjunctive "                   | 99  |
| "           | " IV - Analysis of Coordinate Phrase. | 107 |
|             | Book Second                    | 104 |

Passive Voice - The Inflection of Nouns and Adjectives concluded.
Pronouns. Comparisons.

|              |   |     |
|--------------|---|-----|
| Lesson XXIII | The Passive Voice  | 104 |
| "            | XXIV. Dependent Verbs.                                       | 112 |
| "            | XXV. Third Declension. Stem -                         | 115 |
| "            | XXVI. Third Declension. Stem Stems.                   | 127 |
| "            | XXVII. " " Vowel -   |     |
| "            | Stems and Irregular Nouns.                            | 132 |
| "            | XXVIII. Synopsis of the Gender - Rules.                      | 144 |
| "            | XXIX. Adjectives of Common Gender.                           | 147 |
| "            | XXX. Fourth and Fifth Declension, and compound Nouns. | 154 |

|              |  |            |
|--------------|--|------------|
| Lesson XXXI. | The Pronouns .  | 160        |
| " XXXII.     | Classification and Inflection of form ( Adjectives ).         |            |
|              | Section I  |            |
|              | Definitional ( Adjectives ).                                  | 168        |
| " XXXIII.    | Form ( Adjectives ).  |            |
|              | Section II   |            |
|              | Numeral ( Adjectives ).                                       | 177        |
| " XXXIV.     | Form ( Adjectives ).  |            |
|              | Section III.   |            |
|              | Quantitatives Qualitatives and Possessives.                          | 185        |
| " XXXV.      | Combination of Form ( Adjectives ).                           | 190        |
| " XXXVI.     | The Pronouns in the Relative Phrase.                   | 193        |
| " XXXVII.    | The Comparative & Superlative .                        | 201        |
| " XXXVIII.   | The Combination of Phrases by Comparisons .            | 206        |
| " XXXIX.     | Idioms of the Comparative Period. The Absolute Degree. | 213215 |

Book III.

|   |   |     |
|---|---|-----|
| Formation of the Senses and Moods .— ( Absolute Adjectives .— Formation of Sentences .         |   |     |
| Chap. I.  | The Present -System of the Regular Verb .                                  | 227 |
| " II.   | Irregular Verbs .   | 238 |
| " III.  | The Perfect System.  | 245 |
| " IV.   | Absolute and Disjunct ( Adjectives , Partitive , Genitive ). | 256 |
| " V.  | Division and Formation of Sentences .                                      | 276 |
| Appendix I. Supplementary Rules on Extension . Including the Extension of Greek Terms . |   | 331 |
| " II.   | Derivation of Adjectives .  | 348 |
| " III.  | " " Terms .  | 352 |
| " IV.   | " " Verbs .  | 355 |
| " V.  | Composition of Verbs .  | 357 |
| " VI.   | Formation of the Perfect .  |     |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| and Infinitive.                            | 359 |
| (Append. VII) Prosody.              | 378 |
| Locutories.                         | 403 |
| I. Nouns of the firstDeclension | 403 |
| II. Nouns of the Second Declension  | 404 |
| III. " " Third "                    | 405 |
| IV. " " Fourth "                    | 407 |
| V. " " Fifth "                      | 407 |
| VI. Pluralia Tantum.                       | 408 |
| VII. Heterological Nouns.                  | 409 |
| VIII. movable Adjectives            | 409 |
| IX. Adjectives of CommonGender         | 411 |
| X. Definite Numerals                       | 412 |
| XI. Verbs of the first Conjugation  | 414 |
| XII. " " second "                   | 416 |
| XIII. " " third "                   | 417 |
| XIV. " " fourth "                   | 419 |
| Index to Part I.             | 421 |

INTRODUCTION.

---

I.—BRIEF HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE LATIN LANGUAGE.

The Latin language in its earliest age (about 800 B. C.) was spoken in Latium, the central part of Italy. It arose from a union of two languages, that of the Osci, an old Italic nation, and the Pelasgi, from the latter of whom, also, the Greeks derived their language. There are but few fragments extant of the time before the second Punic war (200 B. C.), the oldest of them not reaching beyond the year 500. Thus our knowledge of the language, as it was spoken during this time, is very imperfect. This generally is called the ARCHAIC PERIOD.

The next age (ANTECLASSICAL PERIOD) dates from 200 to 81 B. C., or from the second Punic war to Sulla's dictatorship. A number of authors, as the poets Plautus and Terence, and the great prose-writer M. Porcius Cato (Censorinus), some of whose works are yet extant, wrote during this period. Their style lacks the polish of the next period, and the anteclassical language abounds in words and constructions, which the more refined taste of the next period has rejected.

The CLASSICAL PERIOD OR GOLDEN AGE of Roman literature begins with the dictatorship of Sulla and terminates with the death of Augustus (14 A. D.) During this period the language reached its culminating point, and gradually became the spoken tongue not only of the whole of Italy, but of the whole West of the Roman Empire. Here belong the prose-writers Cicero, Cesar, Nepos, Sallust, Livy, and the poets Lucretius, Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius, Virgil, Horace, Ovid.

After the golden follows the SILVER AGE (from 14 to about 150 A. D.), with the prose-writers Vellius Paternus, Quintilian, Seneca, Pliny, the older and younger, Tacitus, Suetonius, Curtius, and the poets Juvenal, Persius, Martial, Petronius, and the tragedian Seneca.

The next period, or BRAZEN AGE, marks the decay and final dissolution of the language, which ceased to be spoken about the end of the seventh century after Christ. Both the silver and brazen ages form the POST CLASSICAL PERIOD.

While in writing Latin the golden age must be our principal guide and authority, several writers of the silver age must be ranked very high, and fully deserve to be studied in our schools. This generally is not the case with the writers of the brazen age, who neither furnish a model for imitation, nor can their reading in schools be considered as desirable.

REMARKS.—A peculiar class of writers in the brazen age are the ECCLESIASTICAL AUTHORS, that is, those who wrote on subjects pertaining to the Christian church. Their style is full of Orientalisms and faulty expressions, but they are the only authority for theological terminology. Among these, Lactantius (312) is a remarkable exception in regard to Latin, his style being of almost classical purity and elegance.—Of the Roman Jurists, belonging to each of the three periods, only fragments, more or less considerable, are extant, partly contained in the collection of the Roman law made by Justinian (529 A. D.), known as the 'Pandects' or 'Digests,' partly in some treatises of Gajus and Ulpian, and the smaller fragments of a few others. Several of the Jurists, both of the silver and brazen ages are greatly superior in style to their contemporaries.

II.—OF LETTERS AND SYLLABLES.

1. The Latin language has the same letters as the English, with the exception of w and k. The letter k however sometimes was used by the ancients instead of initial c before the vowel a and the diphthong ae, especially in abbreviations, as K. or Kaeso, instead of Caeso; K. or Kal., instead of Calendae.

2. The letters y and z occur only in words taken from the Greek and other foreign languages. This in general is the case also with the double letters ch, th, and ph. But these also are found in very few LATIN words, as Cethējus, triumphus, pulcher.

3. There are three DIPHTHONGS in general use in Latin: ae, oe, and au. The rarer diphthongs are eu, ei, and ui.

REM. 1. In some few words the letters ae and oe have the force of two distinct vowels, belonging to two different syllables. This always must be marked over the vowel e, either by the DIÆRESIS (aër, coërceo), or by the sign of the QUANTITY (poëta, aëris). Wherever this is not the case, the vowel combinations ae and oe are DIPHTHONGS, that is, sounds partaking of the nature of two different vowels, although pronounced by a single utterance of the voice. Au in Latin words always is a diphthong.

REM. 2. The vowel-combinations eu, ei, and ui are generally used as SEPARATE vowels, and not as diphthongs. To these the sign of the diæresis is not applied (de-us, de-inde, hu-ic). They occur as diphthongs only in interjections (heu, ehou, heus, hei, eia, hui), and in the words neuter, neutiquam, ceu, neu, sen. The poets frequently use the combinations ui and ei as diphthongs in huic, cui, dein, and other words.

4. The old Romans used only CAPITAL LETTERS for writing. The small, or so called Roman letters, came into general use not before the ninth century, though they were known as early as the fifth. In our modern Latin texts capitals are used: 1. After periods, points of interrogation and exclamation, and generally after colons; 2. In PROPER NAMES and words derived from them; 3. In the beginning of sections, and in poetry, of verses; 4. In titles, headings and inscriptions.

5. Among the CONSONANTS we distinguish: 1. The LIQUIDS, l, m, n, r, s;* 2. The MUTES b and p (P-mutes or Labials), c and g, (K-mutes or Gutturals), d and t (T-mutes or Linguals); 3. The SEMI-VOWELS j and v; 4. The LABIAL and GUTTURAL BREATHINGS f and q; 5. The ASPIRATE h; and 6. The DOUBLE LETTER x, which takes the place of cs or of gs.

Rem. 3. The Romans used for the semivowels j and v, and for their corresponding vowels i and u, only one sign for each vowel and semivowel (I and V).

6. The division of the Latin SYLLABLES is different from that of the English. Every Latin syllable regularly terminates in a VOWEL, and the consonant, following this vowel, belongs to the NEXT syllable. Thus pater must be divided pa-ter, not pat-er, and po-pu-lus, not pop-ul-us.

Of this rule there are two exceptions:

1. The last syllable of a word may terminate either in a vowel or a consonant, as: frater, honos, docet.

* The letter s generally is not classified among the liquids, being called a SIBILANT. But it shares all the essential properties of the other liquids, which especially is evident from the inflection of the noun and verb, where the same laws apply to the letter s as to the other liquids.

2. When a vowel is followed by two or more consonants, the first of these belongs to the preceding syllable, unless the two or three consonants are such, that they may form the initials of a Latin word. In this case they all belong to the NEXT syllable. Thus we divide ser-mo, ar-te, pel-lo, since neither rm, nor rt, nor ll can begin any Latin word. But we divide a-pro, a-gro, du-plex, am-pla, cas-tra, since Latin words may begin with pr, gr, pl and str.

Rem. 4. A Latin word, not taken from the Greek, cannot begin with any but the following combinations of consonants:

1. With a MUTE, followed by one of the liquids l or r, as prae, gratis, plecto. In very few words, as gnarus, the mute g may be followed by the liquid n.

2. With the liquid s and a mute, as spes, sto, scateo.

3. With s-l and s-r, having a mute between them, as strepo, splendeo, scribo.

Rem. 5. In compound words the component part must be separated, as ab-uti, trans-eo, de-fero. An inserted d joins the preceding vowel, as prod-est, red-eo.

7. Syllables, which terminate in a vowel, are called open, and those, which terminate in a consonant, close. The last syllable of a word is called the ultima, the last but one the penult, and the third syllable from the end the ante-penult.

III. QUANTITY, ACCENT, PRONUNCIATION.

1. The Quantity of a syllable or of a vowel is its LENGTH or SHORTNESS, that is the longer or shorter TIME, required for pronouncing it. The Accent of a syllable is the stress of the voice, laid upon one syllable in distinction from the other syllables of the same word.

Rem. 1. The two ancient languages had this peculiarity, that they measured their syllables as well as their vowels. In most modern languages QUANTITY follows the ACCENT, and both virtually are the same. In ancient languages on the contrary ACCENT was determined by QUANTITY.

We here consider QUANTITY so far only, as it has an influence on the accent in PROSE. For particular rules on quantity see p. 389.

2. In ancient POETRY every syllable and every vowel was accurately measured, and accommodated to a certain scheme, called the METRUM. Here the accentuation of the syllables, as it was usual in PROSE, was altogether disregarded, and the accent of POETRY (ictus, or arsis) was determined by the metrum alone. Thus the quantity of every syllable was of paramount importance in the composition and recitation of verse, since it was necessary to fit each syllable to the metrum, and the different time, allotted by it to long and short syllables necessarily modified their pronunciation.

This is different in PROSE, where nothing but the ACCENT is determined by the quantity, and this in words of more than two syllables only. On the PRONUNCIATION of the single syllables or vowels the quantity of the latter has little or no influence.

3. A syllable is LONG either by nature or by position.

It is long by NATURE, if it has a LONG VOWEL or a DIPHTHONG. Thus in venīre, docēre, leōnes, amoēnus, incautus the penults are long by NATURE, because they have long vowels or diphthongs.

It is long by POSITION, if its SHORT VOWEL is followed by two or more consonants. Thus in ventus, ferre, magister the penults are long by POSITION, because their vowels are followed by two consonants.

Rem. 2. The quantity of the INFLECTIONAL TERMINATIONS is shown in those parts of the grammar, where the inflection itself is taught, and partly in the Prosody (App. VII). Since these rules cannot be imparted to first beginners, and since the quantity of the radical parts must always be learned by 'authority,' we have, for the sake of securing a correct pronunciation, adopted the following system of notation throughout this grammar:

Vowels, that are not marked, are supposed to be SHORT. The LENGTH of a vowel is thus marked: ā, ē, ī, ō, ū, but only then, when the vowel belongs to the PENULT, since the quantity of the PENULT only has an influence on accentuation. Therefore the quantity of vowels in other syllables is marked only then, when by inflectional changes such a syllable may become a penult, as: adōrāre, obēdire. Here the antepenults dō and bē are marked by the long sign, since these antepenults by inflection may become PENULTS (adōras, obēdis).

SHORT VOWELS, when it is desirable to designate their quantity, are thus marked: ă, ě, ĭ, ŏ, ŭ.

4. Two consonants do not form position, and leave the syllable SHORT, if the former of them is a MUTE, and the latter a LIQUID.

Thus in arbitro, tenebrae, quadruplex the penults are SHORT because their vowels are SHORT, and their consonants tr, br, pl, being mutes with liquids, do not form position.

The mute and liquid combination gn however always makes position.

5. The Accent in PROSE is determined by the following rules:

1. All MONOSYLLABLES have the accent on this one syllable, and two-syllabled words have their accent on the PENULT, as pa'ter, o'nus, le'o.

2. In three - and more - syllabled words the accent is on the PENULT, if this is a LONG syllable, as magi'ster, argen'to, audī're, docē'bo. But the accent is on the ANTEPENULT, if the penult is SHORT, as Cae'sāre, do'cēo, fa'cīo, vo'lūcer.

EXCEPTIONS.*

a. PREPOSITIONS, when they stand before their nouns, have no accent at all. After their nouns they have the regular accent, as: propter ur'bem, but ur'be te'nus.

b. If the ENCLITICS ne, que, ve, met are affixed to a word, the preceding syllable (the last of the word) receives the accent, whether long or short, as: terrā'que, finē'que. But if que belongs to the word itself the accent is regular, as: ī'tāque (therefore), but ī'tā'que (and thus).

c. ADVERBS in o, a, as and ic have their accent on the ultima, as: fulso', una', alias', illic'.

d. The PRONOUNS illic', istic', and the civic nouns in as, as: nostras', vestras', have their accent on the ultima.

e. Prepositions, compounded with adverbs, take their accent on the PREPOSITION, as de'inde, ex'inde.

f. Those compounds of fīcere, that retain the a, are accented on fā, even if it is the penult, as calēfā'cit, satisfā'cis.

6. The vowels and diphthongs are thus pronounced:

|  |   |
|--|---|
| a , as a in father             | u , as oo in tool               |
| e , as a in fate               | ae , as ai in fair              |
| i and y , as ee in tree | oe , as French eu in feu |
| o , as o in bone               | au , as ow in now.              |

Rem. 3. Of the rare diphthongs the pronunciation of eu is doubtful. We may pronounce it like u in use. The French, Germans and Italians pronounce it differently, according to their own usage. The diphthong ei is pronounced as i in bile.

* Tres res accentuum regulas conturbant: distinguendi ratio, pronunciandi ambiguitas atque necessitas. Priscianus de accentibus, 2, 8.

7. All Latin vowel-sounds are either OPEN, or CLOSE, or OBSCURE. The pronunciation, as shown §6, is that of the OPEN sounds, which in PROSE form the rule for all open syllables, whether long or short, whether accented or not. Diphthongs have no other but these open sounds.

The CLOSE sounds of the vowels are those which are applied to close syllables, the closing consonant always modifying the utterance of the preceding vowel.

The OBSCURE vowel-sound is confined to the letter e in unaccented, open PENULTS, as in facē're, segē'tes, vehē'mens.

REM. 4. The close vowel-sounds are distinguished from the open sounds merely by their shorter duration. The close e is sounded as English e in pen, the close i as English i in pin, close u as English u in full. The close sounds of a and o have no exact equivalents in English, and must be learned from the mouth of the teacher.

REM. 5. If a vowel is followed by st or sp, the syllable, although considered as OPEN (I., 7) in pronouncing nevertheless is joined with the following s, and has the CLOSE sound, as the penults in magi'ster, ca'stra, fu'stis, po'stis, a'sper, which are pronounced, as if they were divided magis-ter, cas-tra, as-per.

REM. 6. In several words, which are spelled alike, but are distinguished by the quantity of one of their vowels, the LONG vowel always should assume the OPEN, and the SHORT vowel the CLOSE sound. Thus the termination īs in ACC. PLUR. of nouns of the vowel-class assumes the open sound, in order to distinguish it from NOM. SING. (N. SING. civis ACC. PLUR. civīs). The penult of the neuter īdem, and the nominatives hic and hoc have CLOSE sounds, while the masculine īdem, the adverb hic, and the ablatives hīc and hūc have OPEN sounds. The termination us in the 4th declension, according to the authority of ancient grammarians, was pronounced with the OPEN sound, even in NOM. SING., where it is SHORT, in order to distinguish it from the like termination of the 2d declension.

REM. 7. In reading POETRY according to the metrum, the open sounds everywhere are applied to long, and the close sounds to short vowels.

OBSERVATION 1. It is advisable, in order to accustom beginners to the continental vowel-sounds, to make them pronounce the close syllables of the Latin language according to the following system:

al el il ol ul, am em im om um, an en in on un, ar er ir or ur, as es is os us, at et it ot ut.

OBSERVATION 2. The system of pronunciation, as stated above, is, with some minor modifications in the different localities, adopted throughout continental Europe. In England and many parts of this country a different method prevails, which is based on the English vowel-sounds. Among the reasons, which are opposed to this system, we mention the following:

1. The English vowel-system is incompatible with that of any other language. Hence only some of the English vowel-sounds have been singled out and appropriated to the Latin. But this very fact makes the English pronunciation of the Latin more difficult for even English beginners, than the continental system. 2. According to the English system the long and short vowel-sounds are distinguished according to the real quantity of the vowels, which makes it necessary for every learner to be familiar with the quantity of each vowel in every word of the language, before he can pronounce correctly. But this would require a longer time, than in any of our schools can be devoted to it. The consequence is, that we generally meet with a corrupt and vicious pronunciation, which it is painful to hear. 3. The continental vowel-system is easily acquired, and the few sounds, whose pronunciation is somewhat difficult for the beginner, must be anyhow acquired in studying any of the continental languages. 4. We know, and can prove, that the 5 vowels on the whole were pronounced by the Romans, as the continental nations now pronounce them. Hence those, that adopt the English system of pronunciation, must acknowledge, that they disfigure the language, and in reading Latin text destroy its euphony. For one vowel, especially in the derivation of words, stands in a necessary euphonical relation to the other, which must be lost by the substitution of a foreign sound.

OBSERVATION 3. Following the continental pronunciation, we deviate in one point from the pronunciation of the ancients, regarding the application of the close vowel-sounds to all syllables ending in a consonant. The ancients distinguished here between ACCENTED and UNACCENTED syllables, and gave in certain instances to accented syllables, whether terminating in a consonant or a vowel, the open sound—calling this the CIRCUMFLECTED in opposition to the ACUTE sound. Thus the first syllable of the nominative Roma had the circumflected, but that of the ablative Romā the acute sound. These distinctions are so complicated, that it is practically impossible to introduce them. Hence the practice of the continental system takes no notice of these nicer distinctions in pronunciation.

8. Most of the consonants are pronounced, as in English, but with the following exceptions:

1. G always has the hard sound, as in legere (pronounce leghere).

2. J is pronounced as y in you, as in jus (pronounce yoos).

3. C in the CLASSICAL time was always pronounced like k. In the later centuries the hard and soft sounds of c were distinguished, so that before ae, oe, e, i, y it was pronounced like hissing s, while before the other vowels and all consonants, and as a final letter it retained the sound of k. If we adopt this pronunciation, which is the customary one all over the continent of Europe, we should give to the letter s the sound of English z, since else it would not be distinguished from soft c. Where however the continental pronunciation is being first introduced, it is decidedly preferable, to pronounce the letter c in all places, like k, and then the letter s must have the hissing sound.*

4. Ci and ti must not be pronounced like sh, but like see and tee.

5. Hu is pronounced like hoo, not like yoo.

6. Qu is pronounced like kw, but the conjunction quum, which frequently is written cum, always is pronounced cum.

* The letter s probably had the hissing sound only in the beginning of words and in the middle, before, or after consonants. Between two vowels and at the end it had the soft sound of English z.

LATIN GRAMMAR.

BOOK FIRST:

THE ELEMENTARY PHRASES AND THEIR COMBINATION.

LESSON I.

DEFINITIONS.

§ 1. 1. Inflection is the application of ENDINGS to words. Thus if we change the word Caesar into Caesaris (of Cesar), or Caesari (to Cesar), we say that the word Caesar is inflected by the addition of the endings is and i.

The different endings denote the different relations, which the inflected word has to other words in the sentence.

§ 2. 2. Stem is that part of the word, to which endings (terminations) are added. The last letter of the stem is called the characteristic. Thus Caesar is the stem of Caesaris, and the letter r is its CHARACTERISTIC.

§ 3. 3. VERBS, SUBSTANTIVES (that is nouns and pronouns), ADJECTIVES and partly ADVERBS are inflected. All other parts of speech cannot be inflected, and therefore are called INDECLINABLE.

§ 4. 4. The inflection is fourfold: a. Conjugation; b. Declension; c. Motion; d. Comparison.

a. Conjugation is the inflection of the VERB, as amo, I love, amas, thou lovest, amat, he loves, &c. See § 6 and L. II.

b. Declension is that inflection of substantives, adjectives and certain adverbs, which shows the CASES of these parts of speech, as puer, the boy, pueri, of the boy, puero, to the boy, &c. See L. III.

c. Motion is that inflection of nouns and adjectives, which marks their GENDERS, as ursus a male bear, ursa a she-bear; bonus, good (masculine), bona, good (feminine), bonum, good (neuter).

d. Comparison is that inflection of adjectives which marks their DEGREES, as altus, high, altior, higher, altissimus, highest.

Rem. 1. If VERBS are inflected, we say, that they are conjugated; if SUBSTANTIVES or ADJECTIVES are inflected by DECLENSION, we say, that they are declined; if by MOTION, that they are moved; if ADJECTIVES are inflected by COMPARISON, they are said to be compared.

§ 5. 5. The subject of a verb is that person or thing, that does the action implied in the verb. If the SPEAKER himself is that subject, we call it the first person (as I love). If the person spoken to is the subject, we call it the second person (as thou lovest, you love); if any other person or thing, it is called the third person, as he loves, the boy loves, the house burns.

Rem. 2. There are three persons for each number, singular and plural. Hence the conjugation of the Latin verb is contained in six personal forms. (See L. II.)

§ 6. 6. The conjugation of the Latin verb shows: 1. The person of the subject. 2. Its number. 3. Its relation to the action. 4. The time of the action. 5. The conception of the speaker, regarding the action. Those forms of the verb, which mark the relation of the SUBJECT to the action are called voice of the verb; those which mark the TIME of the action are called tenses; and those which mark the conception of the SPEAKER are called moods.

§ 7. 7. Hence every conjugated form of the verb belongs to the following five accidents: a. PERSON, b. NUMBER, c. TENSE, d. MOOD, e. VOICE.

Rem. 3. All conjugated forms of the verb are comprised under the general name "finite verb," in opposition to the term "indefi- nite or non-finite verb, which comprises the INFINITIVES, the PARTICIPLES, the SUPINES and the VERBAL ADJECTIVES.

☞ We consider in the first book only one voice, the ACTIVE, one mood, the INDICATIVE, one tense, the PRESENT; but all three persons in both numbers.

§ 8. 8. The accidents of the noun are: CASE, NUMBER and GENDER; those of the pronoun: CASE, NUMBER, GENDER and PERSON; those of the adjective: CASE, NUMBER, GENDER and DEGREE.

LESSON II.

THE FIRST CONJUGATION.

§ 9. PARADIGM.

Infinitive: Amāre, to love (stem: amā, characteristic: ā, ending: re).

Present Indicative:

| SINGULAR.           |                             | PLURAL.             |                             |
|---------------------|-----------------------------|---------------------|-----------------------------|
| Latin forms. | English equivalents. | Latin forms. | English equivalents. |
| 1st pers. amo       | I love               | 1. amāmus           | we love              |
| 2d . . . . .amas    | thou lovest          | 2. amātis           | you love             |
| 3d . . . . .amat    | he (she, it) loves   | 3. amant            | they love            |

§ 10. OBSERVATIONS.

1. The English personal pronouns I, thou, he, &c., as subjects of the verb, generally are not expressed by special words in Latin, but merely by ENDINGS. These are called PERSONAL endings.

2. All verbs, which have the characteristic ā, are conjugated after the first conjugation according to the paradigm amāre. The present infinitive always has the ending re. What is left of the infinitive, after striking out this ending, is the stem of the verb (verb-stem).

3. Any given verb, after its stem has been found, is conjugated by successively attaching to it the personal endings, which are the following:

| SINGULAR.    |   | PLURAL. |
|--------------|---|---------|
| 1st pers. —o | { contracted with the preceding characteristic a into ō . | 1. —mus |
| 2d " —s      |   | 2. —tis |
| 3d " —t      |   | 3. —nt  |

speech, as puer, the boy, pueri, of the boy, puero, to the boy, &c. See L. III.

c. Motion is that inflection of nouns and adjectives, which marks their GENDERS, as ursus a male bear, ursa a she-bear; bonus, good (masculine), bona, good (feminine), bonum, good (neuter).

d. Comparison is that inflection of adjectives which marks their DEGREES, as altus, high, altior, higher, altissimus, highest.

Rem. 1. If VERBS are inflected, we say, that they are conjugated; if SUBSTANTIVES or ADJECTIVES are inflected by DECLENSION, we say, that they are declined; if by MOTION, that they are moved; if ADJECTIVES are inflected by COMPARISON, they are said to be compared.

§ 5. 5. The subject of a verb is that person or thing, that does the action implied in the verb. If the SPEAKER himself is that subject, we call it the first person (as I love). If the person spoken to is the subject, we call it the second person (as thou lovest, you love); if any other person or thing, it is called the third person, as he loves, the boy loves, the house burns.

Rem. 2. There are three persons for each number, singular and plural. Hence the conjugation of the Latin verb is contained in six personal forms. (See L. II.)

§ 6. 6. The conjugation of the Latin verb shows: 1. The person of the subject. 2. Its number. 3. Its relation to the action. 4. The time of the action. 5. The conception of the speaker, regarding the action. Those forms of the verb, which mark the relation of the SUBJECT to the action are called voice of the verb; those which mark the TIME of the action are called tenses; and those which mark the conception of the SPEAKER are called moods.

§ 7. 7. Hence every conjugated form of the verb belongs to the following five accidents: a. PERSON, b. NUMBER, c. TENSE, d. MOOD, e. VOICE.

Rem. 3. All conjugated forms of the verb are comprised under the general name "finite verb," in opposition to the term "indefi- nite or non-finite verb, which comprises the INFINITIVES, the PARTICIPLES, the SUPINES and the VERBAL ADJECTIVES.

☞ We consider in the first book only one voice, the ACTIVE, one mood, the INDICATIVE, one tense, the PRESENT; but all three persons in both numbers.

§ 8. 8. The accidents of the noun are: CASE, NUMBER and GENDER; those of the pronoun: CASE, NUMBER, GENDER and PERSON; those of the adjective: CASE, NUMBER, GENDER and DEGREE.

LESSON II.

THE FIRST CONJUGATION.

§ 9. PARADIGM.

Infinitive: Amāre, to love (stem: amā, characteristic: ā, ending: re).

Present Indicative:

| SINGULAR.                |                           | PLURAL.          |                      |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|------------------|----------------------|
| Latin forms.             | English equivalents.      | Latin forms.     | English equivalents. |
| 1st pers. amo     | I love             | 1. amāmus | we love       |
| 2d . . . . . amas | thou lovest        | 2. amātis | you love      |
| 3d . . . . . amat | he (she, it) loves | 3. amant  | they love     |

§ 10. OBSERVATIONS.

1. The English personal pronouns I, thou, he, &c., as subjects of the verb, generally are not expressed by special words in Latin, but merely by ENDINGS. These are called PERSONAL ENDINGS.

2. All verbs, which have the characteristic ā, are conjugated after the first conjugation according to the paradigm amāre. The present infinitive always has the ending re. What is left of the infinitive, after striking out this ending, is the stem of the verb (verb-stem).

3. Any given verb, after its stem has been found, is conjugated by successively attaching to it the personal endings, which are the following:

| SINGULAR.    |   | PLURAL. |
|--------------|---|---------|
| 1st pers. —o | contracted with the preceding characteristic a into ā . | 1. —mus |
| 2d " —s      |   | 2. —tis |
| 3d " —t      |   | 3. —nt  |

4. The characteristic a of the first conjugation is long, and the syllable containing it, if it is the penult, must be accented. (See Introduction III., § 3. 5). Hence we pronounce amā'mus, amā'tis, not a'mamus, a'matis. But in the verb dare (to give) and its compounds (circumdare, perissumdare, venumdare) the characteristic a is short. Hence we pronounce circum'dare, circum'damus, circum'datis, not circumda're, circumda'mus, circumda'tis.

EXERCISES.

 The verbs of the first conjugation in the vocabularies (XI) should be learned successively in about three lessons, and for each recitation paradigms according to the model of amāre should be written, together with the English meanings, pointing out the stem, characteristic and ending of the infinitive, as:

1. Accusāre, bellāre, adōrāre, celebrāre, circumdare, creāre.
2. Dare, devōrāre, durāre, errāre, flāre, implōrāre, interrogāre.
3. Labōrāre, nāre, parāre, placāre, postulāre, stāre.

1.

Translate into English:

1. Volo. Tentāmus. Stāmus. Errātis. Narrat. Ædificat. Declāro. Pugnant. Significātis. Implōrant. Properas. Parat. Desiderāmus. Multas. Arātis. Volant. Damus. Stat. Arant. Dat. Stas. Curant. Confirmātis. Emigrant. Portant. Vindicāmus. Muto. Placāmus. Festinas. Tonat.

Translate into Latin:

2. We punish. Thou declarest. He builds. It thunders. She helps. They prepare. He stands. We give. You plough. They hasten. It flies. She desires. They confirm. I desire. We implore. You stand. Thou givest. He punishes. We err. They reconcile. Thou triest. You confirm. We educate. He preserves. They spoil. Thou plunderest.

2.

Translate into English:

1. Accūsāt. Appropinquātis. Indicas. Cantas. Clamas. Cogitāmus. Commendātis. Creātis. Curo. Damnāt. Delectat. Deliberātis. Desperas. Disputo. Probāmus. Ornas. Numerant. Navigat. Recuperas. Obtemperamus. Natis. Natātis. Imperas. Expecto. Regnas. Stant. Vituperātis. Repugnant. Liberāmus. Obtrectas.

Translate into Latin:

2. I reign. Thou accusest. He approaches. You recover. He obeys. We swim. It delights. You command. I sail. You count. We indicate. She sings. You approve. I think. You shout. They adorn. She disputes. We despair. I deliberate. We create. You care. Thou condemnest. They swim. We tell. Thou praisest. He asks. You scold. They put to flight. She announces. We dedicate.

3.

Translate into English:

1. Violant. Tolero. Spoliāmus. Rebellas. Saltātis. Objurgat. Mendāmus. Mandātis. Incitat. Invitat. Infirmas. Judico. Gubernāmus. Exornant. Emendātis. Denuntiat. Comparāmus. Bellas. Abrogant. Ambulātis. Adjudicāmus. Celat. Celant. Impero. Impetras. Castigant. Evitātis. Vitāmus. Vetant. Instat. Abaliēnas.

Translate into Latin:

2. Thou workest. We mention. You fight. I recall. They enlarge. Thou forbidst. It shows. We slander. I burden. She hastens. They arm. They hope. I penetrate. He pleads. It makes famous. Thou deniest. They overcome. You dissemble. He explains. She reconciles. We decide. They disturb. We refuse. It is an obstacle. Thou excellest. We give (gratuitously). You wage a war. Thou finishest the war. It blows. You put to flight. You forgive. He conceals. We doubt. I approach. They besiege.

LESSON III.

THE FIRST DECLENSION.

§ 11. 1. The declension of the substantive distinguishes its cases. Each number, singular and plural, has six cases: NOMINATIVE, GENITIVE, DATIVE, ACCUSATIVE, VOCATIVE and ABLATIVE. All cases of the noun are formed by adding to its stem certain endings, which are called case-terminations.

§ 12. 2. The case-terminations of the 1st declension are the following:

| SINGULAR. |    | PLURAL. |     |
|-----------|----|---------|-----|
| Nom.      | a  | Nom.    | æ   |
| Gen.      | æ  | Gen.    | ārm |
| Dat.      | æ  | Dat.    | is  |
| Acc.      | am | Acc.    | as  |
| Voc.      | a  | Voc.    | æ   |
| Abl.      | ā  | Abl.    | is  |

The stem of a noun of the 1st declension is found by removing the termination a of the nominative case. Thus the stem of mensa is mens. By successively adding the different case-terminations to the stem, thus found, any given noun of this declension may be declined, according to the following

PARADIGM :

| SINGULAR.    |                           | PLURAL.       |                      |
|--------------|---------------------------|---------------|----------------------|
| Latin forms. | English equivalents.      | Latin forms.  | English equivalents. |
| Nom. mensa   | the table, a table,       | Nom. mensæ    | the tables, tables.  |
|              | table.                    |               |                      |
| Gen. mensæ   | of the table, of a table, | Gen. mensarum | of the tables, of    |
|              | the table's.              |               | tables.              |
| Dat. mensæ   | to the table, to a table. | Dat. mensis   | to the tables, to    |
|              |                           |               | tables.              |
| Acc. mensam  | the table, a table.       | Acc. mensas   | the tables, tables.  |
| Voc. mensa   | O table!                  | Voc. mensæ    | O tables!            |
| Abl. mensâ   | by the table, by a        | Abl. mensis   | by the tables, by    |
|              | table.                    |               | tables.              |

§ 13. 3. The Latin cases (of any declension) have the following English significations :

- The preposition of, or the possessive case, stands for the GENITIVE.
- The preposition to, for the DATIVE.
- The preposition by, for the ABLATIVE.
- The objective case without a preposition for the ACCUSATIVE.

These prepositions and the objective case are called the regular English case-equivalents. They are the same in singular and plural.

Rem. 1. All Latin nouns of the 1st declension have the termination a in the nom. sing.

Rem. 2. The termination of the ABLATIVE sing. is â. This case will always be marked with the long sign, in order to distinguish it from the NOMINATIVE sing., which has the termination â.

Rem. 3. The DATIVE and ABLATIVE PLURAL of all declensions are alike. The nouns filia, the daughter, and dea, the goddess, generally have the exceptional termination abus in these cases (filîabus and deâbus).

§ 14. 4. Many nouns of the Latin language occur in the PLURAL only, often corresponding to English SINGULARS, as deliciae, delight, tenebrae, darkness, indutiae, armistice. These nouns are called pluralia tantum (SING. : plurale tantum).

Rem. 4. The list of pluralia tantum of the 1st declension VI. Voc. must be committed.

§ 15. 5. Other nouns have different significations in the sin gular and plural, as : SING. copia, abundance, PLUR. copiae, troops. These are called heterological nouns.

Rem. 5. The list of heterological nouns of the 1st declension VII. Voc. must be committed.

§ 16. PROPER NOUNS OF THE FIRST DECLENSION.

6. The 1st declension contains the following classes of proper names :

1. Female names, mostly in ia, if Roman, as : Lucretia, Æmilia, Julia, Tullia, Terentia, Cloelia, Livia, Cornelia, Virginia, Hor-tensia, Oleopatra, &c.

2. Names of goddesses, as : Minerva, Diâna, Vesta, Latôna, Proserpina, Flora, Pomôna, and the plurals Furæ (the Furies), Gratiæ (the Graces), and Musæ (the Muses).

3. Names of males, extremely seldom in ia, as : Cinna, Sulla, Dolabella, Numa, Nerva, Porsenna, Pansa, Catilîna (Catiline), Jugurtha, Agrippa, Seneca, Scaetola, Galba, &c.

4. Names of nations, never in ia, as : Belga, a Belgian, Persa, a Persian, Numida, a Numidian, Celta, a Celt, Scythia, a Scythian, Sarmâta, a Sarmatian.

5. Names of countries, almost all in ia, as : Hispania, Spain, Graecia, Greece, Italia, Italy, Germania, Germany, Gallia, Gaul, Britan-nia, Britain, Caledonia, Scotland, Hibernia, Ireland, Pannonia, Hungary, Sicilia, Sicily, Lusitania, Portugal, Persia, Numidia, Sardinia, Europa, Asia, Africa, &c.

6. Names of cities, in a and ia, as : Roma, Rome, Treja, Troy, Abdera, Alexandria, Apollonia, Alesia, Cupua, Heraclæa, Massilia, Utica, Numantia, Sparta, and the pluralia tantum, Athênæ, Athens, Thebæ, Thebes, Syracusæ, Syracuse, Cannæ, Thermopylae.

7. A few names of rivers, as Allia, Trebia, Himera, Sequana, Garumna, Vistula.

EXERCISES.

Commit the nouns of the first declension I. Vocab. in about three successive lessons, and write the following paradigms, including the English equivalents, as :

- Agricola*, aqua, Belga, bestia, colonia, copia, corôna, controversia.
- Cura*, dea, epistola, filia, gratia, Numida, and the plurale tantum Athênæ.

1.

Translate into English :

1. Numæ. Græciâ. Hiberniam. Furias. Iræ. Syracusarum. Inimicitias. Lunam. Culpâ. Blanditias. Catenarum. Fabulis. Flam-mæ. Formâ. Fugæ. Herbas. Horæ. Ignominiam. Inurias. Inopiâ. Discordiam. Audaciæ. Clementiâ. Comœdiæ. Fossas. Divitiis. Reliquiarum. Scalis. Tenebras. Manubiis. Nundinas. Nuptiarum.

Insulas. Copias. Cupediam. Cupediis. Litteram. Litteris. Incolas
Justitiā. Historiā. Causam. Aras. Alis. Diligentia. Lacrimarum Feminas. Contumaciā. Aquae.

Translate into Latin:

2. By eloquence. The islands. Of envy. To anger. An armistice (*obj.**). Of enmity. Letters. Of the ladder. Of beasts. To farmers. By a chain. Of a loss. To fables. An ambushade (obj.). To disobedience. Of an immigrant. By the causes. Of tears. Of an intrigue. To darkness. To the crowns. A foreigner's. The dinner (obj.). The Persians. Rumors. To the immigrants. The care (obj.). The wing (obj.). Controversies (obj.). To a pound. The ditches (obj.). Of youth. The goddesses (obj.). Foreigners (obj.). To an armistice. To the cradle. To fortune. By a farmer. By folly. Friendship (obj.). To a wing. To riches. By disgrace. A farmer's. By letters. By provisions. To tears. O Catiline! Of crowns. To justice. Fables. The Belgians. Enmity (obj.). Cinna's. By cares. The foreigner (obj.). O fortune! Of a threat. Persia (obj.). By goddesses. Of the Belgians. Of a flight. Of the flatteries. Of the wedding. Numidians (obj.). Laziness (obj.). O Persian! To youth. By a slander. Of anger. By Numidia

2.

Translate into English:

1. Lucretiā. Syracūsas. Musis. Catilinā. Luxuriā. Ignorantiā. Agricolārum. Alienigenas. Aquilis. Calumniā. Deūbus. Audaciam. Ignominiā. Ærumnis. Asseclis. Colonias. Fallaciā. Fabulārum. Eloquentiam. Avaritiā. Bestiārum. Filiam. Adolescentiā. Persis. Injuriā. Contumeliā. Ferias. Athenārum. Indutiis. Minārum. Scopas. Fortunā. Operis. Copiārum. Operā. Cannas. Copiis. Incolārum. Invidiā. Libras. Homicidā. Justitiā. Doctrinā. Annōnā. Advenis. Amicitia. Celtas. Galliam. Italiā. Disciplinā. Corruptelā. Concordiā.

Translate into Latin:

2. Of Gaul. By infamy. O Numidians! To water. Fortune (obj.). Seneca's. By injuries. O daughter! To beasts. The cares (obj.). Of the hens. Flatteries. By firmness. The Belgians (obj.). O disobedience! To the glory. Of slander. By controversies. The beast (obj.). O slanders! To the lances. Of chains. The immigrants. O beast! By a crown. The history (obj.). Sicily's. Of the farmers. O daughters! By the islands. The hours (obj.). To a cause. Of a wing. By a letter. Hens. Of the hours. By indolence. To the dinners. The moon's. By fables. Of folly. By expenses. O goddess! To a foreigner. Ditches. Of expenses. The inhabitants. O farmers! To the Belgians. Of the fame. A hen's. O anger! Harmony (obj.). By the friendship. Of cares. To diligence. O Persians! Syracuse (obj.). To the inhabitants. Darkness (obj.). By the wedding.

* The noun, after which the word obj. is placed, is understood to be in the objective case.

3.

Translate into English:

1. Fabulā. Numidis. Numidiā. Persiam. Persæ. Caledoniæ. Luxuriā. Insulæ. Incolis. Lætitiam. Horis. Feminārum. Fugā. Astutiæ. Contumeliā. Cellā. Asseclis. Filiārum. Inopiæ. Flammas. Catēnis. Herbæ. Reliquias. Scalas. Tenebrarum. Indutias. Annōnam. Copiā. Copiārum. Inimicitiarum. Fiduciam. Bibliothecā. Alienigenis. Columnarum. Nuptiis. Scythas. Siciliā. Blanditiā. Adolescentiā. Desidiæ. Hastas. Injuriis. Iracundiam. Lunæ. Ararum. Quadrigas. Insiārum.

Translate into Latin:

2. Injuries (obj.). O youth! Of the vacation. By plants. To disgrace. Envy (obj.). O glory! Of a hen. By the inhabitant. To cares. By a Numidian. By Numidia. To the Muses. Controversies. The distance (obj.). By anger. By Athens. To the hours. Of infamy. A threat (obj.). By Numidians. Letters. Glory (obj.). Of the injuries. By discord. Losses. Of Persia. Lances (obj.). Germany's. By enmity. Of the moon. Of the cradle. An hour's. To the want. Wings. A Persian's. By indolence. Of laziness. O rumors! To the delight. O Celts! The fable (obj.). Of an ambushade. To Syracuse. To Gaul. By history. The crowns. Of the remains. To the islands. Athens (obj.). Eloquence (obj.). To friendship. By envy. Of the ditches. The Graces (obj.).

LESSON IV.

THE PREDICATIVE PHRASE.

§ 17. 1. A SENTENCE consists of PHRASES, and a phrase of words. There are three phrases: 1. The PREDICATIVE. 2. The OBJECTIVE. 3. The ATTRIBUTIVE.

§ 18. 2. A phrase is the combination of two words, which stand in a certain relation to each other. The one is called the GOVERNING, the other the DEPENDENT word.

§ 19. 3. A phrase, in which a noun in the nominative is connected with a finite verb (§ 7, R. 3), is called predicative. The noun in the nominative is the governing word, and is called the subject. The finite verb is the dependent word, and is called the predicate; as:

Amicitia delectat, friendship delights; Ærumnae vexant, cares harass; Agricola arat, the farmer ploughs; Agricolae arant, the farmers plough.

Rem. 1. Here the nouns amicitia, acrimonia, agricola, agricolae are the SUBJECTS, and the finite verbs delectat, vexant, arat, arant are the PREDICATES.

Rem. 2. The definition of SUBJECT in § 5 explains the IDEA of this term, while § 19 shows its GRAMMATICAL signification. The former is also called the LOGICAL, and the latter, that is the governing word in the predicative phrase, the GRAMMATICAL subject. Both are not always the same.

Rem. 3. The subject may also be indicated by a PRONOUN, as: he loves, she suffers, it seems, I walk. Here the pronouns he, she, it, I, are the subjects. In Latin the pronouns as SUBJECTS generally are not expressed. Thus English predicative phrases with PRONOUNS as subjects answer to the mere Latin PREDICATES.

§ 20. 4. The subject in a finite predicative phrase (for predicative phrases with non-finite predicates see B. III), is always in the NOMINATIVE, singular or plural, and the predicate agrees with its subject in NUMBER and PERSON. Hence, if the subject is a noun in the singular, the predicate is in the 3. person singular; if the subject is a noun in the plural, the predicate is in the 3. pers. plural.

Rem. 4. Pluralia tantum must have their predicates in the PLURAL in Latin, though their English equivalents may be in the SINGULAR, as: Enmity lasts, Inimicitiae durant (not durat); Athenae help, Athēnae adjuvant (not adjuvat).

EXERCISES.

1.

Translate into English:

1. Alauda volat. 2. Advenae implorant. 3. Poeta narrat. 4. Nautae navigant. 5. Operae laborant. 6. Perfidia triumphat. 7. Schola educat. 8. Patria vocat. 9. Medicina sanat. 10. Memoria errat. 11. Rosae delectant. 12. Perfugae clamant. 13. Praeda invitat. 14. Puellae saltant. 15. Regulae adjuvant. 16. Regina dijudicat. 17. Scientia exornat. 18. Sententia repugnat. 19. Pecunia regnat. 20. Athenae pugnant. 21. Bigae appropinquant. 22. Divitiae juvant. 23. Ferie delectant. 24. Industiae durant. 25. Inimicitiae separant. 26. Nuxae fatigant. 27. Parietinae stant. 28. Scale flagrant. 29. Cupedia debilitat. 30. Cupediae invitant. 31. Fortuna variat.

Translate into Latin:

1. Eloquence delights. 2. The foreigner approaches. 3. The foreigners approach. 4. The poet doubts. 5. The poets doubt. 6. Wisdom explores. 7. A sailor shouts. 8. Sailors shout. 9. Athens despairs. 10. The farmer works. 11. The farmers work. 12. Enmity burns. 13. The armistice ceases. 14. A foreigner decides. 15. Foreigners decide. 16. The Belgian emigrates. 17. The Belgians emigrate. 18. Tears abound. 19. Eloquence makes famous. 20. The earth abounds. 21. Friendship hopes. 22. Treachery resists. 23. Punishment corrects. 24. The provinces conspire. 25. The queen repeals. 26. The eagles devour. 27. Modesty excuses. 28. Pride accuses. 29. Rules educate. 30. Arrows kill. 31. Life lasts. 32. The cradle jars (crepāre). 33. The funeral tires. 34. The vacation refreshes. 35. Enmity disturbs. 36. Darkness reigns. 37. The troops despair. 38. Daintiness effeminates. 39. Dainties weaken. 40. The workmen demand.

2.

Translate into English:

1. Mercatūra ditat. 2. Militia nobilitat. 3. Mora fatigat. 4. Nautae cantant. 5. Portae crepant (to jar). 6. Provinciae rebellant. 7. Negligentia depravat. 8. Perseverantia superat. 9. Philosophia probat. 10. Piratae supplicant. 11. Prudentia vetat. 12. Roma regnat. 13. Sagittae vulnerant. 14. Numidae equitant. 15. Silva flagrat. 16. Statuae exornant. 17. Undae sonant. 18. Piratae vastant. 19. Tenebrae obstant. 20. Syracusae repugnant. 21. Quadrigae festinant. 22. Nuptiae appropinquant. 23. Minae conturbant. 24. Excubiae vigilant. 25. Copia adjuvat. 26. Copiae dimicant. 27. Eloquentia superat. 28. Horae volant.

Translate into Latin:

1. Avarice disgraces. 2. Boldness reigns. 3. Darkness conceals. 4. The expenses are an obstacle. 5. The pirate kills. 6. The pirates kill. 7. Robbery (rapina) ceases. 8. Robberies cease. 9. The Persian wounds. 10. The Persians wound. 11. Intrigues triumph. 12. The woman scolds. 13. The women scold. 14. Indulgence spoils. 15. The chain burdens. 16. The chains burden. 17. Victory makes famous. 18. Victories make famous. 19. Life lasts. 20. Spain rebels. 21. Modesty reconciles. 22. Deserters report. 23. The inhabitants persevere. 24. Justice demands. 25. The daughter greets. 26. The daughters greet. 27. The Persians sail. 28. An ambushade harasses. 29. The Vistula overflows. 30. Wisdom doubts. 31. The Numidian dissembles. 32. Numidia obeys. 33. The poet appeases. 34. The armistice releases. 35. Provisions abound. 36. Enmity accuses. 37. Syracuse invites. 38. Labor ceases. 39. The workmen despair. 40. Luxury effeminates.

LESSON V.

THE OBJECTIVE PHRASE.

§ 21. 1. A phrase is called objective, if its governing word is a VERB (in any of its forms), and its dependent word a SUBSTANTIVE, as:

To devastate the land, terram vastāre;—(he) renews the friendship, amicitiam renovat;—(you) corrupt nature, natūram vitiātis.

Rem. 1. Here the verbs vastāre, renovat, vitiātis are the GOVERNING, and the nouns terram, amicitiam, natūram the DEPENDENT words of the phrases, which therefore are OBJECTIVE.

§ 22. 2. The dependent substantive in the objective phrase is called the object, which in Latin regularly precedes its governing verb. The object must always be in one of the oblique cases.

Rem. 2. All cases, with exception of NOMINATIVE and VOCATIVE, are called oblique cases. In translating an English objective phrase into Latin, beginners must render the regular English case-equivalents (§ 13) by the corresponding Latin cases, and conversely, as:

GENITIVE: to accuse [somebody] of extravagance, intemperantiæ accusāre;

DATIVE: [he] conforms to nature, natūre obtemperat;

ACCUSATIVE: [they] decide the controversy, controversiam dijudicant;

ABLATIVE: [ice] reconcile by clemency, clementiā conciliāmus.

Beginners must be careful, not to translate the English objective case without a preposition by the Latin NOMINATIVE.

Rem. 3. The NUMBER of the governing verb (whether singular or plural) has no influence on the number of the OBJECT, and a noun in the singular may depend on a verb in the singular or plural, and a noun in the plural may depend on a verb in either number.

§ 23. 3. The objective phrase has this in common with the PREDICATIVE phrase, that both consist of a noun and a verb. But they differ in this, that in the PREDICATIVE phrase the noun governs, and the verb is dependent, while in the OBJECTIVE phrase the verb governs, and the noun is dependent.

Rem. 4. How can we see, whether a given phrase is predicative or objective? In LATIN we see this by the CASE of the noun. If the noun is in the NOMINATIVE, it must be the SUBJECT, and hence the phrase must be PREDICATIVE. If the noun is in an OBLIQUE case, it must be an OBJECT (§ 22), and the phrase is OBJECTIVE.

In English we likewise may recognize the phrase as OBJECTIVE by the case-equivalent of the noun, if the latter is connected with a PREPOSITION (of, to, by). If this is not the case, we generally see by the arrangement of the words, whether the phrase is objective or predicative, since in English the objective case generally follows the verb, while the NOMINATIVE precedes it.* Hence if in English a verb is followed by a noun, the latter must be presumed to be in the OBJECTIVE case.

* In the inverted arrangement the nominative may follow, or the objective case precede it. But the regular English arrangement is that indicated in the text.

§ 24. 4. Objective phrases may be conjugated like verbs, and the governing verb in an objective phrase may assume any form, without affecting the grammatical form (case and number) of the object, as:

A. INFINITIVE: Pugnas amāre, to love battles.

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

SINGULAR.

1. Pugnas amo, I love battles.
2. Pugnas amas, thou lovest battles.
3. Pugnas amat, he loves battles.

PLURAL.

1. Pugnas amāmus, we love battles.
2. Pugnas amātis, you love battles.
3. Pugnas amant, they love battles.

B. INFINITIVE: Culpæ damnāre, to convict of guilt.

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

SINGULAR.

1. Culpæ damno, I convict of guilt.
2. Culpæ damnas, thou convictest of guilt.
3. Culpæ damnat, he convicts of guilt.

PLURAL.

1. culpæ damnāmus, we convict of guilt.
2. culpæ damnātis, you convict of guilt.
3. culpæ damnant, they convict of guilt.

EXERCISES.

Conjugate the following objective phrases with their English equivalents according to the paradigms § 24:

Provinciam gubernāre, to govern a province—provincias gubernāre, to govern provinces.

Rapinæ condemnāre, to convict of a robbery—rapinārum condemnāre, to convict of robberies.

Regulæ obtemperāre, to conform to the rule—regulis obtemperāre, to conform to the rules.

Sagittā necāre, to kill by an arrow—sagittis necāre, to kill by arrows.

- A. a. OBJECT IN THE ACCUSATIVE. 1. Amicitiam conturbat. 2. Ignominiam tolerāre. 3. Regulam abrogāmus. 4. Celtas superant. 5. Minervam adorāmus. 6. Pirātas dissipātis. 7. Corōnam adjudicat. 8. Patriam amplificat. 9. Scytham castigat. 10. Statuam cælāmus. 11. Culpam celātis. 12. Gloriam comparāre. 13. Perfidiam confirmas. 14. Coloniam servat. 15. Patriam contaminātis. 16. Ignaviam vituperat. 17. Concordiam turbātis. 18. Filiam educat. 19. Grammaticam enarrāre. 20. Nugas excūsant.

- b. OBJECT IN THE DATIVE. 21. Deabus sacrificāre. 22. Deo sacrificas. 23. Poëte dare. 24. Poëtis dat. 25. Minervæ dedicant. 26. Natūræ obtemperāmus.

c. OBJECT IN THE GENITIVE AND ABLATIVE. 27. Avaritiæ accusāre. 28. Injustitiæ accusāmus. 29. Contumaciæ accūsāt. 30. Negligentiæ damnāre. 31. Perfidie condemnant. 32. Injustitiā abalienāre. 33. Litteris commendāre. 34. Perseverantiā superat. 35. Gratiā conciliat. 36. Victoriis præstat.

B. 1. To refute a slander. 2. To publish slanders. 3. They burn Troy. 4. You disturb the friendship. 5. He endures wrongs. 6. We feign confidence. 7. You separate the country. 8. Thou recallest the sailors. 9. She renews discord. 10. We censure the intrigue. 11. You reconcile the Celts. 12. I recover the money. 13. They greet the Numidians. 14. To refuse the permission. 15. Thou refutest the opinion. 16. He divulges the letter. 17. She denounces the inhabitants. 18. They demand justice. 19. We attack Rome. 20. Thou committest the treachery. 21. He tells nonsense. 22. We build a library. 23. You enter the gate. 24. I excuse the wrongs. 25. He adopts the poet. 26. I chisel a statue. 27. You celebrate a victory. 28. They surround the murderer. 29. He recommends clemency. 30. I convoke the inhabitants. 31. We commit to memory. 32. I recommend to the Persians. 33. You explain to the Celt. 34. It is an obstacle to glory. 35. He accuses of folly. 36. They convict of disobedience. 37. He obtains by boldness. 38. You reign by discord. 39. She appeases by tears. 40. They enter by a ladder.

C. OBJECTIVE, MINGLED WITH PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 1. Persas adjuvat. 2. Persæ adjuvant. 3. Pirātæ circumdant. 4. Pirātas circumdant. 5. Reginam condemnant. 6. Regina condemnat. 7. Romam gubernat. 8. Roma gubernat. 9. Nautas implōrat. 10. Nautæ implōrant. 11. Catilinam increpat. 12. Catilina increpat. 13. Advenæ necant. 14. Advenas necant.

1. He wounds the Persian. 2. The Persian wounds. 3. He implores the queen. 4. The queen implores. 5. Athens condemns. 6. He condemns Athens. 7. They save the sailors. 8. The sailors save. 9. He demands justice. 10. Justice demands. 11. They devour the beast. 12. The beast devours. 13. He adorns the statue. 14. The statue adorns. 15. He invites the Belgians. 16. The Belgians invite.

2.

A. a. ACCUSATIVE AS OBJECT. 1. Insidias paras. 2. Nuptias expectāmus. 3. Sententiam declarāmus. 4. Gratiam sperātis. 5. Poëtas relegant. 6. Poëtas relego. 7. Poëtam relego. 8. Vitam conservas. 9. Philosophiam laudat. 10. Historiam tractāmus. 11. Litteras expectātis. 12. Invidiam superant. 13. Culpam probāre. 14. Tristitiam simulat. 15. Angustias vitat. 16. Tabulam vindicāmus. 17. Pecuniam servant. 18. Calumnias tolero. 19. Pugnam renovat. 20. Alesiam oppugnāmus.

b. DATIVE AS OBJECT. 21. Reginæ obtemperāmus. 22. Memoriam mandāmus. 23. Incolis nuntiāmus. 24. Deabus consecrāre. 25. Deo consecras. 26. Belgis nuntiātis.

c. GENITIVE AND ABLATIVE AS OBJECTS. 27. Calumniæ accusāre. 28. Injuriarum accūsāt. 29. Rapinæ damnat. 30. Diligentis præstat 31. Hastā necant. 32. Herbis sanant. 33. Blanditiis conciliat. 34. Indulgentiā depravātis. 35. Astutiā repugnat.

d. OBJECTIVE AND PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 36. Asseclas celat. 37. Asseclæ celant. 38. Scythæ interrogat. 39. Scytham interrogat. 40. Filia adōrat. 41. Filiam adōrat. 42. Iram excitat. 43. Ira excitat. 44. Pirātas disturbat. 45. Piratæ disturbant.

B. a. OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 1. I prepare the wedding. 2. He desires riches. 3. They prove the slander. 4. I overcome the Persian. 5. I overcome the Persians. 6. We overcome the Persians. 7. She expects letters. 8. They expect justice. 9. It delights the poet. 10. To create luxury. 11. They banish the foreigner. 12. To give permission. 13. They excuse the guilt. 14. She prepares a dinner. 15. They carry the booty. 16. Thou disturbest the country. 17. They occupy Rome. 18. We observe the stars. 19. You violate the armistice. 20. I hire the workmen. 21. He examines the causes. 22. We put the pirates to flight. 23. They capture Troy. 24. Thou conquerest the Numidians. 25. We conquer Numidia. 26. He disputes the opinion. 27. Thou decidest the controversies. 28. You desecrate the altar. 29. He denies justice. 30. We weaken the Persians.

31. To sacrifice to the Furies. 32. We sacrifice to a goddess. 33. He gives to the daughters. 34. They give to the daughters. 35. We give to the Celts. 36. I give to the daughter. 37. To give to the Graces. 38. He ministers (ministrāre) to the queen. 39. We minister to a queen. 40. I minister to the Muses. 41. He accuses of robbery. 42. To accuse of a robbery. 43. They accuse of robberies. 44. They convict of a slander. 45. They finish the war by treachery. 46. We approach by the forest. 47. You excite by arrogance. 48. Thou excellest by the tongue. 49. They appease by tears. 50. You reign by corruption.

b. OBJECTIVE AND PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 51. He censures the Belgians. 52. The Belgians censure. 53. They rebuke the sailors. 54. The sailors rebuke. 55. They kill the pirates. 56. The pirates kill. 57. He calls Sulla. 58. Sulla calls. 59. It tires the poet. 60. The poet tires. 61. He helps the sailor. 62. The sailor helps.

3.

A. a. ACCUSATIVE AS OBJECT. 1. Victoriā nuntiat. 2. Pugnam recusāmus. 3. Pugnam evitat. 4. Victorias nuntio. 5. Pugnam recūso. 6. Pugnas evitant. 7. Victoriā nuntiāmus. 8. Pugnam recusāmus. 9. Pugnam evitātis. 10. Victorias nuntias. 11. Pugnas evitas. 12. Copias convocat. 13. Mercatūram laudat. 14. Silvam intro.

b. DATIVE AS OBJECT. 15. Cinnæ obtemperat. 16. Cinnæ obtemperant. 17. Reginæ ministrant (to minister). 18. Reginæ ministrātis. 19. Minervæ sacrificat. 20. Belgis donāre. 21. Celtis narras. 22. Furiis sacrificātis.

c. GENITIVE AND ABLATIVE AS OBJECTS. 23. Perfidie damnāre. 24. Imprudentiæ accusāre. 25. Elegantiā præstant. 26. Calumniis accūsātis. 27. Controversiis disturbant. 28. Hastis vulnerant. 29. Modestiā conciliat. 30. Perseverantiā superas.

d. OBJECTIVE AND PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 31. Annōnam important. 32. Annōnam vastat. 33. Controversiæ cessant. 34. Controversiā dijudicat. 35. Fugam simulant. 36. Fugam celat. 37. Coloniae obtemperant. 38. Asseclas revocant. 39. Asseclae rebellant. 40. Belgam relegat. 41. Numidiam recuperat. 42. Numidæ recuperant.

B. a. OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 1. He burns the letter. 2. We separate the followers. 3. Thou refusest the remains. 4. He confirms the troops. 5. He changes nature. 6. To save a deserter. 7. I endure the loss. 8. Thou plunderest the altar. 9. She surpasses the queen. 10. We carry the picture. 11. You avenge an injury. 12. They observe the shores. 13. Thou refusest relief. 14. To make Cinna famous. 15. We explore Numidia. 16. You release the Celts. 17. They excuse cruelty. 18. It indicates negligence. 19. They inhabit Asia. 20. He treats philosophy. 21. We praise the scholarship. 22. She ministers to the goddesses. 23. They conform to nature. 24. He conforms to prudence. 25. You object (repugnare) to cruelties. 26. He objects to military service. 27. They dictate (imperare) to Spain. 28. You dictate to Thebes. 29. They accuse of pride. 30. You show by the rules. 31. We sin by nature. 32. They enter by the gate. 33. They fight by land.

b. OBJECTIVE AND PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 34. Friendship delights. 35. He refuses the friendship. 36. The enmity ceases. 37. He feigns friendship. 38. He avoids the ambushade. 39. We renew the discord. 40. Discord reigns. 41. The farmers labor. 42. They plough the land. 43. The Celts conspire. 44. They reconcile the Celts.

LESSON VI.

THE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE.

§ 25. 1. A phrase is called attributive, if its governing word is a NOUN, and its dependent word either another NOUN, or an ADJECTIVE,* as :

Nautae tabula, the table of the sailor ;

Persarum victoria, the victory of the Persians.

In these attributive phrases the genitives nautae and Persarum are the DEPENDENT, and the nouns tabula and victoriae the GOVERNING words.

§ 26. 2. The dependent word in the attributive phrase is called the attribute, which in Latin may either precede or follow its governing noun. But if the attribute is a GENITIVE (attributive genitive), it more generally precedes, than follows the governing noun.

* We consider in this lesson those attributive phrases only, which have a NOUN in the GENITIVE as attribute.

Rem. 1. The attributive and predicative phrases are distinguished from each other by the DEPENDENT word, which in the former is a NOUN, and in the latter a FINITE VERB, while the GOVERNING words in both phrases are NOUNS.

§ 27. 3. The English case-equivalent of the Latin attributive genitive is either the preposition of, or the POSSESSIVE CASE, as :

Nautae filia, the daughter of the sailor, or the sailor's daughter.

§ 28. 4. The governing noun in the attributive phrase may be in any case or number, without affecting the genitive case or the number of the attribute, and attributive phrases may be declined in a similar manner, as objective phrases are conjugated (§ 24), as :

SINGULAR.

Nom. Filiae cura, the daughter's care, or the care of the daughter.

Gen. Filiae curae, of the daughter's care, or of the care of the daughter.

Dat. Filiae curae, to the daughter's care, or to the care of the daughter.

Acc. Filiae curam, the daughter's care, or the care of the daughter (obj. case).

Voc. Filiae cura, O care of the daughter !

Abl. Filiae curā, by the daughter's care, or by the care of the daughter.

PLURAL.

Nom. Filiae curae, the daughter's cares, or the cares of the daughter.

Gen. Filiae curarum, of the daughter's cares, or of the cares of the daughter.

Dat. Filiae curis, to the daughter's cares, or to the cares of the daughter.

Acc. Filiae curas, the daughter's cares, or the cares of the daughter (obj. case).

Voc. Filiae curae, O cares of the daughter !

Abl. Filiae curis, by the daughter's cares, or by the cares of the daughter.

Rem. 2. In the same way we decline attributive phrases, if the attribute is in the PLURAL, as Nom. filiārum cura, the care of the daughters; Gen. filiārum curae, of the care of the daughters; Acc. filiārum curam, the care of the daughters, &c.

EXERCISES.

 Decline the following attributive phrases according to the paradigm § 28, together with the English equivalents:

1. Reginae gratia, the favor of the queen.
2. Piratārum poena, the punishment of the pirates.
3. Puellae lacrimae, the tears of the girl.
4. Indutiārum causa, the cause of the armistice.
5. Sullae villa, Sulla's country-seat.
6. Incolārum sententia, the opinion of the inhabitants.

1.

A. 1. Poetae corona. 2. Rapinārum (robbery) poena. 3. Incolārum fama. 4. Lunae distantia. 5. Fortunae causa. 6. Victoriārum gloria. 7. Bestiārum catervae. 8. Deārum statuē. 9. Agricolae diligentia. 10. Numidārum sagittae. 11. Poetae eloquentia. 12. Persarum inimicitiae. 13. Belgarum amicitiae. 14. Incolārum injuriis. 15. Cenae reliquiis. 16. Poetae epistolae. 17. Persarum divitiis. 18. Germaniae silvas. 19. Terrae naturam. 20. Piratae rapinas. 21. Copiarum praedam. 22. Statuarum reliquias. 23. Scytharum saevitiam. 24. Morae causam. 25. Persarum victorias. 26. Syracusarum mercaturā. 27. Agricolarum inopia. 28. Poetae justitia. 29. Naturae regulis. 30. Scytharum ignorantia. 31. Nautarum invidia. 32. Modestiae fama. 33. Belgarum concordia. 34. Cinnae exsequiis.

B. 1. The poverty of the Numidians. 2. The injuries of the poet. 3. The daughter of a foreigner. 4. The lances of the Persians. 5. The immigrant's money. 6. The queen's clemency. 7. The sailor's riches. 8. The obedience of the daughter. 9. The history of the Persians. 10. The rules of nature. 11. Athens' treachery. 12. Cinna's cruelty. 13. Of the Belgian's daughter. 14. Of Persia's riches. 15. Of the poet's history. 16. Of the queen's justice. 17. Of the obstinacy of the colonies. 18. To the glory of Syracuse. 19. To Rome's memory. 20. To the discords of the provinces. 21. To the distance of the islands. 22. To the herbs of the earth. 23. To the tears of women. 24. The guilt (obj.) of the pirates. 25. The Belgian's letter (obj.). 26. The banks (obj.) of the Sequana. 27. The rules (obj.) of discipline. 28. The causes (obj.) of envy. 29. The forms (obj.) of the letters (of the alphabet). 30. The folly (obj.) of the Numidians. 31. By the knowledge of sciences. 32. By the flight of the Persians. 33. By the dinner of the sailors. 34. By the life of the queen. 35. By the vigilance of the watches. 36. By the enmity of the Persians. 37. By the statues of the goddesses. 38. By the pirate's booty. 39. By the discord of the troops. 40. By the rules of the school. 41. By the justice of the cause. 42. By Catiline's treachery. 43. By the industry of the workmen. 44. By the labor of the inhabitants. 45. By the queens of Britain. 46. By the riches of Syracuse. 47. By the flatteries of a poet. 48. By the distance of the stars. 49. By the arrows of a murderer. 50. By the glory of the country.

2.

A. 1. Piratae audacia. 2. Alienigenae dementia. 3. Catilineae assecla. 4. Scytharum abstinencia. 5. Provinciarum distantia. 6. Dolabellae bibliotheca. 7. Piratārum cella. 8. Catilineae conscientiae. 9. Celtarum ferociae. 10. Persarum colonia. 11. Belgarum clavas. 12. Senecae tragediam. 13. Persae arrogantiam. 14. Scribarum desidia. 15. Sententiarum elegantia. 16. Scytharum inopia. 17. Provinciarum agriculturā. 18. Copiarum disciplina. 19. Filiae blanditia. 20. Fortunae gratia. 21. Fabularum nugis. 22. Numidarum rapina. 23. Piratae filia. 24. Grammaticae regularum. 25. Numidarum copiis. 26. Scribarum fallaciis. 27. Graeciae insulis. 28. Thebarum portis. 29. Cenarum impensis. 30. Persarum insidias. 31. Italiae oras. 32. Philosophiae fallaciis. 33. Senecae tragediis.

B. 1. The favor of the Muses. 2. The imprudence of youth. 3. The frequency of letters. 4. The language of the Belgians. 5. The sailor's prudence. 6. The corruption of the scribes. 7. Of the queen's money. 8. Of Seneca's philosophy. 9. Of the treachery of the Scythians. 10. To Galba's cruelty. 11. To the clemency of Nerva. 12. To the poverty of Ireland. 13. To the treachery of Thebes. 14. The discord (obj.) of the goddesses. 15. The disobedience (obj.) of the sailors. 16. A colony (obj.) of Athens. 17. A scribe of the queen. 18. By the permission of a goddess. 19. By the pride of Britain. 20. By the abduction (rapina) of Proserpina. 21. By the daughter of Latona. 22. By the discipline of Sparta. 23. The banks of the Trebia. 24. The tears of Lucretia. 25. The shores of Sicily. 26. The hours of sadness. 27. Of the wealth of Sicily. 28. Of the remains of the Numidians. 29. Of the farmer's store-houses. 30. To the inhabitants of Asia. 31. To the hardships of the flight. 32. The delays (obj.) of justice. 33. The hardships (obj.) of military service. 34. The swarms (obj.) of pirates. 35. By the expenses of commerce. 36. By an armistice of the Scythians. 37. By the dainties of the dinners. 38. By the wedding of Emilia. 39. By the gates of Syracuse. 40. By the want of provisions.

LESSON VII.

THE SECOND CONJUGATION.

§ 29. PARADIGM.

Infinitive: Monēre, to admonish (stem. monē, charact. ē, ending re).

Present indicative:

| SINGULAR.                                 |
|---|
| 1. Moneo, I admonish.              |
| 2. Mones, thou admonishest.        |
| 3. Monet, he (she, it) admonishes. |

| PLURAL.                          |
|----------------------------------|
| 1. Monēmus, we admonish.  |
| 2. Monētis, you admonish. |
| 3. Monent, they admonish. |

§ 30. 1. To the second conjugation belong all verbs, which have the vowel ē for a characteristic. This conjugation differs from the first in the CHARACTERISTIC only, not in the endings, which in both conjugations are the same. But the second conjugation, different from the first, retains and shortens the characteristic e in the first person singular.

§ 31. 2. The second conjugation, more than any other, contains verbs, denoting a STATE or BEING. Such verbs frequently must be rendered by the English verb 'to be' with an ADJECTIVE, as calēre, to be warm, pollēre, to be powerful. They are conjugated according to the following paradigm:

Infinitive: Tacēre, to be silent.

Present indicative:

| SINGULAR.                               |
|---|
| 1. Taceo, I am silent.           |
| 2. Taces, thou art silent.       |
| 3. Tacet, he, she, it is silent. |

| PLURAL.                            |
|------------------------------------|
| 1. Tacēmus, we are silent.  |
| 2. Tacētis, you are silent. |
| 3. Tacent, they are silent. |

EXERCISES.

Commit the verbs of the second conjugation (XII. Vocab.) and conjugate the following verbs, according to the paradigms § 29 and 31: appārere, to appear; arcēre, to ward off; calēre, to be warm; ciēre, to excite; cavēre, to be cautious; flēre, to weep; implēre, to fill; miscēre, to mix; parēre, to obey; torquēre, to torture; nēre, to spin.

1.*PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

A. 1. Culpa appāret. 2. Silva ardet. 3. Africa calet. 4. Desidia displicet. 5. Aqua fervet. 6. Puella flet. 7. Pugna languet. 8. Tenebræ prævalent. 9. Poëtæ indigent. 10. Persæ lugent. 11. Horæ monent. 12. Scythæ pavent. 13. Athēnæ pollent. 14. Insidiæ latent. 15. Belga stupet. 16. Sulla succenset. 17. Terentia valet. 18. Valvæ patent. 19. Copiæ prandent. 20. Poëtæ tacent. 21. Furiae terrent.

B. 1. Delay detains. 2. Discord destroys. 3. Discipline exercises. 4. Syracuse flourishes. 5. The Persian rejoices. 6. Athens lies down. 7. Agriculture languishes. 8. Glory remains. 9. A threat frightens. 10. The stars glitter. 11. Modesty pleases. 12. The sailors answer. 13. The girls laugh. 14. The Numidians fear. 15. The Belgians urge. 16. The earth is dry. 17. The pirate is on his guard. 18. The troops are glad. 19. A battle is imminent. 20. Envy is hidden. 21. Anger is injurious. 22. Modesty is silent. 23. The roses are splendid. 24. The sailors are angry. 25. The poet is well. 26. The colonies are strong. 27. The provinces are obedient. 28. The lances are conspicuous. 29. The statues are exposed for sale. 30. The senate-house is open. 31. The labor languishes.

OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

A. 1. Alienigenam adhibētis. 2. Prædam admovent. 3. Statuam amovet. 4. Diligentiam augēmus. 5. Arrogantiam coërceo. 6. Romam delēre. 7. Colonias deterres. 8. Fossas explētis. 9. Corōnam meres. 10. Misericordiam movet. 11. Uticam obsideo. 12. Pecuniam obtinēmus. 13. Persas perterrētis. 14. Tabulas possidēmus. 15. Belgas timent.

GENITIVE. 16. Pecuniæ egēre. 17. Pecuniæ egēmus. 18. Pecuniæ eges. 19. Incolārum eget. 20. Indutiārum egētis.

DATIVE AND ABLATIVE. 21. Reginæ adhærēmus. 22. Numæ appāret. 23. Numæ appareo. 24. Arrogantiā displicētis. 25. Eloquentiā movent. 26. Blanditiis persuādes.

B. 1. It destroys discipline. 2. We ward off the Scythians. 3. They excite envy. 4. You detain the Celt. 5. I teach grammar. 6. It exercises patience. 7. We have provisions. 8. Thou admonishest the daughter. 9. He possesses the island. 10. She retains life. 11. You see the battle. 12. We are in need of a library. 13. He is hidden to the pirates. 14. It is injurious to the farmers. 15. You are obedient to Rome. 16. Thou givest advice to the poet. 17. You shine by wisdom. 18. He is powerful by eloquence. 19. We restrain by discipline. 20. Thou displeasest by negligence.

2.*PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

A. 1. Ira fervet. 2. Pugna ardet. 3. Nauta cavet. 4. Poëtæ docent. 5. Agricola dolent. 6. Herbæ florent. 7. Feminæ gaudent. 8. Justitia coërcet. 9. Tenebræ prævalent. 10. Parietinae manent. 11. Natūra torpet. 12. Diligentia languet. 13. Copias auget. 14. Copias augent. 15. Reginam abhorret. 16. Reginas abhorret. 17. Reginam abhorrent. 18. Reginas abhorrent. 19. Terram movet. 20. Indutias præbet. 21. Athēnas delent. 22. Pecuniam adhibēmus. 23. Undas timeo. 24. Piratas arcētis. 25. Incolas cies. 26. Pecuniam debēre. 27. Iram continēmus. 28. Concordiā valētis. 29. Invidiā displices.

B. 1. Life teaches. 2. The tongue is cautious. 3. The foreigner is astonished. 4. Philosophy lies down. 5. The poets answer. 6. Memory is strong. 7. The stars shine. 8. The provinces are open. 9. The inhabitants are angry. 10. The pictures displease. 11. The rules teach. 12. The workmen are on their guard. 13. We increase the vigilance. 14. They deride the victory. 15. Thou teachest philosophy. 16. He removes the old walls. 17. You grant permission. 18. We detest corruption. 19. He holds the lance. 20. They owe friendship. 21. You destroy justice. 22. I see the flames. 23. He prohibits the funeral. 24. They sustain the slander. 25. Thou obtainest a victory. 26. You display firmness. 27. They are in need of water. 28. It is unpleasant to the queen. 29. Thou restrainest by punishments. 30. I disadvise the battle. 31. She besieges the gate. 32. We retain the followers.

LESSON VIII.

THE SECOND DECLENSION.

§ 32. 1. The nominative singular of the nouns of the second declension has the case-termination us or um. The former belongs to the MASCULINE, the latter to the NEUTER gender.

Rem. 1. Some nouns of this declension in er and ir drop the case-termination us. See L. X.

§ 33. 2. The case-terminations of the second declension are the following :

| SINGULAR.          | PLURAL.           |
|--------------------|-------------------|
| N. us, NEUTERS um. | N. i, NEUTERS a.  |
| G. i.              | G. ōrum.          |
| D. o.              | D. is.            |
| A. um.             | A. os, NEUTERS a. |
| V. e, NEUTERS um.  | V. i, NEUTERS a.  |
| A. o.              | A. is.            |

Rem. 2. Neuter nouns of any declension have the peculiarity, that their nominatives, accusatives and vocatives are alike, and that these cases in the plural always terminate in a.

§ 34. 3. The cases of nouns of the 2d declension are formed by adding the terminations § 33 to the declension-stem, which is found by removing the termination us or um of the nominative. Thus hortus has the declension-stem hort—, and bellum the stem bell—.

§ 35. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.              | PLURAL.                    |
|------------------------|----------------------------|
| N. Ventus, the wind.   | N. Venti, the winds.       |
| G. Venti, of the wind. | G. Ventōrum, of the winds. |
| D. Vento, to the wind. | D. Ventis, to the winds.   |
| A. Ventum, the wind.   | A. Ventos, the winds.      |
| V. Vente, O wind!      | V. Venti, O winds!         |
| A. Vento, by the wind. | A. Ventis, by the winds.   |
| N. Bellum, the war.    | N. Bella, the wars.        |
| G. Belli, of the war.  | G. Bellōrum, of the wars.  |
| D. Bello, to the war.  | D. Bellis, to the wars.    |
| A. Bellum, the war.    | A. Bella, the wars.        |
| V. Bellum, O war!      | V. Bella, O wars!          |
| A. Bello, by the war.  | A. Bellis, by the wars.    |

§ 36. 4. The noun deus, a god, has the following irregular cases :

Voc. Sing. deus, like the nominative (not dee);

Nom. & Voc. Plur. di (seldom dei or dii);

Dat. & Abl. Plur. dis (seldom deis or diis).

§ 37. 5. The following nouns form their plurals either in i or in a. They are MASCULINE in the former, and NEUTER in the latter case:

Jocus, jest, (PLUR. joci and joca); frenum, bridle, (PLUR. freni and frena); locus, place, (PLUR. loci and loca).

The plurals loci and loca have different significations. Loca are localities, but loci places in books or in discourse.

Rem. 3. The pluralia tantum and the heterological nouns of the 2d declension (VI. and VII. Vocab.) must be committed.

PROPER NOUNS OF THE SECOND DECLENSION.

§ 38. 6. The following PROPER NOUNS occur in the second declension :

1. Male names. The majority of the Roman male names belong to this declension, terminating in us or ius, as: Romulus, Brutus, Cassius, Fabius.

Rem. 4. It is customary to drop the termination us or ius of many male proper names in English, and to change them otherwise, as: Virgilius, Virgil, Horatius, Horace, Antonius, Anthony, Sallustius, Sallust, Pompejus, Pompey, Livius, Livy, Plinius, Pliny, Tarquinius, Tarquin, Marcus, Mark, Terentius, Terence, Mercurius, Mercury. Greek male nouns in os assume the termination us in Latin. To these belong Homērus, Homer, Philippus, Philip, Dionysius.

On the other hand, modern proper names generally receive the ending us or ius by modern Latinists, and often undergo other changes besides, as: Bentley, Bentlėjus, Barclay, Barclėjus, Porson, Porsonus, Dacier, Dacierius, Frederick, Fredericus, William, Guilielmus, Charles, Carolus, Francis, Franciscus, Henry, Henricus.

Rem. 5. The declension of the male proper names in ius (not of those in us) and in jus deviates in the vocative singular from that of the common nouns. They drop the termination e of the vocative, lengthening the preceding i, as: Virgili (not Virgilius), O Virgil! Tulli, O Tullius! Those in jus change j into i, as: Gai, O Gaius, Pompēi (not Pompēius), O Pompey! But common nouns in ius, and the proper noun Darius form regular vocatives, as: Dariē (not Dari), O Darius! sociē (not soci), O ally! Only the common noun pius (son) makes the vocative fili, not filie.

2. Names of nations, in us or i, as Romānus, a Roman, Gallus, a Gaul, Græcus, a Greek, Siculus, a Sicilian, Rhodus, a Rhodian, Helveticus, a Helvetian.

3. Names of cities and islands, as: Ephesus, Tyrrus, Rhodus (Rhodes), Corinthus (Corinth), Damascus, Epidamnus, Venusium, Tusculum, Brundisium, Saguntum, and the pluralia tantum Circējī (G. ōrum), Gomphi, Veji, Pompējī, Delphi, Leuctra (G. Leuctrōrum), Bactra, Susa.

4. Several names of countries, as: Epīrus, Peloponnesus, Ægyptus (Egypt), Chersonesus, Pontus, Latium, Belgium.

5. A few names of rivers and seas, as: Rhenus (the Rhine), Danubius (the Danube), Rhodanus (the Rhone), Hellespontus (the Hellespont).

EXERCISES.

Commit the nouns in us and um Vocab. II. and write paradigm of the following nouns: annus, gladius, inceptum, flagitium, deus, ilius, of the male proper names Sulpicius, Petrus, Gaius (the proper names to be declined in the singular only), and of emissarius, an emissary.

1.

Translate the following Vocatives into Latin:

O sword! O Darius! O Marius! O messenger! O companion! O Anthony! O god! O dream! O sleep! O kingdoms! O gods! O neighbor! O Fentius! O Bentley! O Barclay! O Cornelius! O Livy! O son! O vice! O scholar! O adversary! O river! O Horace! O Terence! O evil! O assassin! O patrician! O people! O crimes!

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. The enemy's son. 2. The hour of business. 3. The flight of the allies. 4. A disease of the brain. 5. Fabius's life. 6. The victory of the Carthaginians. 7. The words of the messenger. 8. The enemies of the people. 9. The causes of the falsehood. 10. The places of the battle. 11. The pay of the tribunes. 12. The destruction of the walls. 13. The hours of leisure. 14. The swords of the Romans. 15. Of the tyrant's power. 16. Of the banks of the river. 17. Of the study of philosophy. 18. Of the prisoner's joy. 19. Of the prefect's prudence. 20. Of the duties of scholars. 21. Of the neighbors' thefts. 22. Of the evidence of the fraud. 23. Of the arms of the allies. 24. To Frederick's note-book. 25. To the calendar of the Greeks. 26. To the pen of Livy. 27. To Bentley's scholarship. 28. To the walls of Corinth. 29. To the auxiliary troops of the Germans. 30. To the conflagration of Susa. 31. To the baggage of the allies. 32. To the plans of the enemy. 33. To the enemies of the master. 34. To Pompey's slaves. 35. Charles's misdemeanor (obj.). 36. The rivers (obj.) of Italy. 37. The years (obj.) of youth. 38. The fords (obj.) of the Danube. 39. The kingdoms (obj.) of Europe. 40. The camp (obj.) of the Helvetians. 41. By a temple of Mercury. 42. By the park of Sallust. 43. By the gods of the Romans. 44. By Anthony's sickness. 45. By the hatred of neighbors. 46. By the joy of the gods. 47. By the affairs of the Greeks. 48. By the arms of the Gauls. 49. By the graves of the allies. 50. By the crimes of Tarquin.

PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. The people commands. 2. The roofs shine. 3. The slaves laugh. 4. The assassins are hidden. 5. The Sicilians tremble. 6. The German mourn. 7. The gods grant. 8. Dangers surround. 9. The calendar confirms. 10. Auxiliary troops appear. 11. Wines delight. 12. The camp is open. 13. The rivers are dry. 14. The Carthaginians are on their guard. 15. The arguments move. 16. He celebrates a triumph. 17. Thou increasest the danger. 18. He kills the tyrants. 19. They destroy the baggage. 20. You desecrate the temples. 21. We praise Horace. 22. Thou rearest Pompey. 23. They besiege Veji. 24. He destroys Susa. 25. We deride the barbarians. 26. I detest the assassins. 27. Thou plunderest the people. 28. We have friends. 29. You frighten the allies. 30. They teach the freedmen. 31. To sacrifice to the gods. 32. I am obedient to the prefect. 33. He adheres to the tyrant. 34. It is injurious to the people. 35. They conform to the precepts. 36. He is in need of the pay. 37. They convict of a crime. 38. He obtains by study. 39. You hurt by falsehoods. 40. He heals by a miracle. 41. They recover by the sword. 42. They are strong by arms. 43. They frighten by reproaches.

Translate into English:

44. Græcos relegat. 45. Oppida expugnat. 46. Regna deles. 47. Captivos necat. 48. Pœnos superant. 49. Pericula vitat. 50. Letum timētis. 51. Adversarios deridet. 52. Animum servare. 53. Argumenta adhibemus. 54. Barbaros arcētis. 55. Captivos torquent. 56. Fabium vituperant. 57. Vejos delēmus. 58. Cūm recūant. 59. Commertium exercētis. 60. Peloponnēsum vastant. 61. Desideria cōercēmus. 62. Præmia præbet. 63. Auxilii eget. 64. Furti accūsat. 65. Oppidānis nocētis. 66. Dis parēmus. 67. Studio præstant. 68. Numero valētis. 69. Ingenio splendet. 70. Gladio cōreco.

2.

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. Of the scholar's study. 2. Of the scholar's studies. 3. Of the neighbor's steer. 4. Of the neighbor's steers. 5. Of the fragments of Livy. 6. To the hatred of the Patricians. 7. To the philosopher's advantage. 8. To the philosopher's advantages. 9. To the advantages of the philosophers. 10. To the danger of a conflagration. 11. To the plans of Tarquin. 12. To the votes of the people. 13. To the secrets of the assassins. 14. The rocks (obj.) of Scylla. 15. The rivers (obj.) of Sicily. 16. The spoils (obj.) of Susa. 17. The glory (obj.) of Leuctra

18. By the oracle of Delphi. 19. By Pompey's messenger. 20. By the ambassadors of the Helvetians. 21. By the horses of the Carthaginians. 22. The commands of the prefect. 23. The dangers of the war. 24. The sons of Æmilius. 25. Of the decrees of the people. 26. To the freedmen of Anthony. 27. To the refuge of the slaves. 28. To the rewards of perseverance. 29. To the monuments of Egypt. 30. To Darius's death. 31. The remedies of the physician. 32. The companion (obj.) of tyrants. 33. The philosophers (obj.) of Greece. 34. O son of Mark! 35. O adversary of Pompey! 36. O companion of crimes! 37. O messenger of the tyrant! 38. By the testimony of Fabius. 39. By the principles of philosophy. 40. By the walls of Athens.

PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. He asks the ambassadors. 2. The ambassadors ask. 3. He fears the tyrant. 4. The tyrant fears. 5. He appeases Anthony. 6. Anthony appeases. 7. They praise the tribunes. 8. The tribunes praise. 9. He recovers the baggage. 10. He besieges the camp. 11. He is obedient to Pompey. 12. Pompey is obedient. 13. He is conspicuous by merits. 14. The arms lie down. 15. The people fears. 16. The slaves mourn. 17. The towns flourish. 18. The scholars are silent. 19. The swords glitter. 20. They kill the soul. 21. They adore gods. 22. He carries a steer. 23. He counts (redibere) the votes. 24. They overcome the allies. 25. They recall the auxiliary troops. 26. He saves the captives. 27. To be obedient to the masters. 28. It is agreeable to the tribune. 29. We adhere to the plan. 30. They accuse of a falsehood. 31. I am in need (egere) of food. 32. He is in need of provisions. 33. You recall the messengers. 34. Thou seest the temples. 35. We greet the ambassadors.

Translate into English :

36. Philosophum liberant. 37. Servum castigat. 38. Præfectum fatigant. 39. Fluvios superant (to cross). 40. Muros delent. 41. Morbum sanant. 42. Captivos liberamus. 43. Libertos vexant. 44. Di favent. 45. Servi latent. 46. Plebēi dolent. 47. Socii gaudent. 48. Judæi pavent. 49. Monumenta manent. 50. Præfecto debemus. 51. Delphoe spoliant. 52. Oraculo parēmus. 53. Promissis persuadētis. 54. Præceptis doces. 55. Mundum creat. 56. Dolo regnas. 57. Plebējos ciētis. 58. Peloponnēsum occupant. 59. Furta perpetrare. 60. Patriciis ad hæreo.

LESSON IX.

GENDER OF NOUNS. ADJECTIVES.

A. GENDER.

§ 39. 1. The gender of Latin nouns is fourfold: 1. the MASCULINE, 2. the FEMININE, 3. the NEUTER, 4. the COMMON GENDER.

The common gender, with a few rare exceptions, is confined to the third declension.

Rem. 1. GENDER is the GRAMMATICAL SEX. The masculine and feminine are the two PERSONAL and NATURAL genders, corresponding to the two SEXES of PERSONS. The proper meaning of the term "NEUTER GENDER" is the want of sex, and hence this gender exclusively belongs to THINGS without life. But the Latin language attributes a natural or personal gender even to THINGS without life, which may be either MASCULINE, FEMININE, or NEUTER. For the COMMON gender see the third declension.

§ 40. 2. The gender does not influence the declension of NOUNS, except that NEUTER nouns have three cases alike in both numbers (see § 33, Rem. 2.). But ADJECTIVES are differently declined, according to the gender of the NOUN, on which they depend. See § 47.

§ 41. 3. Personal nouns (that is nouns, denoting persons) of the SECOND declension, terminating in us, are without exception MASCULINE, and always denote MALES. They generally are subject to motion (§ 4, No. c), that is their termination us is changed into a, in order to designate FEMALES of the same category. They then belong to the first declension, as:

socius, a male companion.....socia, a female companion;
amicus, a male friend.....amica, a female friend;
deus, a god.....dea, a goddess;
Romānus, a male Roman.....Romāna, a female Roman.

Such nouns are called movable nouns.

Rem. 2. Nouns in the PLURAL, comprising individuals of both sexes, always are masculine, as: propinqui, relatives (male and female); consobrini, cousins (of both sexes). Here belong the plurals of NATIONAL nouns, as Romāni, the Romans; Græci, the Greeks, all of which, if denoting the nation as such, always are of masculine gender.

§ 42. 4. PERSONAL nouns of the first declension in a, always are masculine, unless they exclusively denote females, as filia f., daughter; regina f., queen. But poëta, a poet, pirāta, a pirate etc. are masculine.

Rem. 3. It is peculiar, that the masculine personal nouns in a, are in English of common gender, being used of both sexes in this language, as: agricola, a farmer; collēga, a colleague; incolā, an inhabitant; scriba, a scribe; assecla, a follower; perfuga, a deserter.

Persa, a Persian. In Latin all these nouns designate the male sex only, and hence always are masculine.

§ 43. 5. Nouns, denoting Things (including BEASTS), of the first declension (in a) are FEMININE; those of the second declension in us are MASCULINE, and those in um NEUTER.

§ 44. 6. EXCEPTIONS.

a. The names of the Gallic rivers Garumna, the Garonne; Sequana, the Seine; Matrona, the Marne, are MASCULINE.

b. The names of CITIES in us, as Ephesus, Corinthus, &c., but not the pluralia tantum in i, are FEMININE.

c. The names of TREES in us, as prunus, a plum-tree; cerasus, a cherry-tree; laurus, a laurel-tree; pirus, a pear-tree, are FEMININE.

d. The names of the following four COUNTRIES in us are FEMININE: Ægyptus, Epīrus, Peloponnēsus, Chersonēsus.

e. The nouns alvus, a belly or beehive, colus, a distaff, domus, a house, humus, the ground, vannus, a winnowing instrument, are FEMININE.

f. The nouns pelagus, sea (a poetical word), virus, poison, vulgus, the populace, are NEUTER. These do not form a PLURAL number.

Rem. 4. Several nouns of the first and second declensions, originally denoting THINGS, by a figurative use of the language, have assumed the signification of PERSONS. Such personal nouns retain that gender, which they have in their original signification as THINGS. They are: a. The FEMININES copiæ, troops, custodiæ, guards, excubiæ, sentinels, operæ, workmen, vigiliæ, watchmen; b. The NEUTERS auxilia, auxiliary troops, sercitium or mancipium, a slave.

B. ADJECTIVES.

§ 45. 7. Adjectives are divided into movable adjectives, and adjectives of common gender. The latter belong to the THIRD declension; but the MOVABLE adjectives, that is those, which have different forms for the three genders, belong to the first and second declensions.

§ 46. 8. MOVABLE adjectives have the termination us for the masculine, a, for the feminine, and um for the neuter gender in the nominative singular, as bonus m., bona f., bonum n. The masculine and neuter forms are inflected like nouns of the second, and the feminine forms like nouns of the first declension, according to the following paradigm:

| SINGULAR.  |           |         | PLURAL.    |           |         |
|------------|-----------|---------|------------|-----------|---------|
| Masculine. | Feminine. | Neuter. | Masculine. | Feminine. | Neuter. |
| N. bonus   | bona      | bonum   | boni       | bonæ      | bona    |
| G. boni    | bonæ      | boni    | bonorum    | bonarum   | bonorum |
| D. bono    | bonæ      | bono    | bonis      | bonis     | bonis   |
| A. bonum   | bonam     | bonum   | bonos      | bonas     | bona    |
| V. bone    | bona      | bonum   | boni       | bonæ      | bona    |
| A. bono    | bonā      | bono    | bonis      | bonis     | bonis   |

Rem. 5. Adjectives are quoted in that form, which they have in the nominative singular of the masculine gender.

Rem. 6. Some adjectives drop the termination us of the nominative singular. For these see Lesson X.

§ 47. 9. Adjectives are ATTRIBUTES of the nouns, on which they depend, and form attributive phrases with them. They must assume the GENDER, NUMBER and CASE of their governing nouns, which is called the agreement of the adjectives. They generally follow the nouns, on which they depend, as:
by a diligent scribe, scribā assiduo; certain evidences, documenta certa; of high houses, domorum altarum; to a good son, filio bono.

Adjectives in connection with NOUNS are declined according to the following paradigms:

| SINGULAR.                          |                                    | PLURAL.                              |  |
|------------------------------------|------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|--|
| N. Nauta regius, a royal sailor.   | G. nautæ regii, of a royal sailor. | N. nautæ regii, royal sailors.       | G. nautarum regiōrum, of royal sailors.  |
| D. nautæ regio, to a royal sailor. | A. nautam regium, a royal sailor.  | D. nautis regiis, to royal sailors.  | A. nautas regios, royal sailors.         |
| V. nauta regie, O royal sailor!    | A. nautā regio, by a royal sailor. | V. nautæ regii, O royal sailors!     | A. nautis regiis, by royal sailors.      |
| N. Cura magna, the great care.     | G. curæ magnæ, of the great care.  | N. curæ magnæ, the great cares.      | G. curarum magnarum, of the great cares. |
| D. curæ magnæ, to the great care.  | A. curam magnam, the great care.   | D. curis magnis, to the great cares. | A. curas magnas, the great cares.        |
| V. cura magna, O great care!       | A. curā magnā, by the great care.  | V. curæ magnæ, O great cares!        | A. curis magnis, by great cares.         |

SINGULAR.

PLURAL.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| N. Dolus mutuus, a mutual fraud.     | N. doli mutui, mutual frauds.         |
| G. doli mutui, of a mutual fraud.    | G. dolōrum mutuōrum, of mutual        |
| D. dolo mutuo, to a mutual fraud.    | frauds.                               |
| A. dolum mutuum, a mutual fraud.     | D. dolis mutuis, to mutual frauds.    |
| V. dole mutue, O mutual fraud!       | A. dolos mutuos, mutual frauds.       |
| A. dolo mutuo, by a mutual fraud.    | V. doli mutui, O mutual frauds!       |
|   | A. dolis mutuis, by mutual frauds.    |
| <hr/>                                       |  |
| N. Prunus celsa, a high plum-tree.   | N. pruni celsæ, high plum-trees.      |
| G. pruni celsæ, of a high plum-tree. | G. prunōrum celsārum, of high         |
| D. pruno celsæ, to a high plum-tree. | plum-trees.                           |
| A. prunum celsam, a high plum-tree.  | D. prunis celsis, to high plum-trees. |
|   | A. prunos celsas, high plum-trees.    |
| V. prune celsa, O high plum-tree!    | V. pruni celsæ, O high plum-trees!    |
| A. pruno celsā, by a high plum-tree. | A. prunis celsis, by high plum-trees. |
| <hr/>                                       |  |
| N. Oppidum parvum, a small town.     | N. oppida parva, small towns.         |
| G. oppidi parvi, of a small town.    | G. oppidōrum parvōrum, of small       |
| D. oppido parvo, to a small town.    | towns.                                |
| A. oppidum parvum, a small town.     | D. oppidis parvis, to small towns.    |
| V. oppidum parvum, O small town!     | A. oppida parva, small towns.         |
| A. oppido parvo, by a small town.    | V. oppida parva, O small towns!       |
|   | A. oppidis parvis, by small towns.    |

EXERCISES.

Commit the adjectives VIII of the Vocabularies, and write the following paradigms with the English significations, according to § 47:

Amicitia vera, true friendship. Incola egēnus, a poor inhabitant. Dea benigna, the kind goddess. Barbarus indoctus, an unlearned barbarian. Humus madida, the wet ground. Cerasus vetusta, an old cherry-tree. Scythia sævus, a cruel Scythian. Vulgus profānum, the profane populace. Auxilium certum, a certain help. Ægyptus antiqua, ancient Egypt (sing.).

1.

1. To a friendly stranger. 2. Cold water (obj.). 3. By a renowned Belgian. 4. Of a faithful follower. 5. By severe discipline. 6. An extraordinary (egregius) boldness (obj.). 7. Pernicious discords. 8. Of the deep Garonne. 9. Unheard of intrigues (obj.). 10. Of the angry troops. 11. By inveterate enmity. 12. A dense darkness. 13. By a cowardly deserter. 14. To a poor farmer. 15. To the sad daughters. 16. The open gates. 17. By the renowned Ephesus. 18. Of a nefarious treachery. 19. A high poplar (obj.). 20. To a thankful people. 21. By an ungrateful freedwoman. 22. By an idle (female) beggar. 23. Industrious (female) slaves. 24. Sharp swords (obj.). 25. Ample provisions (obj.). 26. Of an honest German woman. 27. Pernicious poisons (obj.). 28

Of foreign arms. 29. The renowned Delphi (obj.). 30. By invincible Rome. 31. Of proud Athens. 32. By the wealthy Damascus. 33. Foreign auxiliary troops. 34. By a profitable commerce. 35. Ample rewards (obj.). 36. O impious son! 37. O envious adversary! 38. By a small house. 39. Of the left eye. 40. A full beehive. 41. A cold ground (obj.).

2.

1. Narrow roads. 2. Of a sick son. 3. Bitter remedies. 4. Of an accurate scholarship. 5. To the eternal God. 6. By an ancient town. 7. Of attentive watchmen. 8. Of cautious drivers (auriga). 9. Of contented farmers. 10. The broad Seine (obj.). 11. Contrary desires. 12. To an excellent laurel-tree. 13. Doubtful testimonies (obj.). 14. An eloquent poet. 15. Wild beasts (obj.). 16. By a fertile ground. 17. Of hostile Numidians. 18. By an unjust master. 19. Of the renowned Peloponnēsus. 20. The proud Rhodes (obj.). 21. By secret plans. 22. Of rebellious colonies. 23. Of a learned (female) neighbor. 24. By the Latin language. 25. To a dying (female) prisoner. 26. Future triumphs (obj.). 27. By a quiet sleep. 28. Inner wars. 29. Of moderate merits. 30. Unpleasant duties. 31. The immense sea (obj. pelagus). 32. A safe refuge. 33. By a neighboring estate. 34. A wooden house (obj.). 35. O eternal gods! 36. O proud master! 37. O foolish guest! 38. The wild Celts (obj.). 39. Of a sudden death. 40. By the whole world.

LESSON X.

R-STEMS OF THE SECOND DECLENSION.

§ 48. 1. Several nouns and adjectives of the second declension with stems, terminating in r, drop the terminations us and e in the nominative and vocative singular, so that their mere stems appear in these cases. They are called R-stems of the second declension.

The nouns, which belong to this class, are without exception MASCULINE. The adjectives, belonging to the R-stems, drop the termination us in the masculine gender only, the feminine and neuter forms assuming the regular termination a and um.

REM. 1. Thus the genitive pueri (of the boy) has not the nominative puerus, as should be expected, but puer, and the genitive asperi is derived from asper, not from asperus.

§ 49. 2. The R-stems of the 2d declension consist of the following words:

1. The noun vir and its compounds (as levir, a husband's brother, duumvir, triumvir, &c.), and the national name Trevir, a Trevirian;

2. The proper names in er, with a few exceptions, as: Alexander, Teucer, Lysander, and the national names Cimber, a Cimbrian, Umbrian, an Umbrian, Cantaber, a Cantabrian, Calaber, a Calabrian, Afer, an African;

3. Those nouns and adjectives, which are enumerated No. II., 2 and VIII., 2 of the Vocabularies;

4. Those nouns and adjectives in fer and ger, which are derived from the verbs ferre and gerere, to carry, as: Lucifer, the morning-star, armiger, an armor-bearer, signifer, a standard-bearer, frugifer, fruit-bearing, pestifer, pestiferous;

5. The adjective satur, sated.

REM. 2. Those compounds of vir, which consist in compositions with NUMERALS, denote in the PLURAL a committee or board of a certain number of men for the performance of some public duty. The singular denotes a member of such a committee, as:

Duumvir, a duumvir, member of a committee of two; PLUR. duumviri, a committee of two;
triumvir, a triumvir, member of a committee of three; PLUR. triumviri, a committee of three;
quatuorviri, a committee or board of four; septemviri, a committee or board of seven; decemviri, a board of ten; centumviri, a board of a hundred.

§ 50. 3. In the inflection of these nouns and adjectives we have to notice the following three points:

a. We decline and move them, as if the termination us of the nominative had not been dropped, as vir, GEN. viri; satur, FEM. satura.

b. They generally drop the vowel e of the final letters er in all cases except nominative and vocative singular masculine, as magister, GEN. magistri; piger, GEN. pigri, FEM. pigra, NEUT. pigrum.

c. But the following words retain the e in their inflection.

1. The nouns adulter, gener, puer, socer, vesper, presbyter, Liber (the Latin name for the god Bacchus), and the plural liberi (children);

2. The adjectives asper, creper, lacer, liber, miser, prosper, tener;

3. The compounds with fer and ger, both nouns and adjectives. The adjective dexter sometimes drops the e and sometimes retains it (FEM. dextra or dextera).

Those nouns and adjectives, that retain the e, are inflected after the paradigms puer and liber; those, that drop the e, follow the paradigms ager and sacer.

REM. 3. The compounds with fer and ger may be recognized by their MEANING (carrying or bearing something). Thus the adjectives piger, vafer, niger, and the nouns ager and Afer are not compounds of ferre and gerere.

REM. 4. The PERSONAL nouns, belonging to the R-stems mostly are MOVABLE. Thus magister, minister and arbiter form the feminine nouns magistra, ministra and arbitra. Puer irregularly forms the feminine noun puella, a girl (instead of puera).

§ 51. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.                            | PLURAL.                            |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| N. Puer , the boy             | N. pueri , the boys         |
| G. pueri , of the boy         | G. puerorum , of the boys   |
| D. puero , to the boy         | D. pueris , to the boys     |
| A. puerum , the boy           | A. pueros , the boys        |
| V. puer , O boy!              | V. pueri , O boys!          |
| A. puero , by the boy.        | A. pueris , by the boys.    |
| N. Liber , libera, liberum    | liberi , liberae, libera    |
| G. liberi , liberae, liberi   | liberorum , liberae, libera |
| D. libero , liberae, libero   | liberis , liberis, liberis  |
| A. liberum , liberam, liberum | liberos , liberas, libera   |
| V. liber , libera, liberum    | liberi , liberae, libera    |
| A. libero , libera, libero.   | liberis , liberis, liberis. |
| N. Ager , the field           | N. agri , the fields        |
| G. agri , of the field        | G. agrorum , of the fields  |
| D. agro , to the field        | D. agris , to the fields    |
| A. agrum , the field          | A. agros , the fields       |
| V. ager , O field!            | V. agri , O fields!         |
| A. agro , by the field.       | A. agris , by the fields.   |
| N. Sacer , sacra, sacrum      | sacri , sacrae, sacra       |
| G. sacri , sacrae, sacri      | sacrorum , sacrae, sacra    |
| D. sacro , sacrae, sacro      | sacris , sacris, sacris     |
| A. sacrum , sacram, sacrum    | sacros , sacras, sacra      |
| V. sacer , sacra, sacrum      | sacri , sacrae, sacra       |
| A. sacro , sacra, sacro.      | sacris , sacris, sacris.    |

EXERCISES.

Commit the lists of the R-stems Vocab. II, 2 and VIII, 2, and write the following paradigms: triumvir, a triumvir; arbiter, an umpire; signifer, a standard-bearer; and the adjectives asper and creber.

I.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. Of a treacherous African. 2. Of pious children. 3. To a renowned armor-bearer. 4. The unjust committee of ten. 5. Violent south winds. 6. By a red crab. 7. By Greek books. 8. A sad son-in-law (obj.). 9. To an industrious mechanic. 10. A pleasant evening (obj.). By a hidden knife. 12. Of hurtful serpents. 13. To a learned father-in-law. 14. Of a private assistant. 15. By a rough island. 16. Of a crafty deserter. 17. Pestiferous plans. 18. By a tender soul. 19. Of frequent tears. 20. To the free country. 21. The left eye (obj.). 22. By a lazy farmer. 23. Black workmen. 24. Beautiful meadows (obj.). 25. Sacred Delphi (obj.). 26. The wretched Corinth (obj.). 27. By a prosperous sailor. 28. Of a river, carrying gold. 29. By the right arm. 30. Of a complete picture. 31. Of a fruit-bearing field. 32. The sated troops (obj.). 33. By the lean steers. 34. The wretched inhabitants. 35. Of an active (female) assistant.

B. PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. We plough the fields. 2. He praises Alexander. 3. You adore Liber. 4. Thou recommendest the book. 5. The umpires decide. 6. The (female) teachers please. 7. The assistants are silent. 8. The board of a hundred examine. 9. He releases the mechanics. 10. I recall the standard-bearer. 11. We censure the (female) assistants. 12. He salutes the father-in-law. 13. Knives wound. 14. The south-winds blow. 15. The evenings refresh. 16. It wearies the triumvir. 17. We adhere to the standard-bearer. 18. He kills the boar. 19. They denounce Lysander. 20. They sever by a knife. 21. The mechanics rebel. 22. He reconciles the son-in-law. 23. The committee of seven resist. 24. The books delight. 25. The umpires are on their guard.

2.

Translate the following phrases, and point out, to which category they belong:

1. Accurate teachers. 2. The public lands (ager). 3. The boars of Meleāger. 4. By the negligence of the mechanics. 5. She is in need of a teacher. 6. By the sacred road. 7. The standard-bearers remain. 8. Of the left bank. 9. By the sword of Alexander. 10. He kills by a knife. 11. We await the evening. 12. By the assistants of the tyrant. 13. He sacrifices a goat. 14. By the son-in-law of Augustus. 15. They banish the decemvirs. 16. Of the obedience of the children. 17. The Africans enter. 18. Of fruit-bearing Egypt. 19. The (female) assistants of the queen. 20. He conforms to the umpire. 21. By a beautiful house. 22. He plants (plantare) wild olives. 23. Frequent games. 24. We put the Cantabrians to flight. 25. By the red river. 26. Of a complete beehive. 27. The wretched troops. 28. The serpents hiss (stridere). 29. The Calabrians rebel. 30. Of a lean steer. 31. Pestiferous wars. 32. By the rough forests. 33. Of a beautiful cherry-tree. 34. Of the red flame. 35. The children (obj.) of Pompey. 36. To a black standard-bearer. 37. The mechanics urge. 38. He sees a serpent. 39. O lazy prefect! 40. O just umpire! 41. By a tender conscience. 42. She reconciles the father-in-law. 43. By a Latin book. 44. We sacrifice to Liber. 45. He banishes the children. 46. The teachers (obj.) of the people. 47. Of a prosperous neighbor. 48. The (female) assistants spin. 49. The Umbrians are angry. 50. By the pity of Teucer. 51. Knives frighten. 52. By the knife of an assassin.

LESSON XI.

THE FOURTH CONJUGATION.

§ 52. 1. The fourth conjugation has the characteristic ī, and the same personal endings, as the 1st and 2d, except that in the 3d person plural the letter u is inserted between characteristic and ending.

§ 53. PARADIGM.

Infinitive: Audire, to hear (stem audī, charact. ī, ending re).

Present indicative:

| SINGULAR.                   | PLURAL.               |
|-----------------------------|-----------------------|
| 1. Audio, I hear            | 1. Audimus, we hear   |
| 2. audis, thou hearest      | 2. auditis, you hear  |
| 3. audit, he, she, it hears | 3. audiunt, they hear |

§ 54. 2. The verb īre, to go, changes its stem ī into ē in the first person singular and the third plural, as:

| SINGULAR.               | PLURAL.           |
|-------------------------|-------------------|
| 1. ēo, I go             | 1. īmus, we go    |
| 2. is, thou goest       | 2. itis, you go   |
| 3. it, he, she, it goes | 3. eunt, they go. |

Rem. 1. The verb īre forms many compounds with prepositions, that is verbs, consisting of the verb īre and a preposition, prefixed to it as:

|                                   |                                  |                               |
|-----------------------------------|----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| abire, to go away          | interire, to perish       | prodire, to come forth |
| adire, to approach         | obire, to die (pass away) | redire, to return      |
| exire, to go out, to leave | perire, to perish         | subire, to undergo     |
| inire, to enter            | praeterire, to pass by    | transire, to cross     |

These are conjugated like the simple verb ire (adēo, praeter'ēo, redēunt, inter'ēunt). But the verb ambire (to go around, to solicit, to be a candidate), which likewise is a compound of ire, is conjugated like a regular verb of the fourth conjugation (ambio, ambiunt).

Rem. 2. The verb nequīre, to be unable, not (to) can, is conjugated like ire (ne'queo, I cannot; nequis, thou canst not; ne'quēunt, they cannot).

Rem. 3. The verb venīre has two meanings: a. to come, b. to be for sale. In the former signification it is conjugated regularly, like audire. In the latter signification it is a compound of ire, as: venēo, I am for sale, venēunt, they are for sale; but venio, I come, veniunt, they come.

EXERCISES.

Commit the verbs XIV., 1 of the Vocabularies, and write the following paradigms: dormire, to sleep, scire, to know, invenire, to invent, redire, to return, ambire, to solicit, perire, to perish, venire, to come, venire, to be for sale, nequīre, to be unable, not (to) can.

1.

A. 1. Reginam adeunt. 2. Portam aperit. 3. Amicis impertit. 4. Sociis subvenimus. 5. Terrā adveniunt. 6. Vallo muniunt. 7. Morbo pereunt. 8. Fluvium transeo. 9. Amicitiam in eo. 10. Triumviros ambio. 11. Muros fulcimus. 12. Persam feritis. 13. Viam invenimus. 14. Mendacia inveniunt. 15. Regulas sancimus. 16. Verbis lenimus. 17. Perfidia invenit. 18. Argumenta praetereo. 19. Aerumnas subeunt. 20. Copiae intereunt. 21. Magistri consentiunt. 22. Cupidiae veneunt. 23. Nuntii veniunt.

B. 1. The auxiliary troops go away. 2. The Cimbrians arrive. 3. The friends agree. 4. The prisoners spring down. 5. Homer sleeps. 6. The messenger arrives. 7. Provisions are for sale. 8. The candidates solicit. 9. The Gauls come to help. 10. The inhabitants perish. 11. We bind the prisoners. 12. I am a slave to Pompey. 13. We bury the poet. 14. You clothe the beggars. 15. They bring assistance to Lysander. 16. Thou undergoest dangers. 17. We feel the disgrace. 18. They cross the Danube. 19. They approach the triumvir. 20. They oblige the inhabitants. 21. He finds the graves. 22. You exhaust the water. 23. We educate the children. 24. They solicit by flatteries. 25. They hinder by arms. 26. I pass by the places. 27. We punish the slaves. 28. The triumvirs dissent. 29. They extricate the troops. 30. You guard the prisoners. 31. You ascertain the news. 32. The Jews perish. 33. The children sleep. 34. They strike the ambassador. 35. They die by disease. 36. The standard-bearers come forth. 37. The votes are for sale.

2.

A. 1. Fluvios exhaustiunt. 2. Magistri erudiunt. 3. Nummos disper- tiunt. 4. Servos custodit. 5. Negotium comperio. 6. Castra aperire. 7. Nautae adveniunt. 8. Equi desiliunt. 9. Legati exeunt. 10. Captivi redeunt. 11. Statuam operiunt. 12. Aerumnas molliunt. 13. *Bellum impedit.** 14. Scythae sitiunt. 15. Copiae prodeunt. 16. Portas muniunt. 17. Justitia venit. 18. Discipulis impertitis. 19. Adversariis subvenitis. 20. Gratiam impertiunt. 21. Nuntiis comperiunt. 22. Fredericus dissentat. 23. Fundamento fulcire. 24. Blanditiis lenire. 25. Morbum lenit. 26. Perfugas puniunt. 27. Perfugae pereunt. 28. Mendacia invenitis. 29. Regnum stabilit. 30. Opprobria subeo.

B. 1. We soften the tears. 2. We lull the watchman to sleep. 3. They cross the Hellespont. 4. We bring assistance to the Cantabrians. 5. The statues are for sale. 6. The Numidians come. 7. They bury the children. 8. We are slaves to the queen. 9. They feel the injury. 10. The inhabitants come forth. 11. They cover the pictures. 12. You finish the book. 13. We fortify the houses. 14. They distribute arms. 15. He invents fables. 16. The prisoners perish. 17. You hinder victory. 18. Thou obligest by benefits. 19. They define philosophy. 20. The committee of ten disagree. 21. We distribute books. 22. Not to know a language. 23. The sailors return. 24. You strengthen the tyrant. 25. We approach the prefect. 26. The workmen thirst. 27. The Africans commit cruelties. 28. We season the dishes. 29. You nourish a serpent. 30. They cross the street.

LESSON XII.

THE THIRD CONJUGATION.

§ 55. 1. The third conjugation differs from the other three:

- a. By having a CONSONANT, or the vowel u as a characteristic;
- b. By having personal endings, beginning with a VOWEL.

§ 56. 2. The endings of the third conjugation are the following:

1. Infinitive: ēre.

2. Present indicative:

| SINGULAR. | PLURAL.   |
|-----------|-----------|
| 1. —o.    | 1. —imus. |
| 2. —is.   | 2. —itis. |
| 3. —it.   | 3. —unt.  |

§ 57. 3. The STEM of verbs of the 3d conjugation is found by removing the ending ēre of the infinitive. By successively attaching to the stem the endings § 56, the following paradigm is formed:

* This phrase may be translated in different ways.

Infinitive: legere, to read (stem leg—, characteristic g, ending ere).

Present indicative:

| SINGULAR.                           | PLURAL.                       |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. Lego , I read             | 1. Legimus , we read   |
| 2. legis , thou readest      | 2. legitis , you read  |
| 3. legit , he, she, it reads | 3. legunt , they read. |

Rem. 1. The infinitives of the 2d and 3d conjugations are distinguished by the quantity of the vowel e, preceding the final syllable re, which in the second conjugation is long, being the characteristic; but in the 3d conjugation short, being a mere connecting letter.

Rem. 2. The 1st and 2d persons plural of the 3d and 4th conjugations are distinguished by the quantity of the vowel i before the final syllable mus and tis. This vowel in the 3d conjugation is short, belonging to the ENDING, and forming its connecting vowel. We therefore pronounce le'gimus, le'gitis, not legi'mus, legi'tis, different from the 4th conjugation, where the vowel i is the characteristic and long.

§ 58. 4. Several verbs of the 3d conjugation take the vowel i between characteristic and ending in the 1st person singular and 3d plural, thus having the appearance of verbs of the 4th conjugation in these persons. These verbs, which are called i-verbs, are the following:

|                                |                          |                                      |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| capere , to take        | fugere , to flee  | quaterere , to shake          |
| cupere , to wish        | jacere , to throw | rapere , to rob               |
| facere , to do, to make | parere , to beget | sapere , to taste, to be wise |
| fodere , to dig         |                          |                                      | with their compounds (see Rem. 3), and the compounds of the obsolete verbs lacere and specere.

They are conjugated after the following pattern:

| SINGULAR.                     | PLURAL.                        |
|-------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. Capio , I take      | 1. Capimus , we take    |
| 2. capis , thou takest | 2. capitis , you take   |
| 3. capit , he takes    | 3. capiunt , they take. |

Rem. 3. The compounds of capere, facere, jacere, rapere, sapere, lacere and specere change the vowels a and e of the stem into i. The compounds of quaterere take the form of cutere.

| CAPERE.          | FACERE.            | JACERE.                       | RAPERE.                       |
|------------------|--------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| accipere  | afficere    | abjicere               | arripere               |
| concupere | conficere   | conjicere <sup>1</sup> | corripere <sup>2</sup> |
| decipere  | deficere    | dejicere               | diripere               |
| incipere  | interficere | ejicere <sup>3</sup>   | eripere <sup>4</sup>   |

<sup>1</sup> To throw. <sup>2</sup> To seize. <sup>3</sup> To throw out. <sup>4</sup> To snatch away.

| SAPERE.                      | LACERE.                       | SPECERE.                      | QUATERE.                      |
|------------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| desipere              | allicere               | aspicere <sup>1</sup>  | concutere              |
| insipere <sup>2</sup> | pellicere <sup>3</sup> | conspicere             | percutere <sup>4</sup> |
|                              | ellicere <sup>5</sup>  | despicere <sup>6</sup> | excutere <sup>7</sup>  |
|                              |                               | inspicere              |                               |

The changed stem-vowels of these verbs always are short. Pronounce therefore inter'ficit, in'spicit, de'jicit, con'cutit, &c.

Rem. 4. Those verbs, compounded of facere and words other than prepositions, retain the a, as: liquefacere, to melt; vacuefacere, to empty; cal'facere, to warm; assuefacere, to accustom; mansuefacere, to tame; patefacere, to open; satisfacere, to satisfy.

§ 59. 5. The following verbs of this conjugation have several irregular forms in the present tense:

1. Velle (contracted from volere), to be willing, to will; 2. Nolle (instead of non velle), to be unwilling, not to wish; 3. Malle (instead of magis velle), to wish rather; 4. Ferre (contracted from ferere), to carry; 5. Esse (contracted from esere), to be; 6. Posse (instead of pote esse), to be able, (to) can.

These verbs are thus conjugated in the indicative present:

|       | Velle , to be willing.    | Nolle , to be unwilling.     | Malle , to wish rather.     |
|-------|----------------------------------|-------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| S. 1. | volō , I am willing       | nolo , I am unwilling        | malo , I rather wish        |
| 2.    | vis , thou art willing    | non vis , thou art unwilling | navis , thou rather wishest |
| 3.    | vult , he is willing      | non vult , he is unwilling   | navult , he rather wishes   |
| P. 1. | volumus , we are willing  | nolumus , we are unwilling   | malumus , we rather wish    |
| 2.    | vultis , you are willing  | non vultis , you are, &c.    | navultis , you rather wish  |
| 3.    | volunt , they are willing | nolunt , they are, &c.       | malunt , they rather wish.  |
|       | Ferre , to carry.         | Esse , to be.                | Posse , to be able.         |
| S. 1. | ferō , I carry            | sum , I am                   | possum , I can              |
| 2.    | fers , thou carriest      | es , thou art                | potes , thou canst          |
| 3.    | fert , he carries         | est , he is                  | potest , he can             |
| P. 1. | ferimus , we carry.       | sumus , we are               | possumus , we can           |
| 2.    | fertis , you carry        | estis , you are              | potestis , you can          |
| 3.    | ferunt , they carry       | sunt , they are              | possunt , they can          |

<sup>1</sup> To look at, to regard. <sup>2</sup> To be mad, to be insane, to be silly. <sup>3</sup> To allure, to attract. <sup>4</sup> To strike, to stab. <sup>5</sup> To draw out. <sup>6</sup> To despise. <sup>7</sup> To shake out, to shake off, to sift.

Rem. 5. The verbs ferre and esse form many compounds, which are conjugated like the simple verbs, as: afferre—af fero, affers, affert; præferre—præ fero, præfers, præfert; adesse—adsum, adhs, adest; præcesse—præsum, præces, præcest.

The verb prodesse, a compound of pro and esse, has the letter d inserted in all forms of esse, which begin with a vowel, while in those forms, which begin with a CONSONANT, this letter is dropped, as: Prosum, prodes, prodest, prosumus, prodestis, prosunt.

Rem. 6. The most usual compounds of esse are the following: Abesse, to be absent; adesse, to be present; desse, to be wanting; obesse, to be in the way, to hinder; præcesse, to be a chief, to command; prodesse, to be useful, to benefit; superesse, to survive.

§ 60. 6. To the 3d conjugation belong all inceptive (inchoative) verbs, that is those, which have the termination scēre. These verbs are DERIVED words, mostly from verbs of the 2d conjugation, sometimes from adjectives or nouns.

They are called inceptive, because they originally denote the BEGINNING of an action. They generally are rendered by the English verb “to become” with an ADJECTIVE, as:

Virēre, to be green—virescere, to become green;
calēre, to be warm—calescere, to become warm;
dormire, to sleep—obdormiscere, to fall asleep.

The verbs, from which some inceptives are derived (STEM-VERBS), are not in use, as the stem-verbs of discere, noscere, assuescere, crescere.

All inceptive verbs are conjugated regularly after the paradigm of legere.

For a list of the inceptive verbs see XIII, B of the Vocabularies.

EXERCISES.

Commit the verbs XIII, 1, A of the Vocabularies, and write the following paradigms:

Scribere, to write, regere, to govern, dicere, to say, discere, to learn, incipere, to begin, interficere, to kill, ejicere, to throw out, currere, to run, præferre, to prefer, diripere, to plunder.

1.

PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

1. The teachers describe. 2. The people govern. 3. The gods live. 4. The boys play. 5. Pyrrhus yields. 6. The earth nourishes. 7. The slaves cook. 8. The farmers sow. 9. Wars commence. 10. The Italians deceive. 11. The Persians flee. 12. The pirates rob. 13. Wines refresh. 14. The tribunes reject. 15. The prisoners escape. 16. The freedmen are insane. 17. A member of the committee of seven reports. 18. The philosophers conceive. 19. The promises allure. 20. The Celts dig. 21. The gods beget. 22. The umpires inspect. 23. The Numidians kill. 24. The mechanics throw down. 25. The ambassador offers. 26. The queen rather wishes. 27. The pirates are unwilling. 28. The troops are willing. 29. The prefect commands (is a chief). 30. The accused is absent. 31. Study benefits. 32. The relatives are absent. 33. Books are useful. 34. The grandfather survives. 35. Fortifications are wanting.

OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

36. I escape the danger. 37. I deceive the teacher. 38. He throws the arms away. 39. Thou bringest the letter. 40. They surround the allies. 41. We concede the victory. 42. You confer a favor. 43. They perfect the walls. 44. They behold the shore. 45. Thou bribe the tribunes. 46. They consume the provisions. 47. He defends the poet. 48. They abandon the towns. 49. We yield to the enemies. 50. You give satisfaction to the queen. 51. We accuse (arguere) of perfidy. 52. They accuse of negligence. 53. You are wanting to the country. 54. It is useful to the troops. 55. They return (reddere) the prisoners. 56. You prefer Virgil. 57. They affect by tears. 58. We succumb to hardships. 59. Thou art victorious by treachery. 60. You return thanks.

Translate into English:

1. Adversariis cedunt. 2. Adversarii cedunt. 3. Legātos repetunt. 4. Legāti repetunt. 5. Ornamenta abiciunt. 6. Ornamenta desunt. 7. Bellum indicit. 8. Bellum negligit. 9. Bellum incipiunt. 10. Bellum perficiunt. 11. Bellum opprimit. 12. Perfidia vincit. 13. Perfidia vincit. 14. Hasta interficit. 15. Hastā interficit. 16. Promissis alliciunt. 17. Promissa alliciunt. 18. Præfectum convincit. 19. Præfectus convincit. 20. Copias lacessunt. 21. Copie lacessunt.

2.

A. 1. The colonies fall off. 2. Conflagrations destroy. 3. The pirate strikes. 4. Flatteries allure. 5. The pen corrects. 6. Luxury corrupts. 7. Words deceive. 8. Athens is foolish. 9. The Scythians plunder. 10. The troops confide. 11. The Romans forgive. 12. The Gauls give satisfaction. 13. The messengers report. 14. The precepts are useful. 15. Testimonies are wanting. 16. The assistants are absent. 17. They throw the swords away. 18. We acquit the accused. 19. They receive a letter. 20. They sharpen the knives. 21. We summon the inhabitants. 22. He closes the gates. 23. We abandon the cause. 24. They delay the undertakings. 25. You oppress the provinces. 26. They diminish the glory. 27. We distinguish the rules. 28. You divide the island. 29. Thou escapest the assassin. 30. We succumb to arms. 31. They betray the country. 32. They yield to the Plebeians. 33. The Plebeians yield. 34. He censures the mechanics. 35. The mechanics censure. 36. The candidates promise. 37. We promise to the candidates. 38. He brings the letter back. 39. They offer an armistice.

B. 1. Patientia vincit. 2. Patientia vincit. 3. Dolus opprimit. 4.

Dolo opprimit. 5. Consilium contemnit. 6. Consilium deest. 7. Invidiam effugit. 8. Invidia evertit. 9. Discipuli proficiunt. 10. Discipulos negligunt. 11. Libros inspiciunt. 12. Libri excellunt. 13. Liberos diligit. 14. Liberi discunt (to learn). 15. Liberum extollunt. 16. Libram adjicit. 17. Librum conficit. 18. Captivos arripiunt. 19. Captivi arripiunt. 20. Praefecti decipiunt. 21. Praefectos decipiunt. 22. Domum reficiunt. 23. Dominum produnt. 24. Oppidum tradunt. 25. Oppidum deficit. 26. Opprobrium perferunt. 27. Litteras perferunt. 28. Captivos occidunt.

LESSON XIII.

PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVES AND NOUNS.

§ 61. 1. Adjectives and nouns are called predicative, when they are connected with any of the forms of the verb esse, to be (see § 59). The verb esse in connection with a predicative adjective or noun, expresses one VERBAL IDEA, and if it is in the finite verb, forms together with its adjective or noun the PREDICATE. Thus validus est (he is strong) is the same as valet; tacitus sum (I am silent) the same as taceo; servus sum (I am a slave) the same as servio.

The verb esse in this connection is called the copula, which generally is placed after its adjective or noun.

§ 62. 2. The predicative adjective or noun with its copula, in the same manner as a VERBAL predicate, is dependent on a SUBJECT, and with it forms a PREDICATIVE PHRASE.

Rem. 1. Thus "puer assiduus est, the boy is diligent" is a predicative phrase, in which puer is the SUBJECT, and assiduus est the PREDICATE. Here the two words assiduus est have the grammatical value of one single word, and the copula est has the function of a personal ending of the VERB, while the predicative adjective assiduus represents its STEM.

§ 63. 3. Predicates, consisting of a predicative adjective or noun with the copula, agree in the following manner with the GRAMMATICAL subject:

1. The adjective agrees with the subject in GENDER, NUMBER and CASE, and hence always is in the nominative, as the case of the subject;

2. The predicative noun agrees with the subject in CASE only, but if it is a movable noun it also agrees in GENDER and NUMBER;

3. The copula agrees with the subject in NUMBER and PERSON.

Diligentia conspicua est, the diligence is conspicuous.—Perfugium secūrum est, the refuge is safe.—Muri alti sunt, the walls are high.—Gajus poēta est, Gajus is a poet.—Injustitia vitium est, injustice is a vice.—Lucretia serva est, Lucretia is a slave.—Athēnæ arbitrae sunt, Athens is the umpire.

Rem. 2. For the agreement of the predicative adjective in the construction of the accusative with the infinitive see Book III.

§ 64. 4. Predicates, containing predicative adjectives with the copula, are thus conjugated:

| SINGULAR.                                      | PLURAL.                                  |
|--|--|
| Salvus or salva sum, I am safe                 | Salvi or salvæ sumus, we are safe        |
| salvus or salva es, thou art safe              | salvi or salvæ estis, you are safe       |
| salvus, salva, salvum est, he, she, it is safe | salvi, salvæ, salva sunt, they are safe. |

Rem. 3. The adjectives in the 1st and 2d persons are either MASCULINE or FEMININE, according as the speaker, or the person spoken to is a male or a female. In the third persons they may be either masculine, feminine or neuter, according to the gender of the subject, expressed or understood.

Rem. 4. Predicates, containing predicative NOUNS, which are MOVABLE, are conjugated in the same manner, as those, containing adjectives, except that in the 3d person they can not assume a NEUTER gender.

§ 65. 5. Adjectives, predicative as well as attributive, may have OBJECTS, like verbal predicates, and form together with these latter an OBJECTIVE PHRASE. Such objects generally precede their governing adjectives, as:

Imperii cupidus, desirous of power.—Amicis fidus est, he is faithful to friends.—Animi pleni sunt, they are full of courage.—Arrogantiā molesti estis, you are unpleasant by arrogance.

EXERCISES.

Conjugate the following predicates: Aptus sum, I am fit; generosus sum, I am generous; liber sum, I am free; Romānus sum, I am a Roman; Persa sum, I am a Persian.

I.

A. PREDICATES WITH THE COPULA. 1. You are accurate. 2. Thou art learned, O poet! 3. They (the women) are decent. 4. She is tired.

5. It is unjust. 6. We are sorrowful. 7. I (a woman) am thankful. 8. You are faithful, O daughters! 9. Thou art sick, O Cornelia! 10. He is pernicious. 11. It is manifest. 12. We are prosperous. 13. You are treacherous, O Celts! 14. Thou art profane, O Sempronius! 15. I (a woman) am angry. 16. Thou art beautiful, O queen! 17. You are cautious, O neighbors! 18. We are unknown. 19. She is tender. 20. He is lazy.

B. PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 21. The Cimbrians are cruel. 22. The standard-bearers are firm. 23. Poets are happy. 24. The towns are small. 25. The colonies are rebellious. 26. The sailors are active. 27. The plum-trees are beautiful. 28. The (female) assistants are inexperienced. 29. The Persians are conscientious. 30. The roads are narrow. 31. The arguments are erroneous. 32. The ground is red. 33. The town is wealthy. 34. The gods are eternal. 35. The (female) teacher is learned. 36. Sempronius is a patrician. 37. Lucretia is a Plebeian. 38. Sulla is a Roman. 39. The Vistula is a river. 40. Slander is a disgrace. 41. Æmilia is a teacher. 42. The Africans are slaves. 43. Gold is a metal. 44. Syracuse is wealthy. 45. Leuctra is renowned. 46. The Seine is broad. 47. Poplars are high. 48. The troops are faithful. 49. The camp is secure. 50. The games are magnificent. 51. A vacation is pleasant. 52. The armistice is unfair.

C. OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 1. Gloriæ cupidus. 2. Incolârûm plenus. 3. Indutiârûm ignârus. 4. Populo necessarius. 5. Sociis jucundus. 6. Prædæ cupidi sunt. 7. Beneficiôrûm cupida est. 8. Fiduciæ plena est. 9. Dei ignâri estis. 10. Populo carus es. 11. Patriæ perniciosum est. 12. Præfecto grati sumus. 13. Incolis incognita es, Lucretia! 14. Triumviro infestæ estis, femine! 15. Sociis molesti sumus.

1. Envious of glory. 2. Desirous of victory. 3. Ignorant of crimes. 4. Adverse to the plan. 5. Friendly to the Africans. 6. Dear to the Patricians. 7. Contrary to prudence. 8. Pernicious to the troops. 9. I am faithful to the master. 10. We are thankful to the teacher. 11. I (a woman) am full of confidence. 12. We (women) are envious of the queen. 13. Thou art ignorant of the undertaking, O Julia! 14. You are hostile to the allies, O Romans! 15. They (the women) are ungrateful to the country. 16. They are necessary to the troops. 17. We are tired by the battle. 18. You are wealthy by commerce. 19. They are full of joy. 20. It is near to Athens. 21. It is peculiar to the Romans. 22. Thou art agreeable to the troops, O son-in-law! 23. Thou art unknown to the triumvir, O Cornelia!

2.

A. PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 1. The umpires are just. 2. The evenings are pleasant. 3. The Belgians are brave. 4. The poet is contented. 5. Justice is slow. 6. The mob is profane. 7. The poison is pernicious. 8. The house is magnificent. 9. Homer is blind. 10. Athens is faithful. 11. The darkness is dense. 12. The enmity is secret. 13. The battle is bloody. 14. The advantages are manifest. 15. The sailors are rebellious. 16. The farmers are idle. 17. The storehouses are full. 18. The gods are kind. 19. Susa is rich. 20. Delphi is renowned. 21. Arms are hidden. 22. The funeral is magnificent. 23. A queen is the umpire. 24. War is an evil. 25. Thebes is an ally. 26. Poverty is a teacher.

27. The places are high. 28. The ground is sandy. 29. The words are false. 30. The remedies are fit.

B. OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 31. It is sacred to Minerva. 32. I am desirous of leisure. 33. Thou art dear to the gods, O queen! 34. We are ignorant of fate. 35. It is contrary to the rules. 36. They are devoted (deditus) to studies. 37. You are hostile to tyrants. 38. She is envious of rivals. 39. Thou art full of courage, O Lucretia! 40. I (a woman) am thankful to the physician. 41. He is adverse to an armistice. 42. It is contrary to duty. 43. It is necessary to the colonies. 44. Thou art ungrateful to the prefect, O son! 45. It is acceptable (acceptus) to the people. 46. We are faithful to the master.

47. Pecuniæ cupidus. 48. Invidiæ plenus. 49. Plebûjis amicus. 50. Disacer. 51. Præfecto dubium est. 52. Oraculi ignârus sum. 53. Disciplinæ contrarium est. 54. Negotio attentus sumus. 55. Siculis cari estis. 56. Patriciis exitiosus est. 57. Belli ignârus est. 58. Românis ignominiosum est. 59. Concordiæ infestus estis. 60. Fabio ingrâti sunt. 61. Patriæ necessarius es, Pompêi! 62. Sævitia adversa es, regina! 63. Musis dediti sumus. 64. Deorûm invida est. 65. Incolis cari sunt. 66. Magistro molestus est.

LESSON XIV.

ADVERBS OF MANNER AND TIME.

§ 66. 1. Adverbs denote properties of ACTIONS, as quiète vivere, to live quietly; sæpe evenit, it happens often. They are divided into five classes, viz.: 1. adverbs of PLACE, 2. of TIME, 3. MANNER, 4. INTENSITY, 5. CAUSE.

§ 67. 2. Some adverbs are formed according to certain GENERAL RULES by way of INFLECTION, but other adverbs are of an IRREGULAR formation. To the former belong most adverbs of MANNER, to the latter most of the adverbs of TIME.

Rem. 1. In the English language adverbs of MANNER generally are formed by affixing the termination ly to ADJECTIVES.—In this lesson we shall consider only those adverbs of manner, which are formed from MOVABLE adjectives, and the most usual adverbs of TIME.

§ 68. 3. The movable adjectives (§ 45) form adverbs of manner by adding the termination ē to their declension-stems, as: jucundus, pleasant—jucunde, pleasantly; pulcher, beautiful—pulchre, beautifully; liber, free—libere, freely.

They are formed most easily by removing the ending i of the genitive sing., and substituting for it the adverbial termination ē, as: aeger, G. aegri—aegre; prosper, G. prosperi—prospere.

§ 69. EXCEPTIONS.

1. Bonus irregularly forms bēnē, well;
2. Some adjectives form their adverbs by the termination ō, the most usual of which are:

|                                       |  |                                   |
|---------------------------------------|--|-----------------------------------|
| certo , certainly       | manifesto , manifestly   | secrēto , secretly  |
| cito , quickly          | necessario , necessarily | sedulo , diligently |
| crebro , frequently     | neopināto , unexpectedly | serio , seriously   |
| falso , falsely         | perpetuo , perpetually   | subito , suddenly   |
| fortuito , accidentally | raro , rarely            | tuto , safely .     |

§ 70. 4. The most usual adverbs of TIME are:

|  |   |   |
|--|---|---|
| adhuc , still , as yet , yet | mane , early in the morn-   | quotannis , yearly        |
| antea , before                             | ing                                | quotidie , daily          |
| cras , to-morrow                           | noctu , by night            | rursus , again            |
| diu , long , a long time            | nunc , now                  | sepe , often              |
| hodie , to-day                             | nunquam , never             | semper , always           |
| interdiu , by day                          | nuper , lately              | simul , at the same time  |
| interdum , sometimes                       | olim , formerly             | statim , directly         |
| jam , already                              | postea , afterwards         | tum ( tunc ), then |
| jam diu , long since                       | postridie , on the next day | unquam , ever             |
| heri , yesterday                           | pridie , the day before     |   |

§ 71. 5. Adverbs of manner and time are indeclinable (§ 3), although the former are formed BY MEANS of inflection from adjectives. They are governed by VERBS, and are considered as their OBJECTS, forming OBJECTIVE PHRASES with them. Adverbs, like other objects, generally precede their governing verbs, as: Beāte vivere, to live happily; statim redire, to return directly; semper errat, he always errs.

REM. 2. Adjectives, especially predicative adjectives with the copula, may be the governing words of adverbs, as: Semper parātus, always ready; jam propinqui sunt, they are near already; saepe irātī estis, you often are angry. But adjectives generally cannot be the governing words of adverbs of MANNER.

EXERCISES.

1.

1. Absurde agitis.
2. Falso accusātis.
3. Immodice bibis.
4. Pulchre canit.
5. Perspicue cernimus.
6. Assidue colimus.
7. Cupide consūmunt.
8. Furiōse contradicit.
9. Accurate describis.
10. Gloriōse de*cedere*. 11. Manifesto decipiunt. 12. Egregie distinguunt. 13. Subito fugiunt. 14. Male legis. 15. Caute procēdo. 16. Diserte defendis. 17. Sirenue resistimus. 18. Adhuc vivit. 19. Hodie abeunt. 20. Interdiu dormio. 21. Interdum dissentimus. 22. Jam intelligimus. 23. Mane surgitis. 24. Noctu advenitis. 25. Nunc desipis. 26. Nunquam impedis. 27. Rursus recēdis. 28. Semper diffidit. 29. Quotidie pavētis. 30. Saepe peccāmus. 31. Adhuc inulta est. 32. Interdiu otiōsi sumus. 33. Interdum agrōti sunt. 34. Nunquam justum est.

1. He builds magnificently. 2. We approach cautiously. 3. They think accurately. 4. He pardons freely. 5. We openly condemn. 6. They deliberate a long time. 7. They desire immoderately. 8. Thou decidest unjustly. 9. Sometimes you err. 10. We daily expect. 11. Thou dwellest well. 12. We examine actively (sedulus). 13. You watch by night. 14. We listen (audire) attentively. 15. He answers kindly. 16. They plunder eagerly. 17. She pleads eloquently. 18. Thou teachest excellently. 19. You falsely assert (affirmare). 20. They fight furiously. 21. They generously confide. 22. You arrive unexpectedly. 23. He laughs immoderately. 24. They necessarily perish. 25. Thou yieldest quickly. 26. I labor actively (impiger). 27. They advance wonderfully. 28. They return to-day. 29. I always obey. 30. Thou often art ungrateful, O daughter! 31. They go directly away. 32. Thou still art angry, O queen! 33. You languish already. 34. We are now contented. 35. You never are contented, O women! 36. They assemble (convenire) yearly. 37. You are sometimes unpleasant. 38. We are always ready. 39. They secretly fall off. 40. They are now for sale.

2.

1. Modeste dissuadeo. 2. Tuto latent. 3. Diserte persuadētis. 4. Immodice succenses. 5. Tarde finitis. 6. Serio vituperāmus. 7. Beāte regnas. 8. Publice refutāmus. 9. Sedulo oppugnātis. 10. Nunquam festinas. 11. Secrēto conjūrant. 12. Falso declāras. 13. Inepte dijudicat. 14. Semper aequi estis. 15. Interdum sevēra est. 16. Adhuc immutātī sumus.

1. You praise immoderately. 2. He contradicts timidly. 3. They advance slowly. 4. We zealously defend. 5. They return by night. 6. I rarely enter. 7. They cross frequently. 8. He rebukes severely. 9. He quietly ceases. 10. They escape perfidiously. 11. We live obscurely. 12. You relate well. 13. They perish abominably. 14. Thou punishest unjustly. 15. Thou art eloquent to-day. 16. He always is obscure. 17. Thou art again unjust, O queen!

LESSON XV.

THE SUBJECT-INFINITIVE.

§ 72. 1. The Latin INFINITIVES occur in three different relations: 1. as SUBJECT, 2. as OBJECT, 3. as PREDICATE. According to these relations they are called subject-infinitive, object-infinitive and predicate-infinitive.

Rem. 1. The PREDICATE-INFINITIVE occurs only in the case of the historical infinitive, and in the construction of the accusative with the infinitive. These constructions will be considered at their proper places. The OBJECT-INFINITIVE will be considered in the next lesson. In the present lesson the SUBJECT-INFINITIVE is explained, that is: the infinitive as SUBJECT in a predicative phrase.

§ 73. 2. The proper form of the subject is the SUBSTANTIVE (that is a NOUN OR PRONOUN). See § 19. Predicates, which have SUBSTANTIVES, either expressed or understood, for subjects, are called personal predicates.

Rem. 2. Thus the phrases "the sun shines," "he shines," are PERSONAL, both having SUBSTANTIVES as subjects. The Latin predicates amo, amus, amat, &c., where the subjects (I, thou, he) are understood, are PERSONAL predicates.

§ 74. 3. Predicates, whose subjects are not SUBSTANTIVES, expressed or understood, are called impersonal predicates. They are of three kinds:

- a. Either they have no subject at all, as tonat, it thunders; pluit, it rains;
- b. Or their subject is an infinitive;
- c. Or they have a DEPENDENT SENTENCE as subject.

Predicative phrases, which are formed by an INFINITIVE as subject, are called impersonal predicative phrases, as Manere licet, it is allowed to remain.

Rem. 3. The regular form of the impersonal predicate in English is the third person singular, connected with the impersonal pronoun "it." The subject-infinitive in this case stands after the predicate. But sometimes the pronoun it is omitted, and then the infinitive precedes the predicate, as: It is useful to learn, or to learn is useful.

Rem. 4. We consider here only the case, when the impersonal predicate has an INFINITIVE as subject. Those impersonal predicates, which require dependent sentences for subjects, will be explained in the second Part (p. 609 foll.).

§ 75. 4. Impersonal predicates in Latin are either VERBS, or PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVES OR NOUNS with the copula. In the former instance the VERB, and in the latter the COPULA stands in the third person singular. The predicative adjective or noun is in the NOMINATIVE SINGULAR, and the adjective always in the NEUTER

GENDER The subject-infinitive regularly precedes its impersonal predicate, as:

Ambulāre conducit, it is serviceable to walk (to walk is serviceable);

laborāre decōrum est, it is honorable to work;

rebellāre injuria est, it is a wrong to rebel.

§ 76. 5. The number of VERBS, which may be used as impersonal predicates, is limited in Latin, and by far not so large as in English. The following of them take an INFINITIVE as subject:

Conducit, it is serviceable deceet, it becomes, is becoming displicet, it displeases

expedit, it is expedient juvat, it delights, it is delightful and sometimes prodest, it is useful, and nocet, it is injurious.

libet, it pleases

licet, it is allowed

placet, it pleases praestat, it is preferable,

it is better,

§ 77. 6. But PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVES are very frequently used as impersonal predicates in Latin, and their use agrees with that of the English language, as: decōrum est, it is honorable; aequum est, it is fair; justum est, it is just; generōsum est, it is generous; jucundum est, it is pleasant, &c.

Here belong the indeclinable neuter adjectives necesse (necessary) and satis (enough, sufficient), which in connection with the copula frequently occur as impersonal predicates, as: Cedere necesse est, it is necessary to yield; obedire satis est, it is sufficient to obey.

§ 78. 7. The subject-infinitive may consist of a predicative adjective or noun with the infinitive of the copula. Such adjectives or nouns always must be placed in the ACCUSATIVE SINGULAR, and the adjectives in the MASCULINE GENDER, as: Otiōsum esse licet, it is allowed to be idle; poētam esse juvat, it is delightful to be a poet.

Rem. 5. For an explanation of this construction see the ACCUSATIVE WITH THE INFINITIVE. The beginner should be careful, not to mistake this accusative of the masculine for a NEUTER NOMINATIVE.

Rem. 6. From this reason predicative adjectives with the infinitive of the copula, when they are merely quoted as such without their connection with the sentence, are placed in the ACCUSATIVE SINGULAR OF THE MASCULINE GENDER, as: egēnum esse, to be poor; disertum esse, to be eloquent.

EXERCISES.

Commit the inceptive verbs, Vocabularies XIII, B.

1.

1. Ignoscere conducit. 2. Parcere decet. 3. Quiescere expedit. 4. Vincere juvat. 5. Vivere licet. 6. Reconciliare placet. 7. Obire praestat. 8. Ediscere prodest. 9. Cedere aequum est. 10. Regnare arduum est. 11. Condonare benignum est. 12. Tacere cautum est. 13. Rebellare exitiosum est. 14. Errare humanum est. 15. Fugere necesse est. 16. Promittere satis est. 17. Honestum esse praestat. 18. Moderatum esse conducit. 19. Doctum esse juvat. 20. Ingratum esse nocet.

1. It is serviceable to obey. 2. It is injurious to slander. 3. It is useful to admonish. 4. It is becoming to blush. 5. It is expedient to prepare. 6. It is better to beware. 7. It is delightful to pardon. 8. It pleases to rest. 9. It is allowed to censure. 10. It is absurd to secede. 11. It is a crime to bribe. 12. It is unpleasant to grow old. 13. It is pleasant to grow. 14. It is mean to deceive. 15. It is honorable to defend. 16. It is disgraceful to flee. 17. It is a play (ludus) to learn. 18. It is a folly to contradict. 19. It is necessary to implore. 20. It is sufficient to dissuade. 21. It is serviceable to be polite. 22. It is becoming to be modest. 23. It is better to be idle. 24. It delights to be safe. 25. To plunder is criminal. 26. To be a pirate is dangerous.

2.

1. Desciscere perniciosum est. 2. Differre molestum est. 3. Valere jucundum est. 4. Procedere necesse est. 5. Opprimere injustum est. 6. Debellare ludus est. 7. Flere medicina est. 8. Obrectare injuria est. 9. Tardum esse nocet. 10. Immundum esse displicet. 11. Obscurum esse praestat. 12. Propinquum esse expedit. 13. Parcum esse licet. 14. Quietum esse decet.

1. It is better to endure. 2. It is allowed to rejoice. 3. It is becoming to refute. 4. It pleases to persevere. 5. It displeases to scold. 6. It delights to triumph. 7. To pardon is divine. 8. To devastate is cruel. 9. It is agreeable to oblige. 10. To contradict is an arrogance. 11. To commit cruelties is a sin. 12. To praise is a spur. 13. To learn by heart is a play. 14. It is necessary to die. 15. It is unpleasant to be a prisoner. 16. It is honorable to be a farmer. 17. It is preferable to be a sailor. 18. It displeases to be envious. 19. To be cautious is expedient.

LESSON XVI.

THE OBJECT-INFINITIVE.

§ 79. 1. Certain verbs, which express an incomplete action, govern an INFINITIVE as OBJECT, which is called object-infinite, as :

Ire volo, I will go. Manere debes, thou must remain. Venire potest, he can come. Intelligere incipimus, we begin to understand. Disputare solētis, you are wont to dispute. Convalescere nequeunt, they cannot recover.

The object-infinite, like the substantive-object, precedes its governing verb.

§ 80. 2. The following classes of Latin verbs govern an object-infinite :

a. Verbs of ABILITY, DUTY and HABIT, as posse, nequire, scire, nescire, discere, debere, solere ;

b. Verbs of INTENTION, DETERMINATION, WISH, FEAR and their contraries, as velle, nolle, malle, audere, to dare, studere, to try, parare, to prepare, statuere and decernere, to resolve, recusare, to refuse, cupere, to wish, cogitare, to contemplate, timere, to be afraid ;

c. Verbs of BEGINNING, CONTINUING and CEASING, as incipere, to begin, properare, to hasten, pergere, to continue, omittere, to omit, desinere, to cease, desistere, to desist, negligere, to neglect.

Rem. 1. Regarding the signification of these verbs the following points must be noticed :

1. Velle is rendered by to intend, to be willing, to propose, to wish, to be determined. In the first person of both, singular and plural, it often is rendered by "I will, we will," the second and third persons of this English auxiliary being used for expressing the FUTURE TENSE, in which case it cannot be rendered by velle.

Redire volunt, they intend to return. Abire volunt, they propose to go away. Cedere vultis, you are willing to yield. Manere volo, I will remain.

2. Nolle and malle are similarly rendered by "will not," "will rather," in the first person singular and plural, and in general nolle by "to refuse, to be unwilling, not to wish," and malle by "to wish rather, to prefer."

Notice, that the English verb to prefer, if it has a SUBSTANTIVE as object, is translated by praeferre or anteponere, but by malle, if its object is an INFINITIVE, as :

We prefer Homer, Homērum praeferimus or anteponimus ; but He prefers to remain, manere mavult.

3. Solere is rendered by "to be accustomed, to be wont, to use (with an infinitive)," or by "to be in the habit," followed by of with a verbal noun in ing, as :

Silere solet, he is wont (accustomed) to be silent. Ambulare soleo, I am in the habit of walking.—Manere solibat (Imperfect), he used to remain.

Often the verb solēre is rendered by one of the adverbs generally, usually, commonly, in which case the Latin infinitive must be expressed by an English finite verb, as:

Absesse solēmus, we usually are absent. Resistere solent, they generally resist.

4. Verbs of beginning, continuing and ceasing in English often are construed with the verbal noun in ing, which in the verb to desist is preceded by the preposition from. To this answers the mere Latin infinitive, as:

They continue fighting, pugnāre pergunt. We cease writing, scribere desinimus. He desists from punishing, punire desistit.

5. The English verbs to know and not to know are construed with an interrogative clause, introduced by "how," corresponding to the mere Latin infinitive, as:

Thou knowest how to ride, equitare scis. He does not know how to answer, respondere nescit.

Notice, that the English verb "to do" as a mere AUXILIARY, that is, if connected with the infinitive of another verb, cannot be expressed in Latin, as: I do not wish, nolo; I do not know, nescio.

6. The English equivalent of timēre, to be afraid, is construed with the preposition of and the verbal noun in ing, as: Venire timet, he is afraid of coming.

§ 81. 3. When the object-infinitive consists of a predicative adjective or noun with the copula, the noun and adjective take the CASE and NUMBER, and if they are movable, also the GENDER of the SUBJECT, as:

Tardus esse solet, he is wont to be slow. Sevēri esse possumus, we can be strict. Amīca esse nequit, she cannot be a friend. Iusta esse cupio, I (a woman) wish to be just.

§ 82. 4. The verbs poss, nequāre, solēre, debēre, incipere and desinere sometimes are used IMPERSONALLY with object-infinitives, formed from impersonal predicates (§ 74), as:

Tonāre incipit, it begins thundering, pluere solet, it usually rains, conducere potest, it can be serviceable, expedire nequit, it cannot be expedient, molestum esse debet, it must be unpleasant.

OBSERVATION.—This is one of the two cases, where impersonal verbs are placed in the INFINITIVE. Beginners should not be induced, to take such impersonal object-infinitives for subject-infinitives. See § 95.

EXERCISES.

1.

1. Cedere debeo. 2. Simulāre discis. 3. Tacēre potest. 4. Parēre volumus. 5. Negligere nolumus. 6. Credere non vultis. 7. Tacēre nolunt. 8. Debellāre malumus. 9. Repugnāre audeo. 10. Proficere studes. 11. Obire parat. 12. Dīmīcāre statuimus. 13. Secedere decernitis. 14. Ediscere cupiunt. 15. Confidere timeo. 16. Advenire properat. 17. Intelligere incipiunt. 18. Diripere pergis. 19. Servire desinimus. 20. Contradicere soles. 21. Desipere solētis. 22. Vituperāre desistit. 23. Pugnāre scis. 24. Probāre nesciunt. 25. Resistere nequeunt. 26. Sevērus esse potest. 27. Invida esse nequit. 28. Moderātī esse solētis. 29. Liberi esse discunt. 30. Servae esse nolunt. 31. Generōsus esse volo. 32. Savi esse incipiunt. 33. Mæsti esse desinitis. 34. Propinqua esse cupit. 35. Tonāre desinit. 36. Præstare debet. 37. Licere solet. 38. Jucundum esse nequit.

1. I cannot discern. 2. They can pardon. 3. He knows how to act. 4. He does not know how to teach. 5. We learn to obey. 6. You must rest. 7. I am wont to be on my guard. 8. He is in the habit of disputing. 9. We usually hasten. 10. I will remain. 11. Thou art willing to approach. 12. He intends to escape. 13. We will not open the mouth. 14. You are unwilling to forgive. 15. I will rather go away. 16. They prefer to perish. 17. They dare to come forth. 18. I try to give satisfaction. 19. We prepare to cross. 20. They resolve to secede. 21. You refuse to assist. 22. They wish to return. 23. He is afraid of consenting. 24. I begin to advance (in knowledge). 25. They continue plundering. 26. He ceases digging. 27. He desists from slandering. 28. We hasten to plough. 29. We neglect watching. 30. They cannot be accurate. 31. You can be eloquent. 32. Thou knowest how to be ambiguous, O queen! 33. You do not know how to be attentive, O daughters! 34. She learns to be envious. 35. Thou must be firm, O son! 36. I am wont to be contented. 37. Thou refusest to be a companion, O Cornelia! 38. Thou art willing to be a slave, O Rome! 39. They begin to be tyrants. 40. They cease to be pirates. 41. You continue being prisoners. 42. It generally pleases. 43. It must displease. 44. It ceases 'snowing. 45. It begins 'lightening. 46. It must be disgraceful. 47. It can be just.

2.

1. Debellāre potestis. 2. Appropinquāre nequeunt. 3. Dijudicāre scitis. 4. Probāre nescis. 5. Natāre discit. 6. Errāre solētis. 7. Indulgēre debētis. 8. Fallere nolumus. 9. Redire volo. 10. Latēre mavultis. 11. Contradicere timent. 12. Lacessere incipiunt. 13. Desipere pergit. 14. Vastāre desistunt. 15. Arbitri esse cupiunt. 16. Captiva esse non vult. 17. Aegrōtus esse solet. 18. Fida esse mavult. 19. Firmi esse volumus. 20. Generōsus esse nequis. 21. Ingrāta esse pergis. 22. Tyrannus esse audet. 23. Amīci esse desinunt. 24. Fulgurāre solet. 25. 'Grandināre incipit. 26. Displicere potest. 27. Periculōsum esse solet.

1. They usually approve. 2. We begin to despair. 3. Thou darest to open the mouth. 4. We will not mourn. 5. You contemplate to frighten. 6. He resolves to retreat. 7. We are afraid of entering. 8. They desist from disturbing. 9. I wish to sleep. 10. Thou must eat. 11. They cannot understand. 12. We refuse to believe. 13. We know how to wage war. 14. He begins to think. 15. Thou triest to conquer. 16. You learn to fight. 17. He continues reigning. 18. We cease to persuade. 19. They hasten to arrive. 20. They cannot be moderate. 21. We propose to be free. 22. He is afraid of being a member of the committee of ten. 23. She refuses to be an assistant. 24. You are unwilling to be slaves. 25. They continue being prodigal. 26. Thou canst be kind. 27. She wishes to be a queen. 28. You cease to be contented. 29. We prefer to be free. 30. She cannot be wretched. 31. It usually hails. 32. It can be useful. 33. It is generally sufficient.

<sup>1</sup>It snows, ningit.

<sup>2</sup>It lightens, fulgurat.

<sup>3</sup>Grandinat, it hails.

LESSON XVII.

CONNECTION OF PHRASES IN GENERAL, AND COMBINATION OF ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

§ 83. 1. Phrases are connected with each other either by coordination or by combination. The former is the connection of phrases by CONJUNCTIONS, as : Præfectus et poëta adveniunt, the prefect and the poet arrive; injuriam et contumeliam toleramus, we endure injury and disgrace. The latter is a connection, formed by the STRUCTURE of the SENTENCE, as: Amico pecuniam dare, to give money to a friend.

§ 84. 2. Two given phrases, which have one word in common, are combined with each other by dropping the common word in one of the phrases, and introducing the whole other phrase in its place.

ILLUSTRATION: Let the following two phrases be given :

1. PREDICATIVE PHRASES: The slave escapes, servus effugit ;
  2. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES: The slave of Gajus, Gaji servus.
- Here we drop the common word slave (servus) in the predicative phrase, and introduce in its place the whole attributive phrase "the slave of Gajus." Thus the combined phrase will read in English: "The slave of Gajus escapes," and in Latin: "Gaji servus effugit."

§ 85. 3. The two phrases, of which a combined phrase consists, either have the SAME governing word, or the GOVERNING word in the one phrase is at the same time the DEPENDENT word in the other (see the examples in Rem. 1). In the latter case that phrase, whose governing word is the dependent word in the other phrase, is called the dependent, and the other the governing phrase.

Rem. 1. The following combined phrases are composed of phrases with the same governing words :

- a. The sons of Gajus sleep, Gaji filii dormiunt (the sons of Gajus, and the sons sleep).
- b. A renowned colony of Corinth, clara Corinthi colonia (a renowned colony, and a colony of Corinth).
- c. He delivers the town to the Romans, oppidum Romānis tradit (he delivers the town, and he delivers to the Romans).

But the following combined phrases consist of a GOVERNING and DEPENDENT phrase :

- a. The Persians plunder the town, Persae oppidum diripiunt (the Persians plunder, and plunder the town).
- b. Thou canst conquer the Romans, Romānos devincere potes (GOVERNING PHRASE : devincere potes ; DEPENDENT PHRASE : Romānos devincere).

§ 86. 4. In order to combine two given phrases, it is necessary to know, which of the two phrases must be substituted for the common word in the other. This is determined by the following two principles :

a. If the two given phrases consist of a dependent and of a governing phrase, the DEPENDENT phrase always is substituted for the common word in the GOVERNING phrase.

b. If both phrases have the same governing word, the order of substitution is determined by the NATURE of the two phrases.

Rem. 2. The following rules and examples illustrate these principles. Thus the principle (a) is applied in § 89, 91, 94, while principle (b) is applied in § 92, 99, 100. In many instances the order of words in the combined phrases is the same, whatever mode of substitution may be applied. But often the strict adherence to the rules, laid down in the following sections, is essential for a correct arrangement of the combined phrases.

COMBINATION OF ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

§ 87. 5. Attributive phrases may be combined, 1. With PRE-DICATIVE, 2. With OBJECTIVE, 3. With other ATTRIBUTIVE phrases.

§ 88. 6. If attributive are combined with predicative phrases, the governing word of the attribute either is the SUBJECT, or a PREDICATIVE noun. In both instances the ATTRIBUTIVE phrase is substituted for the common word in the PREDICATIVE phrase, as:

A. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The sons play, filiū ludunt;

ATTRIBUTIVE: the sons of the farmer, agricolae filii.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "agricolae filii" for the common word, the subject filiū, in the predicative phrase "filiū ludunt":

Agricolae filii ludunt*, the sons of the farmer play.

B. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: Friendship is rare, amicitia rara est;

ATTRIBUTIVE: True friendship, amicitia vera.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "amicitia vera" for the common word amicitia in the predicative phrase "amicitia rara est":

Amicitia vera rara est*, a true friendship is

C. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: Gajus is a son, Gajus filius est;

ATTRIBUTIVE: A son of Sejus, Seji filius;

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "Seji filius" for the common word, the predicative noun filius, in the predicative phrase "Gajus filius est":

Gajus Seji filius est*, Gajus is a son of Sejus.

D. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: Virgil is a poet, Virgilius poeta est;

ATTRIBUTIVE: A renowned poet, poeta clarus.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "poeta clarus" for the predicative noun poeta in the phrase "Virgilius poeta est":

Virgilius poeta clarus est*, Virgil is a renowned poet.

§ 89. 7. If an attributive phrase is to be combined with an objective phrase, two cases must be distinguished:

1st case: If the attributive phrase is the dependent, and the objective the governing phrase, which always is the case, when the common word is a NOUN, the attributive phrase is substituted for the common word in the objective phrase (see § 86, a), as:

A. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE: To devastate the lands, agros vastare;

ATTRIBUTIVE: the lands of the Gauls, Gallorum agros.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "Gallorum agros" for the common word agros in the objective phrase "agros vastare":

Gallorum agros vastare*, to devastate the lands of the Gauls.

B. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE: To despise a man, virum despicere;

ATTRIBUTIVE: a treacherous man, virum perfidum.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "virum perfidum" for the common word virum in the objective phrase "virum despicere":

Virum perfidum despicere*, to despise a treacherous man.

C. a. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE: To be hostile to the allies, sociis infestum esse;

ATTRIBUTIVE: to the allies of the Romans, Romanorum sociis.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "Romanorum sociis" for the common word sociis in the objective phrase "sociis infestum esse":

Romanorum sociis infestum esse*, to be hostile to the allies of the Romans.

2d case: If the attributive phrase is the governing, and the objective the dependent phrase, which always is the case, when the common word is an ADJECTIVE, the objective phrase is substituted for the common word in the attributive phrase (§ 86 a), as:

a. GIVEN PHRASES:

ATTRIBUTIVE: A man, just, vir justus;

OBJECTIVE: just to adversaries, adversariis justus.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the OBJECTIVE phrase "adversariis justus" for the common word justus in the attributive phrase "vir justus":

Vir adversariis justus*, a man just to adversaries.

§ 90. 8. In a combination of two attributive phrases with each other a distinction must be made, whether the one phrase depends on the other, as in the phrase "the poverty of the friends of Gajus;" or whether both attributes depend on the same governing noun, as in the phrase "the great victories of Pompey."

§ 91. 9. In the former case the dependent attributive phrase, according to the general rule § 86 a, is substituted for the common word in the governing attributive phrase, as:

a. GIVEN ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES:

The poverty of the friends, amicorum inopia;
of the friends of Gajus, Gaji amicorum.

- b. COMBINATION, by substituting the dependent phrase "Gaji amicorum" for the common word amicorum in the governing phrase "amicorum inopia":
Gaji amicorum inopia, the poverty of the friends of Gajus.

§ 92. 10. If the two attributive phrases have the same governing noun, which especially is the case, when one of the attributes is a genitive, and the other an adjective, the combination is made in the following order:

1. ADJECTIVE, 2. GENITIVE, 3. GOVERNING NOUN.

Phrases of the latter kind are called compound attributive phrases.

a. GIVEN PHRASES:

The great victories, victoriae magnae;
 victories of Pompey, Pompēji victoriae.

b. COMBINATION according to the special rule § 92:

Magnae Pompeji victoriae, the great victories of Pompey.

Rem. 3. If the attributive genitive and the attributive adjective have not the same governing noun, the combination is done by substitution according to § 91, as: THE VICTORY OF POMPEY THE GREAT, Pompēji Magni victoria.

Rem. 4. ANALYZING combined phrases means: Resolving them into their constituent phrases. The following may serve for a pattern of analysis:

EXCELLENT REWARDS OF DILIGENCE, a compound attributive phrase.

1. SINGLE PHRASES:

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE: Excellent rewards, praemia egregia;

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE: Rewards of diligence, diligentiae praemia.

2. COMBINATION, by arranging the attributes according to § 92: Egregia diligentiae praemia.

EXERCISES.

Analyze the following combined phrases according to the pattern Rem 4:

1. The fate of the prisoners is uncertain.
2. A long delay displeases.
3. Hatred is the cause of wars.
4. He praises the eloquence of Tullius.
5. We love attentive scholars.
6. They are desirous of foreign help.
7. A vice peculiar to the Greeks.
8. The industry of the inhabitants of the island.
9. The rumor of an unforeseen danger.
10. The small (exiguus) price of provisions.
11. Certain testimonies of the guilt.

A. COMBINED PREDICATIVE AND ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. Praefecti clementia reconciliat. 2. Populi discordia desinit. 3. Piratarum poena terret. 4. Romanorum scuta defendunt. 5. Aemilii doctrina accurata est. 6. Spartanorum studia irrita sunt. 7. Syracusarum mercatura fructuosa est. 8. Rhenus Germaniae fluvius est. 9. Fama victoriarum nuntia est. 10. Inopia sapientiae magistra est. 11. Vir contentus beatus est. 12. Discordiae intestinae gliscunt. 13. Pericula occulta terrent. 14. Vir invidus offendit. 15. Bella mala necessaria sunt. 16. Innocentia periculum securum est.

17. The rivals of Pompey are silent. 18. The friends of Aemilius are absent. 19. The prefect of Gaul is present. 20. The promises of Perseus deceive. 21. Masinissa's friendship is useful. 22. The commerce of Athens flourishes. 23. The plans of the prisoners are clear. 24. The followers of Catiline perish. 25. A timely help saves. 26. Faithful friends are wanting. 27. The neighboring provinces rebel. 28. Great miracles happen. 29. Fertile fields abound. 30. Unrevenged injuries torture. 31. Unheard of dangers are imminent. 32. The Latin allies flee. 33. The treachery of the allies is manifest. 34. The troops of Alexander are invincible. 35. The disgrace of Catiline is perpetual. 36. The farmers of Sicily are wealthy. 37. Private injuries are bitter. 38. An unchanged friendship is rare. 39. Rash undertakings are dangerous. 40. A quiet life is happy. 41. Philosophy is the teacher of life. 42. Memory is the assistant of scholarship. 43. Asia is a province of the Romans. 44. Luceria is a Latin town. 45. Poverty is an excellent teacher. 46. The Romans are reliable (certi) friends.

B. COMBINED OBJECTIVE AND ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. Philosophiae principia discunt. 2. Incolarum concordiam conturbas. 3. Praefecti avaritiam vituperamus. 4. Latinorum controversias dijudicat. 5. Legatorum arrogantiam coercet. 6. Adversariorum numero cedimus. 7. Dei praeceptis obtemperamus. 8. Amicorum auxilii egemus. 9. Dei gratiam (grace) vivis. 10. Doctrinam accuratam excellitis. 11. Praemia ampla concedit. 12. Sententias contrarias refutamus. 13. Eloquentiam miramur praestat. 14. Animum gratum habetis. 15. Insidias occultas parat. 16. Sempronii amicitiae cupidus sum. 17. Copiarum fati ignari sumus. 18. Disciplinae regulis contrarium est. 19. Philosophiae studio deditus (devoted) est. 20. Populo Romano fidi sumus. 21. Imperio regio adversus est. 22. Templum Minervae sacrum. 23. Viro otii cupido. 24. Copiae animi plenae. 25. Decretis populo infestis. 26. Negotium reginae molestum.

27. We despise the favor of tyrants. 28. They restore the temples of the gods. 29. They receive (excipere) the ambassadors of Perseus. 30. Thou receivest (accipere) Metellus's letter. 31. We fear the gifts (donum) of the Greeks. 32. We understand the construction (structura) of the sentence. 33. They undergo the dangers of the battle. 34. You strengthen the friendship of the allies. 35. We are in need of the grain of Sicily. 36. They adhere to the friendship of the Romans. 37. They succumb by the folly of the prefect. 38. He calls foreign auxiliary troops. 39. He inhabits a golden house. 40. We lose dear friends. 41. You have an eloquent adversary. 42. They plunder the wealthy temples.

43. They are victorious by unheard of hardships. 44. They are desirous of the assistance of the Romans. 45. He is envious of the victories of Alexander. 46. Thou art dear to the sons of the queen. 47. You are friendly to the cause of the slaves. 48. They are devoted (devotus) to a difficult study. 49. You are hostile to a kind master. 50. He is full of nefarious plans. 51. A prefect, unknown to the inhabitants. 52. By temples, full of statues. 53. Arguments, unpleasant to the accused. 54. By a discipline, peculiar to the Spartans.

C. COMBINATION OF TWO ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

a. TWO ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVES. 1. The history of the wars of the Romans. 2. The knowledge of the nature of plants. 3. The treachery of Brutus's sons. 4. The promises of Jugurtha's ambassadors. 5. The custody of Tarquin's property (custodia). 6. The number of Metellus's prisoners. 7. The pride of the followers of Marius. 8. The flatteries of the queen of Egypt. 9. The causes of the wars of Pyrrhus. 10. The vices of the assistants of the tyrant. 11. The fallacies of the principles of Epicurus. 12. The flight of the troops of Darius. 13. The sympathy of the queen of Spain. 14. The abduction (rapina) of the daughters of the Sabinians (Sabinus). 15. The anger of the daughters of the tyrant.

b. ADJECTIVES, DEPENDENT ON ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVES. 16. The gates of the Roman camp. 17. The oracles of the Cuman (Cumanius) Sibyl (Sibylla). 18. The decrees of the Roman people. 19. The advantages of accurate scholarship. 20. The remains of ancient monuments. 21. The disgrace of an unjust war. 22. The memory of a happy life. 23. The perfidy of false companions. 24. The friendship of a neighboring people. 25. The pity of a noble soul. 26. The glory of magnificent triumphs. 27. The advantages of public schools. 28. The desire of a tranquil life. 29. The votes of an envious people. 30. The destruction of an ancient town.

c. COMPOUND ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES. 31. The impious plans of the tyrant. 32. To the great joy of the scholars. 33. By the disgraceful flight of the enemies. 34. The renowned victory (obj.) of the Greeks. 35. By a dangerous disease of the prefect. 36. The unforeseen treachery of the allies. 37. The obscure arguments of the philosophers. 38. By the immoderate luxury of the Roman women. 39. By the bloody battles of Alexander. 40. The hidden flight (obj.) of the troops. 41. The magnificent remains (obj.) of a temple. 42. By the divine eloquence of Tullius. 43. Of the secret adversaries of the tyrant. 44. The ostensible (speciosus) cause (obj.) of the undertaking. 45. The clear evidences of the fraud.

Translate into English:

1. Spartanorum tyranni avaritia. 2. Philippi legatorum artificia. 3. Syracusarum tyranni saevitia. 4. Darii praefectorum decreta. 5. Numidarum equorum praestantia. 6. Tyranni ministrorum perfidia. 7. Arbitri injusti iudicium. 8. Injustum arbitri iudicium. 9. Morborum periculosorum remedia. 10. Periculosa morborum remedia. 11. Populi Romani beneficia. 12. Animi ingrati testimonium. 13. Amici viae immutatae testimoniis. 14. Vitae miseriae causae. 15. Exiguo frumenti pretio. 16. Tempestivo sociorum auxilio. 17. Inultae legatorum injuria. 18. Manifesta sociorum perfidia. 19. Egregia Liberi statua.

LESSON XVIII.

COMBINATION OF PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

§ 93. 1. A predicative phrase may be combined: 1. With an objective, 2. With an attributive, 3. With another predicative phrase.

Rem. 1. The combination of predicative and attributive phrases has been shown L. XVII. For the combination of two predicative phrases see Part Second p. 246, Obs.

§ 94. 2. If a predicative and an objective phrase are combined, the former always is the GOVERNING and the latter the DEPENDENT phrase. Hence, according to rule § 86, a, this combination is made by substituting the objective for the common word in the predicative phrase. The common word generally is the PREDICATE (see the examples A. B. C. D. E. F.). But if the predicative phrase is IMPERSONAL, the common word may be a SUBJECT-INFINITIVE (see example G).

EXAMPLES.

A. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The ambassador offers, legatus offert;

OBJECTIVE: offers an armistice, indutias offert.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "indutias offert" for the common word offert in the predicative phrase "legatus offert":

Legatus indutias offert, the ambassador offers an armistice.

B. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The queen is kind, regina benigna est;

OBJECTIVE: is kind to the inhabitants, incolis benigna est.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "incolis benigna est" for the common words benigna est in the predicative phrase "regina benigna est":

Regina incolis benigna est, the queen is kind to the inhabitants.

C. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The pupils learn, discunt;
OBJECTIVE: learn well, bene discunt.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the predicative phrase "bene discunt" for the common word discunt in the predicative phrase "discipuli discunt":
Discipuli bene discunt, the pupils learn well.

D. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

IMPERSONAL PREDICATIVE: It is allowed to depart, abire licet;
OBJECTIVE: It is allowed to the ambassadors, legātis licet.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "legātis licet" for the common word licet in the impersonal predicative phrase "abire licet":
Abire legātis licet, it is allowed to the ambassadors to depart.

E. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The allies are willing, socii volunt;
OBJECTIVE: are willing to desert, deficere volunt.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "deficere volunt" for the common word volunt in the predicative phrase "socii volunt":
Socii deficere volunt, the allies are willing to desert.

F. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: The provinces begin to be hostile, provinciae incipiunt;
OBJECTIVE: begin to be hostile, infestae incipiunt.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "infestae esse incipiunt" for the common word incipiunt in the predicative phrase "provinciae incipiunt":
Provinciae infestae esse incipiunt, the provinces begin to be hostile.

G. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

PREDICATIVE: It is glorious to defend, defendere gloriosum est.
OBJECTIVE: to defend the country, patriam defendere.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting the objective phrase "patriam defendere" for the common word defendere in the predicative phrase "defendere gloriosum est":
Patriam defendere gloriosum est, it is glorious to defend the country.

Rem. 2. If the object, dependent on the PREDICATE of an impersonal predicative phrase, denotes a PERSON, it is more usual, to substitute the PREDICATIVE phrase for the common word in the OBJECTIVE phrase. Thus the example, mentioned under No. D, more usually has the following order: Legātis abire licet.

Rem. 3. If the predicative phrase is impersonal, and the subject consists of a predicative adjective and the infinitive of the copula, the predicative adjective agrees in gender, number and case with the OBJECT, which is dependent on the predicate, if this object denotes a PERSON, as:

It delights the triumvirs to be mild, Triumviros benignos esse

jurat. It becomes the queen to be just, Reginam justam esse decet.

But the Latin language generally combines with predicative phrases of this kind no other objects than those which are in the ACCUSATIVE case, except when licet or necesse est form the predicate. In both instances the predicative adjective, forming part of the subject, agrees with the objects of these verbs in the DATIVE case, as:

Gajo otioso esse licet, it is allowed to Gajus to be idle. Copius strenuis esse necesse est, it is necessary to the troops to be brave.

§ 95. 3. A peculiar kind of combination is that of a predicative phrase with a SUBJECT-INFINITIVE, and of an objective phrase with an OBJECT-INFINITIVE. This combination takes place, when one of the verbs mentioned § 82 is used impersonally with one of the regular impersonal predicates (76. 77) as their object-infinitive, as:

Dormire jucundum esse solet, it generally is pleasant to sleep. Servire placere nequit, it cannot please to serve.

EXERCISES.

Analyze the following combined phrases by writing:

1. Flatteries corrupt the soul. 2. Money is wanting (deesse) to the treasury. 3. Arrogance is contrary to modesty. 4. Farmers live happily. 5. It delights (jurare) the boys to play. 6. The troops wish to fight. 7. Greece ceases to be free. 8. It is unfair to punish the prisoners. 9. It is allowed to the poet to be happy.

1.

1. Libri pueros delectant. 2. Pueri libros legunt. 3. Numidæ templa diripiunt. 4. Frumentum copiis deest. 5. Arbiter reum condemnat. 6. Socii frumenti egent. 7. Philosophus argumentis convincit. 8. Nautæ divitiarum cupidi sunt. 9. Marius Plebējis carus est. 10. Pugna Romanis funesta est. 11. Socii timide pugnant. 12. Copiæ necopinātō abeunt. 13. Luna noctu splendet. 14. Amicitia nunquam molesta est. 15. Discipulos discere juvat. 16. Amicis reprehendere licet. 17. Amicos reprehendere licet. 18. Tyrannus servire pergit. 19. Piratæ diripere desistunt. 20. Triumviri regnare nesciunt. 21. Pœni procedere timent. 22. Romāni vincere solent. 23. Amicos prodere sordidum est. 24. Agricolis laboriosis esse necesse est. 25. Præfecto otioso esse licet. 26. Triumviros generosos esse decet. 27. Ludere jucundum esse solet. 28. Iracundum esse conducere nequit.

29. Pompey conquers the pirates. 30. The Persians are obedient to Alexander. 31. Octaviānus defeats Anthony. 32. The Romans reject the armistice. 33. The baggage burdens the troops. 34. Thebes prepares a war. 35. The scholars are distinguished by diligence. 36. Teachers are in need of books. 37. Friendship unites the souls. 38. Vices bring disgrace. 39. The troops cross the Danube. 40. The prov ince is full of deserters. 41. The troops are full of confidence. 42. The allies are desirous of a battle. 43. Indolence is contrary to diligence. 44. The people are thankful to the triumvirs. 45. The country (terra) is adapted to a battle. 46. The Spartans dine publicly. 47. The troops conspire secretly. 48. The Celts dig busily. 49. The gods often punish. 50. Delay is rarely useful. 51. Years never return. 52. The troops are as yet unhurt. 53. The slaves are now free. 54. The queen always is generous. 55. Riches never are secure. 56. It delights the boys to swim. 57. It is necessary to the Carthaginians to yield. 58. It is allowed to Anthony to return. 59. It becomes the prefect to be severe. 60. It becomes boys to be modest. 61. It delights the queen to be mild. 62. It is allowed to the people to be quiet. 63. It is contrary to duty to plunder. 64. It is never allowed to be unjust. 65. It is often expedient to be silent. 66. It is always better to be cautious. 67. It is often necessary to be severe. 68. The troops are unwilling to obey. 69. The committee of seven resolve to conform. 70. The prefect does not know how to finish the war. 71. The slaves are afraid of returning. 72. The umpires wish to be just. 73. The queen is afraid of being rash. 74. The commerce ceases to be profitable. 75. The Belgians continue being rebellious. 76. Justice cannot be a wrong. 77. Words must be perspicuous. 78. Tyrants generally are unjust. 79. It is cruel to offend prisoners. 80. It is beautiful to defend innocence. 81. It is impious to utter (dicere) falsehoods. 82. It is disgraceful to break (laedere) promises. 83. It is noble to be useful to enemies. 84. It is expedient to be devoted (deditus) to military service. 85. It is allowed to be inimical (adversus) to negligence. 86. It is human to be desirous of fame. 87. To be thankful to teachers is honorable (decorus). 88. It cannot be injurious to be silent. 89. It must be serviceable to finish the war.

2.

1. Bella ærarium exhauriunt. 2. Disciplina copias continet. 3. Philosophia ingenium exercet. 4. Oppidani veniam impetrant. 5. Latini prefecto subveniunt. 6. Fiducia copiis deest. 7. Piræte terrâ appropinquant. 8. Pueri grammaticæ ignâri sunt. 9. Fruentum copiis necessarium est. 10. Galli Românis infesti sunt. 11. Socii ignominiosè fugiunt. 12. Præfetus fortuito abest. 13. Animus semper liber est. 14. Promissa sæpe ambigua sunt. 15. Præfatum præire decet. 16. Oppidanis redire licet. 17. Agricolis impigros esse juvat. 18. Discipuli proficere nequeunt. 19. Reus hiscere non vult. 20. Sulpicius tardus esse solet. 21. Advenæ incogniti esse cupiunt. 22. Captivos liberare humanum est. 23. Manere periculosum esse potest. 24. Religiosum esse prodesse solet.

25. The inhabitants extinguish the flames. 26. The triumvirs divide the fields. 27. South winds bring rain (pluvia). 28. The boys conform to the rules. 29. The troops throw the arms away. 30. The town is full of provisions. 31. Minerva is friendly to the Greeks. 32. The groves are sacred to the Furies. 33. The troops suddenly appear. 34. The scholars hear attentively. 35. Figures (numerus) sometimes deceive. 36. The sentinels often sleep. 37. The watchmen are now attentive. 38. It becomes the accused to mourn. 39. It is allowed to the troops to rest. 40. It delights the slaves to be idle. 41. It becomes a stranger to be polite. 42. It is agreeable (consentaneus) to prudence to yield. 43. It is never necessary to commit cruelties. 44. It is always preferable to be contented. 45. It often is dangerous to be weak. 46. The tribunes must yield. 47. The slaves are in the habit of dancing. 48. The sentinels cease to watch. 49. The umpires are afraid of being just. 50. The Greeks wish to be free. 51. Philosophers do not know how to govern. 52. It is expedient to repeal the decrees. 53. It is necessary to conform to the prefect. 54. It is disgraceful to divulge secrets. 55. It is better to act cautiously. 56. It is abominable to accuse falsely. 57. It generally is preferable to yield. 58. It can be profitable to succumb.

LESSON XIX.

COMBINATION OF OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

§ 96. 1. Objective phrases may be combined with ATTRIBUTIVE, PREDICATIVE, and with other OBJECTIVE phrases.

Rem. 1. The first two combinations have been shown in the last two lessons. Here we consider the combination of objective phrases with EACH OTHER.

§ 97. 2. In combining objective phrases with each other, a distinction must be made, whether both objective phrases have the same governing word, or whether the one objective phrase is DEPENDENT on the other (§ 85). The latter is the case, when an INFINITIVE, which is an object of the predicate, has other objects dependent on it. In this combination the governing phrase is called the OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE PREDICATE, and the dependent phrase the OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE INFINITIVE, as :

Fluvium transire incipiunt, they begin to cross the river.

Here the phrase "transire incipiunt" is an objective phrase of the PREDICATE, and the phrase "fluvium transire" an objective phrase of the INFINITIVE.

§ 98. 3. In combining objective phrases of the PREDICATE with objective phrases of the INFINITIVE, either of the two phrases may be substituted for the common word (that is the infinitive) in the other, as :

A. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE PREDICATE: We wish to redeem.
redimere cupimus;

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE INFINITIVE: to redeem the captives, captivos redimere.

2. COMBINATION, by substituting either of the two phrases for the common word redimere in the other:

Captivos redimere cupimus, we wish to redeem the captives.

B. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE PREDICATE: They continue to fight, pugnare pergunt;

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE INFINITIVE: to fight bravely, strenue pugnare.

2. COMBINATION, as in the first example:

Strenue pugnare pergunt, they continue to fight bravely.

C. 1. GIVEN PHRASES:

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE PREDICATE: We intend to be thankful, grati esse volumus;

OBJECTIVE PHRASE OF THE INFINITIVE, to be thankful to the prefect, praefecto grati esse.

2. COMBINATION, as in the first example:

Praefecto grati esse volumus, we intend to be thankful to the prefect.

§ 99. 4. Two combined objective phrases, which have the same governing word, are called a compound objective phrase. In phrases of this kind the objects are placed in the following order before the governing verb:

1. The objects, containing the case of a substantive (CASE-OBJECTS), generally precede those objects, which are adverbs (ADVERBIAL OBJECTS), as:

Legātis benigne respondet, he replies kindly to the ambassadors.

2. Among more than one case-object the ACCUSATIVE generally precedes the other cases, but the DATIVE either precedes or follows the accusative, as:

Praefectum perjurii accusare, to accuse the prefect of perjury.

Tribūnis pecuniam dat, or pecuniam tribūnis dat, he gives money to the tribunes.

Praestantiam diligentia comparare, to gain distinction by diligence.

§ 100. 5. Certain verbs govern a case-object in connection with an INFINITIVE. In this kind of compound objective phrase the case-object is the LOGICAL (not the GRAMMATICAL) SUBJECT of the infinitive, and is called the agent of the infinitive, as:

Legātos redire jubet, he directs the ambassadors to return.

In this combination the agent precedes the object-infinitive.

Rem. 2. In the given example the object legātos is meant to be the DOER of the action of returning, expressed by the object-infinitive redire. Hence the noun legātos, according to § 5, is the SUBJECT of the infinitive redire; not the GRAMMATICAL subject, explained in § 19, but the LOGICAL subject, or the agent. See § 19, Rem. 2.

§ 101. 6. The verbs, which are construed with this kind of compound object, are the following:

|                                  |                                |                                 |
|----------------------------------|--------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| assuefacere , to accustom | impedire , to prevent,  | prohibere , to prohibit  |
| componere , to compose    | hinder                  | sistere , to let, suffer |
| cogere , to compel        | jubere , to bid, direct | vetare , to forbid       |
| docere , to teach         | permittere , to allow,  |                                 |
|                                  | to permit                      |                                 |

Rem. 3. Combinations of this kind, when an object-infinitive and a case-object as its agent depend on the same governing verb, must be distinguished from the combination of objects of the infinitive with objects of the predicate (§ 97). The latter stand in the relation of governing and dependent phrases, while the former make a COMPOUND objective phrase, which is thus analyzed:

"He compels the tyrant to go away."

1. SIMPLE PHRASES (both objective):

He compels the tyrant, tyrannum cogit;

He compels to go away, abire cogit.

2. COMBINATION, by placing the case-object before the infinitive: Tyrannum abire cogit.

Rem. 4. The agent, dependent as object on the mentioned verbs, stands in the ACCUSATIVE case, except with the verb permittere, which requires its object to be in the DATIVE, as:

He allows the troops to return, copias (not copias) redire permittit.

§ 102. 7. If the infinitive in this combination consists of a predicative adjective and the copula, the former must agree in gender, number and case, with the agent or logical subject, but only, when the agent is in the ACCUSATIVE, as:

Legātos urbānos esse jubet, he directs the ambassadors to be polite.

With the verb permittere this combination with a predicative adjective cannot be used.

Rem. 5. The English equivalents of the mentioned verbs are construed with the mere objective case and the infinitive, except to prevent, to hinder, to prohibit, which are construed with the preposition from and the verbal noun in ing, while in Latin the mere infinitive is used, as: I prohibit the boys from playing, pueros ludere prohibeo.

SUMMARY OF THE RULES ON THE GRAMMATICAL FORM OF THE Predicative adjective.

The PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVE takes different grammatical forms, according to its different grammatical relations. The rules, which determine this form, are explained at their proper places. It is important for the beginner to view these rules in their connection.

The general principle is the following:

The predicative adjective always agrees with its LOGICAL SUBJECT.

All the special rules are nothing but applications of this principle:

1. When the predicative adjective is connected with a FINITE copula, it agrees with its GRAMMATICAL SUBJECT (§ 63). If this grammatical subject is a subject-infinitive, the adjective is placed in the NOMINATIVE NEUTER SINGULAR (§ 75).

2. When the predicative adjective is connected with the copula in the INFINITIVE, we must distinguish whether the infinitive is a SUBJECT or an OBJECT-INFINITIVE.

a. If it is a SUBJECT-INFINITIVE, the predicative adjective stands in the accusative singular of the masculine (§ 78).

b. If it is an OBJECT-INFINITIVE, we again distinguish, whether the latter is dependent on one of those verbs, that govern a simple object-infinitive (§ 80), or on one of those, that govern a compound object-infinitive (§ 101).

aa. In the former instance the predicative adjective agrees with the grammatical subject of its governing predicative phrase (§ 81. § 94. F. § 95).

bb. In the latter instance the predicative adjective agrees with the agent of the infinitive (§ 102).

The beginner will rarely err in the application of these rules, if he always looks for the logical subject of the predicative adjective, which is easily found, by asking the question: Who or what does the action, expressed by the predicative adjective and copula.

EXERCISES.

Analyze the following phrases:

1. They cannot destroy the country. 2. He promises diligence to the teacher. 3. We remind (admonere) the allies of the danger. 4. He kindly receives (excipere) the ambassadors. 5. He accustoms the Romans to conquer. 6. They prevent the troops from plundering. 7. You suffer the inhabitants to be free.

1.

1. We intend to restore discipline. 2. He resolves to defend the town. 3. They wish to occupy Sicily. 4. I am not willing to hurt (laedere) the strangers. 5. You do not wish to change place. 6. I rather wish to be useful to the people. 7. I can reconcile the friends. 8. Thou art able to return (reddere) the money. 9. They cannot maintain the battle. 10. We must restrain arrogance. 11. We are accustomed to censure Gracchus. 12. They are afraid of entering the gates. 13. They generally are desirous of booty. 14. She tries to be kind to the prisoners. 15. We begin to be inured (assuetus) to hardships. 16. They cease to act moderately. 17. You begin learning assiduously. 18. He recommends the poet to the prefect. 19. We give (tribuere) the preference the poet to the people. 20. They announce the victory to the people. 21. He prefers disgrace to death. 22. He delivers the letter to the queen. 23. Thou betrayest the secrets to the ambassadors. 24. They accuse the messenger of treachery. 25. You convict the candidate of corruption. 26. I absolve the accused of the crime. 27. He obliges the Sicilians by favors. 28. I restrain the inhabitants by punishments. 29. You take the town by fraud. 30. They enclose the camp by a rampart. 31. You falsely accuse Sempronius. 32. He reads the letter attentively. 33. He always is faithful to the country. 34. They never are useful to the allies. 35. You secretly adhere to the Carthaginians. 36. He teaches the inhabitants to obey. 37. We compel the tyrant to flee. 38. You suffer the prisoners to perish. 39. He bids the ambassadors to be silent. 40. You forbid the troops to fight. 41. He accustoms the troops to be cautious. 42. He permits the prisoners to escape. 43. They prohibit the tyrant from being moderate. 44. You prevent the inhabitants from being treacherous.

1. Vitam defendere volumus. 2. Proelium renovare nolunt. 3. Vitam potius mori. 4. Presidium imperare potes. 5. Causam intelligere nequeas. 6. Puerum pluri assidue. 7. Servum adversi esse solent. 8. Dis inest esse audient. 9. Oppidanis esse cupiunt. 10. Inebriam vitare studemus. 11. Muros ascendere incipimus. 12. Praetorium offendere timet. 13. Adversarios vincere scimus. 14. Juste iurare adest. 15. Publice disputare negant. 16. Templum violare conerant. 17. Filia modeste adest. 18. Oppidum Romanis proferunt. 19. Triumvirum mendacii aciso. 20. Legatos opprobriis calat. 21. Oppidum male defendunt. 22. Captivos iniuste condemnat. 23. Patriae semper grati sumus. 24. Copias dimicare cogit. 25. Legatos properare jubent. 26. Tarquinium redire vetamus. 27. Pueris ludere permittimus. 28. Praefectum adesse prohibetis. 29. Servos cautos esse jubet. 30. Regnam justam esse vetat.

2.

1. They intend to recall Fabius. 2. He resolves to convoke the inhabitants. 3. They are in the habit of yielding to the Romans. 4. We cease electing decemvirs. 5. We are unwilling to abandon Sicily. 6. We are afraid of being unpleasant to the prefect. 7. You begin to be desirous of riches. 8. They begin to approach cautiously. 9. You rather wish to act severely. 10. We deliver the slaves to the masters. 11. They send a message to the prefect. 12. You abandon the booty to the barbarians. 13. We accuse the ambassadors of fraud. 14. She appeases the tyrant by tears. 15. You often are in need (indigere) of money. 16. We never censure the queen. 17. He accidentally kills the slave. 18. He zealously treats philosophy. 19. We teach the children to be modest. 20. He compels the tribune to be idle. 21. He bids the troops to be on their guard. 22. We let the enemies rejoice. 23. They prevent the tyrant from fleeing.

1. Socios reconciliare cupimus. 2. Dolo vincere non vult. 3. Legatum interficere statuunt. 4. Praefectum accusare desinit. 5. Invidiam superare nesciunt. 6. Reginae infesti esse incipiunt. 7. Publice dicere (to speak) timeo. 8. Contento vivere discunt. 9. Copiis victoriam promittit. 10. Triumviro coronam offert. 11. Philippum Alexandro anteponimus. 12. Sallustium doli absolvunt. 13. Legatos gladio vulnerat. 14. Remm diserte defendit. 15. Negotium egregie perficiunt. 16. Adversarios appropinquare sinunt. 17. Copias transire prohibet. 18. Discipulos attentos esse iubemus.

LESSON XX.

COMBINATION OF MORE THAN TWO PHRASES

§ 103. 1. If more than two phrases are to be combined with each other, we first combine those phrases, which have the same governing word, according to the rules, explained in the preceding lessons. These, in their farther combination with other phrases, are treated as one single phrase. According as they form the governing, or the dependent phrase, the rule of § 86, a, or the special rules of the preceding lessons must then be applied.

Thus may be combined:

1. Three or more ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES with each other;
2. Three or more OBJECTIVE PHRASES with each other;
3. A combined OBJECTIVE with a PREDICATIVE PHRASE.

§ 104. ILLUSTRATION.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. The pernicious discord of the Roman people.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (compound attributive, § 92): The pernicious discord of the people, exitiosa populi discordia;

DEPENDENT PHRASE: Of the Roman people, populi Romani.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "populi Romani" for the common word populi in the governing phrase "exitiosa populi discordia":

Exitiosa populi Romani discordia.

2. The flight of the right wing of the allies.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE: The flight of the wing, ala fugat; DEPENDENT PHRASE (compound attributive): of the right wing of the allies, dexteræ sociorum alae.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "dexteræ sociorum alae" for the common word alae in the governing phrase "alae fuga":

Dexteræ sociorum alae fuga.

B. OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. He is unwilling to take the town by treachery.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE: He is unwilling to take, capere non vult; DEPENDENT PHRASE (compound objective, § 99): To take the town by treachery, oppidum perfidiâ capere.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the combined dependent phrase "oppidum perfidiâ capere" for the common word capere in the governing phrase "capere non vult":

Oppidum perfidiâ capere non vult.

2. He forbids the delegates to excite the people.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (compound objective, § 100): He forbids the delegates to excite, delegatos excitare vetat; DEPENDENT PHRASE: To excite the people, populum excitare.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "populum excitare" for the common word excitare in the governing phrase "delegatos excitare vetat":

Delegatos populum excitare vetat.

3. He allows the boy to give the book to Gajus.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (compound obj.): He allows the boy to give, puero dare permittit; DEPENDENT PHRASE (compound obj.): To give the book to Gajus, librum Gajo dare.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "librum Gajo dare" for the common word dare in the governing phrase "puero dare permittit":

Puero librum Gajo dare permittit.

C. PREDICATIVE AND COMBINED OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. The ambassadors announce the victory to the people.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (predicative): The ambassadors announce, legāti nuntiant;DEPENDENT PHRASE (compound objective): announce the victory to the people, populo victoriam nuntiant;

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "populo victoriam nuntiant" for the common word nuntiant in the governing phrase "legāti nuntiant":Legāti populo victoriam nuntiant.

2. The Greeks know how to put barbarians to flight.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (predicative): The Greeks know, Graeci sciunt;DEPENDENT PHRASES (combined objective, § 98): know how to put to flight barbarians, barbaros fugāre sciunt.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the combined objective phrase "barbaros fugāre sciunt" for the common word sciunt in the predicative phrase "Graeci sciunt":Graeci barbaros fugāre sciunt.

3. It is expedient to the Romans to refuse the armistice to the Carthaginians.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE (a combination of an impersonal predicative with an objective phrase, § 94, D): It is expedient to the Romans to refuse, Denegāre Romānis expedit, or: Romānis denegāre expedit (§ 94, Rem. 2);DEPENDENT PHRASE (compound objective): to refuse the armistice to the Carthaginians, indutias Poenis denegāre.

b. COMBINATION:

By substituting the dependent phrase "indutias Poenis denegāre" for the common word denegāre in the governing phrase "denegāre Romānis expedit":Indutias Poenis denegāre Romānis expedit, or: Romānis indutias Poenis denegāre expedit.

4. The Numidians prevent Sempronius from communicating the danger to Æmilius.

a. SINGLE PHRASES:

GOVERNING PHRASE: The Numidians prevent, Numidae impediunt, DEPENDENT PHRASES:1. COMPOUND OBJECTIVE OF THE PREDICATE (§ 97): prevent Sempronius from communicating, Sempronium nuntiāre impediunt;2. COMPOUND OBJECTIVE OF THE INFINITIVE: communicating the danger to Æmilius, Æmilio periculum nuntiāre.

b. COMBINATION:

By first combining the two comp. objective phrases according to B, 3 (Sempronium Æmilio periculum nuntiāre impediunt), and then substituting the phrases, thus combined, for the predicate impediunt in the governing predicative phrase:Numidae Sempronium Æmilio periculum nuntiāre impediunt

§ 105. 2. If ATTRIBUTIVE phrases are to be combined with the more complicated phrases of the other descriptions, we first form the skeleton, that is the SUBJECT, PREDICATE and the OBJECTS of the predicate and infinitive. After this the attributive phrases are separately constituted, and severally substituted for their governing nouns in the skeleton, as:

1. They prevent the daughters of the queen from sailing.

SKELETON: They prevent the daughters from sailing, filias navigāre impediunt.ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE: The daughters of the queen, reginae filias.COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrase "reginae filias" for the object filias in the skeleton:Reginae filias navigāre impediunt.

2. The troops of the allies begin to harass the left wing of the Ætolians.

1. SKELETON: The troops begin to harass the wing, Copiae alam lacessere incipiunt.2. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES: dependent on copiae: the troops of the allies, sociorum copiae; dependent on alam: the left wing of the Ætolians, sinistram Ætolorum alam.3. COMBINATION, by substituting the attributive phrases for their governing nouns, copiae and alam in the skeleton:Sociorum copiae sinistram Ætolorum alam lacessere incipiunt.

Rem. 1. Attributive adjectives, which have OBJECTS, dependent on them, generally must be so arranged, that they with their objects follow their governing nouns, without entering into any combination with other attributes, dependent on the same nouns, as: "The towns of Campania, hostile to the Romans, Campaniae oppida Romānis infesta, not: Romānis infesta Campaniae oppida."

Rem. 2. If several combined LATIN phrases are to be translated into English, we proceed in the following order: 1. PREDICATIVE PHRASE (personal or impersonal); 2. OBJECTS of the SUBJECT-INFINITIVE; 3. ATTRIBUTES, belonging to the SUBJECT, or to the PREDICATIVE NOUN; 4. OBJECTS of the PREDICATE; 5. ATTRIBUTES of the latter; 6. OBJECTS of the INFINITIVE; 7. ATTRIBUTES of the latter, as:

Sinistra sociorum ala fluvium vado transire incipit.

1. PREDICATIVE PHRASE: Ala incipit, the wing begins.
2. OBJECT. PHR. of the SUBJECT-INITIATIVE —.
3. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE of the SUBJECT: Sinistra sociorum ala, the left wing of the allies.
4. OBJECTIVE PHRASE of the PREDICATE: Transire incipit, begins to cross.
5. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE of the latter —.
6. OBJECT. PHR. of the INFINIT.: Fluvium vado transire, to cross the river by a ford.
7. ATTRIBUTIVE PHR. of the latter —.

TRANSLATION: The left wing of the allies begins to cross the river by a ford.

Scytharum reginae Cyrum interficere licet.

1. IMPERS. PRED. PHRASE: Interficere licet, it is allowed to kill.
2. OBJ. PHR. of SUBJECT-INF.: Cyrum interficere, to kill Cyrus.
3. ATTRIBUTES, belonging to the subject, &c. —.
4. OBJ. PHR. of PRED.: Reginae licet, it is allowed to the queen.
5. ATTRIBUTIVE PHR. of the latter: Scytharum reginae, to the queen of the Scythians.
6. OBJECT. PHR. of the OBJECT-INFINITIVE —.
7. ATTRIBUT. PHR. of the latter —.

TRANSLATION: It is allowed to the queen of the Scythians, to kill Cyrus.

OBSERVATION.—The rules for the arrangement of the phrases and for the method of their combination refer to the REGULAR position of Latin words. But deviations from the regular arrangement are very frequent, especially for three reasons: 1. EMPHASIS; 2. PERSPICUITY; 3. EUPHONY. An exposition of the rules, concerning these deviations, finds its place in LATIN RHETORIC. It may be sufficient, to remark here, that the position of the Latin words is very free, if compared with the arrangement of the English sentence, which is bound on few and strict rules. The beginner will see this from the following example: The phrase "the pleasant letter" admits of this one and no other arrangement of the words in English, while the Latin translation of the words may be arranged in six different ways: Jucundo littera tur; jucundo tur littera; littera jucundo tur; littera tur jucundo; tur littera jucundo; tur jucundo littera. All these arrangements are vouched for by Ciceronian passages. Often one of the members of a phrase is inserted between the two members of another phrase which has no direct grammatical relation to it, as: Ipsa litteram Socrates nullam reliquit. Cic.; Socrates himself did not leave a letter (behind him). Here the object litteram is inserted in the attributive phrase 'Ipsa Socrates' and the subject Socrates is inserted in the attr. phrase 'litteram nullam.' Such changes of the common order are not arbitrarily made, but always for certain rhetorical purposes. It is the office of Latin rhetoric to point out these purposes, and to show the means by which they are effected.

EXERCISES.

 Analyze and translate the following combined phrases:

1. The accurate arguments of the Greek philosophers.
2. The battles of wild nations (populus) of Asia.
3. They intend to abandon Sicily to the Romans.
4. We teach the boys to love the country.
5. He compels the inhabitants to return (reddere) the slaves to the masters.
6. The decemvirs absolve the accused of the crime.
7. The prefect is afraid of restoring discipline.
8. It becomes the triumvir to restore the money to the inhabitants.
9. The scholars of Sempronius hear the renowned lectures of the poet.
10. The temple of the Ephesian (Ephesus) Diana is a great monument of Greek genius (ingenium).

I.

COMBINED PREDICATIVE PHRASES.—1. The renowned victory of the Latins. 2. By the unexpected disease of the Roman prefect. 3. The excellent services of the Greek ambassadors. 4. By the disgraceful pursuits (studium) of bad men. 5. By the bloody battles of Alexander the Great. 6. The bad (adversus) fortune of the Trojan (Trojanus) immigrants. 7. The unforeseen flight of the troops of Antiochus. 8. The wonderful perseverance (obj.) of Pompey's followers. 9. By the manifest guilt of Anthony's slaves. 10. The fortune of the invincible arms of Alexander. 11. The adversaries of the unjust plans of the tyrant. 12. The sadness of the ambassadors of the Roman people. 13. The ostensible (speciosus) cause of the sudden docility (obsequium) of the Roman ambassadors. 14. The manifest cause of the insane cruelty of the tyrant.

COMBINED OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 15. They are willing to deliver the papers (litterae) to the triumvir. 16. I intend to sell a house to Gaius. 17. We are unwilling to open the camp to deserters. 18. We rather wish to assign the cause to imprudence. 19. I cannot allow the booty to the troops. 20. We must settle (componere) the controversy by arbitration (arbitrium). 21. You must settle (dirimere) the controversy by arms. 22. He is in the habit of explaining Virgil to the scholars. 23. They intend to accept the accused of the robbery. 24. He is afraid of the triumph. 25. You try to win secretly and unethically the way to the Romans. 26. He begins to betray perfidiously the secrets. 27. They zealously continue collecting (componere) provisions. 28. He refuses to excuse the income of corruption. 29. She teaches the Greeks to cultivate the fields. 30. He compels the enemies to surrender (tradere) the arms. 31. I permit the Cimbrians to cross the river. 32. We suffer the enemies to occupy the heights (jugum). 33. He directs the ambassadors to propose (proponere) an armistice to Pompey. 34. We forbid the troops to plunder the temples. 35. He accustoms the Romans to carry on wars. 36. They prohibit Sempronius from consecrating a temple to Diana. 37. You prevent the prefect from helping (adjacere) the allies.

COMBINED PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 38. The Carthaginians return (reddere) the prisoners to the Romans. 39. The prefect promises victory to the troops. 40. Anthony offers a crown to the board of hundred acquit Gaius of perjury (perjurium). 41. The tribunes accuse the prefect of imprudence. 42. The board of hundred acquit Gaius of perjury (perjurium). 43. Pyrrhus terrifies the Romans by elephants (elephantus). 44. The inhabitants intend to decide the controversy by the sword. 45. The troops are willing to renew the battle. 46. The Plebeians are unwilling to yield to the Patricians. 47. The committee of seven rather wish to change the plans. 48. The ambassadors resolve to reject the armistice. 49. Sempronius knows how to reconcile the friends. 50. The prefect is able to capture the town. 51. Teachers must restrain anger. 52. The troops cannot sustain the battle. 53. The committee of ten can pay (solvere) the money. 54. The Patricians are in the habit of censuring Gracchus. 55. The stranger dares to kill a Roman. 56. The prefect wishes to be useful to the country. 57. Wars generally are pernicious to the fields. 58. The boys do not wish to be ignorant of grammar. 59. The sentinels permit the enemies to lead away the prisoners. 60. Sulpicius directs the troops to be cautious. 61. The prefect compels the inhabitants to be friendly to the troops.

(Impersonal). 62. It is injurious to offend the people by pride. 63. It is expedient to give arms to the slaves. 64. It is preferable to divide the enemies by discord. 65. It delights Titus to oblige friends by benefits. 66. It is allowed to the ambassadors to accept the gifts (donum). 67. It is expedient to Perseus to deliver Corinth to the tyrant. 68. It is pleasant to the farmer to plough the fields.

PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES WITH ATTRIBUTES. 69. The Carthaginians reject the propositions (propositum) of the Romans. 70. The troops of Pyrrhus succumb to the hardships of the war. 71. It delights the children of Gajus to play. 72. It is allowed to the followers of Pompey to return (redire). 73. The fate of the triumvir terrifies the hearts (animus) of the people. 74. It is necessary to the future prefect to win the hearts of the people. 75. The sons of Æmilius prevent the tribune from accusing the prefect. 76. It is allowed to the sons of Gajus to be free. 77. Perseus adds the town of Epirus to the kingdom of Macedonia. 78. The inhabitants assign the real (verus) cause of the conflagration to the malice (nequitia) of the slaves. 79. You know how to escape the envy of the people. 80. The people cannot acquit Sempronius of the desecration (sacrilegium) of the temples. 81. The whole people censure the rash undertakings of the prefect. 82. Attentive scholars generally keep (tenere) well the words of the teacher. 83. Men, desirous of fame, rarely commit open crimes. 84. We owe the inner discords of the people to the nefarious efforts of bad men. 85. The flight of Pompey may (posse) be pernicious to the whole country.

Translate into English:

1. Ineptæ virōrum doctōrum sententiæ. 2. Tempestivo copiārum Latinārum auxilio. 3. Inultæ Persei legatōrum injuriæ. 4. Inmutatā Pompēji filiōrum fiduciā. 5. Inauditam virōrum indoctōrum arrogantiam. 6. Injusti decemvirōrum imperii memoria. 7. Futurārum populi discordiārum causa. 8. Perpetua insāni triumvirōrum inepti infamia. 9. Variis exigui annonæ pretii causis.

10. Præfectum perjurii accusare volunt. 11. Romānis Epīrum concedere nolo. 12. Annōnam copiis afferre nequeunt. 13. Iram verbo sedare (allay) potest. 14. Vitam Deo reddere debemus. 15. Minis injurias addere audent. 16. Oppidum terrā oppugnare cupiunt. 17. Pecuniam mercaturā comparare studemus. 18. Adversarios verbis lacessere incipiunt. 19. Captivos gladio interficere malunt. 20. Discipulos admonere raro negligis. 21. Agros arare studiōse discit. 22. Vinum immodice bibere recusamus. 23. Magistris semper grati esse debemus. 24. Romānos deos colere docet. 25. Præfectum Siculis pecuniam restituere cogo. 26. Copiis prædam colligere (to collect) permittit. 27. Legatos castra inspicere jubet. 28. Legatos præfectum rapinārum accusare jubet. 29. Præfectum præmia accipere vetat. 30. Sempronium Ætōlis auxilium ferre prohibet.

31. Oppidani adversariis portas aperiunt. 32. Romani Pœnis bellum indicunt. 33. Jugurtha legatos pecuniā corrumpit. 34. Pœni Antiocho auxilium denegant. 35. Præfectus provinciam Pœnis prodit. 36. Centumviri Roscium parricidii (parricide) absolvunt. 37. Perseus legā tos promissis placat. 38. Romani Siciliam retinere cupiunt. 39. Gajus divitias comparare studet. 40. Præfectus castra oppugnare statuit. 41. Copie muros ascendere timent. 42. Oppidani muros defendere destinant. 43. Regina incolis cara esse cupit. 44. Copie fiducia plene esse perunt. 45. Fullus Catilinam abire cogit. 46. Populus præfectum redire sinit. 47. Babius Jugurtham tacere jubet. 48. Tribuni Metellum bellum conficere impediunt. 49. Piratas pœne tradere expedit. 50. Vitam armis defendere decet. 51. Tragœdias scribere Dionysium juvat. 52. Camillum patriæ restituere Romānis conducit. 53. Præfecto prædam copiis relinquere licet.

54. Tyranni ministri legatos veneno tollunt. 55. Præfectus Persei legatos adire jubet. 56. Romanorum copie Syracusarum divitias diripiunt. 57. Nautæ Britannie oras conspiciunt. 58. Copiarum reliquie fortuito evadunt. 59. Alexandri amicis regnare licet. 60. Populus deorum inani sacrificiis placare statuit. 61. Præfectus fugæ causam populo exponit (explains). 62. Pœnorum perfidiam gladio punire prastat. 63. Viarum angustie copias procedere prohibent. 64. Magister discipulos grammaticæ regulas memoriæ mandare assuefacit. 65. Silvæ dense copias Romanas procedere impediunt. 66. Exempla mala pueros bonos sepe corrumpunt. 67. Viri indocti doctrinam accuratam continere solent. 68. Copie fecundos Italie agros conspiciunt. 69. Legatorum injuriæ justa belli causa sunt. 70. Œdipus lucum Furiis sacrum intrat. 71. Dexteræ flavii ripa bestiarum ferarum plena esse solet. 72. Pœni populi Romani socios deficere cogunt. 73. Regina ministri loca publica adire timent.

2.

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES. 1. The doubtful fate of the Roman captives. 2. The treacherous propositions (propositum) of the ambassadors of Perseus. 3. Excellent statues of Greek gods. 4. The kind advices of the assistants of the queen. 5. By the false arguments of Pompey's adversaries. 6. An oracle of the future glory of Alexander. 7. The memory of the renowned victories of the ancient Romans. 8. The extraordinary effigy of the rebellious inhabitants of the province.

OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 9. We try to adapt the word to the sense (sententiæ). 10. We do not wish to encourage (confirmare) treachery by rewards. 11. He refuses to send a message to the prefect. 12. I can reconcile the Patricians to the Plebeians. 13. He is unwilling to assign the delay to treachery. 14. They resolve to abandon the town to the barbarians. 15. He prefers to refute the arguments by the sword. 16. He is in habit of separating friends by slanders. 17. They often neglect to guard the walls. 18. He necessarily continues buying provisions. 19. We intend to examine the book accurately. 20. They propose to keep (servare) the promises conscientiously. 21. We teach the scholars to understand the rules. 22. He compels the Carthaginians to abandon Spain. 23. He directs the assistants to guard the prisoners. 24. They forbid the triumvirs to restore the property (bona, pl. t.) to Tarquin. 25. He permits the troops to plunder Syracuse.

COMBINED PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 26. The tribunes submit the papers to the queen. 27. Anthony restores Egypt to Cleopatra. 28. Fabricius prefers innocence to riches. 29. The tribunes offend the queen by arrogance. 30. The teacher intends to award the prize (praemium) to Charles. 31. The queen is unwilling to concede the price to the pirates. 32. The scribe is in the habit of communicating the secrets to the prefect. 33. The inhabitants resolve to defend the town by arms. 34. The immigrants wish to be friendly to the inhabitants. 35. The queen begins to be envious of the tribunes. 36. Numa accustoms the Romans to worship (colere) the gods. 37. The decemvirs suffer the prisoners to perish. 38. The prefect hinders the troops from being idle. 39. It delights Claudius to torture prisoners. 40. It is unpleasant to Titus to refuse the permission. 41. It is better to defend the town by land. 42. It sometimes is necessary to restrain the populace by arms. 43. It often is expedient to enemies to feign friendship.

PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES WITH ATTRIBUTES. 44. Pompey subjects (subjicere) Asia to the power of the Roman people. 45. The remains of the troops try to save life by flight. 46. The mutual hatred of the inhabitants is the manifest cause of the war. 47. We cannot permit the ambassadors of the tyrant to despise the commands of the people. 48. It is peculiar to the Greeks to love the study of philosophy. 49. The gods frequently delay the deserved (meritus) punishment of crimes. 50. The rebellious hearts (animus) of the Gauls are open to the eye of the prefect. 51. The divine eloquence of Tullius exposes (deteget) the nefarious plans of Catiline. 52. It becomes the followers of Pompey quietly to accept the judgment of the arms. 53. The ambassadors of the Greeks do not know how to deceive the great cunning of Philip.

Translate into English:

1. Incognita providentiæ (providence) divini consilia. 2. Invictis populi Romani armis. 3. Imbecilla Gaji filiorum ingenia. 4. Irata nuntiorum regionum verba. 5. Securum Antonii amicorum perfugium. 6. Generosi reginæ animi monumentum. 7. Dexteræ sociorum ale fuga. 8. Profanæ Jugurthæ legatorum audaciæ testimonia. 9. Adversarios dolo vincere nolumus. 10. Legatum veneno interficere cogitat. 11. Praefectum dementiae accusare desinunt. 12. Veniam rogare nunquam omittit. 13. Philosophiam impigre tractare incipiunt. 14. Copias arma abjicere cogit. 15. Legatos ignorantiam simulare jubet. 16. Copias ærumnas perferre assuefacit. 17. Tyrannum Ætolis auxilium ferre vetat.

18. Praefectus incolis concordiam commendat. 19. Porsenna Tarquinio auxilium offert. 20. Legati incolas pecuniâ tentant (to tempt). 21. Copiæ castra vallo munire incipiunt. 22. Thebani (the Thebans) bellum Persis indicare timent. 23. Praefectus gloriæ cupidus esse desinit. 24. Oppidanî reginam strenue defendere volunt. 25. Marius copias ærumnas perferre assuefacit. 26. Decemviri legatos oppidum intrare prohibent. 27. Mendacia dicere necesse esse nunquam potest. 28. Oppidanis muros diruere expedit.

29. Hispaniæ populi Pœnorum promissa Romanorum amicitiae antepōnunt. 30. Populus flagitii causam avaritiæ tribuit. 31. Praefectus oppidanorum animos falsis victoriarum nuntiis decipit. 32. Agrippa Plebujis discordiæ pericula ostendit. 33. Philippus Pœnorum legatis auxilia promittit. 34. Populi Romani provinciæ apertas praefectorum rapinas perferre nolunt. 35. Socii Romanorum amicitiae commoda sentire incipiunt. 36. Amicorum animos beneficiis tenere (to secure) solēmus. 37. Sociorum controversias dijudicare populo Romano jucundum esse nequit. 38. Praefectum decretum injustum abrogare deest. 39. Discipulis impigris ampla diligentiae præmia percipere (to receive) licet.

LESSON XXI.

THE APPPOSITION.

§ 106. 1. Apposition is the agreement of an ATTRIBUTIVE NOUN, with its governing substantive in CASE, as Dionysius tyrannus, Dionysius the tyrant; G. Dionysii tyranni, of Dionysius the tyrant, &c.

The noun in apposition, which with its governing noun forms an attributive phrase, bears the same relation to the PREDICATIVE noun, as the attributive to the predicative ADJECTIVE.

§ 107. 2. The AGREEMENT of the noun in apposition with its governing substantive is the same as that of the PREDICATIVE noun with its subject. Hence it always agrees in CASE, and when it is a MOVABLE noun, it also agrees in GENDER and NUMBER with its governing substantive, as: Dionysio tyranno, to Dionysius the tyrant; Lucretiam magistram, Lucretia the teacher; Athēnas sapientiæ magistras, Athens, the teacher of wisdom.

Rem. 1. The noun in apposition in English as well as in Latin, generally is found in the same number, as the governing substantive. But if the noun in apposition is an ABSTRACT or COLLECTIVE noun, it may be in the SINGULAR, while the governing substantive is a PLURAL, as: Judæi Dei populus, the Jews, the people of God.

§ 108. 3. Latin nouns in apposition generally are placed after their governing nouns, while in English they often precede, as: Cleopatra regina, queen Cleopatra; Scamander fluvius, the river Scamander.

§ 109. 4. Instead of a simple noun a whole attributive phrase, simple or combined, may be placed in apposition to a governing substantive. In this case the attributive phrase in apposi-tion must be formed separately according to the rules in L. XVIII & XX, and then be placed after the governing substantive, and all those attributes, that are dependent on the latter, as :

Luceria, a small town of Campania, Luceria, exiguum Campaniæ oppidum.

An excellent statue of Polyclētus, the ornament of the Tusculan villa, egregia Polyclēti statua, villæ Tusculanæ ornatum.

Rem. 2. A noun may have more than one apposition. In this case the different appositions follow each other, each with its own attributes, in regular order, as :

The tyrant Periander, a son of Cypselus, Periander tyrannus, Cypseli filius.

Capua, a town of Campania, the nursery of vices, Capua, Campaniæ oppidum, vitiōrum seminarium.

§ 110. 5. If the number or gender of the noun in apposition is different from that of the governing noun, the predicate agrees with the SUBJECT, not with the noun in apposition. But if the governing substantive is the name of a TOWN or CITY, being a plurale tantum, and the noun in apposition is a word, denoting "city, town, village" (as oppidum, vicus, urbs, civitas), the predicate agrees with the noun in apposition, and not with the subject, as :

Cannæ, a small village of Apulia, is distinguished by a victory of the Carthaginians, Cannæ, exiguus Apuliæ vicus, Pœnōrum victoriā præclārus est (not præclāre sunt).

§ 111. 6. Of the different names, by which the same person is designated, the first name grammatically is treated as the governing noun, and the others as APPPOSITIONS to it. They consequently must agree with the first name in CASE, as : Gajus Cornelius Gracchus, Gen. Gaji Cornelii Gracchi, of Gajus Cornelius Gracchus, &c.

Rem. 3. The first names of the Romans consisted of the following few, generally designated in an abbreviated form by the initials :

A. Aulus, C. Gajus (Cajus), Cn. Cnejus, D. Decimus, L. Lucius, M. Marcus, M. Manius, N. Numerius, P. Publius, Q. Quintus, S. Sextus, Sp. Spurius, T. Titus, Ti. Tiberius.

§ 112. 7. Often the Latin language uses the form of an APPPOSITION, where the English language employs the form of an AT-

TRIBUTIVE GENITIVE (by means of the preposition of); and sometimes the reverse is the case. We meet here the following peculiarities :

A. If the names of CITIES, TOWNS, VILLAGES, ISLANDS, PROVINCES and DISTRICTS, are accompanied by their corresponding APPELLATIVE nouns, the English language connects the NAME of the city, town, district, &c., by the preposition of, as "the city of Capua, the district of Liguria." This attributive relation is expressed by an APPPOSITION in Latin, so that the name of the city, district, &c., is made the governing substantive, and the appellative noun is placed in apposition to it. Thus the phrases "the city of Capua, the island of Sicily," must be changed into "Capua, the city; Sicily, the island," as :

The town of Tarentum, Tarentum (rarely Tarenti oppidum); the village of Canne, Canne (rarely Canneum) vicus; the province of Gaul, Gallia provincia With the word regnum, however, attributive genitives are used, and not appositions, as : Cappadociæ regnum et Cyprus insula, the kingdom of Cappadocia and the island of Cyprus (Cic. Fam. 15, 4, 15).

The name of a DISTRICT (ager) is designated by an ADJECTIVE, formed from the name of the people inhabiting it, as : The district of Liguria, ager Liguricus (literally : the Ligurian field); the district of Zurich, ager Tigurinus.

B. The BIRTHPLACE or RESIDENCE of individuals in English generally is expressed by the preposition of with a noun, denoting the PLACE. But in Latin the name of the PLACE is changed into a CIVIC NOUN, which is made an apposition to the name of the person, or into a CIVIC ADJECTIVE, as :

Livy of Patavium, Livius Patavinus, G. Livii Patavini, D. Livio Patavino (literally : Livy the Patavian). Horace of Venusium, Horatius Venusinus (literally : Horace the Venusian).

It appears consequently, that the title of a familiar elementary Latin work, "Viri Romæ," is bad Latin.

C. Names of MONTHS in connection with the appellative noun "month" in English likewise are connected by the preposition of; but in Latin the names of months are ADJECTIVES, as : the month of January, mensis (3d decl.) Januarius (literally : the Januarian month).

D. Names of STARS on the contrary in English take the appellative noun "star" in the form of an APPPOSITION, while in Latin the NAME of the star is made an ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVE, as: "The star Saturn, Saturni stella (literally: the star of Saturn).

E. A word which is quoted as such, with the apposition 'word' (verbum), 'noun' (nomen) etc., is made an ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVE of verbum, nomen etc., as: The word 'fraud,' verbum doli (doli verbum). For the appositions to 'name,' see P. II. p. 82.

EXAMPLE OF ANALYSIS: THEY CROSS THE RHODANUS, A BROAD RIVER OF GAUL.
A. SKELETON. They cross the Rhodanus, Rhodanum transeunt.
B. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES: 1. PHRASE WITH APPPOSITION. The Rhodanus river, Rhodanum fluvium. 2. COMPOUND ATTRIBUTIVE phrase, dependent on the apposition 'fluvium': A broad river of Gaul: latum Gallie fluvium.
C. ARRANGEMENT, by placing the appositional phrase 'latum Gallie fluvium' after the governing noun Rhodanum, in the skeleton: Rhodanum, latum Gallie fluvium, transeunt.

EXERCISES.

I.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES, CONTAINING APPPOSITIONS.

1. By Prisciānus the grammarian (grammaticus). 2. Of the grammarian Prisciānus. 3. To the poet Virgil. 4. O tribune Septimulcūs! 5. To queen Hortensia. 6. Of the teacher Lucretia. 7. By Æmilia the assistant. 8. By the town of Casilinum. 9. To the village of Leuctra. 10. To the town of Segesta. 11. By the river Rhine. 12. By the district of <sup>1</sup>Salernum. 13. The district (obj.) of <sup>2</sup>Brundisium. 14. Ennius of <sup>3</sup>Rudie. 15. Terence (obj.) of Africa. 16. Of <sup>4</sup>D. Junius Brutus. 17. To Q. Mucius Scaevola. 18. By M. Curius Dentātus. 19. L. Sergius Catiline (obj.). 20. By the island of Sardinia. 21. To the star Uranus. 22. To the <sup>5</sup>Sallentinians, a people of Calabria. 23. To Cn. Pompējus Magnus, the renowned adversary of C. Julius. 24. Of Athens, the rival of Sparta. 25. By the triumvir M. Antonius, the rival of Octaviānus. 26. To the Latin poet Virgil of <sup>6</sup>Mantua, the friend of Augustus. 27. The banks of the Ister, a <sup>7</sup>rapid river of Pannonia.

1. Seneca philosophus. 2. Senecæ philosophi. 3. Senecæ philosopho. 4. Senecā philosopho. 5. Victoria (proper name) regina. 6. Victoriæ reginæ. 7. Victoriā reginā. 8. Victoriā regina. 9. Æmilia magistra. 10. Æmiliæ magistræ. 11. Saguntum oppidum. 12. Sagunto oppido. 13. Leuctra vicus. 14. Leuctrōrum vici. 15. Cannis oppido. 16. Capuā oppido. 17. Numidiā provinciā. 18. Rhodo insulæ. 19. Vojos oppidum. 20. Vulturū fluvius. 21. Vulturū fluvio. 22. Lucio Metello Cimbro. 23. Lucii Annæi Senecæ. 24. Agro Patavino. 25.

<sup>1</sup> Salernum forms the adjective Salernitanus, literally, "belonging to Salernum." When we suggest adjectives of this kind in the notes, they always will be designated by "belonging to." <sup>2</sup> Brundisium, belonging to Brundisium. <sup>3</sup> Rudie, belonging to Rudie. <sup>4</sup> Let the beginner always write out the abbreviations of the first names in the translation. <sup>5</sup> Sallentinus, a Sallentinian. <sup>6</sup> Mantuanus, belonging to Mantua. <sup>7</sup> Rapid, tur

Agrum <sup>8</sup>Tarentinum. 26. Roscio <sup>9</sup>Amerino. 27. <sup>10</sup>Volscis, Latii populo. 28. Cantabros, Hispaniæ populum. 29. Terentio Afro. 30. <sup>11</sup>Pila, puerorum delicta. 31. Legatō victoriæ nuntios. 32. Eximiā Mercurii statuā. Antiochā dono. 33. Juba, Mauritanie regulo. 34. <sup>12</sup>Padus, statua. Antiochā dono. 35. Juba, Mauritanie regulo. 36. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 37. Cisalpine fluvius. 38. Agrum <sup>13</sup>Thurinum. 39. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 40. Cisalpine fluvius. 41. Agrum <sup>14</sup>Thurinum. 42. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 43. Cisalpine fluvius. 44. Agrum <sup>15</sup>Thurinum. 45. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 46. Cisalpine fluvius. 47. Agrum <sup>16</sup>Thurinum. 48. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 49. Cisalpine fluvius. 50. Agrum <sup>17</sup>Thurinum. 51. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 52. Cisalpine fluvius. 53. Agrum <sup>18</sup>Thurinum. 54. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 55. Cisalpine fluvius. 56. Agrum <sup>19</sup>Thurinum. 57. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 58. Cisalpine fluvius. 59. Agrum <sup>20</sup>Thurinum. 60. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 61. Cisalpine fluvius. 62. Agrum <sup>21</sup>Thurinum. 63. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 64. Cisalpine fluvius. 65. Agrum <sup>22</sup>Thurinum. 66. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 67. Cisalpine fluvius. 68. Agrum <sup>23</sup>Thurinum. 69. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 70. Cisalpine fluvius. 71. Agrum <sup>24</sup>Thurinum. 72. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 73. Cisalpine fluvius. 74. Agrum <sup>25</sup>Thurinum. 75. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 76. Cisalpine fluvius. 77. Agrum <sup>26</sup>Thurinum. 78. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 79. Cisalpine fluvius. 80. Agrum <sup>27</sup>Thurinum. 81. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 82. Cisalpine fluvius. 83. Agrum <sup>28</sup>Thurinum. 84. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 85. Cisalpine fluvius. 86. Agrum <sup>29</sup>Thurinum. 87. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 88. Cisalpine fluvius. 89. Agrum <sup>30</sup>Thurinum. 90. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 91. Cisalpine fluvius. 92. Agrum <sup>31</sup>Thurinum. 93. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 94. Cisalpine fluvius. 95. Agrum <sup>32</sup>Thurinum. 96. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 97. Cisalpine fluvius. 98. Agrum <sup>33</sup>Thurinum. 99. Agro ma. nus Gallie. 100. Cisalpine fluvius.

B. APPPOSITIONS, COMBINED WITH OBJECTIVE AND PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

1. M. Tullius Ennium poetam. Rudinum, sene laudat. 2. M. Pacuvii Brundusini, Ennii generi, tragediæ deperditæ sunt. 3. Cædipum, Senecæ tragediam, legere præstat. 4. Coriolānus Volscos, antiquum Latii populum, vincit. 5. Corioli, Volscōrum oppidum, præclārum Mercurii templum habet. 6. Cleopātra, Antonii flagitiōrum ministra, populi Romāni decrēta deridet. 7. Duumviri Metrodōram, Aristonici <sup>19</sup>Thebani filiam, <sup>20</sup>veneficii accūsant. 8. <sup>21</sup>Capitolium, deōrum domum, desebāni filiam, <sup>22</sup>veneficii accūsant. 9. Romanōrum copiæ agrum <sup>23</sup>Cumānum transire cupiunt.

1. The Romans pass the Padus, a large river of Cisalpine Gaul. 2. It is allowed to Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, to plunder the temples of the gods. 3. The Cantabrians, a people of Spain, refuse to yield to Drusus, the prefect of the province. 4. The sons of the tyrant Pisistratus torture <sup>24</sup>Leena, the friend of Harmodius. 5. Hortensius, the learned <sup>25</sup>attorney of the accused, omits to <sup>26</sup>explain the cause of the dispute. 6. Thou canst not excuse the crimes of Lucretia, the private assistant of the tyrant. 7. You despise philosophy, the teacher of life. 8. Tullus Hostilius destroys <sup>27</sup>Alba Longa, the rival of Rome. 9. The Romans plunder Syracuse, a colony of Corinth. 10. The town of Epidamnus, a colony of Coreyra, is the cause of the <sup>28</sup>Peloponnesian war. 11. We wish to save the life of the Latin prefect Æbutius. 12. Demetrius, Antigonus' son, kills Alexander, a son of Cassander. 13. They intend to award a <sup>29</sup>prize to a tragedy of the tyrant Dionysius. 14. The boys read the fables of Phædrus, a freedman of Augustus. 15. We intend to <sup>30</sup>practise temperance, the certain adversary of vices. 16. The Carthaginians plunder the district of <sup>31</sup>Putcoli. <sup>32</sup>Cumæ, an ancient town of Campania, is distinguished (proclārus) by the oracle of Sibylla.

2.

1. Syracuse, a colony of Corinth, is friendly to the Romans. 2. Athens is thankful to Demetrius Phalæreus, a scholar of the philosopher Theophrastus. 3. Cleopātra, queen of Egypt, wins the favor of the triumvir.

<sup>8</sup> Tarentum, belonging to Tarentum. <sup>9</sup> Amerinus, belonging to Ameria. <sup>10</sup> Volsci, the Volscians. <sup>11</sup> Pila, a ball. <sup>12</sup> Padus, a river. <sup>13</sup> Thurium, a town in upper Italy, the modern Po. <sup>14</sup> Cisalpinus, Cisalpine, that is, "being this side of the Alps." <sup>15</sup> Thurinus, belonging to Thurium. <sup>16</sup> Neapolitanus, belonging to Neapolis. <sup>17</sup> Thurinus, belonging to Thurium. <sup>18</sup> Thurinus, belonging to Thurium. <sup>19</sup> Thebanus, belonging to Thebes. <sup>20</sup> Veneficium, a poisoning. <sup>21</sup> Capitolium, the Capitol. <sup>22</sup> Cumānus, belonging to Cumæ. <sup>23</sup> Leena, name of an Athenian woman. <sup>24</sup> Attorney, patronus. <sup>25</sup> To explain, expone. <sup>26</sup> Alba Longa, the ancient residence of the kings of Latium. <sup>27</sup> Peloponnesiacus. <sup>28</sup> Prize, præmium. <sup>29</sup> To practise, exercere. <sup>30</sup> Temperantia. <sup>31</sup> Putcolanus, belonging to Putcoli.

4. Lysander takes Athens, the rival of Sparta. 5. Arpinum, a small town of Latium, is the <sup>32</sup>birthplace of C. Marius. 6. <sup>33</sup>Pindar, of Thebes, <sup>34</sup>wins eternal glory. 7. The town of Agrigentum is a colony of the Rhodians. 8. He neglects to acquire <sup>35</sup>wealth, the assistant of fame. 9. The Romans do not wish to lose the island of Sicily. 10. Persens directs the troops to plunder the district of Thebes. 11. The island of Britain is dear to Julius Agricola, the father-in-law of Tacitus.

1. Herodoti <sup>36</sup>Halicarnassēi historiam legimus. 2. Histiaeus <sup>37</sup>Milesius Darium lœdere non vult. 3. Persæ agrum <sup>38</sup>Atticum vastant. 4. <sup>39</sup>Coreyræi Periantri, Corinthi tyranni, filium interficiunt. 5. Minerva, sapientiæ dea, Græcos <sup>40</sup>oleam serere docet. 6. Masinissam, populi Romani socium, defendere volumus. 7. Agrippa tribunus Plebējos Patriciis reconciliare studet. 8. T. Annius P. Clodium, inveteratum M. Tullii inimicum, interficit. 9. Pœni agrum <sup>41</sup>Panormitanum vastare pergunt. 10. <sup>42</sup>Segestani, Siciliæ populus, Romanis magnam frumenti copiam donant.

LESSON XXII.

COORDINATE PHRASES.

§ 113. 1. The coördination of phrases (§ 83) is threefold: either copulative, or disjunctive, or adversative, according to the nature of the CONJUNCTIONS, by which the phrases are connected.

Rem. 1. Conjunctions are words, connecting sentences or phrases with each other.

§ 114. 2. If coördinate phrases have either the same GOVERNING, or the same DEPENDENT word, the common word generally is expressed only once, as:

A. PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

Metellus et Æmilius, triumphant. Metellus and Æmilius triumph (instead of "Metellus triumphs and Æmilius triumphs").

Metellus venit et vincit, Metellus comes and is victorious (instead of "Metellus comes and Metellus is victorious").

Ambulare conducit et juvat, It is serviceable and delightful to walk (instead of "it is serviceable to walk and it is delightful to walk").

to Panormi. <sup>32</sup>Birthplace, origin. <sup>33</sup>Historian. <sup>34</sup>Conquered. <sup>35</sup>Wealth, fortune. <sup>36</sup>Halicarnassens, belonging to Halicarnassus, a city in Caria. <sup>37</sup>Milesian, belonging to Miletus, a city in Asia Minor. <sup>38</sup>Atticus, belonging to Athens. <sup>39</sup>Coreyran, a Coreyran. <sup>40</sup>Olea, an olive-tree. <sup>41</sup>Panormitanus, belonging to Panormus, the modern Palermo. <sup>42</sup>Segestanus, a Segestian, inhabitant of Segesta.

B. OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

Grammaticam et philosophiam discit, He learns grammar and philosophy (instead of "he learns grammar and he learns philosophy").

C. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

Antonii et Cleopatræ vitæ, The lives of Anthony and Cleopatra (instead of "the life of Anthony and the life of Cleopatra").

If subjects, predicates, objects and attributes are thus connected by coördinating conjunctions, having either the same governing, or the same dependent word, they are called coördinate subjects, objects, &c.

I. COPULATIVE COÖRDINATION.

§ 115. 3. In order to form a copulative coördination, the English language employs the conjunction "and," which is rendered by one of the following Latin conjunctions: et, ac, atque and the enclitic que. The first three are placed between the coördinate words, while the conjunction que is affixed to the end of the last. Of these atque cannot be used before a CONSONANT, and ac not before words beginning with a vowel, nor before c and qu, as:

Darius loses life and kingdom, Darius vitam et regnum perdit (or vitam ac regnum perdit, or vitam regnumque perdit, not atque).

He leaves relatives and friends, propinquos et amicos relinquit (or propinquos atque amicos, or propinquos amicosque, not ac).

§ 116. 4. The conjunction et (not atque or ac) often is placed before each of the coördinate words or phrases, answering to the following three English connections: 1. both—and; 2) not only—but also; 3. as well—as; as:

Et Sabinorum et Volsciorum agri, the fields of both the Sabinians and the Volscians (or: the fields not only of the Sabinians, but also of the Volscians, or: the fields as well of the Sabinians, as of the Volscians).

§ 117. 5. If two PREDICATIVE phrases, which have a common PREDICATE, are copulatively connected, the predicate in English always, and in Latin generally is placed in the PLURAL. But if the coördinate subjects are THINGS in the SINGULAR, and express related ideas, which may be considered as one, the Latin predicate stands in the SINGULAR, as:

Æmilius and Metellus die, Æmilius Metellusque obeunt; but:
Study and diligence improve the mind, studium ac diligentia ingenium auget (not augent).

Rem. 2. The common predicate sometimes is placed in the singular, even if the coördinate subjects do not contain related ideas. If the subjects are connected by et—et, the predicate may be placed in the singular or plural, even if the subjects denote PERSONS, unless one of them is in the plural, in which case the predicate always must be in the PLURAL.

Both Africānus and Lælius consent, et Africānus et Lælius consentit (or consentiunt).

Both, threats and anger, terrify, et minæ et ira terrent (not terret).

§ 118. 6. If the common predicate consists of a predicative adjective and the copula, the NUMBER of both, adjective and copula, is determined by the last rule (§117), as:

Hipparchus and Thessalus are cruel, Hipparchus et Thessalus sævi sunt.

Virginia and Lucretia are renowned, Virginia et Lucretia claræ sunt.
War and danger are past, bellum periculumque præteritum est.

But if the subjects are of DIFFERENT GENDERS, both adjective and copula must be in the PLURAL, and the adjective assumes the MASCULINE gender, if the subjects are PERSONS OR BEASTS, and the NEUTER gender, if they are THINGS WITHOUT LIFE, as:

The son and daughter are studious, filius et filia studiōsi sunt.
The he-wolf and she-wolf are tame, lupus et lupa mansuēti sunt.
<sup>1</sup> Oil and labor are lost, oleum et opera perditæ sunt.

Rem. 3. These rules apply also to those predicative adjectives, with which the copula forms an OBJECT-INFINITIVE, as:

Gajus and Sempronius must be ready, Gajus et Sempronius parati esse debent.
Treachery and perjury cease to be disgraceful, perfidia et perjurium ignominiosa esse desinunt.

§ 119. 7. If two ATTRIBUTIVE phrases, which have the same attributive adjective, are copulatively connected, we distinguish the following two cases:

1. If the coördinate governing nouns are of different NUMBERS, the adjective generally is repeated, and placed before each of them, as:

He overcomes the obstacles by great dangers and perseverance, impedita magnis periculis magnaque perseverantiâ superat.

<sup>1</sup> A Latin proverb, meaning, that all efforts are in vain.

2. If the two governing nouns are of different GENDERS, denoting THINGS, the adjective either is placed before the former of the nouns, and agrees with it, or it stands after either of them, agreeing with the one it is connected with, as:

Gajus is distinguished by remarkable talent and scholarship, 1. Gajus miro ingenio ac doctrinâ præstat, or 2. Gajus ingenio miro ac doctrinâ præstat, or 3. Gajus ingenio ac doctrinâ mirâ præstat.

Rem. 4. Even in the second case it is quite usual, to repeat the adjective before each of the governing nouns.

Rem. 5. If two coördinate attributive adjectives are dependent on the same noun, and the noun implies two different things or persons, as distinguished by the two adjectives, the number of the noun is either the PLURAL, as in English, or the SINGULAR, as: The Latin and Greek languages, Lingua (or linguæ) Latīna et Græca.

§ 120. 8. The copulative and adversative conjunctions sometimes are omitted, and the coördination is then called asyndetic (that is "being without conjunction").

Rem. 6. Of more than two coördinate phrases the first two regularly are connected asyndetically, in English as well as in Latin. But in Latin even the third and following phrases generally have no conjunctions, as:

They defend children, property and lives, liberos, fortūnas, vitas defendunt.

I come, see and conquer, Venio, video, vinco.

II. ADVERSATIVE COÖRDINATION.

§ 121. 9. The adversative coördination is a copulative connection of OPPOSITE ideas. The adversative conjunctions are:

1. But, sed, verum, autem, vero, at;
2. Still, yet, tamen, sed tamen.

Sed, verum and at always stand before the first word of the phrase, which they connect, while autem, vero, and generally tamen, are placed after the first, sometimes after the second word of the connected phrase, as:

The Romans fight bravely, but the allies flee, Romāni strenue pugnant, sed (rerum) socii fugiunt, or: socii autem (vero) fugiunt.

They often fight, yet never conquer, Sæpe pugnant, nunquam tamen vincunt.

III. DISJUNCTIVE COÖRDINATION.

§ 122. 10. The disjunctive coördination in English is formed by the conjunction or, which generally is rendered by the Latin conjunction aut. The double connection "either—or" usually is expressed by "aut—aut," as:

We intend to occupy the right or left bank of the river, Dexteram aut sinistram fluvii ripam occupare volumus.

You must adhere either to the Romans or the Carthaginians, aut Romānis, aut Pœnis adherere debētis.

For the use of vel—vel, and sive—sive, see p. 280 foll.

IV. ANALYSIS OF COÖRDINATE PHRASES.

§ 123. 11. Coördinate phrases are analyzed, like COMBINED phrases, by resolving them into their elementary phrases, and translating these singly. They are arranged by expressing the common word once, and joining the coördinate words in such a manner, that they together take the same place either before or after the common word, as each of them had in the single phrases. If phrases have no common word, they are simply placed together, and joined by the required conjunction.

Rem. 7. It generally is best for beginners, in rendering sentences with coördinate phrases, to drop at first one of the coördinate words, and to translate the sentence without it. The coördinate phrases are then separately constituted, and the COÖRDINATE WORDS, contained in them, substituted for the single coördinate word in the sentence, as:

GIVEN SENTENCE: The boys wish to be devoted and thankful to the teacher.

1. Omitting the coördinate adjective "and thankful": Pueri magistris dediti esse cupiunt.

2. COÖRDINATE PHRASES: wish to be devoted, dediti esse cupiunt;
wish to be thankful, grati esse cupiunt.

3. ARRANGEMENT, by substituting the coördinate words dediti and grati for the single coördinate word dediti in the sentence:
Pueri magistris dediti et grati esse cupiunt.

Rem. 8. Coördinate ATTRIBUTIVE phrases having a common attributive adjective, are constituted according to § 119. The skeleton of the sentence having been formed according to § 105, the coördinate attributive phrases are then introduced in the skeleton, in place of the governing noun, as:

GIVEN SENTENCE: Large fields and forests surround the house.

1. SKELETON (dropping one of the coördinate subjects):
Agri domum cingunt.

2. COÖRDINATE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES: Large fields and forests, agri magni ac silvæ; (or magni agri ac silvæ, or agri ac silvæ magnæ, § 119).

3. ARRANGEMENT, by substituting the coördinate phrases for their governing word agri in the skeleton: Agri magni ac silvæ domum cingunt (or magni agri ac &c.).

Rem. 9. If COMPOUND OBJECTIVE phrases are to be joined by coördination, we first, after translating the single phrases, constitute the coördinate compound objects, and substitute these in either of the single phrases, as:

"He appeases Gajus by promises, and Sempronius by money."

1. SINGLE PHRASES:

he appeases Gajus by promises, Gajum promissis placat;
he appeases Sempronius by money, Sempronium pecuniâ placat.

2. COÖRDINATE COMPOUND OBJECTS:

Gajus by promises and Sempronius by money, Gajum promissis et Sempronium pecuniâ.

3. ARRANGEMENT, by substituting the coördinate compound objects for the compound object in either of the two single phrases:

Gajum promissis et Sempronium pecuniâ placat.

EXERCISES.

Analyze the following coördinate phrases:

1. The prefect excels by prudence and wisdom (consilium). 2. The duumvirs are unwilling to offend the Patricians or Plebeians. 3. We neglect to greet and to refresh the troops. 4. The teacher praises the sons of Gajus and Sejus. 5. Gajus buys the house and fields of Sempronius. 6. The great care and zeal of the queen are known (cognitus) to the troops. 7. The queen hurts cladere Gajus by pride, and Sejus by injustice.

COÖRDINATE OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 1. They capture and destroy Numantia. 2. He accuses and condemns Sulpicius. 3. We surround and kill the allies. 4. They yield and conform to the Romans. 5. You are dear and pleasant to the queen. 6. They are adverse and opposed to the war. 7. You labor and learn zealously. 8. He pleads and defends eloquently. 9. They capture or kill the troops. 10. We either admonish or punish the scholars. 11. They save the life, but plunder the property. 12. They fight bravely, but succumb to the enemies. 13. We abandon the town, yet we retain the castle. 14. They often open the mouth, still they never utter a word. 15. We enlarge both the house and garden. 16. They denounce both the man and the crime. 17. We not only censure, but also punish the corruption. 18. We expect either death or victory. 19. They are full both of courage and confidence. 20. They read either Horace or Virgil. 21. We give both lives and property to the country. 22. He promises victory and glory to the troops. 23. He sells the estate to Gajus and Sempronius. 24. He acquires fame and money by diligence. 25. He never loses a battle by imprudence or negligence. 26. They generally displease by ignorance or arrogance. 27. I know how to reconcile friends and relatives. 28. They intend to conquer or to perish. 29. They either are not able or not willing to explain the sentence. 30. He knows how to read, but he does not know how to write. 31. They can lose life, but they never can lose fame. 32. We teach the children to be contented and happy. 33. He directs the duumvirs to arrest and to guard the accused. 34. He compels both Perseus and the Ætolians to require an armistice. 35. He permits Gajus either to remain or to go away. 36. He permits the ambassadors to recite the papers, but refuses to admit Perseus. 37. We wish not only to help, but also to teach the freedmen. 38. Thou accusest Gajus of perjury, and Sejus of treachery. 39. He sends horses to the prefect, and money to the troops. 40. They begin to approach (adire) the walls, and to harass the inhabitants. 41. I intend to bribe the ambassador by money, and the tribune by influence.

<sup>1</sup> Contrarius. <sup>2</sup> Bona, G. bonorum. <sup>3</sup> Emittere.

COORDINATE PREDICATIVE PHRASES. 42. Wars and battles delight the Scythians. 43. Discord and hatred destroy the glory of the country. 44. Phœbus and Minerva grant wisdom to the minds. 45. The pen and the sword are the masters of the earth. 46. Pride and arrogance displease. 47. Avarice and corruption are disgraceful. 48. Lucretia and the queen are free. 49. The queen and the prefect are dear to the inhabitants. 50. Earth and heaven are full of the benefits of God. 51. The house and the garden are valuable. 52. Crassus and the prefect cannot be contented. 53. The queen and Æmilia generally are glad. 54. Daughter and grandfather continue to be thankful to the prefect. 55. Both the troops and the inhabitants desist from being hostile. 56. Sword and lance cease to be dangerous. 57. Patience and courage generally are necessary to troops. 58. The arms and accoutrements are burdensome to the allies. 59. Food and water begin to be rare. 60. The troops are safe and unhurt. 61. The cause is clear and manifest. 62. The allies begin to be hostile and rebellious. 63. The ground is dry, but fertile. 64. The accused appeals, but the queen confirms the sentence. 65. Either folly or treachery is the cause of the crime. 66. Either the prefect or the tribunes must yield. 67. Men are either free or slaves. 68. Negligence or imprudence causes the loss. 69. The queen comes, sees, and conquers.

COORDINATE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES. 70. The ample rewards of genius and wisdom. 71. The poverty and disgrace of the children of Anthony. 72. The mutual grievances of both the Ætolians and Perseus. 73. The evidences of extraordinary judgment and shrewdness. 74. The great damage and losses of the farmer. 75. The town has old walls and gates. 76. Gajus has ingenious male and female scholars. 77. The triumvirs obtain power by great fraud and intrigues. 78. It is not only allowed, but also expedient to the allies and friends of the Roman people, to present mutual disputes and grievances to the people. 79. The ambassadors of either the Ætolians or of Perseus must yield. 80. The daughter and son-in-law of Gajus are unhurt and safe. 81. A quiet conscience is a great relief and consolation.

<sup>4</sup> In coördinations like this, the common words (here can and lose) must not be expressed at the second place. <sup>5</sup> Comprehendere. <sup>6</sup> Petere. <sup>7</sup> Recitare. <sup>8</sup> Admittere. <sup>9</sup> Sarcinæ. <sup>10</sup> Molestus. <sup>11</sup> Appellare. <sup>12</sup> Afferre. <sup>13</sup> Ingenium. <sup>14</sup> Querela. <sup>15</sup> Egre-gius. <sup>16</sup> Sollertia. <sup>17</sup> Proferre.

Translate into English:

COORDINATE SUBJECTS. 1. Minucius et Trebonius quæsturam male gerunt. 2. Ingenium et sapientia invidiam superat. 3. Avaritia et perfidia flagitia parit. 4. Et Brutus et Cassius patriam amicitiae præfert. 5. Aut Posidonius aut Seneca errat. 6. Gaji filius et filia ægri esse solent. 7. Lucretia atque Æmilia reginæ filiarum invidiæ sunt. 8. Discordiæ causa atque initium sæpe exigua sunt. 9. Invidia mutua atque odium exitiosa esse solent. 10. Belgarum industria ac mercatura egregiæ sunt. 11. Pompæjus, Lentulus, Africænus fœde pereunt. 12. Invidia, odium, inimicitiae finitima* sunt, sed tamen differunt. 13. Peregrinum auxilium ac peregrina pecunia populis liberis sæpe exitiosa sunt. 14. Populi Romani et justitia et clementia sociorum animos conciliat. 15. Libertos et adjuvare et docere necesse est. 16. Præfecto captivos aut interficere aut liberare licet.

COORDINATE PREDICATES. 17. Libros et legimus et scribimus. 18. Liberos educare et possumus et debemus. 19. Bellum finire aut nescit aut non vult. 20. Debellare volunt, sed nequeunt. 21. Reginæ incolarum animos conciliare et expedit et necesse est. 22. Servos liberare aut periculosum aut irritum est. 23. Belgæ populis finitimis infesti exitiosique sunt. 24. Sociis auxilium aut mittit aut promittit. 25. Sicilia Romanorum cella et horreum est.

COORDINATE OBJECTS. 26. Pompæjus Armenios et Judæos vincit. 27. Magister discipulorum et ingenium et diligentiam laudat. 28. Philippus Pœnos et copias et pecuniâ adjuvare promittit. 29. Adversariorum copiae et numero et disciplinâ præstant. 30. Alexandrum sævitiae, injustitiae, superbiae accusare solemus. 31. Philippi legati tribunos pecuniâ ac promissis corrumpere student. 32. Adversariorum argumenta aut refellere aut concedere debemus. 33. Persæ Lysandri avaritiam ac nequitiam abhorrent. 34. Africænus Africam atque Hispaniam imperio Romano addit. 35. Persei legati Ætolos magnâ munificentia magnisque promissis corrumpunt. 36. Copiae castra diripere ac prædam colligere incipiunt.

COORDINATE ATTRIBUTES. 37. Discipuli Plauti Terentique comœdias legere malunt. 38. Gajo philosophiæ aut eloquentiæ studium commendamus. 39. Gaji liber egregii ingenii ac doctrinæ documenta continet. 40. Et amicorum et inimicorum consilia prodesse possunt. 41. Linguam Germanam atque Anglicam linguæ Franco-Gallicæ anteponi-mus. 42. Fabius diligentia mirâ et cautâ Pœnorum consilia eludere scit. 43. Vitam miseram sed justam vitæ jucundæ sed injustæ antepo-nere debemus.

<sup>18</sup> Solatium. <sup>19</sup> Quæstorship. <sup>20</sup> To administer. <sup>21</sup> To be distinguished from each other. <sup>22</sup> Horreum, barn. <sup>23</sup> Armenius, an Armenian. <sup>24</sup> Wickedness. <sup>25</sup> Liberality. <sup>26</sup> To collect. <sup>27</sup> Talent. <sup>28</sup> Anglicus, English. <sup>29</sup> Franco-Gallicus, French. <sup>30</sup> To baffle. * Related.

BOOK SECOND.

PASSIVE VOICE.—THE INFLECTION OF NOUNS AND ADJECTIVES CONCLUDED.—PRONOUNS.
COMPARISON.

LESSON XXIII.

THE PASSIVE VOICE.

§ 124. 1. The ENGLISH passive voice consists of COMPOUND tenses only, formed by the participle and the auxiliary to be. But in LATIN the passive voice in the present and in those forms of the verb, which are derived from it, consists of SIMPLE tenses, formed by attaching the PASSIVE endings to the stems of the verbs.

§ 125. 2. The passive endings of the Latin verb are the same in the 1st, 2d, and 4th conjugations, those of the third being mostly modified by CONNECTING VOWELS. They are the following :

| I. II. & IV. CONJUGATIONS. |             | III. CONJUGATION.      |             |
|----------------------------|-------------|------------------------|-------------|
| INFINITIVE: ri .    |             | INFINITIVE: i . |             |
| PRESENT INDICATIVE:        |             | PRESENT INDICATIVE:    |             |
| SINGULAR.                  | PLURAL.     | SINGULAR.              | PLURAL.     |
| 1. or               | mur  | 1. or           | mur  |
| 2. ris              | mini | 2. ris          | mini |
| 3. tur              | ntur | 3. tur          | ntur |

§ 126. 3. By attaching these endings to the STEM of the verb (as shown in L. I. II. VII. XII.), we form the following

PARADIGMS :

I. FIRST CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Amāri, to be loved (STEM amā, CHAR. ā, ENDING ri).

| PRESENT INDICATIVE.                            |   |
|--|---|
| SINGULAR.                                      | PLURAL.                                   |
| 1. Amor , I am loved             | 1. amāmur , we are loved    |
| 2. amāris , thou art loved       | 2. amamini , you are loved  |
| 3. amātur , he, she, it is loved | 3. amantur , they are loved |

II. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Monēri, to be admonished (STEM monē, CHAR. ē, ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.  | PLURAL.   |
|--|---|
| 1. Moncor , I am admonished            | 1. monēmur , we are admonished    |
| 2. monēris , thou art admonished       | 2. monemini , you are admonished  |
| 3. monētur , he, she, it is admonished | 3. monentur , they are admonished |

III. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Legi, to be read (STEM leg, CHAR. g, ENDING i).

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.                                      | PLURAL.                                   |
|--|---|
| 1. Legor , I am read             | 1. legimur , we are read    |
| 2. legeris , thou art read       | 2. legimini , you are read  |
| 3. legitur , he, she, it is read | 3. leguntur , they are read |

IV. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Audiri, to be heard (STEM audī, CHAR. ī, ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.                                       | PLURAL.                                     |
|---|---|
| 1. Audior , I am heard            | 1. audīmur , we are heard     |
| 2. audiris , thou art heard       | 2. audimini , you are heard   |
| 3. audītur , he, she, it is heard | 3. audiuntur , they are heard |

Rem. 1. In the 1. sing. of the 1st conjugation the characteristic a is dropped, and in the 3. plur. of the 3d conjugation the vowel u is inserted between stem and ending, as in the corresponding persons of the active voice.

Rem. 2. The characteristic of dare and its compounds is short, as in the active voice. Pronounce therefore circum'daris, circum'datur.

Rem. 3. The I-verbs of the 3d conjugation (§ 58) insert the letter ī between stem and ending in the same persons, as in the active voice, as:

INFINITIVE: Capi, to be taken (STEMS cap and capī, CHARACT. p, ENDING i).

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.   | PLURAL.                                     |
|---|---|
| 1. Capior , I am taken              | 1. capimur , we are taken     |
| 2. caperis , thou art taken         | 2. capimini , you are taken   |
| 3. capiuntur , he, she, it is taken | 3. capiuntur , they are taken |

§ 127. 4. Of the IRREGULAR verbs of the 3d conjugation esse, posse, velle, nolle, malle form no passive voice. Ferre forms the following, partly irregular, passive INFINITIVE: Ferri, to be carried (STEM fer, CHAR. r, IRREGULAR ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.                                       | PLURAL.                                |
|---|--|
| 1. Feror, I am carried                   | 1. ferimur, we are carried      |
| 2. ferris (irr.), thou art carried       | 2. ferimini, you are carried    |
| 3. fertur (irr.), he, she, it is carried | 3. feruntur, they are carried . |

§ 128. 5. The verb facere and those of its compounds, that retain the vowel a of the stem (see Rem. 4), form the irregular passive infinitive feri, and in the present tense assume ACTIVE endings, formed from the stem fi. The passive feri, which has both the passive signification to be done, to be made, and the ACTIVE meaning to become, is thus conjugated:

INFINITIVE: Fieri, to be made, to become.

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.                                   | PLURAL.                                       |
|---|---|
| 1. Fio, I am made, I become          | 1. fīmus, we are made, we become       |
| 2. fis, thou art made, thou becomest | 2. fītis, you are made, you become     |
| 3. fit, he is made, he becomes       | 3. fīunt, they are made, they become . |

Rem. 4. The compounds of facere, which do not change the vowel a of their stems into i (§ 58, R. 4), form their passives according to the paradigm of feri, as: cali facere—cali fieri, cali fio, cali fit, cali fiunt. But those compounds, which are composed with prepositions (see § 58, Rem. 3), form a regular passive, like the other 1-verbs of the 3d conjugation, as: interficere—interfici, interficior, interficieris &c.

§ 129. 6. Ire, as a simple verb, forms only an impersonal passive (see Book III.). But the transitive compounds of ire, as transire, praeterire, inire, form a complete passive voice according to the following paradigm:

INFINITIVE: Transiri, to be crossed.

PRESENT INDICATIVE:

| SINGULAR.                                   | PLURAL.                                   |
|---|---|
| 1. Transeor, I am crossed            | 1. transimur, we are crossed       |
| 2. transiris, thou art crossed       | 2. transimini, you are crossed     |
| 3. transitur, he, she, it is crossed | 3. transeuntur, they are crossed . |

SYNTACTICAL RULES ON THE USE OF THE PASSIVE VOICE.

§ 130. 7. Predicative and objective phrases are formed from verbs in the PASSIVE voice according to the rules in the preceding lessons, as:

A. PREDICATIVE PHRASES.

1. PASSIVE PREDICATES.

Puer amātur, the boy is loved.
Copiae vincuntur, the troops are defeated.

2. PASSIVE SUBJECT-INFINITIVES:

Laudāri jucundum est, it is pleasant to be praised.
Vinci displicet, it displeases to be defeated.

B. OBJECTIVE PHRASES.

1. OBJECTS, DEPENDENT ON PASSIVE PREDICATES.

Perfidiae accusātur, he is accused of treachery.
Hastis interficiuntur, they are killed by lances.

2. PASSIVE OBJECT-INFINITIVES.

Relinqui incipit, he begins to be abandoned.
Vituperāri solent, they usually are censured.
Vinci possunt, they can be defeated.

§ 131. 8. The formation of the OBJECTIVE phrase from verbs in the PASSIVE voice is in two points distinguished from that of the active objective phrase:

1. PASSIVES generally cannot govern objects in the ACCUSATIVE case.

2. The SUBJECT of the ACTIVE voice assumes in the PASSIVE the form of an OBJECT in the ABLATIVE, which is called the passive agent.

When the passive agent denotes a PERSON, the ablative must be preceded by the preposition a, which before words beginning with a vowel or h, assumes the form ab:

Puer a magistro laudātur, the boy is praised by the teacher.
Curatius ab Horatio interficitur, Curatius is killed by Horatius.
Gajus ab amicis adjuvātur, Gajus is assisted by friends.

But:

Ager equis (not ab equis) arātur, the field is ploughed by horses.
Oppidum dolo (not a dolo) expugnātur, the town is taken by stratagem.

Rem. 5. If the passive agent has ATTRIBUTES dependent on it, the preposition a (or ab) stands before the whole phrase, as: Tullius ab Antonii amicis expellitur, Tullius is banished by the friends of Anthony.

§ 132. 9. The passives fieri and vidēri may, like the copula, be connected with PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVES and NOUNS. Fieri has then the active signification "to become," and vidēri the active signification "to seem," the rules for the grammatical form of the predicative adjectives and nouns, which are connected with these passives, being in every instance the same as those given for their connection with the COPULA. See L. XIII. XIV. XV.

Viae asperae fiunt, the roads become rough.

Copiae dejectae videntur, the troops seem dispirited.

Superbum fieri stultum videtur, to become proud seems foolish.

Graeci liberi fieri cupiunt, the Greeks wish to become free.

§ 133. 10. The verb vidēri also governs an OBJECT-INFINITIVE, like the verbs, mentioned § 79, as :

Gajus dormire videtur, Gajus seems to sleep.

Copiae paratae esse videntur, the troops seem to be ready.

Musti esse videmini, you seem to be sad.

Mercatura fructuosa fieri videtur, the commerce seems to become profitable.

EXERCISES.

Write the following paradigms of the passive voice with the English significations :

Parāre, to prepare ; augēre, to increase ; regere, to govern ; perficere, to absolve ; patefacere, to open ; afferre, to bring ; sepelire, to bury ; praeterire, to pass by.

VERBAL FORMS OF THE PASSIVE. 1. Delectamini. 2. Superāmur. 3. Expectantur. 4. Expugnātur. 5. Mutāris. 6. Circundor. 7. Circundamur. 8. Relegāri. 9. Educāris. 10. Necantur. 11. Liberamini. 12. Conciliāri. 13. Delēri. 14. Docentur. 15. Adhibēris. 16. Tene-mini. 17. Vidēris. 18. Jubeor. 19. Exercemini. 20. Moveor. 21. Perterrentur. 22. Possidētur. 23. Coercemini. 24. Timēmur. 25. Torquēris. 26. Duceris. 27. Falli. 28. Frangitur. 29. Vincimini. 30. Decipiuntur. 31. Diripimur. 32. Relinqui. 33. Coquantur. 34. Vehimur. 35. Redūci. 36. Diminuuntur. 37. Distingueris. 38. Dirigi. 39. Afficimini. 40. Punimini. 41. Inveniuntur. 42. Aperitur. 43. Erudiri. 44. Impedior. 45. Stabilimur. 46. Custodiris. 47. Vincimur. 48. Vincimur. 49. Praetereuntur. 50. Praeferris. 51. Referimini. 52. Affertur. 53. Assuefiunt. 54. Patefiunt. 55. Liquefieri. 56. Temerarii fiunt. 57. Studiōsa fit. 58. Infestus fio. 59. Sobrium fieri. 60. Injustus videor. 61. Læta vidēris. 62. Equum videtur. 63. Imbecilli videmur. 64. Iratæ videmini. 65. Contentum vidēri.

1. You are celebrated. 2. We are preserved. 3. He is surrounded. 4. Thou art asked. 5. He is praised. 6. It is mentioned. 7. I am burned. 8. Thou art banished. 9. You are healed. 10. They are wounded. 11. He is avoided. 12. To be called. 13. Thou art surpassed. 14. I am delighted. 15. You are adorned. 16. It is completed. 17. They are increased. 18. Thou art taught. 19. He is directed. 20. It is mixed. 21. You are frightened. 22. We are held. 23. They are employed. 24. She is moved. 25. It is granted. 26. I am feared. 27. To be seen. 28. To be tortured. 29. You are restrained. 30. We seem. 31. He seems. 32. You are led. 33. I am broken. 34. Thou art defeated. 35. They are killed (interficere). 36. We are left. 37. It is cooked. 38. Thou art drawn. 39. He is acknowledged. 40. She is diminished. 41.

They are distinguished (distinguere). 42. I am perceived. 43. They are beheld. 44. I am sent. 45. They are commenced. 46. To be offered. 47. It is endured. 48. To be left. 49. They are dug. 50. They are begotten. 51. Thou art brought back. 52. They are thrown away. 53. I am allured. 54. To be corrected. 55. To be defeated. 56. To be bound. 57. You are defeated. 58. You are bound. 59. We are punished. 60. It is fortified. 61. It is invented. 62. To be educated (erudire). 63. Thou art found. 64. It is finished. 65. To be finished. 66. You are appeased. 67. We are hindered. 68. It is imparted. 69. They are entered. 70. You are softened. 71. It is exhausted. 72. They are approached (adire). 73. We are struck. 74. We are carried. 75. It is opened (aperire). 76. They are opened (patefacere). 77. To be brought. 78. They are melted. 79. To be tamed. 80. It is learned. 81. They are learned by heart. 82. To become cautious. 83. I become attentive. 84. Thou becomest unjust, O queen! 85. She becomes weak. 86. They become eloquent. 87. They (the women) become friends. 88. To seem zealous. 89. Thou seemest happy, O daughter! 90. We seem tired. 91. It seems absurd. 92. They seem envious.

PREDICATIVE PHRASES (WITHOUT AND WITH THE PASSIVE AGENT). 1. Ager aratur. 2. Consilium mutatur. 3. Via monstratur. 4. Fabula narratur. 5. Triumviri relegantur. 6. Pugna renovatur. 7. Nuptiae celebrantur. 8. Pericula superantur. 9. Tempa spoliuntur. 10. Oppidum circumdatur. 11. Numerus augetur. 12. Puer docetur. 13. Aqua miscetur. 14. Dona praebentur. 15. Imperia delentur. 16. Operae adhibentur. 17. Castra moventur. 18. Copiae ducuntur. 19. Consilia perficiuntur. 20. Regina vehitur. 21. Adversarius vincitur. 22. Captivus vincitur. 23. Pirata punitur. 24. Negotium finitur. 25. Discipuli audiuntur. 26. Triumphus impediuntur. 27. Pericula subeuntur. 28. Fluvii transeuntur. 29. Auxilium affertur. 30. Incommoda perferuntur. 31. Tribunorum consilia confirmantur. 32. Praefecti jussa laudantur. 33. Sociorum stipendia augentur. 34. Adversariorum insidiae timentur. 35. Romanorum castra inspicuntur. 36. Gaji nuptiae differuntur. 37. Piratarum numerus diminuitur. 38. Fluviorum vada transeuntur. 39. Aerarium bellis exhauritur. 40. Copiae disciplinam continentur. 41. Ingenium philosophiae exercetur. 42. Flammæ ab oppidanis extinguuntur. 43. Fluvii a sociis transeuntur. 44. Muri a Romanorum copiis adeuntur. 45. Agri a triumviris dividuntur. 46. Dona a Graecis afferuntur. 47. Legati donis corrumpuntur. 48. Tempa statuis exornantur. 49. Pecunia ab amicis donatur. 50. Discipuli attentii fiunt. 51. Pugna exitiosa fit. 52. Sententia aequa videtur. 53. Copiae fessae videntur. 54. Periculum securum videtur. 55. Praeterea injustum videtur. 56. Doctum fieri arduum est. 57. Tribunum fieri licet. 58. Sobrium fieri praestat. 59. Egenum fieri molestum videtur. 60. Decipi acerbum est. 61. Opprimi displicet. 62. Piratam fieri ignominiosum est.

1. An ambushade is prepared. 2. The temples are dedicated. 3. The town is embellished. 4. The enemies are overcome. 5. Poverty is increased. 6. Syracuse is destroyed. 7. The camp is besieged. 8. Patience is exercised. 9. Philosophy is taught. 10. A school is established (instituere). 11. The captives are thrown down. 12. The enemies are perceived. 13. Sempronius and Livy are removed. 14. Friendship and harmony are restored. 15. Deserters are punished and despised. 16. The wedding of Anthony is prevented. 17. The adversary's arguments are passed over. 18. The business is finished. 19. Envy and hatred are buried. 20. The metals are melted. 21. Rewards are conferred. 22. Arguments are alleged. 23. The letter is brought. 24. The affairs are investigated by the committee of two. 25. The camp is captured by the Carthaginians. 26. Money is accepted by the umpire. 27. The comedies of Plautus and Terence are explained. 28. Perseverance is assisted (adjuvare) by fortune. 29. The camp is captured by fraud. 30. The controversy is decided by favor. 31. The controversy is settled (see page 87) by the sword. 32. Jerusalem (Hierosolyma, G. ōrum) is destroyed by Titus. 33. Memory is strengthened (firmare) by the pen. 34. The tribunes are bribed by the ambassadors of Jugurtha. 35. The ambassadors are bribed by influence and money. 36. The prisoner is saved by the daughter of the prefect. 37. Literature (litterae) is neglected by the Spartans. 38. Roscius of Ameria is defended by M. Tullius. 39. The town of Luceria is besieged by the Carthaginians. 40. The prefect is prevented by a disease of the eyes. 41. The district of Veji (Vejentanus) is devastated by the Romans. 42. Sempronius is saved by the timely help of friends. 43. The troops become rebellious. 44. The roads become rough and swampy (paludisus). 45. The province becomes quiet and tranquil. 46. The boldness of Catiline becomes unbridled (effrenatus). 47. The water of the river Volturnus becomes putrid (putidus). 48. The opinion of Gaius seems erroneous. 49. The oracle of Pythia seems ambiguous. 50. The principles of grammar seem difficult. 51. The victuals of the troops seem wretched. 52. To be courted is pleasant. 53. It pleases to be defended by friends. 54. It is unpleasant to be neglected. 55. It displeases to be rejected. 56. It is better to be exalted. 57. To be loved by the people is beautiful and honorable. 58. To be betrayed by friends is bitter. 59. To be banished seems hard. 60. To be fettered seems disgraceful. 61. It is a crime to become an enemy of the country. 62. To become eloquent is difficult. 63. It is better to become calm. 64. It seems mean to become an assistant of tyrants.

SIMPLE AND COMBINED OBJECTIVE PHRASES. 1. Imprudentiae accūsor. 2. Triumviro commendāris. 3. Dis conciliāmur. 4. Corruptelae condemnāmini. 5. Praefecto denuntiamini. 6. Impensarum admoneor. 7. Incepti periculo deterrēris. 8. A pirātis ignominiose obsidēmur. 9. Antonii filiis injuste antepōnimini. 10. Plebejorum candidato praeforor. 11. A M. Tullio apte refelleris. 12. Sulpicii auxilio secreto expeditur. 13. A triumviris juste punimini. 14. Decipi raro possum. 15. Severe puniri debes. 16. Ab adversariis accusari solēmus. 17. A praefecto revocari volumus. 18. Injuste accusari non vultis. 19. A Gajo adjuvāri studes. 20. A pirātis diripi timēmus. 21. A magistro negligi videmini. 22. Injuste opprimi vidēris. 23. Ab inimicis damnari iniquum est. 24. Manere cogor. 25. Pecuniam restituere cogeris. 26. Patriam defendere docēmur. 27. Abire impedimini. 28. Captivos custodire jubeor. 29. A vigiliis oppidum intrare prohibēmur.

1. I am recommended to the queen. 2. Thou art accused of treachery.

<sup>1</sup> To fetter, vincire. <sup>2</sup> Calm, quies. <sup>3</sup> Why stands the adverb in phrase 14 after, and in phrase 15 before the object-infinitive?

3. We are reminded of the danger. 4. You are betrayed to the enemies. 5. I am ruthlessly tortured. 6. Thou art well taught. 7. We are publicly acquitted of the crime. 8. You are splendidly clothed by the queen. 9. I am eloquently defended by Tullius. 10. Thou always art preferred to William. 11. We are kindly greeted by the sons of the queen. 12. You are badly treated by the tyrant. 13. Thou art immoderately affected by the tears of the (female) prisoners. 14. We cease to be preferred by the teacher. 15. You begin to be ruled by decemvirs. 16. You continue to be hindered by the want of provisions. 17. We never can be allured by rewards or promises. 18. I seem to be deterred by the difficult beginning of the undertaking. 19. Thou art afraid of being taken by the pirates. 20. We will not be derided and despised by the enemies. 21. You generally are corrected by the teacher. 22. Thou seemest to be splendidly received by the inhabitants. 23. I am forbidden to proceed. 24. You are prohibited from speaking publicly. 25. We are hindered by disease from writing the letter. 26. I am compelled by the prefect to return directly. 27. Thou art directed by the queen to inspect daily the books of Sempronius.

COMBINATION OF PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES, WITH OR WITHOUT ATTRIBUTES.

1. A triumph is decreed to Africanus. 2. The town and the garrison are betrayed to the enemies by the duumvirs. 3. The message of an unfortunate battle is delivered to the prefect. 4. The arms and baggage of the troops are surrendered to the Carthaginians. 5. M. Tullius is acquitted by the opinion of the whole people. 6. War is announced to Jugurtha, but badly conducted by Calpurnius Bestia. 7. Sempronius, the candidate of the Patricians, is convicted of corruption by the board of a hundred. 8. The inhabitants are abominably plundered by L. Antonius, the assistant of the prefect. 9. A temple is consecrated to Fortuna by the sons of Fabius. 10. A new house is built by the sons and daughters of Galba. 11. The camp of the Romans is surrounded by a ditch and a rampart. 12. Metals are melted by the flames, and pearls by acid. 13. Crimes are punished by the people, and vices by God. 14. The Germans cannot be subjected by the Romans. 15. The war may be unfortunately conducted either by the envy of fortune, or by the ignorance of the prefect. 16. Bad men usually are tortured by the torments of conscience. 17. Indolent scholars must frequently be admonished and punished. 18. Industrious and zealous scholars do not wish to be surpassed by fellow-scholars. 19. The slaves are afraid of being surrendered to the masters. 20. Decemvirs cease to be elected by the people. 21. The sailors of Antiochus seem to become pirates. 22. The Roman women seem to be prodigal and devoted to luxury. 23. Honorable men cannot suddenly become vain and boastful. 24. Sempronius is hindered by the commands of the prefect to occupy the right bank of the river. 25. The ambassadors are directed by Perseus to delay the business by disputes and quarrels.

<sup>4</sup> Ruthless, fedus. <sup>5</sup> To treat, habere. <sup>6</sup> Excipere. <sup>7</sup> Praesidium. <sup>8</sup> Adversus. <sup>9</sup> Afferre. <sup>10</sup> Tradere. <sup>11</sup> To conduct a war, bellum gerere. <sup>12</sup> Novus. <sup>13</sup> A pearl, margarita. <sup>14</sup> Acidum. <sup>15</sup> Posse. <sup>16</sup> Male. <sup>17</sup> To torture, angere. <sup>18</sup> Tormentum. <sup>19</sup> Condiscipulus. <sup>20</sup> To elect, eligere. <sup>21</sup> Querela.

1. Perfugæ Romānis a Pœnis redduntur. 2. Gloria et victoria copiis a præfecto promittitur. 3. Castra et præda immensa Alexandro a Persis relinquuntur. 4. Fabricii copiae Pyrrhi elephantis perterrentur. 5. Bellum Perseo a Romanorum legatis indicitur. 6. Pœni a Romānis perfidiæ mendacique accusantur. 7. Præfectus a populo corruptelæ aperte accusatur. 8. Roma a Romulo et Remo, Rheæ Sylviae filiis conditur. 9. Fama divitiæque a philosophis sæpe contemnuntur. 10. Furta aut secrēto aut manifesto perpetrari possunt. 11. Incolæ Romanorum imperio adjici cupiunt. 12. Inimicis tradi injustum est. 13. Ab adversariis laudari gloria magna est. 14. Injuste accusari aut falso condemnari acerbum est. 15. Pœni et Fabii prudentiā et Africani ingenio (genius) vincuntur. 16. Epicuri fallaciæ a M. Tullio refelli solent. 17. C. Marius Patriciorum candidato a populo præfertur. 18. Ab adversariis derideri molestum videtur. 19. Creta insula a piratis relinqui videtur. 20. Gaji discipuli eloquentiæ dediti esse videntur. 21. Gajus a præfecto pecuniam, Siculis debitam (due), restituere cogitur. 22. Socii a præfecto castra munire docentur. 23. Oppidani a Sempronio muros statim diruere jubentur. 24. Sempronius oculorum morbo ludos spectare (to witness) impeditur.

LESSON XXIV.

DEPONENT VERBS.

§ 131. 1. DEPONENT verbs are PASSIVES, which lack the active voice, and mostly have an ACTIVE SIGNIFICATION, as hortari, to exhort; loqui, to speak. Their conjugation is that of the PASSIVE, but their construction that of the ACTIVE, and they may therefore have objects in the ACCUSATIVE (see § 131).

Rem. 1. Each of the four conjugations has deponent verbs, but the great majority of the deponents belong to the first conjugation.

§ 135. 2. PARADIGMS.

I. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Hortari, to exhort (STEM hortā, CHAR. ā, ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

| SINGULAR.                          | PLURAL.                           |
|------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| 1. Hortor, I exhort         | 1. hortāmur, we exhort     |
| 2. hortāris, thou exhortest | 2. hortamini, you exhort   |
| 3. hortātur, he exhorts     | 3. hortantur, they exhort. |

II. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Vereri, to fear (STEM verē, CHAR. ē, ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

| SINGULAR.                       | PLURAL.                        |
|---------------------------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. Vereor, I fear        | 1. verēmur, we fear     |
| 2. verēris, thou fearest | 2. veremini, you fear   |
| 3. verētur, he fears     | 3. verentur, they fear. |

III. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Loqui, to speak (STEM loqu, CHAR. ū, ENDING i).

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

| SINGULAR.                         | PLURAL.                          |
|-----------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| 1. Loquor, I speak         | 1. loquimur, we speak     |
| 2. loqueris, thou speakest | 2. loquimini, you speak   |
| 3. loquitur, he speaks     | 3. loquantur, they speak. |

IV. CONJUGATION.

INFINITIVE: Potiri, to seize (STEM poti, CHAR. i, ENDING ri).

PRESENT INDICATIVE.

| SINGULAR.                       | PLURAL.                          |
|---------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| 1. Potior, I seize       | 1. potimur, we seize      |
| 2. potiris, thou seizest | 2. potimini, you seize    |
| 3. potitur, he seizes    | 3. potiuntur, they seize. |

§ 136. 3. The following deponents of the third conjugation: gradi, to proceed; mori, to die; pati, to suffer, with their compounds, belong to the I-verbs, inserting the letter i between stem and ending in the 1st sing. and 3d plur. (mori—moriuntur, patior—patiuntur, &c.) The compounds of pati and gradi change the vowel a of their stems into ē, as digredi, to go away; ingredi, to enter; aggredi, to attack; progredi, to advance; congregdi, to meet; perpeti, to suffer.

§ 137. 4. The verb oriri, to rise, forms the present indicative like an I-verb of the third conjugation, as if it formed an infinitive ori. But the other forms of this verb (see B. III.) belong to the fourth conjugation. (Pres. indicat.: orior, oreris, oritur, &c.) In the same way the compounds of oriri are conjugated (exorior, exoreris, exoritur &c.), except adoriri, to attack, which is conjugated like a regular deponent verb of the 4th conjugation.

§ 138. 5. The following deponent verbs govern an object-infinitive, like the active verbs, mentioned § 80: Conāri, to undertake, to endeavor; meditāri, to contemplate, meditate, design; cunctāri, to hesitate; exordīri, to begin; oblivisci, to forget, as:

He endeavors to capture the town, oppidum expugnāre conātur.

We contemplate to return, redire meditāmur.

You design to expel the garrison, praesidium expellere meditamini.

They hesitate to advance, progredi cunctantur.

He begins to speak, loqui exorditur.

They forget to send the money, pecuniam mittere obliviscuntur.

EXERCISES.

Commit the lists of deponent verbs § XI. 2, XII. 2, XIII. 2, XIV. 2 of the Vocabularies, and write the following paradigms together with the English significations: Mirāri, to wonder; tuēri, to protect; mori, to die; proficisci, to depart; assentiri, to assent; exoriri, to arise.

SIMPLE PHRASES. 1. Philippum admiror. 2. Philosophiam aspernāris. 3. Gajus concionātur. 4. Virgilium interpretāmur. 5. Fugam meditamini. 6. Copiae pabulantur. 7. Culpam confiteor. 8. Castra intuēris. 9. Regina tuetur. 10. Bellum veremur. 11. Auxilium pollicemini. 12. Medici medentur. 13. Populum alloquor. 14. Adversarios aggredieris. 15. Poena sequitur. 16. Portam ingredimur. 17. Veniam assequimini. 18. Captivi moriuntur. 19. Locum nanciscor. 20. Injuriam ulcisceris. 21. Poeta expergiscitur. 22. Adversarii irascuntur. 23. Gajo assentior. 24. Dona largiris. 25. Poenus mentitur. 26. Praedam partimur. 27. Triumviri sortiuntur.

1. I imitate the teacher. 2. Thou borrowest money. 3. The prefect jests. 4. We lay the fields waste. 5. You reward treachery. 6. Gajus and Sempronius live in the country. 7. It is allowed to rejoice. 8. It delights to roam. 9. We endeavor to be present. 10. You hesitate to attack. 11. Thou designest to rebel. 12. I protect (tuēri) the commerce. 13. Thou confessest ignorance. 14. Water heals. 15. We promise provisions. 16. You fear the gods. 17. They address the queen. 18. I embrace the son. 19. We follow the prefect. 20. They attack the Carthaginians. 21. Thou pursuest the Germans. 22. The triumvirs die. 23. It is sad to fall. 24. The ambassadors are angry. 25. Thou forgettest to dine. 26. The troops march. 27. We obtain power. 28. The moon rises. 29. The girls flatter. 30. We attack (adoriri) the camp.

COMBINED PHRASES. 1. Praefectus oppidanorum controversias aspernātur. 2. Copiae reginae domum tuentur. 3. Incolae miram praefecti clementiam admirantur. 4. Regna opulenta discordia dilabuntur. 5. Copiae molestias (privations) ærumnasque perpetiuntur. 6. Belli fortunam experiri nolumus. 7. Adversariorum vestigia sequi conāris. 8. Gaji negotium exsequi cunctāmur. 9. Numidarum copiae latrocinantur sociorumque agros populantur. 10. Legatorum superbiam atque arrogantiam recordamini. 11. Praestantiam ignavia assequi nunquam potes. 12. Cassandra, Priami filia, Trojae excidium vaticinatur. 13. Tribuni immodice vociferantur, praefectumque minis deterrere conantur. 14. Praefectus sociis Latinis novas victorias novamque praedam pollicetur.

<sup>1</sup> Vestigium, trace, track. <sup>2</sup> Exsequi, to carry out.

1. You frustrate the plans of the triumvir by the testimony of Sulpicius. 2. We forget to revenge former injuries. 3. We admire the arrogance of the ambassador and the prudence of the prefect. 4. The Romans remember well the enmity of Philip. 5. The Thebans protect the towns of Boeotia by garrisons. 6. You fear the new arguments of the tribunes. 7. Fabius hesitates to attack the Carthaginians. 8. Troy falls by the cunning of the Greeks. 9. The tribune Sulpicius arises suddenly and addresses the people. 10. I wish both to live honestly and to die happily. 11. The teacher tests the judgment of the boys by little questions. 12. The assassins of the prefect suffer death. 13. The ambassadors profess friendship, but meditate treachery. 14. Thou rewardest vice, and pursuest justice. 15. You remember the bad (adversus) fortune of Dionysius, tyrant of Syracuse.

LESSON XXV.

THIRD DECLENSION. LIQUID STEMS.

§ 139. 1. The third declension differs in three points from the first and second: 1. By its CHARACTERISTICS. 2. By its CASE-TERMINATIONS. 3. By the manner in which the STEM is found.

§ 140. 2. The characteristics of the third declension are either CONSONANTS, or the vowel i, as: genus (char. s), nomen (char. n), dolor (char. r), civis (char. i). The stems of those nouns, which have the characteristic i, are called the vowel-stems of the third declension; those, having a CONSONANT as characteristic, are termed consonant-stems.

§ 141. 3. The CASE-TERMINATIONS of the third declension (see § 145) are attached to the DECLENSION-STEM. In the 3d declension, however, the stem is not found, as in the other declensions, by removing the case-termination of the NOMINATIVE, but by dropping the case-terminations of the OBLIQUE cases, that is, of any case but nominative and vocative singular.

<sup>3</sup> Novus, new. <sup>4</sup> Pristinus. <sup>5</sup> Garrison, praesidium. <sup>6</sup> To test, experiri. <sup>7</sup> A little question, quaestiuicula. <sup>8</sup> Death, supplicium.

Thus the stem judic of judex is found by dropping the case-termination is of the genitive judicis. Hence in order to decline a given noun of the third declension, one of the oblique cases must be known besides the nominative, for which purpose the GENITIVE SINGULAR generally is chosen.

§ 142. 4. The Gender of nouns, belonging to the third declension is fourfold: 1. The masculine, 2. The feminine, 3. The neuter, 4. The common gender (§ 39).

If a noun, denoting a PERSON or BEAST, is used in the same form for both sexes, it is said to be of common gender, as: civis, a male or female citizen; comes, a male or female companion; canis, a male or female dog. Nouns of common gender are thus treated:

1. If we do not distinguish the sex of an individual, we generally employ the MASCULINE GENDER; 2. If we speak of the individual, as of a MALE, the MASCULINE gender, and 3. If we mean a FEMALE, the FEMININE gender is employed.

Rem. 1. For the application of these principles to the names of BEASTS see L. XXVIII.

THE CONSONANT-STEMS OF THE THIRD DECLENSION.

§ 143. 5. The CONSONANT-STEMS of the 3d declension have either one of the MUTES, or one of the LIQUIDS for a characteristic. See page 7.

Rem. 2. Stems, which terminate in a LIQUID are called liquid stems, and stems, terminating in one of the MUTE consonants, are termed mute stems. Some nouns have stems in u and v (sus, bos, Jupiter). These are called IRREGULAR STEMS. See § 188.

§ 144. 6. The LIQUID stems appear without a case-termination in the nominative singular, except the feminine hiems, G. hiemis (winter). MUTE stems on the contrary generally take the termination s in the nominative singular.

§ 145. 7. The case-terminations of nouns with consonant-stems are the following:

| SINGULAR.                             | PLURAL.                       |
|---------------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| N. s or —                      | N. es , Neut. a |
| G. is                          | G. um                  |
| D. i                           | D. ibus                |
| A. em , Neut. like Nom. | A. es , Neut. a |
| V. like Nom.                   | V. like Nom.           |
| A. e .                         | A. like Dative.        |

A given noun with a consonant-stem is declined by applying these terminations to its STEM, which is found by removing the termination is from the GENITIVE SINGULAR.

LIQUID STEMS.

§ 146. 8. Since the noun hiems is the only noun with m as characteristic, there remain only the four liquids l, n, r, s, which can appear as characteristics of liquid stems. They accordingly form 4 classes: 1. The L-class, 2. The N-class, 3. The R-class, 4. The S-class.

L-CLASS.

§ 147. VOCABULARY.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Consul, G. consulis m. a consul                  | sal , sālis , m. & n. , salt                  |
| exsul, exsulis , c. g. an exile, banished person | sol , sōlis , m. sun (also as a proper name sun-god) |
| fel, fellis , n. bile, gall                      | vigil, vigilis , m. a watchman                              |
| mel, mellis , n. honey                           | Hannibal  |
| proconsul, proconsulis , m. a pro-consul         | Hasdrubal   |
|  | Adherbal  |
| pugil, pugilis , m. a boxer                      | G. ālis , m. barbaric proper names.                         |

§ 148. PARADIGM.

| SINGULAR.                        | PLURAL.                                  |
|----------------------------------|--|
| N. Consul, a consul              | N. consules , consuls      |
| G. consulis , of a consul | G. consulum , of consuls   |
| D. consuli , to a consul  | D. consulibus , to consuls |
| A. consulem , a consul    | A. consules , consuls      |
| V. consul , O consul!     | V. consules , O consuls !  |
| A. consule , by a consul  | A. consulibus , by consuls |

Rem. 3. Nouns with the final letters al, except sal and the proper names, have VOWEL-STEMS, and will be considered § 176, 177.

N-CLASS.

§ 149. VOCABULARY.

|   |   |
|---|---|
| Agmen, agmīnis, n. , division, column of an army     | ligo, ōnis, m. , a hoe                                     |
| Anio, Anīcnis, m. , a river in Latium                | longitūdo, īnis, f. , length                               |
| Apollo, īnis, the god of arts and sciences                  | Macedo, ōnis, m. , a Macedonian                            |
| carbo, ōnis, m. , charcoal                           | magnitūdo, īnis, f. , greatness, size                      |
| cardo, īnis, m. , hinge, a pole of a globe           | margo, īnis, m. &amp; f. , border, margin                  |
| carmen, īnis, n. , a poem                            | multitūdo, īnis, f. , multitude                            |
| Carthago, īnis, f. , Carthage                        | <sup>2</sup> natio, ōnis, f. , a nation                    |
| caro, carnis, f. , flesh, meat                       | nomen, īnis, n. , name                                     |
| centurio, ōnis, m. , a centurion (captain)           | obsidio, ōnis, f. , siege                                  |
| certāmen, īnis, n. , strife, struggle                | occasio, ōnis, f. , occasion                               |
| cognōmen, īnis, n. , surname                         | oratio, ōnis, f. , oration                                 |
| concio, ōnis, f. , assembly of the people            | ordo, īnis, m. , order, rank                               |
| conditio, ōnis, f. , condition                       | origo, īnis, f. , origin                                   |
| conjuratio, ōnis, f. , conspiracy                    | pavo, ōnis, m. , peacock                                   |
| consuetūdo, īnis, f. , habit, custom                 | pecten, īnis, m. , comb                                    |
| discrīmen, īnis, n. , difference, critical situation | praedo, ōnis, m. , robber                                  |
| disputatio, ōnis, f. , discussion                    | pugio, ōnis, m. , dagger                                   |
| draco, ōnis, m. , dragon                             | ratio, ōnis, f. , reason, method, system                   |
| factio, ōnis, faction, party                                | regio, ōnis, f. , region, country                          |
| flumen, īnis, n. , a river                           | religio, ōnis, f. , reverence, conscientiousness, religion |
| fortitūdo, īnis, f. , bravery                        | rēnes (stem rēn), pl. t., m. , the kidneys                 |
| fulmen, īnis, n. , lightning                         | Saxo, ōnis, m. , a Saxon                                   |
| grando, īnis, f. , hail                              | seditio, ōnis, f. , rebellion                              |
| harpago, ōnis, m. , grappling hook                   | semen, īnis, n. , seed                                     |
| homo, īnis, m. , man                                 | sermo, ōnis, m. , speech, language                         |
| imāgo, īnis, f. , image                              | similitūdo, īnis, f. , similarity                          |
| interrogatio, ōnis, f. , question                    | testūdo, īnis, f. , a tortoise                             |
| latro, ōnis, m. , robber                             | tiro, ōnis, m. , a beginner                                |
| lectio, ōnis, f. , a reading                         | valetūdo, īnis, f. , health                                |
| legio, ōnis, f. , a legion                           | vicissitūdo, īnis, f. , chance                             |
| leo, ōnis, m. , a lion                               | virgo, īnis, f. , a virgin                                 |

§ 150. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.                  | PLURAL.                         |
|----------------------------|---------------------------------|
| N. Sermo, the speech       | N. sermōnes, the speeches       |
| G. sermōnis, of the speech | G. sermōnum, of the speeches    |
| D. sermōni, to the speech  | D. sermonibus, to the speeches  |
| A. sermōnem, the speech    | A. sermōnes, the speeches       |
| V. sermo, O speech!        | V. sermōnes, O speeches!        |
| A. sermōne, by the speech  | A. sermonibus, by the speeches. |

<sup>1</sup> Homo and vir must be distinguished from each other. The former includes women and children, and means an individual of the HUMAN RACE. But vir is opposed to both, women and children. <sup>2</sup> Natio generally means a barbaric nation.

| SINGULAR.            | PLURAL.               |
|----------------------|-----------------------|
| N. Homo, a man       | N. homines, men       |
| G. homīnis, of a man | G. hominum, of men    |
| D. homini, to a man  | D. hominibus, to men  |
| A. hominem, a man    | A. homines, men       |
| V. homo, O man!      | V. homines, O men!    |
| A. homine, by a man  | A. hominibus, by men. |

| SINGULAR.             | PLURAL.                 |
|-----------------------|-------------------------|
| N. Nomen, a name      | N. nomina, names        |
| G. nomīnis, of a name | G. nominum, of names    |
| D. nomini, to a name  | D. nominibus, to names  |
| A. nomen, a name      | A. nomina, names        |
| V. nomen, O name!     | V. nomina, O names!     |
| A. nomine, by a name  | A. nominibus, by names. |

§ 151. 9. The nouns of the N-class have the final letters o or en in the nominative singular, the former dropping the characteristic n in this case. Those in o are MASCULINE or FEMININE; those in en are NEUTER with a few masculine exceptions.

§ 152. 10. Nouns in o are generally MASCULINE, and take in the genitive the final letters ōnis, which they substitute for the termination o of the nominative, as le-o, le-ōnis (leōn being the stem, and is the case-termination). But

1. Nouns in do and go have īnis in the genitive, and are FEMININE; and

2. Nouns in io are likewise FEMININE, but take ōnis in the genitive.

EXCEPTIONS TO RULE § 152.

1. IN GENDER: Cardo, ordo, margo, pugio, centurio, and some rarer nouns.

2. IN THE FORM OF THE GENITIVE: Apollo, homo.

3. IN BOTH: Anio, caro, harpago, ligo, praedo, besides some rarer nouns.

Some national nouns in o, as Macedo, Saxo, take ōnis with a short penult in the gen.

§ 153. 11. The nouns in en take īnis in the genitive, and are NEUTER; but pecten, <sup>1</sup>flamen, and nouns in cen (from canere, as oscen, <sup>2</sup>tibicen, <sup>3</sup>tulicen) are MASCULINE.

Rem. 4. <sup>5</sup>Lien and the pl. t. rēnes are likewise masculine; but both nouns have a long e (G. lēnis).

<sup>1</sup> Flamen, a priest of a single deity. <sup>2</sup> Oscen, a prophetic bird. <sup>3</sup> A fluteplayer. <sup>4</sup> A player of the tuba. <sup>5</sup> Lien, milt.

R-CLASS.

§ 154. VOCABULARY.

Accipiter, tris, m. a falcon ador, ōris, n. spelt æquor, ōris, n. a surface aër, ēris, m. air agger, ēris, m. dyke amor, ōre
 ardor, heat, impetuosity anser, ēris, c. g. goose arbor, ōris, f. tree assar, ēris, m. a (wooden) board auctor, author, founder augur, ūris, m. an augur, a class of priests cadāver, ēris, n. a corpse calor, heat, warmth carcer, ēris, m. prison, jail censor, a censor, a high Roman magistrate cicer, ēris, n. a chick-pea clamor, a shouting, clamor
 color, color
 defensor, a defender dictātor, dictator, extraordinary Roman magistrate dolor, pain, grief
 ebur, ōris, n. ivory emtor, a buyer error, a mistake
 favor, favor
 femur, ōris, n. the thigh frater, tris, m. brother fulgur, ūris, n. lightning fur, fūris, c. g. a thief furor, fury
 imperātor, a commander

iter, itineris, n. a journey, march, road jecur, G. jecōris, jecinōris & jecōris, n. liver labor, labor, hardship
 later, ēris, m. a brick lemures, pl. t. (stem lemūr), m. spectres marmor, ōris, n. marble mater, tris, f. mother mulier, ēris, f. a woman orātor, an orator passer, ēris, m. sparrow pater, tris, m. father pavor, a trembling, dread præceptor, a teacher prietor, a prætor, a high Roman magistrate proceres, pl. t. (stem procēr) m. the highest in rank robur, ōris, n. strength scriptor, a writer, author senātor, a senator
 soror, f. a sister timor, fear
 tuber, ēris, n. a swelling, a tuber uxor, f. a wife
 ver, vēris, n. the spring of the year vesper, ēris, m. evening verbera, pl. t. (stem verbēr) n. flogging, blows victor, a conqueror vomer, ēris, m. a ploughshare vultur, ūris, m. a vulture.

§ 155. PARADIGMS

SINGULAR.

N. Dolor, the pain
G. dolōris, of the pain
D. dolōri, to the pain
A. dolōrem, the pain
V. dolor, O pain!
A. dolōre, by the pain

PLURAL.

N. dolōres, the pains
G. dolōrum, of the pains
D. doloribus, to the pains
A. dolōres, the pains
V. dolōres, O pains!
A. doloribus, by the pains

<sup>6</sup> In this vocabulary the regular nouns in or will not be accompanied by their genitives or gender-marks, it being understood, that they are masculine, and form their genitives in ōris, with long penult. <sup>7</sup> Vesper is declined both, after the 2d and 3d declensions. See § 50. The genitive follows the 2d (vesperis, not vesperis), but the ablative follows the 3d (vespere).

SINGULAR.

N. Pater, a father
G. patris, of a father
D. patri, to a father
A. patrem, a father
V. pater, O father!
A. patre, by a father

PLURAL.

N. patres, fathers
G. patrum, of fathers
D. patribus, to fathers
A. patres, fathers
V. patres, O fathers!
A. patribus, by fathers

N. Tuber, a swelling
G. tuberis, of a swelling
D. tuberi, to a swelling
A. tuber, a swelling
V. tuber, O swelling!
A. tubere, by a swelling

N. tubera, swellings
G. tuborum, of swellings
D. tuberibus, to swellings
A. tubera, swellings
V. tubera, O swellings!
A. tuberibus, by swellings

§ 156. 12. The nouns of the R-class in both, stem and nominative have the final letter r, which is preceded either by a, e, o, or u. The genitive has a short penult except in the regular nouns in or. The gender is either the MASCULINE or the NEUTER.

§ 157. 13. Nouns in ar generally have VOWEL-STEMS with a long penult in the genitive. See § 176, 177. To the R-class belong only some male proper names (Caesar, G. Caesāris; Hamilear, G. Hamilcāris), besides some appellative nouns of very rare occurrence.

Nouns in er, denoting THINGS, are masculine or neuter (aër, agger, assar, carcer, <sup>8</sup>gibber, later, vesper, vomer are masculine, the rest are neuter.) Those denoting PERSONS, follow their SEX (mater, frater, pater, mulier), and those denoting BEASTS, are either of common gender (anser), or masculine (passer, accipiter). The genitive has a short penult, which in pater, mater, frater and accipiter is syncopated. For the VOWEL-STEMS in er see § 187.

Nouns in or form the genitive in ōris, being masculine; except the fem. arbor and the neuters ador, æquor, marmor, which have ōris with a short penult.

Nouns in ur form their genitives in ūris, except ebur, femur, robur, jecur, which have ōris. PERSONS and BEASTS in ur are <sup>8</sup> A post-classical word, meaning a hunch on the back.

S-CLASS.

§ 158. VOCABULARY.

Æs, æris, n. bronze, copper
as, assis, m. the as, the standard of Roman coins, weights and measures.
Ceres, Cerēris, the goddess of agriculture
cinis, ěris, m. ashes
corpus, ōris, n. body
crus, crūris, n. a leg cucumis, ěris, m. a cucumber decus, ōris, n. ornament, honor dedecus, ōris, n. disgrace facinus, ōris, n. a deed, misdeed fenus, ōris, n. usury, interest flos, flōris, m. a flower foedus, ěris, n. a treaty frigus, ōris, n. frost, cold funus, ěris, n. funeral, corpse genus, ěris, n. kind, race honos, ōris, m. honor (in plur. places of honor) jus, jūris, n. right, law lepos, ōris, m. grace, elegance lepus, ōris, m. a hare latus, ěris, n. a side litus, ōris, n. a coast

mas, māris, m. a male mos, mōris, m. manner, custom munus, ěris, n. gift, duty mus, mūris, m. a mouse nemus, ōris, n. a grove
onus, ěris, n. a burden
opus, ěris, n. a work os, ōris, n. the mouth, the face os, ossis, n. a bone
pectus, ōris, n. breast pecus, ōris, n. cattle
pignus, ōris, n. a pledge pondus, ěris, n. a weight pulvis, ěris, m. dust
ros, rōris, m. dew rus, rūris, n. country<sup>9</sup>, country-seat
scelus, ěris, n. a crime sidus, ěris, n. constellation, star stercus, ōris, n. dung tempus, ōris, n. time ulcus, ěris, n. a sore, ulceration vas, vāsīs<sup>10</sup>, n. a vessel (of clay, silver, &c.)
Venus, ěris, f. the goddess of beauty viscēra, pl. t., the entrails vulnus, ěris, n. a wound

§ 159. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.                       | PLURAL.                            |
|---------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| N. Vulnus, a wound       | N. vulnera, wounds          |
| G. vulneris, of a wound  | G. vulnerum, of wounds      |
| D. vulneri, to a wound   | D. vulneribus, to wounds    |
| A. vulnus, a wound       | A. vulnera, wounds          |
| V. vulnus, O wound!      | V. vulnera, O wounds!       |
| A. vulnere, by a wound   | A. vulneribus, by wounds    |
| N. Tempus, the time      | N. tempora, the times       |
| G. temporis, of the time | G. temporum, of the times   |
| D. tempori, to the time  | D. temporibus, to the times |
| A. tempus, the time      | A. tempora, the times       |
| V. tempus, O time!       | V. tempora, O times!        |
| A. tempore, by the time  | A. temporibus, by the times |

<sup>9</sup> Rus, is "the country," in opposition to cities. Terra and regio are larger or smaller districts of the earth, lands. Patria is one's own country, fatherland.
<sup>10</sup> Vas, vāsīs, has a collateral form, vasum, vasi, of the 2d declension, after which the plural is exclusively formed.

§ 160. 14. The final letter of the nouns, belonging to the S-class, is the liquid s, in both, stem and nominative singular. This final s, which must not be taken for a case-termination, is changed into r in the oblique cases, except in as, os (bone), and vas.

§ 161. 15. The majority of the nouns of the S-class terminate in us, being of NEUTER gender. Their genitives are formed either in ōris or in ěris. Some nouns in us (crus, jus, rus, mus, and some rarer nouns) have genitives in ūris. The few nouns in as, æs, es, is and os, belonging to the S-class, are enumerated § 158.

Rem. 5. The characteristic s of the nouns of the S-class in the earlier periods of the language remained unchanged through the oblique cases. Thus vulnus (stem vulnes) was declined: G. vulnesis, D. vulnesi, &c.; tempus (stem tempos), G. temposis, D. temposi, &c.; honos, G. honōsis, &c.

Rem. 6. The PERSONAL nouns of the S-class, consisting of the names of the goddesses Ceres and Venus are FEMININE. The names of BEASTS (mus and lepus) are MASCULINE.

Rem. 7. Nouns in os occur in the T-class also. See § 165, 167.

EXERCISES.

Write paradigms of hiems, Winter; sol, the sun; carbo, a charcoal; consuetudo, a habit; semen, seed; Cæsar, pr. n.; iter, a journey; frater, brother; soror, sister; fulgur, lightning; robur, strength; scelus, crime; corpus, a body; mos, manner; lepus, a hare.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

L-CLASS. 1. The wretched exiles. 2. Of attentive watchmen. 3. The fate of Adherbal and Hiempsal. 4. By the proconsuls of Gaul and Spain. 5. The training of boxers. 6. By the invincible Sun-god. 7. By Attic salt. 8. The bitter gall (obj.). 9. To excellent honey. 10. By Hannibal, the renowned adversary of Africānus.

1. Sempronii proconsulis. 2. Dionysio exsule. 3. Hannibali exsuli. 4. Mirā vigilum negligentia. 5. Salis Tarentini pretium. 6. Calido Arabiae sole. 7. Hiempsale atque Adherbale, Numidia regulis. 8. M. Antonio et L. Murōnā consulibus.

N-CLASS. 1. Acuto gladii mucroni. 2. Varrōne Æmiliōque consulibus. 3. Miro leōnis grati specimine. 4. Prædonum Tarentinōrum incursiōnes. 5. Hirundinum domesticarum nidi. 6. Grandines crebrae, agris noxiae. 7. Mirā copiārum fortitudine. 8. Insānam M. Pisōnis libidinem. 9. Magno mundi universi ordine ac ratione. 10. Altis saxosisque fluminis marginibus. 11. Pulchras templi imagines. 12. Ferarum Illyriae nationum conditione. 13. Regionum frigidarum incolæ. 14. Magnæ hominum <sup>11</sup>admiratiōni. 15. P. Cornelius Scipio, Africāni cognomine <sup>12</sup>cognitus. 16. Egregia Pindari carmina. 17. Splendido Apollinis et Diānæ templo. 18. Præclāræ Macedonum victoriæ. 19. Pavōne Junōni sacro. 20. Aniēne, exiguo Latii flumine.

<sup>1</sup> Training, disciplina. <sup>2</sup> Attic, Atticus. <sup>3</sup> Mucro, edge. <sup>4</sup> Specimen, example.
<sup>5</sup> Incursio, a raid. <sup>6</sup> Hirundo, a swallow. <sup>7</sup> Domesticus, domestic. <sup>8</sup> Nidus, a nest.
<sup>9</sup> Libido, passion, lust. <sup>10</sup> Saxosus, stony.

1. Of the consuls M. Tullius Cicero and L. Anthony. 2. By the nefarious conspiracy of Catiline. 3. By the goddess Juno, a daughter of Saturnus and Rhea. 4. The <sup>13</sup>tame dragons of the <sup>14</sup>Epidaurians. 5. The <sup>15</sup>Catilinarian orations of Cicero. 6. By reason, the assistant of men. 7. By a Roman centurion of a <sup>16</sup>Gallie legion. 8. By Carthage, the ancient rival of Rome. 9. To the obscure origin of Marius. 10. By the chances of human fortune. 11. By the order of words of the Latin language (sermo). 12. The <sup>17</sup>Tusculan discussions of Cicero. 13. A bad habit (obj.) of obscure questions. 14. By the opinions (opinio) of learned men (homo). 15. The nature of hot regions. 16. By the passions of bad men. 17. The <sup>18</sup>extraordinary size (obj.) of the <sup>19</sup>Numidian lions. 18. By a <sup>20</sup>change of ancient habits. 19. The nature of <sup>21</sup>oaken charcoal. 20. The boldness of the Theban robbers. 21. The mutual strifes of the <sup>22</sup>opposite factions. 22. By the <sup>23</sup>abduction of the <sup>24</sup>Sabinian virgins. 23. By a wonderful image of the goddess Juno. 24. The <sup>25</sup>iron grappling hooks of the <sup>26</sup>maritime robbers. 25. By the immense size of maritime tortoises. 26. To the assiduous reading of industrious beginners. 27. The obscure history of the ancient Saxons. 28. The poems of Homer and Virgil. 29. By sun and moon, the <sup>29</sup>lights of <sup>30</sup>heaven. 30. Great differences of habit. 31. The <sup>31</sup>deadly arrows of Apollo. 32. The <sup>32</sup>ivory combs of the Roman women (mulier).

R-CLASS. 1. By Cn. Pompōjus, the renowned rival of Julius Caesar. 2. To the Carthaginian Hannibal, a son of Hamilcar. 3. Swellings of trees, a sign of disease. 4. By the rough spring of <sup>33</sup>mountainous regions. 5. The <sup>34</sup>unburied corpses of the enemies. 6. To Henry and William, the brothers of Charles. 7. The Roman jail (obj.), an old and renowned <sup>35</sup>building. 8. The <sup>36</sup>eggs of black geese. 9. The air (obj.), <sup>37</sup>close by an hot <sup>38</sup>vapor. 10. The camp, secure by a long dyke and ditch. 11. By a great impetuosity of the mind. 12. By the mutual love and <sup>39</sup>esteem of Cicero and Atticus. 13. By the universal <sup>40</sup>assent of the <sup>41</sup>hearers. 14. The wailings of wretched mothers and wives. 15. The <sup>42</sup>quiet surfaces of deep rivers (flumen). 16. The <sup>43</sup>upright manners (obj.) of the ancient Romans. 17. The prophetic birds of the augurs. 18. The <sup>44</sup>nightly lightnings of Sumānus. 19. The <sup>45</sup>unfavorable <sup>46</sup>omen of sick livers. 20. By the invincible strength of the soul of Caesar. 21. To the extraordinary <sup>47</sup>whiteness of the <sup>48</sup>Indian ivory. 22. The <sup>49</sup>swollen <sup>50</sup>throats of the Alpine (Alpīnus) nations. 23. The threats and <sup>51</sup>mutter-ings of the troops. 24. The cold <sup>50</sup>Tibur, (obj.) the <sup>51</sup>summer <sup>52</sup>residence of wealthy Romans. 25. The slow and cautious marches of the Roman legions.

<sup>11</sup> Admiratio, astonishment. <sup>12</sup> Cognitus, known. <sup>13</sup> Tame, mansuetus. <sup>14</sup> Epidaurians, Epidaurenses. <sup>15</sup> Catilinarian, Catilinarius. <sup>16</sup> Gallie, Gallie. <sup>17</sup> Tusculan, Tusculanus. <sup>18</sup> Extraordinary, mirabilis. <sup>19</sup> Numidian, Numidianus. <sup>20</sup> Change, mutatio. <sup>21</sup> Oaken, quercus. <sup>22</sup> Opposite, adversus. <sup>23</sup> Abduction, raptus. <sup>24</sup> Sabinian, Sabinus. <sup>25</sup> Iron, ferrus. <sup>26</sup> Maritime, maritimus. <sup>27</sup> Tortoise, testudo. <sup>28</sup> Saxon, Saxon. <sup>29</sup> Light, lux. <sup>30</sup> Heaven, cæli. <sup>31</sup> Deadly, letalis. <sup>32</sup> Ivory, ebur. <sup>33</sup> Mountainous, montanus. <sup>34</sup> Corpse, cadaver. <sup>35</sup> Building, ædificium. <sup>36</sup> Egg, ovum. <sup>37</sup> Close, proximus. <sup>38</sup> Vapor, vapor. <sup>39</sup> Esteem, æstimatio. <sup>40</sup> Assent, assensus. <sup>41</sup> Hearer, auditor. <sup>42</sup> Quiet, quietus. <sup>43</sup> Upright, rectus. <sup>44</sup> Nightly, nocturnus. <sup>45</sup> Unfavorable, sinister. <sup>46</sup> Omen, omen. <sup>47</sup> Whiteness, albedo. <sup>48</sup> Indian, Indicus. <sup>49</sup> Swollen, tumidus. <sup>50</sup> Throat, guttur. <sup>51</sup> Muttering, murmur.

1. Accipitres, <sup>53</sup>venatōrum deliciæ. 2. Mirā anserum ferōrum multitudine. 3. Pulchrā auctōris incerti statuā. 4. Furiōsi barbarōrum clamōres. 5. Bruto et Cassio, populi Romāni defensoribus. 6. Diversos scriptōrum Latinōrum errōres. 7. C. Graccho, Ti. Gracchi fratre. 8. Justā furum prædonumque pœnā. 9. Longa imperatōris Romāni itinera. 10. Magnæ mulierum <sup>54</sup>trepidatiōni ac pavōri. 11. Juliā, Pompēji uxōre Cæsarisque filiā. 12. Hiemis <sup>55</sup>Italicæ verisque <sup>56</sup>Germanici similitudo. 13. Miro Milōnis robore. 14. Templum fulguribus sacrum. 15. Corneliā, Gracchōrum matre Scipionisque sorōre. 16. Carne <sup>57</sup>bubulā, præcipuo <sup>58</sup>Anglōrum <sup>59</sup>nutrimento.

S-CLASS. 1. The <sup>60</sup>copper ases of Servius Tullius. 2. The bones of men and beasts. 3. The <sup>61</sup>silver vessels of Mummius, the conqueror of Corinth. 4. The <sup>62</sup>white mice of <sup>63</sup>Egyptian <sup>64</sup>jugglers. 5. The principal rights of the Latin allies. 7. The long legs of the <sup>65</sup>ostrich. 8. The <sup>66</sup>ancestral country-places of Scipio. 9. An excellent picture of the <sup>67</sup>Coan Venus. 10. The disgraceful treaties of the Roman commander. 11. The beautiful gifts (munus) of God. 12. The whole works of Livy of Patavium. 13. The crimes (scelus) of Messalina, the impious wife of Nero. 14. The different weights and values of the Roman as. 15. By the slow <sup>68</sup>cure of old wounds. 16. By the entrails of the human body. 17. The wonderful grace (obj., lepos) of the writer. 18. A <sup>69</sup>Britannic hare (obj.), pleasant to the <sup>70</sup>palate. 19. The excellent deeds of Cæsar. 20. By Faustulus, the <sup>71</sup>herdsman of the royal cattle. 21. The times of the <sup>72</sup>Dutch <sup>73</sup>rebellion. 22. The <sup>74</sup>Asiatic coasts of the Hellespont. 23. By the <sup>75</sup>premature frosts of middle Germany. 24. To the timely <sup>76</sup>redemption of the pledges of Tubero. 25. The nature of both, males and <sup>77</sup>females. 26. By <sup>78</sup>Corinthian bronze, the principal metal of <sup>79</sup>sculptors. 27. To Ceres, the mother of Proserpina. 28. The seeds of rare cucumbers. 29. By the dust of the Italian roads (iter). 30. The mouths of the goddess Fama. 31. By the unhurt honor of the Roman commander. 32. <sup>80</sup>Nouns of <sup>81</sup>masculine <sup>82</sup>gender. 33. <sup>83</sup>Garlands of beautiful flowers.

1. Immensa Germanōrum antiquōrum corpora. 2. Calidi <sup>84</sup>Vesuvii cineres. 3. Improbis Catilinæ facinoribus. 4. Crebrā frigoris calorisque mutatiōne. 5. Eximiā Cereris statuā, <sup>85</sup>ignōti auctōris opere. 6. Futuræ generis humani conditionis. 7. Tempia, Apollini et Veneri sacra. 8. Divino Junōnis ore. 9. Dubio sociōrum Latinōrum jure. 10. Propinqua Siciliæ insulæ litora. 11. Magnis immodicisque provinciārum oneribus. 12. Scelerum fœdōrum <sup>86</sup>perpetratiōne. 13. Immensa elephanti ossa. 14. Miro sermōnis lepōre. 15. <sup>87</sup>Mansuēto pueri lepōre. 16. Florum sertorumque <sup>88</sup>odōre. 17. Pecori Apollini sacro.

<sup>50</sup> Tibur, a town near Rome, the modern Tivoli. <sup>51</sup> Summer, adj. æstivus. <sup>52</sup> Residence, mansio. <sup>53</sup> Venator, a hunter. <sup>54</sup> Anxiety. <sup>55</sup> Italian. <sup>56</sup> Germanicus, German, adj. <sup>57</sup> Bubulus, beef, as adj. <sup>58</sup> Anglus, an Englishman. <sup>59</sup> Nourishment. <sup>60</sup> Copper, as adj. æneus. <sup>61</sup> Silver, adj. argenteus. <sup>62</sup> Albus. <sup>63</sup> Egyptia, us. <sup>64</sup> Præstigiator. <sup>65</sup> Struthio. <sup>66</sup> Avitus. <sup>67</sup> Coan (of the island of Cos), Cons. <sup>68</sup> Curatio. <sup>69</sup> Britannicus. <sup>70</sup> Patavium. <sup>71</sup> Pastor. <sup>72</sup> Batavus. <sup>73</sup> Seditio. <sup>74</sup> Asiaticus. <sup>75</sup> Præmatūrus. <sup>76</sup> Redemptio. <sup>77</sup> Femina. <sup>78</sup> Corinthius. <sup>79</sup> Statuarius. <sup>80</sup> Nomen. <sup>81</sup> Masculinus. <sup>82</sup> Genus. <sup>83</sup> Sertum. <sup>84</sup> Vesuvius, a known volcano. <sup>85</sup> Ignotus, unknown. <sup>86</sup> Perpetratio, commission.

B. SENTENCES.

1. Magnus exsulū numerus patriæ a consulibus restituitur. 2. Jugurtha Adherbalem Micipsæ filium interficere conātur. 3. Fabius Romānos Hannibalem vincere docet. 4. Elephantī verberibus crebris mansuefiunt. 5. Color aureus taurorum* felle effici potest. 6. Senatorum numerus a Servio Tullio augētur. 7. Exempla mala mores bonos corrumpunt. 8. Longā <sup>89</sup>cogitationis <sup>90</sup>intermissione ingenii mucro <sup>91</sup>retunditur. 9. <sup>92</sup>Jactatio auditoribus <sup>93</sup>fastidium afferre (to cause) solet. 10. Antonius populi pectora publico Cæsaris funere <sup>94</sup>inflammāre studet. 11. Servorum seditionem parvo copiārum numero opprimere possumus. 12. Hannibal sociorum agmina aggredi statuit. 13. <sup>95</sup>Pictor prædonis imaginem carbone <sup>96</sup>delineat. 14. Tironibus Homēri carmina et legere et intelligere necesse est. 15. Immensa Persarū multitudo Alexandri copiārum fortitudinem superāre nequit. 16. Strabonem regiones externas explorāre juvat. 17. M. Tullio Ciceroni conjurationem Catilinariam opprimere licet. 18. Errores confitēri semper decet. 19. Imperātor tribūnis et centurionibus copiārum discrimen ostendit. 20. Copiæ clamorem magnum subito edere (to raise) jubentur. 21. Augures consulem bellum incipere vetant.

1. The Muses are <sup>97</sup>silenced by the <sup>98</sup>din of arms and the <sup>99</sup>cries of war. 2. Thou canst not restore to life the bones of the commander. 3. The Italian spring restores <sup>1</sup>vigor to the soul, and strength to the body. 4. The Roman people wishes to diminish the burdens of the allies. 5. Thou canst not restrain, O Sempronius, the blind fury of the passions! 6. To be the author of rebellion is nefarious. 7. Lightnings have a <sup>2</sup>sulphureous smell. 8. Swellings are healed by honey and the dust of charcoal. 9. The people <sup>3</sup>demand the lives of Cesar's <sup>4</sup>murderers. 10. A vulture daily devours Prometheus' liver. 11. The Macedonians intend to try† the chances of war again. 12. Cesar prevents the legions of Pompey from foraging. 13. The inhabitants as well as the garrison are unwilling to suffer a long siege. 14. Hares furnish a pleasant and <sup>5</sup>palatable meat. 15. The (female) slave does not know how to cook a tortoise. 16. We often admire the good health of Cato. 17. The Greek orators have a wonderful grace (lepos) of <sup>6</sup>style. 18. The garrison is expelled by the help of the highest in rank. 19. Thou must deliver Tubero's country-seat to the buyers. 20. The Roman people refuse to confirm the treaties of the commander. 21. The coasts of Sicily are dangerous, and are avoided (fugere) by the <sup>7</sup>merchants. 22. A life, devoted to lusts, is injurious both to body and soul.

<sup>87</sup> Mansuētus, tame. <sup>88</sup> Odor, smell, fragrance. <sup>89</sup> Cogitatio, thinking. <sup>90</sup> Intermissio, interruption. <sup>91</sup> Retundere, to blunt. <sup>92</sup> Jactatio, a boasting. <sup>93</sup> Fastidium, disgust. <sup>94</sup> Inflammāre, to inflame. <sup>95</sup> Pictor, a painter. <sup>96</sup> Delineāre, to sketch. <sup>97</sup> To be silenced, obmutescere. <sup>98</sup> Din, clangor. <sup>99</sup> Cry, clamor. <sup>1</sup> Vigor, vigor. <sup>2</sup> Sulphureous, sulfureus. <sup>3</sup> To demand, efflagitare. <sup>4</sup> Murderer, percussor. <sup>5</sup> Palatable, sapidus. <sup>6</sup> Style, sermo. <sup>7</sup> Merchant, mercator.

* The quantity of the vowel o in the penult of the oblique cases, so far as it is determined by the preceding rules, will no longer be marked by the long sign in the exercises. † Notice the difference of experiri, to try, and of studere, to try. The former requires a SUBSTANTIVE, the latter an INFINITIVE as object.

LESSON XXVI.

THIRD DECLENSION.—MUTE STEMS.

§ 162. 2. The MUTE stems consist of three classes, the P-class, the T-class, and the K-class, according as they have either a P-mute, or T-mute, or K-mute as characteristic. They generally take the case-termination s in the nominative singular, and are then masculine or feminine. The only neuters with mute stems are: luc (stem luct), cor (stem cord), caput, and the nouns in ma, G. mātis, taken from the Greek. All these neuters refuse the case-termination s in the nominative singular.

§ 163. 2. The nouns with mute stems are declined like those with LIQUID stems, by attaching the case-terminations § 145 to their stems.

Since the declension of the mute and liquid stems is essentially the same, and both differ only in the manner of forming the genitive, it is deemed unnecessary to illustrate the three mute classes by PARADIGMS.

P-CLASS.

§ 164. VOCABULARY.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| Adeps, īpis , m. fat, lard                 | plebs, plēbis, f. the plebs, the common people     |
| auceps, aucūpis, m. a bird-catcher                | princeps, īpis , m. a ruler, chief, emperor |
| daps, dāpis, f. a banquet                         | trabs, trābis, f. post                             |
| forceps, īpis , m. & f. a pair of pin-cers |  |
| ops, ōpis, f. help, resource                      |  |

T-CLASS.

§ 165. VOCABULARY.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| Abies, ētis , f. a pine                  | Arpinas, ātis , m. an inhabitant of Arpinum |
| ænigma, ātis , n. (GREEK) a riddle       | auctoritas, ātis , f. authority             |
| ætas, ātis , f. age                      | brevitas, ātis , f. shortness, briefness    |
| anas, ātis , f. a duck                   | calamitas, ātis , f. calamity, misfortune   |
| antistes, ītis , m. overseer.            | caput, capitis, n. head                            |
| Ardeas, ātis , m. an inhabitant of Ardea | celeritas, ātis , f. quickness              |
| aries, ētis , m. a ram, battering-ram    |  |

<sup>8</sup> This noun is either the name of the goddess Ops, or an APPELLATIVE noun, denoting help. As a proper name it forms a complete singular. As an appellative noun it lacks the nominative singular, but forms all other cases in both numbers.

civitas, ātis, f. state, city, citizenship comes, ītis, c. g. companion compedes, pl. t. (stem compēd), f. shackles cor, cordis, n. heart cos, cōtis, f. whetstone cuspis, īdis, f. a spear custos, ōdis, c. g. a guard, guardian diadēma, ātis, n. (GREEK), a diadem difficultas, ātis, f. difficulty dignitas, ātis, f. dignity dos, dōtis, f. a dowry eques, ītis, m. a horseman, knight fraus, fraudis, f. fraud gravitas, ātis, f. weight, dignity, gravity hereditas, ātis, f. inheritance heres, ēdis, c. g. an heir or heiress hospes, ītis, m. a guest-friend incus, ūdis, f. anvil interpretes, ētis, c. g. interpreter juventus, ūtis, f. young, age, youth lac, lactis, n. milk lapis, īdis, m. a stone laus, laudis, f. praise libertas, ātis, f. liberty limes, ītis, m. limit, boundary lis, litis, f. a lawsuit merces, ēdis, f. pay, wages miles, ītis, a soldier nepos, ōtis, m. grandson nox, noctis, f. night obses, īdis, c. g. a hostage optimātes, pl. t. (stem optimād), m. aristocrats palus, ūdis, f. swamp, marsh paries, ētis, m. a wall (of a house) paupertas, ātis, f. poverty pecus, īdis, f. a head of cattle pedes, ītis, m. a foot-soldier penātes, pl. t. (st. penāt), m. household gods pes, pēdis, m. foot poēma, ātis, n. (GREEK), a poem praeses, īdis, c. g. a chief quadrupes, ēdis, c. g. a quadruped quies (requies), ētis, f. rest, repose Quirites, pl. t. (st. quirit), the Romans sacerdos, ōtis, c. g. a priest or priestess salus, ūtis, f. welfare, safety Samnis, ītis, m. a Samnite satelles, ītis, c. g. a satellite seges, ētis, f. a standing crop senectus, ūtis, f. old age servitus, ūtis, f. slavery societas, ātis, f. society temeritas, ātis, f. rashness tempestas, ātis, f. a storm utilitas, ātis, f. usefulness vas, vādis, c. g. a bondsman, security virtus, ūtis, f. virtue, bravery

§ 166. 3. The characteristic of the nouns, belonging to the T-class (t or d), is regularly dropped in the nominative singular before its case-termination s, which letter cannot be preceded by a T-mute. The T-mute, thus dropped in the nominative, always is restored in the oblique cases.

Rem. 1. Of the NEUTERS which refuse the ending s, only caput retains the T-mute, but luc, cor and the Greek nouns in ma drop their characteristics in the nominative.

167. 4. Nouns in as generally belong to the T-class, being FEMININE with ātis in the genitive, except vas—vādis and anas—anātis (?)

Nouns in es generally have VOWEL-STEMS (§ 177); but a considerable number of them, which must be separately learned from the vocabulary, belong to the T-class. The most of these nouns in es change this termination into ūtis in the genitive, and are masculine (miles, comes, hospes, eques, pedes, &c.).

<sup>o</sup> Later authors sometimes use the nonn quadrupes in the NEUTER gender.

The nouns in os (nepos, sacerdos, cos and dos) have ōtis, those in us ūtis (juventus, salus, senectus, servitus, virtus), and those in is, partly ītis (lis and Samnis), partly īdis (lapis and cuspis). With the exception of lapis and the personal nouns they are all FEMININE.

Rem. 2. A few nouns in us, aus, and os, mentioned in the vocabulary, form their genitives differently (palus, incus, pecus, custos, fraus, laus).

K-CLASS.

§ 168. VOCABULARY.

|   |   |
|---|---|
| Appendix, īcis , f. an appendage                | judex, īcis , m. a judge              |
| artifex, īcis , m. artist                       | <sup>12</sup> lex, lēgis , f. a law   |
| <sup>10</sup> cervix, īcis , f. the neck        | lux, lūcis , f. light                 |
| cicātrix, īcis , f. a scar                      | nex, nēcis , f. death (violent)       |
| codex, īcis , m. a code, book                   | nutrix, īcis , f. a nurse (female)    |
| <sup>11</sup> conjux, ūgis , f. a wife, consort | nux, nūcis , f. a nut                 |
| crux, crūcis , f. a cross                       | pax, pācis , f. peace                 |
| culex, īcis , m. a quail                        | pollex, īcis , m. thumb               |
| dux, dūcis , c. g. a leader, general            | preces, pl. t. (stem prēc ) f. prayer |
| fax, fācis , f. a torch                         | pontifex, īcis , m. a chief-priest    |
| fornax, ācis , f. a furnace                     | radix, īcis , f. a root               |
| fornix, īcis , m. an arch                       | rex, rēgis , m. a king                |
| frutex, īcis , m. a shrub                       | salix, īcis , f. a willow             |
| frux, frūgis , f. field-fruit                   | silex, īcis , m. flint, pebble-stone  |
| grex, grēgis , m. a flock                       | vertex, īcis , m. top, whirlpool      |
| haruspex, īcis , m. a soothsayer                | victrix, īcis , f. a conqueress       |
| index, īcis , m. informer, spy, indication      | vox, vōcis , f. voice, word, remark.  |

§ 169. 5. The nouns, belonging to the K-class have the final letter x in the nominative, which must be resolved into cs or gs, s being the case-termination of the nominative, and c or g the characteristic of the stem. Hence the genitive is formed by changing the final x of the nominative either into cis or into gis. The former is the rule, the latter the exception.

§ 170. 6. The vowel, preceding the characteristic, generally remains unchanged. But the nouns in ex, with the exception of the monosyllabics, enumerated in the vocabulary, change their final letters into is in the genitive.

<sup>10</sup> Cervix in classical language always is used in the PLURAL with singular signification

<sup>11</sup> Conjux sometimes, but rarely, is used as a masculine of the husband. <sup>12</sup> Lex is single law; jus is the law, as a generality.

§ 171. 7. The GENDER of the K-class is the FEMININE; but the gender of the nouns in ex is the MASCULINE.

Rem. 3. The nouns senex, nix, supellex are IRREGULAR, and the noun nox belongs to the T-Class. Those nouns in which final x is preceded by a CONSONANT, have VOWEL-STEMS. See § 184, 189.

EXERCISES.

Write paradigms of the following nouns with mute stems:

Princeps a ruler, ætas the age, miles a soldier, lapis a stone, virtus virtue, fornax a furnace, codex a book, lex a law.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

P-CLASS. 1. The different <sup>13</sup>secessions of the Roman plebs. 2. By the unforeseen help (ops) of bird-catchers. 3. The great resources of the rulers. 4. By a wooden post. 5. By a <sup>14</sup>curved pair of pincers.

1. Plebis <sup>15</sup>scita, senatoribus molesta. 2. Infinite Romanorum opes. 3. <sup>16</sup>Sumtuosis Luculli dapibus. 4. Querneas domorum trabes. 5. <sup>17</sup>Albo anserum adipe.

T-CLASS. 1. The Attic nights, a renowned book of A. Gellius. 2. By C. Popilius Lenas, the murderer of Cicero. 3. The pledges of safe bondsmen. 4. The wonderful nature of the <sup>18</sup>Pontian ducks. 5. To the great quickness of the Numidian horsemen. 6. The ample resources of the rebellious states. 7. By the vain <sup>19</sup>efforts of the aristocrats. 8. To the <sup>20</sup>Antemnatiens, a neighboring nation. 9. By <sup>21</sup>tranquillity of the soul, the certain companion (comes) of virtue. 10. The flight of both the foot-soldiers and horsemen. 11. By a <sup>22</sup>native <sup>23</sup>lameness and sores of the feet. 12. By Nearchus, a guest-friend of Cato. 13. To the <sup>24</sup>settling of doubtful boundaries. 14. By <sup>25</sup>music, the eloquent interpreter of the heart. 15. The <sup>26</sup>outer walls of the building. 16. The small remains of magnificent (standing) crops. 17. By a pleasant repose of the body. 18. By the <sup>27</sup>surrender of the Latin hostages. 19. Dangerous wounds of the right foot. 20. To the burden of old age. 21. To the iron shackles of the prisoners. 22. By the heirs of the emperor Otho. 23. To the small pay of the Roman soldiers. 24. The <sup>28</sup>square stones of the <sup>29</sup>sepulchre. 25. By an ancient <sup>30</sup>corporation of priests. 26. The welfare (obj.) of the state, dear to the queen. 27. The <sup>31</sup>foul air (obj.) of the <sup>32</sup>Pomptinian marshes. 28. The unwilling praises of the chief. 29. The bloody heads of the <sup>33</sup>conspirators. 30. By the diadem of Cleopatra, queen of Egypt.

1. Philosophorum Græcorum ænigmata. 2. Ferreâ generis humani ætate. 3. Sempronio, augurum collegii antistite. 4. Imperatoris

<sup>13</sup> Seccessio, secession. <sup>14</sup> Curvatus, curved. <sup>15</sup> Scita, decreed. <sup>16</sup> Sumptuosus, sumptuous. <sup>17</sup> Albus, white. <sup>18</sup> Ponticus, Pontic. <sup>19</sup> Effortus, effort. <sup>20</sup> Antemnatis, Antemnatis. <sup>21</sup> Tranquillitas, tranquillity. <sup>22</sup> Nativus, native. <sup>23</sup> Lameness, lameness. <sup>24</sup> Settling, settling. <sup>25</sup> Musica, music. <sup>26</sup> Exterior, exterior. <sup>27</sup> Surrender, surrender. <sup>28</sup> Quadratus, square. <sup>29</sup> Sepulchra, sepulchra. <sup>30</sup> Corporatio, corporation. <sup>31</sup> Foul, putidus. <sup>32</sup> Pomptina, Pomptina. <sup>33</sup> Conspirator, conspirator.

Romani auctoritate. 5. Vitæ humanæ brevitate. 6. Magnæ hominum <sup>34</sup>voluptati. 7. Illyriæ civitatibus, populo Romano infestis. 8. Magnâ satellitum copiâ. 9. Philosophia et grammatica, ingenii cotes. 10. Sociorum pedites, Pœnorum <sup>35</sup>præsentia ignari. 11. Comitum pedes, itinere fessi. 12. Hannone et Hasdrubale, Pœnorum interpretibus. 13. Equitum Romanorum ordine. 14. Lætâ filiorum ac nepotum multitudine. 15. Civitatum Græcarum libertatem. 16. Immensâ militum prædâ. 17. Duumvirorum decreta, civitatis salutis contraria. 18. Nefariâ hominum <sup>36</sup>perditorum societate. 19. Universâ servitutis <sup>37</sup>abrogatione.

K-CLASS. 1. The fiery furnaces of <sup>38</sup>Vulcan. 2. The advantages of a long peace. 3. By the <sup>39</sup>loud voice of the <sup>40</sup>heralds. 4. To a code of the <sup>41</sup>present laws. 5. By pebble-stone and <sup>42</sup>gravel, the <sup>43</sup>material of the <sup>44</sup>Flaminian way. 6. By the spies of the emperors Tiberius and Nero. 7. To the just prayers of the allies. 8. The roots and <sup>45</sup>foundations of <sup>46</sup>truth. 9. The opinions of the leaders, contrary to peace. 10. By the clear (clarus) light of the sun. 11. By a rotation (ordo) of the <sup>47</sup>customary field-fruits. 12. To Cornelia, the consort of Cæsar. 13. To Servius Tullius and Tarquinius Priscus, kings of the Romans. 14. The <sup>48</sup>herdsmen of the royal flocks. 15. By the <sup>49</sup>answers of the Roman soothsayers. 16. The high arches (obj.) of the <sup>50</sup>Tullian jail. 17. To a garden, full of beautiful shrubs and trees. 18. Fair conditions of a future peace. 19. The breast of the centurion, full of scars. 20. The soldiers, ignorant of the plans of the leaders. 21. The judges, devoted to the <sup>51</sup>will of the dictator.

1. <sup>52</sup>Crassis tauri cervicibus. 2. Culices, hominibus molesti. 3. Gregeſ eximii, Apollini sacri. 4. Sevêris Gelonis legibus. 5. Dario Persarum regi. 6. Splendidâ siderum lunæque luce. 7. Cæsaris necem, populo Romano <sup>53</sup>calamitosam. 8. Lupâ, Romuli et Remi nutrice. 9. Inauditâ ducum temeritate. 10. Indices mercêdis ac prædæ cupidi. 11. Ridiculis haruspicum erroribus.

B. SENTENCES.

1. Romæ incendium Neroni principi attribuitur. 2. Samnites milites Romanos arma abjicere jubent. 3. Apollinis sacerdotes Cræso ambigue respondent. 4. Oculi animi indices esse solent. 5. Populus Romanus Tarquinium regem expellit. 6. Antistites novi a centumviris creantur. 7. Ararii publici custodes a principe <sup>54</sup>nominantur. 8. Fabricii mores ac <sup>55</sup>probitatem sæpe admiror. 9. Philippus, Macedonum rex, libertati Græcæ periculosisse videtur. 10. Arbores fruticesque serere semper expedit. 11. Sevêra præceptorum disciplina juventuti molesta esse videtur. 12. Homines nefarios aut interficere aut expellere civitatis salutis conducit. 13. Cæsar interpretes orationem litteris (paper) mandare jubet. 14. Pyrrhus, Epiri rex, lapide interficitur. 15. Scipio Jugurtham, Masinissæ Numidiæ regis nepotem, populo Romano com-mendat. 16. Germāni a Cæsare Gallis obsides restituere coguntur. 17. Oppidi muri arietibus concutuntur. 18. Agricolaë segetes <sup>56</sup>demetere jam incipiunt. 19. Pacem armis assequi præstat. 20. Veneris steila lucem eximiam <sup>57</sup>edere incipit.

<sup>34</sup> Voluptas, pleasure. <sup>35</sup> Præsentia, presence. <sup>36</sup> Perditus, abandoned. <sup>37</sup> Abrogatio, abolition. <sup>38</sup> Vulcan, the god of fire and mechanic arts, Vulcanus. <sup>39</sup> Loud, altus. <sup>40</sup> Herald, præco. <sup>41</sup> Present, hodiernus. <sup>42</sup> Gravel, glare. <sup>43</sup> Material, materia. <sup>44</sup> Flaminian, Flaminianus. <sup>45</sup> Foundation, fundamentum. <sup>46</sup> Truth, veritas. <sup>47</sup> Customary, solitus. <sup>48</sup> Herdsman, pastor. <sup>49</sup> Answer, responsum. <sup>50</sup> Tullian, Tullianus. <sup>51</sup> Will, voluntas. <sup>52</sup> Crassus, thick. <sup>53</sup> Calamitosus, disastrous. <sup>54</sup> Nominare, to appoint. <sup>55</sup> Probitas, probity.

1. Virtue cannot be allured by pay. 2. Persens directs the ambassadors to <sup>58</sup>tempt the rulers of the cities of Illyria by money and the promises of royal favor (favor). 3. The inhabitants refuse to carry help (ops) to the sick soldiers. 4. Impious men seem now to be the leaders and standard-bearers of inexperienced youth. 5. The soldiers of Cæsar cross the Rubico. 6. We remember well the crimes (scelus) of the rebellious leaders. 7. The horsemen wish to attack the columns of the enemies. 8. The ambassadors forbid the king to cross the boundary. 9. The crops seem to be devoured by mice. 10. Vesuvius begins to throw out hot ashes and stones. 11. The teachers give (tribuere) great praise to the beginners. 12. It is better to defend the safety of the state. 13. It is <sup>59</sup>unprecedented to give (deferre) to a Roman knight the honor of a triumph. 14. The Roman people declare (indicare) war to Perseus, king of the Macedonians. 15. The <sup>60</sup>inhabitants of Larium are not willing to surrender the city to the Roman general. 16. The horsemen of the Numidians cannot <sup>61</sup>break the columns of the Roman footsoldiers. 17. Lawsuits generally are unpleasant for both, the <sup>62</sup>complainant and the defendant (reus). 18. The senators cease to be the guardians of the laws. 19. The Pomptinian marshes are pernicious to the health of men. 20. It is expedient to the Patricians to repeal the <sup>63</sup>Hortensian law. 21. It is preferable to become a chief-priest. 22. Conscience seems to be the <sup>64</sup>incorruptible judge of men. 23. We will not offer (subjicere) the neck to the <sup>65</sup>executioner. 24. <sup>66</sup>Barren fields cannot produce (ferre) an abundance of good fruits.

LESSON XXVII.

THIRD DECLENSION.—VOWEL-STEMS AND IRREGULAR NOUNS.

§ 172. 1. The nouns of the third declension with VOWEL-STEMS have the vowel i as characteristic, which is either blended with or absorbed by the case-terminations § 145. The case-terminations of the vowel-stems present the following scheme:

<sup>56</sup> Demetere, to harvest. <sup>57</sup> Edere, to give out. <sup>58</sup> To tempt, tentare. <sup>59</sup> Unprecedented, inauditus. <sup>60</sup> Larinus, an inhabitant of Larium. <sup>61</sup> To break, perrumpere. <sup>62</sup> Complainant, actor. <sup>63</sup> Hortensian, Hortensius. <sup>64</sup> Incorruptus. <sup>65</sup> Carnifex. <sup>66</sup> Aridus.

SINGULAR.

N. is, es, s, NEUT. e or —

G. is

D. i

A. em (im), NEUT. like Nom.

V. like Nom.

A. ē (ī)

PLURAL.

N. ēs, NEUT. ia

G. ium

D. ibus

A. īs (ēs), NEUT. ia

V. like Nom.

A. like Dat.

Rem. 1. From a comparison of the case-terminations of the consonant- and vowel-stems we easily see, in which cases the characteristic i of the vowel-stems is absorbed by the ending proper, and in which case it is blended with it. The three principal cases, in which the characteristic i always appears, are: 1. The genitive plural (ium), 2. The accusative plural of all genders (īs and ia), 3. The nominative plural of the neuters (ia). The termination im in the accusative, and ī in the ablative singular likewise show the characteristic i, but these terminations occur in a few nouns only (§ 179).

Rem. 2. The termination īs in the accusative plural belongs to the classical period of the language. Later this termination became obsolete, and the nouns with vowel-stems assumed the same termination (ēs), as those with consonant-stems.

§ 173. 2. A given noun with a VOWEL-STEM is declined by attaching the case-terminations § 172 to its declension-stem. The declension-stem is found by removing the termination is of the genitive singular.

Rem. 3. In nouns with vowel-stems we must distinguish between the DECLENSION-STEM of the noun and its TRUE STEM. The latter always terminates in the characteristic i, while DECLENSION-STEM is the TRUE stem without its vowel-characteristic, being merely assumed for facilitating the inflection of a noun, which is easier performed by joining the vowel-characteristic with the terminations proper. Thus the TRUE stem of civis is civi, s being the ENDING of the nominative. But the DECLENSION-STEM of civis is civ, is being the CASE-TERMINATION of the nominative, that is the ending, combined with the characteristic.

§ 174. 3. The nouns with vowel-stems are divided into three classes: 1. The REGULAR VOWEL-STEMS. 2. The LIQUID-MUTE STEMS. 3. The IRREGULAR VOWEL-STEMS.

REGULAR VOWEL-STEMS.

§ 175. VOCABULARY.

Ædes, *is, f. a temple (in the plur. a | ædilis, is, m. an ædile, chief of police house) | and public building

* If, as termination of the genitive, the mere case-termination is is given in this vocabulary, it is meant that these letters must be substituted for the nominative-terminations is, es, or e.

aequalis, is, m. a contemporary affinis, is, c. g. a relative by marriage, connection Alpes, pl. t. (st. Alpi), f. the Alps altaria, pl. t. (st. altāri), n. an altar amnis, is, m. a stream animal, ālis, n. an animal apis, is, f. a bee Atheniensis, is, m. an Athenian auris, is, f. the ear
 avis, is, f. a bird axis, is, m. axletree, the axis of the earth buris, is, f. the tail of a plough caeles, is, f. murder, slaughter calcar, āris, n. a spur canālis, is, m. a conduit-pipe, canal canis, is, c. g. a dog Carthaginiensis, is, m. a Carthaginian civis, is, c. g. a citizen clades, is, f. a defeat classis, is, f. a fleet clavis, is, f. a key cochlear, āris, n. a spoon collis, is, m. a hill corbis, is, f. a basket crinis, is, m. a hair ensis, is, m. a sword fames, is, f. hunger familiāris, is, m. a friend fascis, is, m. a bundle of rods (carried by the lictors) febris, is, f. fever
 feles, is, f. a cat
 fides, is, f. (usually in the plur.) a string (made of guts)
 finis, is, m. end (plur. boundary) funāle, is, n. a torch funis, is, m. a rope fustis, is, m. a stick hostis, is, c. g. an enemy ignis, is, m. fire juvenis, is, m.<sup>2</sup> a young man, youth mare, is, n. the sea
 mensis, m. a month
 laquear or lacunar, āris, n. a pannel-ceiling messis, is, f. a harvest

mœnia, pl. t. (st. mœni) walls (of a city) monile, is, n. a necklace nares, pl. t. (st. nāri), f. nostrils, nose natalis, is, m. birthday (in the plur. parentage) navis, is, f. a ship
 nubes, is, f. a cloud orbis, is, m. a circle (orbis terrarum, the world) ovile, is, n. a sheep-stable ovis, is, f. a sheep palumbes, is, c. g. a wood-pigeon panis, is, m. bread par, pāris, n. a pair pellis, is, f. a skin pelvis, is, f. a basin piscis, is, m. fish postis, is, m. a post pulvinar, āris, n. a cushion puppis, is, f. the stern of a ship puteal, ālis, n. an inclosure
 restis, is, f. a cord rete, is, n. a net
 rupes, f. a rock
 secūris, is, f. an axe sedes, is, f. a seat sentes, pl. t. (st. senti) m. thorns sitis, is, f. thirst sodālis, is, m. companion testis, is, c. g. witness Tiberis, is, m. the Tiber tibiāle, is, n. a legging tigris, is, c. g. a tiger torquis (torques), is, m. neck-chain tribunal, ālis, n. a court, tribunal turris, is, f. a tower tussis, is, f. cough unguis, is, m. a finger-nail valis, is, f. a valley
 vates, is, m. a seer, poet vectigal, ālis, n. a toll, tax vectis, is, m. a rail, lever vermis, is, m. a worm vestis, is, f. a garment vis (vim vi), f. force, power (plur. vires, strength)
 vulpes, is, f. a fox

<sup>1</sup> Hostis is an enemy, with whom our country is at war; inimicus is a private enemy and adversarius any kind of antagonist. <sup>2</sup> Juvenis sometimes, but very rarely, is used as a feminine, of females.

§ 176. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.                           | PLURAL.                              |
|-------------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| N. Civis, a citizen          | N. cives, citizens            |
| G. civis, of a citizen       | G. civium, of citizens        |
| D. civi, to a citizen        | D. civibus, to citizens       |
| A. civem, a citizen          | A. civis, citizens            |
| V. civis, O citizen!         | V. cives, O citizens!         |
| A. cive, by a citizen        | A. civibus, by citizens       |
| N. Clades, a defeat          | N. clades, defeats            |
| G. cladis, of a defeat       | G. cladum, of defeats         |
| D. cladi, to a defeat        | D. cladibus, to defeats       |
| A. cladem, a defeat          | A. cladis, defeats            |
| V. clades, O defeat!         | V. clades, O defeats!         |
| A. clade, by a defeat        | A. cladibus, by defeats       |
| N. Ovile, a sheep-stable     | N. ovilia, sheep-stables      |
| G. ovilis, of a sheep-stable | G. ovilium, of sheep-stables  |
| D. ovili, to a sheep-stable  | D. ovilibus, to sheep-stables |
| A. ovile, a sheep-stable     | A. ovilia, sheep-stables      |
| V. ovile, O sheep-stable!    | V. ovilia, O sheep-stables!   |
| A. ovili, by a sheep-stable  | A. ovilibus, by sheep-stables |
| N. Animal, an animal         | N. animalia, animals          |
| G. animālis, of an animal    | G. animalium, of animals      |
| D. animāli, to an animal     | D. animalibus, to animals     |
| A. animal, an animal         | A. animalia, animals          |
| V. animal, O animal!         | V. animalia, O animals!       |
| A. animāli, by an animal     | A. animalibus, by animals     |

§ 177. 4. The regular vowel-stems of the masculine and feminine gender have the case-termination is or es in the nominative singular, in which i is the characteristic, and s the ENDING. In a number of nouns the characteristic i in the nominative is changed into e (clades, caedes, fames, &c.)

The NEUTERS refuse the ending s, and either change the characteristic i into e (mare, rete, tibiāle, &c.), or drop it altogether, which is the case in many stems, terminating in āli and āri (vectigal, cochlear, lacunar, &c.) Hence the final letters of the neuters with vowel-stems are e, al, or ar.

Rem. 4. All nouns, which have the final letters, mentioned above, have VOWEL-STEMS, unless excepted by special rules, contained in the preceding two lessons, which we briefly review here:

a. Of the nouns in is two belong to the S-class (civis and pulvis § 158), four to the T-class (lis, Samnis, lapis and cuspis, § 167), and two to the N-class (sanguis and pollis, § 189).

b. Of the nouns in es one (the pr. n. Ceres, § 158) belongs to the S-class, and many to the T-class (miles, equus, hospes, seges, paries, obscus, &c., § 165). But the rule is, that nouns in es are declined like clades. Thus the male proper names in es, as Verres, Xerxes, Themistocles, &c., must be declined as vowel-stems.

c. The nouns in e, except those taken from the Greek (p. 335, 7), all are neuters of the vowel-class, while of those in al and ar a few belong to the L- and R-classes. (§ 147, 157.) The vowel a in these latter is short, while in the nouns of the vowel-class it is long (Hannibālis, Caesāris; but vectigālīs, calcāris).

Rem. 5. The nouns juvenis and canis are declined by the case-terminations of the CONSONANT-STEMS (G. pl. juvenum, canum; Acc. pl. juvenes, canes).

§ 178. 5. The GENITIVE of the masculines and feminines in is is like the nominative. The nouns in es and the neuters in e change these terminations in the genitive into is, as clades, G. cladis; mare, G. maris. The neuters in al and ar substitute ālis and āris for these final letters in the genitive, as tribūnāl-tribunālis, calcār-calcāris.

§ 179. 6. The following nouns in is take the termination im, instead of em in the ACCUSATIVE SINGULAR:

1. The names of RIVERS and CITIES, as Tiberis, <sup>1</sup>Visurgis, <sup>2</sup>Araris, <sup>3</sup>Albis, <sup>4</sup>Hispalis;

2. The feminine nouns vis, sitis, tussis, buris, febris, pelvis, puppis, restis, turris, secūris.

Rem. 6. Vis, sitis, tussis and buris, to which the unclassical words ravis and amussis may be added, always take the termination im in the accusative singular. The other six nouns mentioned above, some times are found with the regular termination em.

Rem. 7. Vis in the singular occurs in nominative, accusative and ablative only (vis, vīm, vi). The plural irregularly forms circs, virium, &c., and is complete.

§ 180. 7. The following nouns have the termination i, instead of e, in the ABLATIVE SINGULAR:

1. The NEUTERS in e, al and ar, as mari, tribunāli, calcāri.

<sup>1</sup> Visurgis, a river in Germany, the modern Weser. <sup>2</sup> Araris [more commonly Arar], a river in Gaul, the modern Saone. <sup>3</sup> Albis, the river Elbe. <sup>4</sup> Hispalis, a city in Spain, the modern Sevilla.

But the names of CITIES in e take the regular termination e, as Caere, Reāte, Abl. Caere, Reāte.

2. Those nouns, which have im in the accusative, and generally navis and ignis. But restis always makes reste.

3. Those APPELLATIVE nouns in ālis and āris, which originally are ADJECTIVES, as familiāris, sodālis, aequālis, canālis.

4. The names of MONTHS in is, as <sup>5</sup>Aprīlis, <sup>6</sup>Quintīlis, Sextīlis.

§ 181. 8. Gender.

1. Nouns in lis and nis are MASCULINE, except vallis and pellis.

2. Axis, ensis, fascis, fustis, mensis, orbis, piscis, postis, torquis, unguis, vectis, vermis, and the pl. t. sentes are MASCULINE.

3. All other nouns in is and es, denoting THINGS or BEASTS, are FEMININE. But anguis, canis, palumbes and tigris are of common gender. See § 197.

4. The nouns in e, al and ar, belonging to this class, are NEUTER.

LIQUID-MUTE STEMS.

§ 182. VOCABULARY.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Adolescens, tis, m. a young man, a youth             | Mars (Mavors), tis, m. the god of war           |
| animans, tis, m. f. & n. a creature                  | mens, tis, f. mind                              |
| ars, tis, f. art                                     | merx, cis, f. ware                              |
| arx, cis, f. a castle, fortress                      | mons, tis, m. mountain                          |
| calx, cis, f. lime, the goal in a race-course        | mors, tis, f. death                             |
| cliens, tis, c. g. a client                          | occidens, tis, m. the west                      |
| cohors, tis, f. a cohort (the 10th part of a legion) | oriens, m. the east                             |
| dens, tis, m. a tooth                                | parens, tis, c. g. a parent (m. in plural)      |
| falx, cis, f. a sickle                               | pars, tis, f. a part                            |
| fons, tis, m. a spring, fountain                     | pons, tis, m. a bridge                          |
| frons, tis, f. forehead, front                       | puls, tis, f. pottage                           |
| frons (fruns), dis, f. foliage                       | rudens, tis, m. a rope                          |
| gens, tis, f. a tribe, nation, family                | serpens, tis, c. g. a serpent                   |
| glans, dis, f. an acorn, a bullet                    | sors, tis, f. lot, fate                         |
| infans, tis, c. g. a child (less than 7 years)       | stirps, pis, f. a stem, lineage                 |
| juglans, dis, f. a walnut                            | torrens, tis, m. a torrent                      |
| lens, tis, f. a lentil                               | tridens, tis, m. a three-pronged spear, trident |
|  | urbs, bis, f. a city                            |
|  | Vejens, tis, m. a Vejentian                     |

<sup>5</sup> Aprīlis, the month of April. <sup>6</sup> Quintīlis and Sextīlis, the months of July and August in republican Rome.

§ 183. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.                | PLURAL.                   |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| N. Urbs, a city          | N. urbes, cities          |
| G. urbis, of a city      | G. urbium, of cities      |
| D. urbi, to a city       | D. urbibus, to cities     |
| A. urbem, a city         | A. urbis, cities          |
| V. urbs, O city!         | V. urbes, O cities!       |
| A. urbe, by a city       | A. urbibus, by cities     |
| N. Parens, a parent      | N. parentes, parents      |
| G. parentis, of a parent | G. parentium, of parents  |
| D. parenti, to a parent  | D. parentibus, to parents |
| A. parentem, a parent    | A. parentis, parents      |
| V. parens, O parent!     | V. parentes, O parents!   |
| A. parente, by a parent  | A. parentibus, by parents |
| N. Merx, a ware          | N. merces, wares          |
| G. mercis, of a ware     | G. mercium, of wares      |
| D. merci, to a ware      | D. mercibus, to wares     |
| A. mercem, a ware        | A. mercis, wares          |
| V. merx, O ware!         | V. merces, O wares!       |
| A. merce, by a ware      | A. mercibus, by wares     |

§ 184. 9. If the declension-stem of a noun terminates in two consonants, the former of which is a LIQUID, and the latter a MUTE, the true stem always is a VOWEL-STEM. Stems of this kind generally drop the vowel-characteristic i in the nominative singular, and are then called liquid-mute stems. They also drop the mutes t or d, preceding the ending s (§ 166), and blend the mute c with this ending into x.

| NOM. SING. | TRUE STEM. | DECLENSION-STEM. | GEN. SING. |
|------------|------------|------------------|------------|
| Urbs       | urbi       | urb              | urbis      |
| infans     | infanti    | infant           | infantis   |
| cohors     | cohorti    | cohort           | cohortis   |
| glans      | glandi     | gland            | glandis    |
| falx       | falei      | falc             | falcis     |
| arx        | arci       | arc              | arcis      |

Rem. 8. L, n and r are the only liquids, that may precede a T- or K-mute in vowel-stems. The only liquid-mute stems with P-mutes are urbs and stirps.

Hence nouns, whose nominative-termination s is immediately preceded by l, n, or r, always belong to the liquid-mute stems, which require the restoration of the dropped T-mute.

§ 185. 10. The nouns, belonging to this class, are declined by attaching the case-terminations § 172 to the declension-stem. The GENITIVE is formed by changing the termination s of the nominative, if preceded by l, n, or r, into tis or dis, and final x into cis.

Rem. 9. The genitive in dis occurs only in frons (foliage), glans, juglans, and a few rarer nouns. The K-mute in liquid-mute stems can be c only, not g.

§ 186. 11. The gender of the liquid-mute stems is the FEMININE. But mons, pons, fons, dens, occidens, oriens, rudens, torrens, tridens are MASCULINE, and animans is used in all three genders.

IRREGULAR VOWEL-STEMS.

§ 187. 12. Several nouns with vowel-stems assume the regular nominative termination of one of the consonant-classes, and are called IRREGULAR VOWEL-STEMS. They are the following:

1. With terminations of the R-class, in ber and ter:

Insuber, bris, m. an Insubrian    uter, tris, m. a bag imber, bris, m. a shower    venter, tris, m. the stomach, linter, tris, f. a boat    belly

2. With the nominative of the N-class: caro, carnis (§ 149);

3. With nominatives of the S-class: glis, gliris, m. a dormouse; mas, maris, a male;

4. With nominatives of the T-class: lis, Samnis, the civic nouns in as, ātis, as Arpīnas, and the pl. t. Quirītes, optimātes and penātes (§ 165);

5. With nominatives of the K-class: fauces, pl. t. (st. fauci) f. throat, defiles; nox, noctis, night (§ 165); nix, nivis, f. snow.

All these nouns are declined by the case-terminations of the vowel-stems (G. pl. imbrium, lintrium, carnium, marium, nivium, &c.; Acc. pl. imbrīs, lintrīs, &c.)

Rem. 10. The neuters jus and os, ossis, take the termination ium in the genitive plural, but form the other cases like consonant-stems (NOM. PLUR. jura and ossa).

Fraus forms the gen. pl. fraudum or fraudium.

IRREGULAR NOUNS WITH CONSONANT-STEMS

§ 188. 13. The following nouns have irregular characteristics (§ 143, Rem. 3):

Sus, suis, c. g. (char. u), swine, hog, sow (G. pl. suum, D. pl. subus or suibus);

grus, gruis, c. g. (char. u), a crane (G. pl. gruum);

bos, bōvis, c. g. (char. v), an ox, a steer, a cow, (G. pl. bōum, D. & Abl. pl. bubus or bōbus);

Juppiter, Jovis, (char. v), Jupiter, the supreme god.

§ 189. 14. The following nouns have stems, not corresponding to the forms of their nominatives:

|                                |   |
|--------------------------------|---|
| Sanguis, īnis, m. blood | cor, cordis, n. heart (§ 165)                  |
| pollis, īnis, m. pollen | lac, lactis, n. milk ( without plural ) |

|                                    |  |
|------------------------------------|--|
| senex, senis, m. an old man | supellex, G. supellectilis, f. household-articles, a store ( without plural ). |
|------------------------------------|--|

Sanguis, pollis and senex have stems, belonging to the N-class; the stems of cor and lac belong to the T-class, and the stem of supellex to the L-class.

All these nouns are declined with the case-terminations of consonant-stems.

§ 190. 15. Indeclinable nouns are those which have the same form in all their cases. The most usual of them are: fas, nefas, mane, instar and pondo.

Rem. 11. Fas and nefas (right and wrong) are especially used as PREDICATIVE nouns, with IMPERSONAL subjects (fas est, it is lawful; nefas est, it is unlawful, it is a crime). They are used in NOM., ACC. and VOC. SING. only. Mane (morning), which occurs in the NOM., ACC. and ABL. SING., mostly is used as an ADVERB of time (early in the morning). Instar (likeness), occurring in NOM., ACC. and VOC. SING., generally is construed with an attributive genitive, and answers to the English adjective and adverb like (montis instar, like a mountain). Pondo (a pound) is used in NOM., ACC. and ABL. of both numbers.

EXERCISES.

Write the following paradigms: Navis longa a long ship, nubes atra a black cloud, monile pulchrum a beautiful necklace, vectigal molestum a burdensome toll, stirps incognita an unknown lineage, pons ligneus a wooden bridge, falx ferrea an iron sickle, linter augusta a narrow boat, sanguis ruber red blood (in the singular), senex moribundus a dying old man.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

REGULAR VOWEL-CLASS. 1. The small harvest of the Athenians. 2. The sight of a rare bird. 3. By the key of Theodorus of Samos. 4. The long ships of the Carthaginians (Carthaginensis). 5. To the small fleet of the enemies (hostis). 6. The costly garment (obj.) of Xerxes. 7. By a black sheep. 8. To the Carthaginians, the perpetual enemies of the Romans. 9. The solid<sup>2</sup>rafts of the<sup>4</sup>Chalcidians. 10. The<sup>5</sup>remote boundaries of Germany. 11. The fertile valleys (obj.) of the Alps. 12. The<sup>6</sup>grass-bearing hills of Boeotia. 13. Worms, injurious to plants. 14. By the<sup>7</sup>iron lever of the mechanic. 15. Multitudes of small fishes. 16. By the perpetual fire of the<sup>8</sup>Vestals. 17. By a high tower of the enemies. 18. The Hypanis (obj.), a broad river of Sarmatia. 19. By the<sup>9</sup>flag-ship of the Macedonians. 20. The unpleasant thirst (obj.) of the soldiers. 21. By the great force of the winds. 22. By the extraordinary<sup>10</sup>acuteness of<sup>11</sup>hunting-dogs. 23. The crimes (scelus) of impious young men. 24. The dangerous fever (obj.) of the praetor. 25. The sight of the wonderful strength of Nero of<sup>12</sup>Antium. 26. By the great hunger of the Athenians. 27. To the<sup>13</sup>incorruptible<sup>14</sup>integrity of Aristides. 28. The<sup>15</sup>heavy taxes of the citizens. 29. The secret<sup>16</sup>rooms of the<sup>17</sup>conspirators. 30. The ancient seats (obj.) of the Saxons. 31. By the<sup>18</sup>Egean sea, full of renowned Islands. 32. By Cære, an old and renowned town of Etruria. 33. Of the long walls (maenia) of the Athenians. 34. A<sup>19</sup>marble temple (obj.—aedes) of Juno. 35. The golden house (obj.—aedes) of Nero. 36. By the month of<sup>20</sup>March, the beginning of spring.

1. Varronem et Scervolam, Ciceronis aequalis. 2. Aniēne, exiguō Latii amne. 3. Apium Atticārum melle. 4. Acūtis<sup>21</sup>talpae auribus. 5. Fordam Julii Caesaris caedem. 6. Immensae Persarum classis excidium. 7. Crinium humanorum pulchritudine. 8. Ciceronis familiarium epistolae. 9. Incerto vitae humanae fine. 10. Hannibalem atque Antiochum, assiduos nominis Romani hostes. 11. Splendidā Cleopatrae reginae navi. 12. Variis mensium Graecorum nominibus. 13. Roma, orbis terrarum domina. 14. Subita nubium<sup>23</sup>collectione. 15. Navis puppim, gubernatoris sedem. 16. Aureos principum torques. 17. Turrim ligneam, oppidi moenibus perniciosam. 18. Immodica Siciliae provinciae vectigalia. 19. Subita virium valetudinisque<sup>25</sup>defectione. 20. Invicta juvenum Romanorum virtute.

LIQUID-MUTE STEMS. 1. The commerce of Hispalis, a prosperous city of Spain. 2. The long stems (obj.) of pine-trees. 3. By the divine lineage of Achilles. 4. To the pernicious defeat of the Vejentians. 5. By the errors of the human mind (mens). 6. By the happy lot of the young men (adolescens). 7. The nature of the hot springs of Campania. 8. By the dark foliage of the trees. 9. To the high forehead of Cesar. 10. Acorns (obj.), the food of animals. 11. The valleys of the <sup>26</sup>Pyrenean mountains. 12. The complete teeth (obj.) of children (infans). 13. By the sudden death (mors) of the parents. 14. The <sup>27</sup>handles of <sup>28</sup>curved sickles. 15. To a neighboring fortress of the enemies.

<sup>1</sup> Belonging to Samos, Samius. <sup>2</sup> Solid, solidus. <sup>3</sup> Raft, ratis. <sup>4</sup> Chalcidian, Chalcidensis. <sup>5</sup> Remote, remotus. <sup>6</sup> Grass-bearing, herbifer. <sup>7</sup> Iron, adj. ferreus. <sup>8</sup> A Vestal, Vestal virgin, priestess of Vesta, Vestalis. <sup>9</sup> Flag-ship, navis praetoria. <sup>10</sup> Acuteness, acumen. <sup>11</sup> Hunting, venaticus. <sup>12</sup> Antium forms the civic noun Antias. <sup>13</sup> Incorruptible, incorruptus. <sup>14</sup> Integrity, integritas. <sup>15</sup> Heavy, molestus. <sup>16</sup> Room, conclave. <sup>17</sup> Conspirator, conjuratus. <sup>18</sup> Egean, Aegaeus. <sup>19</sup> Marmorean, Martius. <sup>20</sup> March, Martius. <sup>21</sup> Talpa, a mole. <sup>22</sup> The word crinis in the singular denotes a single hair, and the English singular hair, if it means a collection of hairs, always must be translated by the plural of crinis. <sup>23</sup> Collectio, a gathering. <sup>24</sup> Gubernator, a helmsman. <sup>25</sup> Defectio, a falling.

2. Adolescentium proborum labores. 2. Artium magistri (master) <sup>29</sup>diplomate. 3. Mutua clientium <sup>30</sup>patronorumque officia. 4. Servus Socratis fronti. 5. Martem, Romuli Remique patrem. 6. Mentis egregiae testimonia. 7. Olympum et Ossam, altos Thessaliae montis. 8. Ignominiosam Neronis principis morte. 9. Exiguam civium Romanorum partem. 10. Exitiosum serpentium viro. 11. <sup>31</sup>Urbem Romam, aeternum magnitudinis humanae monumentum.

IRREGULAR NOUNS. VOWEL- AND CONSONANT-STEMS. 1. The frequent showers (obj.) of <sup>32</sup>mountainous countries. 2. <sup>33</sup>Milan, the <sup>34</sup>capital of the Insubrians. 3. The new boats (obj.) of <sup>35</sup>fishermen. 4. Great <sup>36</sup>swarms of dormice. 5. The great expenses of lawsuits. 6. By the <sup>37</sup>defection of the <sup>38</sup>inhabitants of Fidenae. 7. The books of the Attic nights. 8. The frequent snows (obj.) of the Alps. 9. To a large drove (grex) of swine. 10. Swine, <sup>39</sup>hateful to Venus. 11. The high (magnus) price of <sup>40</sup>Melian cranes. 12. To Juno, Jupiter's consort. 13. By Jupiter, the father of god and men. 14. White steers (bos) sacred to Apollo and Jupiter. 15. The <sup>41</sup>powerful necks of the oxen. 16. By a white cow (bos, see § 197) of extraordinary <sup>42</sup>beauty. 17. To an <sup>43</sup>abundant store of words. 18. By the cold blood of fishes. 19. By the authority of <sup>44</sup>capricious old men.

B. SENTENCES.

1. Subita nubium collectio imbris ac tempestates <sup>45</sup>portendit. 2. <sup>46</sup>Vatium Etruscorum <sup>47</sup>auguria celebrantur. 3. <sup>48</sup>Lauri <sup>49</sup>folia tussim leniunt (to relieve). 4. Clælia Tiberim <sup>50</sup>tranare audet. 5. Romanorum dux Neapolim, <sup>51</sup>Chalcidensium coloniam, occupare statuit. 6. Xerxes Athenas <sup>52</sup>ferro et igni vastat. 7. Manilii, agricolae Romani, ovilia celebrantur. 8. Equos caicariibus <sup>53</sup>concitare solemus. 9. Mel apium labore elicitur. 10. Suum carnem edere Judæis nefas videtur. 11. Populus Romanus urbem Romam Capitoliumque, deorum sedem, relinquere non vult. 12. Siculi agros bubus arare solent. 13. Cohortium Romanarum milites hostium <sup>54</sup>telis aut vulnerantur aut interficiuntur. 14. Populus Romanus gentis externas bellis injustis vexare non vult. 15. A civibus diligere laus magna est. 16. Agricola Italici segetes falceibus demetere solent. 17. Et infantes et senes febri <sup>55</sup>corripiuntur. 18. Spartani arcem Thebanam

<sup>26</sup> Pyrenean, Pyrenæus. <sup>27</sup> Handle, capulus. <sup>28</sup> Curved, curvus. <sup>29</sup> Diploma, a diploma. <sup>30</sup> Patronus, a patron. <sup>31</sup> The phrase "city of Rome" is translated by urbs Roma, or urbs Romana, not by Roma urbs. <sup>32</sup> Mountainous, saltuosus. <sup>33</sup> Milan, Mediolanum. <sup>34</sup> Capital, caput. <sup>35</sup> Fisherman, piscator. <sup>36</sup> Swarm, exâmen. <sup>37</sup> Defectio. <sup>38</sup> Fidenas. <sup>39</sup> Hateful, invisus. <sup>40</sup> Melian, Melicus. <sup>41</sup> Powerful, robustus. <sup>42</sup> Beauty, pulchritudo. <sup>43</sup> Abundant, copiosus. <sup>44</sup> Capricious, morosus. <sup>45</sup> Portendere, to forebode. <sup>46</sup> Our grammars state, that vates and some other nouns, besides those mentioned Rem. 5, take um, not ium, in the GEN. PLUR. But a recent, more accurate examination of the best manuscripts shows, that vates is no exception in the formation of the GEN. PLUR. <sup>47</sup> Augurium, an augury. <sup>48</sup> Laurus, a laurel-tree. <sup>49</sup> Folium, a leaf. <sup>50</sup> Tranare, to cross by swimming. <sup>51</sup> Chalcidensis, a Chalcidian, an inhabitant of Chalcis. <sup>52</sup> Ferrum in coordination with ignis always is used instead of gladium. <sup>53</sup> Concitare, to urge. <sup>54</sup> Telum, dart. <sup>55</sup> Corripere, to seize.

fraude occupant. 19. Morbi sanguinem virisque consumere videntur. 20. Aquam coquere niveque <sup>56</sup>refrigerare Neronis principis <sup>57</sup>inventum est. 21. Fulvia, <sup>58</sup>infortunata Antonii uxor, ab Attico, Ciceronis familiari, adjuvatur. 22. Milites fame ac siti hostis aggredi coguntur. 23. Legiones Romanæ montium fauces intrare incipiunt.

1. The <sup>59</sup>pleasures of the ears and eyes cannot be compared to the <sup>60</sup>enjoyments of the mind (mens). 2. We prefer <sup>61</sup>coarse bread to Melian cranes. <sup>62</sup>Thasian nuts and <sup>63</sup>Iberian <sup>64</sup>chestnuts. 3. The citizens design to surrender the fortress to the leader of the enemies. 4. Bad wares seldom find a buyer. 5. The mind seems to be a <sup>65</sup>tenant of the body. 6. The enemies are prevented by Fabius' legion from passing the <sup>66</sup>foot of the mountains. 7. Themistocles puts to flight and <sup>67</sup>routes the immense fleet of Xerxes. 8. The outer walls of the city are defended by a high tower. 9. The soldiers are afraid of crossing the river Visurgis. 10. The general permits the citizens to <sup>68</sup>repel force by force. 11. The consul endeavors to divide the strength of the enemies. 12. The teacher knows how to <sup>69</sup>inspire the minds of the young men. 13. To lazy youths we must <sup>70</sup>apply the spurs. 14. The horsemen are compelled by showers of bullets to <sup>71</sup>find safety by flight. 15. The foot-soldiers are able to cross the Tiber by boats. 16. The soldiers cross a deep stream by bags, <sup>72</sup>inflated by air. 17. <sup>73</sup>Carrots relieve cough, and cure <sup>74</sup>gripes and <sup>75</sup>sickness of the liver. 18. Pyrrhus delivers the <sup>76</sup>guard of the <sup>77</sup>Tarentian castle to Milo. 19. The Roman legions <sup>78</sup>invade the frontiers (finis) of the Macedonians. 20. Bees feed the child Hiero with (by) honey. 21. Demetrius dares to excuse the impious murder of Alexander. 22. Old men cannot have the strength of young men. 23. The females of <sup>79</sup>fish excel the males in (by) weight. 24. We will not prefer the private rights of the citizens to the public welfare. 25. We prefer to follow the authority of the Athenians. 26. The heads of the conspirators are cut off by the axe of the lictor. 27. The leaders of the <sup>80</sup>Marian faction wish to enter the city of Rome by the <sup>81</sup>Sublician bridge. 28. Pontius Telesinus, the renowned leader of the Samnitiens, is an inveterate enemy of the Roman name. 29. The <sup>82</sup>cold of the nights begins to be unpleasant to the soldiers. 30. The <sup>83</sup>day-lightnings are ascribed to Jupiter, and the <sup>84</sup>night-lightnings to Sumanus. 31. The companions of Ulysses devour the oxen of Apollo. 32. Immense flocks of sheep and oxen are <sup>85</sup>raised by the inhabitants of Arpinum.

<sup>56</sup> Refrigerare, to cool again. <sup>57</sup> Inventum, invention. <sup>58</sup> Infortunata. <sup>59</sup> Voluptas. <sup>60</sup> Oblectamentum. <sup>61</sup> Cranes. <sup>62</sup> Thasius. <sup>63</sup> Ibericus. <sup>64</sup> Gans. <sup>65</sup> Tenant, inquilinus. <sup>66</sup> Transite: "the foot of the mountain." <sup>67</sup> To rout, frondere. <sup>68</sup> Repelere. <sup>69</sup> Care. <sup>70</sup> Admonere. <sup>71</sup> Querre. <sup>72</sup> Tunicus. <sup>73</sup> Carpat, s. ser. The singular of this word is SEPTER, the plural MASCULINE. <sup>74</sup> Par, of torment. <sup>75</sup> Elritudo. <sup>76</sup> Custodia. <sup>77</sup> Tarentinus. <sup>78</sup> Invadere. <sup>79</sup> Remember from your English grammar, that fish must be a PLURAL here. <sup>80</sup> Marianus. <sup>81</sup> Sublicus. <sup>82</sup> Plural in Latin. <sup>83</sup> Day is here translated by the adjective diurnus. <sup>84</sup> By the adjective nocturnus. <sup>85</sup> To raise, alere.

LESSON XXVIII.

SYNOPSIS OF THE GENDER-RULES.

§ 191. 1. The GENDER of nouns, is determined differently, according as they denote 1. PERSONS, or 2. BEASTS, or 3. THINGS WITHOUT LIFE.

The gender of PERSONS and BEASTS is either MASCULINE, FEMININE or COMMON, that of THINGS either MASCULINE, FEMININE or NEUTER.

GENDER OF PERSONAL NOUNS.

§ 192. 2. Nouns denoting PERSONS are either movable or not. Movable nouns (§ 4, c. § 41) are those, which indicate the male and female sexes by different terminations of the same stem. Movable are :

1. Most of the nouns of the second declension in us and er (see § 41) ;

2. Personal nouns of the third declension in en (§ 153), which form their feminines in ina, as :

Flamen—flamina (the wife of a flamen) ;

tibicen—tibicina (a female flute-player) ; fidicen—fidicina, &c.

3. Most personal nouns of the third declension in tor, which form their feminines in trix, as :

Victor—victrix ultor—ultrix (a female avenger) præceptor—præceprix adjutor—adjutrix (a female assistant).

4. Some single nouns of the third declension, as : rex—regina ; nepos—neptis (a grand-daughter) ; hospes—hospita.

§ 193. 3. Personal nouns, not movable, either denote a SINGLE SEX, or are of common gender (§ 142).

1. Those of the first and second declensions denote SINGLE SEXES (§ 142).

2. Those of the third declension with LIQUID stems in l, o, er, or, ur, generally denote single sexes (MASCULINES : consul, prædo, histrion, caupo, pater, frater, augur ; FEMININES : mater, mulier, uxor, soror ; but exsul and fur c. g.) ;

3. Those with MUTE and VOWEL STEMS generally are of COMMON GENDER (civis, infans, parens, comes, heres, præses, sacerdos, dux, &c.), except those, denoting occupations, belonging to males, as miles, eques, judex, etc., and those mentioned § 192, 4.

GENDER OF NOUNS, DENOTING BEASTS.

§ 194. 4. Names of BEASTS (including birds, reptiles, &c.), are either EPICENE, or MOVABLE, or of COMMON GENDER.

§ 195. 5. Epicene are those names of beasts, which for BOTH SEXES have the same gender. These are treated, as if they were THINGS WITHOUT LIFE, their gender, without any distinction of their SEX, being solely determined by the TERMINATION of the word. Thus accipiter, draco, lepus, passer, piscis, vermis, vultur, are MASCULINE, and avis, feles, limax, ovis, vulpes, FEMININE. Names of beasts generally are epicene.

§ 196. 6. Movable are for the most part the names of beasts of the second declension, as :

Asinus—asina, he- and she-ass mulus—mula, he- and she-mule.

cervus—cerva, stag and hind gallus—gallina, cock and hen, &c.

Movable names of beasts generally are masculine, if their sex is not distinguished. Else they assume the gender according to their sex.

Rem. 1. This rule is not always observed, as in columbus—columba (he- and she-dove), where the feminine columba is used for doves without distinction of sex. Thus the two forms simius—simia (ape), lacertus—lacerta (lizard) are promiscuously used, in order to designate apes and lizards without distinction of sex, although in both instances the use of the feminine forms is prevailing.

§ 197. 7. Of common gender are the following names of beasts :

anguis, a snake

anser, a goose or gander

bos, an ox, steer or cow

canis, a dog

dama, (1st decl.), a fallow-deer

grus, a crane

palumbes, a wild pigeon

seps } a snake

serpens }

sus, a hog, a sow

talpa (1st decl.), a mole

tigris, a tiger

They are thus treated :

1. If their sex is not distinguished, anser and bos are MASCULINE, sus and grus FEMININE, and the others are used promiscuously in either gender.

2. If their sex is distinguished, they all assume the gender, corresponding to their sexes.

GENDER OF NOUNS, DENOTING THINGS.

§ 198. RULE I. Nouns, denoting RIVERS of the third declension, are MASCULINE.

Rem. 2. The general rules which our grammars contain about the gender of cities, countries, winds, gems, mountains, &c., have no foundation in truth.

§ 199. RULE II. Indeclinable nouns are NEUTER.

§ 200. RULE III. Nouns of the 1st and 5th (see L. XXXI.) declensions are FEMININE, except the Gallic rivers in a of the 1st, and the nouns dies and meridies of the 5th declension, which are MASCULINE.

Rem. 3. Dies in the singular sometimes is FEMININE.

§ 201. RULE IV. Nouns of the 2d and 4th (L. XXX.) declensions in us are MASCULINE, and those of the 2d in um, and of the 4th in u are NEUTER, except the names of CITIES, TREES and 4 COUNTRIES in us, and the nouns alvus, colus, humus, vannus, domus;—acus, manus, porticus, tribus, Idus, which are FEMININE. Vulgus, virus and pelagus are NEUTER.

§ 202. RULE V. Nouns of the 3d declension in es with genitives in tis and dis, and those in o, or, and os, are MASCULINE.

EXCEPTIONS.

1. In es (GEN. tis or dis): Seges, teges, quies, merces, and compes are FEMININE.

2. In o: Caro and nouns in do, go and io are FEMININE. But ordo, cardo, margo, ligo, pugio, <sup>1</sup>septentrio, <sup>2</sup>papilio, <sup>3</sup>scipio, <sup>4</sup>vespertilio, and harpago, are MASCULINE.

3. In or: Arbor is FEMININE, and ador, aequor, marmor, cor are NEUTER.

4. In os: Cos and dos are FEMININE; os, oris, and os, ossis, are NEUTER.

<sup>1</sup> The north. <sup>2</sup> A butterfly. <sup>3</sup> A staff. <sup>4</sup> A bat.

§ 203. RULE VI. Nouns, terminating in as, aus, x, es with the genitive is, and s, preceded by a consonant, are FEMININE.

EXCEPTIONS.

1. In as: As, assis, is MASCULINE, and vas, vasis, NEUTER.

2. In x: Fornix, <sup>5</sup>calix and those in ex are MASCULINE, except the FEMININES lex, nex, supellex, <sup>6</sup>fuex and the pl. t. preces.

3. In s, preceded by a consonant: Adeps, fons, mons, pons, dens, oriens, occidens, tridens and torrens are MASCULINE.

§ 204. RULE VII. Nouns in is are partly (about half) MASCULINE, partly FEMININE. The masculines are sanguis, cinis, pollis, pulvis, lapis, and those, enumerated § 181. The rest are feminine.

§ 205. RULE VIII. Nouns of the 3d declension in e, l, n, ar, er, ur, us, the single nouns aes, caput, lac, and the nouns, taken from the Greek, in ma are NEUTER.

EXCEPTIONS.

1. In l: Sol, and the plural of sal are MASCULINE.

2. In n: Pecten, lien (milt) and the pl. t. renes are MASCULINE.

3. In er: Aër, agger, asser, carcer, gibber, later, vesper, vomer, imber, uter, reter are MASCULINE. Linter is FEMININE.

4. In us: Tellus, G. tellūris (earth), and all those, having genitives in tis and dis (§ 167), are FEMININE.

Rem. 4. Epicene names of BEASTS, which according to their terminations would be NEUTER, as vultur, turtur, &c., always are of MASCULINE gender.

LESSON XXIX.

ADJECTIVES OF COMMON GENDER.

☞ See IX. of the Vocabularies.

§ 206. 1. The adjectives of common gender attach the case-terminations of the THIRD DECLENSION to their stems. They are of "common gender," because they are not movable, assuming the same terminations in the masculine and feminine genders in their inflection.

<sup>5</sup> A cap. <sup>6</sup> Sediment, dregs.

ADJECTIVES WITH VOWEL-STEMS.

§ 207. 2. These adjectives attach the following case-terminations to their stems :

| SINGULAR. |  | PLURAL. |                     |
|-----------|--|---------|---------------------|
| N.        | is, s, Neut. e, or like Masculine | N.      | es, Neut. ūa |
| G.        | is                                | G.      | um           |
| D.        | i                                 | D.      | ibus         |
| A.        | em, Neut. like Nom.               | A.      | is, Neut. ūa |
| V.        | like Nom.                         | V.      | like Nom.    |
| A.        | i                                 | A.      | like Dat.    |

Rem. 1. Comparing these case-terminations with those of NOUNS with vowel-stems, the principal differences appear to be 1. that the ACC. SING. of the ADJECTIVES never has the termination im, and 2. that their ABL. SING. always has the termination i.

§ 208. 3. We distinguish four classes of adjectives with vowel-stems, which are represented by the following paradigms* :

| SINGULAR.    |         | PLURAL.      |          |
|--------------|---------|--------------|----------|
| Masc. & Fem. | Neuter. | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.  |
| N. Dulcis    | dulce   | N. Dulces    | dulcia   |
| G. dulcis    | dulcis  | G. dulcium   | dulcium  |
| D. dulci     | dulci   | D. dulcibus  | dulcibus |
| A. dulcem    | dulce   | A. dulcis    | dulcia   |
| A. dulci     | dulci   | A. dulcibus  | dulcibus |

| Masc. & Fem.        | Neuter. | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter. |
|---------------------|---------|--------------|---------|
| N. Acer m. acris f. | acre    | N. Acres     | acria   |
| G. acris            | acris   | G. acrium    | acrium  |
| D. acri             | acri    | D. acribus   | acribus |
| A. acrem            | acre    | A. acris     | acria   |
| A. acri             | acri    | A. acribus   | acribus |

| Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.   | Masc. & Fem.   | Neuter.     |
|--------------|-----------|----------------|-------------|
| N. Sapiens   | sapiens   | N. Sapientes   | sapientia   |
| G. sapientis | sapientis | G. sapientium  | sapientium  |
| D. sapienti  | sapienti  | D. sapientibus | sapientibus |
| A. sapientem | sapiens   | A. sapientis   | sapientia   |
| A. sapienti  | sapienti  | A. sapientibus | sapientibus |

* In this and all the following paradigms the Vocative, being like the Nominative, will be omitted.

| SINGULAR.    |         | PLURAL.      |           |
|--------------|---------|--------------|-----------|
| Masc. & Fem. | Neuter. | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.   |
| N. Audax     | audax   | N. Audāces   | audacia   |
| G. audācis   | audācis | G. audacium  | adacium   |
| D. audāci    | audāci  | D. audacibus | audacibus |
| A. audācem   | audax   | A. audacis   | audacia   |
| A. audāci    | audāci  | A. audacibus | audacibus |

§ 209. I. CLASS : ADJECTIVES IN is, all of which have vowel-stems. They have a separate form for the NEUTER gender in e, which letter is substituted for the masculine termination is. For having a different nominative of the neuter they generally are called adjectives of two terminations. They are inflected after the paradigm dulcis.

§ 210. II. CLASS : R-stems of the 3d declension, consisting of the adjective par and the following in er :

|        |           |          |          |                         |
|--------|-----------|----------|----------|-------------------------|
| acer   | campester | celer    | paluster | puter ( putrid ) |
| alacer | celeber   | equester | pedester | volucer                 |

and the national adjective Insuber. They properly belong to the first class, but drop, analogous to the R-stems of the 2d declension (Lesson X.), their termination is in the nominative singular of the masculine, retaining it in the FEMININE, and assuming in the NEUTER the termination e. Only par drops everywhere the termination is and e of the nominative.

Rem. 2. These adjectives are declined like acer, by dropping the e before r, except celer, which retains the e throughout, forming the gen. plur. in um, not ium. The compounds of par (compar, impar) have the gen. plur. comparum, imparum.

Rem. 3. To this class belong the adjective names of the months in ber (Septembris, October, Novembris, Decembris), being declined like acer.

Rem. 4. Many of these adjectives have collateral forms in is, as celebris locus (Auct. Her. 2, 4, 7); somnus acris (Enn. ap. Prisc.); acris homo (Ter. Eun. 2, 3, 13); campestris locus (Colum. 3, 13); equestris tumultus (Liv. 27, 1).

§ 211. III. CLASS : Liquid-mutes, terminating in ns and rs. They form their genitives in ntis and rtis, as insons, G. insontis, expers, G. expertis. Only the compounds of cor (concor, vecor) form the genitive in dis (concordis, recordis). They are declined like the paradigm sapiens.

§ 212 IV. CLASS: Adjectives in ax, ox, ix and as, with genitives in ācis, ōcis, īcis and ātis, as: sagax, sagācis, felix, felīcis, velox, velōcis (see the paradigm audax). Those in as consist in the civic adjectives of this termination, which have the same form and declension, as the civic NOUNS in as (§187, 4), except that they form their ABL. SING. in i. To this class also belong the adjectives locuples, G. locuplētis, and simplex, G. simplicis, the other adjectives in es and ex having consonant-stems.

§ 213. The adjectives of the 3d and 4th classes have the same form for all three genders in the nominative singular, and hence generally are called adjectives of one termination.

ADJECTIVES WITH CONSONANT-STEMS.

§ 214. VOCABULARY.

|  |   |
|--|---|
| Anceps, G. ancipītis , twofold , doubtful , critical | particeps, cīpis , partaking , participating         |
| biceps, bicipītis , having two heads                               | pauper, ēris , poor   |
| bipes, bipēdis , two-footed  | præceps, præcepītis , steep , headlong               |
| cælebs, cælibis , unmarried  | princeps, īpis , principal                                  |
| cicur, ūris , tame   | pubes, pubēris —S-class— adult                              |
| compos, ōtis , having control over                                 | redux, redūcis , returned                                   |
| degener, ēris , degenerate   | sospes, ītis , safe , sound and safe , unhurt |
| deses, desīdis , indolent , slothful                        | superstes, ītis , surviving                                 |
| dives, ītis , rich   | supplex, īcis , submissive , suppliant               |
| hebes, ētis , dull   | teres, ētis , well rounded , smooth                  |
| immemor, ōris , unmindful  | trux, trūcis , grim , fierce , savage         |
| impūbes, ēris , being under 14 years , youthful             | uber, ēris , rich (of THINGS)                               |
| inops, ōpis , helpless   | versicolor, ōris , party-colored                            |
| memor, ōris , mindful  | vetus, ēris —S-class— old                                   |
|  | vigil, ītis , watchful                                      |

§ 215. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR. |              |         | PLURAL. |              |           |
|-----------|--------------|---------|---------|--------------|-----------|
|           | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter. |         | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.   |
| N.        | Vetus        | vetus   | N.      | Veteres      | vetera    |
| G.        | veteris      | veteris | G.      | veterum      | veterum   |
| D.        | veteri       | veteri  | D.      | veteribus    | veteribus |
| A.        | veterem      | vetus   | A.      | veteres      | vetera    |
| A.        | vetere       | vetere  | A.      | veteribus    | veterebus |

| SINGULAR. |              |          | PLURAL. |              |          |
|-----------|--------------|----------|---------|--------------|----------|
|           | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.  |         | Masc. & Fem. | Neuter.  |
| N.        | Dives        |          | N.      | Divites      |          |
| G.        | divitis      |          | G.      | divitum      |          |
| D.        | diviti       | Wanting. | D.      | divitibus    | Wanting. |
| A.        | divitem      |          | A.      | divites      |          |
| A.        | divite       |          | A.      | divitibus    |          |

§ 216. 4. Adjectives with consonant-stems take the case-terminations of NOUNS with consonant-stems (§ 145). But those in ceps and plex take the terminations e and i promiscuously in the ABL. SING. They form, with the exception of a few, no NEUTER GENDER, which, where it occurs, has the same form as the masculine and feminine in NOM. SING. Their GENITIVES are formed like those of NOUNS with the same terminations, the same classes being distinguished in both. Only adjectives of the N-class do not exist.

Rem. 3. Vigil forms the ablative in i, when it is used as an ADJECTIVE, but in e, when it is used as a NOUN.

§ 217. 5. Only the following adjectives with consonant-stems form the neuter gender: Vetus, hebes, and those in ceps with the genitive cipītis. Vetus has regularly vetera, but the other neuters form their nom. plur. in ia, the genitive having the regular termination um.

§ 218. 6. INDECLINABLE are: frugi (virtuous, temperate, worthy), and nequam (wicked), as: homo frugi, G. hominis frugi, &c.

Rem. 4. The indeclinable adjectives necesse, satis, and præsto (present, at hand), are used only predicatively. Præsto esse with dative means 'to wait on somebody,' as: Gajo præsto est, he waits on Gajus.

ADVERBS OF MANNER, FORMED FROM ADJECTIVES OF COMMON GENDER.

§ 219. Only adjectives with vowel-stems form ADVERBS. These attach the termination ter to their vowel-stems, or—which is the same—iter to their declension-stems, as:

|                |                 |                 |                 |
|----------------|-----------------|-----------------|-----------------|
| acer-aeriter   | celer-celeriter | fortis-fortiter | par-pariter     |
| brevi-breviter | felix-feliciter | gravis-graviter | velox-velociter |

Rem. 5. Of adjectives with CONSONANT-STEMS memor only forms an adverb—memoriter [from memory].

§ 220. Adverbs from adjectives with LIQUID-MUTE stems are formed by substituting the termination ter for the ending s of the nominative, as :

diligens—diligenter elegans—elegantior solers—solertior.

Rem. 6. Audax forms audacter or audaciter, and difficilis—difficiliter. Of facilis, sublimis, and impūnis the accusative NEUTER singular is used with the force of an adverb—facile, sublime, impūne.

Rem. 7. A few movable adjectives form adverbs by the termination ter or iter, as : fraudulentus—fraudulenter, navus—naviter, firmus—firmiter, humānus—humaniter, inhumānus—inhumaniter, largus—largiter.

EXERCISES.

☞ Decline the following phrases by giving the NOMINATIVE and ABLATIVE SINGULAR, and GENITIVE and ACCUSATIVE PLURAL in Latin :

1. A short letter. 2. A green tree. 3. A difficult undertaking. 4. A noble deed. 5. A quick (celer) messenger. 6. A quick ship. 7. A quick help. 8. A sharp battle. 9. A violent (acer) hatred. 10. A populous city. 11. A frequented place. 12. An equestrian statue. 13. The cheerful breast. 14. A mortal wound. 15. The Cannean battle. 16. The Insubrian forest. 17. A vulgar opinion. 18. A diligent beginner. 19. An enormous evil. 20. A sluggish mechanic. 21. The harmonious plebs. 22. An ingenious plan. 23. A sagacious animal. 24. An unhappy race. 25. A precocious intellect. 26. An equal danger. 27. An unequal contest. 28. A critical journey. 29. An old image. 30. An old town. 31. A dull knife. 32. An unmindful friend. 33. An adult daughter. 34. A returned prisoner. 35. The general, sound and safe. 36. A surviving soldier. 37. The suppliant accused. 38. A fierce eye.

A. ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

1. To a man, ignorant (expers) of literature. 2. By a dissimilar character. 3. By the simple character (natūra) of the poem. 4. Of the steep mountains of Thessalia. 5. By the district of Capēna. 6. The lands of wealthy (locuples) citizens. 7. By a rich (locuples) dinner. 8. The green meadows of Ireland. 9. The stomachs of voracious animals. 10. To the unhappy condition of sad old men. 11. By the prudent questions of the prætor. 12. The present plans of the chief, useless (inutilis) to the state. 13. By the insolent answer of the centurion. 14. By a young man, similar to the emperor Nero. 15. The puerile undertakings of the Megarians. 16. Old (vetus) and illustrious names. 17. By the Sybarites, a degenerate people. 18. Of the rich (uber) harvests of the inhabitants of Arpinum. 19. By a man, unmindful of benefits. 20. Of the party-colored garments of the Persians. 21. Bequests of unmarried old men. 22. To the small number of surviving enemies.

<sup>1</sup> Impūnis, unpunished. <sup>2</sup> Impūne, with impunity. <sup>3</sup> Navus, active, busy. <sup>4</sup> Inhumānus, inhuman. <sup>5</sup> Largus, plentiful, abundant, copious. <sup>6</sup> Cannean, Cannensis. <sup>7</sup> Intellect, ingenium. <sup>8</sup> Contest, certāmen. <sup>9</sup> Litteræ. <sup>10</sup> Indoles. <sup>11</sup> Belonging to Capēna, Capēnæ. <sup>12</sup> Megarensis. <sup>13</sup> Sybarites.

23. The defalcations of rich bankers. 24. By the consul, safe and unhurt. 25. By a dull understanding, the punishment of angry Jupiter. 26. The civil wars of the Romans, fatal to an incredible multitude of citizens. 27. Massilia, a populous city of Gaul. 28. By the unhappy fickleness of Alcibiades. 29. By the short marches of the soldiers of Scipio. 30. To the innumerable hardships of the Vejentian siege.

B. SENTENCES.

1. Genus mortāle undis delēre Jovi placet. 2. Animalia celeria pedibus gracilibus cognoscuntur. 3. Initium semper difficile est. 4. Utilitatem privātam salūti publicæ antepōnere turpe est. 5. Consul hostis clade ingenti repellit. 6. Recentia mercium pretia ingentia esse videntur. 7. Scriptorum veterum opera admirabilia sunt. 8. Coloris nigri civium jura respicere par esse videtur. 9. Platoni ac Socrati parem aut similem esse difficile est. 10. Beneficiorum immemorem esse animi ingrati documentum est. 11. Nunc supplicem fieri necesse est. 12. Leges salutāris ac patriæ utilis mutāre nolimus. 13. Dolorem fugere et voluptatem petere hominibus atque animalibus commune est. 14. Sermonis Latini rudem esse turpe videtur. 15. Milites periculo ancipiti premuntur. 16. Leges Romānæ ætatem impuberem tuentur. 17. Populus Romānus pauperibus Mummii filiabus dotem donare constituit. 18. Sententias Latinas recte convertere discipulo, regulārum verborumque immemori, difficile esse solet.

1. It is better to be diligent. 2. It is preferable to be unmarried. 3. It delights Cesar to be merciful. 4. We do not wish to seem absent. 5. The labors of the committee of two seem to be difficult. 6. Great pains usually are short. 7. The wounds of the centurion seem fatal. 8. The minds of the boys seem to become dull. 9. It delights the soldiers to be partaking of the booty. 10. The citizens are compelled by necessity to be harmonious. 11. The consul directs the ambassadors to be grave and prudent. 12. The queen is prevented by the king from being liberal. 13. It is a crime (nefas) to plunder the temples of the immortal gods. 14. It is praiseworthy to respect the authority of old men. 15. It is cruel (crudelis) and atrocious to kill unarmed and suppliant enemies. 16. The senators present to the returned soldiers the citizenship. 17. The adult sons of Sempronius retain the possession of the paternal country-seat. 18. The children of poor citizens generally are educated without compensation. 19. It is useless to free a degenerate people. 20. The pains of the brave soldiers are taken away by a quick death. 21. Thou canst not raise the sympathy of men by unmanly wailings. 22. Fire and water are useful to men; but still they can become terrible. 23. Sulla compels Mithridates by a successful war to sue for conditions of peace. 24. It is difficult to convince dull and stubborn men. 25.

<sup>1</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>2</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>3</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>4</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>5</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>6</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>7</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>8</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>9</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>10</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>11</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>12</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>13</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>14</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>15</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>16</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>17</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>18</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>19</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>20</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>21</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>22</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>23</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>24</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio. <sup>25</sup> Utile, 18. Appropinquans, 19. Suspectus, 17. Incolumis, 18. Understanding, ratio.

Gajus is prevented from being present by serious wounds, and Sempronius by the sad death of a brother.

C. PHRASES WITH ADVERBS.

1. The soldiers fight bravely and <sup>38</sup>spiritedly. 2. It always is expedient to live <sup>39</sup>conformably to nature. 3. I <sup>40</sup>willingly follow the opinion and advice of the chief. 4. The conditions of peace are <sup>41</sup>hesitatingly accepted by the general. 5. You must treat the unfortunate prisoners mildly (lenis) and kindly. 6. The scholars of Gajus both write and speak correctly and <sup>42</sup>elegantly. 7. The consul is treated insolently by the leaders of the soldiers. 8. The tribune Flavius <sup>43</sup>agitates the <sup>44</sup>agrarian law <sup>45</sup>actively and vehemently. 9. Sempronius answers sharply and <sup>46</sup>fiercely. 10. Cicero <sup>47</sup>shows <sup>48</sup>briefly and <sup>49</sup>forcibly the fallacies of Epicūrus. 11. It is disgraceful to treat prisoners inhumanly. 12. The scholars seem to understand easily the orations of Cicero. 13. Theopompus seems to think similarly, but he speaks <sup>50</sup>differently. 14. To speak wisely is easy, but to act wisely is difficult.

LESSON XXX.

FOURTH AND FIFTH DECLENSIONS AND COMPOUND NOUNS.

FOURTH DECLENSION.

See Vocabularies IV and VI, 4.

§ 221. 1. To the 4th declension belong all nouns with the characteristic u, except grus and sus. The nominative terminates in us for the masculine and feminine, and in u for the neuter. The case-terminations are formed by blending the characteristic u with the endings of the third declension [§ 145] according to the following scheme:

| SINGULAR.  | PLURAL.                                 |
|--|---|
| N. us , Neut. u                    | N. ūs , Neut. ūa          |
| G. ūs , Neuters u ( ūs ?)   | G. ūum                           |
| D. ui or u , Neut. always u | D. ibus (sometimes ūbus ) |
| A. um , Neut. u                    | A. { like Nom.                          |
| V. like Nom.                                     | V. {                                    |
| A. u                                      | A. like Dat.                            |

<sup>38</sup> Spirited, acer. <sup>39</sup> Conformable, conveniens. <sup>40</sup> Willing, libens. <sup>41</sup> Hesitating, cunctans. <sup>42</sup> Elegant, elegans. <sup>43</sup> To agitate, agitare. <sup>44</sup> Agrarian, agrarius. <sup>45</sup> Active, navus. <sup>46</sup> Fierce, ferox. <sup>47</sup> Detegere. <sup>48</sup> Brief, brevis. <sup>49</sup> Significans. <sup>50</sup> Different, contrarius.

Rem. 1. The nouns in us are MASCULINE, except the FEMININES acus, colus, domus, manus, porticus, tribus, the pl. t. Idus, the names of TREES, as quercus, ficus, and the female PERSONAL nouns anus, nurus and socrus. The only 5 neuters of this declension are:

|               |              |              |
|---------------|--------------|--------------|
| cornu, a horn | gelu, frost  | veru, a spit |
| genu, a knee  | pecu, cattle |              |

OBSERVATION. It is generally stated that the neuter nouns in u are INDECLINABLE in the singular. But about 25 years ago (1841) a German grammarian declared this statement erroneous in regard to the GEN. SING., which according to his opinion in the classical time terminated in us not in u. All later grammarians have endorsed this opinion. But the arguments, which are brought forward to sustain this view, are by no means conclusive. The authority of the Roman grammarians ought to be sustained, unless it can be shown by strong proofs to be unfounded. As this by no means is the case here, the author has not hesitated, to restore the paradigm of the 4th declension to its ancient right.

§ 222. PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR.            | PLURAL.   | SINGULAR. | PLURAL.  |
|----------------------|-----------|-----------|----------|
| N. Fructus           | fructūs   | N. Cornu  | cornua   |
| G. fructūs           | fructuum  | G. cornu  | cornuum  |
| D. fructui or fructu | fructibus | D. cornu  | cornibus |
| A. fructum           | fructūs   | A. cornu  | cornua   |
| A. fructu            | fructibus | A. cornu  | cornibus |

Rem. 2. The nouns domus and colus in some of their cases are declined after the 4th, and in some after the 2d declension. Domus in good prose forms the ABLATIVE SINGULAR always, the GENITIVE PLURAL generally, and the ACCUSATIVE PLURAL frequently after the 2d declension — domo, domōrum, domos. The other cases follow the 4th declension.* Colus is declined in the same way; but some of its cases do not occur at all.

Rem. 3. In the following nouns the DATIVE and ABLATIVE PLURAL are formed in ibus, instead of ibus:

acus, arcus, lacus, partus, pecu, specus, tribus and the pl. t. artus. Portus has ibus or ibus.

Rem. 4. It often is difficult for beginners to distinguish the nouns of the 2d and 4th declensions, both terminating in us in the nominative. For this purpose the student should accurately commit the nouns IV and VI, 4 of the Vocabularies, among which all CONCRETES in us of this declension are found. As for the ABSTRACTS in us, they invariably belong to the 4th declension, when they terminate in sus, tus or xus, those with other terminations belong to the second.

FIFTH DECLENSION.

See Vocabularies V.

§ 223. 2. The nouns of the 5th declension have the characteristic ē, their nominative terminating in ēs, for which, in declining, the case-terminations of the following scheme are substituted:

* Tolle me, mi, mu, mis.
Si declinare domus vis.

| SINGULAR.    | PLURAL.        |
|--------------|----------------|
| N. ēs | N. ēs   |
| G. ei | G. ērūm |
| D. ei | D. ēbus |
| A. em | A. ēs   |
| V. ēs | V. ēs   |
| A. ē  | A. ēbus |

§ 224. PARADIGM.

| SINGULAR. | PLURAL.   |
|-----------|-----------|
| N. Dies   | N. Dies   |
| G. diēi   | G. diērum |
| D. diēi   | D. diēbus |
| A. diem   | A. dies   |
| A. diē    | A. diēbus |

§ 225. 3. The GENDER of nouns of the 5th declension is the FEMININE, the masculines dies and meridies excepted. But the singular of dies sometimes is used as a feminine, especially if denoting an APPOINTED day, or a TERM.

§ 226. The QUANTITY of the vowel e in the case-termination is long; but it is short in the genitive and dative sing. of fides, plebes, res and spes, the only four nouns of this declension, in which a CONSONANT precedes the termination es.

Rem. 1. Pronounce therefore fī dēi, plēbēi, not fīdēi, plēbēi.

Rem. 2. The nouns of the 5th declension generally lack the PLURAL, which completely exists in res and dies only. Effigies, facies and spes sometimes are found in those cases of the plural, which terminate in es.

Rem. 3. It is easy, to distinguish the nouns of the 5th declension from those of the 3d, terminating in es, since in all nouns of the former, except fides, plebes, res and spes, the termination es is preceded by the vowel i, while in the 3d declension this is the case in the four nouns abies, aries, paries and quies only.

COMPOUND NOUNS.

§ 227. The composition of nouns is either PROPER or IMPROPER. IMPROPER compounds are PHRASES, generally written in one word, when each of the two words of the phrase keeps its own form and meaning. This composition is of three kinds:

1. With attributive adjectives, in respublica (res publica), a republic or State (literally public thing); and jusjurandum (jus ju- randum), oath (literally a right that is to be sworn to). 2. With genitives or other cases in the relation of attributes or objects, as <sup>1</sup>paterfamilias, materfamilias, filiusfamilias, filiāfamilias, <sup>2</sup>legislātor (legumlātor), <sup>3</sup>plebiscitum, <sup>4</sup>senatusconsultum, <sup>5</sup>jurisconsultus (or jureconsultus), fidejussor, a bail, usucapio, an acquisition of property by prescription. 3. In some, mostly legal, expressions two nouns, asyndetically coördinated (p. 99, § 120), are used with the force of a single compound noun, as ususfructus (inst. of usus et fructus), a usufruct, emptio-venditio, a bargain of sale.

Rem. 4. If nouns are composed after the 1st and 3d methods, each of their constituents is declined, as respublica, G. reipublicæ, Acc. republicam; jusjurandum, G. jusjurandi; ususfructus, Acc. usumfructum. In the second class of compounds only the governing word is declined, as jureconsultus, G. jureconsulti. In paterfamilias, filiusfamilias, etc., the word familias is an archaic genitive of the 1st declension (instead of familie), which remains unchanged in declension, while the first parts of these compounds (pater, filius, etc.), are regularly declined, as: G. patrisfamilias, Acc. patremfamilias, N. Pl. patresfamilias, etc.

§ 228. PROPER compound nouns are inflected, as if they were SIMPLE NOUNS, as agricola, G. agricolæ. They are but a few in number, and present no peculiarities in their declension.

§ 229. English compound nouns generally are expressed in Latin by ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES, having either an ADJECTIVE, or a GENITIVE as attribute, as:

1. With ADJECTIVES.

|   |  |
|---|--|
| the dog-star , stella caniculāris  | a mill-stone , lapis molāris    |
| a gold-ring , annulus aureus       | rain-water , aqua pluvia        |
| a hair-pin , acus crinālis         | a snow-storm , tempestas nivōsa |
| a marble-column , columna marmorea | a water-fowl , avis aquatica    |

2. With GENITIVES.

|                                     |  |
|-------------------------------------|--|
| an earth-quake , terræ motus | sunlight , solis lux              |
| head-ache , capitis dolores  | sun-rise , solis ortus            |
| house-top , ædium culmen     | tooth-ache , dentium dolores      |
| snow-fall , nivis casus      | water-works , aquæ ductus (SING.) |

<sup>1</sup> The expressions "Paterfamilias, Filiusfamilias," etc., are difficult to convert into English, having no exact equivalents in the Roman institutions, now altogether extinct. The best translation is "head of the family," "father," "son," etc. "Filiusfamilias" is often used in the signification "wife." Generally these nouns are improperly translated "father," "mother," "son," &c. of a family. Familia in this connection denotes not "family," but the whole estate of the household, who was called paterfamilias, even if but one year of age. The filiusfamilias, on the other hand, might be a man, 60 years old. <sup>2</sup> A lawgiver. <sup>3</sup> A resolution of the plebs. <sup>4</sup> A decree of the Senate. <sup>5</sup> A lawyer.

EXERCISES.

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES.

FOURTH DECLENSION. 1. By an iron needle. 2. The knees of the suppliant old man. 3. To the enormous limbs of the elephant. 4. To an unfortunate accident. 5. By a beautiful song. 6. By a headlong course. 7. To the Numidian cavalry. 8. Of an unmanly weeping. 9. By a fatal stroke of lightning. 10. To the irresistible attack of the cavalry. 11. Of a small band of soldiers. 12. By illicit gain. 13. By rough forests (saltus). 14. By the Roman senate and people. 15. By the sound (incolumis) senses of the hearers (auditor). 16. The Venetian (Venetus) and <sup>9</sup>Tergestian harbors (obj.) 17. By the harbors of the <sup>10</sup>Adriatic gulf. 18. By the holy (sanctus) spirit. 19. To enormous expenses. 20. By the <sup>11</sup>country tribes of the Romans. 21. The votes of the <sup>12</sup>city tribes. 22. By a scanty sustenance. 23. By a fierce (trux) glance. 24. Of a <sup>13</sup>rickety house. 25. To the humble house of the <sup>14</sup>Stoic Posidonius. 26. By the new house of Cicero. 27. The <sup>15</sup>brick houses of the old Romans. 28. The high roofs of the <sup>16</sup>Swiss houses. 29. The paternal houses (obj.) of Scipio. 30. By the <sup>17</sup>suburban houses of the wealthy Romans. 31. The defeat of the <sup>18</sup>consular armies. 32. By the <sup>19</sup>triumphal arches (arcus) of the Roman imperators. 33. By a <sup>20</sup>squalid plight and bearing.

FIFTH DECLENSION. 1. By an enormous deluge. 2. To a certain hope. 3. Of necessary things. 4. The pernicious day of the Cannean battle. 5. The hot midday (obj.). 6. The fortunate (fastus) and unfortunate (nefastus) days. 7. By private and public affairs. 8. To certain destruction. 9. Of the <sup>21</sup>Punic faith. 10. The happy (latus) end of an unpleasant affair. 11. By the <sup>22</sup>aspect of a vast <sup>23</sup>plateau. 12. To the rough surface of the house. 13. By a doubtful hope of safety. 14. The heat of a <sup>24</sup>summer midday. 15. An evidence of extraordinary effeminacy. 16. A mean and vulgar affair (obj.).

COMPOUND NOUNS. 1. By the Roman republic. 2. Of the ancient republics. 3. To the safety of the republic. 4. By the oath of Piso. 5. The mutual duties of house-fathers and house-sons. 6. By Solon (Solo) and Lycurgus, the lawgivers of the Athenians and Spartans. 7. By a decree of the senate, <sup>25</sup>hateful to the common people. 8. By frequent earthquakes. 9. To the <sup>26</sup>sea-towns of Italy. 10. By a <sup>27</sup>sea-battle of the Romans and Carthaginians. 11. By the rising of the <sup>28</sup>morning-star. 12. By <sup>29</sup>snow and rain-water. 13. By the <sup>30</sup>north side of the house. 14. By the <sup>31</sup>south-bank of the river. 15. To the use of <sup>32</sup>eastern-water. 16. By enormous snow-falls. 17. Sharp <sup>33</sup>night-frosts. 18. By the <sup>34</sup>modern <sup>35</sup>invention of <sup>36</sup>steamships. 19. The heavy <sup>37</sup>freight-ships of Julius Caesar. 20. By the <sup>38</sup>New-Brunswick water-works.

<sup>6</sup> Inexpugnabilis. <sup>7</sup> Manus. <sup>8</sup> Illicitus. <sup>9</sup> Tergestinus, belonging to Tergeste, the modern Trieste. <sup>10</sup> Adriaticus. <sup>11</sup> Country, as adj. rusticus. <sup>12</sup> City, as adj. urbanus. <sup>13</sup> Ruinous. <sup>14</sup> Stoicus. <sup>15</sup> Brick, as adj. latericius. <sup>16</sup> Helveticus. <sup>17</sup> Suburbanus. <sup>18</sup> Consularis. <sup>19</sup> Triumphalis. <sup>20</sup> Sordidus. <sup>21</sup> Punicus. <sup>22</sup> Conspicuous. <sup>23</sup> Plainities. <sup>24</sup> Summer, as adj. æstivus. <sup>25</sup> Invidius. <sup>26</sup> Translate: maritime towns. <sup>27</sup> Naval battle. <sup>28</sup> Matutinus. <sup>29</sup> Nivösus. <sup>30</sup> Septentrionalis. <sup>31</sup> Meridionalis. <sup>32</sup> Cisterminus. <sup>33</sup> Nocturnus. <sup>34</sup> Recens. <sup>35</sup> Inventio. <sup>36</sup> Vaporarius. <sup>37</sup> Onerarius. <sup>38</sup> Neo-Brunsvicensis.

SENTENCES.

1. Augures eventus futuros avium <sup>39</sup>volatu prædicunt. 2. Exercitus Romanus subitum hostium impetum sustinere nequit. 3. Factio <sup>40</sup>Clodiana Ciceronis reditu vehementer conturbatur. 4. Exiguam hostium manum opprimere facile videtur. 5. Arietum cornua curva sunt. 6. Homines glorie cupidi cunctis populis sermonibus clamoribusque excitare solent. 7. C. Julius Cæsar senatusconsultis vim opponere conatur. 8. Fulminum ictus templis ac domibus perniciosa sunt. 9. Pyrrhus, Epir rex, manus manu interiecit. 10. Mulieres Romanæ crinis acubus bito <sup>41</sup>corripitur. 11. Persæ legatus artuum tremore succumbens sustinere solent. 12. Fletu muliebri misericordiam implorare Romanis bito <sup>42</sup>corripitur. 13. Quercus Jovi sacrae sunt. 14. Samnitium agri a turpe videtur. 15. Terentius Varro exercitus montium fauci-mani cladem senatui nuntiat. 16. Exercitus progressus montium faucibus impeditur. 17. Vulpes canem oculorum acie excellit. 18. Philosophia rerum humanarum divinarumque scientia est. 19. Res occultæ atque <sup>43</sup>incognitæ rebus certis <sup>44</sup>cognitisque <sup>45</sup>patent. 20. Magistratum fraudes fidei publicæ exitiosæ esse solent. 21. Peloponnæsus unitum versa ab Herculis progenie occupatur. 22. Vitæ brevitatem homines spem longam <sup>46</sup>concupere vetat. 23. <sup>47</sup>Colossus Rhodius terræ motu <sup>48</sup>præcipitatur. 24. Athenienses proelio navali Græciam universam liberant. 25. Montium vertices sole matutino <sup>49</sup>collustrantur. 26. Herbae teneræ frigiditas nocturnis leduntur. 27. Agri aqua pluvia inundantur. 28. Cæsar republicam Romanam conservator est. 29. Rempublicam bene regere difficile est. 30. Jari-jurandi religio et fides nunc obsoleta esse videtur.

1. The city of Athens has the harbors Munychia, Phalærum and Piræus. 2. By the arrival of Cæsar the fear of the army suddenly <sup>50</sup>is relieved. 3. Time <sup>51</sup>is determined by the rising and setting of the sun. 4. The water of lakes is sweet, but <sup>52</sup>sea-water <sup>53</sup>bitter. 5. Cæsar directs Labienus to await the issue of the battle. 6. Shields are carried (ferre) in (by) the left hand, and swords in the right hand. 6. The vote of the <sup>54</sup>first-voting tribe is given to Cæsar. 8. The house and portico of Octavius are destroyed (consumere) by a stroke of lightning. 9. The year is full of <sup>55</sup>important events. 10. By common sense we often excel <sup>56</sup>ill-regulated <sup>57</sup>genius. 11. I cannot understand the sense of the verses. 12. Oak-trees, <sup>58</sup>bearing acorns, <sup>59</sup>should be preserved. 13. The punishment of impious men has degrees. 14. The prisoners embrace the knees of Cæsar. 15. The proceeds (reditus) of the taxes <sup>60</sup>are lost by the frauds of the magistrates. 16. The <sup>61</sup>structure of the ships is <sup>62</sup>accommodated to the <sup>63</sup>power of the <sup>64</sup>waves and storms. The Roman <sup>65</sup>senate-house is a temple of faith. 18. The minds (animus) of the citizens seem to be devoted to military affairs. 19. The approaches to (translate "of") the plain are open to the cavalry of Hannibal. 20. External things are perceived by the eyes, but <sup>72</sup>hidden things by the <sup>73</sup>penetration of the mind (mens). 21. The issue of the public affairs seems to be contrary to the hope of the <sup>74</sup>demagogues. 22. Cares and <sup>75</sup>sorrow cannot be dispelled by the memory of happy days. 23. The <sup>76</sup>capitals of the <sup>77</sup>ionic columns <sup>78</sup>present the <sup>79</sup>image of the horns of rams. 24. The morning- and <sup>80</sup>afternoon-hours must be devoted to studies or <sup>81</sup>business. 25. The leaders confirm the treaty by an oath. 26. The Hortensian law assigns to resolutions of the plebs the force of laws. 27. It is allowed to an house-father to <sup>82</sup>disinherit an house-son or an house-daughter. 28. The Code of Justinianus contains the <sup>83</sup>ordinances of the emperors, and the <sup>84</sup>Pandects embrace the various works of the Roman lawyers.

<sup>39</sup> Flying, flight. <sup>40</sup> Clodianus, Clodius, of Clodius. <sup>41</sup> Gloriæ cupidus, ambitious. <sup>42</sup> To hold up, to fasten. <sup>43</sup> A trembling. <sup>44</sup> Come out, to disclose. <sup>45</sup> Unknown. <sup>46</sup> Known. <sup>47</sup> To be disclosed. <sup>48</sup> To entertain. <sup>49</sup> The Colossus. <sup>50</sup> Time, to rise, to upset. <sup>51</sup> Cal. <sup>52</sup> To be disclosed. <sup>53</sup> To entertain. <sup>54</sup> The Colossus. <sup>55</sup> Time, to rise, to upset. <sup>56</sup> Cal. <sup>57</sup> To be disclosed. <sup>58</sup> To entertain. <sup>59</sup> The Colossus. <sup>60</sup> Time, to rise, to upset. <sup>61</sup> Cal. <sup>62</sup> To be disclosed. <sup>63</sup> To entertain. <sup>64</sup> The Colossus. <sup>65</sup> Time, to rise, to upset. <sup>66</sup> Cal. <sup>67</sup> To be disclosed. <sup>68</sup> To entertain. <sup>69</sup> The Colossus. <sup>70</sup> Time, to rise, to upset. <sup>71</sup> Cal.

LESSON XXXI.

THE PRONOUNS.

§ 230. 1. PRONOUNS are words, representing persons or things as one of the three GRAMMATICAL PERSONS (§ 5). They are divided into simple and reflexive pronouns.

§ 231. 2. The SIMPLE PRONOUNS are thus declined :

| First person.                        | Second person.                     | Third person.  |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------------------|--|
| SINGULAR.                            |                                    |  |
| N. Ego, I                     | Tu, thou                    | Is, m. he ; ea, f. she ; id, n. it        |
| G. mei, of me                 | tui, of thee                | eius, of him, of her, of it                             |
| D. mihi, to me                | tibi, to thee               | ei, to him, to her, to it                               |
| A. me, me                     | te, thee                    | eum, m. him ; eam, f. her ;id, n. it. |
| A. me, by me                  | te, by thee                 | eo, m. &amp; n., eā, f. by him, her, it.                |
| PLURAL.                              |                                    |  |
| N. nos, we                    | vos, you                    | ei (ii), m. ea, f. ea, n., they                         |
| G. nostri [nostrum],of us | vestri [vestrum],of you | eōrum, m. eārum, f. eōrum,n., of them        |
| D. nobis, to us               | vobis, to you               | eis (iis), to them                                      |
| A. nos, us                    | vos, you                    | eos, m. eas, f. ea, n., them                            |
| A. nobis, by us               | vobis, by you               | eis, (iis), by them.                                    |

<sup>72</sup> Reconditus. <sup>73</sup> Acies. <sup>74</sup> Demagogue, homo popularis. <sup>75</sup> Aegritudo. <sup>76</sup> Capiti-
lum. <sup>77</sup> Ionicus. <sup>78</sup> Præbère. <sup>79</sup> Effigies. <sup>80</sup> Pomeridianus. <sup>81</sup> Plural in Latin <sup>82</sup> Exheredare. <sup>83</sup> Constitutio. <sup>84</sup> Pandectæ, pl. t.

Rem. 1. The double forms nostri—nostrum, and vestri—vestrum are so distinguished, that the forms in i are exclusively used as OBJECTS as: He is in need of us, nostri (not nostrum) eget. The forms in um are used as partitive attributes, in such phrases as: None of us (nostrum), some of you (vestrum). See Book III.

§ 232. 3. The pronoun of the third person is, ea, id has three genders in most of its cases. It generally refers to a noun, previously mentioned, which is called its antecedent.

The GENDER of the pronoun of the third person is not determined by the gender, which it has in English, but by that of its Latin ANTECEDENT, while the CASE of pronouns is the same as would be given to NOUNS in their place.

We adhere to the king, and love him, Regi adhaeremus eumque diligimus.

The inhabitants defend the queen, and are defended by her, Incolae reginam defendunt, et ab eā defenduntur.

The inhabitants endeavor to resist, but the Roman general oppresses them, Incolae resistere conantur, sed dux Romanus eos opprimit.

The enemies abandon the mountain, and the consul resolves to occupy it, Hostes montem relinquunt, consulque eum (not id) occupare statuit.

The enemies break the line of battle, but the general restores it, Hostes aciem percurrunt, sed dux eam (not id) restituit.

The work is great, and it seems difficult to finish it, Opus magnum est, idque finire difficile videtur; or, Labor magnus est, eumque finire difficile videtur.

§ 233. 4. Reflexive pronouns are OBJECTS, which denote the same person or thing, as the logical subjects of their governing verbs or adjectives. Verbs, which have reflexive pronouns as objects, are called reflexive verbs.

The English reflexive pronouns are compounds of the word self (myself, thyself, himself, &c.). In Latin the first and second persons of the reflexive pronouns are the same as the SIMPLE pronouns; but the reflexive pronoun of the third person has the following peculiar forms, in which neither GENDER nor NUMBER are distinguished :

|                |  |
|----------------|--|
| N. —           | of himself, of herself, of itself, of themselves, of one's self  |
| G. sui,        | to himself, to herself, to itself, to themselves, to one's self  |
| D. sibi,       | himself, herself, itself, themselves, one's self                 |
| A. se or sese, | by himself, by herself, by itself, by themselves, by one's self. |

Rem. 2. Some Latin reflexive verbs have English NEUTER verbs for equivalents, as: se recipere, to retreat; se submittere, to submit; se tradere, to surrender; se jactare, to boast; se abdicare, to abdicate. Students should be careful to treat such verbs as reflexives through all their persons, as: I retreat, me recipio; he retreats, se recipit, &c.

Rem. 3. The reflexive pronouns can have OBLIQUE cases only, because these pronouns according to their nature must be OBJECTS. For the anomaly of reflexive ATTRIBUTES see L. XXXVI.

Rem. 4. The use of the reflexive pronouns will be seen in the following examples:

A. FIRST AND SECOND PERSONS.

I am not willing to hurt myself, me laedere nolo.

We are unmindful of ourselves, nostri immemores sumus.

We cannot accuse ourselves, nos accusare nequimus.

We submit to the king, regi nos submittimus.

Thou canst not excuse thyself, te excusare nequis.

You are dissimilar to yourselves, vobis dissimiles estis.

Thou must abdicate, te abdicare debes.

B. THIRD PERSON.

To accuse one's self is rash, se accusare temerarium est.

To be mindful of one's self is fair, sui memorem esse aequum est.

Virtue is desirous of itself, virtus sui cupida est.

The inhabitants commit themselves to the protection of Cæsar, Incolas Caesaris fidei se credunt.

God is similar to himself, Deus sibi similis est.

§ 231. 5. Pronouns grammatically are treated like NOUNS. They are members of phrases, like these, and assume the same cases as nouns would in their place. But the following rules are peculiar to pronouns alone:

THE PRONOUNS IN THE PREDICATIVE PHRASE.

§ 235. 6. The pronouns as subjects generally are not expressed in Latin (§ 10), the personal ending of the predicate being a sufficient designation of the person of the subject. But the pronouns must be expressed as subjects, if they are either expressly or impliedly opposed to NOUNS, or to the pronouns of other persons. The pronouns are then said to be used emphatically.

Gajus speaks, and we write, Gajus loquitur ac nos scribimus.

The consul commands, and I obey, Consul imperat, et ego obedio.

Thou art glad, but I am sorry, Tu gaudes, sed ego doleo.

I go away, but you remain, Ego abeo, sed vos manētis.

The consul calls Piso, but he refuses to obey, Consul Pisonem vocat, sed is obedire non vult.

§ 236. 7. Two or more coördinate subjects (§ 114) of different persons have their predicates either in the first or in the second person of the plural. The first person is used, if at least one of the subjects is of that person. But when the subjects are of the second and third persons only, the predicate is placed in the second person.

Both I and thou are satisfied, Et ego et tu contenti sumus.

Thou and Anthony must die, Tu et Antonius mori debētis.

I and the general intend to accept the propositions, Ego et dux proposita accipere volumus.

Rem. 5. The ORDER, in which subjects of different persons follow each other, generally is this: the first person takes precedence of the second, and the second of the third, whatever may be the order of the subjects, observed in English.

THE PRONOUNS IN THE OBJECTIVE PHRASE.

§ 237. 8. Pronouns, dependent on verbs or adjectives, are called pronominal objects. They form objective phrases with their governing words, like nouns, and are subject to the same rules as the latter. If the pronominal object is a PASSIVE AGENT (§ 131), the pronouns of the first and second persons always are preceded by the preposition a or ab, which before te generally takes the form abs. But the pronouns of the third person take this preposition then only, when its antecedent is a PERSONAL noun.

Gajus cannot be praised by me, Gajus a me laudari nequit.

I will not be assisted by you, A vobis adjuvāri nolo.

The city cannot be taken by them (the enemies), Urbs ab eis expugnāri nequit.

I peruse the books and am delighted by them, Libros perlego eisque delector.

§ 238. 9. If the phrase, in which a pronoun is an object, is combined with another phrase, containing the antecedent of the pronoun, the latter assumes the REFLEXIVE form in Latin, except when the antecedent either itself is an ATTRIBUTE, or dependent on it.

The general compels the inhabitants to adhere to him, dux incolas sibi (not ei) adhærere cogit.

Cæsar allows the ambassadors to meet him, Cæsar legatos se (not eum) adire permittit.

We are ordered by the general to follow him, A duce se (not eum) sequi jubemur.

But:

The disciples of Socrates intend to save him, Socratis discipuli eum servare volunt. (Se servare would refer to discipuli, and would have the reflexive meaning "to save themselves").

Rem. 6. This rule holds good only, when the phrase of the pronominal object is combined with the phrase of the antecedent, but not, if the two phrases are connected by coordination, as:

Cæsar addresses the ambassadors, and permits them to return, Cæsar legatos alloquitur, eisque (not sibi) redire permittit;—the phrase of the pronominal object (eisque permittit) being not combined with, but coordinate to the phrase of the antecedent (legatos alloquitur).

Rem. 7. The pronoun sui, sibi, se, according to § 233 and 238, occurs in two different meanings, in a strictly reflexive sense, rendered by himself, &c., and in the sense of a simple pronoun under a reflexive form, rendered by him, her, &c. These two meanings must be clearly distinguished. The pronoun is strictly reflexive, if the logical subject of its governing words is at the same time its antecedent, while it is a simple pronoun, if it has the subject of another than its own governing word for an antecedent. Thus in the examples to § 233 Rem. 4. B, the pronouns of the third person are reflexive, while in the examples to § 238 they merely have a reflexive form. In the following example:

"Gajus Sempronius se interficere impedit"

the pronoun se may be taken for a reflexive or for a simple pronoun. If Sempronius, the logical subject of interficere, is considered as the antecedent of se, the latter is REFLEXIVE, and the example is thus translated:

"Gajus prevents Sempronius from killing himself."

But if we take Gajus, which is not the logical subject of interficere, for the antecedent of se, the latter is a SIMPLE pronoun, and we translate:

"Gajus prevents Sempronius from killing him."

The connection alone can show in such instances, whether sui, sibi, se, is meant to be a reflexive, or a simple pronoun.

For the use of the pronouns in the ATTRIBUTIVE phrase see § 283, 284.

EXERCISES.

A. THE PRONOUNS AS SUBJECTS.

1. Et ego et liberi valēmus. 2. Et ego et rex hostium adventu fugere cogimur. 3. Et ego et tu futuram reipublicæ sortem facile prædicere possumus. 4. Et ego et magna civium pars recentibus belli eventibus urbem relinquere prohibemur. 5. Tu ac Sempronius agrōti esse videmini. 6. Vos, duces militesque, hostis vincere nescitis. 7. Ego magnis curis magnæque labore victum quæro. vos vero voluptatibus sordidis, atque hominum improborum societati dediti estis. 8. Nos pacem servare studemus, sed vos seditionem ac bellum meditamini. 9. Rex Sempronius redire jubet, sed is parere non vult.

1. Charles plays, but I learn. 2. Thou speakest, but I am silent. 3. Thou remainest, and Henry returns. 4. Thou, O Lucretia, seemest to be cheerful, but we are tormented by great fear and anxiety. 5. You implore the forgiveness of Cæsar, but we are not willing to address the dictator. 6. Both Cicero and I are compelled to conform to the new condition of the republic. 7. The queen and I are adverse to corruptions and frauds. 8. Both thou and I are in need of quick help. 9. Either thou or I must die. 10. We and the soldiers intend to defend the republic. 11. You and the friends of Pompey give credit to the rumors of the populace. 12. Thou and Sempronius must have regard for decency and the opinions of men. 13. The senate directs Claudius Nero to follow the legions, and he departs directly. 14. Philip endeavors to corrupt the fidelity of the ambassadors, but they reject the propositions of the king.

B. THE PRONOUNS AS OBJECTS.

FIRST AND SECOND PERSONS. 1. Mei indigere videmini. 2. Sempronii consilia mihi utilia esse possunt. 3. Occasio mihi opportuna esse videtur. 4. Dux regi me commendat. 5. Pueri me verbis lacessere pergunt. 6. Attici negotia a me geri solent. 7. Præceptor mihi urbem Romam visere permittit. 8. Necessitas me Pompējum sequi cogit. 9. Honorem servare mihi semper licet. 10. Tui immemorem esse ingrātum videtur. 11. Reipublicæ status tibi incognitus esse videtur. 12. Litterarum studium voluptatem tibi afferre desinit. 13. Te hostis aggredi veto. 14. Hostes te exercitumque clade ingenti perdere volunt. 15. Milites abs te, Semproni, reduci nolunt. 16. Regis filie nostri immemores esse videntur. 17. Populi Romani beneficia et nobis et Macedonibus inutilia sunt. 18. Privatæ Antiochi regis controversiæ a nobis dijudicari nequeunt. 19. A vobis laudari gloriosum est, sed a vobis vituperari turpe videtur. 20. Et tempus et cause naturā nos brevis esse cogit. 21. Et patriæ leges et reipublicæ salus vos vivere vetant.

1. Both the chief and the board of ten are forgetful (oblitus) of me. 2. The soldiers seem to be faithful to me. 3. The citizens continue to attack me by slanders and abuses. 4. The people contemplate to abandon me to the cruelty of the Samnites. 5. The Patricians prevent me by threats and denunciations (denuntiatio) from proposing the agrarian (agrarius) laws. 6. The envy of the whole people cannot be sustained by me. 7. The lectures (schola) of Sempronius are both pleasant and useful to us. 8. The untimely intercession of the tribunes hurts (laedere) us seriously. 9. Future events cannot be foreseen by us. 10. The faction of Anthony tries to ruin (perdere) thee by false rumors and

1 Victum querere, to make a living. 2 Rebellion. 3 To torment, angere. 4 Sollicitudo. 5 To give credit, fidem habere. 6 Regard, ratio. 7 Decus. 8 Fides. 9 Favor. 10 Gerere, to conduct. 11 To visit. 12 Voluptatem afferre, to give pleasure. 13 To annihilate. 14 To propose a law, legem rogare. 15 Inopportūnus. 16 Intercessio. 17 To foresee, prænoscere.
*Translate: "regard of decency."

slanders. 11. The prætor offers to thee *willingly both assistance (opæ) and protection (praesidium). 12. The study of the <sup>1</sup>Hebrew language seems to be neglected by thee. 13. The common people generally is devoted to thee. 14. The consul directs thee to <sup>13</sup>execute the conspirators by the axe. 15. We will not <sup>20</sup>trouble thee by questions and <sup>21</sup>objections. 16. To you, O soldiers, the <sup>22</sup>taking of the fortress is assigned by the general. 17. The city must be taken by you, and the fortress by us. 18. The king is still in need of you, and refuses to dismiss you.

THIRD PERSON. 1. Legātus Cæsarem adit, eisque militum victoriam nuntiat. 2. Viros magnos admirāmur, eisque similes fieri studēmus. 3. Sermonem Latinum scire pulchrum est, sed ejus rudem (ignorant) esse turpe videtur. 4. Veniam inimicis præbere humanum est, sed eos amare divinum videtur. 5. Cæsar legatos regis litteras sibi ostendere jubet. 6. Cato servum se gladio interficere jubet. 7. Milites oppidanorum domos intrant, eosque aurum argentumque <sup>23</sup>reconditum sibi tradere cogunt. 8. Atticus Antonii absentis uxori auxilium offert, eamque pecuniā et consilio adjuvat. 9. Milites Persi promissa bene recordantur, sed is eorum immemor esse videtur. 10. Philippus Thessaliæ civitates occupat, sed eas Ætolis restituere cogitur. 11. Hostes navem prætoriam simul aggregiuntur eamque harpagonibus capere student. 12. Philippi regis legati pacis commoda oratione <sup>24</sup>subtili et callidā expōnunt. Athenienses vero eā decipi nequeunt. 13. Barbari legiones Romanas acriter adoriantur, sed fortiter ab eis repelluntur. 14. Gaji scelus <sup>25</sup>grave est, idque excusare turpe videtur.

1. You cannot be unmindful of him. 2. We often are in need of her. 3. The city is rebellious, and we must occupy it by an ample garrison. 4. Hortensius is a great orator, but we prefer Cicero to him. 5. The leaders know the secret plans of the commander, but we are ignorant of them. 6. Lucretia is accused of <sup>26</sup>poisoning, and the judges intend to condemn her. 7. Thou art equal (par) to the <sup>27</sup>task, but I cannot accomplish it. 8. A large <sup>28</sup>bribe is offered to Gajus, but he cannot be <sup>29</sup>induced by it. 9. The leaders of the conspiracy <sup>30</sup>sue for an amnesty, but the chief is not willing to grant (largiri) it. 10. The occasion is <sup>31</sup>favorable, but you let it <sup>32</sup>escape. 11. The general permits you to surrender the city, but I direct you to defend it. 12. The plans of Gajus seem to be useful to the king, but are rejected by him. 13. The enemies surround us, and it is necessary to defeat them. 14. Both mother and daughter are sad, but we try to console them. 15. Life is a gift of God, and it is criminal to <sup>33</sup>destroy it. 16. The conditions of peace are accepted by the general, but the senate resolves to reject them. 17. The troops are surrounded by dangers, and it seems necessary to carry help to them. 18. Cæsar allows the ambassadors to communicate to him the propositions (propositum) of the king. 19. The consul compels the kings of Nicomedia and Bithynia to accompany him. 20. A licitor is directed by Verres to bring the pictures to him. 21. The friends of the king are afraid of protecting him. 22. Sempronius directs a slave to

<sup>18</sup> Hebraicus. <sup>19</sup> Percutere. <sup>20</sup> Perturbare. <sup>21</sup> Altercatio. <sup>22</sup> Expugnatio. <sup>23</sup> Hidden. <sup>24</sup> Subtle. <sup>25</sup> Serious. <sup>26</sup> Veneficium. <sup>27</sup> Opus. <sup>28</sup> Merces. <sup>29</sup> To induce, movēre. <sup>30</sup> To sue for an amnesty, translate: to seek an amnesty, impunitatem petere. <sup>31</sup> Opportūnus. <sup>32</sup> Præterire. <sup>33</sup> Tollere. * Libens. † Explain.

<sup>34</sup>conceal him. 23. The inhabitants, hostile to the king, endeavor to <sup>35</sup>seize and deliver him to the Romans. 24. The daughter of the king directs a slave to crown her. 25. The falsehoods of the <sup>36</sup>accuser are manifest, and Cicero tries to refute them.

C. OBJECTIVE PHRASES WITH REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS.

1. To praise one's self. 2. I praise myself. 3. Thou praisest thyself. 4. He praises himself. 5. We praise ourselves. 6. You praise yourselves. 7. They praise themselves. 8. To be <sup>37</sup>indulgent to one's self. 9. I am indulgent to myself. 10. Thou art indulgent to thyself. 11. She is indulgent to herself. 12. We are indulgent to ourselves. 13. You are indulgent to yourselves. 14. They are indulgent to themselves. 15. To be unjust to one's self. 16. I am unjust to myself. 17. They are unjust to themselves. 18. They (the women) are unjust to themselves. 19. To be <sup>38</sup>distrustful of one's self. 20. I am distrustful of myself. 21. Thou art distrustful of thyself. 22. He is distrustful of himself. 23. We are distrustful of ourselves. 24. You are distrustful of yourselves. 25. They are distrustful of themselves. 26. To retreat (se recipere). 27. I retreat. 28. Thou retreatest. 29. He retreats. 30. We retreat. 31. You retreat. 32. They retreat. 33. To <sup>39</sup>surrender to the enemies. 34. I surrender to the enemies. 35. Thou surrenderest to the enemies. 36. They surrender to the enemies. 37. To be despised by one's self. 38. To be <sup>40</sup>neglectful of one's self. 39. To be enough to one's self. 40. I refresh myself. 41. I am hindered by myself. 42. I protect myself. 43. They love themselves. 44. She admires herself. 45. Thou excuseth and condemnest thyself. 46. Thou art useful to thyself. 47. They free themselves. 48. We prepare ourselves. 49. You weaken yourselves. 50. Thou art wanting (desse) to thyself. 51. The army retreats. 52. The city surrenders. 53. Virtue is contented with itself. 54. The mind is desirous of itself. 55. To give (consistere) death to one's self. 56. Thou canst not <sup>42</sup>clear thyself.

D. SENTENCES WITH REFLEXIVE PRONOUNS.

1. Conjuratorum numero me <sup>43</sup>ascribere nolo. 2. Hostibus me <sup>44</sup>adjungere nequeo. 3. Vestri immemores esse debētis. 4. Sermonis Latini studio me <sup>45</sup>addicere volo. 5. Et ego mei et tu tui <sup>46</sup>obliti esse videmur. 6. Et nobis et vobis contrarii esse videmini. 7. Te coërcere, Antoni, nequis. 8. Se laudare nunquam decet. 9. Cleopātra Octavianum sibi conciliare studet. 10. Virtus sibi similis seque contenta est. 11. Sese gubernare difficile est. 12. Civitates Græcæ se defendere ac tueri posse videntur. 13. Homines sese amare solent. 14. Cæsar legatos se coërcere jubet. 15. Cæsar hostis se <sup>47</sup>colligere impetumque renovare prohibet. 16. Cæsar hostis se sibi tradere cogit. 17. Sui oblitum esse absurdum videtur.

1. I cannot <sup>48</sup>submit to the <sup>49</sup>despotism of kings. 2. I often seem to be <sup>50</sup>unconscious of myself. 3. I cannot restore to myself tranquillity of the soul and freedom (vacuitas) of fear. 4. I will not injure myself by rash words. 5. Thou canst save thyself and the army by a timely <sup>51</sup>retreat. 6. Thou seemest to be forgetful of thyself, O daughter! 7. Thou seemest to deny to thyself the <sup>52</sup>happiness of a <sup>53</sup>domestic life. 8. It is necessary to preserve thyself to the country. 9. We wish to allow to ourselves a short <sup>54</sup>relaxation of the mind. 10. By the sudden changes (vicissitudo) of public affairs we must become distrustful of ourselves. 11. You are neglectful of yourselves, and <sup>55</sup>abandon yourselves to sloth (desidia). 12. You suffer yourselves to be defeated by an <sup>56</sup>indifferent general. 13. To consign (tradere) one's self to the <sup>57</sup>oblivion of <sup>58</sup>posterity is absurd. 14. The troops commit (mandare) themselves to flight. 15. Themistocles commits (committere) himself to the faith of the king of the Persians. 16. It is disgraceful to abandon one's self to <sup>59</sup>licentiousness. 17. The queen <sup>60</sup>attaches to herself the <sup>61</sup>hearts of the citizens by incredible <sup>62</sup>profusion. 18. The king tries to reconcile to himself the favor of the Roman senate and people. 19. The law forbids the citizens to <sup>63</sup>attach themselves to secret societies. 20. The consuls prevent the ambassadors of the king from showing themselves to the people.

<sup>34</sup> Abscondere. <sup>35</sup> Comprehendere. <sup>36</sup> Accusator. <sup>37</sup> To be indulgent, indulgere. <sup>38</sup> Distringens. <sup>39</sup> Translate: "to surrender [tradere] one's self to the enemies." <sup>40</sup> Negligens. <sup>41</sup> Translate "by itself." <sup>42</sup> Purgare. <sup>43</sup> To add. <sup>44</sup> To attach. <sup>45</sup> To devote. <sup>46</sup> Forgetful. <sup>47</sup> To collect. <sup>48</sup> To submit, se submittere. <sup>49</sup> Arbitrium. <sup>50</sup> Inscius.

LESSON XXXII.

CLASSIFICATION AND INFLECTION OF FORM ADJECTIVES.

SECTION I.

DETERMINATIVE ADJECTIVES.

§ 239. 1. All adjectives are divided into DESCRIPTIVE and FORM-ADJECTIVES. The former express ideas of their own, while the latter merely refer to certain general ideas. The latter have in common with the former their grammatical form, whence their name. Thus the form-adjective this contains no idea of its own, such as we express for instance by the descriptive adjective good, but it refers us to the general idea of PLACE, by which the noun, to which it belongs, is distinguished from other things or persons of the same class.

Rem. 1. All adjectives, considered hitherto, are DESCRIPTIVE. The FORM-ADJECTIVES generally are classified among the PRONOUNS.

<sup>51</sup> Regressus. <sup>52</sup> Felicitas. <sup>53</sup> Domesticus. <sup>54</sup> Relaxatio. <sup>55</sup> To abandon one's self, se dedere. <sup>56</sup> Mediocris. <sup>57</sup> Oblivio. <sup>58</sup> Posteritas. <sup>59</sup> Libido. <sup>60</sup> Devincere. <sup>61</sup> Animus. <sup>62</sup> Largitio. <sup>63</sup> Adjungere.

the grammarians calling them PRONOMINAL ADJECTIVES, or ADJECTIVE PRONOUNS, while other grammarians assert, that there is a distinction between these terms, which they however fail to state.

§ 240. 2. The form-adjectives are used as ATTRIBUTES of nouns, with which they form attributive phrases. They, like the descriptive adjectives, agree with their governing nouns in gender, number and case. Form-adjectives generally cannot be used predicatively.

§ 241. 3. The form-adjectives are divided into five classes: 1. DETERMINATIVE, 2. NUMERAL, 3. QUANTITATIVE, 4. QUALITATIVE, 5. POSSESSIVE. Each of these classes appears in four different forms: 1. The INTERROGATIVE, 2. The DEFINITE, 3. The INDEFINITE, 4. The RELATIVE.

The INTERROGATIVE form comprises those adjectives, by which we ask a question, referring to the general idea of their class. The DEFINITE form gives a certain, and the INDEFINITE form an uncertain answer to the question. The RELATIVE combines the properties of an adjective and a conjunction. It always assumes in the Latin language the form of the interrogative adjectives.

Rem. 2. Relative adjectives are of the same general formation as the interrogative adjectives, being composed of the element qu- or quid- in connection with the radical part, which is different for the five classes, while the element qu- or quid- remains the same in all. Thus quid- in connection with the determinative element forms the interrogative and relative adjective quid-, but in connection with the numeral element, the interrogative and relative quid-, etc. There are some minor differences in the form of interrogatives and relatives, which are explained, p. 258 and 260 foll. The declension of both is essentially the same, and hence the relatives, the use of which requires some knowledge of dependent sentences, will not be separately considered for the present.

§ 242. 4. The determinative adjectives refer to the INDIVIDUALITY of things or persons. They are distinguished by a peculiar inflection, which often shows the earliest forms of the Latin cases.

Rem. 3. The chief peculiarities in the inflection of the determinative adjectives are the following:

1. In almost all of them the GENITIVE and DATIVE SINGULAR are of COMMON GENDER, the genitive having the termination -us or -us, and the dative the termination -i for all three genders.

2. In most determinative adjectives the NOMINATIVE and ACCUSATIVE SINGULAR of the NEUTER gender have the termination -d.

3. The other cases generally assume the terminations of the MOVABLE adjectives, but somewhat modified in several forms of some of these adjectives. The INTERROGATIVES of this class in DATIVE and ABLATIVE PLURAL take the termination of the third declension -ibus in good prose.

§ 213. 5. The interrogative form of the determinative adjectives consists of the words Quis (qui) and uter. They are thus inflected * :

| SINGULAR.   | PLURAL.  |
|---|--|
| N. Quis , which, what; qui , what a,FEM. quae , NEUTER quod | N. Qui, quae, quae , which, whatG. quorum, quarum, quorum , ofwhich, of what |
| G. cujus , of which, of what, ofwhat a   | D. quibus , to which, &c.   |
| D. cui , to which, &c.   | A. quos, quas, quae , which, &c.  |
| A. quem, quam, quod , which, &c.   | A. quibus , by which, &c.   |
| A. quo, qua, quo , by which, &c.   |  |
| N. Uter, utra, utrum , which (oftwo)   | N. Utri, utrae, utra , which, &c.   |
| G. utrius , of which, &c.  | like sacer § 51.  |
| D. utri , to which, &c.  |  |
| A. utrum, utram, utrum , which, &c.  |  |
| A. utro, utrā, utro , which, &c.   |  |

Rem. 4. The nominatives quis and qui are so distinguished, that by quis, which, we ask for the thing or person itself, but by qui for their qualities. Thus by asking Quis scriptor? (which writer, what writer), we expect the NAME of the writer, or a demonstrative as an answer. But by asking Qui scriptor? (what a writer), we inquire for the QUALITIES of the writer, expecting such an answer as scriptor accuratus, Graecus, vetus. This distinction is not made in any of the other cases, nor in any gender but the MASCULINE.

Rem. 5. Uter always must be used instead of quis or qui, when no more than two things or persons are meant, even if in English the addition "of two" is not made. Thus in speaking of two poets, the question "Which poet do you prefer?" is translated by "Utrum (not quem) poetam praefertis?"

If we employ the addition "of two" in English, the student must not be induced by the English PLURAL, to use this number also in Latin, as: Which of the two writers, "uter scriptor, not utri scriptores." The PLURAL of uter is used only, if its governing noun is a plurale tantum, or if we speak of two PARTIES, as: Utrae nuptiae, which of the two weddings; utrae partes, which of the two parties.

Rem. 6. For the neuter form quid see Book III (absolute adjectives).

§ 214. 6. The determinative adjectives of the DEFINITE form are called demonstrative adjectives (commonly de-

* When in the following paradigms three forms are mentioned under the same case, the first belongs to the MASCULINE, the second to the FEMININE, and the third to the NEUTER gender. When a case has one form only, it belongs to all three genders.

MONSTRATIVE PRONOUNS). They are: hic, this; ille and iste, that; idem, the same; ipse, self.

Besides these the pronoun of the 3d person is, ea, id is often used in place of ille, especially when followed by a relative.

§ 215. 7. The demonstrative adjectives are thus declined :

| SINGULAR.                                 | PLURAL.  |
|---|--|
| N. Hic, haec, hoc , this           | N. Hi, hae, haec , these                      |
| G. hujus , of this                 | G. horum, harum, horum , ofthese          |
| D. huic , to this                  | D. his , to these                             |
| A. hunc, hanc, hoc , this          | A. hos, has, haec , these                     |
| A. hōc, hāc, hōc , by this         | A. his , by these.                            |
| N. Ille, illa, illud , that        | N. Illi, illae, illa , those                  |
| G. illius , of that                | G. illorum, illarum, illorum , ofthose    |
| D. illi , to that                  | D. illis , to those                           |
| A. illum, illam, illud , that      | A. illos, illas, illa , those                 |
| A. illo, illā, illo , by that      | A. illis , by those.                          |
| N. Idem, eadem, idem , the same    | N. Idem (eīdem, īdem), eadem,eadem |
| G. eiusdem , of the same           | G. eorundem, earundem, eorundem               |
| D. eīdem , to the same             | D. īdem (eīdem, īdem)                         |
| A. eundem, eandem, idem , the same | A. eosdem, easdem, eadem                      |
| A. eōdem, eādē, eōdē , by the same | A. īdem (eīdem, īdem) .                       |
| N. Ipsē, ipsa, ipsum , — self      | N. Ipsi, ipsae, ipsa , — selves               |
| G. ipsius , of — self              | G. ipsorum, ipsarum, ipsorum , of —selves |
| D. ipsi , to — self                | D. ipsis , to — selves                        |
| A. ipsum, ipsam, ipsum , — self    | A. ipsos, ipsas, ipsa , — selves              |
| A. ipso, ipsā, ipso , by — self    | A. ipsis , by — selves                        |

Rem. 7. Idem is declined like ille, so that in the paradigm of ille the letters st are substituted for l, as: G. istius, D. isti, &c.

Rem. 8. The English adjective that generally is translated by ille. Iste is used, when the person or thing, determined by it, is conceived as being present to the speaker. It is frequently used in a contemptuous sense.

Rem. 9. The adjective ipse in connection with a NOUN is rendered either by the English compounds himself, herself, itself, themselves, or by the emphatical particles "very" and "even," as:

SINGULAR.

- N. Ipse consul, the consul himself, the very consul, even the consul.
 G. Ipseius consulis, of the consul himself, of the very consul, even of the consul.
 D. Ipsi consuli, to the consul himself, to the very consul, even to the consul, &c.

PLURAL.

- N. Ipsi consules, the consuls themselves, the very consuls, even the consuls.
 G. Ipsorum consulum, of the consuls themselves, of the very consuls, even of the consuls.
 D. Ipsis consulibus, to the consuls themselves, to the very consuls, even to the consuls, &c.

Thus in the feminine: Ipsa filia, the daughter herself, &c., urbs ipsa, the city itself, &c.; and in the neuter: Ipsum bellum, war itself, &c.

Ipse also is used as an attribute of PRONOUNS, as ego ipse, tu ipse, &c. For this connection see § 279, 280.

§ 246. 8. The indefinite form of the determinative adjectives leaves the individuality of persons or things more or less uncertain. These adjectives comprise the different expressions for the English terms some, any, each, other, no (none). They are the following:

1. Equivalents of SOME:
Aliquis (aliqui), quidam, and the rarer quispiam, some; nonnulli (pl. t.), several.
2. Equivalents of ANY:
Quisquam and ullus, any; uter and alteruter, either (that is any of two).
3. Equivalents of EACH:
Quisque, each, every, uterque, each of two, both, and the compounds with vis and libet:
Quirvis and quilibet, any you please, every possible;
Utervis and uterlibet, either you please.
4. Equivalents of OTHER:
Alius, another; alter, the other; the plural ceteri, the others, and reliquus, the rest of.
5. Equivalents of NO:
Nemo and nullus, no;
Neuter, neither (none of two).

9. These words are thus inflected:

§ 247. The compounds of quis (qui) and uter inflect these words only, while their prefixes and suffixes remain unchanged. Aliquis makes the NOM. SING. FEM. and NOM. and ACC. NEUTER PLUR.

aliqui, not aliquae. Quidam makes the NOM. and ACC. NEUTER SING. quoddam. Quisquam, which is without a feminine and without a plural number, makes the neuter quidquam (quicquam). But the latter is used absolutely only (see § 359), while the masculine quisquam may be used in connection with nouns (§ 250, 2.) All other forms follow the declension of quis and uter. For the neuters in quid instead of quod see p. 260 foll.

PARADIGMS.

| SINGULAR. |                              | PLURAL. |                                 |
|-----------|------------------------------|---------|---------------------------------|
| N.        | Aliquis, aliqua, aliquod     | N.      | aliqui, aliquæ, aliqua          |
| G.        | alicujus                     | G.      | aliquorum, aliquarum, aliquorum |
| D.        | alicui                       | D.      | aliquibus                       |
| A.        | aliquem, aliquam, aliquod    | A.      | aliquos, aliquas, aliqua        |
| A.        | aliquo, aliquā, aliquo       | A.      | aliquibus.                      |
| N.        | Quidam, quædam, quoddam      | N.      | quidam, quædam, quædam          |
| G.        | cujusdam                     | G.      | quorundam, quarundam, &c.       |
| D.        | cuidam                       | D.      | quibusdam                       |
| A.        | quendam, quandam, quoddam    | A.      | quosdam, quasdam, quædam        |
| A.        | quodam, quadam, quodam       | A.      | quibusdam.                      |
| N.        | Uterque, utraque, utrumque   | N.      | utrîque, utræque, utraque, &c.  |
| G.        | utriusque                    |         | like uter .              |
| D.        | utrîque                      |         |                                 |
| A.        | utrumque, utramque, utrumque |         |                                 |
| A.        | utrôque, utrâque, utrôque    |         |                                 |

Rem. 10. Quispiam forms the compound unusquisque, each without exception, for the inflection of which see § 255. Rem. 2.

Rem. 11. In the compound alteruter generally the word uter only is inflected, but sometimes both words take the inflection (altera ultra, alterum utrum.)

§ 248. The words alius, alter, ullus, nullus, neuter make their genitives in ius and their datives in i, according to § 242, R. 3, without distinction of gender. Alius in the genitive drops one i (alius), but retains it in the dative (alii). Alter retains the e throughout (alterius, alteri, &c.). Neuter drops the e (neutrius, neutri, &c.), and ullus and nullus make ullius & nul-

ius. In all other forms these words are declined like movable adjectives (§ 46, 51), except that alius makes aliud, not alium, in NOM. & ACC. SING. NEUTER.

§ 249. Nemo is used in the singular only, and declined like the noun homo (stem nemīn), but in CLASSICAL language it lacks the GENITIVE and ABLATIVE, which cases are supplied by nullus (G. nullius, D. nemini, A. neminem, Ab. nullo). It can be connected with nouns of MASCULINE gender only. Reliquus and the plural ceteri are declined like movable adjectives.

§ 250. 10. Those indefinite adjectives, which have the same English equivalents, are thus distinguished from each other :

1. Aliquis denotes an UNCERTAIN, but quidam a CERTAIN person or thing, which the author cannot or will not mention. Quispiam can be used in certain connections only. See p. 259, R. 4.

Rem. 12. Quidam generally is rendered by "a certain," if this expression is used in a general sense, as Atheniensis quidam, a certain Athenian.

2. Any with feminine and neuter nouns, and in the plural with nouns of all genders, must be translated by ullus, not by quisquam. With MASCULINES in the SINGULAR ullus must be used, if the noun denotes a THING. But with masculine nouns, denoting PERSONS, quisquam generally is used instead of ullus, and always, if the noun is NATIONAL, as :

Gallus quisquam, any Gaul, philosophi cujusquam, of any philosopher : but : liber ullus, femina ulla, scelus ullum.

3. Nemo has the same relation to nullus, as quisquam to ullus. Thus nemo (except in the genitive and ablative) is used before PERSONAL MASCULINE nouns in the singular, while with FEMININES, with nouns, denoting THINGS, and with all kinds of nouns in the PLURAL, nullus must be used, as :

Liber nullus, no book, homines nulli, no men, femina nulla, no woman, scriptoris nullius, of no writer, a scriptore nullo, by no writer : but : nemo scriptor, no writer, Atheniensem neminem, no Athenian.

4. Uterque, whose English equivalent both always has its noun in the plural, must be placed with its noun in the SINGULAR in Latin. It is placed in the PLURAL, if its noun is a plurale tan-turn, or when it denotes more than one party, as : Uterque scriptor, both writers ; utraque nuptia, both weddings ; utraque partes, both parties.

5. The equivalents of "other" are thus distinguished : 1. "The other" in the SINGULAR (always used, if the question is between two only) is rendered by alter, and in the PLURAL by ceteri, as : altera arbor, the other tree ; ceterae arbores, the other trees. 2. "Another" (in the singular), and "other" (in the plural, without an article) are translated by alius, alii, as : alia terra, another land ; aliae terrae, other lands. 3. Reliquus answers to the English "the rest of," or to "other" before singular nouns, denoting quantities, as : Reliqui captivi, the rest of the captives ; reliqua praeda, the rest of the booty, the other booty.

§ 251. 11. Determinative adjectives may be placed both before or after their governing nouns, except the demonstrative hic, which is generally, and the INTERROGATIVES, which always are placed before the governing nouns, as :

Hic liber (not liber hic), to which book ; utra ripa (not ripa utra), which of the two shores ; hic navi, by this ship ; but cir ille or ille cir, alia fortuna or fortuna alia, &c.

EXERCISES.

INTERROGATIVES. 1. Which exile? 2. Which commander? 3. Which tooth? 4. Which foot [of a man]? 5. Which of the two soldiers? 6. What a fear! 7. What color? 8. Which society? 9. What a rashness! 10. Which work? 11. Which coast? 12. Which of the two parts? 13. Which of the two treaties? 14. Which of the two note-books? 15. Which of the two Thebes? 16. Of which flower? 17. Of which ox? 18. Of which of the two bridges? 19. To which war? 20. To what child? 21. To which of the two parents? 22. Which conspiracy (obj.)? 23. What end (obj.)? 24. What sea (obj.)? 25. Which (obj.) of the two necklaces? 26. Which (obj.) of the two things? 27. By which situation? 28. By what a force! 29. By what pledge? 30. By which hand? 31. By which of the two bodies? 32. By which of the two vacations? 33. Which defenders? 34. What difficulties? 35. Which constellations? 36. Of which boats? 37. Of what manners? 38. Of which misdeeds? 39. To what hostages? 40. To which republics? 41. To which verses? 42. Which places (obj.) of honor? 43. What burdens (obj.)? 44. Which states (obj.)? 45. By which needles?

DEMONSTRATIVES. 1. This stone. 2. This bone. 3. This fleet. 4. That mountain. 5. That key. 6. That net. 7. The same order. 8. The same siege. 9. The same right. 10. The very wound. 11. The speech itself. 12. Even the enemy. 13. Of this accident. 14. Of this oath. 15. Of that old man. 16. Of that diadem. 17. Of that slavery. 18. Of the same heir. 19. Of the same night. 20. Of the very milk. 21. Of even the lion. 22. Of pain itself. 23. To this house. 24. To this origin. 25. To that inheritance. 26. To that image. 27. To the same herd. 28. To the same hope. 29. To the very army. 30. To the heart itself. 31. This fountain (obj.). 32. This axe (obj.). 33. This grove (obj.). 34. That fire (obj.). 35. That tower (obj.). 36. That poem (obj.). 37. The same month (obj.). 38. The same fever (obj.). 39. The ship itself (obj.). 40. By the same canal. 41. By this fire. 42. By this defeat. 43. By that stream. 44. By that authority. 45. By the very root. 46. By the senate itself. 47. These attacks. 48. These voices. 49. These rights. 50. Those kinds. 51. Those hills. 52. Those houses. 53. The same valleys. 54. The same pairs. 55. The same armies. 56. The very taxes. 57. Of these songs. 58. Of these showers. 59. Of these geese. 60. Of these pains. 61. Of those defeats. 62. Of the same arts. 63. Of the same young men. 64. Of the very mistakes. 65. Even of calamities. 66. To these lakes. 67. To those oxen. 68. To the same republics. 69. Even to the foot-soldiers. 70. These journeys (obj.). 71. These cohorts (obj.). 72. These armies (obj.). 73. Those nights (obj.). 74. Those country-seats (obj.). 75. The same seats (obj.). 76. The same cushions (obj.). 77. Even young men (obj.). 78. The very ships (obj.). 79. By these old men. 80. By those gods. 81. By the same goddesses. 82. By the brothers themselves.

INDEFINITES. 1. Some slave. 2. Some ship. 3. Some work. 4. A certain priest. 5. A certain city. 6. A certain gift. 7. Any soldier. 8. Any flower. 9. Any inheritance. 10. Any danger. 11. Every virtue. 12. Each king. 13. Every crime. 14. Both names. 15. Both lions. 16. Both legions. 17. Every possible lawsuit. 18. Any poem you please. 19. Either law you please. 20. Another heir. 21. Another head. 22. The other commander. 23. The other age. 24. No patrician. 25. No state. 26. No spring. 27. Neither sister. 28. Neither knee. 29. Of some cause. 30. Of a certain woman. 31. Of any Roman. 32. Of any mountain. 33. Of every occasion. 34. Of both orders. 35. Of every possible name. 36. Of another field. 37. Of the other treaty. 38. Of no Latin. 39. Of neither brother. 40. To some house. 41. To any deity. 42. To any Jew. 43. To each part. 44. To any city you please. 45. To another art. 46. To the other hand. 47. To no knight. 48. To no journey. 49. Some favor (obj.). 50. Any river (obj.). 51. Every robber (obj.). 52. Both feet (obj.). 53. Another ware (obj.). 54. The other side (obj.). 55. No chief (obj.). 56. No night (obj.). 57. By some accident. 58. By a certain difficulty. 59. By any pain. 60. By every help. 61. By either house you please. 62. By both languages. 63. By another fire. 64. By the other order. 65. By the rest of the money. 66. By no inhabitant. 67. By no nation. 68. By neither consul. 69. Some soldiers. 70. Certain robbers. 71. Several arguments. 72. Any Athenians. 73. Other reasons. 74. The other kinds. 75. No hostages. 76. Of some boats. 77. Of certain ships. 78. Of several mistakes. 79. Of any leaders. 80. Of both parties. 81. Of the other kings. 82. Of other pleasures. 83. Of no fortresses. 84. To certain conditions. 85. To any verses. 86. To other things. 87. To other questions. 88. To no images. 89. Some nations (obj.). 90. Several roots (obj.). 91. Any customs (obj.). 92. Other tribunals (obj.). 93. The stems (obj.). 94. No armies (obj.). 95. By certain orators. 96. By any praises. 97. By other mountains. 98. By the other chief-priests. 99. By no defeats. 100. By both vacations.

LESSON XXXIII.

FORM-ADJECTIVES.

SECTION II.—NUMERAL ADJECTIVES.

§ 252. 1. NUMERALS are divided into cardinal, ordinal, and multiplicative numerals. The Cardinals represent things or persons as UNITS, or as consisting of units. The Ordinals represent them as belonging to a numerical order. The Multiplicatives represent persons or things as SIMPLER or MULTIPLES.

Rem. 1. For a synopsis of all numerals see X. of the Vocabularies. This synopsis must be committed to memory.

CARDINALS.

I. SIMPLE CARDINALS.

§ 253. 2. The Cardinal Numerals are either simple cardinals or distributives (see § 255).

§ 254. 3. The interrogative form of the SIMPLE CARDINALS consists in the indeclinable plurale tantum quot, how many? as: quot gentes, how many nations; Q. quot gentium, of how many nations, &c.

§ 255. 4. The definite form consists 1) of the indeclinable DEMONSTRATIVE numerals tot, so many, and totidem, just so (as) many; 2) of the definite NUMBERS (one, two, etc.). They are pluralia tantum, except unus. Declinable are only (a) unus, duo, tres; (b) those expressing more than one hundred, and more than one thousand, as ducenti, trecenti etc.; duo milia, tria milia etc.

Rem. 2. Unus is declined like a movable adjective, but forms its genitive in ius, and its dative in i for all the three genders (unius, uni).

Unus forms the compound unusquisque, each one, in which both unus and quisque are inflected. Duo and tres are thus declined:

|                           |                                    |
|---------------------------|------------------------------------|
| N. Duo, duæ, duo          | N. Tres, tria                      |
| G. duorum, duarum, duorum | G. trium                           |
| D. duobus, duabus, duobus | D. tribus                          |
| A. duo (duos), duas, duo  | A. tris (tres postclassical), tria |
| A. duobus, duabus, duobus | A. tribus.                         |

Ambo, both, is declined like duo. Ambo is thus distinguished from uterque, that the former means both together, but the latter each of them singly.

Rem. 3. The numerals, expressing more than one hundred, are declined like movable adjectives, as ducenti, ducentae, ducenta; G. ducentorum, ducentarum, ducentorum, &c. The numerals, expressing more than one thousand, are phrases, formed by one of the smaller numerals as attributes, and the numeral noun millia as governing word. The latter is of NEUTER GENDER, and declined after the third declension like the plural of a neuter in the vowel-class (G. millium, D. & Ab. millibus, Acc. millia). The attributive numerals, which may be both definite and indefinite, either precede or follow the word millia, and such of them, as are declinable, must agree with it in gender and case, as:

Duo millia or millia duo, two thousand; trecenta millia or millia trecenta, 300,000;
multa millia, many thousand (G. duorum millium or millium duorum, &c.).

Rem. 4. The nouns, connected with numerals from 2000 upward, are in Latin always placed in the GENITIVE PLURAL, being considered as ATTRIBUTES of the governing noun millia. The arrangement of these phrases is fourfold, as:

2000 soldiers, duo militum millia, or militum millia duo, or duo millia militum, or millia militum duo; by 10,000 men, decem hominum milibus, or hominum millibus decem, or decem millibus hominum, or millibus hominum decem.

Rem. 5. The numeral mille is an indeclinable ADJECTIVE, and is used of one thousand only, its governing noun alone being declined, as: oppida mille, G. oppidorum mille, D. oppidis mille. But in the NOM. and ACC. mille sometimes occurs as a SUBSTANTIVE, having its noun in the GENITIVE PLURAL, like millia, as mille hominum, 1000 men.

Rem. 6. The COMPOUND NUMERALS [that is 81, 49, 53, 96, 702, &c.] generally are expressed by COORDINATION, according to the following rules:

1. From 20 to 100 the larger number either precedes without et, or follows with et, as: viginti tres or tres et viginti. In compounds with one the numeral unus remains in the SINGULAR, agreeing with its noun in case and gender only, as: 51 women, femine quinquaginta una; 21 cities, oppida unum et viginti.

2. In numerals over 100 the larger number always precedes, either without or with et, which is placed immediately after the larger number, as: 356, trecenti quinquaginta sex; 1132, mille (et) sexcenti triginta duo.

3. If numerals, denoting more than one 1000, are composed with smaller numbers, the governing noun must be connected with the latter, and cannot be made dependent on millia, so that it stands in the case, required by the construction, and not in the genitive as an attribute of millia, as: tria millia trecenti homines (not hominum), tribus millibus trecentis hominibus.

4. Numerals, composed with the numbers 8 or 9, generally are expressed by SUBTRACTION, as: 18, decemviginti (literally two from twenty), 29, undetriginta (literally one from thirty), 99, undecentum.
Rem. 7. The numerals from one million upward are expressed by MULTIPLICATION of a numeral ADVERB with 100,000, and the latter number is then generally rendered by a DISTRIBUTIVE (see § 259), as: A million, decies centena millia (literally 10 times 100,000); two millions, duces centena millia (literally 20 times 100,000).

§ 256. 5. FRACTIONS are expressed either by the noun pars, in connection with the ORDINAL NUMERALS (see § 261), or by the fractional parts of the as.

Rem. 8. Obs. horæ is expressed by the adjective dimidius, a, um, or by dimidia pars and a genitive, as: half an hour, hora dimidia, or dimidia horæ pars. If the other fractions are expressed by ORDINALS with pars, the noun must be in the genitive, as: one third of a foot, tertia pedis pars. For the use of the fractional parts of the as see Part II.

Rem. 9. Definite numerals of all classes more frequently follow, than precede their nouns.

Rem. 10. The Roman notation of numbers was done by CAPITAL LETTERS (see X. Voc. 2d col.) The sign D, annexed to I (500), makes its value 10 times greater. Thus IDD marks 5000, and IDD 50,000. In order to double the number, we prefix the sign C as often to it, as D is annexed. Thus CCIDD marks 10,000, and CCCIDD 100,000. The intermediate thousands, ten thousands, and hundred thousands are notated by repeating the single thousands, ten thousands, etc., as 3000 = CID CID CID; 6000 = IDD CID; 30,000 = CCIDD CCIDD CCIDD; 80,000 = IDD CCIDD CCIDD CCIDD; 312,000 = CCCIDDD CCCLDD CCCLDD; CCIDD CID CID.

Indefinite form.

§ 257. 6. The indefinite numerals, answering to the question quot, are the following:

Solus, alone, only

aliquot } several complures }

multi, many

plures (plural of plus), more plurimi, most plerique, pl. t. very many, most pauci, pl. t., few

pauciores, fewer paucissimi, fewest

omnes, all

totus, the whole.

The indefinite numerals are thus inflected: Aliquot is an indeclinable plurale tantum. Solus and totus are declined like unus (G. solūs, totūs, &c.). Multi, plurimi, pauci and plerique (the last without a genitive) are declined like movable adjectives. Omnis and the pl. t. complures are inflected after the 3d declension like an adjective of the vowel-class. Plus in the singular is a QUANTITATIVE adjective (see I. XXXIV), being used in the NEUTER gender only; its GEN. is pluris; DAT. and ABL. wanting. But its plural plures (m. & f.) with the neuter plura (not pluria) is complete (G. plurium, D. & Abl. pluribus, Acc. pluris, plura.)

Rem. 11. Solus, which represents the UNITY of the indefinite numerals, is translated by only or alone, and is used in both singular and plural. The definite numeral unus often is employed in the same sense, and is then likewise used in both numbers, as:

Scipio alone, solus Scipio or unus Scipio; of the only reason, solius or unius causæ; by virtue alone, solū or unā virtūte; only the Romans, soli or uni Romāni; by the horsemen alone, solis or unis equitibus.

Rem. 12. Totus answers to the question "how many parts", and is opposed to the fractional definite numerals, corresponding to the English "the whole" or "the whole of." The singular of omnis frequently is used in the same signification. The English "the whole of" cannot be literally translated into Latin, but must be changed into an ADJECTIVE attributive phrase, as: The whole of Gaul, omnis or tota Gallia (not Galliæ), Acc. omnem or totam Galliam.

Omnis in the singular frequently is used as a determinative adjective in the meaning of quisque, every, while in the plural (omnes) it corresponds to the English all, as: omne vitium, every vice; omnes homines, all men.

Rem. 13. The indefinite numerals generally precede their governing nouns.

§ 258. 7. The adverbs, formed from the cardinal numerals, answer to the question quoties, how often? They are formed by the termination -ies, except those corresponding to the first four numerals (Vocab. X). Thus are formed the adverbs toties (so many times, so often), aliquoties and pluries (several times) from tot, aliquot, plures. Plerique forms the adverb plerumque (generally, mostly). The adverbs formed from the other indefinites belong to the quantitative class (p. 188).

II. DISTRIBUTIVE NUMERALS.

§ 259. 8. The DISTRIBUTIVES are a class of cardinal numerals, peculiar to the Latin language, denoting a number, repeated as often, as there are individuals or units in some collective or plural noun, to which the numeral refers. They are rendered by a simple cardinal numeral, either with or without the addition of "each" or "apiece." They all are pluralia tantum, even the unity, singuli, and are declined like movable adjectives. See X. Voc. col. 5.

EXPLANATION. In the following sentence: "The consul gives 100 sesterces to each" the numeral expression "100 sesterces" is conceived to be as often repeated, as there are individuals or units. We therefore employ the distributive, not the simple cardinal in Latin, and translate, giving the noun of reference (soldier) into a PLURAL: Consul militibus cent. den. sestertios d. d. The word each is not always expressed, but often understood in English. Thus in the sentence "Men have two ears and one mouth" the numerals two and one must be translated by distinct and single, since each man has two ears and one mouth: Homines bina auria et singula os habent. From the same reason, DISTRIBUTIVES must be employed instead of the simple cardinals in MULTIPLICATION, when operation involves a repetition of one number as often, as there are units in another, as:

Twice two are four, bis duo sunt quatuor.

Rem. 14. The distributive singuli occurs in two different meanings: 1. as denoting the distributive UNITY, as in the second example of the EXPLANATION. Thus: one head, singula capita; one column, singula columnæ. 2. It also denotes each, and in this meaning is often connected with the noun, to which a distributive numeral refers, as: Each bench has four seats, singula subsellia quaternas sedis habent. Thus the first example in the EXPLANATION might be thus expressed: Consul singulis militibus centenos sestertios dat.

§ 260. 9. The DISTRIBUTIVES consist of an INTERROGATIVE form (quōtēni, how many to each?), and a DEFINITE form, which with the exception of singuli, adds the termination -ni or -ni to the variously modified stems. There are no distributive INDEFINITES, and, in their stead, simple cardinals must be employed.

Rem. 15. Distributives are used in place of simple cardinals with PLURALIA TANTUM and HETEROLOGICAL PLURALS, which have a singular meaning, as two camps, bina castra—two castra would mean two fortresses. But with words of this kind one oftener is expressed by the plural of unus, and three by trini instead of terni, as: One letter, unæ litteræ; three houses, trinæ ædes.

ORDINALS.

§ 261. 10. The ORDINAL numerals consist: 1. of the INTERROGATIVE quotus (which in order), and its compound quotusquisque; 2. of the DEFINITE ordinals, enumerated XI. Voc. col. 6; 3. of the INDEFINITE ordinals, denoting the last, highest, lowest and middle orders. These are the superlatives:

|           |                   |                             |
|-----------|-------------------|-----------------------------|
| ultimus   | } the last | summus, the highest  |
| extrēmus  |                   | infimus, the lowest  |
| postrēmus |                   | medius, the middle . |

All ordinals, except prior and alter, terminate in us, and are inflected like movable adjectives. Prior has the inflection of a COMPARATIVE. See Lesson XXXVII.

Rem. 16. Quotus corresponds to the English 'which' or 'what', if an ordinal number is expected as an answer, as: What year? Quotus (not quis) annus—ANSWER: the twelfth—; What o'clock? Quota hora (literally: 'which hour in order'). Quotusquisque generally is translated by 'how few!', and is declined by inflecting both words, quotus and quisque. It always is used absolutely, that is without a noun, in Latin, and occurs in the MASCULINE SINGULAR only. Hence its PREDICATE, which in English always is in the PLURAL, must be the SINGULAR in Latin, as: Hoc few understand those rules! Quotusquisque regulas illas intelligit!

OBSERVATION. In the computation of the CALENDAR-YEARS and the HOURS of the DAY, we generally use CARDINAL numbers in English, while in Latin Ordinals must be employed, as: 6 o'clock, hora sexta (literally the sixth hour); the year 1866, annus millesimus octingentesimus sexagesimus sextus.

Rem. 17. The compound Ordinals are formed according to the same rule as the compound Cardinals [Rem. 6], as: the 27th, vicesimus septimus, or septimus et vicesimus. The Ordinals more frequently follow than precede their nouns.

Rem. 18. All ADVERBS, formed from ordinal numerals, have the form of the neuter adjectives, either in the accusative or ablative singular. Those that occur in Latin, are enumerated Voc. No. 4, as primum, for the first time, primo, in the first place. The ordinal adverbs in o sometimes are used instead of those in um. In enumerations the adverbs in o are more frequently used, than those in um, as: He intends first to deceive the citizens, then [secondly] to become a consul, and lastly to destroy the republic, Primo civis decipere, deinde consul fieri, postremo rempublicam evertere cupit.

MULTIPLICATIVES.

§ 262. 11. The MULTIPLICATIVE numerals either denote the number of PARTS, of which a WHOLE consists, and then they are formed by the termination plex, as simplex, duplex, triplex; or they express the MULTIPLE of another number, and then they terminate in plus, as simplus, duplus, triplus, &c. Those in plex are inflected like adjectives of the 3d declension with vowel-stems (duplex, G. duplicis, Abl. duplici, N. pl. n. duplicia, G. duplicium). Those in plus are inflected like movable adjectives.

The multiplicatives are rendered either by cardinal numerals compounded with "fold", or by a numeral adverb with the addition of "as much", as triplex acies, a threefold line of battle; quadruplum, four times as much.

Rem. 19. The multiplicatives in plus almost always are used in the NEUTER SINGULAR as substantives, denoting AMOUNT, as pocna quadrupli, a fine, consisting of the fourfold amount.

Rem. 20. Multiplicatives are formed from a few numbers only. All of these are enumerated VIII. Voc. No. 5. The only multiplicative of the INDEFINITE form is multiplix, manyfold.

EXERCISES.

SIMPLE CARDINAL NUMERALS.

1. How many Greeks!
2. How many arguments!
3. Of how many years?
4. To how many oxen?
5. One language.
6. One plum-tree.
7. One study.
8. The one Catiline.
9. Horace alone.
10. The only kind.
11. Life only.
12. Only of God.
13. Of the only work.
14. Of the mouth alone.
15. To the only place.
16. To glory alone.
17. The only method (obj.).
18. By labor alone.
19. Only by poverty.
20. One armistice.
21. The only images.
22. Of robberies alone.
23. To the houses alone.
24. Only by the gods.
25. Two suns.
26. Two systems.
27. Two pounds.
28. Both priestesses.
29. Of two parts.
30. To two orators.
31. To both legions.
32. Two orders (obj.).
33. Two boats (obj.).
34. Three women.
35. Of three oxen.
36. To three kings.
37. Three foot-soldiers (obj.).
38. Of four soldiers.
39. By 18 feet.
40. 19 years.
41. Of 28 days.
42. To 29 hours.
43. By 38 months.
44. Of 39 pounds and a half.
45. Of 48 pints (sartarius).
46. By 49 acres (iugerum).
47. 59 paces (passus).
48. 88 inches (digitus).
49. 31 sesterces (sestertius).
50. Of 52 as.
51. 33 sides.
52. 34 cities.
53. 41 head of cattle.
54. By 42 questions.
55. Of 52 sheep.
56. 63 mistakes.
57. 78 kinds.
58. 92 stones.
59. <sup>1</sup>CXXXVIII years.
60. CCXLII sentences.
61. CCCLIII words.
62. CCCCLXV sesterces.
63. DXXXII feet.
64. DCLVI paces.
65. DCCLXVII pounds (pondo).
66. DCCCLXXII slaves.
67. DCCCCI years.
68. CCI inhabitants.
69. M sesterces.
70. CCID CCID sesterces.
71. By MMM letters (of the alphabet).
72. To CID CID CID CID soldiers.
73. Of 100 feet.
74. 100 CID (6000) horsemen.
75. CCID houses.
76. By MDCLIX years.
77. To CID CID CID books.
78. CID CID CID CID LII fishes.
79. CCID CCID CLI paces.
80. IDID CID CID CID LXX pounds.
81. CCCCIDID sesterces.
82. CCCCIDID sesterces.
83. CCCCIDID CCCCIDID CCCCIDID CCID CID CC sesterces.
84. By one-sixth of the distance (intervalum).
85. Half a house.
86. To one-half of the army.
87. Of so many verses.
88. To just as many harbors.
89. Many questions (obj.).
90. Many lightnings.
91. By several occasions.
92. More treaties.
93. Of more nations.
94. More orders (obj.).
95. By most wares.
96. Very many augurs (obj.).
97. Of few states.
98. Of all conditions.
99. All animals.
100. By all goddesses.
101. The whole of Germany.

<sup>1</sup> The Roman capitals, used here and in the following phrases, must be translated by Latin numerals.

102. Of the whole difficulty. 103. To the whole cohort. 104. The whole (obj.) of the army. 105. By the whole of the globe. 106. Few pleasures (obj.).

DISTRIBUTIVES.

1. Singulae arces a singulis cohortibus defenduntur. 2. Equi pedes quaternos habent, <sup>2</sup>insecta senos, cancri autem denos. 3. Legiones Romanæ peditum cohortis denas, singulae autem cohortes quadringēnos vicēnos milites continent. 4. Militibus <sup>3</sup>prætorianis singula millia <sup>4</sup>testamentum, cohortibus,* urbānis quingēni, <sup>5</sup>legionariis trecēni Augusti <sup>6</sup>testamento plegantur. 5. Tricies tricēna sunt nongenta. 6. Singula templi latera quinque denis columnis ornantur. 7. Binas horas <sup>7</sup>musicæ, ternas grammaticæ, quaternas <sup>8</sup>geometriæ studio quotidie <sup>9</sup>tribuere solēmus.

1. Two acres of <sup>10</sup>land to each are divided <sup>11</sup>among the plebs. 2. The <sup>12</sup>Mormons <sup>13</sup>marry two, three or more wives. 3. The fingers of men have three <sup>14</sup>joints, the <sup>15</sup>thumb (has) two. 4. Each <sup>16</sup>regiment contains 1000 soldiers. 5. The leader promises one <sup>17</sup>talent to each conspirator. 6. Two slaves <sup>18</sup>are allowed to each soldier. 7. Each wall (of the house) is supported by 6 <sup>19</sup>posts. 8. Most houses of this city have two <sup>20</sup>stories. 9. A centurion generally leads 100 soldiers. 10. The duumvirs allow to each <sup>21</sup>colonist 16 acres of <sup>22</sup>land. 11. Five times 23 are 115. 12. Six times 38 are 228.

ORDINALS AND MULTIPLICATIVES.

1. Of the first year. 2. The first ranks. 3. Of the second battle. 4. To the third house. 5. The fourth street (obj.). 6. By the fifth daughter. 7. A sixth wedding. 8. To the eleventh hour. 9. By the 19th <sup>23</sup>century. 10. By the 28th regiment. 11. Of the 39th sentence. 12. The 41st <sup>24</sup>chapter (obj.). 13. By the 51st <sup>25</sup>milestone. 14. To the 62d question. 15. To the 119th day. 16. By the 273d night. 17. Of the year 784. 18. Nine o'clock. 19. The 1001st month (obj.). 20. By the year 1867.

21. What <sup>26</sup>class (in order)? 22. By what day (in order)? 23. To what legion (in order)? 24. How few are unhurt! 25. How few prefer truth to life and wealth! 26. How few seem to observe this law! 27. The last province. 28. Of the last city. 29. By the last reason. 30. Of the highest mountain. 31. By the lowest valley. 32. The highest <sup>27</sup>tops. 33. Of the middle houses. 34. By the middle legion. 35. The soldiers attack a double number of the enemies. 36. We do not wish to <sup>28</sup>expose ourselves to a threefold danger. 37. The garrison can <sup>29</sup>withstand the attack of a tenfold number of soldiers.

NUMERAL ADVERBS.

1. It is necessary to read this book twice. 2. We do not wish to say the same thing three times. 3. You must repeat this sentence several times. 4. 101 times 3 are 303. 5. This man now is consul for the third time. 6. We intend to defeat the enemy a second time. 7. The author first relates the cause and origin of the rebellion, then the history of the war itself, and lastly the <sup>30</sup>murder of the <sup>31</sup>president. 8. To be defrauded is first <sup>32</sup>inconvenient, secondly foolish, and thirdly disgraceful. 9. I see this man to-day for the first time. 10. Gajus for the second time is accused of a theft.

[illegible]

LESSON XXXIV.

FORM-ADJECTIVES.

SECTION III.—QUANTITATIVES, QUALITATIVES AND POSSESSIVES.

I. QUANTITATIVES.

§ 263. 1. QUANTITATIVE adjectives are those, which include the idea of an amount, and their primary function is that of determining the quantity of such things as are measured or weighed, as : vinum, aurum, frumentum. But they also are used in order to determine the INTENSITY of ABSTRACT NOUNS, as : tempus, dolor, virtus. They consist :

- tempus, dolor, virtus. They consist :
1. Of the INTERROGATIVE quantus, how much, how great ;
  2. Of the DEFINITES tantus, so much, so great ; tantusdem, just so (as) much.

3. Of the following INDEFINITES :

3. Of the following INDEFINITES :

|                                       |                                       |                            |
|---------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|----------------------------|
| Aligantus , not a little       | nimius , too much              | parum , too little, |
| multus , much                  | paulum , little                | not enough                 |
| plus , more; plurimum , | minus , less; minimum , | satis , enough      |
| most, very much.                      | least, very little.                   | nihil , nothing.    |

Comparative adjectives have two constructions:

§ 261. 2. Quantitative adjectives have two constructions:

§ 261. 2. Quantitative adjectives have two genders.
a. The adjective is placed in the SING. of the NEUTER GENDER and its governing noun assumes the grammatical form of an ATTRIBUTE in the genitive, as :
He drank very much of wine, a great much wine, multum vini (literally much of wine, a great amount of wine); quantum argenti, how much silver; tantum temporis, so much time.

20 Cædes. 21 Princeps. 22 To defraud, circumventre. 23 Incommodus.

This is called the PARTITIVE CONSTRUCTION.

b. The adjective retains, as it always does in English, the form of the ATTRIBUTE, and agrees with its governing noun in gender, number and case, as: quanta audacia, how much boldness; multo vino, by much wine.

The FORMER construction is the RULE, when the adjective stands in the nominative or accusative singular. But in connection with ABSTRACT NOUNS, the adjective may, even in this case, be construed according to the latter method, as: quanta temeritas, what a recklessness!

The LATTER construction always must be used, if the adjective is in another case than nominative or accusative singular, as: tanto timore (not tanto timoris), by so much fear.

§ 265. 3. The following quantitative adjectives: plus, parvum, parum, nihil and satis are of NEUTER gender, having neither a MASCULINE nor a FEMININE form. They have no other cases but NOMINATIVE and ACCUSATIVE SINGULAR. Hence they always must be used in the PARTITIVE construction, as: more water, plus aquæ; a little patience, paulum patientiæ; not provisions enough, parum frumenti; blood enough, satis sanguinis. Nihil is then translated by "no," as: "nihil præmii," no reward; nihil auri, no gold.

Rem. 1. When the English adjectives more, a little, enough, etc., must be translated by Latin genitives, datives or ablatives, the words, mentioned above, cannot be used, and other expressions, or circumlocutions must be employed. Thus, instead of plus we say "major copia" (a greater quantity); instead of paulum we employ the descriptive adjective exiguus; instead of satis the relative clause "quod satis est"; instead of nihil the determinative nullus.

Rem. 2. The adjective minus, in this form, likewise is a neuter, and can be used in the PARTITIVE construction only. It has a masculine and feminine form minor (Lesson XXXVIII.), which however is a DESCRIPTIVE adjective, corresponding to the English adjective "smaller". This DESCRIPTIVE adjective minor, in connection with the noun copia, must be used instead of the QUANTITATIVE adjective minus, if the construction requires a genitive, dative or accusative, as: by less water, minore aquæ copiâ.

§ 266. 4. The other quantitatives (tantus, quantus, &c.) have a complete inflection, and may be used either in the partitive construction, or so that they agree with their nouns in number, gender and case, according to § 264, as: quanta indulgentia (or quantum indulgentiæ), how much indulgence! tantum spatium (or tantum spatii), so much distance; nimio vino (not nimio vini), by too much wine; multo labore (not multo laboris), by much labor.

Rem. 3. Quantus and tantus also have the meaning of the DESCRIPTIVE adjectives "how great" and "so great," and in this signification always must agree with their nouns in gender, number and case, as: quantus vir, how great a man! toti imperatores, so great generals!

Rem. 4. The English "what a" or "what an," asking for the QUANTITY or INTENSITY of something, always should be rendered by quantus, not by qui, as: what a price, quantum pretium! "Much money" is translated by magna pecunia not by multum pecuniæ. "So much money," "how much money" are more frequently expressed by quanta and tanta pecunia, than by quantum pecuniæ, etc. "Many troops" is rendered magnæ (not multæ) copiæ. So always quantæ and tantæ (not quot and tot) copiæ.

Rem. 5. Tantulus, quantulus, and plus sometimes occur in diminutive forms with the termination ulus: tantulus, with the meaning "so little," quantulus = "how little," and plusculum = a little more.

II. QUALITATIVES.

§ 267. 5. As the QUANTITATIVE adjectives include the idea of an AMOUNT, so the QUALITATIVES include the idea of a QUALITY. They consist: 1. of the interrogative qualis, what kind of, what sort of; 2. of the indefinite talis, such kind of, such, as: qualis vir, what kind of man; talis vir, such a man.

They are inflected like adjectives of the 3d declension of the vowel-class, and agree with their nouns in gender, number and case, as: Qualia animalia, what kind of animals; tali verbo, by such a word.

Rem. 6. An indefinite form of the qualitatives does not exist. Their place is supplied by phrases in the 3d declension consisting of indefinites of the determinative class with the nouns omnes or quævis, as: Homines ejusque generis, men of every kind. Verba ejusque generis, words of any kind.

III. POSSESSIVES.

§ 268. 6. The POSSESSIVE adjectives represent the three grammatical PERSONS AS ATTRIBUTES, and stand instead of the genitive case of the PERSONAL PRONOUNS, as pater noster, our father (instead of "the father of us"). They have 1. an interrogative form ejus, eja, ejum, which is translated by the English possessive case whose, but in good prose rarely occurs; 2. a definite form, which is derived from the stems of the personal pronouns:

|                    |                     |             |                      |
|--------------------|---------------------|-------------|----------------------|
| meus, my    | tuus, thy    | suus | his, her, its |
| noster, our | vester, your |             | their.        |

Rem. 7. From the stem of the pronoun of the 3d person is, ea, id no possessive adjective is formed. Instead of it the genitives eius, eorum, earum are used, the distinction of which from the possessive suus will be explained L. XXXVI, Rem. 5.

Rem. 8. The inflection of the possessives is that of the movable adjectives. But meus has mi, not mee, for the vocative singular of the masculine, as: mi fili, O my son! Noster and vester lose the e of the termination er in their inflection—FEM. nostra, GEN. nostrī, nostrae, &c. Possessives generally follow their nouns, except the vocative mi, and when they are used with emphasis.

Rem. 9. The possessive adjective of the 3d person, suus, has an ANTECEDENT, like the pronouns of the 3d person. In the English language the possessives his, her, its, their, assume the gender of this antecedent, which is not the case in Latin. Here the possessive agrees with its governing noun, like other adjectives, and not with its antecedent. Thus filius suus may mean his, her or their son, and amicitia sua may denote his, her or their friendship.

Rem. 10. The English possessives, frequently are not expressed at all in Latin, when they are easily understood from the connection, as: Parents love their children, parentes liberos amant.

ADVERBS.

§ 269. 7. The Possessives do not form adverbs at all. The Qualitatives qualis and talis form the adverbs qualiter and taliter, but these have no classic authority. The Quantitatives borrow the accusative singular of their neuters for adverbs; hence plus, satis, minus, paulum, parum are used as adverbs without any change. Instead of tantum and quantum the adverbs tantopere (so much) and quantopere (how much) frequently occur. Nimius makes the adverb nimis.

Ex. You speak enough, satis loquimini. They do not pronounce distinctly enough, parum dilucide enuntiant.

How much do we love thee, quantopere te diligimus!

Rem. 11. These quantitative adverbs have the peculiarity, that they may indicate the intensity or the degree of ADJECTIVES or other ADVERBS, and must then be considered as their OBJECTS, as:

The troops fight less vigorously, Copiæ minus acriter pugnant.

The scholars are diligent enough, Discipuli satis diligentes sunt. They tarry too long, nimis diu commorantur.
Instead of tantum and quantum the adverbs quam (how) and tam (so) must be used in connection with adjectives or adverbs, as: How sad is this defeat, Quam tristis hæc clades est! So quickly passes time away, tam celeriter tempus effugit!

EXERCISES.

QUANTITATIVES AND QUALITATIVES.

1. How much pay? 2. How much salt? 3. How much dung? 4. How much advantage! 5. How great an eloquence! 6. What a perseverance! 7. Of how much avarice! 8. To how great an enmity! 9. By how much meat? 10. By how much money? 11. By what a scholarship! 12. How great battles! 13. How great and many miracles! 14. Not a little iron (ferrum). 15. Not a little advantage. 16. By not a little fear. 17. So much milk. 18. So much authority. 19. So much poverty. 20. So great a kingdom. 21. So great and many philosophers! 22. Of so much prudence. 23. By so much pride. 24. Just as much wine. 25. Just as much silver. 26. Much beeswax (cera). 27. By much clay (argillum). 28. Of much money. 29. Much honey. 30. By too much bread. 31. Too much negligence. 32. More food. 33. More sleep. 34. A little prudence. 35. A little time. 36. Too little diligence. 37. Not confidence enough. 38. Salt enough. 39. Vegetables (obsonium, SING.) enough. 40. Not faith enough. 41. No hope. 42. No damage. 43. Most silver. 44. Very much fear. 45. Less poison. 46. Less wine and more bread. 47. What kind of a body? 48. Of what sort of crime? 49. To what kind of society? 50. By what kind of argument? 51. What kind of soldiers? 52. What kind of precepts? 53. Of what sort of rules? 54. By what sort of penalties? 55. Such kind of poison. 56. Such kind of pleasures. 57. Such dangers. 58. Of such occasions. 59. To such things. 60. Such states obj. 61. By such a system.

POSSESSIVES.

1. My house. 2. My poem. 3. My books. 4. My boats. 5. O my Pompey! 6. O my friend! 7. O my queen! 8. Thy voice. 9. Thy works. 10. Thy wedding. 11. His money. 12. Her danger. 13. Its origin. 14. Their gift. 15. His habits. 16. Its roots. 17. Her messenger. 18. Our system. 19. Your crime. 20. Our lives. 21. Of my sengers. 22. Of my suspicions. 23. Of thy welfare. 24. Of thy teach-leisure. 25. Of his guilt. 26. Of her crime. 27. Of its usefulness. 28. Of their fame. 29. Of his victories. 30. Of their plans. 31. Of our folly. 32. Of our questions. 33. Of your king. 34. Of your clients. 35. To my journey. 36. To thy youth. 37. To his origin. 38. To her fear. 39. By his house. 40. By her ambassador. 41. By my anxiety. 42. By thy language. 43. By my feet. 44. By thy foot soldiers. 45. Your death (obj.). 46. Our pains (obj.). 47. We are unwilling to break our word (fides). 48. They intend to defend their country, lives and children. 49. The king seems to change his plan.

ADVERBS.

1. How much (do) we grieve! 2. How much (do) you rejoice! 3. How just are thy judgments! 4. How moderately he acts! 5. You praise him so much! 6. Thy son is so modest! 7. He adorns the city so much! 8. We work just as much. 9. We sleep much and you watch more. 10. We daily love him more. 11. They seem to perform this work less ably (aptus). 12. The king is now less desirous of glory. 13. Gajus imitates too much the example of his father. 14. Our soldiers advance a little, but cannot sustain the attack of the enemies. 15. You are too little attentive, O boys! 16. You work enough, but not patiently enough.

LESSON XXXV.

COMBINATION OF FORM-ADJECTIVES.

§ 270. 1. When Form-adjectives are combined with each other or with attributes of other kinds, the Latin language generally observes a certain order of the words. Although frequent deviations from the regular order occur, either for the sake of emphasis, or for other rhetorical reasons, it nevertheless is necessary to consider this order as the NORMAL arrangement. If perfectly familiarized with this order, we shall better appreciate the reasons, by which the Latin authors have been induced, often to modify the usual arrangement.

§ 271. 2. Interrogative adjectives of all classes precede all members of the attributive phrases, to which they belong. The rest of the phrase is arranged, as it would be without the interrogative, as: What daughter of Gajus, quæ Gaji filia? Which diligent boy, quis puer diligens? How great an industry of men, quanta hominum industria!

§ 272. 3. The Demonstratives hic, ille, iste generally take the middle place in the phrase, and the Possessives the last, as: Magnus ille vir, that great man; Hortus suburbanus tuus, thy suburban garden.

Rem. 1. When POSSESSIVES are combined with hic, ille, iste, the arrangement according to this rule must be the following: 1. Governing noun, 2. hic, ille or iste, 3. Possessive, as: Liber ille tuus, that book of thine. The English language in this combination employs the substantive form of the possessive (mine, ours, &c.), connecting it by the preposition "of", as: By this field of his, agro hoc suo.

When a DESCRIPTIVE adjective enters this combination, it generally precedes the other members of the phrase, as: That incredible patience of thine, incredibilis illa patientia tua.

Rem. 2. When hic, ille, iste are combined with any adjective except a possessive, this adjective generally takes the first place in the phrase, as: Ipsam illam virum, that very man; Eadem illa femina, by that same woman; His illis causis, by those three causes; magna hæc pericula, these great dangers.

Rem. 3. When POSSESSIVES are connected with other adjectives, the latter generally precede the rest of the phrase, the possessives taking the last place according to rule, as: Some friend of thine, aliquis amicus tuus; Many slanderers of mine, multi obrectatores mei; These gardens of ours, tres horti nostri; Thy pleasant letter, jucunda littere tue.

However, the arrangement in this combination is less bound to a strict rule than any other, and especially in the combination of DESCRIPTIVE adjectives with possessives every possible position of the words is allowed.

§ 273. 4. Indefinite adjectives in connection with DESCRIPTIVES generally take the last place in the phrase, the rest of the phrase being arranged, as it would be without the Indefinite, as: Pugna memorabilis nulla, no remarkable battle; Gallia Cisalpina tota, the whole Cisalpine Gaul. But some indefinites, especially quidam and aliquis, often take the middle place in the phrase, and in this case the descriptive adjective generally precedes, as: Clari quidam oratores, some renowned orators.

Rem. 4. The indefinite numeral multi in combination with a descriptive adjective generally is connected by the conjunction et, as: Many useful books, libri multi et utiles.

Rem. 5. The indefinite adjective alius frequently is connected with other indefinites, and generally precedes them the latter, the governing noun taking the middle place, as: Alius scriptor nemo (nemo governing noun taking the middle place), no other writer. Thus are used: Alius quisquam and alius ullus, any other; alius quidam and alius aliquis, some other; alii multi, many others; alius quisque, every other; alii omnes, all other (ceteri omnes, all the other).

§ 274. 5. Definite numerals in connection with DESCRIPTIVE adjectives generally occupy the last place in the phrase, as: Bellum Punicum tertium, the third Punic war.

§ 275. 6. Form-adjectives, combined with attributive genitives, generally have the same position, as descriptive adjectives, that is : they precede the genitive, the governing noun taking the last place in the phrase, as : The same crime of Verres, idem Verris scelus ; Some avenger of our wrongs, aliquis injuriarum nostrarum ultor. If attributive genitives enter a phrase, containing several combined adjectives, the genitive generally is placed immediately before its governing noun, as : Miro illo ludorum spectaculo, by that wonderful sight of the games ; Belli Vejentani annus quintus, the fifth year of the Vejentian war.

EXERCISES.

INTERROGATIVES. 1. Which daughter of the king ? 2. To what folly of the populace ? 3. To what crimes of thy assistant ? 4. By what disturbance (perturbatio) and anxiety of thy mind ? 5. Which of the two ambassadors of the Macedonians ? 6. By which of the two daughters of your defender. 7. The flamen (obj.) of what god ? 8. By the guilt of which of the two deserters ? 9. The death (obj.) of which robber ? 10. How many and how great crimes of thy son ! 11. To how many victories of the Roman arms ! 12. What year of the Peloponnesian war ? 13. By how great a bravery of our soldiers !

HIC, ILLE, ISTE. 1. That same question (obj.). 2. Those same boundaries. 3. By those same troops. 4. To those very faults. 5. To that very system. 6. Of that general himself. 7. Of these ambassadors themselves. 8. That same dream. 9. By this same force. 10. By this very peace. 11. Of this whole region. 12. All those names. 13. That war alone. 14. Of this other accident. 15. That great fortune. 16. Of these wretched deserters. 17. Of these brave troops. 18. These dangerous examples. 19. By that treachery of Lysander. 20. To this victory of Cn. Pompejus. 21. By that custom of the legions. 22. That splendid reign (imperium) of Augustus. 23. To that extraordinary bravery of the Roman hostages. 24. Rome alone, that constant friend and helper (adjutor) of weak nations.

POSSESSIVES. 1. My little (exiguus) scholarship. 2. Of thy learned friend. 3. To his firm friendship. 4. To her grateful heart. 5. By his great eloquence. 6. Our wretched lot. 7. Of my brave citizens. 8. By your imprudent hatred. 9. Thy very father (obj.). 10. That rival of thine. 11. Of that (female) rival of thine. 12. By that rashness of theirs. 13. Those flatteries of yours. 14. These plans of mine. 15. To this slander of yours. 16. Those ships of ours. 17. These arguments of his. 18. The fruits of my recent labors. 19. The death of thy old friends. 20. By the unchanged faith of our brave citizens. 21. All your crimes. 22. The whole (obj.) of our inheritance. 23. By their confidence alone. 24. To your other affairs. 25. Most friends of mine. 26. No relative of ours. 27. How great a fear of theirs ! 28. How many enmities (simultas) of yours ! 29. To the rest of thy fortune. 30. To those pernicious plans of yours. 31. To that inveterate hatred of his. 32. His last words. 33. The last gifts of thy grateful citizens.

INDEFINITES. 1. Some rebellious states. 2. To a certain Latin citizen. 3. By no human help. 4. Of any hidden plan. 5. Every free-born (ingenuus) citizen (obj.). 6. Other learned writers. 7. By the left wing alone. 8. Of few good orators. 9. Many pleasant letters. 10. Several parts of the province. 11. To no fraud of the magistrates. 12. To the whole system of discussion (disputatio). 13. Most orators of Greece. 14. Many provinces of the Roman empire. 15. Few examples of consular (consularis) gravity. 16. No other commander. 17. By no other king. 18. To any other reason. 19. Of any other Athenian. 20. Some other occasion (obj.). 21. To many other young men. 22. Of every other chief. 23. All other mistakes. 24. Some books of mine. 25. Certain disturbers (turbator) of the public peace. 26. Many grave errors of yours. 27. That extraordinary fortune of many citizens of ours. 28. To the unchanged love of all my relatives. 29. The votes of all the other tribes. 30. So great a unanimity (consensus) of all foreign nations.

DEFINITE NUMERALS. 1. Three <sup>1</sup>freight-ships. 2. Of 17 long ships. 3. Fifteen <sup>2</sup>Ionic columns. 4. 3000 <sup>3</sup>mercenary soldiers. 5. To a distance of 5000 Roman paces (passus). 6. An attack of 12000 <sup>4</sup>Numidian horsemen and of 20,000 <sup>5</sup>Hispanian and <sup>6</sup>Galic foot-soldiers. 7. To the 366th verse of the second book. 8. To the 14th year of the second <sup>7</sup>Punic war. 9. The second and third years of the <sup>8</sup>Peloponnesian war. 10. The 82d year of <sup>9</sup>American <sup>10</sup>independence.

LESSON XXXVI.

THE PRONOUNS IN THE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE.

I. THE PRONOUNS AS GOVERNING WORDS.

§ 276. 1. Pronouns generally cannot govern ATTRIBUTES. Thus we neither in English can say the great I, the great you, nor in Latin magnus ego, pulcher tu, &c. But there are three kinds of attributes, which may depend on pronouns : 1. PARTICIPLES, 2. APPPOSITIONS, 3. THE FORM-ADJECTIVES ipse, solus, unus, totus, and the plural of omnis.

Rem. 1. For the connection of pronouns with PARTICIPLES see Part II.
Rem. 2. APPPOSITIONS may be connected with pronouns of the 1st and 2d persons, but not with those of the third person, as : Vives te, Camille, alterum urbis conditorem, damnant, the citizens condemn thee, O Camillus, the second founder of the city. Ego, Themistocles,

<sup>1</sup> Freight-ships, by the adjective onocaryus. <sup>2</sup> Ionicus. <sup>3</sup> Mercenarius. <sup>4</sup> Numidicus. <sup>5</sup> Hispanicus. <sup>6</sup> Gallicus. <sup>7</sup> Punicus. <sup>8</sup> Peloponnesiacus. <sup>9</sup> Americanus. <sup>10</sup> Libertas.

194 THE PRONOUNS IN THE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE.

eg salūto, I, Themistocles, greet you. When pronouns, that govern appositions, are at the same time SUBJECTS, they sometimes are omitted, as Themistocles vos salūto. In this construction the predicate agrees in person with the pronominal subject understood. Some modern grammarians, imagining, that the predicate salūto was agreeing with Themistocles, mistaking this noun for the subject, invented, in order to explain such an agreement, the theory of the first and second persons of NOUNS.

§ 277. 2. If the form-adjectives ipse, solus, unus, totus and omnis are used as attributes of PRONOUNS, they agree with the latter in NUMBER and CASE. In GENDER they agree with the ANTECEDENTS of the pronouns of the third person, and with the CONCEIVED gender of those of the first and second, as: By me alone, me solo or me solā, according as the pronoun of the first person (me) is conceived to denote a male or a female. Thus: By him alone, eo solo; by her alone, ea solā; by it alone, eo solo or ea solā, according to the gender of the antecedent of the pronoun is, ea, id.

Virtue is the faithful companion of adversity, and by it alone we are happy, virtus fida rerum adversarum comes est, eaque solā beati sumus.

§ 278. 3. Solus and unus as attributes of pronouns are translated by alone or only. Totus in this connection is rendered by the adverb wholly, as: He devotes himself wholly to literature, totum se (or se totum) litteris dat. Omnes in this connection is translated by all, but so that the pronoun generally is connected with it by means of the preposition ex, while in Latin omnes must agree in case with its governing pronoun, as: To all of us, omnibus nobis; all of you, omnes vos.

§ 279. 4. Ipsē as attribute of pronouns of the 1st and 2d persons is thus translated:

- N. Ipsē ego, or ego ipse, myself, I myself, even I.
- G. mei ipsius, of myself, even of me.
- D. mihi ipsi or ipsi mihi, to myself, even to me.
- A. me ipsum (ipsam) or ipsam me, myself, even me.
- A. me ipsa (ipsū) or ipso me, by myself, even by me.

In the plural the enclitic met generally is attached to the pronouns, except in the genitive, as: N. nosmet ipsi (ce) ourselves; G. nostri ipsorum, of ourselves; D. nobismet ipsis, to ourselves; A. nosmet ipsos, ourselves; Abl. nobismet ipsis, by ourselves

THE PRONOUNS IN THE ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE. 195

§ 280. 5. If ipse is an attribute of the pronouns of the third person, the pronoun is, ea, id, generally is omitted in Latin, but the reflexive pronoun sui, sibi, se, always must be expressed, as:

| SIMPLE PRONOUN.   | REFLEXIVE PRONOUN.                |
|---|-----------------------------------|
| N. Ipsē (inst. of is ipse ), he himself, himself, even he | G. sui ipsius , of himself |
| G. ipsius (inst. of ejus ipsius ), of himself             | D. sibi ipsi , to himself  |
| D. ipsi , to himself, even to him                                | A. se ipsum , himself      |
| A. ipsum , himself, even him                                     | A. se ipso , by himself.   |
| A. ipso , by himself, even by him.                               |                                   |

Rem. 3. The plural is formed in the same way, as: Ipsi, they themselves, even they; ipsorum, of themselves, even of them, &c.; but sui ipsorum, of themselves, &c., with a reflexive meaning.

Rem. 4. The English pronominal compounds with self are used in three different significations, according to which they are differently translated into Latin.

These pronominal compounds 1. serve to make SIMPLE pronouns EMPHATICAL, which means, that the pronouns are either expressly or tacitly opposed to other persons or things. The NOMINATIVES myself, thysē, himself, ourselves, &c., can have no other meaning than this. In this signification the compounds with self, when they belong to the first or second person, are translated according to § 279 (ipse ego, mei ipsius, &c.). But when they belong to the third person, they simply are rendered by ipse, without the addition of a pronoun (§ 280), as: They condemn myself, me ipsum condemnant. They accuse himself, ipsum accusant. He himself refutes this opinion, ipse hanc opinionem refellit. She wishes to own the house herself, ipsa domum possidere cupit.

2. The pronominal compounds with self also serve to express the REFLEXIVE relation. This relation has been considered § 233. The student may easily distinguish this relation from the former one, by trying to substitute for the pronominal compounds a combination of eo with the SIMPLE pronouns. If such a substitution is admissible, it generally is an evidence, that the pronominal compounds with self have an EMPHATICAL, and not a REFLEXIVE meaning.

3. But even the REFLEXIVE relation may be made EMPHATICAL, and even here the English language uses the same pronominal compounds, distinguishing the emphasis, that is placed upon them, merely by the RHETORICAL ACCENT. On the contrary in Latin the EMPHATICAL reflexive relation is expressed by the addition of ipse to the reflexive pronouns according to § 279 and 280.

In the sentence, "HE RESOLVES TO DEVOTE HIMSELF TO LITERATURE," the word "HIMSELF" is reflexive WITHOUT emphasis, and hence we use the reflexive without ipse: Litteris se dare statuit. In the sentence: "HE INTENDS TO DESTROY BOTH HIS COUNTRY AND HIMSELF," the word himself is both reflexive and emphatical, and hence we translate it by the reflexive pronoun se in connection with ipse: Et patriam et se ipsum perdere vult. Often there is an emphasis without an expressed opposition of the pronoun to other persons or things. Such an emphasis can be seen by the CONNECTION alone, since it is solely determined by the RHETORICAL ACCENT. Thus the sentence: "HE INTENDS TO KILL HIMSELF," is differently translated, according as we place the accent on the verb "kill," or on the pronoun "himself." In the former case the pronoun has no emphasis, and is translated without ipse (se interficere vult). In the latter case the pronoun is emphatical, and must be translated by se and ipse. In the following exercises those pronouns, which are meant to be emphatical, have been printed in Italics.

§ 281. 6. Instead of the attributive phrase, which is formed by a reflexive pronoun as governing word and ipse as attribute, the Latin more frequently makes ipse an attribute of the ANTECEDENT of the reflexive, that is the SUBJECT of its governing verb or adjective, so that ipse generally stands in the NOMINATIVE, whatever may be the case of the reflexive, as: Cato kills himself; Cato se ipse (or ipse se) interficit; virtue is similar to itself; virtus sibi ipsa similis est.

But in two instances ipse agrees with the REFLEXIVE: 1. When the reflexive object is COÖRDINATE with other objects, as: Gajus detains both me and himself, Gajus et me et se ipsum detinet. 2. When the reflexive corresponds to the English one's self, as: It is wicked to kill one's self, se ipsum interficere nefas est.

§ 282. 7. If the pronouns, on which one of the adjectives ipse, solus, &c., depends as an attribute, are in the nominative, they are frequently omitted, as: Thou entertainest this opinion alone, hanc opinionem solus tenes. The same omission often takes place, if these adjectives depend on any case of the pronoun is, ea, id, as: They surround the enemies and capture all of them, hostis circumdant atque omnis capiunt.

II. THE PRONOUNS AS ATTRIBUTES.

§ 283. 8. In English the pronouns generally are not employed as ATTRIBUTES, but are changed into POSSESSIVE ADJECTIVES. Thus "my father" stands instead of "the father of me"; "our house," instead of "the house of us"; "his son" instead of "the son of him" etc. In the same way the Latin language uses possessive adjectives (§ 268) instead of the genitives of the personal pronouns of the 1st and 2d persons. But in the THIRD PERSON either the possessive adjective suus is used, or the genitives of the pronouns ejus, eorum, earum, both forms corresponding to the English possessives his, her, its, their. "His, her, their father" may be rendered pater suus or pater ejus (eorum etc.), but with a difference between the two forms.

Rem. 5. The question whether to express the English possessive his etc. by the Latin pronominal genitive ejus etc. or the possessive adjective suus, is determined by the same rules as the use of the demonstrative and reflexive forms of the pronouns (§ 238). Hence the form of the possessive is decided by the place of its antecedent. When the antecedent of his, her, &c., stands in a phrase, combined with that of the possessive, we use suus, except when the antecedent is an ATTRIBUTE; but when the phrases of the antecedent and of the possessive are COÖRDINATE, or belong to different sentences, we must translate his, her, its, by ejus, and their by eorum, earum, according to the gender of the antecedent.

EXAMPLES:

1. HIS—SUUS. Gajus sells his house, Gajus domum suam vendit. The duumvirs compel Sempronius to give freedom to his slave, Duumviri Sempronium servo suo libertatem dare cogunt. The general restores to the Latins their hostages, Dux Latinis obsides suos restituit.

2. HIS—EJUS. This province is rich, but pirates destroy its commerce, Hæc provincia locuples est, sed piratæ ejus commercium dirunt. Our soldiers defeat the enemies, and take their camp, Milites nostri hostis vincunt eorumque castra expugnant. The queen and her children arrive, Regina ejusque liberi adveniunt. These nations and their chiefs sue for peace, Hæc gentes earumque principes pacem petunt.

Rem. 6. If two coördinate phrases have a common subject or object, a possessive adjective, combined with the second phrase and having the common subject or object as an antecedent, must be translated by suus, not by ejus, as:

The Carthaginians destroy all provisions and burn their camp, Carthaginenses omnis commeatus dirunt et castra sua concrement.

This agrees with the general rule, since the subject (Carthaginenses) is understood in the second phrase.

§ 284. 9. There are certain ATTRIBUTIVE phrases, which are derived from OBJECTIVE phrases by changing the governing verb into a VERBAL NOUN, and its object into an ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVE. Thus the objective phrase, "to destroy Carthage," may be changed into the attributive phrase, "the destruction of Car- thage." In the same way we form in Latin from liberos amare—liberorum amor, from bona emere—bonorum emptor, from cicis accusare—civium accusator. If such an objective phrase has a PRONOMINAL OBJECT, the Latin language, when changing the objective into an attributive phrase, transforms the pronominal object into a PRONOMINAL ATTRIBUTE. Thus from the objective phrase se amare the reflexive attributive phrase amor sui (self-love) is formed, and from se accusare the attributive phrase accusator sui (his own accuser.)

Rem. 7. Phrases of this kind generally are REFLEXIVE, but sometimes they are formed from simple pronouns, as desid. fieri me a longing for me, from me desolatus, to long for me.

Rem. 8. Reflexive attributes of this kind, when the governing noun is ABSTRACT, generally are translated by the word self, compounded with the noun. But when the governing noun is PERSONAL, the reflexive attribute is translated by the adjective own, in connection with a POSSESSIVE, as in the 1st person: accusator mei, an accuser of my own, or my own accuser, and in the second person: accusator tui, an accuser of thy own, &c. These reflexive genitives, like reflexive objects, may be made emphatical by an addition of ipsius or ipsorum, as: mei ipsius iudex, a judge of my own, or my own judge; sui ipsius iudex, his own judge.

Rem. 9. LATIN possessives likewise are made emphatical by the addition of ipse, which then always is placed in the GENITIVE, agreeing in gender and number with the possessive or its antecedents. Attributes of this kind likewise are translated by my own, thy own, his own, &c., as: Mea ora hanc, my own house; mea ipsius domus; thy ora hanc, tui ipsius libri; to his own virtue, sua ipsius virtus; our own indulgent, nostra ipsorum indulgentia. Ipse agrees with that genitive which is latent in every possessive. The same agreement occurs when the genitive unius or eorum is made dependent on a possessive adjective, as Mea unius salute, literally "by my, the only one's welfare," i. e. by nobody's welfare but mine.

EXERCISES.

I. ATTRIBUTES, DEPENDENT ON PRONOUNS.

1. Ego, consul ac dux vester, conjuratorum <sup>11</sup>sicis <sup>12</sup>expetor. 2. Nos, milites ac patrie <sup>13</sup>propugnatores, rerum necessariarum omnium inopiam experimur. 3. Tale bellum et nobis, Patriciis, et vobis, Plebejjs, multa commoda <sup>14</sup>afferre potest. 4. Haec regis consilia tibi, pacis auctori, necessaria videri debent. 5. Cives me, reginam, indigne tractare incipiunt. 6. Talibus calumniis Gajus et fratrem meum et me ipsum opprimere studet. 7. Caesaris reditus et amicis nostris et nobismet ipsis <sup>15</sup>inexpectatus est. 8. Vosmet ipsi Stolorum rationes concedere debitis. 9. Tanta clementia et humanitas nosmet ipsos conciliat ac placat. 10. Nulla Verris scelera aut nobis aut vobismet ipsis inaudita atque <sup>16</sup>insolita videri possunt. 11. Tot calumniae et convicia abs te ipso confirmari nequeunt. 12. Tanta patriae calamitas a vobismet ipsis <sup>17</sup>ferri nequit. 13. Dux Sempronium hostis <sup>18</sup>circumire jubet, ipse <sup>19</sup>mediam aciem <sup>20</sup>perrumpere statuit. 14. Consul reginae ministros relegat ipsamque duumvirorum custodiae tradit. 15. Imperator regis amicis vitae <sup>21</sup>securitatem ipsique populi Romani tutelam promittit. 16. Regina amicos suos se ipsam negligere, filium autem suum defendere jubet. 17. Egregius ille adolescens se ipse erudire studet. 18. Hortensius sese ipse accusare videtur. 19. Antonius omnem istam <sup>22</sup>simulationem <sup>23</sup>tollit sibi ipse similis videtur. 20. Civitates istae sese ipse defendere possunt. 21. Milites et ducis et sui ipsorum memores esse videntur. 22. Se ipsum gubernare difficile est. 23. Tu vero totus laboribus tuis <sup>24</sup>animum intendere videtur. 24. Themistocles totum se reipublice <sup>25</sup>applicare videtur. 25. Carthaginensium fides incerta est populusque eos solos timet. 26. Populus Romanus Pompēji ingenium ac virtutem admiratur solique hujus belli <sup>26</sup>imperium mandare vult. 27. Patriae salutem tibi uni debemus. 28. Hujus conjurationis pericula omnibus nobis cognita sunt. 29. Consul praedones lictori tradit, isque omnis secūri percutit.

<sup>11</sup> Sic, a dagger. <sup>12</sup> Expetere, to aim at, to single out. <sup>13</sup> A champion. <sup>14</sup> To afford. <sup>15</sup> Unexpected.

1. The citizens despise thee, the friend of our enemies. 2. I, the defender of liberty, will not <sup>27</sup>keep slaves. 3. It is criminal <sup>28</sup>to strike me, a Roman citizen, with (translate by) <sup>29</sup>rods. 4. You ruin all of us by your obstinacy. 5. All of you are <sup>30</sup>punishable, but the people intends to strike (ferre) thee alone, the leader and standard-bearer of this conspiracy. 6. The conspirators confide to me alone their secrets. 7. These questions can be <sup>31</sup>solved only by thee. 8. The citizens seem to be unmindful of me alone. 9. The other soldiers seem to have courage enough, and you alone seem to fear the enemies. 10. The <sup>32</sup>writings of this <sup>33</sup>author are too little <sup>34</sup>appreciated by all of you. 11. We wish to employ you alone to this business. 12. I myself will not yield to such a power (imperium). 13. So great a rebellion must seem dangerous even to thee. 14. They condemn all my friends, but they are afraid of touching (petere) myself. 15. Such measures seem pernicious both to the republic and to ourselves. 16. Thou intendest to ruin either Lælius or myself by these measures. 17. Caesar seems to move even you by this mildness of his. 18. That <sup>35</sup>haughtiness and bold <sup>36</sup>overthrow of all laws must be censured by thyself. 19. The loyalty (fides) of these citizens is doubtful, and it is right (licet) to suspect all of them. 20. We fear (vereri) the <sup>37</sup>Lord, and worship him alone. 21. The consul directs Sempronius to pursue the enemies; he himself attacks the camp. 22. No man can act badly and be good himself. 23. The lictors are directed by the senate to burn these injurious books of Flavius, and <sup>38</sup>pay their <sup>39</sup>value to himself. 24. He himself wishes to diminish the <sup>40</sup>excessive <sup>41</sup>power of the tribunes. 25. She herself intends to save the life of the captives. 26. These legions clothe, arm and <sup>42</sup>sustain themselves. 27.

<sup>16</sup> Unusual. <sup>17</sup> Ferre, to bear, to tolerate. <sup>18</sup> To outflank. <sup>19</sup> Media acies, the centre. <sup>20</sup> To break. <sup>21</sup> Security. <sup>22</sup> Hypocrisy. <sup>23</sup> To throw off. <sup>24</sup> Animum intendere, to attend. <sup>25</sup> To apply. <sup>26</sup> Commend. <sup>27</sup> Habere. <sup>28</sup> Codere. <sup>29</sup> Virga. <sup>30</sup> Punendus. <sup>31</sup> Solvere. <sup>32</sup> Liber. <sup>33</sup> Scriptor. <sup>34</sup> To appreciate, aestimare. <sup>35</sup> Superbia. <sup>36</sup> Disolutio. <sup>37</sup> Dominus. <sup>38</sup> Solvere. <sup>39</sup> Pretium. <sup>40</sup> Nihilus. <sup>41</sup> Potestas. <sup>42</sup> Alere.

Lucretia seems to be neglectful of herself. 28. The inhabitants cannot protect themselves. 29. Virtue protects itself. 30. This people intends to govern itself. 31. It often is necessary to be distrustful of one's self. 32. It generally is difficult to restrain one's self. 33. I deliver myself wholly to the Lord. 34. The king commits himself wholly to the discretion (fides) of the Roman people. 35. Thou canst govern other men, but thou canst not govern thyself.

II. THE PRONOUNS AS ATTRIBUTES.

1. Aut Gajus aut ejus filii hoc negotium perficere debent. 2. Sempronio ejusque exercitui opem ferre debemus. 3. Hac victoria Alcibiadem civibus suis reconciliare videtur. 4. Philippi legati pacem nunc serio petunt; consul autem omnia eorum proposita rejicit. 5. Pleraque Galliae civitates legatos et obsides mittunt, sed fides earum dubia videtur. 6. Ducem nostrum adversariis suis prodere nolumus. 7. Ducem nostrum diligimus ejusque adversarios contemnimus. 8. Syracusas aut defendere aut regi suo restituere debemus. 9. Syracusas expellere earumque regem tollere (kill) volumus. 10. Rex cetera consulis proposita <sup>43</sup>accipit, sed exercitum suum dimittere recusat. 11. Rex cetera consulis proposita accipit, sed exercitum ejus dimittere recusat. 12. Carthaginenses ipsum Hannibalem, ducem suum, expellere coguntur. 13. Carthaginenses et Hannibal, dux eorum, pacem petere coguntur. 14. <sup>44</sup>Obtrectatio sui quoddam dementiae genus esse videtur. 15. <sup>45</sup>Existimatio sui virtutis et <sup>46</sup>honestatis comes est. 16. Vir ille severus sui ipsius <sup>47</sup>vituperator esse videtur. 17. Miseram hanc vitam tuam ipsius <sup>48</sup>degis. 18. Carthaginenses suae ipsorum dementiae poenas culpam <sup>49</sup>persolvunt. 19. Brutus suum ipsius filium interficit. 20. Nimius sui ipsius amor ridiculus esse solet. 21. Multae civitates suam ipsarum magnitudine <sup>50</sup>concidunt.

1. Gajus knows how to restrain his anger. 2. Gajus and his scribe are unpleasant to me. 3. Lucretia kills her brother by poison. 4. Lucretia and her brothers are killed by poison. 5. My sisters and their children are absent. 6. The senate restores the consul Sempronius to his army. 7. The citizens allow the chief of the state to <sup>51</sup>appoint his <sup>52</sup>successor. 8. I am afraid of <sup>53</sup>sending back to Piso his statues. 9. We admire this great artist and his immortal works. 10. Our friend refuses to accept these advantages, and we must leave him to his <sup>54</sup>former poverty. 11. Our friend refuses these advantages, and prefers to bear (ferre) his former poverty. 12. Our friend refuses these advantages, but we intend to <sup>55</sup>relieve his <sup>56</sup>cares. 13. We intend both to assist Sempronius, and to reconcile him to his friends. 14. The scholars of Gajus generally repeat his very words. 15. The Helvetians kill the consul L. Cassius and put his army to flight. 16. Sempronius seems to have not money enough. This circumstance <sup>57</sup>is an obstacle to his undertaking. 17. The general is afraid of attacking the enemies; and resolves to expect the arrival of his <sup>58</sup>colleague. 18. A certain self-love seems to be common to all men. 19. Self-praise generally is injurious. 20. To be one's own judge is contrary to justice. 21. These men seem to be their own <sup>59</sup>admirers. 22. The consul is betrayed by his own soldiers. 23. We are prevented by our own <sup>60</sup>weakness from waging such a war. 24. I wish to be my own interpreter. 25. No <sup>61</sup>witness can be compelled to be his own accuser. 26. The Athenians are <sup>62</sup>left by all their allies by their own haughtiness and folly.

<sup>43</sup> To accept. <sup>44</sup> Debasement. <sup>45</sup> Respect. <sup>46</sup> Honesty. <sup>47</sup> Censurer. <sup>48</sup> To lead. <sup>49</sup> To pay. <sup>50</sup> To collapse. <sup>51</sup> Nominare. <sup>52</sup> Successor. <sup>53</sup> To send back, remittere. <sup>54</sup> Pristinus. <sup>55</sup> Lenire. <sup>56</sup> Aeterna. <sup>57</sup> To be an obstacle, obstaculum. <sup>58</sup> Collega.

LESSON XXXVII.

THE COMPARATIVE AND SUPERLATIVE.

§ 285. 1. The word comparison occurs in an ETYMOLOGICAL and SYNTACTICAL sense. By comparison in the former sense we understand that inflection of descriptive adjectives, which marks their degrees (§ 4, c). In the syntactical sense it means a COMBINATION of two phrases by comparing them.

Rem. 1. In this lesson we consider comparison in the ETYMOLOGICAL sense, that is the formation of the COMPARATIVE and SUPERLATIVE degrees. Every comparison is made by one of the four degrees, which are: 1. The degree of EQUALITY; 2. The COMPARATIVE; 3. The SUPERLATIVE; 4. The ABSOLUTE degree (L. XXXIX.). Two of these degrees, the comparative and superlative in the comparison of descriptive adjectives, generally are formed by a peculiar INFLECTION. The expression POSITIVE DEGREE is a mere negation of the other four degrees. By this term the adjective, if not compared, is designated.

§ 286. 2. The comparative of adjectives is formed by adding the ending ior to their DECLENSION-STEM, or, what is the same, by substituting this ending for the termination i or is of the genitive, as: longus—longior (longer); pulcher—pulchrior (more beautiful); diligens—diligentior (more diligent); atrox—atrocior (fiercer).

The comparatives are declined by the terminations of the consonant-stems of the 3d Declension (§ 145) with a separate form in ius for the NEUTER gender.

<sup>59</sup> Admirator. <sup>60</sup> Infirmitas. <sup>61</sup> Testis. <sup>62</sup> To leave, deserere.

| PARADIGM.   |   |
|---|---|
| SINGULAR.   | PLURAL.   |
| N. longior (m. & f.), longius (n.)  | N. longiores (m. & f.), longiōra (n.) |
| G. longiōris                               | G. longiōrum                                 |
| D. longiōri                                | D. longiōribus                               |
| A. longiōrem (m. & f.) longius (n.) | A. Like Nom.  |
| A. longiōre                                | A. Like Dative                                      |

§ 287. 3. The ADVERBS of the comparatives have, like the quantitative adjectives, the form of the accusative neuter singular of the adjectives, in ius, as: longius, longer; pulchrius, more beautifully.

§ 288. 4. The superlative is formed by adding the ending issimus to the declension-stem, as: longus—longissimus (longest); diligens—diligentissimus (most diligent); atrox—atrocissimus (fiercest).

They are declined like MOVABLE adjectives, and their adverbs are formed, like those of the latter, by the ending ē.

Rem. 2. Tutus forms the superlative adverb tutissimo.

§ 289. 5. EXCEPTIONS:

a. When an adjective or its declension-stem terminates in er, the superlative takes the ending—rimus, as:

pulch-er—pulcherrimus (most beautiful) acer—acerrimus (sharpest)

vetus—veterrimus (oldest)

Rem. 3. Matūrus makes both maturrimus and maturissimus.

b. The following five adjectives in ilis add the ending līmus to their declension-stems.

facilis, difficilis, similis, dissimilis, humilis (superl. facillimus, simillimus, &c.).

Rem 4. Of the other adjectives in ilis only the following form an inflectional superlative (in issimus): amabilis, utilis, mobilis, notilis, ignobilis, fertilis. Other adjectives in ilis, as, agilis, docilis, gracilis, terribilis, mirabilis, mutabilis, do not form inflectional superlatives in good prose.

c. Adjectives in dīcus, fīcus and vōlus, are compared as if they had the terminations dicens, ficens, volens, as:

|                               |                       |                           |
|-------------------------------|-----------------------|---------------------------|
| magnificus (splendid)  | magnificentior | magnificentissimus |
| maledicus (abusive)    | maledicentior  | maledicentissimus  |
| benevolus (benevolent) | benevolentior  | benevolentissimus  |

§ 290. 6. The following adjectives form irregular degrees:

|                     |                  |                                      |
|---------------------|------------------|--------------------------------------|
| bonus        | melior    | optimus                       |
| malus        | pejor     | pessimus                      |
| magnus       | major     | maximus                       |
| parvus       | minor     | minimus                       |
| [ exterus ]  | exterior  | extrēmus ( extimus )   |
| [ inferus ]  | inferior  | infimus ( imius )      |
| [ superus ]  | superior  | suprēmus ( summus )    |
| [ posterus ] | posterior | postrēmus ( postumus ) |

Rem. 5. The last four Positives, included in brackets, in good prose do not occur in NOM. SING. of the masculine gender.

Rem. 6. Instead of melius est, as impersonal predicate, the comparative satiū (of satis) with the copula is used very frequently, as: It is better to remain, manēre satius est.

Rem. 7. The superlative summus, generally preceding its governing noun, very frequently is used instead of the superlatives maximus and altissimus, as: The greatest men, summi viri; the highest mountains, summi montes. Summus always must be used instead of altissimus, if the superlative highest is used in a figurative sense.

Rem. 8. The last four superlatives principally are used as INDEFINITE ORDINAL NUMERALS (see § 261).

§ 291. 7. The following degrees, partly regular, partly irregular, lack the POSITIVE:

| COMPARATIVE.                            | SUPERLATIVE.                          |
|---|---------------------------------------|
| Citerior (hither, adj. )  | citimus (nearest on this side) |
| ulterior (farther, adj. ) | ultimus (farthest, last)       |
| interior (inner)                 | intimus (inmost)               |
| propior (nearer)                 | proximus (nearest, next)       |
| deterior (worse)                 | deterimus (worst)              |
| prior (former)                   | primus (foremost, first)       |

Rem. 9. The Positives of the first four comparatives occur in the form of LOCAL ADVERBS (citra, ultra, intra, prope). Deterior and deterimus are so distinguished from pejor and pessimus, that the former mean less and least good, while the latter two mean more and most bad.

Rem. 10. ADVERBS as such generally do not form degrees; and what the grammarians usually call the COMPARATIVE and SUPERLATIVE of ADVERBS, is nothing but ADVERBS formed from the COMPARATIVE and SUPERLATIVE of ADJECTIVES. The temporal adverbs saepe and diu however form the comparatives saepius (oftener) and diutius (longer), and the superlatives saeptissime (oftenest) and diutissime (longest), without any corresponding adjectives. The adverb longe, and its degrees, longius and longissime, generally have a LOCAL meaning, being translated by far—farther—further as: Wē pōced farther than Sejus, Longius quam Sejus procedimus.

Rem. 11. Dives sometimes has the contracted degrees ditior, ditissimus, instead of the regular forms divitior, divitissimus. The contraction of the positive dices into dis (g. ditis), is only poetical. The indeclinable nequam makes nequior, nequissimus. Frugi forms its degrees as if from a positive frugalis, which in good prose does not occur. The comparatives junior (younger) and senior (older) of “younger,” and “older,” referring to the age of persons, are expressed by minor natu and major natu, natu being omitted when no ambiguity can arise.—The comparative cetior (quicker) and superl. cetissimus (quickest) are without a positive. In good prose they occur only as adverbs (cetis, cetissimè), the latter rarely.

§ 292. 8. Only those adjectives form degrees which imply the idea of INTENSITY—that is, whose meanings admit of an INCREASE OR DECREASE. Thus national adjectives, and such as dead (mortuus), golden (aureus), annual (annus), cannot be compared.

Other adjectives on account of EUPHONY refuse the INFLECTIONAL degrees only, either both degrees or either of them. This class of adjectives is very numerous, and must be learned by practice or from the lexicon.

Rem. 12. The most usual adjectives, that lack inflected degrees, are the following: 1. Those, whose termination us is preceded by a VOWEL, as noxius, idoneus, arduus, pius, except those in quus, as aquus, comp. acquiror. 2. Most of those, terminating in ulus, ilis, ilis, comp. acquiror. 3. Most of those, compounded with legitimus, peregrinus, decorus. 4. Many adjectives, which cannot be classified, as caducus, ferus, guarus, ficus, lassus, mirus, malibus, natus, negotiosus, rudis, and many others.

Rem. 13. The most usual of those adjectives, that form SUPERLATIVES, but not COMPARATIVES, are: falsus—falsissimus, diversus—diversissimus, maius—maiusculum, sacer—sacerrimus, vetus—veterrimus. Of those, which form COMPARATIVES WITHOUT SUPERLATIVES, the following occur most frequently: alius—alterius, longius—longioris, popularis, salutaris, vilis, and some in ilis, as docilis, horridus, optimus, probabilis.

§ 293. 9. Those adjectives, which for the sake of EUPHONY lack inflectional degrees, are compared by magis (more) with the positive, for the COMPARATIVE, and by maxime (most) with the positive, for the SUPERLATIVE, as: magis noxius (more hurtful), maxime noxius (most hurtful); magis arduus (steeper), maxime arduus (steepest). Adjectives, which form inflectional degrees, generally cannot be compared by magis and maxime.

EXERCISES.

ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES WITH COMPARATIVES AND SUPERLATIVES AS ATTRIBUTES.

1. By a more accurate scholarship. 2. Of a fairer peace. 3. To a deeper river. 4. An older time. 5. A friendlier companion (obj.) 6. By a harder (arduus) undertaking. 7. Happier days. 8. Of craftier thieves. 9. To more certain events. 10. More beautiful gifts (obj.) 11. By promises, more sacred. 12. Of a more hostile expedition. 13. To a braver enemy. 14. A more merciful leader (obj.) 15. A more enormous crime (obj.) 16. By a lower place. 17. Unhappier wars. 18. Of nobler deeds. 19. To quicker messengers. 20. More ferocious attacks (obj.) 21. By more magnificent arches (arcus). 22. The freest country (obj.) 23. Of the oldest city. 24. To the most dissimilar method. 25. The most difficult question (obj.) 26. By the happiest accident. 27. The most renowned commanders. 28. Of the best men. 29. Of the greatest writers. 30. By the highest courage (plur.) of the troops. 31. To the worst conditions of a most unhappy peace. 32. The smallest causes (obj.) of the greatest events (res). 33. By the highest tops (culmen) of the roofs. 34. Of a better fate. 35. To a greater name. 36. By a narrower road. 37. By the smallest things. 38. Hither Gaul (obj.) 39. Both of the hither and of the farther province. 40. The nearest places. 41. The richest knights. 42. By the older citizens. 43. By the younger brother. 44. By the most benevolent magistrates. 45. By the best and mildest (clemens)<sup>1</sup> government<sup>2</sup> in the<sup>3</sup> world. 46. To the elder Cato. 47. Of Pliny Secundus the younger. 48. Older houses. 49. The oldest nations. 50. The farthest cities of the Insubrians.

PREDICATIVE AND OBJECTIVE PHRASES WITH COMPARATIVES AND SUPERLATIVES.

1. Our swords are sharper. 2. Your knives seem the sharpest. 3. You are more desirous of praise. 4. No city is fuller of enemies. 5. The consuls become dearer to the people. 6. Most citizens are more prudent. 7. No war is more pernicious. 8. Few examples are more renowned. 9. This danger seems more serious and greater. 10. No books can be better. 11. The Athenians generally are wiser. 12. The people cannot be offended<sup>4</sup> more shamefully. 13. This war becomes most dangerous. 14. A more treacherous plan cannot be<sup>5</sup> conceived. 15. The greatest and wisest men reject this kind of government. 16. You are surrounded by the most hostile nations. 17. The consuls are<sup>6</sup> exhausted by the most difficult labors. 18. It is better to<sup>7</sup> keep [one's] word. 19. It is more pleasant to be loved by the people. 20. It is more useful to treat philosophy and grammar. 21. It is difficult to be more cruel. 22. It is easy to become richer. 23. We cannot work more diligently. 24. Crassus seems to think more accurately, but Brutus to speak more elegantly. 25. You generally debate better, but Gajus writes more ably and plainly. 26. We do not wish to be any longer besieged. 27. I permit thee and all thy friends to visit my park oftener. 28. The enemies dare to approach nearer. 29. The horsemen seem to resist most bravely. 30. The most wicked men often act wisest. 31. It is the highest praise to be esteemed by one's enemies. 32. It is necessary to Gajus to be braver, and to Sempronius to be more modest. 33. It is more pleasant to hear the elder Cato, but it is more useful to read his works (opus). 34. The deepest rivers often are most quiet. 35. The general selects a place most adapted to a battle. 36. This idea cannot be expressed more perspicuously, but thou must treat the matter more fully and elegantly.

<sup>1</sup> Res publica. <sup>2</sup> Transl. “of.” <sup>3</sup> Orbis terrarum. <sup>4</sup> Turpis. <sup>5</sup> Cogitare. <sup>6</sup> Conficere. <sup>7</sup> Servare. <sup>8</sup> Fidei.

LESSON XXXVIII.

THE COMBINATION OF PHRASES BY COMPARISON.

§ 294. 1. COMPARISON, in a syntactical sense, is a means of combining phrases or sentences (§ 83.) Phrases, which are combined by comparison are called COMPARED PHRASES or a comparative period.

Rem. 1. For the combination of SENTENCES by comparison see Part II.
Rem. 2. The comparison of phrases has in several points the nature of a COÖRDINATION (§ 113.) This appears chiefly in the connecting words, which are either relative adverbs (quam, quoties, quantum), or relative form-adjectives (quantus, quot), both of which have the nature of CONJUNCTIONS (§ 241).

Rem. 3. Thus the pronouns and possessive adjectives of the 3d person, which follow the connecting word, are treated as in COÖRDINATION, and not as in COMBINED phrases (§ 238, Rem. 6; § 283, Rem. 5), as:

Gajus is wiser than his brother, Gajus sapientior est quam frater ejus (not suus).

It is more difficult to deceive Gajus, than to be deceived by him, Gajum decipere difficilius est, quam ab eo (not se) decipi.

§ 295. 2. The first of the compared phrases contains the word, indicating the DEGREE, which either is the degree of equality or the degree of difference, according as the compared relations are represented as equal or unequal. The degree of difference in compared phrases always is the COMPARATIVE.

<sup>9</sup> Disputare. <sup>10</sup> Aptus. <sup>11</sup> Simplex. <sup>12</sup> The English "more," before adverbial comparatives, cannot be translated in Latin. <sup>13</sup> Visere. <sup>14</sup> Accedere. <sup>15</sup> Deligere. <sup>16</sup> Benetentia. <sup>17</sup> Res.

Rem. 4. The sentence, "Gajus is more diligent than Sejus," contains a comparison of DIFFERENCE, in which "more" represents the comparative degree. The sentence, "Gajus is as diligent as Sejus" contains a comparison of EQUALITY, in which the former "as" indicates the degree of EQUALITY.

Rem. 5. The comparative words in Latin originally always are numeral or quantitative adverbs of the adverbial form (§ 257, 263), and in the INFLECTIONAL form of the comparative of descriptive adjectives the adverb magis always is implied. Besides these there are a few other words, in which comparative words are implied. Here belong: 1. The verb mallo (instead of magis velle); 2. The impersonal verb prodest (instead of melius est); 3. The adverbs postea (post) and antea (ante), in which the comparatives later and earlier are implied. Hence all these words may represent the comparative degree in a comparative period, as:

I rather wish to stay, than to depart. Maintere malo, quam abire.

It is preferable to suffer than to do wrong, Injurias perpeti prodest quam latere.

Gajus comes later than Sejus. Gajus postea venit quam Sejus.

Rem. 6. The phrases, which are combined by comparison are called the first and second member of the comparison.

§ 296. 3. The SECOND member of the comparison generally appears in an ABRIDGED FORM, when the compared phrases have one or more words in common. These common words are expressed in the first member, and implied in the second.

Rem. 7. In order to translate the second member of a comparison correctly, it often is necessary to complete it, if it appears in an abridged form. This is done:

1. By supplying the suppressed COMMON WORDS, and
2. By supplying the DEGREE.

In the comparison of difference the degrees in both members are opposite, and when the first member contains the higher degree, we must supply in the second member the lesser, and vice versa.

EXAMPLES.

1. Gajus has better fields than Sejus.

ANALYSIS:

FIRST MEMBER: Gajus has better fields. Gajus agros meliores habet.

SECOND MEMBER (completed): Sejus has worse fields. Sejus agros deteriores habet.

ARRANGEMENT, by omitting the common words "agros habet" and the degree deteriores in the second member, inserting the connecting word quam:

Gajus agros meliores habet quam Sejus.

It appears that Sejus is the subject of the second member, and hence in the final arrangement remains in the NOMINATIVE CASE.

2. Gajus has better fields than gardens.

ANALYSIS:

FIRST MEMBER: Gajus has better fields, Gajus agros meliōres habet.

SECOND MEMBER (completed): Gajus has worse gardens, Gajus hortos deteriores habet.

ARRANGEMENT, by omitting the common words "Gajus—habet" and the degree deteriores in the second member, and inserting the connecting word quam:

Gajus agros meliōres habet quam hortos.

It appears, that hortos is an OBJECT in the completed second member, and hence in the final arrangement remains in the ACCUSATIVE CASE.

Rem. 8. In these lessons the general principles of numeral and quantitative comparisons, and that of descriptive adjectives are considered. For qualitative comparison, and for a more particular treatment of the whole subject see P. II. p. 743 foll.

A. THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD IN THE NUMERAL COMPARISON.

§ 297. 4. The comparison is called NUMERAL, when the degree answers to the interrogative quot (quam multi), how many, or quoties, how many times, how often (§ 254, 258).

§ 298. 5. The degree of EQUALITY in the NUMERAL comparison is expressed by the numeral adjectives tot (tam multi), as many, totidem, just as many, and the adverb toties, as many times (§ 257, 258). To both tot and totidem belongs the relative adjective quot as connecting word. The connecting word of toties is quoties. Both, quot and quoties, are translated by "as":

We have as many houses as Gajus, Nos tot domos habemus quot Gajus.

Sempronius kills just as many enemies as Gajus, Sempronius totidem hostis occidit quot Gajus.

The Gauls retreat as often as the Romans, Galli toties se recipiunt quoties Romāni.

§ 299. 6. The COMPARATIVE degree in the numeral comparison in answer to the adjective quot (how many) is expressed by the numeral adjectives plures, more, and pauciores fewer, less (§ 257). In answer to the adverb quoties the comparative is expressed by the adverb saepius, oftener (§ 291, R. 9), and minus saepe (less often, not so often). With all these comparatives the relative adverb quam (than) is used as connecting word, as:

Sempronius intends to build more houses, than thou, Sempronius pluris domos aedificāre vult, quam tu.

Gajus seems to be assisted by fewer (less) friends than Sempronius, Gajus a paucioribus amicis adjuvāri videtur, quam Sempronius.

Sempronius is oftener mistaken, than Gajus, Sempronius saepius errat quam Gajus.

Gajus comes less often than (not so often as) Sejus, Gajus minus saepe venit quam Sejus.

B. THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD IN THE QUANTITATIVE COMPARISON.

§ 300. 7. In the QUANTITATIVE comparison the degrees answer to the quantitative interrogatives quantus, quantum, quantopere, how much, how great (§ 263).

§ 301. 8. The degree of EQUALITY in the quantitative comparison, when an adjective, is expressed by the quantitative adjectives tantus, as much, as great, tantusdem, just as great; and when an adverb, by the quantitative adverbs tantum, tantundem, and sometimes by tantopere (§ 269). The connecting words are the adjectives and adverbs of the interrogative form, corresponding in their grammatical form to the words, expressing the degree. They in English always are expressed by "as.":

Gajus has as much money as you, Gajus tantum pecuniæ habet, quantum vos.

Thou must return just as much silver to me as to Gajus—Tantundem argenti mihi reddere debes, quantum Gajo.

We are oppressed by as great a cruelty as you, Nos tantū crudelitāte opprimimur, quantū vos.

We rejoice as much as you, Nos tantum gaudēmus, quantum vos.

Rem. 9. The PARTITIVE construction of tantus and tantusdem is applied to the comparative period according to the general rules (§ 264).

Rem. 10. The connecting words regularly agree in their grammatical form with the word, expressing the degree. Hence if this word is an ADJECTIVE, the connecting word must be an ADJECTIVE; if the degree is expressed by an ADVERB, the connecting word must be an ADVERB. In the same way both words must agree in GENDER and NUMBER. The case is not always the same, and is determined by the rules of the RELATIVE SENTENCES (Part II.) In the following exercises only such examples will be given, where the connecting adjectives agree even in CASE with the words expressing the degree.

Rem. 11. Sometimes the numeral degree tot and the quantitative tanti (as great), are connected by coördination. In this instance both connecting words quod and quodammodo must be employed, as:

210 THE COMBINATION OF PHRASES BY COMPARISON.

We have as many and as great generals, as you. Tot et tantos imperatores habemus, quot et quantos vos.

§ 302. 9. The comparative degree in the quantitative comparison is expressed by the neuter adjectives plus (sometimes amplius), minus, and the adverbs plus, magis, minus. Plus and magis are rendered by more, minus by less. The connecting word always is quam.

Rem. 12. When 'more' and 'less' are attributive adjectives, they are expressed by plus and minus with a partitive genitive (§ 264), as: Britain produces more iron than Gaul, Britannia plus ferri gignit quam Gallia.—I have less grain than cattle, Minus frumenti habeo quam pecoris. 'More money' is always rendered by major pecunia (not plus pecunie). See p. 187, R. 4.

Rem. 13. When 'more' is an ADVERB, dependent on a VERB, it is rendered by magis: I admire Gaius more than Sejus, Gaium magis (not plus) admīror quam Sejum. But in certain instances the ADVERB 'more' is rendered by plus, inst. of magis: so always when dependent on the verb 'to love' ('to love more' or 'better' = plus diligere or amāre, not 'magis'). See P. II, p. 754 foll.—'To be more powerful' = plus posse, or plus valere; 'to be more useful' = plus prodesse.—'Less' as an adverb is always rendered by minus: They study less than they play, Minus laborant quam ludunt.

Rem. 14. The quantitative adjectives plus and minus frequently are employed in place of the numeral comparatives plures and pauciores. Thus we may use instead of plures hostes the quantitative plus with the genitive plur. hostium, and instead of pauciores libri the quantitative minus with the genitive librorum.

Rem. 15. The superlative degree in the NUMERAL comparison is formed by the adjectives plurimi and paucissimi (§ 257), and in the quantitative comparison by the adjective plurimus (§ 263), and the adverbs maxime and plurimum (most).

C. THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD IN THE COMPARISON OF DESCRIPTIVE ADJECTIVES.

§ 303. 10. The degrees in the comparison of DESCRIPTIVE ADJECTIVES answer to the question quam (how) in connection with a descriptive adjective or adverb, as: How diligent, quam diligens? how bravely, quam fortiter?

§ 304. 11. The degree of EQUALITY consists of the adverb tam in connection with a descriptive adjective or adverb, to which always corresponds the connecting word quam. Both the degree of equality tam and its connecting word quam are rendered by "as":

THE COMBINATION OF PHRASES BY COMPARISON. 211

Gaius is as diligent as Sejus, Gaius tam diligens est quam Sejus.
The Gauls fight as bravely as the Romans, Galli tam fortiter pugnant quam Romani.

The COMPARATIVE degree (L. XXXVII.) is followed by the same connecting word quam, which then is translated by "than":

Gaius is more prudent than Sejus, Gaius prudentior est quam Sejus.
This place is more adapted to a battle, than the nearest mountains, Hic locus pugnae magis idoneus est, quam montes proximi.
The enemies fight more furiously than ever, Hostes acrius pugnant quam unquam.

Rem. 16. The lesser degree of descriptive adjectives is expressed by minus with a following quam, as: The Greeks are less brave than the Gauls, Graeci minus fortes sunt quam sapientes.

Rem. 17. The adverb, connected with tam in the degree of EQUALITY, frequently is repeated after the connecting word quam, when the compared phrases have different predicates. This generally is the case with the adverb diu, as:

Thou must remain as long, as thou advancest, Tam diu manēre debes, quam diu proficis.

§ 305. 12. D. SUMMARY OF RULES ON THE TRANSLATION OF THE WORDS more AND less.

1. To render the English words 'more' and 'less' correctly, the student must first distinguish whether these words are used as ADJECTIVES or as ADVERBS. They are ADJECTIVES (a) when they are attributes of a noun expressed; (b) when they are used absolutely (i. e. with the force of a noun (see p. 256 foll.), being objects of a verb, as 'to give more,' 'to lose more,' etc.—They are ADVERBS (a) when they stand before descriptive adjectives or adverbs (more diligent, etc.); (b) when they are dependent on a verb, expressing its DEGREE, as 'to praise more' (i. e. in a higher degree), 'to study more,' etc.

2. When 'more' or 'less' are used as attributive adjectives in the plural, they belong to the NUMERAL comparison, being rendered by plures and pauciores (§ 259), or by plus and minus with a genitive PLURAL (R. 15). 'More troops' is always rendered by plures (not plus) copiae (comp. p. 187, R. 4). For rendering 'more than three' etc. see § 311.

3. When the governing noun of 'more' is in the SINGULAR, the comparison is quantitative, 'more' and 'less' being rendered by plus or minus with a genitive SINGULAR (plus or minus frumenti), R. 12.

4. When 'more' and 'less' are used as absolute adjectives with the force of a noun (see p. 261, Rem. 14), they are rendered by plus and minus, as: You return more (i. e. a greater quantity) than you receive, plus redditis quam accipis.

5. When 'more' is used as ADVERB before descriptive adjectives or adverbs, it is either merged in the inflectional comparative degree, or expressed by magis, when the adjective does not form an inflectional degree (§ 294). 'Less' in this connection is always rendered minus.

6. When the adverb 'more' denotes the higher degree of a verb, it is generally rendered by magis, as: He pleases me more than his brother, magis (not plus) mihī placet quam frater ejus. Often not the intensity of the predicate, but that of its objects is compared by magis (or minus). He vanquishes more by good plans than objects is compared by magis (or minus). For the use of plus as adverb see R. 13.

7. When the adverbs 'more' and 'less' as objects of verbs, refer to the degree of PRICE, VALUE, and ESTIMATION, they are expressed by the genitives pluris and minoris, as: It costs more (less), pluris (minoris) constat. It is worth more, pluris est. I esteem him more, pluris eum facio (habeo, duco). See P. II, p. 270 foll.

EXERCISES.

A. NUMERAL COMPARISON.

DEGREE OF EQUALITY. 1. Nos tot testis habemus, quot vos. 2. Gajus tot carmina scribit quot Sejus. 3. Luxuria tot hominibus perniciosa est quot paupertas. 4. Antonius tot civis interficit, quot Sulla aut Marius. 5. Crassus totidem causas perorat quot Brutus. 6. Totidem adolescentes præcedunt quot virgines. 7. Nemo tot verba defendere potest quot dicere. 8. Pompæji theatrum totidem spectatores capit quot Jovis templum. 9. Camillus toties errat quoties imperatoris nomen enuntiat. 10. Excubiae toties clamorem edunt, quoties hostes appropinquant.

1. We have as many books as Sejus. 2. I have as many houses as thou. 3. We are in need of as many soldiers as the army of Sertorius. 4. I am obedient to as many masters as you. 5. Gajus is assisted by as many friends as Sempronius. 6. He intends to draft (conscribere) as many legions as the other consul. 7. It is dangerous to have as many friends as enemies. 8. Gajus is convicted of just as many thefts as Sejus. 9. No writer writes as many words as he reads. 10. The month of March has just as many days as October. 11. The father pardons as often as the son sins. 12. I intend to visit thee as many times as thy brother. 13. We must fight as often as the general directs us to fight. 14. The Romans are driven back as often as their allies.

COMPARATIVE DEGREE. 1. Pluris amicos habere volumus quam inimicos. 2. Gajus se pluribus verbis defendit, quam necesse est. 3. Pluris bubulcos habere quam boves ineptum est. 4. Inutile est, se pluribus laboribus dare quam recte perfici possunt. 5. Gajus pauciores clientes habet quam nosmet ipsi. 6. A paucioribus hominibus laudari quam vituperari molestum est. 7. Saepius medicinam quam cibum capere videmini. 8. Gajum minus saepe videmus quam Sejum.

1. More wars are carried on by Pompæjus than by any other general. 2. More advantages can be obtained by this war than by any treaty. 3. More enemies perish by disease than by the sword of our soldiers. 4. It is absurd to keep more stables than horses. 5. You seem to keep more dogs than it is necessary. 6. Thou art useful to more men than myself. 7. That man kills more enemies by hunger and cruelty than the soldiers by the sword. 8. Our soldiers receive fewer wounds than the enemies. 9. Thou permittest fewer soldiers to go away than it is allowed to thee. 10. Thou hast fewer enemies than even I. 11. I have oftener the fever than even thou. 12. You oftener apply the spurs than the bridles. 13. The Germans are less often visited by merchants than the Gauls. 14. It is less often necessary to excite than to restrain one's self.

B. QUANTITATIVE COMPARISON.

DEGREE OF EQUALITY. 1. Gajus tantum auctoritatis habet quantum tu. 2. Tu tanto odio me persequeris, quanto homines inimicissimi. 3.

<sup>1</sup> To precede. <sup>2</sup> Nobody. <sup>3</sup> Theatre. <sup>4</sup> Spectator. <sup>5</sup> To hold. <sup>6</sup> To raise. <sup>7</sup> Adire. <sup>8</sup> Frater may be placed in the accusative or in the nominative. What difference makes this in sense? <sup>9</sup> To drive back, repellere. <sup>10</sup> Ox-driver. <sup>11</sup> To keep. <sup>12</sup> The impersonal predicate must be placed either before or after the whole comparative period, when the compared phrases contain common words. <sup>13</sup> Se dare, to devote one's self. <sup>14</sup> Well. <sup>15</sup> Stabulum. <sup>16</sup> Tollere. <sup>17</sup> Adhibere. <sup>18</sup> Frenum. <sup>19</sup> Adire. <sup>20</sup> Inimical. <sup>21</sup> Martius.

Pomponius autem tibi tanta beneficia præbet, quanta mihi ipsi. 4. Tantum laborare debes quantum proficere vis. 5. Huic vulnere tantundem curæ adhibere quantum periculoso cuidam morbo necesse est. 6. Tot tantosque labores suscipio, quot quantosque bene perficere possum. 7. Frater tuus tantum sapientiæ prodit quantum virtutis. 8. Tantum auri mihi deest, quantum abs te suppeditari nequit. 9. Democritus tantum ridet, quantum Heraclitus flere solet.

1. I owe to thee just as much money, as thou to me. 2. He shows as much boldness as ignorance. 3. You cultivate as much grain as we ourselves. 4. This beverage contains as much water as wine. 5. We feel as many and as great pains as thy brother. 6. This small State carries on as many and great wars, as generally are dreaded by the greatest and wealthiest nations. 7. We fear these gifts of the Greeks just as much as the Trojans. 8. We detest these treaties as much as your emperor. 9. This king fears death as much as any other tyrant.

COMPARATIVE DEGREE.—1. Catullus plus suavitatis habet quam roboris. 2. Hoc negotium plus detrimenti nobis affert quam commodi. 3. Plus laboris ab hostibus perfertur, quam a militibus nostris. 4. Tempus plus doloris lenire solet, quam omnia amicorum solatia. 5. Vos minus fiducia habere videmini, quam ipsi hostes. 6. Neminem scriptorem plus diligimus quam Ciceronem. 7. Pueri magis ludere quam laborare videntur. 8. Ambulare malumus quam sedere. 9. Milites mortem gloriosam subire, quam vitam turpem degere malunt. 10. Hostium exercitus plus tirorum continet quam veteranorum.

1. Our leaders show more courage than wisdom. 2. Hogs have more lard than the other animals. 3. You must drink more water than wine. 4. Thou appliest less diligence to this work than my brother. 5. We assist Pomponius more by material help than by advice, but you generally give to him less help than advice. 6. We like more to make our living by labor, than to covet the property of others. 7. This city flourishes less by commerce than by the thrift and good customs of the inhabitants. 8. Thou seemest to love Sempronius more than any other man. 9. We will not love God less than treasure. 10. Gajus displeases more than his brother, but less than thou. 11. It is less expedient to punish crimes than to prevent [them.]

C. COMPARISON OF DESCRIPTIVE ADJECTIVES.

DEGREE OF EQUALITY.—1. Regina tam prodiga est, quam ejus mater. 2. Milites nostri tam fortes quam generosi esse videntur. 3. Scriptorum veterum lectio tam jucunda est quam utilis. 4. Vobis tam fortibus quam cautis esse necesse est. 5. Germanorum legati tam arroganter respondent quam inepte. 6. Hoc iter tam longum est quam molestum. 7. Socii tam tarde adveniunt, quam celeriter effugiunt. 8. Tam diu laboramus quam diu et volumus et possumus.

<sup>21</sup> Præbere, to show. <sup>22</sup> Suppeditare, to supply. <sup>23</sup> Patio. <sup>24</sup> Pertimescere. <sup>25</sup> Opulentus. <sup>26</sup> Detestari. <sup>27</sup> Sweetness. <sup>28</sup> Consolation. <sup>29</sup> To lead. <sup>30</sup> A recruit. <sup>31</sup> A veteran. <sup>32</sup> Opus. <sup>33</sup> Material help, opes, pl. <sup>34</sup> To make a living, victum quaerere. <sup>35</sup> Concupiscere. <sup>36</sup> Translate "strange (alienus) property." <sup>37</sup> Diligentia. <sup>38</sup> Mos. <sup>39</sup> "Man" may be translated by an accusative or a nominative. What difference would this make in sense? <sup>40</sup> Opes. <sup>41</sup> Undertake.

1. The general seems to be as <sup>41</sup>successful as his brother. The king intends to be as severe as just. 3. We are as desirous of a <sup>42</sup>change of government as you. 4. It is allowed to be as short as thou wishest. 5. This work seems to be as easy as pleasant. 6. The general directs the ambassadors to be as polite as cautious. 7. Sempronius answers as kindly as the other ambassadors. 8. I cannot <sup>43</sup>bear injuries as patiently as it is necessary. 9. This magistrate speaks as absurdly and meanly, as it seems to be his custom. 10. The enemies arrive as suddenly as they <sup>44</sup>depart. 11. We err as long as we live.

COMPARATIVE DEGREE.—1. Valles fecundiōres esse solent quam montes. 2. Galli Pœnis amiciōres sunt quam Romānis. 3. Equos meliōres habeo quam libros. 4. Dux ille pecuniæ cupidior est quam gloriæ. 5. Homo ille ditior est quam Crassus, felicior quam Sulla, benignior quam Titus. 6. Nemo homo magis nefarius esse potest, quam Catilina. 7. Aurum minus utile esse videtur, quam ferrum. 8. Lucullus magnificentius cœnat quam Diogenes. 9. Germani victoriam acrius disputant quam Galli. 10. Donatus Virgilii carmina melius enarrare videtur quam interpretes recentiores. 11. Facilius est navem regere quam civitatem. 12. Lapides frangere præstat, quam tale negotium perficere. 13. Animi doloribus vehementius torquēmur quam corporis cruciatibus (torment.)

1. Gajus is more modest than thou. 2. This road (iter) is shorter than the Flaminian (Flaminius) way. 3. This crime is more serious than the theft of Gajus. 4. Our soldiers are braver than any troops of the enemies. 5. Our private houses are more magnificent than any public buildings of the Persians. 6. We intend to build better ships than the English (Anglus). 7. No writer writes more useful books than Sempronius. 8. The northwinds (aquilo) are less dangerous to our coasts than the southwinds. 9. Mice generally are less injurious to the [standing] crops than moles (talpa). 10. It is more pleasant to pardon, than to punish. 11. It is less necessary to be wise, than to be honest. 12. It generally is more easy to hear than to speak; but often it is less difficult to speak, than to be silent. 13. The Gauls seem to seize (arripere) this occasion less eagerly than the Germans. 14. Wise men live more happily than fools (stultus). 15. A more disgraceful crime cannot be conceived (cogitare) than perfidy. 16. The general directs Crassus to march (iter facere) more cautiously than before. 17. We can more easily attack enemies, than defend our own boundaries. 18. You generally sleep longer than you work, and eat oftener than you read.

D. PROMISCUOUS EXERCISES ON THE WORDS more AND less.

1. We teach more scholars than you, but your scholars are more learned. 2. Thebes has more houses, but less inhabitants than Syracuse. 3. This writer has more grace (lepos), but less clearness (perspicuitas) than Cato; he employs more words, but less lights (lumen). 4. Gajus is more ably (aptus) defended, than he can defend himself. 5. We have more forests than the Sicilians, and less fields; but our forests are smaller than their fields, and our fields produce (gignere) more grain, than their forests wood (lignum). 6. Our meadows are more adapted (idoneus) to culture (cultūra), than the fields of the Scythians; but their fields are more easily harvested (metere) than our meadows. 7. I feel more pain than thou, but I endure it more easily than thou. 8. We understand Homer more easily than Pindar (Pindarus), but this very difficulty gives (afferre) more pleasure to us, than that smooth (lenis) stream (flumen) of the Homeric (Homericus) language (oratio). 9. My father loves thee more than his children, and his children love thee more than themselves. 10. This orator has more gall than honey, yet he is more eagerly read and by more men, than any other writer.

<sup>41</sup> Felix. <sup>42</sup> A change of government, res novæ (literally new affairs). <sup>43</sup> Ferre. <sup>44</sup> Abire.

LESSON XXXIX.

IDIOMS OF THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD. THE ABSOLUTE DEGREE.

§ 306. The Latin language has several peculiarities in forming the comparative period: 1. In regard to completing the second member; 2. In changing the second member into an OBJECT of the comparative degree; 3. In determining the degree of difference; 4. In employing the comparative period as a mere grammatical form for the limitation of numeral and quantitative relations.

A. COMPLETING THE SECOND MEMBER.

§ 307. When ATTRIBUTIVE phrases belong to both members of the comparison, which have the same governing noun, both languages omit the common governing noun, but the English language often indicates it by certain form-adjectives, which cannot be employed in Latin.

1. When the attributes are GENITIVES, the English language uses the form-adjectives that (those), the one in place of the omitted governing noun in the second member, which in Latin cannot be translated, as:

The garden of Gajus is more beautiful, than that of Sempronius, Gaji hortus pulchrior est quam Seji (not ille Seji.)
The leader of the Romans is as brave as the one of the Gauls, Romanorum dux tam fortis est quam Gallorum (not unus Gallorum.)

The fields of the Gauls are more fertile than those of the Germans,
Gallorum agri fecundiōres sunt quam Germanorum (not illi Germanorum.)

2. When the attribute in the second member is a POSSESSIVE adjective, the English language employs peculiar substantive forms of the possessives (mine, thine, hers, ours, yours, theirs), which in Latin are expressed by the usual possessive adjectives, agreeing with the omitted governing nouns, as :

The house of Gajus is greater than ours, Gaji domus major est quam nostra.

The sons of Sempronius are more learned than mine, Semproniū filii doctiōres sunt quam mei.

Rem. 1. Frequently the adjective "own" is added to the English possessives, which then retain their adjective form, as : Thy bravery is greater than my own, Virtus tua major est quam mea. (Gajus likes thy children more than his own, Gajus liberos tuos plus diligit quam suos.)

3. When the attributes are other adjectives, the English language often indicates the omitted governing noun in the second member by the numeral one, which cannot be translated in Latin, the adjective of the second member agreeing with its governing noun understood, as :

A brick house is firmer than a wooden one, Domus latericia firmior est quam lignea (not lignea una.)

Old friends are better than new ones, Amīci veteres meliōres sunt quam novi (not novi unī.)

No writers are more renowned than these, Scriptōres nulli clariōres sunt, quam hi.

§ 308. When an INFLECTIONAL comparative degree is used as PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVE, all other words in both members being common, the Latin language places the compared adjective of the second member likewise in the COMPARATIVE degree. In English the second adjective always stands in the POSITIVE degree, and the comparative in the first member is formed either by "more" or by "rather," as :

The Greeks are rather (more) wise than brave, Græci sapientiōres sunt quam fortiōres.

Rem. 2. Often the Latin language leaves the second adjective in the positive, and the comparative of the first must then always be formed by "magis," which is always necessary, when one of the two adjectives does not form inflectional degrees, as :

Artem juris civilis habetis, magis magnam atque uberem quam difficilem et obscuram, You have the science of civil law, rather great and rich, than difficult and obscure.

§ 309. The comparative period often is combined with phrases, which logically belong to one of the two members only. This combination gives rise to several peculiar grammatical forms, which mostly belong to the comparison of SENTENCES (Part II). Here belongs the case, when an ATTRIBUTIVE phrase, containing the comparative degree, is combined with a PREDICATIVE phrase, belonging to the first member only, as :

We have a greater general than Cæsar, Ducem majōrem habemus quam Cæsarem, or : Ducem majōrem habemus quam Cæsar est.

Rem. 3. Analyzing this sentence, it is evident, that the predicative phrase "we have" does not belong to the second member :

FIRST MEMBER : We have a greater general ;

SECOND MEMBER : Cæsar is a worse general (than ours.)

The copula is in the second member does not occur in the first member, and therefore ought to be and often is expressed in Latin. But it frequently is omitted, and by a peculiar ATTRACTION of case the subject Cæsar is then placed in the accusative, agreeing with the accusative ducem in the first member. This attraction, however, only takes place, when the noun of the first member is in the ACCUSATIVE, not when it is in other oblique cases. We then always must retain the copula in the second member, placing the noun in the nominative, as :

We are obedient to a greater king than Philip, Majōri regi obedimus quam Philippus est (not quam Philippo.)

☞ ATTRACTION is an agreement contrary to general grammatical rules.

B. CHANGE OF THE SECOND MEMBER INTO AN OBJECT.

§ 310. When the second member in the comparison of different degrees contains nothing but the SUBJECT, either alone or in connection with attributes, the Latin language frequently omits the connecting word quam and places the subject of the second member in the ablative case, changing thus the second member into an OBJECT of the comparative degree, as :

Gajus is braver than Sejus, Gajus fortior est Sejo.

Rem. 4. The arrangement in this case either is the same as in combination of objective phrases (Gajus Sejo fortior est), or the ablative may follow the comparative, the same as in the usual arrangement of the comparative period.

Rem. 5. This use of the ablative case always is allowed, when the noun of the second member, by completing the latter, will appear to be the SUBJECT, although in the abbreviated form it might be in the accusative. Thus in the example, mentioned (§ 309), we may place the subject Caesarem in the ablative without quam, as object of maior: Ducem Caesarem majorem habebimus.

Rem. 6. The ancient authors in freer style sometimes use the ablative instead of quam, when the noun in the second member is an OTHER in the ACCUSATIVE. This, however, frequently leads to ambiguities, and should be altogether avoided by beginners.

Rem. 7. Idiomatic abbreviations of the second member, analogous to this construction are the ablatives opinio, spe, dignitas, justitia, semita, necessario, following or preceding a comparative. The ablatives opinio and spe are translated by the phrases "than could (can, might) be expected," "than I, thou, he, etc., expected." Opinio is translated by "that is very fair"; justitia by "that is very just," or "than justice requires"; semita by "than usually"; necessario by "than is necessary", as:

Hæc negotia opinione (spe) graviora sunt, These affairs are more important than I (thou, he, etc.) expected.

Hæc poena justo major est, This punishment is greater, than it is just.

Gajus solito loquacior est, Gajus is more talkative than usually.

C. THE ABLATIVE OF DIFFERENCE.

§ 311. The comparative period as such shows only, that the compared phrases are different or equal, but not the AMOUNT, by which they differ. This amount of difference may be expressed either by QUANTITATIVE NOUNS in connection with NUMERALS (L. XXXIV., Rem. 2) or by indefinite QUANTITATIVE ADVERBS (§ 269). These nouns or adverbs are made OBJECTS of the comparative degree. The nouns are placed in the ABLATIVE CASE, and the quantitative adverbs assume the form of the ABLATIVE NEUTER SINGULAR of their ADJECTIVES* (quanto, multo, much, by far; aliquanto, hanto, paulo, somewhat, a little). This is called the ablative of difference.

Gajus is (by) two inches taller than Sejus, Gajus duobus digitis procerior est quam Sejus.

Alesia is 2,000 paces farther distant than the camp, Alesia duobus milibus passuum longius abest quam castrum.

This road is by many steps shorter, Hoc iter multis passibus brevius est.

How much more diligent is Sejus than Gajus, quanto diligentior Sejus est quam Gajus!

The wolf is not a little larger than the fox, Lupus aliquanto major est quam vulpes.

* This is one of the instances where ADVERBS are subject to inflection. Not all adverbs are indeclinable, as we are accustomed to find in our grammars.

Gajus speaks a little oftener than Sejus, Gajus paulo saepius loquitur quam Sejus.

The enemies are by one-half more than our soldiers, Hostes dimidio plures sunt quam milites nostri.

Rem. 8. In the English expressions "many more", "much more", "much better", the words "much" and "more" indicate the AMOUNT OF DIFFERENCE, and hence must be expressed by an adverbial ablative in Latin, as: The enemies have many more troops than we, Hostes copias multo majores habent quam nos. It is much more pleasant to receive than to give, Multo jucundius est accipere quam dare. For the use of nililo as ablative of difference see Part II, p. 264.

Rem. 9. The English expressions "as much again", "as high again", "twice as large", etc., indicating the amount of difference, are expressed by the ablatives altero tanto with a comparative, as: This field is as large again as that of Gajus, Hic ager altero tanto major est quam Seji. The numeral expressions "three, four, etc., times as large, as small, as much, etc." are translated either by CARDINAL ADVERBS with the ablative tanto, or by CARDINAL ADJECTIVES with the ablative partibus in connection with COMPARATIVES, as:

The garden of Gajus is five times as large as that of Sejus, Gaji hortus quinquies tanto major est quam Seji, or quinque partibus major est.

Rem. 10. The ablative of difference may be connected with those words which involve a comparative degree (§ 295), as: multo praestat, it is much preferable, it is much better; paucis diebus post (instead of postea), a few days later; multo ante (inst. of antea), much before, much sooner.

Rem. 11. The amount of difference may also be added to superlatives, the expression "by far" being rendered longe, or multo, as: This horse is the quickest by six paces, Hic equus sex passibus celerrimus est. Dumnorix is by far the richest, Dumnorix longe (multo) ditissimus est.

Rem. 12. The amount of difference may also be expressed by whole SENTENCES, as: The air is so much the denser (crassior), the nearer it is to the earth (quo propior est terræ). For this combination see Part II, p. 751, 5.

D. THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD EMPLOYED FOR LIMITATION.

§ 312. The comparative period often is employed to determine within a certain limit numeral or other ideas, which are susceptible of degrees, as: more than six miles, less than 50 paces, more than human, more than a revolt. The word more is then translated by plus or amplius, the word less by minus, as:

They kill more than 1,000 enemies, plus (amplius) quam mille hostes occidunt.

Gajus is more than diligent, Gajus plus quam diligens est.

Hercules is more than a man, Hercules plus quam homo est.

Rem. 13. Comparative expressions like these cannot be resolved into two different members, and hence have only the form, not the logical meaning of a comparative period. Here the comparative words more and less cannot be considered as members of phrases, since they form only one idea in connection with those words which they limit. They are nothing but PARTICLES (see Book IV.). In analyzing comparative expressions of this kind the combinations "more than six", "more than human" always must be considered as SINGLE WORDS.

Rem. 14. The connecting word quam, when in this combination it is followed by NUMERALS, is very frequently omitted, and the numeral phrase generally stands in that case, which it would have without the comparatives plus, amplius and minus. But sometimes, though rarely, the phrase containing the numeral is placed in the ABLATIVE, according to the construction mentioned § 310.

We have more than 200 captives, Plus (amplius) ducentos captivos habemus (more seldom: plus ducentis captivis or plus quam ducentos captivos).

More than 2000 enemies enter the gates, Plus duo millia hostium portas intrant (more seldom: plus duobus millibus, or plus quam duo millia).

Rem. 15. In a similar manner the age of persons is expressed by the limiting comparative period, as: older or younger than thirty years. Here we must use or understand the participle natus (born). The Latin expression is threefold: 1. natus plus (amplius, minus) triginta annos; or, 2. major (minor) triginta annos; or, 3. major (minor) triginta annis. With the last two expressions the addition of natus is rare.

E. THE ABSOLUTE DEGREE.

§. 313. The ABSOLUTE degree denotes a high, low, or modified intensity. It is expressed:

1. In the NUMERAL comparison by the indefinite numerals multi, pauci, aliquot, complures, etc.

Rem. 16. The adjective multus and its plural multi may be considered as POSITIVES of plures and plurimi. But then it is evident that all other indefinite numerals also would form positive degrees for the comparative plures. Since multi implies a high intensity, it seems to be an absolute degree, and it is more correct to assume, that plures and plus are original comparatives without a positive.

2. In the QUANTITATIVE comparison by the quantitative adjectives multus, paulum, parum, satis, aliquantus, nimis and by the quantitative adverbs admodum valde, very much; vehementer, exceedingly, extremely; magnopere (summopere), very much, greatly, very greatly, and by those adverbs, which are formed from the quantitative adjectives, as multum, parum, etc. (see § 269.)

3. In the comparison of DESCRIPTIVE adjectives by a combination of the descriptive adjectives or adverbs with the following quantitative adverbs:

|  |  |
|--|--|
| admodum or valde , very         | nimis , too                              |
| satis , sufficiently , enough , | parum , too little , not—enough , |
| somewhat ,                                    |  |

as:

Very eloquent, valde (admodum) disertus; too boldly, nimis audacter; clearly enough, satis dilucide; sufficiently strong, satis validus; not bravely enough, parum fortiter.

§ 314. The absolute degree in all kinds of comparison, denoting a high degree, and in English expressed by very, is frequently formed by the prefix per, connected with adjectives and adverbs, as: pervalidus, very strong; permulti, very many; permagnus, very great; perbrevis, very short; perdifficilis, very difficult; perbene, very well, etc. Sometimes the prefix prae is used instead of per, as praealtus, very high.

§ 315. The regular inflectional COMPARATIVE and SUPERLATIVE degrees are frequently employed in the sense of absolute degrees. The COMPARATIVE has then one of three meanings, "rather", "somewhat", or "too" and the SUPERLATIVE the meaning of "very", "extremely", "exceedingly", as:

Themistocles liberius vivit, Themistocles lives too free. Copiae incautius procedunt, the troops advance somewhat incautiously. Socii tardiores esse videntur, the allies seem to be rather slow. Germani fortissime pugnant, the Germans fight very bravely.

Rem. 17. A degree "as high as possible," is expressed by quam before a superlative, with or without the addition of posse (conjugated in the required form). In English this degree is expressed 1. either by an adjective or adverb in the POSITIVE degree, and by the comparative word as with "possible" (as much as possible, as long as possible, etc.); 2. or by a SUPERLATIVE with "possible" (the longest possible, the greatest possible, etc.); or 3. by the verb "can" (as much as I can, as well as we can, as many as they can or could); as:

The Romans kill as many enemies as possible (as they can), Romani quam plurimos hostes occidunt, or quam plurimos possunt hostes occidere.

We wish to carry as much gold as possible (as we can), quam plurimum auri (possumus) ferre volumus.

You should read the best possible books (as good books as possible), quam optimos libros (potestis) legere debetis.

They study as diligently as possible (as they can), quam diligentissime (possunt) studere.

He directs his lieutenant to advance by the greatest possible journeys (as great journeys as possible, as he can), Legatum quam maximis itineribus (potest) proficisci iubet.

Rem. 18. "As soon as possible" is translated by quam primum.

EXERCISES.

A. COMPLETING THE SECOND MEMBER.

1. Gallorum castra oppido propiora sunt quam Romanorum. 2. Romanorum naves altiores sunt quam Gallorum. 3. Minervae templum magnificentius est quam Junonis. 4. Caesaris nomen saepius memoratur quam Pompeii. 5. Homeri carmina a pluribus hominibus leguntur quam Hesiodi. 6. Alexandri regnum praeclarius est quam Philippi. 7. Ager Segestanus plus frumenti gignit quam Tarentinus. 8. Veneris Stella clarius lucet quam Saturni. 9. Animi morbi perniciosiores sunt quam corporis. 10. Audacia nulla major esse potest quam Catilinae. 11. Patientia nulla major esse potest quam nostra. 12. Vir bonus et sapiens utilitati communi plus consulit quam suae. 13. Nulli milites fortiores esse possunt quam hi. 14. Sempronii diligentia major esse solet quam tua. 15. Legiones duae diutius pugnant quam ceterae. 16. Homines honesti et sancti beatius vivere solent quam improbi. 17. Animalia magna diutius vivere solent quam parva. 18. Scuta ferrea corpus melius tegunt quam lignea. 19. Ab hominibus inferioribus vinci turpius est quam a paribus. 20. Cives nostri hoc bellum fortius gerunt quam felicius. 21. Persae ditiores sunt quam fortiores. 22. Haec concio amplior est quam praesidi gratior. 23. Honestiores quosdam viros memorare possumus quam Themistoclem. 24. Regem clementiorem habemus quam Titum, sapientiorem quam M. Aurelium. 25. Hoc regnum meliori viro dare volumus quam Antiochus est.

1. The power of Jupiter is greater than that of Hercules. 2. The genius of this general is greater than that of the greatest commanders of our time. 3. The industry of the Sicilians seems more useful to mankind than that of the Carthaginians. 4. Our temples are holier than those of the Gauls. 5. The armies of the Prussians fight more bravely and successfully than those of the Austrians. 6. Our defeats are fewer than those of the Italians. 7. We rather wish to imitate the language (oratio) of Cicero than that of Sallust. 8. The candidate of the Patricians is elected by more votes than the one of the Plebeians. 9. We rather will yield to the arms of the Romans than to those of the Greeks. 10. The ordinances of the tribunes have less authority than those of the consuls. 11. The reign of Augustus is more illustrious than that of Tiberius. 12. We cannot conceive (cogitare) more abominable crimes than those of Nero. 13. The district of Rhegium has more inhabitants than that of Tarent. 14. It is more profitable to govern the province of Sicily than that of Gaul. 15. It is better to strengthen the friendship of the Sicilians than that of the other allies of the Roman people. 16. The star Mercury is smaller than Jupiter. 17. This oration is more pleasant to the president than mine. 18. These words can be better understood than my own. 19. I understand the method of Gajus as easily as thine. 20. Your soldiers commit as many crimes as ours. 21. The Emperor is as devoted to the welfare of the state as to his own. 22. Gajus attends to the affairs of others as much as to his own. 23. The Romans seem to defend the rights of [their] allies more carefully (diligens) than their own. 24. It is more disgraceful to neglect the advantages of others than one's own. 25. The Romans rather wish to consume our provisions than their own. 26. The tenth legion fights more bravely than the second. 27. These trees are higher than those. 28. These pictures are more valuable than the others. 29. This brother is more sober than the other. 30. I rather wish to own this house than any other. 31. These regions are more fertile than any others. 32. The higher gods are more powerful than the lower ones. 33. Difficult problems are more useful to the minds of the boys than easy ones. 34. Both banks of the river are steep; but the right one is higher than the left. 35. It is easier to conquer a weak nation than a strong one. 36. The orations of the chief are rather sharper than elegant; they have more acid than honey. 37. This pestilence is more alarming than destructive. 38. The ambassadors reason (disputare) rather sophistically than logically. 39. We read more difficult writers than Caesar. 40. It is necessary to appoint a more learned teacher than Crispus. 41. I cannot conceive a juster cause than ours. 42. I give this money to a more influential man than Calidius.

<sup>1</sup> Segestinus, belonging to Segesta. <sup>2</sup> To produce. <sup>3</sup> Tarentinus, belonging to Tarentum. <sup>4</sup> Interest. <sup>5</sup> Consulere, to care (for something), to attend (to something). <sup>6</sup> Virtuous. <sup>7</sup> Ferrea, iron (adj.) <sup>8</sup> In sentences like this the subject-infinitive, which is common to both members (here vinci) may be omitted in Latin, which is not admissible in English. <sup>9</sup> Assembly. <sup>10</sup> Splendid. <sup>11</sup> President. <sup>12</sup> Potentia. <sup>13</sup> Mankind, genus humanum. <sup>14</sup> Borussia. <sup>15</sup> Felix. <sup>16</sup> Austriacus. <sup>17</sup> Decretum. <sup>18</sup> Principatus (not regnum, which is the reign of a king).

B. CHANGE OF THE SECOND MEMBER INTO AN OBJECT.

1. Thucydides Herodoto veracior est. 2. Antonius frequentius errat Platone. 3. Juno ceteris deabus potentior est. 4. Amoris simulatio odio peior est. 5. Bellua nulla elephanto prudentior est. 6. Lux sonitu velocior est. 7. Nulla virtus amabilius est modestia. 8. Argentum vilis est auro, et aurum virtutibus. 9. Fortuna plus consiliis humanis pollet. 10. Testem Platone locupletior neminem invenire possum. 11. Oratorem Sulpicio jejuniorem dicere (mention) difficile videtur. 12. Laelius serius spe nostra venit. 13. Trebonius melius opinione disputat. 14. Aurelius plus aequo puniatur. 15. Hic vir te ipso doctior est.

1. Virtue is better than wisdom. 2. To love Christ (Christus) is better than all knowledge. 3. Gajus is more truthful than even thou. 4. Plato's wisdom is greater than ours. 5. Our disaster is more pernicious than thine. 6. <sup>46</sup>Flatterers generally are more eagerly sought (expetere) than friends. 7. The Athenians are more <sup>47</sup>volatile than the other nations. 8. I can <sup>48</sup>produce no more competent witness than Tacitus. 9. To be wiser than Plato is as difficult as to surpass the gods themselves. 10. It is pleasant to be richer than Cræsus. 11. Virtus must be dearer to thee than life itself. 12. No worse vice can be found than <sup>49</sup>perjury. 13. We must depart (abire) <sup>50</sup>sooner than we expect. 14. The punishment of the accused is <sup>51</sup>harder than justice requires. 15. You have more money than it is necessary. 16. The Italians fight better than usually.

<sup>19</sup> Belonging to Rhegium. Rheginus. <sup>20</sup> Confirmare. <sup>21</sup> Dolius. <sup>22</sup> Translate "strange," alienus. <sup>23</sup> The higher gods, di majorum gentium; the lower gods, di minorum gentium. <sup>24</sup> Potens. <sup>25</sup> Propositio. <sup>26</sup> Potens. <sup>27</sup> Acer. <sup>28</sup> Acetum. <sup>29</sup> Pestilencia. <sup>30</sup> Minax. <sup>31</sup> Perniciosus. <sup>32</sup> Subtilis. <sup>33</sup> Concinnus. <sup>34</sup> Nominare. <sup>35</sup> Gratiolentia. <sup>36</sup> Truthful. <sup>37</sup> False pretence. <sup>38</sup> Wild beast. <sup>39</sup> Sound. <sup>40</sup> Amiable. <sup>41</sup> Base. <sup>42</sup> Supply "cilius est." <sup>43</sup> Competent. <sup>44</sup> Serus, late. <sup>45</sup> Praestabilis.

C. THE ABLATIVE OF DIFFERENCE.

1. Hæc via multis passibus brevior est quam altera. 2. Mensis Martius <sup>52</sup>trinis diæbus longior est quam Februarius. 3. Lælius tribus horis serius advenit Catōne. 4. Gajus tribus annis major est quam Sempronius. 5. Turres <sup>53</sup>denis pedibus altiōres sunt quam murus. 6. Molestum est, uno <sup>54</sup>sestertio minus habere quam necesse videtur. 7. Minervæ templum aliquot pedibus altius est quam Thesei. 8. Quanto molestius est vinci quam vincere! 9. Populus universus civitatem multo melius regnat quam reges. 10. Se ipsum gubernare multo difficilius est quam rem publicam. 11. Lupus artus multo majores habet quam canis. 12. Cæsar paulo <sup>55</sup>maturius opinione exercitum <sup>56</sup>deducit. 13. Hic princeps a populo aliquanto minus diligitur, quam pater ejus. 14. Tanto difficilius est agere quam velle (to propose). 15. Multo pluris inimicos habere videtur quam amicos. 16. Pompæjum multo magis admīror quam Crassum. 17. Hostium naves altero tanto majores sunt quam nostræ. 18. Rhenus sexies tanto latior est quam Tiberis. 19. Sol multis partibus amplior est terrâ. 20. Multo præstat injurias accipere (to suffer) quam inferre (to inflict). 21. Hostes paucis diæbus ante adveniunt quam expectantur. 22. Suevorum gens longe maxima et <sup>57</sup>bellicosissima est Germanorum omnium. 23. Alcibiades multo <sup>58</sup>formosissimus est Græcorum omnium.

1. Mount Ætna is 6,000 feet higher than Vesuvius. 2. The place of the camp is 200 paces <sup>59</sup>lower than the <sup>60</sup>top of the mountain. 3. Pompæjus is <sup>61</sup>two years older than Cicero. 4. The march of the enemies is 2,000 paces shorter than that of the Romans. 5. Each column is five feet higher than the statues. 6. The Germans are one foot <sup>62</sup>taller than the Romans. 7. This tree is five inches thicker than the others. 8. Henry is several years younger than Charles. 9. How much <sup>63</sup>stricter are the rules of <sup>64</sup>morality than those of the civil law! 10. This battle is by far more <sup>65</sup>bloody than that of <sup>66</sup>Cannæ. 11. Thou seemest to be much sicker than yesterday. 12. It is by far better to be healthy than rich. 13. It is much more expedient to <sup>67</sup>keep the camp, than to attack the enemy.

<sup>46</sup> Assentator. <sup>47</sup> Levis. <sup>48</sup> Afferre. <sup>49</sup> Perjurium. <sup>50</sup> Soon mature. <sup>51</sup> Severus. <sup>52</sup> Why is the distributive numeral used here? <sup>53</sup> A sestertius, a Roman coin. <sup>54</sup> Mature, early, soon. <sup>55</sup> To lead away, to withdraw. <sup>56</sup> Warlike. <sup>57</sup> Handsome. <sup>58</sup> By the comparative of inferus. Humilior is lower than a low place; inferior is lower than a high place. <sup>59</sup> Cædemon. <sup>60</sup> Bientium, two years. <sup>61</sup> Proculus. <sup>62</sup> De-vērs. <sup>63</sup> Officia (plur.) <sup>64</sup> Atrox. <sup>65</sup> The battle of Cannæ, pugna Cannensis (Cannæan battle). <sup>66</sup> Tenere.

14. It is much more difficult to conquer one's passions, than [one's] enemies. 15. We have somewhat richer (uber) fields, than yours. 16. The army of the Spartans is a little larger than that of the Athenians. 17. Our scholars learn not a little quicker than yours. 18. So much more expedient is it to be silent, than to speak too much. 19. Lucullus is by one-half richer than Cræsus. 20. The president visits (adire) many more cities than it is necessary. 21. Gajus has much more money than thou. 22. Many more hearers (auditor) are present than it is convenient (conveniēns). 23. We intend to start (proficisci) three hours earlier than the messengers of Sempronius. 24. We intend to stay (commorari) a little longer than Pompæjus. 25. Our fruits are as large again as yours. 26. The river Danube is twice as broad as the Garonne. 27. The moon is fifty times smaller than the earth. 28. The consuls return several days later than they are expected. 29. Socrates is by far the wisest of all Greeks. 30. The Flaminian road is much the best and the shortest.

D. THE COMPARATIVE PERIOD EMPLOYED FOR LIMITATION.

1. Plus septingenti milites ab hostibus capiuntur. 2. Galli amplius duas horas certamen <sup>68</sup>sustinent. 3. Plus triginta naves <sup>69</sup>desiderantur. 4. Minus trecenti milites pereunt; paulo plus quam mille vulnerantur. 5. Carthaginenses plus ducentos equites habent. 6. A minus quingentis militibus plus quatuor millia hostium capiuntur. 7. Apes plus <sup>70</sup>unum <sup>71</sup>regem nunquam patiuntur. 8. Hostes minus triginta pedibus <sup>72</sup>absunt. 9. Filia mea plus decem annos nata est. 10. Pueri minores quatuordecim annis legibus <sup>73</sup>pacisci prohibentur. 11. Juvenes majores sedecim annis <sup>74</sup>togam virilem <sup>75</sup>sumere solent.

1. More than 30 prisoners escape. 2. I cannot be obedient to more than one master. 3. Less than 200 soldiers are missed. 4. More than ten States intend to secede. 5. We intend to defeat our adversaries by more than a million of votes. 6. The Romans lose a little more than 2,000 soldiers, the Gauls one-half more. 7. The law forbids to elect more than two consuls. 8. Each legion misses more than a hundred soldiers. 9. Ten citizens pay (pendere) more than 5,000 <sup>76</sup>dollars apiece. 10. The city of Rome is less distant than 30,000 paces. 11. My son Charles is more than five, and Frederick a little less than seven years old. 12. All citizens, younger than forty years, are compelled to <sup>77</sup>serve in the army. 13. Gajus is more than polite. 14. Atticus does (præstare) more than [his] duty. 15. This secession of the Plebeians is more than madness.

E. THE ABSOLUTE DEGREE.

1. Atticus noster te valde diligit. 2. Te, mi fili, admodum desidero. 3. Bruti litteræ mihi vehementer <sup>78</sup>displicent. 4. Cicero librum jucun-dissimum tuum, mi Quinte, magnopere laudat. 5. Multum nunc lacrimari videtur. 6. Signum admodum amplum (splendid) et eximium tibi mitto. 7. Valde bene scribis, mi Carole! 8. Amicus noster quandam rerum publicarum mutationem (change) nimis cupide expectare videtur. 9. Tu et frater tuus linguam Græcam satis bene intelligitis. 10. Bella Punica a Sisennâ parum <sup>78</sup>dilucide narrantur. 11. Cicero omnes Epicuri errores <sup>79</sup>perbreviter ac pereleganter exponit (to state). 12. Permulti homines hunc reipublicæ statum intelligere nequeunt. 13. Gajus patri suo simillimus est. 14. Senectus naturâ <sup>80</sup>loquacior est. 15. Vespasianus princeps pecuniæ avidior est. 16. Plurima Datamii <sup>81</sup>gesta obscuriora sunt. 17. Hic versus unâ <sup>82</sup>syllabâ brevior est. 18. Litteræ tuæ longiores sunt. 19. Plerique homines tardius cogitant agunt autem celerius. 20. Gallinæ avesque reliquæ nidos (nest) quam <sup>83</sup>mollissime <sup>84</sup>construunt. 21. Jugurtha quam maximas potest copias armat. 22. Cæsar quam maximum militum numerum arcessit. 23. Dux exercitus discrimen, quam brevissime potest, militibus exponit (to explain).

<sup>67</sup> To maintain. <sup>68</sup> Desiderare, to miss. <sup>69</sup> Grammatically the distributive singuli would be required. But "singulos reges" would be ambiguous. In such instances the simple cardinal must be preferred. <sup>70</sup> The Romans called the queen of the bees rex. <sup>71</sup> Absesse, to be distant. <sup>72</sup> Pacisci, to make contracts. <sup>73</sup> The manly toga. <sup>74</sup> To assume. <sup>75</sup> Centenarius. <sup>76</sup> To serve in the army, militare. <sup>77</sup> Dispicere.

1. I very much wish to see thee often. 2. We greatly admire the incredible boldness of this magistrate. 3. I very much regret the enormous carelessness (socordia) of this general. 4. These rumors (sermo) <sup>85</sup>injure thy <sup>86</sup>reputation exceedingly. 5. Gajus is prevented from working much by a disease of the kidneys. 6. Saguntum, a very rich (opulentus) town is taken by Hannibal. 7. The walls of the town are very high, and are defended by ten very high towers. 8. A very (by per) great danger is imminent to the republic. 9. This incautious (incautus) man can very (per) easily be killed. 10. That very (per) modest youth cannot <sup>87</sup>bear the voice of the consul. 11. The ambassadors intend to stay very long (by the superlative). 12. The ambassadors very (superlative) humbly implore the <sup>88</sup>pardon of Cæsar. 13. Thy words do not run (fluere) <sup>89</sup>smoothly enough, but the narrative (fabula) itself is sufficiently accurate. 14. Thou treatest this point (locus) too lightly, and the causes of the rebellion are not stated clearly enough. 15. Too (comparative) great and too long a pleasure extinguishes all <sup>90</sup>lights of the soul. 16. The reasoning (ratio) of this philosopher seems to be rather sophistical. 17. The oldest (antiquus) history of the Saxons is rather obscure. 18. The general begins to censure the ambassadors rather severely. 19. It is necessary to capture as few, and to kill as many enemies as possible. 20. The Helvetians resolve to sow as much grain as possible, and to procure (comparare) the greatest possible <sup>91</sup>amount of arms. 21. We wish to bring (adducere) to you as many troops as we can. 22. Cicero sends both letters as soon as possible to Cæsar. 23. We intend to learn the Greek language as zealously as possible. 24. Cæsar visits (adire) the camp as often as he can. 25. It is necessary to deliver to me the <sup>92</sup>dispatches of the general as quickly as possible.

<sup>78</sup> Dilucidus, clear. <sup>79</sup> Brevis, brief. <sup>80</sup> Loquax, talkative. <sup>81</sup> Gestum, a deed. <sup>82</sup> A syllable. <sup>83</sup> Mollis, soft. <sup>84</sup> To construct. <sup>85</sup> Offendere. <sup>86</sup> Reputation, existimatio. <sup>87</sup> Ferro. <sup>88</sup> Gratia. <sup>89</sup> Mollis. <sup>90</sup> Copia. <sup>91</sup> Litteræ. * Lumen.

BOOK THIRD.

FORMATION OF THE TENSES AND MOODS.—ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES.—FORMATION OF SENTENCES.

CHAPTER FIRST.

THE PRESENT-SYSTEM OF THE REGULAR VERB.

§ 316. All forms of the verb are either finite or indefinite; the verb is accordingly divided into the FINITE and the INDEFINITE VERB.

Rem. 1. The finite forms of the verb are those which imply one of the three grammatical persons. They are always distinguished by the PERSONAL ENDINGS. The indefinite verb comprises those verbal forms which do not show the person of the subject. It consists, 1, of the Infinitive and Supine, in which the action of the verb appears as subject or object; 2, of the Participles and Verbal Adjectives, in which the action of the verb appears as attribute.

The finite verb is inflected by conjugation, the indefinite verb by declension.

§ 317. The FINITE verb comprises three moods; that is, three different ways in which the speaker conceives the performance of the action. They are the Indicative, the Subjunctive, and the Imperative. By the Indicative, the speaker asserts; by the Imperative, he commands DIRECTLY; by the Subjunctives, he asserts or commands INDIRECTLY.

§ 318. The Tenses of the verb are threefold: Present, Past, or Future, according as the time of the action is conceived as present, past, or future.

§ 319. All forms of the Latin verb are derived primarily from the verb-stem, which is found by removing the ending re or ere of the infinitive. Some forms of the verbs are directly derived from the verb-stem. These are called Present-System.

Others are indirectly (§336) derived from it, and are called Perfect-System.

§ 320. The Present-System is divided into four conjugations, according to the characteristic of the verb-stem. Each of the conjugations has two voices and three moods. The Indicative mood has three tenses—the present, the imperfect, and the future; the Subjunctive has two tenses—the present and the imperfect.

The Indefinite verb of the Present-System has one Infinitive and one Participle (present participle) in the active, and one Infinitive and one Verbal Adjective in the Passive voice.

§ 321. PARADIGMS OF THE PRESENT-SYSTEM.

FIRST CONJUGATION.

Active.

Passive.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

PRESENT.

Amo, I love, am loving, do love
amas, thou lovest amat, he loves amamus, we love
amatis, you love
amant, they love.

amor, I am loved amāris, thou art loved amātur, he is loved amāmur, we are loved amamini, you are loved amantur, they are loved.

IMPERFECT.

Amābam, I loved, was loving, did love
amābas, thou lovedst amābat, he loved amābamus, we loved amābatis, you loved amābant, they loved.

amābar, I was loved amābaris or amābare, thou wast loved amābatur, he was loved amābāmur, we were loved amābāmini, you were loved amabantur, they were loved.

FUTURE.

Amābo, I shall love
amābis, thou wilt love amābit, he will love amābimus, we shall love
amābitis, you will love amābunt, they will love.

amābor, I shall be loved amāberis or amābere, thou wilt be loved amābitur, he will be loved amābimur, we shall be loved amābimini, you will be loved amābuntur, they will be loved.

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

PRESENT.

Amem, I may love, love, should love, etc.
ames, thou mayest love, etc.
amet, he may love
amēmus, we may love amētis, you may love
ament, they may love.

amer, I may be loved, am loved, should be loved, etc.
amēris, thou mayest be loved amētur, he may be loved amēmur, we may be loved amemini, you may be loved amentur, they may be loved.

IMPERFECT.

Amārem, I might, should, would love, or I loved amāres, thou mightest love amāret, he might love amarēmus, we might love amarētis, you might love amārent, they might love.

Amārer, I might, should, would be loved, or I was loved amarēris, or amarēre, thou mightest be loved amarētur, he might be loved amarēmur, we might be loved amaremini, you might be loved amarentur, they might be loved.

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

First form (active).

Sing. 2. Ama, love (thou).
Plur. 2. amāte, love (you).

First form (passive).

Sing. 2. amāre, be (thou) loved.
Plur. 2. amamini, be (you) loved.

Second form (active).

Sing. 2. Amāto, thou shalt love
3. amāto, he shall love.
Plur. 2. amatōte, you shall love
3. amanto, they shall love.

Second form (passive).

Sing. 2. amātor, thou shalt be loved
3. amātor, he shall be loved
Plur. 2. amantōre, you shall be loved
3. amantor, they shall be loved

INDEFINITE VERB.

INFINITIVE. Amāre, to love.
PARTICIPLE. amans, loving.

INFINITIVE. amāri, to be loved.
VERBAL ADJECTIVE. amandus one that must be loved.

SECOND, THIRD, AND FOURTH CONJUGATIONS.

ACTIVE VOICE.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

| II.                   | III.                | IV            |
|-----------------------|---------------------|---------------|
| PRESENT—I advise      | I read              | I hear.       |
| Monco                 | lego                | audio         |
| mones                 | legis               | audis         |
| monet                 | legit               | audit         |
| monemus               | legimus             | audimus       |
| monetis               | legitis             | auditis       |
| monent                | legunt              | audiunt.      |
| IMPERFECT—I advised   | I read, was reading | I heard.      |
| monēbam               | legēbam             | audiēbam      |
| monēbas               | legēbas             | audiēbas      |
| monēbat               | legēbat             | audiēbat      |
| monēbāmus             | legēbāmus           | audiēbāmus    |
| monēbātis             | legēbātis           | audiēbātis    |
| monēbant              | legēbant            | audiēbant.    |
| FUTURE—I shall advise | I shall read        | I shall hear. |
| monēbo                | legam               | audiam        |
| monēbis               | leges               | audies        |
| monēbit               | leget               | audiet        |
| monēbimus             | legēmus             | audiēmus      |
| monēbitis             | legētis             | audiētis      |
| monēbunt              | legent              | audient.      |

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

|                      |            |             |
|----------------------|------------|-------------|
| PRESENT—I may advise | I may read | I may hear. |
| moncam               | legam      | audiam      |
| moncas               | legas      | audias      |
| moncat               | legat      | audiat      |
| moncāmus             | legāmus    | audiāmus    |
| moncātis             | legātis    | audiātis    |
| moncant              | legant     | audiant.    |

|                                  |                     |                      |
|----------------------------------|---------------------|----------------------|
| IMPERFECT— I might advise | I might read | I might hear. |
| monērem                          | legērem             | audīrem              |
| monēres                          | legēres             | audīres              |
| monēret                          | legeret             | audīret              |
| moneremus                        | legeremus           | audīremus            |
| monerētis                        | legerētis           | audīrētis            |
| monērent                         | legerent            | audīrent.            |

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

|                   |                     |           |
|-------------------|---------------------|-----------|
|                   | First form.  |           |
| II.               | III.                | IV.       |
| Mone              | lege                | audi      |
| monēte            | legite              | audite.   |
|                   | Second form. |           |
| Sing. 2. Monēto   | legito              | audito    |
| 3. monēto         | legito              | audito    |
| Plur. 2. monetōte | legitōte            | auditōte  |
| 3. monento        | legunto             | audiunto. |

INDEFINITE VERB.

|                    |        |          |
|--------------------|--------|----------|
| INFINITIVE. Monēre | legere | audire   |
| PARTICIPLE. monens | legens | audiens. |

PASSIVE VOICE.

INDICATIVE MOOD.

|                                   |                        |                          |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|
| PRESENT— I am advised      | I am read       | I am heard.       |
| monēor                            | legor                  | audior                   |
| monēris                           | legēris or legere      | audīris                  |
| monētur                           | legitur                | audītur                  |
| monēmur                           | legimur                | audīmur                  |
| monemini                          | legimini               | audiimini                |
| monentur                          | leguntur               | audiuntur.               |
| IMPERFECT— I was advised   | I was read      | I was heard.      |
| monēbar                           | legēbar                | audībar                  |
| monēbāris or monēbāre             | legēbāris or legebāre  | audībāris or audiebāre   |
| monēbātur                         | legebātur              | audiebātur               |
| monēbāmur                         | legebāmur              | audiebāmur               |
| monēbamini                        | legebamini             | audiebamini              |
| monēbantur                        | legebantur             | audiebantur.             |
| FUTURE— I shall be advised | I shall be read | I shall be heard. |
| monēbor                           | legar                  | audiar                   |
| monēbēris or monēbēre             | legēris or legere      | audīris or audīre        |
| monēbitur                         | legētur                | audītur                  |
| monēbimur                         | legēmur                | audīmur                  |
| monēbimini                        | legemini               | audiimini                |
| monēbuntur                        | legentur               | audiuntur.               |

SUBJUNCTIVE MOOD.

|                                  |                      |                        |
|----------------------------------|----------------------|------------------------|
| PRESENT— I may be advised | I may be read | I may be heard. |
| monēar                           | legar                | audiar                 |
| monēāris or monēāre              | legāris or legāre    | audīāris or audīāre    |
| monēātur                         | legātur              | audīātur               |
| monēāmur                         | legāmur              | audīāmur               |
| monēāmini                        | legāmini             | audiāmini              |
| monēantur                        | legantur             | audiāntur              |

|                                      |                        |                          |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|
| IMPERFECT— I might be advised | I might be read | I might be heard. |
| monērer                              | legērer                | audīrer                  |
| monerēris or monerēre                | legerēris or legerēre  | audirēris or audirēre    |
| monerētur                            | legerētur              | audirētur                |
| monerēmur                            | legerēmur              | audirēmur                |
| moneremini                           | legeremini             | audiremini               |
| monerentur                           | legerentur             | audirentur.              |

IMPERATIVE MOOD.

|                  |                     |            |
|------------------|---------------------|------------|
|                  | First form.  |            |
| Monēre           | legere              | audire     |
| monemini         | legimini            | audiimini. |
|                  | Second form. |            |
| Sing. 2. monētor | legitor             | auditor    |
| 3. monētor       | legitor             | auditor.   |
| Plur. 2. —       | —                   | —          |
| 3. monentor      | leguntor            | audiuntor. |

INDEFINITE VERB.

|                    |          |          |            |
|--------------------|----------|----------|------------|
| INFINITIVE.        | monēri   | legi     | audiri     |
| VERBAL ADJECTIVES. | monendus | legendus | audiendus. |

§ 322. The different forms of the finite verb are thus derived from the verb-stem :

1. PRESENT INDICATIVE, by substituting o for the characteristic of the verb-stem in the first, and adding o to the stem in the other conjugations.

2. IMPERFECT INDICATIVE, by adding bam to the stem in the first and second, and ēbam in the third and fourth conjugations. The Imperfect Indicative is conjugated like the Present Indicative of the first conjugation.

3. FUTURE, by adding bo to the stem in the first and second, and am in the third and fourth conjugations. The future in bo is conjugated like the Present Indicative of the third, and the future in am like the Present Indicative of the second conjugation.

4. PRESENT SUBJUNCTIVE, by substituting em for the characteristic of the verb-stem in the first, and by adding am to the latter in the other conjugations. The Present Subjunctive of the first conjugation is conjugated like the Present Indicative of the second; and that of the other conjugations like the Present Indicative of the first conjugation.

5. IMPERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE is formed in all conjugations by adding m to the Present Infinitive, and conjugated like the Present Indicative of the second conjugation.

6. The FIRST FORM OF THE IMPERATIVE (second person sing.) is the same as the verb-stem, except that in the third conjugation e is added to it. But the verbs esse, dicere, ducere, facere, ferre form their imperatives by the mere stems (es, dic, duc, fac, fer). The plural is formed by changing the ending tis of the second person Present Indicative into te.

7. The SECOND FORM OF THE IMPERATIVE is made by adding o to the third person singular Present Indicative. The third person singular always is like the second. The second person plural adds te to the singular, and the third person plural is formed by adding o to the third person plural Present Indicative.

8. The PASSIVE VOICE of the finite verb is formed by adding r to the corresponding active form, or substituting r for the final letter m of the active. But the first form of the Imperative is always the same as that of the Infinitive active.

9. The conjugation of the passive tenses is made by substituting the passive endings, ris, tur, etc., or ëris, ëtur, etc. (§ 125), for the corresponding endings of the active.

§ 323. In the INDEFINITE verb, the PARTICIPLE is formed by adding to the verb-stem ns (or ens, in the third and fourth conjugations), and the VERBAL ADJECTIVE by adding ndus (or endus in the third and fourth conjugations).

§ 324. The PARTICIPLE and VERBAL ADJECTIVE (and in a certain sense also the INFINITIVE) are declined like Adjectives. The Participles are declined like Adjectives of common gender, belonging to the LIQUID-MUTE STEMS (Paradigm sapiens, § 208); the Verbal Adjective like Movable Adjectives (Paradigm bonus, § 46).

Rem. 2. The declension-stem of the Present Participle is always the same as the third person plural of the Present Indicative (amant—monent), which, however, in the third and fourth conjugations is changed from unt into ent (legent—audient).

Rem. 3. Participles are grammatically treated like adjectives; they are either ATTRIBUTES or PREDICATES like the latter, and may be the governing word of OBJECTS, which generally are placed in the same case as those of the finite verb or infinitive. Some of them, as amans, florens, appetens, ardens, are even subject to Comparison.

§ 325. The DEPONENT VERB has the same forms as the PAS-SIVE, but with active significations. It has, besides the regular passive forms, also the Participle of the Active (hortans, exhorting), and in the Verbal Adjective assumes the signification of the PASSIVE (hortandus, one that must be exhorted).

§ 326. The I-verbs of the third conjugation (§ 58) insert the vowel i in all forms of the finite and indefinite verb, except in the Infinitive, Imperfect Subjunctive, and Imperative. But the second form of the Imperative takes i in the 3. plur.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS ON THE USE OF THE TENSES AND MOODS, ESPECIALLY IN DEPENDENT CLAUSES.

The following preliminary remarks are intended to guide the student in the translation of the tenses and moods, and to give him a preliminary drill in the handling of dependent sentences. For more exact rules see below.

§ 327. A DEPENDENT SENTENCE OR CLAUSE is a sentence which has the force of one single word or phrase in regard to another (the principal) sentence. A clause may take the place of a Subject, Attribute, or Object of the principal sentence, and always is recognized by either a Relative (adjective or adverb), or a subordinating conjunction (§ 328), introducing it.

EXAMPLES.

1. It can never be necessary that I should tell a falsehood, Numquam necesse esse potest, ut mendacium dicam. Here the sentence, "It can never be necessary," is the PRINCIPAL SENTENCE, in which the following sentence, "that I should tell a falsehood" takes the place of a SUBJECT, as if it had been expressed thus: "My telling a falsehood can never be necessary." The principal sentence has consequently assumed an impersonal form (§ 74, c.) The dependent sentence is recognized as such by the subordinating conjunction that, which introduces it. In Latin we employ here the subjunctive present, according to Rules 329 and 331.

2. My brother advised that Gajus should change his opinion, Frater meus suadēbat, ut Gajus opinionem mutāret.

PRINCIPAL SENTENCE: My brother advised, Frater meus suadēbat.

DEPENDENT SENTENCE: That Gajus should change his opinion, ut Gajus opinionem mutāret. The latter occupies the place of an OBJECT in the former sentence, as if it had been thus expressed: My brother advises a change of opinion by Gajus. In Latin, the imperfect subjunctive is chosen according to Rule 331.

3. That house seems small, because it is very far distant, Domus illa parva vidētur, quia longissime abest.

PRINCIPAL SENTENCE: That house seems small.

DEPENDENT SENTENCE: Because it is very far distant. It takes the place of an OBJECT in the former sentence, as if we had said: This house is small from its distance. Being introduced by the subordinating conjunction because (quia), it is at once recognized as a dependent sentence or clause.

4. The men who talk too much are called loquacious, Homines, qui nimis loquuntur, garruli dicuntur.

PRINCIPAL SENTENCE: The men are called loquacious, Homines garruli dicuntur.

DEPENDENT SENTENCE: Who talk too much, qui nimis loquuntur. It takes the place of an ATTRIBUTE in the former sentence, as if we had said: The men, talking too much. Being introduced by the relative adjective who (qui), it is at once recognized as a clause.

§ 328. We notice at this place the following subordinating conjunctions:

Ut, that, in order that.<sup>1</sup>
quum (cum), when, since.
priusquam, or antequam, before.
dum (sometimes cum), while, till.
postquam, after.

quia, because.
quod, that, or because.
si, if.
nisi, unless.
quamquam, or etsi, although.

§ 329. Ut, in the signification "that," or "in order that," and cum, in the signification "since," always govern the subjunctive, that is: The predicate of the clause, introduced by these conjunctions, must always be placed in the subjunctive, whatever be the mood employed in English. The English conjunction "that" frequently is translated by quod (see § 393). We here regard only the case, when quod stands after verbs of PRAISING, CENSURING, and ACCUSING (laudare, extollere, vituperare, reprehendere, accusare). After these verbs we generally translate quod by for with a verbal noun in ing. But the Latin language always conceives quod in the sense of the conjunction "that."

Gaius Sejum accusat, quod res suas negligat, Gaius accuses Sejus, that he is neglecting (for neglecting his affairs). — Postquam, ut hoc negotium finit, We continued that you finish this business. — Cum deus gentes laboraret, adiuuauit, Since you study diligently, you will be praised.

§ 330. Quum (cum), when, and priusquam (antequam) take either Subjunctive or Indicative, according to the special rules in P. II.<sup>2</sup> Dum, in the meaning while, takes the Present Indicative even if it refers to past time; when it means 'till,' it takes the Subjunctive. Quia, quamquam, etsi are used with the Indicative. When sentences, introduced by quamquam and etsi, precede the principal sentence, the latter is often introduced by the adversative conjunction tamen (§ 121), which is translated by still, yet, or nevertheless.

EXAMPLES: Veni me, priusquam abeat, See me before thou departest. — Cum hostes appropinquabant, nostri montem occupabant, When the enemy approached, our troops were occupying the mountain. — Dum hoc negotium geruntur, Galli conspirabant, While these affairs were transacted, the Gauls were conspiring. — Quamquam me offendas, tamen tibi ignosco, Although you offend me, I still (yet, nevertheless) pardon you.

Rem. 4. The English language frequently employs an object-infinitive when in Latin a clause, introduced by ut, must be used. The beginner will notice that only those verbs which are enumerated, § 80, can be construed with an object-infinitive in Latin. After other verbs the English object-infinitive must generally be changed into a clause introduced by "that," as:

<sup>1</sup> The English conjunction that has many Latin equivalents. The student will, in the next exercises up to p. 316, translate it by ut, and in the case § 329, by quod.

<sup>2</sup> The student will use the Indicative after these conjunctions unless otherwise directed.

We pray you to come to-morrow, Oramus vos, ut cras veniatis (literally, we pray you, that you may come to-morrow). — I induced him to depart, Adducēbam eum, ut abiret (literally, I induced him, that he should depart).

In the same way, priusquam, with a finite verb, must often be translated by before, with a verbal noun in ing, as: Before departing, priusquam discēdas (discēdat, etc.)

§ 331. It is a Latin rule, that whenever the predicate of a clause must be placed in the subjunctive, the tense of this subjunctive is determined by the predicate of the principal sentence. This is called the DEPENDENCE OR CONSECUTION OF TENSES. For the tenses of the Present-System this rule is the following:

If the principal predicate is a present, imperative, or future, the predicate, if a subjunctive, must be in the present tense of the subjunctive. If the principal predicate is a past tense, the dependent predicate, if a subjunctive, must be placed in the imperfect subjunctive.

In both instances it is entirely indifferent, what mood or tense may be used in the English sentence.

EXAMPLES: It is unjust, that I should implore pardon, Injustum est, ut veniam implerem. — Deliberate quickly, that I may tell my opinion, Celeriter delibera, ut sententiam meam dicam. — When Caesar approached, the enemies repulsed our troops, Cum Caesar appropinquaret, hostes copias nostras repellēbant. — We shall abandon the town, since the citizens themselves betray us, Oppidum relinquēmus, cum ipsi cives nos prodant.

Rem. 5. From what we have said § 327, it follows, that dependent clauses, when they take the place of attributes or objects, always must have a governing word. The beginner ought frequently to analyze dependent sentences, with a view to find their governing words.

Rem. 6. If participles or infinitives are the governing words of clauses, we must consider them as the objects of these words, according to the analogy of the objects of adjectives. In this instance the rules of consecution must be so applied, that the tenses of the dependent predicates are not determined by the tenses of the participle or the infinitive, but by that of the principal predicate, as:

Legati veniebant petentes, ut obsides a Cesare remitterentur, The ambassadors came, asking that the hostages should be sent back by Caesar. Here the tense of the predicate remitterentur is not determined by the (present) tense of the participle petentes, but by the tense of the principal predicate veniebant.

§ 332. The subjunctive mood may also be used in principal sentences. Thus it is often used with the force of an imperative, as: Ita vivātis, ut mortem semper expectētis, Live so, that you always expect death.

§ 333. The progressive and emphatic forms of the English simple tenses do not exist in Latin, but are translated in the same way as the common form; thus amo may mean I love, or I am loving, or I do love; amābam may mean I loved, or I was loving, or I did love, as:

What do you do, quid agitis?—To what did Caesar aspire, quid Cæsar appetebat?—The enemies are coming, hostes veniunt.—The walls were falling, muri cadēbant.

EXERCISES.

1. Veni, mi fili, ut tibi hæc verba enarrem.—2. Cæsar Labiēno præscribit (gives orders), ut omnes pontes rescindantur.<sup>1</sup>—3. Dux proficisci vult, priusquam pontes ab hostibus concrementur.—4. Romani impetum facere nolunt, quoniam hostes majores (§§ 305, 3) copias habeant quam ipsi (§ 280).—5. Semper ita (thus) vivas, ut optimos homines imiteris.—6. Dum pueri docentur, adolescentes armis se exercent.—7. Consul rescribit (communicates), ut quintæ legionis milites publice admonerentur.—8. Orāmus, ut has penitus aliquantum lenius.—9. Discedere<sup>2</sup> vobis licet, cum urbs ab ipsis civibus custodiatur.—10. Romani veteres a regibus gubernabantur.—11. Aquitani inferiorem<sup>3</sup> Gallie partem occupabant.—12. Quam Galli hunc impetum facerent, copie nostræ ducis adventum impatienter expectabant.—13. Pompējus, priusquam discederet,<sup>4</sup> Crassum et Brutum, amicos suos, videre cupiebat.—14. Quamquam hiems jam appropinquabat copie tamen quotidianis fere (almost) præliis ab hostibus lacescebantur.—15. Milites nostri hostium telis<sup>5</sup> feriebantur.—16. Sempronius, cum hanc pœnam subiret, a vulgo deridebatur.—17. Nunquam permittam, ut tantum tamque periculōsum iter frustra<sup>6</sup> facias.—18. Hæc res ita (thus) efficietur, ut civibus nihil omnino<sup>7</sup> detrimenti (§ 265) afferatur.—19. Nuntii mei te certo invenient.—20. Tot tantisque laboribus totam civitatem perterrebunt.—21. His rebus amicorum tuorum spes magnopere (§ 313) debilitabitur.—22. Nunc vero, milites, gladiis vestris pugnate!—23. Valēte, cives, urbemque fortissime defendite!—24. Gloria consentiens<sup>8</sup> hominum bonorum laus est.—25. Metus opinio est mali impendentis.<sup>9</sup>—26. Stellarum errantium<sup>10</sup> motus maxime admirabiles sunt.—27. Imbres copiosi terram sitientem reficiunt.—28. Deus, mundum efficere moliens<sup>11</sup> primum lumen<sup>12</sup> ignemque creabat.—29. Dux discedebat præscribens, ut pons rescinderetur.—30. Nihil civitati bellum gerenti, inopportuni<sup>13</sup> evenire potest.—31. Hæc herbe nocentiores sunt illis (§§ 307, 310).—32. Hoc negotium libentissime<sup>14</sup> peragam.

1. Reason itself admonishes us to (that we should) procure<sup>15</sup> friends.—2. Atticus refused honors, although they were open<sup>16</sup> to him.—3. The king allows that you try<sup>17</sup> the fortune of war.—4. It will be expedient to omit these trifles,<sup>18</sup> since it is allowed to thee, to perform (agere) greater things.—5. It will be becoming to perform (peragere) thy business (plur.),

<sup>1</sup> Rescindere, to break off. — <sup>2</sup> Discedere, to depart. — <sup>3</sup> Inferior, lower. — <sup>4</sup> Priusquam, a dat. mi-sile. — <sup>5</sup> Frustra, in vain. — <sup>6</sup> Inopportuni, at all. — <sup>7</sup> Agere, to cause. — <sup>8</sup> Consentiens, agreeing. Translate: unanimous. — <sup>9</sup> Impendere, to impend. — <sup>10</sup> Errantium, wandering. — <sup>11</sup> Moliri, to contemplate. — <sup>12</sup> Lumen, light. — <sup>13</sup> Inopportuni, untimely. — <sup>14</sup> Libenter, to please; libens, literally pleasing. Translate: at my own. — <sup>15</sup> Procure, compare. — <sup>16</sup> To be open, patere. — <sup>17</sup> To try, experiri. — <sup>18</sup> Trifles, nugæ.

before beginning (thou shouldst begin) to attend (studere) to games and pleasures.—6. It was allowed to Themistocles to be idle, but so (ita) that he attended to the most important (gravis) business (plur.) of the republic.—7. The king commands<sup>19</sup> that you should guard the captives with (by) the greatest care.—8. I shall never allow, that the captives be returned (red-dere) to the enemies.—9. We eat in order that we may live.—10. Learn the Latin language, that you may know both how to think and to write.—11. It will be preferable to return, since you are afraid to proceed [any] farther (§ 291, Rem. 10).—12. Gajus will give (dare) to me this dog, because he has more dogs than he wishes (velle).—13. Since thou wishest (cupere) to write letters, I allow thee to remain home (domi).—14. Before attempting (conari) to cross the river, thou wilt wait till (dum with subjunctive) some better kind of boats (linter) be on hand.<sup>20</sup>—15. Thou shalt always behave<sup>21</sup> so (ita), that thou art oftener praised than censured.—16. Since Helvetia is everywhere (undique) closed<sup>22</sup> by mountains, the chiefs<sup>23</sup> of that state are anxious<sup>24</sup> to occupy better and broader lands (ager).—17. The general commands (præscribere) that the inhabitants should make as large (magnus) sowings<sup>25</sup> as possible.—18. Hannibal's bravery and military (bellicus) art terrified the people.—19. The dead bodies<sup>26</sup> of the Egyptians (Aegyptius) were embalmed,<sup>27</sup> in order that they might be preserved as long as possible.—20. Alexander consulted<sup>28</sup> the oracle of Jupiter Ammo, in order to prove his divine origin.—21. The Roman people showed<sup>29</sup> the highest favors<sup>30</sup> to the Athenians, in order to attach (obstringere) this most renowned (clarus) people (gens) to them (§ 238).—22. M. T. Cicero was absolved by the sentence of the whole people.—23. The enemies already seemed to approach<sup>31</sup> nearer (§ 291).—24. It seemed unjust to the Senate, that our property<sup>32</sup> should be plundered (diripere) by the most wicked<sup>33</sup> proconsuls.—25. Decius loved his country so much, that he voluntarily<sup>34</sup> devoted (devovere) himself to death.—26. The rising (oriri) and setting (occidere) sun makes days and nights.—27. Dionysius, fearing the razors,<sup>35</sup> burned (adurere) [his] hair (capillum) by a glowing<sup>36</sup> coal.—28. The general, distrusting<sup>37</sup> himself (transl. to himself) and doubting, did (agere) nothing.—29. This victory was announced to the king, already despairing.—30. The soldiers, renewing<sup>38</sup> the battles, put the enemies to flight (fugare).—31. Death cannot be terrible (terribilis) to men fearing (vereri) God.—32. The soldiers, following the general, caused (edere) a great slaughter.<sup>39</sup>

<sup>19</sup> To command, præscribere.—<sup>20</sup> To be on hand, suppetere.—<sup>21</sup> To behave, se habere.—<sup>22</sup> To close, continere.—<sup>23</sup> Chief, princeps.—<sup>24</sup> To be anxious, studere.—<sup>25</sup> Sowing, sementis.—<sup>26</sup> A dead body, cadaver.—<sup>27</sup> To embalm, condire.—<sup>28</sup> To consult, consulere.—<sup>29</sup> Trans-late: affected (afficere) the Athenians by the highest favors.—<sup>30</sup> Beneficium.—<sup>31</sup> Accedere.—<sup>32</sup> Property, bona, G. bonorum.—<sup>33</sup> Nequam.—<sup>34</sup> Voluntarily, ultro.—<sup>35</sup> A razor, culter tonsorius.—<sup>36</sup> To glow, candere.—<sup>37</sup> To distrust, diffidere.—<sup>38</sup> To renew, redintegrare.—<sup>39</sup> Slaughter, cædes.

CHAPTER SECOND.

IRREGULAR VERBS.

§ 331. The Irregular Verbs are the following 8: esse, posse, velle, nolle, malle, ferre (§ 59), ire, including its compounds quīre and nequīre (§ 54), and fieri (§ 128). They belong to the third conjugation, except ire, which follows the fourth. To these the defectives inquam and ajo must be added.

The irregularity of these verbs is confined to the PRESENT-SYSTEM, the perfect-system being regularly conjugated in all verbs.

Rem. 1. The irregularity of esse and posse consists in the ancient forms sim, eram, ero, and in the pres. ind. Velle, malle, nolle, are irregular in the pres. indicative and in the first person of the pres. subjunctive (velim, etc., possim). The irregularity of ferre is confined to the present indicative and imperative. Ire is irregular on account of its two stems in e and i, and in forming the imperfect and future according to the analogy of the first and second conjugations in bam and bo. The irregularity of fieri consists in its active form in the present-system and in the irregular stem fi, which, although ending in a vowel, is conjugated according to the third conjugation.

§ 335. PARADIGMS OF THE PRESENT-SYSTEM OF THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

| INDICATIVE.               |  | SUBJUNCTIVE.                                 |  |
|---------------------------|--|--|--|
| 1. Esse , to be.   |  | PRESENT.                                     |  |
| Sum , I am         |  | Sim , I may be, should be, I am, etc. |  |
| es , thou art      |  | sis , thou mayest be, etc.            |  |
| est , he is        |  | sit , he may be                       |  |
| sumus , we are     |  | simus , we may be                     |  |
| estis , you are    |  | sitis , you may be                    |  |
| sunt , they are.   |  | sint , they may be.                   |  |
| IMPERFECT.                |  | FUTURE.                                      |  |
| Ēram , I was       |  | Wanted.                               |  |
| ēras , thou wast   |  |  |  |
| erat , he was      |  |  |  |
| erāmus , we were   |  |  |  |
| erātis , you were  |  |  |  |
| erant , they were. |  |  |  |

IMPERATIVE.

| First form.                    | Second form.                            |
|--------------------------------|---|
| Sing. 2. Es,* be (thou) | Sing. 2. esto, be, thou shalt be |
| 3. —                    | 3. esto, he shall be.            |
| Plur. 2. este, be (you) | Plur. 2. estōte, you shall be    |
| 3. —                    | 3. sunt, they shall be.          |

INDEFINITE VERB.

PRESENT INDEFINITE. Esse, to be.
 FUTURE INFINITIVE. Fore, to be about to be.
 PARTICIPLE and VERBAL ADJECTIVE in du. Wanting.
 § For the parts of esse formed from the perfect-stem fu see p. 247.

2. Possum, I can.

INDICATIVE.

Possum, I can, I may potes, thou canst or mayest potest, he can or may possumus, we can or may potestis, you can or may possunt, they can or may.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Possim, I may be able, I may possis, thou mayest be able, thou mayest possit, he may be able, etc.
possimus, we may be able, etc.
possitis, you may be able, etc.
possint, they may be able, etc.

IMPERFECT.

Poteram, I could, was able poterās, thou couldst poterat, he could poterāmus, we could poterātis, you could poterant, they could.

Possem, I could, might, might be able.
posses, thou couldst, etc.
posset, he could, etc.
possemus, we could, etc.
possētis, you could, etc.
possent, they could, etc.

FUTURE.

Potēro, I shall be able, it will be possible to, etc.
poteris, thou wilt be able, it will be possible to, etc.
poterit, he will be able, etc.
poterimus, we shall be able, etc.
poteritis, you will be able, etc.
poterant, they will be able, etc.

Wanting.

IMPERATIVE.

Wanting.

INDEFINITE VERB.

INFINITIVE. Posse, to be able.
 PARTICIPLE. Potens, powerful.
 VERBAL ADJ. Wanting.

3. Velle, to be willing. 4. Nolle, to be unwilling. 5. Malle, to wish rather

| INDICATIVE.    |                   |                  | SUBJUNCTIVE.   |                |                |
|----------------|-------------------|------------------|----------------|----------------|----------------|
| PRESENT.       |                   |                  | PRESENT.       |                |                |
| Volo    | nolo       | malo      | velim   | nolim   | malim   |
| vis     | non vis    | mavis     | velis   | nolis   | malis   |
| vult    | non vult   | ma vult   | velit   | nolit   | malit   |
| volumus | nolumus    | malumus   | velimus | nolumus | malimus |
| vultis  | non vultis | ma vultis | velitis | nolitis | malitis |
| volunt  | nolunt     | malunt    | velint  | nolint  | malint. |

* The first form of the imperative, "es," is rarely used. Instead of "es," it is more usual to employ the second form "esto" in the signification "be," as: Contentus esto, be satisfied.

IMPERFECT.

|           |           |           |          |          |          |
|-----------|-----------|-----------|----------|----------|----------|
| volēbam   | nolēbam   | malēbam   | vellem   | nollem   | mallem   |
| volēbas   | nolēbas   | malēbas   | velles   | nolles   | malles   |
| volēbat   | nolēbat   | malēbat   | vellet   | nollet   | mallet   |
| volēbāmus | nolēbāmus | malēbāmus | vellēmus | nollēmus | mallēmus |
| volēbātis | nolēbātis | malēbātis | vellētis | nollētis | mallētis |
| volēbant  | nolēbant  | malēbant  | vellent  | nollent  | mallent. |

FUTURE.

|         |         |         |
|---------|---------|---------|
| volam   | nolam   | malam   |
| voles   | noles   | males   |
| volet   | nolet   | malet   |
| volēmus | nolēmus | malēmus |
| volētis | nolētis | malētis |
| volent  | nolent  | malent. |

Wanting.

IMPERATIVE.

Noli, do not (thou).
Nolite, do not (you).

INDEFINITE VERB.

INFINITIVE. Velle, nolle, malle.

PARTICIPLE. Volens, nolens.

6. Ferre, to carry, to bear.

Active.

INDICATIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Fero, fers, fert.
Plur. ferimus, fertis, ferunt.

Sing. Feror, ferris, fertur.
Plur. ferimur, ferimini, feruntur.

IMPERFECT.

Sing. Ferēbam, ferēbas, ferēbat.
Plur. ferēbāmus, ferēbātis, ferēbant.

Sing. Ferēbar, ferēbāris, ferēbātur.
Plur. ferēbāmur, ferēbamini, ferēbantur.

FUTURE.

Sing. Feram, feres, feret.
Plur. ferēmus, ferētis, ferent.

Sing. Ferar, ferēris, ferētur.
Plur. ferēmur, feremini, ferentur.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Feram, feras, ferat.
Plur. ferāmus, ferātis, ferant.

Sing. Ferar, ferāris, ferātur.
Plur. ferāmur, feramini, ferantur.

IMPERFECT.

Sing. Ferrem, ferres, ferret.
Plur. ferrēmus, ferrētis, ferrent.

Sing. Ferrer, ferrēris, ferrētur.
Plur. ferrēmur, ferremini, ferrentur.

IMPERATIVE.

I. Fer, ferte.
II. ferto, ferto, fertōte, ferunto.

I. Ferre, ferimini.
II. fertor, fertor, feruntor.

INDEFINITE VERB.

INFINITIVE. Ferre. PARTICIPLE. Ferens. INFINITIVE. Ferri. VERBAL ADJ. Ferendus.

INDICATIVE.

Eo, is, it, Imus, Itis, Eunt.

Ibam, Ibas, Ibat
ibāmus, ibātis, Ibant.

Ibo, Ibis, Ibit
ibimus, ibitis, Ibunt.

7. Ire, to go.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Eam, eas, Eat, Eāmus, Eātis, Eant.

IMPERFECT.

Irem, Ires, Iret
irēmus, irētis, Irent

FUTURE.

Wanting.

IMPERATIVE.

I. I, Ite,
II. Ito, Ito, itōte, eunto.

INDEFINITE VERB

INFINITIVE. Ire. PARTICIPLE. Iens. GEN. euntis, etc. VERBAL ADJ. eundus.

8. Queo, I can. 9. Nequeo, I cannot.

INDICATIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Queo, quis, quit.
Plur. quimus, quitis, queunt.

Sing. Nequeo, nequis, nequit.
Plur. nequimus, nequitis, nequeunt.

IMPERFECT.

Sing. Quibam, —, quibat.
Plur. —, —, quibant.

Sing. nequibam, —, nequibat.
Plur. —, —, nequibant.

FUTURE.

Sing. Quibo, —, —
Plur. —, —, quibunt.

Sing. —, —, —
Plur. —, —, nequibunt.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Queam, queas, queat.
Plur. queāmus, queātis, queant.

Sing. Nequeam, nequeas, nequeat.
Plur. nequeāmus, nequeātis, nequeant.

IMPERFECT.

Sing. Quirem, —, quiret.
Plur. —, —, quirent.

Sing. Nequirem, —, nequiret.
Plur. nequirēmus, —, nequirent.

INDEFINITE VERB.

INFINITIVE. Quire, PARTICIPLE. quiens, G. queuntis

nequire. nequiens, G. nequeuntis.

10. Fieri, to be done, to become.

INDICATIVE.

Sing. Fio, fis, fit.
Plur. simus, sitis, fiunt.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Fiam, fias, fiat.
Plur. fiāmus, fiātis, fiant.

IMPERFECT.

Sing. Fiēbam, fiēbas, fiēbat.
Plur. fiēbāmus, fiēbātis, fiēbant.

Sing. Fierem, fieres, fieret.
Plur. fierēmus, fierētis, fierent.

FUTURE.

Sing. Fiam, fies, fiet.
Plur. fiēmus, fiētis, fient.

Wanting.

Imperative, Participle (present), and Verbal Adjective in dus, wanting.

11. Ajo, I say.

INDICATIVE.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PRESENT.

Sing. Ajo, ais, ait.
Plur. —, —, ajunt.

Sing. —, ajas, ajat.
Plur. —, —, ajant.

IMPERFECT.*

Sing. Ajēbam, ajēbas, ajēbat.
Plur. ajēbāmus, ajēbātis, ajēbant.

Wanting.

12. Inquam, I say.

PRESENT. Inquam, inquis, inquit.
inquimus, inquitis, inquit.

IMPERF. (Inquiēbam) inquiēbas (inquiēbat), — [rare].**

FUTURE. Inquies, inquiet.

IMPERAT. Inque, inquitō.

REMARKS ON THE IRREGULAR VERBS.

Rem. 1. The compounds of esse (abesse, adesse, etc.) are conjugated like esse. Beginners ought to be careful in pronouncing these compounds according to the marked quantity of the stem-verb (ad'eram, ab'erit, ad'si'mus, etc.) The verb prodesse drops the d in all forms of esse which begin with a consonant, and keeps the d in all forms beginning with a vowel (prosim, pro'deram, prodessem, pro'dero).

2. The translation of the verb posse is often difficult. Generally it ought to be rendered by can or may; by "to be able" only when it is used of persons, and we speak of their ability. The future of posse, when its object-infinitive is a passive, must be translated by "it is possible to," rendering the Latin passive infinitive by an English active infinitive, and changing the Latin subject into the English object, as: Hæc negotia celeriter confici poterunt, It will be possible to finish these affairs quickly.

3. Both subjunctives of velle, nolle, mallo are frequently translated by "I should wish or like," "I should not like," "I should rather wish or like," or by "I wish," but only in the first person. The English clause, following these expressions, whether introduced by "that" or not, is translated by the mere subjunctive in Latin, without an introductory "ut," as:

I should wish you would return as soon as possible, velim (vellem) quam primum redeātis (redirētis). I should not like that you would stay so long, nolim tandiu maneātis.

* The other forms of ajo are either wanting or extremely rare. In the perfect system, ait (he said) is the only form in use.—** In the perfect system of inquam only inquisti and inquit (he said) occur. Inquam also occurs in the meaning of a perfect.

The Imperfects Subjunctive vellem, nollem, mallem, must be used, if the action wished for is conceived to be impossible, as: I should wish Cæsar was alive, vellem Cæsar viveret.

The second and third persons of velle, nolle, mallo are used to give to the predicate a color of modesty, and are translated by "would," as: Ut finire velis, that you would finish.

4. The compounds of ire, as redire, perire, etc., are conjugated like ire (redibam, peribam, abibo, interibo).

5. The passive of ire can be used in transitive compounds only, as transcor, I am crossed (imperf. transibar, fut. transibor, etc.) But even the simple verb ire, in the third person singular of all tenses, forms an impersonal passive (see P. II., § 460), as: itur, eatur, ibatur, iratur, ibitur.

6. The present participle of ire retains its regular declension-stem eunt (§ 324, R. 2) in all cases except nominative singular, while the latter case assumes the stem i, changing u into e, like the other verbs of the fourth conjugation.

EXERCISES.

1. Cum beāte vivere jucundissimum sit, plerique homines vitam beātam assequi summopere (§ 313, 2) student.—2. Deum orāmus, ut propitius (gracious) nobis sit.—3. C. Marius multis civibus funestus erat.—4. Trajānus ita regēbat rempublicam, ut quamplurimis civibus prodesset.—5. Quum hostes jam adsint, pugnare necesse erit.—6. Vires tibi deerunt, si tam ardue (hard) laborāre pergis.—7. Bono animo<sup>1</sup> esto, mi fili, ut omnia hæc impedimenta superāre possis.—8. Hominis corpus rectum<sup>2</sup> est, ut cælum contuēri possit.—9. Milites nostri ægre<sup>3</sup> castra tenēre poterant, quum undique (everywhere) ab hostibus premerentur.<sup>4</sup>—10. Hostium fuga tanta erat, ut paucissimi Rhenum transire possent.—11. Hunc librum, si vis, facillime perlegere<sup>5</sup> poteris.—12. Hoc oppidum a civibus solis defendi poterit.—13. Gaudēbo, si totum hoc negotium quamprimum perficere velis.—14. Cum milites nostri oppidum ingredi vellent, multi cives concurrēbant,<sup>6</sup> militibusque venientibus se objiciēbant.<sup>7</sup>—15. Alexander, Macedonum rex, totum orbem terrarum sibi subicere volebat.—16. Copiæ nostræ mori quam vinci malebant.—17. Tandiu manēbis, quamdiu (§ 304, Rem. 16) voles.—18. Cum milites nostri montem ascenderent, exploratōres<sup>8</sup> jam inde (thence) redibant.—19. Cura<sup>9</sup> ut exercitus quam primum abeat.—20. Hæc civitas cito peribit.—21. Domum (home) ito, mi fili.—22. Milites fluvium transeunto.—23. Fluvius tam altus est, ut vado transiri nequeat.—24. Petimus<sup>10</sup> ut omnis has res statim nobis referātis.—25. His rebus minus commodi nobis quam hostibus afferebātur.<sup>11</sup>—26. Aqua tam rara erat, et vinum tam frequens,<sup>12</sup> ut milites aquam vino præferrent.—27. Tabellarius<sup>13</sup> meus quotidie tibi litteras afferet (to bring).—28. Affer nobis statuam illam, mi amice.—29. Hoc opus velim melius et citius fiat.—30. His rebus Germanōrum agri meliōres fecundioresque fiēbant.

1. Since this journey (iter) is so (tam) long that it cannot be made (feri) on foot<sup>14</sup>, it will be necessary to ride in a carriage (curru vehi).—2. We wish (optāre) exceedingly (§ 313, 2), that this exercise (exercitatio) may be very (§ 313, 2) useful (prodesse) for (to) thee.—3. Since you now are more ready than before, it will be easy to perform the whole business.—4. Be diligent, my son, in order that thou mayest (posse) do (præstare) all duties.—5. The river was 3000 paces farther (§ 311) distant than the camp of the enemies.—6. It was very (§ 314) difficult to do all these things at once (§ 69).—7. Although we were very (§ 314) busy,<sup>1</sup> we still could hear the lectures<sup>2</sup> of the Stoic (Stoicus) Posidonius.—8. When Sempronius was present (adesse), the other ambassadors were silent.—9. Alexander was so furious, that it was dangerous to approach (adire) him.—10. Thou wilt be present at (dative) these lectures as long as it will be useful (prodesse) to thee to be present.—11. All these undertakings will be doubtful, while this man will govern our republic.—12. The astrologers (astrologus) observed the motions (motus) of the stars, that they might (posse) learn (cognoscere) the will (nutus) of the gods.—13. Yesterday we could perceive the star Mercury (§ 112, D) with (transl. by) the naked eye.—14. The Roman soldiers could endure the hardships of the war better than the Gauls.—15. Our citizens will be able to endure the war longer than yours (§ 307, 2).—16. It will be possible to do (facere) all these works at the same time.—17. It will be possible to circumnavigate (circumnavigare) the whole island in (transl. by) three days.—18. I should wish you would finish this work sooner.<sup>3</sup>—19. I should wish that Gajus was present.—20. I wish it were winter.—21. Gajus is so rich, that he wishes to have nothing more (amplius).—22. I intended (velle) to postpone this journey a little longer, so that my friend might (posse) accompany<sup>4</sup> me.—23. The soldiers were so tired, that they refused (nolle) to proceed (any) farther (§ 291, R. 10).—24. When we intended to enter the gate, a furious multitude surrounded us.—25. Live as quietly as thou wilt wish (velle).—26. I should not wish to indorse (confirmare) this opinion.—27. I should prefer (malles) to see thy master.—28. Since our bodies perish (interire), they cannot be immortal.—29. I advise that you return as quickly as possible.—30. Spring was already approaching (appetere), when (cum with indicative) the army crossed the mountains.—31. I shall pass over<sup>5</sup> this whole business, since it cannot be pleasant to learn (cognoscere) so disgraceful things.—32. The slaughter (caedes) was so great, that more than (§ 312) 3000 enemies perished.—33. I should wish you would bring this book to me.—34. The soldiers patiently endured (perferre) hunger and thirst.—35. The confusion (trepidatio) was so great, that golden vases (vasa), statues and valuable pictures were carried away<sup>6</sup> by the soldiers.—36. Carry away this picture, O friend.—37. King Euristheus gave orders<sup>7</sup> to Hercules to (that he should) bring to him the arms of the queen of the Amazons.<sup>8</sup>—38. Parents take pains,<sup>9</sup> that their children daily become better.—39. It remains (restat) that this work be done (facere) quickly and accurately.—40. It formerly (§ 70) happened<sup>10</sup> often that whole cities were destroyed by [their] conquerors.<sup>11</sup> 41. Tarquinius reigned (regnare) so despotically,<sup>12</sup> that he became hateful (invidius) to his citizens.

<sup>1</sup> Bono animo esse, to be of good cheer, to be cheerful.—<sup>2</sup> Rectus, erect.—<sup>3</sup> Egere, with difficulty.—<sup>4</sup> Premere, to press.—<sup>5</sup> Perlegere, to peruse.—<sup>6</sup> Concurrere, to run together.—<sup>7</sup> Se objicere (with dative), to oppose somebody.—<sup>8</sup> Explorator, a scout.—<sup>9</sup> Curare, to take care.—<sup>10</sup> Petere, to ask.—<sup>11</sup> Afferre, to cause.—<sup>12</sup> Frequens, abundant.—<sup>13</sup> Tabellarius, letter-carrier.—<sup>14</sup> On foot, translate: by the feet.

<sup>1</sup> Busy, occupatus.—<sup>2</sup> Lecture, schola.—<sup>3</sup> Soon, matüre.—<sup>4</sup> Comitari.—<sup>5</sup> To pass over, præterire.—<sup>6</sup> To carry away, auferre.—<sup>7</sup> To give orders, imperare.—<sup>8</sup> The Amazons, Amazonæ.—<sup>9</sup> To take pains, studere.—<sup>10</sup> It happens, fit.—<sup>11</sup> Victor.—<sup>12</sup> Despotical, superbus.

CHAPTER THIRD.

THE PERFECT-SYSTEM.

§ 336. All forms of the PERFECT-SYSTEM are derived from two principal forms: 1) from the first person singular indicative of the active of the PERFECT TENSE; 2) from the FIRST SUPINE. Both of these are again derived from the PERFECT-STEM.

Rem. 1. In order to find the two principal forms, we must 1) know the PERFECT-STEM, i. e., the verb-stem as it appears in the perfect system. Generally both systems have the same stem. Amāre, for inst., has the stem amā for both, its present and perfect system. But often the two stems differ. Thus cubāre has the vowel-stem cubā in the present system, but its perfect stem is consonantic (cub; perf. cubui). Petere has the consonant stem pet in the present system, and the vowel-stem peti in the perfect-system (perf. petivi).—2) We must know whether or not a TENSE-SIGN is to be added to the perfect-stem, and, if so, which tense-sign must be used (whether v, as in amāvi; or u, as in monui; or s, as in carpsi).

§ 337. Verbs of the first and fourth conjugations form their first person indic. perf. of the active voice by adding vi, and their supines by adding tum to the verb-stem, as :

|        |              |               |
|--------|--------------|---------------|
| Amāre  | PERF. amāvi  | SUP. amātum   |
| Audire | PERF. audivi | SUP. auditum. |

Verbs of the second conjugation change their infinitive termination ere for the perfect into ui, and for the supine into itum, as :

|        |             |               |
|--------|-------------|---------------|
| Monere | PERF. monui | SUP. monitum. |
|--------|-------------|---------------|

Rem. 2. For the numerous exceptions to this rule, and for finding the two principal forms of the third conjugation, see Appendix VI., p. 359 foll. The student should commit to memory those verbs of the 1st, 2d, and 4th conjugations which deviate from the rule (p. 361, No. 6). For these, and for all the verbs of the third conjugation, the list of Perfects and Supines, p. 375 foll., must be consulted.

§ 338. When the two principal forms (perfect and supine) are known, the Perfect-System of any given verb (including the irregular verbs) may be formed according to the following

PARADIGM OF THE PERFECT-SYSTEM OF Amāre.

| Active.   | INDICATIVE. | Passive.  |
|---|-------------|---|
|   | PERFECT.    |   |
| Amāvi. I loved or have loved                    |             | Amātus sum. I was loved or have been loved      |
| amāvistī, thou lovedst or hast loved            |             | amātus es, thou wast loved or hast been loved   |
| amāvit, he loved or has loved                   |             | amātus est, he was loved or has been loved      |
| amāvimus, we loved or have loved                |             | amāti sumus, we were loved or have been loved   |
| amāvistis, you loved or have loved              |             | amāti estis, you were loved or have been loved  |
| amāvērunt or amāvēre, they loved or have loved. |             | amāti sunt, they were loved or have been loved. |

Active.

Amavēram, I had loved amaveras, thou hadst loved amaveras, he had loved amaverāmus, we had loved amaverātis, you had loved amaverant, they had loved.

Amavēro, I shall have loved amaveris, thou wilt have loved amaverit, he will have loved amaverimus, we shall have loved amaveritis, you will have loved amaverint, they will have loved.

PLUPERFECT.

Amātus eram, I had been loved amātus eras, thou hadst been loved amātus erat, he had been loved amāti erāmus, we had been loved amāti erātis, you had been loved amāti erant, they had been loved.

FUTURE PERFECT.

Amātus ero, I shall have been loved amātus eris, thou wilt have been loved amātus erit, he will have been loved amāti erimus, we shall have been loved amāti eritis, you will have been loved amati erunt, they will have been loved.

SUBJUNCTIVE.

PERFECT.

Amaverim, I loved, have loved, or may have loved amaveris, thou lovedst, etc.

amaverit, he loved, etc.
 amaverimus, we loved, etc.
 amaveritis, you loved, etc.
 amaverint, they loved, etc.

Amātus sim, I was loved, have been loved, may have been, should have been loved amātus sis, thou wast loved, or hast been loved, etc.

amātus sit, he was loved, etc.
 amāti simus, we were loved, etc.
 amāti sitis, you were loved, etc.
 amāti sint, they were loved, etc.

PLUPERFECT.

Amavissem, I had loved, would have loved, might have loved amavisses, thou hadst loved, etc.
 amavisset, he had loved, etc.
 amavissēmus, we had loved, etc.
 amavissētis, you had loved, etc.
 amavissent, they had loved, etc.

Amātus essem, I had been, might have been, or would have been loved amātus esses, thou hadst been loved, etc.
 amātus esset, he had been loved, etc.
 amāti essemus, we had been loved, etc.
 amāti essētis, you had been loved, etc.
 amāti essent, they had been loved, etc.

INDEFINITE VERB.

PERFECT INFINITIVE ACTIVE—Amavisse, to have loved
 PERFECT INFINITIVE PASSIVE—amātum esse, to have been loved
 PERFECT (PASSIVE) PARTICIPLE—amātus, loved or having been loved FORMER SUPINE—amātum, (in order) to love
 LATTER SUPINE—amātu, to be loved
 VERBAL ADJECTIVE—amatūrus, <sup>1</sup> about to love.

§ 339. In order to form according to the preceding paradigm the perfect-system of any given verb, whose two principal forms (perfect and supine) are known, we proceed thus:

1) From the given Perfect remove final i and substitute what remains, for the syllables amāv in the Paradigm. Thus the whole active voice may be formed. 2) From the given Supine remove final um, substituting what remains, for amāt in the Paradigm. Thus the whole passive voice may be formed.

<sup>1</sup> The Verbal Adjective in ūrus belongs by its meaning to the Present-System; by its derivation to the Perfect-System.

EXAMPLES. I. For the second, third, and fourth conjugations. 1. Second Conjugation. Perf. monūi, Sup. monitum (§ 337). Substitute monū for amāc, and monit for amāt in the paradigm. Perf. ind. monui, monuisti, monuit etc.—Plup. monueram.—Fut. perf. monuero.—Perf. subj. monuerim.—Plup. subj. monuissem.—Perf. pass. monitus sum (subj. sim).—Plup. pass. monitus eram (subj. essem).—Verb. adj. monitūrus.—2. Third Conjugation (a) Scribere. Perf. scripsi, Sup. scriptum (p. 384). Substitute scrips for amāc, and script for amāt. Perf. ind. scripsi, scripsisti, scripsit.—Plup. scripseram.—Perf. pass. scriptus sum.—Verb. adj. scriptūrus.—(b) Ledere. Perf. lasi, Sup. laxum (p. 380). Substitute lax both for amāv and amāt. Perf. lasi, laxisti, laxit etc.—Plup. laxeram etc.—Perf. pass. laxus sum. Verb. adj. laxūrus.—3. Fourth Conjugation Audire; Perf. audiri, Sup. auditum (§ 337). Substitute audir for amāv, and audit for amāt. Perf. Audiri, audivisti, audirit etc.—Perf. pass. auditus sum.—Verb. adj. auditūrus.

II. Irregular Conjugation, being regular in the perfect system. —1) Esse. Perf. fui (p. 377). Substitute fu for amāv. Perf. : Fui, fuisti, fuit etc. Plup. *fuera*m.—Perf. subj. *fuero*m. Plup. subj. fuissem. Since there is no supine (p. 377), a passive voice of esse cannot be formed. For the irregular verb. adj. futūrus see p. 337. —2) Potere. Perf. potui, without sup. (p. 383). Substitute potu for amāv. Perf. Potui, potuisti, potuit etc. Plup. potueram etc.—3) So the perf. system of velle, nolle, mulle (perf. volui etc., see the list) is regularly conjugated (volui, voluisti etc.; volueram etc.).—4) Ferre. Perf. tuli, Sup. lātum (p. 378). Substitute tul for amāv, and lāt for amāt. Perf. Tuli, tulisti, tulit etc.—Plup. tuleram etc.—Perf. pass. lātus sum.—Verb. adj. lātūrus.—5) Ire. Perf. ivi, Sup. itum (p. 379). Substitute iv for amāv, and it for amāt. Perf. Ivi, ivisti, ivit etc. Plup. iveram etc. Perf. pass. itus sum (itum est, impersonally).—Verb. adj. itūrus.—6) Fieri. Perf. factus sum (p. 378). Substitute fact for amāt in the pass. Perf. Factus sum, factus es, factus est etc.; I became, was made etc.—Plup. factus eram etc.—Verb. adj. factūrus (belonging to the active meaning 'to make').

§ 340. The Perfect-System has two moods, INDICATIVE and SUBJUNCTIVE. The Indicative has three tenses, PERFECT, PLUPERFECT, and FUTURE PERFECT, closely corresponding in their relations to the three tenses of the Present-System. The Subjunctive has two tenses, PERFECT and PLUPERFECT. The indefinite verb consists of 1) one INFINITIVE for each voice; 2) one PARTICIPLE for the passive voice; 3) one VERBAL ADJECTIVE for the active voice; 4) two SUPINES, the former for the active, the latter for the passive voice.

§ 341. The tenses and moods of the active voice are formed by the endings i, erim, eram, issem, and ero, which are applied to the Perfect-stem, increased by the tense sign (v, u, or s), if there is any, or, in other words, substituted for the ending i of the given Perfect.

The tenses and moods of the Passive voice are compound forms, consisting of the PERFECT PARTICIPLE in connection with the PRESENT-SYSTEM of the copula esse, which in this connection is called an auxiliary verb.

These compound tenses of the Passive voice are grammatically treated in the same way as predicative adjectives with the copula (§§ 64, 78, 81, 102). According to § 78, Rem. 6, we must quote the PERFECT INFINITIVE PASSIVE by placing the participle in the accusative masculine singular (amatum esse).

§ 312. The following verbs are called PERFECT or PRETERITE verbs, because they lack the Present-System: Cœpisse, meminisse, novisse, odisse. They are regularly conjugated (cœpi, cœpisti, etc.; cœperim, etc.; memini, meminerim, etc.)

In regard to their use, the following rules must be noticed:

1. Cœpi has not only the form, but also the signification of a Perfect (I began or have begun; or I commenced, have commenced). Cœpi has the same construction as the verb incipere in the Present-System (§ 80, c.) The latter verb in classical language forms no Perfect-System, which is borrowed from the verb cœpisse, as: I began to write, scribere cœpi.

The verb cœpi has also a complete Passive voice (cæptus sum, cæptus eram, etc.), which, however, has exactly the same meaning as the Active, and is only used when the Object-Infinitive, dependent on it, is a Passive, as: A war began to be waged, Bellum geri cæptum est.

2. Meminisse, to remember; novisse, to know; odisse, to hate, are Perfects merely in form, but *Present*s in meaning. The Imperfects of these verbs (I remembered, I knew, I hated) are expressed by the Pluperfects of the Latin verbs (memineram, noveram, oderam), and the Futures (I shall remember, shall know, shall hate) by the Future Perfects of the Latin verbs (meminero, novero, odero). Memini forms an exceptional Imperative, Memento (plur. mementote), remember!

3. The verb memini, if it has a noun as an object, generally takes it in the genitive, but sometimes in the accusative (I remember the battle, Pugnae memini). It also takes an OBJECT-INFINITIVE like the verbs mentioned § 80; but this object-infinitive, which in English is always a Perfect, in Latin is always a Present-Infinitive, as: I remember to have heard, Audire (not audisse) memini.

4. The verb novisse is not construed with an object-infinitive, but with the accusative of a substantive, and thereby is distinguished from scire, to know.

Rem. 4. To these verbs may be added the verb consuerisse, to be accustomed (properly a perfect of the verb consuescere, to become accustomed), whose construction and meaning is like that of solere (§ 80, Rem. 3), as: Di immortales talis homines punire consueverunt, The immortal gods are in the habit of punishing such men. Thus: PLUPERF., consueveram, I was accustomed; FUT. PERF., consuevero, I shall be accustomed.

§ 313. The DEPONENT VERBS, since they have no active voice, have only the compound tenses of the passive voice, although with active meanings, in the Perfect-System. Hence they have only one principal form, which, according to the analogy of the other verbs, should be the supine. But the grammarians designate as such the Perfect. Thus: Hortari, hortatus sum; experiri, expertus sum.

The indefinite verb of the Deponents in the Perfect-System consists of: 1) PERFECT INFINITIVE (hortatum esse); 2) PERFECT PARTICIPLE (hortatus, having exhorted); 3) Both SUPINES (hortatum, in order to exhort; hortatu, to be exhorted); 4) The VERBAL ADJECTIVE (hortaturus, about to exhort).

§ 314. The following neuter verbs have only deponent forms in the Perfect-System; that is, passive forms with active significations:

|             |              |                      |
|-------------|--------------|----------------------|
| 1) audēre,  | ausus sum,   | to dare,             |
| 2) gaudēre, | gavisus sum, | to be glad, rejoice, |
| 3) solēre,  | solitus sum, | to be in the habit,  |
| 4) fidēre,  | fīsus sum,   | to trust,            |

with the compounds of the latter (confidere, confīsus).

These verbs are called SEMI-DEPONENTS. On the contrary, the verb reverti, to return, is a DEPONENT in the Present and an ACTIVE in the Perfect-System: revertor, PERF. reverti (not reversus sum).

§ 315. In verbs which form their Perfect with the termination vi contractions frequently take place, when this termination is followed by s or r. They consist in omitting the syllables vi or ve, as:

Amavisti—amasti; amavisse—amasse. Complevisti—complesti; complevisse—complesse. Audivisti—audisti; audivisse—audisse. Novisti—nosti; novisse—nosse. Amaverim—amārim; amaverunt—amārant. Consueverint—consuērint; consueverunt—consuērunt. Noverim—norim; novērunt—norunt.

But when the syllable ve is preceded by i (as in the 4th conjugation) only the letter v is elided, as:

audiverim—audierim; audiverunt—audiērunt.

Sometimes in verbs with the characteristic i the letter v is also omitted when vi is not followed by s or r. This is regularly the case in the compounds of ire, as:

abii—(not abivi);

rediit—(not rediivit).

Rem. 5. The secondary form of the 3. pers. plur. perfect indicative in ēre can never be contracted. Thus we cannot say amāre instead of amavere.

SYNTACTICAL REMARKS ON THE USE OF THE PERFECT-SYSTEM.

§ 316. The Perfect Indicative corresponds to both, the Past tense, and Present-perfect in English (amāvi = I have loved, and I loved). But often the Engl. Past tense corresponds to the Latin IMPERFECT, which denotes past actions conceived as not finished (incomplete) at the time spoken of.

Rem. 6. This principle on the use of the Latin Imperfect indicative is applied to a number of particular usages, constituting a very complicated theory (P. II, p. 305 foll.). The most important instances in which the Imperfect occurs are the following: THE IMPERFECT OF STATE, denoting a state lasting at the time spoken of, as: The boundaries of the Gauls extended then to the Rhine, Gallorum fines tum ad Rhenum usque patēbant (not patuērunt).—2) THE IMPERFECT OF CONTINUED ACTION, to denote an action in progress at the time spoken of: When Hannibal arrived, we were besieging Capua, Quum Hannibal advēnit, Capuam obsidebāmus (not obsedimus).—3) IMPERFECT OF REPEATED ACTION, to denote actions indefinitely repeated: The enemy daily harassed our troops, Hostes quotidie copias nostras laceſcebant.—4) IMPERFECT OF HABIT, to denote customary actions: The Chaldeans observed (i. e. used to observe) the stars with great zeal, Chaldaei sidera magno studio observābant.—Unless the imperfect is required for one of these reasons, the student should (in this first Part) render the Engl. Past tense, by the Latin Perfect.

§ 317. The FUTURE-PERFECT is used either with the force of an English Fut. perf., or (more frequently) with the force of an Engl. Future-present, in dependent sentences (introduced by si, nisi, quum, etc., or by relatives), representing a future act as completed before the happening of another future action.

My son will come, if thou wilt give him permission, Filius meus veniet, si veniam ei dederis. Here the future perf. dederis is used instead of the future dabis, since the permission must be given before he comes.

I shall write when Gajus comes (will have come), Scribam, cum Gajus venerit (not veniet).

§ 318. The Latin Pluperf. Indicative generally corresponds to the English Pluperfect. But sometimes we translate the English Pluperfect by a Latin Perfect. This is especially the case in clauses introduced by the conjunction after, which is translated by postquam or posteaquam. This conjunction stands in Latin with a PERFECT, when the action of the Principal Predicate is a consequence of that of the Dependent Predicate, as: After the soldiers had arrived, Cæsar gave orders to make the attack, Postquam milites advenērunt (not advenerant), Cæsar impetum facere jussit.

But when the actions are so separated that the one is not a consequence of the other, the conjunction postquam must be construed with the Pluperfect, as: Scipio went to Asia after he had destroyed Numantia, Scipio postquam Numantiam deleverat, in Asiam profectus est.

Rem. 7. In the former example the two actions (the arrival of the soldiers and the order to attack) stand in an evident relation to each other, while in the latter they are independent of each other, and the one would probably have happened without the other. However, the use of tense after postquam depends on several other conditions and must be studied in detail (P. II, p. 661, foll.). For the Imperfect after postquam see P. II, p. 662 foll.

§ 319. The rules on the CONSECUTION OF TENSES (§ 331) refer also to the tenses of the Perfect-System, and, in application to both systems, may be thus expressed: If the Principal Predicate is a present or future, the Dependent Predicate, if in the subjunctive, is in the Present or Perfect; if the Principal Predicate is one of the past tenses (imperfect, perfect, or pluperfect), the Dependent Predicate, if in the subjunctive, must be an Imperfect or Pluperfect.

The PRESENT subjunctive in the former, and the IMPERFECT subjunctive in the latter case must be employed, if the action of the dependent predicate is conceived to happen at the same time with or after that of the principal predicate.

But the PERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE in the former, and the PLUPERFECT subjunctive in the latter case must be used, if on the contrary the action of the dependent predicate is conceived as happening before that of the principal predicate.

Examples: I. Time of the principal sentence anterior to that of the dependent sentence:

I command that he should come, Impero ut veniat.

I commanded that he should come, Imperāvi ut venīret.

II. Time of both sentences simultaneous:

I come since you wish it, Venio, cum cupiātis.

I came since you wished it, Veni, cum cuperētis.

III. Time of depend. sent. anterior to that of the principal sentence:

I come since you wished (have wished) it, Venio, cum cupiveritis;
I came, since you had wished it, Veni, cum cupivissētis.

350. CONDITIONAL clauses, i. e. those introduced by si, or nisi (ni), generally take the Indicative. For the instances in which ordinary conditional clauses require the subjunctive see P. II, p. 709, foll. A peculiar class of conditional clauses are those of NON-REALITY (hypothetical clauses), when the predicates both of the clause, and of the principal sentence contain supposed actions contrary to reality. Such predicates are in the subjunctive of the imperfect if referring to present, and of the pluperfect, referring to past time. See P. II, p. 717 foll.

If he came (but he does not)<sup>1</sup>, I would leave, Si veniret, abirem. If he had come, I would leave, Si venisset, abirem. If he had come, I would have left, Si venisset, abissem.

§ 351. The FORMER SUPINE is used after verbs expressing a motion in space, and denotes the purpose and end of the motion. It is translated by "in order to," as:

The soldiers went away in order to procure water, Milites aquātum abiērunt.

§ 352. The SECOND SUPINE is used as object of certain adjectives, as facilis, difficilis, incredibilis, jucundus, and some others, with the force of a passive infinitive, although the English language by an idiomatic peculiarity generally employs here the active infinitive, as:

The narrative will be easier to understand (instead of to be understood) Narratio facillor cognitu erit.

This is easy to say, Hoc facile dictu est.

Rem. 8. The use of both supines is limited to certain verbs, and not frequently met with in ancient authors.

EXERCISES.

1. Semper postulavimus, ut Antiochi legāti urbem relinquerent.—2. Curius Dentātus cum his triumphasset, olera<sup>2</sup> plantāvit.<sup>3</sup>—3. Ancus Martius, quartus Romanōrum rex, Latinos bello domuit, urbem Romam amplificāvit, eamque novis mœnibus circumdedit.—4. Sæpissime te urbem intrāre vetuimus.—5. Quoties rogasti, ut leges usuriæ abrogarentur!—6. Galli, postquam hæc fama confirmāta est, bellum Romanis inferre<sup>4</sup> statuērunt. Hujus belli imperium Orgetorigi<sup>5</sup> mandārunt.—7. Quum frater tuus Sempronius mihi commendaverit, negotium illud ei mandābo.—8. Exercitus noster proficiscitur,<sup>6</sup> cum Galli rursus conjuraverint.—9. Cum milites nostri advenērunt, hostes jam urbem occupaverant.—10. Nisi irātus essem, jam diu te castigassem.—11. Cæsar, cum Æduōrum principes convocavisset, sic (thus) eos allocūtus est.—12. Si nos pecuniā et copiis adjuveris, Germānos vincere facile erit.—13. Si exules vestros revocaveritis, et oppida, a vobis occupāta, Gallis reddideritis, pacem vobis dabo.—14. Philippus equites frumentātum misit.—15. Hæc uva<sup>1</sup> peracerba gustātū<sup>2</sup> est.—16. Camillus a populo Romano accusātus est, quod regnum appeteret.<sup>3</sup>—17. Quot victoriæ ab hoc imperatore reportatæ<sup>4</sup>, quot prœlia pugnāta, quot oppida expugnāta sunt!—18. Cum culpa tua probāta sit, homicidii<sup>5</sup> te condemno.<sup>6</sup>—19. Quamquam Sulpicius imperatōri jam diu denuntiatus erat, numquam tamen accusatio recte (fully) probāri poterat.—20. Cum urbs expugnāta esset, dux servis omnibus libertatem dedit.—21. Sulpicius, homicidii accusātus, a iudicibus condemnātus est.—22. Germāni, fluvium transire conāti, a Romanis persequentibus necāti sunt.—23. Sæpe jam me spes frustratū<sup>7</sup> est.—24. Quamquam doctrinam tuam semper admirātī erāmus, tunc tamen ingenium tuum plane (entirely) novum esse videbātur.—25. Antisthenes discipulos suos monuit, ut sapientiæ operam darent.<sup>8</sup> Pauci tamen paruerunt.—26. Romāni Corinthum et Carthaginem, paucis autem annis post (§ 311, Rem. 10) Numantiam deleverunt.—27. Gajus a civibus accusatur, quod Sempronii filios male docuerit.—28. Etruria tam celebris erat, ut totam Italiam nominis sui famā impleset.—29. Quamquam Galli primam et secundam aciem ulterius (§ 291) progredi prohibuerunt, tertia tamen acies hostium latus<sup>9</sup> circumire<sup>10</sup> cœpit.—30. Gallōrum auxilia a Cæsare ita adhibita sunt, ut utrumque latus nostrum tegerent.—31. Cum aries<sup>11</sup> et scalæ muris admōtæ essent, eruptio<sup>12</sup> ab oppidanis omnibus portis simul facta est.—32. Filii mei magnopere gavisi sunt, quod eos tot tantisque beneficiis affecisti.<sup>13</sup>—33. Si hanc vocem enuntiāre ausus esses, nulla te nunc premeret<sup>14</sup> suspicio.—34. Uvas istas nostris ipsōrum manibus carpsimus.<sup>15</sup>—35. Cæsar omnis copias suas abduxit.—36. Atticus ita vixerat, ut omnibus civibus suis carissimus esset.—37. Cæsar Labienum hostium castra obsidere jussit.—38. Cum existimationem<sup>16</sup> meam calumniis asperseris,<sup>17</sup> societatem tuam aspernor.—39. Dux cum hanc rem comperisset, primam aciem ab hostibus repulsam<sup>18</sup> et fugientem conspexit.—40. Hostes quamquam aciem mediam<sup>19</sup> perruperant,<sup>20</sup> ab equitibus rejeciti<sup>21</sup> sunt.—41. Impetus tam celeriter factus est, ut copię nostræ castra intrarent, priusquam ab hostibus conspectæ essent.—42. Si frater tuus adfuisset, filius meus se servāre potuisset.—43. Cum hostes omne frumentum abstulerint,<sup>22</sup> cives vitam sustinere nequeunt.—44. Postquam hic nuntius Mario allātus est, hostis statem pugnare cœgit.—45. Timoleon diligi quam metui maluit.—46. Si amicos tuos adjuvare voluisses, nunquam ab eis derelictus esses.—47. Hoc prœlio (in this battle) ducentæ naves naufragio<sup>23</sup> perierunt.—48. Rediimus, postquam hostes urbem reliquerunt.—49. Nisi fluvium transissetis, omnes ab hostibus capti essetis.—50. Proconsul accusatur, quod civis Romanos justo crudelius (§ 310, Rem. 7) punierit.—51. Perbene difficile hanc questionem definisti.—52. Captivi a militibus nostris arctissime<sup>24</sup> custoditi sunt.—53. Phœnices multas artis ipsasque litteras invenerunt.—54. Milites, postquam aquam cibosque repererunt, meliōre animo<sup>25</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Consequently the clause is hypothetical.—<sup>2</sup> Olus, cabbage.—<sup>3</sup> Plantāre, to plant, to raise.—<sup>4</sup> Bellum inferre, with a dative, to commence war with somebody.—<sup>5</sup> Nom. Orgetorigi.—<sup>6</sup> Proficisci, to depart.

<sup>1</sup> Uva, a grape.—<sup>2</sup> Gustāre, to taste.—<sup>3</sup> Regnum appetere, to aspire to the throne, or to royal dignity.—<sup>4</sup> Reportāre, to report.—<sup>5</sup> Homicide.—<sup>6</sup> Condemnāre, to declare guilty.—<sup>7</sup> Frustrārī, to disappoint.—<sup>8</sup> Operam dare, to pay attention, to take pains with.—<sup>9</sup> Latus, flank.—<sup>10</sup> To surround.—<sup>11</sup> Ram.—<sup>12</sup> A sortie.—<sup>13</sup> Beneficiis afficere, to show favors to somebody.—<sup>14</sup> To weigh upon somebody.—<sup>15</sup> To pick.—<sup>16</sup> Fame.—<sup>17</sup> To stain.—<sup>18</sup> Repellere, to repulse.—<sup>19</sup> Acies media, the centre.—<sup>20</sup> To break.—<sup>21</sup> To throw back.—<sup>22</sup> To carry away.—<sup>23</sup> Naufragium, shipwreck.—<sup>24</sup> Arctus, close.—<sup>25</sup> Bono animo, cheerfully.

itineris labores perpassi sunt.—55. Memento mortis!—56. Reges promissorum suorum male meminisse solent.—57. Cum Romanorum exercitus appropinquaret, oppidum ab hostibus jam obsideri ceptum erat.—58. Multi homines talia scelera perpetrare consuesse videntur.

1. Thou hast badly fitted the doors to the house.—2. Scipio adopted the son of Paulus Æmilius, in order that his name might be preserved.—3. We confirmed this treaty (fœdus) directly, in order that the citizens as soon as possible might feel (sentire) its advantages.—4. You have frequently disturbed the public peace.—5. The judges declared the accused guilty (condemnare) of theft.—6. Pompey had conquered (domare) the pirates; and so great was the glory of this war, that the command of the Mithridatic (Mithridaticus) war was conferred (deferre) on (translate to) him by the people.—7. Since this general has given peace to us, the people will give to him the highest (§ 290, Rem. 7) honors.—8. You are praised by the people for having (translate, that you have) fought so bravely.—9. When Cæsar arrived, the enemies had already occupied the banks of the river.—10. If you had directly asked (rogare) my opinion, I should certainly have told it to you.—11. If you will (§ 346) reconcile the king to you, the general will give back your fields to you.—12. The Æduans (Ædii) sent ambassadors to Ariovistus to ask (rogare) [for] help.—13. Socrates was accused, that he corrupted (corrumpere) youth and introduced (introducere) new superstitions (superstitio).—14. Although the camp had been stormed (expugnare) by our troops, yet the soldiers took (capere) less booty than usually (§ 310, Rem. 7).—15. Since many crimes have been committed, I shall take care<sup>1</sup> that they be denounced to the prætor.—16. As soon as (ubi) this matter will have been explained by thee, I shall return to thee all this money.—17. If thou hadst given (dare) a better advice to thy friend, thou wouldst never have been accused by him.—18. Your friend is accused of weakness,<sup>2</sup> since he has been afraid (§ 80) of violating the laws.—19. Cicero had hesitated (cunctari) to arrest<sup>3</sup> Catiline, since he had been afraid of employing<sup>4</sup> force against him.—20. I rejoiced (letari) that (quod with indicative) you refused (nolle) to accept an illicit (illicitus) gain (lucrum).—21. When we had stayed<sup>5</sup> a little longer (§ 311) than it was necessary, we searched<sup>6</sup> the whole house.—22. Orgetorix having bewailed (illacrimare) his sad fate,<sup>7</sup> seized<sup>8</sup> the hand of Cæsar, and implored his grace (gratia).—23. The slaves, released by the enemies, refused to follow their masters.—24. Having been invited by the Gauls themselves, we shall demand the rewards due<sup>9</sup> to us.—25. It was allowed to us and our children to be happy.—26. The Gauls were angry (succensere) with (translate to) us, since (quod with subj.) their towns had been destroyed (delere) and their liberties (privilegium) been annihilated<sup>10</sup> by us.—27. If thou hadst employed more care to this business, thou wouldst have been able to reap (percipere) the fruits of thy diligence.—28. All these calamities have been prevented (prohibere) by the virtue and authority of Pompey.—29. Cæsar increased his army by two legions, lately drafted (conscribere).—30. When the enemies approached, Cæsar had already directed (jubere) Labienus to occupy the highest ridge (jugum) of the mountain.—31. All these things were foreseen (providere) by the general, since the soldiers had already filled up the ditches and destroyed the fortifications.—

<sup>1</sup> To take care, curare.—<sup>2</sup> Weakness, inconstantia.—<sup>3</sup> Comprehendere.—<sup>4</sup> To employ force against; translate: To infer (inferre) force to.—<sup>5</sup> To stay, commorari.—<sup>6</sup> To search, perscrutari.—<sup>7</sup> Sore.—<sup>8</sup> To seize, comprehendere.—<sup>9</sup> Due; translate: owed, past part. of to owe, debere.—<sup>10</sup> To annihilate, tollere.

32. When I had seen Brutus, I resolved to follow Pompey.—33. We had been accustomed to walk early in the morning, when (cum with indic.) a disease compelled us to keep<sup>1</sup> the bed.—34. The citizens rejoiced (gaudere) that (quod with subj.) the war had been finished.—35. The citizens took up (sumere) arms in order to (that) expel (expellere) the tyrants.—36. Our troops were exhausted (confectus) by hunger, since the enemies had consumed (absumere) all provisions.—37. The ambassadors, frightened by these prodigies (prodigium), consulted<sup>2</sup> the Delphic oracle.—38. Alexander opened<sup>3</sup> countries, unknown to fame, by his sword.—39. The consul dismissed the veterans (veteranus), but he drafted<sup>4</sup> 2000 foot-soldiers.—40. A beautiful statue of father Liber was chiselled (sculpere) by Menander, and Menexenus formed<sup>5</sup> the same god in (by) bronze (aes).—41. The augurs, induced<sup>6</sup> by these prodigies, examined<sup>7</sup> the sacred books.—42. Argus, charmed<sup>8</sup> by the music,<sup>9</sup> fell into sleep (obdormiscere).—43. The Corinthians<sup>10</sup> had established<sup>11</sup> this colony, and by it promoted<sup>12</sup> their commerce and authority.—44. The gates of Janus, closed (cludere) or opened (aperire), became the signs (index) of peace or war.—45. The king disappointed<sup>13</sup> the hope of the people, and spread (spargere) the seeds<sup>14</sup> of corruption (corruptela) by unheard-of bribes.<sup>15</sup>—46. Prometheus, since he had defied (spernere) the will of Jupiter, was affixed<sup>16</sup> by him to the Caucasus.—47. Posthumius is accused of having extorted<sup>17</sup> (transl. by quod with subjunctive) the votes of the Roman people by force.—48. Pisistratus is said to have collected (colligere) the poems of Homer, dispersed<sup>18</sup> before.—49. Continuous (continuus) pains gave to the mind of the king a sort of (quidam) bitterness (acerbitas).—50. Cæsar, moved (commovere) by this sudden danger, took (capere) another resolution (consilium).—51. The bundles<sup>19</sup> of the lictors became ludicrous<sup>20</sup> by the diminished authority of the magistrates.—52. Gajus laid (jacere) the foundation<sup>21</sup> of his future fortune by this business alone.—53. The Stoic Posidonius is said to have broken<sup>22</sup> this sickness by his will (voluntas) alone.—54. Parrhasius is said to have deceived (fallere) the birds by his painted<sup>23</sup> grapes (uva).—55. Brutus preferred (anteponere) the common welfare of all to his domestic<sup>24</sup> happiness (felicitas).—56. Sempronius was thrown (conjicere) into prison,<sup>25</sup> since he had reported (deferre) all our plans to the enemies.—57. The Greeks remember well the old glory of their country.—58. The allies, frightened by the elephants,<sup>26</sup> began to abandon (tradere) themselves to flight.—59. The neighboring nations began to be molested (premere) by the war.—60. Metellus, having obtained (adipisci) the command, began to restore the former (pristinus) discipline of the soldiers.—61. Cornelia, having spoken these words, died (mori) with (by) a serene mind.—62. The enemies, having found out (nancisci) a place, fortified by nature, erected (ponere) a camp.—63. When Cæsar had departed* (proficisci), the ambassadors of the Nervians arrived.—64. Panætius praises Scipio for (quod with subj.) having been abstinent (abstinens).—65. The officers (dur) could with difficulty<sup>27</sup> repress<sup>28</sup> their fear, while<sup>29</sup> they had been of good cheer (bono animo) before.—66. Since the enemies have refused to attack<sup>1</sup> us, we shall enter (introire) the defiles (angustiae) of the mountains.—67. When Cesar had arrived, the whole condition of things was suddenly changed.—68. After we had returned, Brutus came and brought thy letter.—69. Very many enemies perished in (by) the waves,<sup>2</sup> when they had been thrown (deicere) into the river (in flumen) by our horsemen.—70. If you had guarded the fords of the river, you would have hindered the enemies from crossing.

<sup>1</sup> To keep, tenere.—<sup>2</sup> Consulere.—<sup>3</sup> Patefacere.—<sup>4</sup> Conscribere.—<sup>5</sup> To form, fingere.—<sup>6</sup> To induce, adducere.—<sup>7</sup> To examine, inspicere.—<sup>8</sup> To charm, permulcere.—<sup>9</sup> Music, cantus.—<sup>10</sup> Corinthius.—<sup>11</sup> To establish a colony, coloniam deducere.—<sup>12</sup> To promote, augere.—<sup>13</sup> Deludere.—<sup>14</sup> A seed, semen.—<sup>15</sup> Largitio.—<sup>16</sup> To affix, affigere.—<sup>17</sup> To extort, extorquere.—<sup>18</sup> To disperse, dispergere.—<sup>19</sup> Fascis.—<sup>20</sup> Ridiculus.—<sup>21</sup> Fundamentum.—<sup>22</sup> Frangere.—<sup>23</sup> Pingere.—<sup>24</sup> Domesticus.—<sup>25</sup> Into prison, in vincula.—<sup>26</sup> Elephantus.—<sup>27</sup> With difficulty, ægre.—<sup>28</sup> Repress, continere.—<sup>29</sup> Cum with subj.—* Quum (cum) always stands with the subjunctive if its predicate is a pluperfect, not referring to repeated action.

CHAPTER FOURTH.

ABSOLUTE AND DISJUNCT ADJECTIVES.

PARTITIVE GENITIVE.

§ 353. Attributive Adjectives frequently are used without a governing noun, so that the latter must be understood and supplied, as in English: The wise, the poor, these, this, others, mine. They are either ABSOLUTE or DISJUNCT. An adjective is called ABSOLUTE, when a governing noun, denoting things or persons IN GENERAL, must be supplied, as: "The poor," instead of "the poor persons," this, instead of "this thing, this matter." Adjectives of this kind must be considered as real SUBSTANTIVES. An adjective is called DISJUNCT, when a thing or person must be supplied, which has been previously mentioned, as: "How many prisoners did we make? Two thousand." Here the numeral two thousand is a DISJUNCT adjective, since the governing noun prisoners must be supplied from the preceding question.

I. ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES DENOTING PERSONS.

§ 354. In Latin absolute Adjectives, denoting PERSONS, are placed in the MASCULINE GENDER; those denoting THINGS in the NEUTER. The rules on the use of these adjectives are different, according as they are Descriptive Adjectives, or Participles, or Form-adjectives.

§ 355. Absolute DESCRIPTIVE adjectives, denoting PERSONS, generally stand in the plural, the same as in English, as: docti, the learned; pauperes, the poor; mortui, the dead. They are more rarely used in the singular, and then we must render them into English by supplying the word man or person, as: ægrôtus, a sick man; liber, a free man. There are, however, certain Latin adjectives which regularly are used with the force of nouns, and often are translated by English nouns, as: amîcus, a friend (originally friendly); juvenis, a youth (originally young); familiâris, an acquaintance (originally intimate); reus, an accused (person); par, an equal.

<sup>1</sup> Aggredi.—<sup>2</sup> A wave, fluctus.

Rem. 1. Sometimes we render English NOUNS by Latin Adjectives in connection with vir or homo (in the singular), as: a scholar, vir doctus.

Rem. 2. Latin Absolute Adjectives, even when they are translated by English nouns, cannot take Descriptive Adjectives as attributes. Thus the English "a good friend" must not be rendered by amîcus bonus, but by admodum (valde) amîcus; my best friend not by optimus amîcus, but by amicissimus. Thus "a great scholar" cannot be translated by "magnus doctus," but by vir admodum doctus; "the greatest scholar" not by maximus doctus, but by vir doctissimus.

Rem. 3. To those adjectives, which are used with the force of nouns, belongs the plurale tantum majôres, in the meaning "ancestors." But it would be barbarous to say magni nostri majôres, our great ancestors. The Latin says: majôres nostri, summi viri.

§ 356. Absolute PARTICIPLES in general follow the rule of Descriptive Adjectives, as: Fugientes, the fleeing (persons); vulnerâti, the wounded. PRESENT PARTICIPLES, especially when they have objects, may be used in both numbers absolutely. They frequently must be translated by English relative clauses, as:

Quærens, one that asks, or asked; pugnantes, those that fight, or fought; fluvium transeuntes, those that crossed the river; Virtutem amans voluptates spernit, one that loves virtue (he who loves virtue, or who loves virtue) spurns pleasures. Dux ab hostium equitibus dissipatos colligit, the general collected those who were dispersed by the horsemen of the enemies.

§ 357. The Latin ABSOLUTE FORM-ADJECTIVES (denoting persons) are used in both numbers of the masculine gender. But many of them have specific forms for their absolute use, according to the following rules:

1. The indeclinable Form-adjectives quot, tot, totidem, aliquot (§ 257), are rarely used absolutely. We may here either add the word homines or use instead of quot and tot the expressions quam multi, tam multi, as:

How many hast thou killed? Quot homines (or quam multos) interfecisti?

2. The interrogative quis (§ 243), if used absolutely, is translated by who, or by which man (person). Sometimes, but rarely, the form qui is used with absolute force. For the distinction of quis and qui, see § 243, Rem. 4. Uter, according to its meaning, is used as a DISJUNCT adjective (see § 364), and is then likewise translated by who, or which of the two (see § 243, Rem. 5).

The interrogative quis always is changed into qui, when it has the force of the relative "who." When the relative qui, or any other relative, stands without a noun, it must be considered as disjunct, not as absolute, except in the case No. 3.

3. When the DEMONSTRATIVE ADJECTIVES (hic, ille, iste, is, idem, ipse) occur without nouns, they must be considered as disjuncts (§ 364), except when they are antecedents of a relative clause, as hic qui, illi qui (but more generally is qui, ei qui), which are translated by he who; the one who; those who; idem qui is translated by "the same as," as:

Is, qui fortunā adiuvatur. He who (the one who) is assisted by fortune. Ei (hi, illi) qui vitis dediti sunt. Those who are given to vices.

The Demonstratives hic, ille, is, in this case are frequently omitted, as in English, and then the relative has the force of an Absolute Adjective, as: Qui semper dolet, deos accusare videtur, Who always mourns, seems to accuse the gods.

4. The INDEFINITE DETERMINATIVES aliquis and quidam, quisquam, quisque, nemo, when used absolutely, correspond to the English expressions some one (plural some), any one (plural any), every one, no one (plural none), or somebody, anybody, everybody, nobody. Quisquam and nemo are the regular absolute forms instead of the attributive ullus and nullus in the singular, while in the plural ulli and nulli are exclusively used (any and none). But in the genitive and ablative singular the classical language always uses nullius and nullo instead of neminis and nemine, and in the ablative singular almost always ullo instead of quoquam, sometimes also in the genitive ullius instead of cujusquam.

The English other takes the absolute plural others, and (without article) is translated by alii, while the others is expressed by ceteri or reliqui.

Rem. 4. The English Indefinite somebody or anybody is also expressed by the Interrogative quis, when it has no emphasis, especially after the particles num, an, utrum, the conjunctions si, nisi, and ne, and after relatives. The declension of quis in this meaning is irregular in the NOMINATIVE SING. FEM. and NOM. and ACCUS. PLUR. NEUTER, in which cases it generally takes the form qua (like aliquis), rarely quæ.

Obs. Instead of aliquis or quisquam, sometimes quispiam (G. cujuspiam, D. cuiuspiam, Acc. quempiam) is used, often with potential subjunctives: Dixerit fortasse quispiam (perhaps somebody might say etc.). It mostly occurs absolutely (neuter quidpiam = something), rarely attributively (quepiam, quodpiam), and extremely seldom in the plural.

Rem. 5. Nemo is frequently translated by "not anybody," which cannot be translated by non quisquam; as: I have not seen anybody, Neminem vidi. Never any one = nemo (nullus) unquam, rarely nunquam quisquam. Nemo non = every one; non nemo (nullus) = some one.

Rem. 6. The English expression "of others," meaning belonging to others, may be expressed by aliörum, but more frequently is changed into the attributive adjective alienus (foreign, strange), as: The books of others, Libri alieni; by the property of others, bonis alienis.

5. If the adjectives some—others are coördinate to each other, they are translated by alii—alii, or by the singulars alius—alius. The one—the other is expressed by alter—alter, and the ones—the others by alteri—alteri, as: Some were captured, others killed, Alii capti sunt, alii interfecti. The one was sitting (and) the other standing, Alter sedēbat, alter stabat.

Coördinations of this kind can never be separated by coördinating conjunctions in Latin, but always are connected asyn-detically.

Rem. 7. The adjective alius frequently occurs in the same sentence with another case of alius, or the adverbs formed from it (alio, aliter, alias, alibunde). This peculiar Latin idiom always must be resolved by a coördination, as: Alii ab aliis interfecti sunt, Some were killed by these, some by those. Alii in alio loco stabant, Some stood in one place, some in another.

6. The absolute POSSESSIVES meus, tuus, suius, etc., in the MASCULINE PLURAL denote persons, who are in some close connection to the person referred to, as one's friends, soldiers, followers, or one's family, as: Hostes a nostris repulsi sunt, The enemies were repulsed by our soldiers. Rex a suis desertus est,

The king was deserted by his followers. Omnes mei valent, All my family is well.

Rem. 8. The phrase one's countrymen or fellow-citizens generally is expressed by mei (tui, sui, etc.) homines or cives, and in regard to noster and vester by the civic nouns nostrates, vestrates, declined like the irregular vowel-stems in as, atis (§ 187, 4). The Latin language also forms the INTERROGATIVE NOUN cujas, G. cujatis (what countryman?) according to this analogy.

II. ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES, DENOTING THINGS.

§ 358. Absolute Adjectives, denoting THINGS, are placed in the neutral plural, and generally are translated by the addition of "things" or another noun of general import, as "matters," "affairs," etc.; as: Falsa loqui, to speak false things. Parva sæpe magnis rectissime conferuntur, Small things often are very fitly compared to great ones. Aliena appetere, to covet the things of others. See Rem. 6.

Rem. 9. The use of absolute adjectives in the neuter singular is confined: 1) to philosophical language in regard to certain abstracts, as: Sublime et pulchrum, the sublime and the beautiful (meaning the idea of the sublime, etc.); 2) to certain idioms with prepositions, and adverbial expressions, as: in publico, publicly; de integro, anew; in unum cogi, to be collected at one place; 3) to FORM-ADJECTIVES (§ 359). In the use of the plural or singular the English language, on the whole, conforms to the Latin usage, except that, where the plural is used, the addition of a noun of general import always is required in English. But sometimes English singulars are expressed by Latin plurals, as: Multa, much (many things), while the Singular multum is used as a quantitative adverb or in connection with Genitives, § 264. So omnia (more rarely omne), every thing; quæ, what (which things).

Rem. 10. The Latin absolute demonstratives (hoc, illud, istud, id, idem, ipsum, and their Plurals), denoting THINGS, are used as antecedents of relative clauses, the same as those denoting PERSONS (§ 357, 3), as id quod, that which (what, relat.); ea quæ, those things which (what, relat.). We may also here omit the demonstratives, as: Id quod (or quod alone) tibi dixi, verum est, That which (or what) I have told thee, is true. Ea quæ (illa quæ or quæ alone) audisti falsa sunt, Those things which thou hast heard are false, or What thou hast heard is false.

§ 359. The Form-adjectives, composed with the interrogative quis, take neuter forms in quid (not quod), if used absolutely, as: quid (not quod), what (neuter interrog.); aliquid (not aliquod), something; quiddam, something; quicquam (inst. of quidquam), anything; quidque (quidvis), everything.

Rem. 11. Quid is used as an indefinite adjective instead of aliquid or quicquam (something or anything) in the same way as quis instead of aliquis and quisquam (Rem. 4), as: si quid scio, if I know anything.

Rem. 12. Nihil, nothing, is considered as neuter of nemo. Nihil frequently is translated by not anything, which never can be rendered by non quicquam: He did not say anything, nihil dixit. Never anything = nihil unquam, rarely nunquam quicquam. Nihil non, everything; nonnihil, something.

Rem. 13. The plural quædam (certain things, something) is used nearly in the same meaning as aliquid, whose plural aliqua seldom is used absolutely. Quidquam, quidque and nihil form no Plurals. Aliud and alia (other things, another thing), reliquum and reliqua (the rest), are used in both numbers. Cetera (the other things, the rest) is a plurale tantum. Utrumque, both (both things), used in the singular, is properly a disjunct. The demonstratives (hoc, illud, id, idem) are used in both numbers, without difference in signification (hoc or hæc, this or these things; idem or eadem, the same or the same things).

Rem. 14. The numerals, except unum (one, one thing), solum, alone (the only thing), totum (the whole, the whole thing) are used in the plural only, as multa, much, many things; plura, more, more things; pauca, few things, a little; omnia, everything, all things. The indeclinables quot, etc., cannot be used absolutely, being replaced by quam multa, how many things? tam multa, so many things. The QUANTITATIVES are used in the singular only. These latter always mean the AMOUNT of something, and when used absolutely they properly denote the amount of PROPERTY in general, as: Quantum habetis, how much (property) have you? Plus quam Gajus, more (property) than Gajus. But they frequently mean the amount of THINGS in GENERAL, and then their usage very little differs from that of the Absolute Numerals. Thus the sentence: Tantum audivit quantum voluit differs very little from the sentence: Tam multa audivit quam voluit (he heard as much as he wished).

Rem. 15. The neuter plural of the absolute Possessives (mea, tua, sua, nostra, vestra) mean either one's PROPERTY or one's (OWN) AFFAIRS, as: Omnia mea mecum porto, I carry all my property with me. Tua magis ad me pertinere videntur quam mea, Thy affairs seem to concern me more than my own.

§ 360. The Absolute Neuter Adjectives have a peculiar declension. They cannot be used in the GENITIVE, DATIVE, or ABLATIVE, if a doubt would arise, whether PERSONS or THINGS are meant, since neuters and masculines in these cases have the same forms. The rule is, therefore, that absolute adjectives in the GENITIVE, DATIVE, and ABLATIVE cases always mean persons, unless the connection clearly shows, that things must be meant. The absolute adjectives, denoting THINGS in the mentioned cases always take the noun res as the governing word, and are consequently placed in the Feminine Gender, as: NOM. Falsa (res falsæ), false things; GEN. Rerum falsarum (not falsorum alone), of false things; DAT. and ABL. Rebus falsis; ACC. Falsa (res falsas).—N. hoc, this; G. hujus rei, of this; D. huic rei, to this, etc. Those adjectives, which have peculiar absolute forms, take their attributive forms in these cases, as:

|                                     |                                     |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| N. Quidquam, anything .      | N. Nihil, nothing .          |
| G. ullius rei, of anything . | G. nullius rei, of nothing . |
| D. ulli rei, to anything .   | D. nulli rei, to nothing .   |
| A. quidquam, anything .      | A. nihil, nothing .          |
| A. ullā rē, by anything .    | A. nullā rē, by nothing .    |

Plur. Ulla, any things; nulla, no things; Gen. ullarum rerum, etc. Nihil has a collateral form nihilum with regular inflection (G. nihili etc.), which is used 1) in the meaning of a substantive (nothing = a state of nothingness) most usually after prepositions: In nihilum converti, to be turned to nothing; ex nihilo fieri, to be created from nothing. 2) As gen. of value (nihili esse, to be worth nothing), see P. II, p. 272, 1. 3) As abl. of difference (nihilo magis = no more).

Rem. 16. The rule § 360 applies also to the neuter pronoun id (it), when it refers to the general idea of 'thing' (G. ejus rei, of it etc.). But in certain conventional connections the neuter forms are absolutely used, chiefly the abl. eo (eo quod, by the fact that). So eo as abl. of difference, before comparatives: Eo magis quod, the more so because.

Rem. 17. The declinable quantitative adjectives quantum, tantum, multum, aliquantum (in the singular) do not take the forms with res, but are used absolutely in the neuter, a certain grammatical office being assigned to each case (except the dative). In the gen. they occur as objects of price and value (P. II, p. 270): Quanti hoc emisti? At what price did you buy this. The acc. occurs as object of intensity (P. II, p. 261, 3), and the abl. as abl. of difference (tanto melius, so much the better), see § 311.

III. COMBINATION OF ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES.

§ 361. No absolute descriptive adjective can take another descriptive adjective as attribute. Thus "innumerable great things" cannot be translated by magna innumerabilia; "excellent scholars" not by egregii docti; "renowned deeds" not by præclara gesta, the words doctus and gestum (deed) being Absolute Participles of docere and gerere.

Rem. 18. The adjective attributes of absolute Participles must be changed into the corresponding Adverbs (homo egregie doctus, præclare gesta). Other adjectives are connected by COORDINATION, as magna et innumerabilia.

§ 362. But absolute FORM-ADJECTIVES may take Descriptive Adjectives as attributes, especially when the former belong to the INDEFINITE or INTERROGATIVE class. Other Form-adjectives generally refuse this connection; as: Omnia præclara rarissima sunt, all excellent things are exceedingly rare. Boni omnes consentiunt, all good men consent. But not: Hi boni, these good men; duo præclara, two excellent things.

Rem. 19. Since Form-adjectives are used absolutely in the Singular also, it follows, that combinations of indefinite Form-adjectives with Descriptive Adjectives in the singular do not require the addition of governing nouns of general import, as: Ægrôtus quidam, some sick person; nemo bonus, no good man; mortale nihil, nothing mortal; quivis sanus, every sane man.

Rem. 20. The indefinite adjective quisque rarely occurs except in connection with certain form-adjectives, reflexive pronouns, or superlatives and ordinal numerals. The Engl. 'every one', 'each', unless it is in one of these connections, is not expressed by quisque, but by omnes (everything = omnia) nemo non, quivis, unusquisque (pro se quisque, see OBS.).

OBS. Quisque, which in the historians sometimes takes its predicate in the plural, occurs: 1) With SUPERLATIVES, (a) in the meaning 'every' with a positive: Epicurios doctissimus quisque contemnit, Every scholar despises the Epicureans, Cic. Tusc. 1, 21. (b) In the meaning 'even', 'the very' with superl.: Potentissimus quisque, even the most powerful, Liv. 38, 50. Fortissimus quisque pugnare destitit; The very bravest had ceased to fight, Liv. 24, 15.—2) With ORDINALS: Decimus quisque (every tenth man) ad supplicium lecti, Liv. 2, 59. Tertio quoque anno, every third year. Primo quoque tempore, as soon as possible. So quotus quisque (p. 182, 16).—3) In connection with (almost always immediately after) the REFLEXIVES sibi, se, and the posse-sive suus: Ipse se quisque diligit, quod per se sibi quisque carus est (Every one likes himself etc.), Cic. Am. 21.—Sua cuiusque animantis natura est; Every living being has its own nature, Cic. Fin. 5, 9.—Pro se quisque (literally 'each for himself') often has the meaning 'every one'; Pro se quisque minuciter fremunt; Every one grumbled with threats, Liv. 2, 6.—4) In RELATIVE clauses by incorporation, as: Defendit quod quisque sentit, Let every one defend what he believes, Cic. Tusc. 4, 4. (see P. II, p. 532).—5) In INTERROGATIVE clauses introduced by interrogative adjectives or adverbs: Ut viderit quisque, non quo quisque incommodo affectus sit, prædicandum est (the manner how every one has borne his affliction, not by what affliction he is affected), Cic. Tusc. 3, 33.—6) In COMPARATIVE clauses with 'ut quisque', and in abbreviated comparative constructions with two superlatives P. II, p. 751.—7) In TEMPORAL clauses with ut quisque: Ut quisque hostem occiderat (as soon as any one had killed an enemy), abscindendo terribat tempus, Liv. 24, 15.—8) Sometimes in connection with modus or genus as qualitative genitive: Cujusque generis nota, the character of each class, Cic. Orat. 23, 75.—9) Very rarely quisque occurs in other connections than the above, as for inst.: Quisque eorum (each of these) multa disputavit, Cic. Att. 4, 2, 4.

§ 363. ABSOLUTE FORM-ADJECTIVES very frequently take OTHER FORM-ADJECTIVES as attributes, especially in the following combinations and arrangements: Hi omnes, omnes illi (all these, all those); omnia hæc, omnia illa (all these, those things); omnia mea (all my property); alia quædam (some other things); alii quidam, some others; alii multi, many others; alia multa, many other things; alia omnia, all other things; pauci quidam, some few; pauca quædam, some few things, some few remarks; tale quis or quidam, some such man; tale quid or aliquid, some such thing; talia quædam, some such things; nihil tale, no such thing; tale quicquam, any such thing. Instead of talis the phrase ejusmodi (written in one word) is very frequently used, as: Nihil ejusmodi, no such thing, nothing of that kind; ejusmodi quid, some such thing, etc.

Rem. 21. The English combinations with "else" are expressed by the different forms of alius, as: Quis alius, who else; quid aliud, what else; alius aliquis or alius quis, somebody else; aliud quid, something else; alius quisquam, any one else; aliud quicquam, anything else; quivis alius, every one else; quidvis aliud, everything else; alius nemo, nobody else; aliud nihil, nothing else.

Rem. 22. When these combinations refer to 'things in general', their genitives, datives, and ablatives, according to § 360, should be formed by the addition of res, as: By nothing else, nullā aliā re; to something else, alii cui rei; of what else, cuius alius rei; by nothing of that kind, nullā ejusmodi re.

IV. DISJUNCT ADJECTIVES.

§ 364. DISJUNCT ADJECTIVES are those, whose governing nouns are supplied from a preceding sentence or clause. They differ from the Absolute Adjectives in two points: 1) The nouns to be supplied, are not only of general import, as in the case of Absolute Adjectives, but nouns of every possible kind; they consequently may be used in all numbers and genders, while absolute adjectives in regard to number are subject to certain restrictions, and never can be placed in the feminine gender; 2) Those adjectives, which, when used absolutely, take specific forms, can never take these forms when they are merely disjunct; as: Dabo tibi hoc medicamentum, si quod (not quid) opus erit, I shall give you this remedy, if any will be necessary. Relatives therefore never can take the form quid in the neuter, since they always must be considered as disjuncts.

§ 365. Disjunct Adjectives assume the gender, case, and number of those nouns, which must be supplied as their governing nouns. In English we frequently employ here the word one in place of the noun understood, which cannot be imitated in Latin. The English possessives, if disjunct, take the forms mine, thine, ours, yours, theirs, which are translated by the common Latin forms meus, tuus, etc. Sometimes the governing noun is repeated in English, which generally is not the case in Latin; as:

Hither Gaul was given to Sempronius, and thither Gaul to Marcellus, Gallia ceterior Sempronio data est, ulterior Marcello.—While Gajus refused a deserved gift, Sejus accepted an undeserved one, Cum Gajus meritum donum recusaret, Sejus immeritum accepit.—Accipe hunc pateram, ego alteram tenēbo, Take this vessel, I shall keep the other.—Concordiā parvæ res crescant, discordiā maximæ sæpe dilabuntur, By concord small states increase, by discord the greatest often are destroyed.—Vos vestram patriam laudatis, nos nostram, You praise your country, and we ours.

Rem. 23. The Disjunct Demonstratives hic and ille, generally cannot be translated literally. They frequently are thus used, in order to connect two periods with each other, referring to one of the nouns contained in the last sentence. Hic refers then to the last noun, and ille to one of the more remote substantives. The literal translation of hic would then be "this one," and that of ille "that one." But we generally translate hic in this connection by an emphatic "he" or by "the latter;" ille by "the former," especially when both hic and ille are employed in the same sentence.

Cæsar Labienum—jussit. Hic duas legiones fluvium traduxit; Cæsar directed Labiēnus to . . . The latter (or he; literally: this one) led two legions over the river.—Dux Lucilium castra tenere, Labiēnum hostis aggredi jussit. Ille duas legiones in hostis duxit; ille cum duabus reliquis castra occupavit; The general directed Lucilius to hold the camp, and Labiēnus to attack the enemies. The latter (this one) led two legions against the enemies; the former occupied the camp with the two remaining ones.

Rem. 24. Sometimes hic, or another demonstrative (especially is, ea, id) refers to a whole preceding sentence or clause. The demonstratives are then placed in the NEUTER SINGULAR (hoc, id, this, it), as: While the army was crossing the river, the enemies, who had seen this (it), threw their missiles upon them, Dum exercitus fluvium transit, hostes, qui hoc (id) viderant, tela in eos coniecerunt.

§ 366. Disjunct Interrogatives, Demonstratives, and Relatives frequently are used as subjects of predicative nouns. Such subjects must agree with their predicate nouns in number, gender, and case, reversing for this combination the general rule of agreement (§ 63, 2), as:

Quæ (not quid) tristitiæ tuæ causa est? What is the cause of thy sadness?—What is the foundation of this republic? what are its laws? Quod (not quid) est reipublicæ hujus fundamentum? quæ (not quid) sunt ejus leges?—This is the source of all excellent things, Hic est omnium rerum præclararum fons.—This point, which is the base of my speech, etc., Hic locus, quod orationis meæ fundamentum est.

Rem. 25. When by the interrogative "what" we ask for a definition of a person or thing (in the masculine or feminine), we translate it by quid, not by quis or quæ, as: What is "friend?" (meaning "what is the definition of friend?"), quid (not quis) est amicus? What does the word rashness mean? quid (not quæ) est temeritas?

§ 367. RELATIVE ADJECTIVES rarely are used in connection with their governing nouns, but nearly always as disjuncts. But they always, according to rule § 365, must be treated as if the noun to which they refer (their antecedent) were expressly employed as governing word. Thus in the following sentence: "The picture, which I gave to Gajus, has been lost, tabula, quam Gajo dedi, amissa est," the relative takes the accusative singular feminine, because it must be treated in the same manner as if the word picture (tabula) was repeated as governing noun of the relative: "the picture, which picture I gave, tabula, quam tabulam dedi."

Rem. 26. The ancient authors indeed sometimes use the relative in this primary way, especially Cæsar, as: Bell. Gall. 1, 6. Omnibus rebus comparatis diem dicunt, qua die—omnes convenirent. After all things had been obtained, they appoint a day, on which day they should all assemble.

We see from this, that the Relative Adjective does not always stand in the same case as its antecedent, but that the case of the relative depends on the case of its governing noun, as if it were expressed.

§ 368. Hence we have the following rule in regard to the agreement of Relative Adjectives: They agree in number and gender with their antecedent, but assume that case, which the antecedent would have, if it were used in place of the relative. For exceptions to this rule see P. II, p. 524, R. 10.

§ 369. When the Antecedent of a Relative is either itself a Disjunct FORM-ADJECTIVE (hic, ille, is, idem, tantus, talis), or has a Form-adjective as attribute, the class of the relative must agree with the class of its antecedent or the attribute of the latter. Thus Determinative Antecedents must be followed by Determinative Relatives (hic, ille, is, idem are followed by qui); Quantitative Antecedents are followed by Quantitative Relatives (tantus is followed by quantus); Numeral Antecedents are followed by Numeral Relatives (tot is followed by quot); Qualitative antecedents require a Qualitative relative (talis, qualis). These are called syndetic antecedents (P. II, p. 492, 15; p. 496, 4).

Rem. 27. In English we have the Relatives who, which, that, as. The rules for their employment are different from the Latin rules. The English relative "what" (to be distinguished from the interrogative) contains and implies its own antecedent; it stands instead of that which. It is either translated by quod or by quæ. See Rem. 28.

Rem. 28. The Latin possessives have no relative form, and are connected with the determinative relative qui. Among the numerals, only tot has a corresponding relative; the others likewise take the determinative relative qui (multi, pauci, etc., qui). Among the Latin demonstratives the determinative is, more frequently than ille and iste, is used as antecedent of qui, in order to express the English demonstrative that, as: My brother has received that letter, which he had expected, Frater meus eas litteras, quas expectaverat, accepit. The Latin Antecedent eas, and the English Antecedent that, may both be omitted, and we have then in English three ways of expressing the sentence. We either say: "the letter, which he expected," or "what letter he expected," or "the letter he expected." Any of the three forms of the English sentence is translated in the same way in Latin (litteras quas expectaverat, or: quas expectaverat litteras). An omission of the Relative, as in English, is inadmissible in Latin.

When the Latin Antecedent is Absolute in the Neuter (id or ea), it generally is omitted, and the English "that which" is changed into "what" (see Rem. 10).

Rem. 29. As for the different classes of relatives, the rules of agreement in Number, Case, and Gender are in all of them the same as for the relative qui (§ 368), and the beginner ought to be especially careful, not to confound the different classes, since the English language knows none of the Latin distinctions. Thus the same as corresponds to the Latin idem qui; such as, to talis qualis; so much as, to tantus quantus; so many as, to tot quot. Nor must the beginner confound the Relative that with the Demonstrative that, but translate the English Relative, even when it is omitted, as: All I have told you is true, Omnia, quæ tibi dixi, vera sunt.—The man that told you that, is insane, Homo qui tibi id (hoc) dixit, insipit.

For special Rules regarding the Relatives, see Book VI. (Relative Clauses).

V. PARTITIVE GENITIVE.

§ 370. Absolute Adjectives frequently are connected with other Absolute or Disjunct Adjectives in the form of the PARTITIVE GENITIVE.

The Partitive Genitive forms with its governing substantive an ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASE, in which the governing word stands to its attribute in the relation of the part to the whole, as: Two pounds of silver, duo pondo argenti; the bravest of the soldiers, fortissimi militum. Attributive phrases containing a Partitive Genitive are called PARTITIVE PHRASES.

§ 371. The Partitive Phrases are either:

- 1) QUANTITATIVE, answering to the question, how much? as: Multum auri, much (of) gold.
- 2) or NUMERAL, answering to the question, how many? as: Pauci eorum, few of them.

In the former the governing word is an ABSOLUTE Form-adjective in the NEUTER SINGULAR, and the dependent word a QUANTITATIVE NOUN in the singular. In the latter the governing word is a DISJUNCT Form-adjective in the PLURAL of ANY GENDER, and the dependent word a Substantive in the PLURAL.

But the language has extended both of these forms, and applies the QUANTITATIVE form to the question what? (quid novi, what [of] news? nihil novi, aliquid novi, hoc novi, nothing new, something new, this [of] news); and the NUMERAL form to the question which? (quis eorum, which of them? uterque eorum, both of them; sapientissimi hominum, the wisest of men.)

§ 372. The QUANTITATIVE form of the Partitive Phrase in its original and primary application has been considered § 264. This form is applied not only to the Quantitative, but also to those Determinative Form-adjectives which have a similar meaning, as: 1) quid, both interrogative and indefinite; quid temporis, instead of quod tempus, what time? si quid iræ habes, instead of si quam iram habes (if thou hast any anger); 2) aliquid, as aliquid patientiæ, instead of aliqua patientia (some patience); 3) quicquam, as quicquam laboris, instead of ullus labor, any work; 4) the Determinatives hoc and id, as hoc or id laboris, instead of hic or is labor, that work; 5) the Relative quod, as quod reliqui fuit, instead of quod reliquum fuit, what was left.

Rem. 30. We notice here the phrases: id temporis, instead of eo tempore, at that time, id ætatis, instead of eā ætate, in that age. Livy, the poets, and later authors, have applied this form to other, even descriptive adjectives, as: exiguū campi, instead of exigua campi pars, a small part of the field; ultimū inopiæ, the last degree of poverty. Thus later writers use absolute neuter plurals, in order to designate real parts or even qualities of things, as: plana urbis, the level parts of the city; ultima Orientis, the farthest parts of the Orient; incerta belli, the uncertainties (chances) of war.

Rem. 31. The Parts (divisions) of TIME and SPACE in classical language are not expressed by Partitive Phrases, but by Attributive Adjective Phrases. Thus "the highest part of the mountain" is not expressed by summum montis, but by summus mons (literally, the highest mountain); the middle part of the city, media urbs (not medium urbis); extrēmo anno, in the last part of the year; vere primo, in the beginning (first part) of spring; dimidium iter (seldom itineris), the half-way. The adjectives subject to this construction are the indefinite ordinals (§ 261) and the definite ordinal primus.

§ 373. The Quantitative form of the Partitive Phrase, in regard to the DEPENDENT word, is applied to ABSOLUTE NEUTER DESCRIPTIVE ADJECTIVES, which, according to the analogy of the Quantitative nouns, are placed in the GENITIVE SINGULAR. This construction is expressed by English ordinary attributive phrases; as: nihil boni, nothing good, no good thing; aliquid novi, something new; multum mali, much evil. But this form is confined to the movable adjectives, while adjectives of common gender must agree in case with their governing absolute adjectives (§ 362, Rem. 19), as: nihil mortāle (not mortālis), nothing mortal.

Rem. 32. Here belong the Latin idioms nihil mihi reliqui est, nothing is left to me; nihil pensi habeo, I do not care for it (literally: I consider it as no weighed [that is, important] thing).

Rem. 33. The rule, given for quantitative adjectives (§ 264), that the partitive construction can not take place, if the governing adjective is in any other case than the nominative or accusative, holds good in all cases where Absolute Neuter Adjectives in the Singular are employed as governing words of partitive genitives. Thus we cannot say alicui novi, to something new, but must employ here a common attributive phrase with res (novæ alicui rei).

§ 374. In the NUMERAL Partitive Phrase the governing words are Disjunct Numeral Adjectives, referring to a Plural noun in a preceding sentence, whose number they either determine or indicate. This noun of reference is indicated by the Partitive Genitive, dependent on them, which therefore must be a Pronoun or a Determinative Adjective, as: How many of them? quam multi eorum; Some of us, quidam nostrum; Few of which, quorum pauci.

Since this Partitive Genitive represents the noun, to which the governing disjunct adjective refers, it must be in the same gender with it; and since disjunct adjectives agree in gender with the noun to which they refer, (§ 365), it may be said, that disjunct adjectives agree in gender with their partitive genitives, as: multæ eorum or multi eorum, according as multi refers to a masculine or feminine noun.

§ 375. The form of the NUMERAL Partitive Phrase has been extended to the question qui, which? so that DETERMINATE Adjectives may be used as the governing words of the phrase, as: quidam eorum, some of them; neuter eorum, neither of them; alter eorum, the other of them; quisque eorum, each of them; nemo eorum, none of them. It has been also extended to superlatives, as: sapientissimus eorum, the wisest of them; quorum fortissimi, the bravest of whom.

Sometimes also the form of the Numeral Partitive Phrase is applied to common attributive phrases, having numeral adjectives as attributes. Thus, instead of saying plerique milites, we may say plerique militum, most of the soldiers; instead of qui milites, we may say qui militum.

Rem. 34. Plural NOUNS as partitive genitives cannot be employed with uter, uterque, neuter, unus, omnes, and generally not with multi and the other definite numerals. Here the COMMON ATTRIBUTIVE phrase must be used, as utra filia, not utra filiarum; uterque filius, not uterque filiorum; omnes milites, not omnes militum. Unus is construed with the preposition ex or de. The construction with ex or de frequently is applied to the other definite numerals, and to multi and nonnulli. See § 443.

Rem. 35. When alii—alii, alter—alter are coordinate (§ 357, No. 5), they cannot be connected with NOUNS as Partitive Genitives, as in English, but assume the form of APPPOSITIONS to their nouns of reference, as:

Some of the soldiers were captured, others killed, Milites alii capti, alii interfecti sunt (literally: the soldiers, some were killed, others, etc.)

The one of the female captives crossed the river by a boat, the other by a ford, Captivæ fluvium, altera lintre, altera vado transiit (literally: The captives, the one by a boat, the other by a ford, crossed the river.)

§ 376. The PERSONAL PRONOUNS of the first and second persons in the Plural as Partitive Genitives assume the forms nostrum and vestrum, instead of nostri and vestri, as: Nemo nostrum, none of us; quis vestrum, which of you? The pronoun of the third person sui never is used as Partitive Genitive, and we must use ipsorum instead of it, as: They said, that many of them had perished (multos ipsorum, not sui). But when is, ea, id can be used as pronoun of the third person (§ 238), the partitive genitive "of them" is expressed by eorum or eārum.

EXERCISES.

ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES DENOTING PERSONS.—1. Indignum est a pari vinci aut superiōre, (sed) indignius ab inferiōre atque humiliōre.—2. Mortem timens beātus esse nequit.—3. Capitis<sup>1</sup> damnātus testamentum<sup>2</sup> facere legibus prohibetur.—4. Gajus, quum<sup>3</sup> a sapientibus despiceretur, a stultis laudatus est.—5. Omnes boni hujus viri mortem lugent (mourn for).—6. Bona aliēna appetentes<sup>4</sup> leges divīnas violant.—7. Ingens (enormous) fugientium multitudo insequentium<sup>5</sup> telis interfecta est.—8. Inhumāta (unburied) interfectōrum corpora aërem inquinaverunt.<sup>6</sup>—9. Omnes mei prudentiam tuam admirāti sunt.—10. Opportūnus<sup>7</sup> Bruti adventus (arrival) et tibi et tuis pergrātus fuisse videtur.—11. Cæsar locōrum angustis<sup>8</sup> suis auxilium ferre prohibitus est.—12. Hac Pompēji victoriā nostrōrum animi (courage) renovāti sunt.—13. Milites tantam Marii diligentiam (application) suis renuntiābant.<sup>9</sup>—14. Eisdem vincere et reconciliāre difficile est.—15. Quis Hannibalis victor fuit?—16. Cujus negligentia copiae nostrae repulsae sunt?—17. Cui soli obedire debemus?—18. Quem filii tui expectant?—19. A quo mundus universus regitur?—20. Quorum auxilio Gajus hæc perfecit?—21. Quibus Gajus hoc secretum prodidit?—22. Quos Verres avaritiā suā

<sup>1</sup> Caput, here: capital crime.—<sup>2</sup> Will.—<sup>3</sup> While.—<sup>4</sup> Appetere, to covet.—<sup>5</sup> Insequi, to pursue.—<sup>6</sup> Inquinare, to infest, infect.—<sup>7</sup> Opportūnus, opportune, timely.—<sup>8</sup> Locorum angustia, impracticable roads.—<sup>9</sup> To report

spoliavit, et a quibus idem Verres accusatus est?—23. Multi bona aliēna appetunt, sed pauci vi (ea) arripiunt<sup>1</sup> et tenent (keep).—24. Multōrum scelera a Deo solo puniuntur.—25. Platōnis philosophia a paucissimis intelligi videtur.—26. Quorundam opiniōnes tam obscurae sunt, ut nemini elucidari<sup>2</sup> possint.—27. Omnium consensus<sup>3</sup> grave hujus rei (point) argumentum esse videtur.—28. Alii arma abicientes effugiunt, alii fortiter pugnantes ab hostibus interficiuntur; reliqui, lintris nacti, Rhenum transeunt.—29. Qui nihil agunt, turpiter vivunt.—30. Eis, qui merita<sup>4</sup> sua modeste celare student, plus laudis tribuere<sup>5</sup> solēmus, quam ipsi expectare possunt.—31. Si quis fortunam suam experiri velit, amplissima ei occasio dabitur.—32. Si qui domum (home) redire voluerint (§ 347) veniam eis libentissime<sup>6</sup> dabo.

1. Greet in (by) my name all thy family.—2. Every one shall (imper.) defend his [friends].—3. It is disgraceful to be deserted by one's [followers].—4. Who should be willing to give up (derelinquere) so great advantages?—5. By whose arts has Troy been captured?—6. To whom doest thou owe such a change (mutatio) of thy affairs (res)?—7. By whom could so atrocious a crime be committed with impunity (§ 220, Rem. 6)?—8. Which [persons] disturb the quiet (quies) of the city, by nightly<sup>7</sup> revels?<sup>8</sup>—9. How many have committed (committere) their fortunes to this wicked (nequam) man?—10. Many are called (vocare), but few are elected (eligere).—11. The opinions of many are contrary to the measures of the president (princeps); but the rest defend him most persistently.<sup>9</sup>—12. By the frauds of some it has been effected (facere), that (ut) these most useful laws were rejected by the Senate.—13. This point (res) seems to be conceded by all.—14. The opinions of all are unfavorable<sup>10</sup> to you, because you covet (appetere) the property (bona) of others.—15. Some have confirmed, others have denied this rumor.—16. The others were compelled to surrender (se tradere) to the enemies.—17. These statues have been destroyed by somebody's wickedness (scelus).—18. If any one's authority could prevail<sup>11</sup> on me, I would be determined<sup>12</sup> by Plato's opinion.—19. The welfare of the republic must be dearer than life to every one.—20. This fruitless (sterilis) victory has been useful (prodesse) to nobody.—21. It pleased<sup>13</sup> (to) the general, to throw<sup>14</sup> some into prison (in vincula); [and] to strike<sup>15</sup> others by rods.<sup>16</sup>—22. The civil law (ius) has been written for (to) the careful (diligens).—23. The poor often unjustly accuse the rich, that (quod with subjunctive) they rob<sup>17</sup> their property.—24. Nobody's honor (existimatio) can be diminished (imminuere) by a drunken (ebrius) [man].—25. We fear those that (partic.) bring (ferre) gifts.—26. The words of the congratulating persons were very pleasant to Cicero.—27. It is often dangerous, to check<sup>18</sup> the course of one that hastens (partic.).—28. Some brought help to those who fought (partic.), and others restrained (impedire) those that fled (partic.).—29. He who (relat.) disdains<sup>19</sup> good councils must accuse himself (§ 280, Rem. 4), if he is left alone<sup>20</sup> by his friends.—30. Who (relative) prefer their own interest (utilitas) to the welfare of the country, are generally despised by their fellow-citizens.—31. To those who (partic.) intend (velle) to wage a war, arms are necessary.—32. To those who (relative) prefer pleasures to virtue, wealth (divitiæ) seems to be the highest good.—33. If any one has another opinion, I shall most willingly hear it.—34. If to any one a damage<sup>1</sup> will be done (ferre), he shall have (imperare) the fine (multa) of the accused.—35. If to any persons it should be more pleasant<sup>2</sup> (§ 347) to go away, I shall have no objection.<sup>3</sup>—36. Our ancestors were more liberal (magnificus), when (cum with indicative) they passed (ferre) this law.—37. It always has pleased (to) our ancestors, to defend the weak, but to restrain (cohibere) the mighty (potens).

<sup>1</sup> Arripere, to seize. <sup>2</sup> Elucidare, to make clear. <sup>3</sup> Consensus, unanimity. <sup>4</sup> Meritum, a merit. <sup>5</sup> To grant. <sup>6</sup> Libens, willing. <sup>7</sup> Nocturnus. <sup>8</sup> Commisatio. <sup>9</sup> Persistent, constant. <sup>10</sup> Inimicus, contrary. <sup>11</sup> Transire, to move, committere, to me. <sup>12</sup> To determine, tenere. <sup>13</sup> Placet. <sup>14</sup> Conficere. <sup>15</sup> Cadere. <sup>16</sup> A rod, virga. <sup>17</sup> Diripere. <sup>18</sup> Inhibere. <sup>19</sup> Aspernari. <sup>20</sup> To leave alone, derelinquere.

ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES, DENOTING THINGS.—1. Hic scriptor falsa et vera commiscet.<sup>4</sup>—2. Utilia pulchris præferre debemus.—3. Sæpe ignota reperire poteritis, si cognita bene novistis.—4. Dux, hæc et similia locutus, milites bono animo<sup>5</sup> esse jussit (chac).—5. Illa jam oblitterata<sup>6</sup> atque oblita videntur.—6. Hæc multo libentius<sup>7</sup> credimus, cum tu idem sentire (to think) videaris.—7. Eadem a Platone et Aristotele confirmantur.—8. Quid legis, mi Carole?—9. Quæ tibi ab amico tuo narrata sunt?—10. Omnia a Deo creata sunt.—11. Cujus rei Themistocles accusatus est?—12. Qui aliquid efficere student, laborare debent, ut id quod in animo habent,<sup>8</sup> bene fiat.—13. Si quid vultis, eras redite.—14. Quædam et dis et hominibus invisa sunt.—15. Nihil jucundius et suavius cogitari potest, quam hujus scriptoris oratio (style).—16. Fides mea nullâ re aut immutari<sup>9</sup> aut infirmari potest.—17. Homines semper sua defendere volunt.—18. Multa nobis promissa, sed pauca præstita<sup>10</sup> sunt.—19. Quæ mihi obscura sunt, tibi perspicua esse videntur.—20. Nihil unquam hoc spectaculo sublimius fuisse videtur.—21. Reliqua a militibus ablata sunt,<sup>11</sup> ejusque rei ipse testis<sup>12</sup> fuisti.

1. Human things are perishable.<sup>13</sup>—2. The foreknowledge (divinatio) of future things has been refused<sup>14</sup> to the human mind.—3. Philosophers try to investigate unknown things, and to understand (perspicere) better those which seem to be known.—4. The plans of Cæsar were disconcerted<sup>15</sup> by these unforeseen events (things).—5. Foolish<sup>16</sup> things cannot determine (movere) wise [men].—6. Such things were pleasant to many.—7. I often told (to) you the same.—8. Our friends doubt this.—9. We must concede these things.—10. Thou seemest to be willing to accuse me of this.—11. What doest thou do (agere), my son?—12. What did Gajus tell (to) you?—13. By what art thou terrified?—14. Of what are you in need?—15. To what did Gajus devote (tribuere) so much diligence?—16. The boys wish to do something.—17. All seem to be frightened by something.—18. That avaricious (avarus) man intends to give something to somebody.—19. Some things are so improper (indecorus), that they must be concealed.<sup>17</sup>—20. If thou hast heard anything, tell me.—21. Nothing can be more beautiful than a true friendship.—22. Nero could not be more delighted by anything, than by the agony<sup>18</sup> of the dying.—23. God alone knows (nosce) everything.—24. Give (tribuere) to everything its [proper] place and time.—25. I have never been more disconcerted by anything, than by this judgment.—26. Mortal [men] cannot foresee (divinare) the issue (exitus) of everything.—27. Many things induce (adducere) us to employ<sup>19</sup> most diligently the time allowed<sup>20</sup> to us.—28. Some things are neglected, others are treated with too much zeal.—29. Those that (relat.) neglect their own affairs, cannot transact (agere) those of others.—30. A few things were added (adjungere) by the ambassadors of the Helvetians.<sup>1</sup>—31. It is absurd to bring forward<sup>2</sup> anew (denuo) things which (part.) have been once refuted.—32. These things have been finished, but now we wish to commence (aggredi) the rest.

<sup>1</sup> Detrimentum. <sup>2</sup> It is more pleasant, pleasant. <sup>3</sup> Translate: It will be allowed to be done (ferre) by me for me. <sup>4</sup> To commend. <sup>5</sup> Bene animo, of cheerful mind, cheerful. <sup>6</sup> Oblitterated. <sup>7</sup> Libens, willing. <sup>8</sup> In animo habere, to intend. <sup>9</sup> Immutare, to change. <sup>10</sup> Præstare, to fulfil (a promise). <sup>11</sup> Auferre, to steal. <sup>12</sup> A witness. <sup>13</sup> Perishable, fragilis. <sup>14</sup> To refuse, prohibere. <sup>15</sup> To disconcert, conturbare. <sup>16</sup> Foolish, ineptus. <sup>17</sup> To conceal, reticere. <sup>18</sup> Supplicium. <sup>19</sup> Translate: induce us, that we employ. <sup>20</sup> To allow, concedere.

COMBINATION OF ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES.—1. All good men wish this.—2. Every wicked (improbus) man praises (extollere) the enemies of his country.—3. No honest (probus) man is in the habit of spreading (divulgare) falsehoods (false things).—4. Every new thing generally excites (commovere) the multitude.—5. Nothing remarkable (memorabilis) has happened (evenire) while you were absent.—6. This man does not write anything useless (inutilis).—7. Your friend neglects some important (gravis) things.—8. All this is unimportant.—9. All that is denied by our countrymen.—10. Something else occupies the mind of Cæsar.—11. A few other things must be done.—12. Roscius, deserted<sup>3</sup> by all others, is defended by Cicero alone.—13. This man, praised by every one else, is censured only by his accuser.<sup>4</sup>—14. These boys have devoted (tribuere) their labors to everything else.—15. Victory can be obtained by nothing else.—16. Nothing greater could happen.—17. Nobody else tries to prove such things.—18. The mind of nobody else could conceive (excogitare) such absurdities (ineptiæ).—19. Some great scholars have confirmed this opinion.—20. What else has produced (efficere) this change (mutatio) of public affairs (things)?—21. Call<sup>5</sup> everything by its own name.—22. Every learned [man] will most easily see (perspicere) this.—23. Every good (superlative) man most readily (libens) contributed<sup>6</sup> something.—24. If every one will fulfil<sup>7</sup> (§ 347) his own promises, we shall succeed.<sup>8</sup>—25. We demand, that (ut) to every one his own property be restored (reddere).—26. We have heard no such thing; but Gajus will be able to tell (narrare) (to) you something similar.—27. I suspected some such thing long since, but neglected this and innumerable other things.

DISJUNCT ADJECTIVES.—1. The Prussians (Borussus) invaded<sup>9</sup> Upper<sup>10</sup> Gaul, and the Austrians (Austriacus) the lower<sup>11</sup> [one].—2. If thou hadst accepted the smaller gift, thou wouldst now have got (ferre) the larger one.—3. Great thieves often escape, while (quum with subj.) small ones are punished.—4. Those who (relat.) lead<sup>12</sup> the happiest life, while (dum) they are living, often will lead the most wretched, when (quum) they will be dead.—5. When Cæsar had thus addressed (alloqui) Divitiacus, the latter stood (imperf.) looking on<sup>13</sup> the ground (terra).—6. While Sempronius was (present) thus attending<sup>14</sup> to the safety (salus) of the queen, the latter had already left the town.—7. Both the king and his wife had departed (proficisci); the former in order to (ut) collect<sup>15</sup> an army, the latter in order to attend to the safety of her family (§ 357, 6).—8. Artaxerxes intended to kill his brother Cyrus, but this one had escaped by the help of his mother.—9. The enemies intended to cross the river; but Cæsar, who had seen this before,<sup>16</sup> had sent armed [men] in order to (that) guard<sup>17</sup> the hither<sup>18</sup> bank.—10. The queen and her sister endeavored to escape, but both were captured by our [troops].—11. Both daughters of the king sought<sup>19</sup> safety by flight, but the one<sup>20</sup> was killed, the other was thrown<sup>21</sup> into prison (in vincula).—12. Gajus wished to buy both farms (terra); but he could obtain neither

<sup>1</sup> Helvetius. <sup>2</sup> To bring forward, proferre. <sup>3</sup> To desert, relinquere. <sup>4</sup> Accusator. <sup>5</sup> Appellare. <sup>6</sup> To contribute, conferre. <sup>7</sup> Implere. <sup>8</sup> The Latin says: "we have vanquished," in order to express a future success. <sup>9</sup> Ingredi. <sup>10</sup> Superior. <sup>11</sup> Inferior. <sup>12</sup> Agere. <sup>13</sup> To look on, contueri. <sup>14</sup> Consulere. <sup>15</sup> Conscribere. <sup>16</sup> To see something before, providere. <sup>17</sup> Tenere. <sup>18</sup> Citerior. <sup>19</sup> To seek, querere. <sup>20</sup> See § 357, 5. <sup>21</sup> Conjicere.

(§ 246).—13. Gajus has many books, Sejus owns<sup>1</sup> few, but the books of the latter are more valuable than those (§ 307) of the former.—14. Two votes were given to me, (and) to Gajus three.—15. This is the end of all these labors.—16. This was the beginning of all our evils.—17. This was the climax (summa, Gen. summa) of all his misery.—18. What else is friendship, than (quam) the connection (conjunctio) of two souls?—19. What was the opinion of thy family?—20. What will be the fate (sors) of the captives?—21. What is the source (fons) of these troubles (querela)?—22. Gajus' poems are beautiful, but thine are more so.<sup>2</sup>—23. Although the French<sup>3</sup> language<sup>4</sup> is very pretty,<sup>5</sup> still ours seems to be by far the better.<sup>6</sup>—24. Sempronius gave (to) me all books which his brother had left (relinquere).—25. Ambiorix defeated the Æduatici, who were the neighbors<sup>7</sup> of (transl. to) his kingdom.—26. Those men, whom thou hast hurt (ledere) so grievously,<sup>8</sup> will once (aliquando) accuse thee.—27. The royal<sup>9</sup> troops, whom Sempronius had led over<sup>10</sup> the river, were cut down<sup>11</sup> by the enemies.—28. All things which are determined<sup>12</sup> by weight (pondus) or measure (mensura) may (can) be given as a loan.<sup>13</sup>—29. No time, which thou hast spent<sup>14</sup> in (by) indolence, can ever be restored (reddere) to thee.—30. Most men wish to have a friend of such kind (talis), as they cannot be themselves.—31. The same [men], as had come, left the camp.—32. This is the same [thing], as I had shown to thee.—33. These are the best testimonies which can be brought forward.<sup>15</sup>

PARTITIVE GENITIVE.—1. Hic labor nemini vestrum quicquam prodesse<sup>16</sup> videtur.—2. Plerique incolarum gladio trucidati<sup>17</sup> sunt. Reliquorum vitam ducis lenitas<sup>18</sup> servavit.—3. Quis vestrum periculosa hujus expeditionis particeps<sup>19</sup> esse vult?—4. Nemo nostrum tantam laudem assequi poterit.—5. Omnium nostrum fides immutata est.—6. Duæ regis filiae salutem fugam petebant,<sup>20</sup> sed utraque earum occisa est.—7. Sociorum copiarum nihil stipendii acceperant.—8. Vos omnium harum virtutum nihil fere (almost) exhibetis,<sup>21</sup> nihil temperantiae,<sup>22</sup> nihil auctoritatis, nihil gravitatis.<sup>23</sup>—9. Si quid detrimenti respublica cepisset,<sup>24</sup> consules ab unoquoque accusarentur.—10. Quid æqui ac justis a legatis nostris impetrari potuit?—11. Hic juvenis nihil unquam stulti, nihil insulsi,<sup>25</sup> nihil falsi protulit.<sup>26</sup>—12. Templum illud insignis olim tabulas habuit; sed præstantissimæ earum vetustate<sup>27</sup> perierunt.—13. Constantinopolis urbs duabus partibus continetur (consists of), quarum alteram Turci,<sup>28</sup> alteram Græci inhabitant.—14. Nemo nostrum talem ignominiam unquam subiit.—15. Utrique vestrum amici nostri celebritas<sup>29</sup> jucundissima erit.—16. Magistratus alii nostrorum gladiis interfecti, alii a suis ipsorum civibus trucidati sunt.—17. Milites alii aliis itineribus effugerunt.—18. Duæ Ariovisti filii altera occisa, altera capta est (captæ sunt).—19. Cæsar Labienum jussit summum montem duabus legionibus occupare.—20. His operibus efficiebatur, ut infima urbs, si necesse esset, inundari<sup>30</sup> semper posset.

1. Our explorers (explorator) have not found any gold.—2. These mines<sup>31</sup> never have yielded (reddere) any silver.—3. We never saw any of them before.—4. If thou wilt find any gold, try (experiri) the lowest [part] of the mountain.—5. If you had some (partitice) pity, you would have given to me some oil<sup>1</sup> and wine.—6. They never had any fear.—7. How much evil is produced (efficit) by civil wars!—8. So much good is effected by firmness!—9. What (partitice) damage (detrimentum) can the republic suffer?—10. What just and fair [thing] has ever been done by this man?—11. Something more serious seems to have happened to thy brother.—12. We have never seen anything more prudent.—13. Nobody could tell anything new.—14. Nothing false ever stained<sup>2</sup> the mouth (os) of this man.—15. Nothing glad (letabilis) has been reported (referre) to any of us.—16. I did not hear anything certain.—17. None of you has ever heard anything similar.—18. Mithridates, the last of the kings of Pontus, perished by the treachery of his son Pharnaces.—19. The female captives endeavored to swim across<sup>3</sup> the river, but none of them could reach<sup>4</sup> the shore.—20. Some of us wish to peruse<sup>5</sup> these books.—21. These countries are now highly (§ 313) flourishing,<sup>7</sup> but few of them were known to the ancients (vetus).—22. Which of the two girls did address the queen?—23. But others of you, who have fought most bravely, will obtain immortal glory.—24. The rest of you will wait (expectare) till (dum) the first battle-line will have repulsed (repellere) the enemy.—25. None of these crimes will be unpunished.<sup>8</sup>—26. Some of these animals are covered (obductus) by hides (pellis), others by scales (squamæ).—27. Two wives of Ariovistus survived<sup>9</sup> (to) this battle; but both of them were killed afterwards.—28. All of you will try to accomplish (perficere) this.—29. Which of you wish rather to flee than to die?—30. Both of the brothers perished by the same murder (causes).—31. Both of them seem to have endured (ferre) much.—32. A multitude of women and children was found, many of whom were exhausted<sup>10</sup> by hunger and thirst.—33. The king admitted (admittere) these women, one of whom spoke thus (sic).—34. We found two causes of this disaster (clades), the one (alter) of which I shall now explain to you.—35. Some of the barbarians sought [their] safety by some, and others by other roads (iter).—36. The highest [part] of the hill was occupied by the enemies, before our troops could prohibit them.—37. Midnight<sup>11</sup> approached (appetere, imperf.) already, when (quum with indic.) our soldiers began to climb (ascendere) the walls of the town.—38. The highest part of the city was occupied by the Carthaginians, while (cum with subj.) the lowest was held by our soldiers.

<sup>1</sup> To own, possidere.—<sup>2</sup> Translate: more beautiful.—<sup>3</sup> Franco-Gallicus.—<sup>4</sup> Sermo.—<sup>5</sup> Perbellis.—<sup>6</sup> Translate: more preferable (præstabilis).—<sup>7</sup> Finitimus.—<sup>8</sup> Grievous, gravis.—<sup>9</sup> Regius.—<sup>10</sup> To lead over, traducere.—<sup>11</sup> To cut down, cadere.—<sup>12</sup> To be determined, contineri.—<sup>13</sup> As a loan, mutuo.—<sup>14</sup> To spend, transigere.—<sup>15</sup> To bring forward, proferre.—<sup>16</sup> To be of any use.—<sup>17</sup> Trucidare, to slay.—<sup>18</sup> Humanity.—<sup>19</sup> A partaker.—<sup>20</sup> Petere, to seek.—<sup>21</sup> To show.—<sup>22</sup> Moderation.—<sup>23</sup> Dignity.—<sup>24</sup> To suffer.—<sup>25</sup> Absurd.—<sup>26</sup> To utter.—<sup>27</sup> Vetustas, old age.—<sup>28</sup> The Turks.—<sup>29</sup> Celebrity.—<sup>30</sup> To overflow.—<sup>31</sup> A mine, metallum.

<sup>1</sup> Oleum.—<sup>2</sup> Perfect future.—<sup>3</sup> Inquinare.—<sup>4</sup> To swim across, transire.—<sup>5</sup> Assequi.—<sup>6</sup> Perlegere.—<sup>7</sup> Theophrastus.—<sup>8</sup> Impunitus.—<sup>9</sup> Superesse.—<sup>10</sup> Conficere.—<sup>11</sup> Translate: the middle [part] of the night.

CHAPTER FIFTH.

DIVISION AND FORMATION OF SENTENCES.

I. GENERAL THEORY.

§ 377. A SENTENCE or PROPOSITION, in its GRAMMATICAL acceptance, is a word, phrase, or combination of phrases, containing a PREDICATE, either expressed or understood.

Rem. 1. A sentence may consist of a single word, as: Veni, come! Non, no. Thus the three words of Cæsar: "Veni, vidi, vici" (I came, saw, and conquered), contain three coördinate sentences.

Rem. 2. A sentence need not contain a complete thought, or, as some grammarians express it, make complete sense. Else, many dependent sentences would be no sentences at all. The question, whether a sentence "makes complete sense" or not, belongs either to rhetoric or to logic. Grammar considers only the form of thought, and has nothing to do with its logical completeness.

§ 378. Sentences are divided:

1) According to their CONNECTION WITH EACH OTHER. In this respect they are either PRINCIPAL OR DEPENDENT;

2) According to the grammatical FORM of the PREDICATE. In this regard sentences are either FINITE, INFINITIVE, OR PARTICIPIAL sentences;

3) According to the connection of the THOUGHT with the SPEAKER, in regard to its REALITY. In this respect sentences are either AFFIRMATIVE OR NEGATIVE.

4) According to the relation of the speaker TO OTHER PERSONS. In this respect sentences are divided into DECLARATIVE, IMPERATIVE, OR INTERROGATIVE. When he intends other persons simply to hear and understand his words, the sentence is declarative; when he intends them to do something, the sentence is imperative; and when he intends them to answer something, the sentence is interrogative.

Rem. 3. We have given in the first chapters the elementary rules in regard to principal and dependent sentences, and shall consider this subject more accurately in the last book. In this chapter we consider the Sentences according to the second, third, and fourth divisions.

II. COÖRDINATION OF SENTENCES.

§ 379. The Coördination of Sentences is made, like that of the Phrases (§ 112), by the Copulative, Adversative, and Dis-junctive Conjunctions. But two classes, the CAUSAL and CONCLUSIVE (illative) coördination, are peculiar to the sentence alone.

Regarding Coördination in general, there are two points to be observed: 1) the correct use of the different coördinating conjunctions; 2) the correct position of the words in those coördinate sentences, which contain one or more words or phrases common to both. In the latter respect we must distinguish the common from the coördinate parts of the sentence (§ 114, § 123), and observe the following rule:

Arrange the common parts of two or more coördinate sentences so, that they either precede or follow ALL coördinate parts of EVERY ONE of the coördinate sentences.

Rem. 4. Common Predicates generally follow, common Subjects generally precede all the coördinate parts of the sentences. This follows from the general rules of coördination (§ 123). But for rhetorical reasons, and especially for the purpose of making coördinate objects more emphatic, a common predicate may stand immediately after the first coördinate sentence, and while some of the coördinate objects thus precede the common predicate, others immediately follow it, as: Gracchus was great both by his language and by his authority, Gracchus et oratione gravis fuit et auctoritate.

Rem. 5. If among several objects some are common and some coördinate, the common objects must precede the coördinate objects. This rule generally cannot be observed in English, where we cannot make objects precede their governing verbs. Thus, in the following sentence:

"He wounds Gajus and kills Sejus by treachery," the object "by treachery" is common, the objects Gajus and Sejus are coördinate. If we would proceed here strictly according to the rules on the coördination of phrases (§ 123), we would thus constitute the sentences:

He wounds Gajus by treachery, Gajum perfidiâ vulnerat.
He kills Sejus by treachery, Sejum perfidiâ interficit.

The coördinate parts are "Gajum vulnerat" and "Sejum interficit." We evidently cannot apply here the general rules of substitution (§ 123), since both coördinates are separated by a common object. But by observing the rule § 378, we make the common word perfidiâ precede all coördinate parts, and therefore translate the sentence thus:

Perfidiâ Gajum vulnerat et Sejum interficit.

If we had placed the object "perfidiâ" before "vulnerat," it would belong only to the former, not to the latter sentence; and if we had placed it before interficit, it would belong only to the latter, and not to the former.

The following sentence:

"He directs Labienus to enclose the city and reduce it by hunger," will be thus constituted:

He directs Labienus to enclose the city, Labienum urbem cingere jubet.
He directs Labienus to reduce the city by hunger, Labienum urbem fame cogere jubet.

Here the coördinate parts are: "cingere" and "fame cogere." By strictly proceeding according to § 123, we translate the sentence thus:

Labienum urbem cingere et fame cogere jubet; and this corresponds to the rule § 378, since the common words either precede or follow all the coördinate parts; the predicate jubet follows, and the common object urbem precedes. But by making both objects "urbem," "fame" precede the coördinates, we would obtain a sentence "urbem fame cingere et cogere jubet," which means "he directs to enclose and reduce the city by hunger," an evident nonsense.

We observe that the English language, on account of the impossibility of making the common object "city" precede the verbal objects "enclose" and "reduce," employs here a personal pronoun (it), or else it would be necessary to repeat the object "city." Neither is necessary in Latin.

§ 380. COPULATIVE COÖRDINATION.—We use here the Copulative Conjunctions et, ac, atque, que (§ 115), the same as in

6. Tamen corresponds to the English conjunctions "yet," "still," "however;" sed tamen, attamen, verumtamen to the English but still, but yet, but though. It may, like sed, be preceded by quidem in the first of the coördinate sentences.

Rem. 9. Adversative Propositions or Phrases often are connected asyn-detically (§ 120), when the opposition appears from the words themselves. It is especially used, when of two coördinate words the latter is negative. In this case it would be bad Latin, to use an adversative conjunction, as:

Ulysses (but) not Agamemnon has taken Troy, Ulixes, non Agamemnon, Trojam cepit.—The Senate wishes to vanquish, but not to oppress these States, Senātus has civitates vincere, non opprimere vult.

§ 382. The DISJUNCTIVE Coördination connects two or more propositions or phrases (called ALTERNATIVES), only one of which is represented as a reality, without deciding which, excluding at the same time all other alternatives.

Rem. 10. A Disjunctive Coördination contains four requisites: 1) the coördinate members must be different, 2) only one of them must be represented as a reality, 3) it must be left undecided, which of them is a reality; 4) all other alternatives must be excluded. If a disjunctive coördination contains all these 4 elements, we call it COMPLETE, as: Ego hic aut in conspectu vestro moriar, aut perferam legem, I shall either die here under your eyes, or shall carry the law. The alternatives are "I shall die" and "I shall carry the law." They are 1) different. 2) Only one of them is represented as a reality; 3) it is not decided, which of the two will happen; and 4) all other alternatives are excluded. Hence the disjunction is a complete one.

But when one or the other of the specified requisites is wanting, the disjunction is called an improper one. Thus in the following disjunction "The old Britons used either brass or iron rods in place of coin, Britanni veteres aut ære aut taleis ferreis pro nummo utebantur," both alternatives, brass and iron rods, are represented as real, and hence the second and third requisites of a complete disjunction are wanting. See Rem. 12.

§ 383. The DISJUNCTIVE CONJUNCTIONS are aut, vel, sive (seu) and the enclitic ve. The first three generally are placed before each of the alternatives, while ve is used only to connect single words, and only then, when they belong to the less important members of the sentence (as duobus tribusve diebus, in two or three days). By aut—aut we declare either the decision between the proposed, or the exclusion of all other alternatives as essential; by sive—sive we declare either the one or the other as unessential. Aut—aut always is translated by either—or, sive—sive is translated by either—or, or by whether—or; the latter is the case, if the proposed alternatives, introduced by

sive—sive are dependent clauses, and therefore have a predicate, different from that of the principal sentence. See CONDITIONAL CLAUSES (Book VI.)

The disjunction by vel—vel represents the alternatives as depending on the will or the conception of the speaker or of the subject or object of the action, and in such case it takes the place of either aut—aut or sive—sive.

Examples:

1. Aut—aut. *Clamārun*t, eum sibi carnificem novum exortum esse, qui aut mori aut servire jubeat, They exclaimed, that he had arisen as a new kind of executioner, commanding the citizens to die or to be slaves. Liv. 2, 35. All other alternatives, but the two stated ones (mori and servire) are excluded, and this exclusion is represented as the essential point of the sentence.

Demonstrābant, judicium fieri oportere, ut aut uterque inter se, aut neuter satisfaceret, They showed, that the decision must be this, that either both of them should give security to each other, or neither. Cic. pro Quinct. 8. Here the alternatives are: "Both shall give security" or "neither shall give security." The other alternative, that only one of them should give security, is excluded by aut—aut, and this is represented as the essential point of the sentence.

2. Sive—sive. a) Either—or. Ita sive casu, sive consilio deorum immortalium, quæ pars civitatis Helvetiorum insignem calamitatem populo Romano intulerat, ea princeps pœnas persolvit; Thus either by accident or by the will of the immortal gods, that part of the state of the Helvetians, which had inflicted a signal disaster on the Roman people, paid the penalty first. Cæsar Bell. Gall. 1, 12. Here it is represented as unessential, to decide between the two alternatives (accident or will of the gods), one of which had brought punishment on the Helvetians.

b) Whether—or. Dicunt, facilem esse rem, seu maneat, seu profiscantur, si modo unum omnes sentiant, They said, that the thing was easy, whether they stayed, or departed, if but all would have the same opinion. Cæsar B. G. 5, 31. Here by facilem esse rem the safety of the army is meant, and the decision between the two alternatives (whether they would stay or depart) is represented as unessential, since in either case the army would be safe, if but, etc.

3. Vel—vel. Mihi quidem concedunt omnes, ut vel ea defendam, quæ Pompejus velit, vel taceam, vel etiam ad nostra me studio referam litterarum; To me indeed they all concede, either to defend the cause of Pompey (ea quæ Pompejus velit), or to keep silent, or to retire to our literary occupations. Cic. Fam. 1, 8. Here the decision among the three alternatives is not declared unessential, and hence sive—sive cannot be used. But the exclusion of all other alternatives is declared essential, since the author implies, that only these and no other alternatives were allowed to him. Nevertheless not aut—aut, but vel—vel is used, since the decision among the stated alternatives (following the cause of Pompey, keeping silent, or occupying himself with literature) depended on the speaker.

(Helvetii) Allobrogibus sese vel persuasuros existimabant, vel vi coactū.

ros, ut per suos fines eos ire paterentur, The Helvetians believed, that they would either persuade the Allobrogiens, to let them pass through their territory, or to compel them by force (to do it). The alternatives are "inducement by persuasion" or "inducement by force." The decision between these is declared as unesential in regard to the passing of the territory. This would require sive—sive. But since the decision depended partly on the Helvetians, partly on the Allobrogiens, vel—vel were the proper conjunctions for this case.

Rem. 11. Often alternatives, containing substantially the same propositions, may be expressed by any of the three conjunctions, according to the conception of the speaker. Thus Cæsar says (B. G. 4, 7): Germāni postulant, ut (Romāni) vel sibi agros attribuant, vel patiantur eos tenere, quos armis possederint, The Germans ask, that the Romans might assign lands to them, or allow them to keep those they had conquered. And Livy says (2, 30) Latini petebant a senatu, ut aut mitterent subsidium, aut se ipsos arma capere sinerent; The Latins asked the Senate, either to send them help, or to allow them to take up arms themselves.

In both places the alternatives are substantially the same, and apparently have exactly the same relation. In both instances it was the object of the petitioners, to exclude all other alternatives but the ones proposed; the decision in both places depended on the will of the Romans. But the connection shows, that in the place of Livy the Latins represented the alternatives as an imperative necessity, while, in the place of Cæsar, the Germans appeal to the fairness of the Romans. Therefore Livy employed aut—aut, and Cæsar vel—vel.

Rem. 12. The Disjunctive Coördination often has the meaning of a Copulative Coördination, and the conjunctions either—or are then equivalent to partly—partly, not only—but also, both—and. These belong to the Improper Coördinations (Rem. 10), as: Omnes reliquarum cohortium centuriones aut vulnerati aut occisi erant; All the centurions of the other cohorts were either (partly) wounded, or (partly) killed. Cæsar B. G. 2, 25. Here the second requisite of a Disjunctive Coördination, that only one of the Alternatives must be a reality, evidently is wanting, since both alternatives took place, but partly the one, partly the other. But since every other alternative (except that of being killed or wounded) is excluded, and this is represented as the essential point, Cæsar took here the conjunctions aut—aut.

Tanta est expectatio vel animi vel ingenii tui, ut ego te obsecrare non dubitem, sic ad nos revertere, etc., So great is the hope in (either) thy courage (or) and thy mind (or both, thy courage and thy mind), that I do not hesitate to implore thee, etc. Cic. Fam. 2, 1. This is evidently a Copulative Coördination, but Cicero represents it disjunctively, because some had hope in the courage, and others in the mind of Cicero, and he uses vel—vel, because these alternatives depended on the individual opinions of the Romans. Disjunctions of this kind can only be expressed by aut—aut or vel—vel, not by sive—sive.

Rem. 13. When Sentences with Disjunctions begin with negative words (nemo, nihil, nunquam, non, etc., see §§ 408, 409), or when the Alternatives virtually have a negative meaning so that they may be expressed by neither—nor, the disjunctions are either introduced by the negative conjunctions neque—neque (see § 409, 3), or by aut—aut, sometimes by vel—vel, but never in good prose by sive—sive; as:

Nemo inquam meum potius neque orator fuit, qui quinquam meliorem quam se putaret, 7. . . . Here the conjunctions neque—neque must not be translated by neither—nor. . . . Quam potius enim id est, quod aut potius gratius aut sibi iucundius aut revera honestius . . . . . . Ita enim mirari oportet, tantum vel animi fuisse in illo ordine vel auctoritatis, . . . . . . Am. 18, 51.

Si unquam mea causa quicquam aut sensit aut fecit, si he ever either felt or did any- . . . . . . Ita enim mirari oportet, tantum vel animi fuisse in illo ordine vel auctoritatis, . . . . . . Fam. 1, 9, 12.

The conjunctions vel—vel in such negative Propositions have always a copulative meaning. Copulative affirmative conjunctions cannot be used in such coördinations unless the coördinated words are synonymous, or conceived as such, as: Nec tantum matrem de curam sentiat mors P. Cædici, etc., etc.; Nor did Clodius's death cause to the Senate so much grief and mourning that etc. Cic. Mil. 5.—Nulla res tanta ac tam difficili, quam Q. Catulus non consilio regere possit; No matter is so great and so difficult, that Q. Catulus should be unable to direct it by his mind. Cic. Leg. Man. 20. In both of these sentences the use of vel—vel would be improper.

Rem. 14. When sive—sive have predicates of their own, being rendered by 'whether . . . or,' they must be considered as CONDITIONAL CONJUNCTIONS (= vel si . . . vel si; see P. II, p. 737, Obs. 5). Their predicate is in the INDICATIVE, unless the subjunctive is required according to the general rules (see P. II, p. 737 foll.); as: Veniet tempus, sive retardabis, sive properabis; The time will come, whether you will retard or hasten your course. Cic. Tusc. 1, 33.

This coördination by 'whether . . . or' having the meaning of 'be it that . . . or that,' must be distinguished from the INTERROGATIVES 'whether . . . or,' mentioned p. 311, § 423.

§ 384. The Disjunctive Conjunctions are more rarely used singly in Latin, than in English, so that in translating from English into Latin, it must be considered as the rule, to translate the single "or" by the double Latin conjunction.

Rem. 15. Sive (seu) and vel mostly occur with potius, in order to modify or correct an expression, as: Tum illam incredibilem celeritatem seu potius audaciam protuli, then did I mention that incredible quickness or rather boldness. Cic. Quint. 29, 88. Dolabella meus, vel potius noster, my or rather our Dolabella. Cic. Fam. 2, 16, 5.—In ardore caelesti, qui ather vel calum nominatur. Cic. Nat. Deor. 1, 15, in the heavenly fire, which is called ether or sky. In the last example, vel (without potius) denotes different expressions of the same idea.

The single vel is also used with a restrictive force, accompanied with a conditional clause (or at least), as: Ubi magnopere orabant, ut sibi auxilium ferret, vel, si id facere prohiberetur, exercitum modo Rhenum transportaret, The Ubians asked urgently, that he might bring them help, or at least, if he should be hindered from doing this, to transport only the army over the Rhine. Cæs. B. G. 4, 16.

The single conjunction aut mostly is used in questions, beginning with an interrogative adjective or adverb, when the latter forms one of the alternatives, or when it has the force of "or else," "or also," "or perhaps," or with single, less important members of the sentence, as: Quid primum querar? aut unde potissimum ordiar? Of what shall I first complain, or whence shall I begin first? Cic. Rose. Am. 11. Sed plane quando aut ubi te visurus sim, nisi ad me scripseris, ne suspicari quidem possum, But really, when or where I shall see you, I cannot even suspect, unless you write me. Cic. Fam. 3, 6. Si hoc non crederis, nonne statim ad Aquilium aut ad eorum aliquem qui consuluntur concurrisses? If thou didst not fear this, wouldst thou not immediately have run to Aquilius, or (else) to some lawyer? Cic. Quinct. 16, 53. Romæ aut circa urbem multa ea hieme prodigia facta, At Rome or about the city many prodigies happened that winter. Liv. 21, 62. Titurius sero facturos clamitabat, cum majores manus hostium convenissent, aut cum aliquod calamitatis in proximis hibernis esset acceptum, Titurius exclaimed, that they would be too late, when a greater force of the enemy should appear, or (perhaps) in the next winter-quarters some disaster had happened. Cæs. B. G. 5, 29. Appius censebat, uno aut altero arrepto quieturos alios, Appius was of opinion, that when one or the other was arrested, the others would be quiet. Liv. 2, 23, 15.

§ 385. The CONCLUSIVE (illative) Conjunctions are ergo (therefore, consequently, hence), igitur (therefore), and itaque (therefore). The conjunction igitur represents the predicate as a natural consequence of the previous proposition. Itaque is limited to actual facts, which are represented as a consequence of those facts mentioned in the previous sentences. By ergo an inference or logical conclusion is made.

EXAMPLES:—Non solum hostis, sed ipsos civis suos timebant. Multa igitur blandimenta per id tempus plebi ab Senatu data, They were not only afraid of the enemy, but of their own fellow-citizens. Therefore many civilities were shown through this time by the Senate to the Plebeians.

Nemo liber Phocionem ausus est sepelire. Itaque a servis sepultus est; No free person dared to bury Phocion; therefore he was buried by slaves.

Homo es, ergo errare potes, Thou art a man, hence canst thou err.

Rem. 16. Igitur takes often the place of either ergo or itaque; but the reverse is not the case in good prose. Ergo and itaque generally open the sentence; but igitur generally is preceded by one word of the proposition; sometimes even by two. When the sentence, without igitur, would begin with a preposition, igitur occupies either the third or the first place (ab hostibus igitur, or igitur ab hostibus). Thus the Latin generally says Quid est igitur, quis est igitur, nemo est igitur.

Rem. 17. When the English word therefore is an adverb, it must be translated by iccirco or ideo. See P. II, p. 281, 7.

§ 386. The CAUSAL Connection of sentences is either subordinating or coordinating. The SUBORDINATING causal conjunctions are quia, quoniam, quod, quum (see Book VI.); the COORDINATING causal conjunctions are nam, enim, namque and etenim, all corresponding to the English conjunction for.

Of these nam, namque, and etenim stand at the beginning of the sentence, while enim (the most usual of them) occupies the second, and the third place in the same instances as igitur (quid est enim, nihil est enim, etc.), as: Duas auris habemus, sed os unum; plus enim (or nam plus, namque plus, etenim plus) audire debemus quam loqui, We have two ears, but one mouth; for we must more hear, than speak.

GENERAL REMARK.—Not only principal or simple sentences, but also dependent clauses may be connected by any of the different methods of coordination, or coördinate clauses may be dependent on the same principal sentence by the same subordinating conjunctions. In the former case which is called COORDINATION OF CLAUSES, each of the dependent clauses retains its own coördinating conjunction, as: Postea, vel quod tanta res erat, vel quod nondum audieramus, Bibulum in Syriam venisse, vel quia administratio hujus belli mihi cum Bibulo pene est communis, scribenda hæc ad vos putavi. Afterwards I thought, that I ought to write this to you, either because the matter was so important, or because we had not yet heard, that Bibulus had come to Syria, or because the administration of this war is almost common to me with Bibulus.

In the latter case, which is called SUBORDINATION OF COORDINATE SENTENCES, the subordinating conjunction stands only once before all the coördinate propositions in Latin, while in English it may be repeated or stand after the coördinates, as:

Obsecravit eos, ut aut secum jure contenderent, aut injuriam sine ignominia impo- nent; He adjured them, that they either should go to law with him, or do him wrong without disgrace.

Here we may say in English, but not in Latin: either that they should go—, or that they might do, etc., while it would be barbarous Latin to say: Obsecravit eos, aut ut—contenderent, aut ut injuriam—imponerent.

In order to translate English coördinates, dependent on a principal sentence, into Latin, the coördinates should first be constituted separately, repeating the subordinating conjunction before each of the coördinates; and in combining them, the subordinating conjunctions are dropped, and placed only once immediately before the first coördinating conjunction.

For special rules on the subordination of coördinates, see Book VI, p. 474 foll.

III. INFINITIVE SENTENCES.

§ 387. The Latin INFINITIVE is either a SUBJECT, or an OBJECT, or a PREDICATE-INFINITIVE (§ 72). Sentences which have a PREDICATE-INFINITIVE, are called INFINITIVE SENTENCES. They are either independent sentences or clauses (Infinitive-clauses). A predicate-infinitive of the Present in independent sentences often is used instead of the Imperfect (not Perfect) Indicative in historical style, and therefore is called HISTORICAL INFINITIVE.

The Historical Infinitive, which very rarely occurs in CLAUSES, is chiefly used instead of imperfects of repeated action, especially when several predicates of repeated action are coördinated with each other (For more particular rules see P. II, § 575, p. 311 foll.); as: Jugurtha ubi primum adolevit, non se luxu neque inertia corrumpendum dedit, sed, ut mos gentis illius est, equitare, jaculâri, cursu cum æqualibus certare, et, cum omnis gloria antefret, omnibus tamen carus esse; ad hoc pleraque tempora in venando agere, leonem atque alias feras primus aut in primis ferire; plurimum facere, minimum ipse de se loqui. As soon as Jugurtha was grown, he did not give himself to the ruining influences of luxury or indolence, but, as it is the custom of that nation, rode, threw darts, vied with his companions in running, and, though he surpassed all, nevertheless was dear to all. Besides this, he spent most of his time in hunting, he killed the lion and other wild beasts first or among the first; he did a great deal, but spoke very little of himself.

§ 388. Infinitive CLAUSES are chiefly employed to translate English clauses introduced by the conjunction that, and sometimes also to translate English Object-Infinitives. The subject of Infinitive-clauses always stands in the accusative and the predicate in the infinitive. Every word of the sentence, which must agree with the Subject, as predicative adjectives or nouns (if movable), and the Participles of the compound tenses of passive and deponent verbs, must be placed in the ACCUSATIVE, and agree with such subjects also in gender and number. Subjects of this kind are called SUBJECT-ACCUSATIVES, in opposition to the OBJECT-ACCUSATIVES, and the whole construction is termed: Construction of the Accusative with the Infinitive.

EXAMPLES:—Epicūrus dicit, hominum animos unā cum corporibus interire, Epicurus says, that the souls of men perish together with the bodies. Here the Subject-accusative animos and the Predicate-infinitive interire form together the PREDICATIVE PHRASE. Cicero ait, hominum animos immortalis esse, Cicero says, that the souls of men are immortal. Here the Predicate phrase is: animos immortalis esse, the Predicative Adjective immortalis agreeing with the Subject-accusative in case and number.—Marcus scribit, uxōrem suam aegrōtam esse, Marcus writes, that his wife is sick. Here the Predicative (movable) Adjective aegrōtam agrees with the Subject-Accusative uxōrem, in case, gender, and number.

Rem. 18. PREDICATE-INFINITIVES may be active as well as passive, as: Gajus existimat, hanc causam a Sejo male defendi, Gajus believes, that this case is badly defended by Sejus. Here the predicative phrase has a passive predicate (causam defendi).—Dux nuntiat, hostis a nostris victos esse, The general reports, that the enemies have been defeated by our troops. Here the participle victos in the passive predicate phrase hostis victos esse must agree with the subject-accusative hostis in case, gender, and number.

Rem. 19. The beginner must closely distinguish SUBJECT-ACCUSATIVES and PREDICATE-INFINITIVES on the one part, and OBJECT-ACCUSATIVES and OBJECT-INFINITIVES on the other. All four may occur in the same sentence, and it often would be impossible to understand sentences of this kind without making these distinctions. Constituting the single phrases and analyzing them according to the general rules are the only means for understanding sentences of this kind. Thus in the following sentence, we would proceed in this way: Constat, hominem solum cælum intueri posse. Here we have three Accusatives and two Infinitives. Granting, that there is no Subject-infinitive in the sentence, of the two infinitives intueri and posse one must be an Object-infinitive and the other a Predicate-infinitive. But we know, that posse belongs to the verbs governing an Object-infinitive (§ 80). Hence intueri must be an Object-infinitive, so much the more as according to § 79 the Object-infinitive precedes its governing verb. We know therefore that posse must be a Predicate, and that its subject must be an Accusative. Now we have two nouns which possibly may be the subjects of posse, either hominem or cælum, one of which must therefore be a Subject-accusative, and the other an Object-accusative. Supposing now, that we should take the accusative cælum to be the subject, the predicative phrase would be cælum posse, the heaven can, and in connection with the object-infinitive intueri we would come to the translation: Heaven can behold. But this phrase would make no sense, and it follows that not cælum, but hominem must be the Subject-infinitive (hominem intueri posse, that man can behold). Now it is easy, to recognize at once cælum as the object of intueri and solum as the attribute of hominem. We translate therefore: It is known, that man alone can behold heaven. At the same result we would arrive, by simply observing the position of the words, since the subject, if we follow the general rules of combination, precedes the objects, so that hominem immediately presents itself as the subject of the infinitive clause. But it is better for the beginner, not to rely alone on the position of the words, because there are innumerable deviations from the regular position from the reasons indicated page 86.

§ 389. The Personal Pronouns, which as Nominative-subjects generally are omitted in Latin, must generally be expressed as Accusative-subjects, as: Gajus says, that I hold this opinion, Gajus dicit, me hanc opinionem habere. The pronoun of the third person, whether Subject-accusative, or Object, in Infinitive-clauses always is sui, sibi, se (not eum, etc.), if it has the (logical) subject of the principal verb as antecedent.

Gajus believes, that he (Gajus) is loved by Sejus, Gajus credit, se a Sejo amari.—Atticus thinks, that this has been useful to him, Atticus existimat, hoc sibi (not ei) utile fuisse.—The ambassadors announced, that this business had been accomplished by them, Legati nuntiavērunt, hoc negotium a se perfectum esse.—Gajus thinks, that Sejus is envious of him, Gajus putat, Sejum sui invidum esse.

Rem. 20. The Possessives of the 3d person (his, her, its, their) in Infinitive-clauses must be translated by suis (not by ejus or eorum), when they have the Subject of the Principal sentence as antecedent, as: Gajus is of opinion, that his horse is the quickest of all, Gajus existimat, equum suum (not ejus) omnium celerrimum esse.

Rem. 21. The pronouns is, ea, id are used in Infinitive-clauses, if they neither refer to the Subject of the Principal sentence as Antecedent, nor to a noun in the Infinitive-clause, which according to § 238 would require the use of sui, sibi, se, as: The Sequanians, after they had received Ariovistus, saw that he (Ariovistus) had their towns in his power, Sequani, postquam Ariovistum receperant, intellexerunt, eum (not se) oppida sua (not eorum) in sua (not ejus) potestate habere.

Here we must use eum, because the antecedent is neither the subject of the principal sentence, nor does it stand in the infinitive-clause. We say oppida sua, because the antecedent (Sequani) is the subject of the principal sentence. We say in sua potestate, because the antecedent of sua (Ariovistus) has become by the word eum the subject of the Infinitive-clause. It is true that the two words sua will now have different antecedents, which might make the sense ambiguous. But when the sense in itself is clear, the Latin usage authorizes such apparent ambiguities. However, in instances of this kind we may employ the form-adjective ipse instead of sui, sibi, se, and ipsius (ipsorum) instead of suis. So it would have been correct in the preceding example to have said either ipsorum oppida instead of oppida sua, or in ipsius potestate instead of in potestate sua.

Let us now express the mentioned sentence in a slightly different way, as: The Sequanians, after they had received Ariovistus, saw, that their towns were in his power, Sequani, postquam Ariovistum receperant, intellexerunt, oppida sua (not eorum) in ejus (not sua) potestate esse. Here oppida sua must remain the same as in the former sentence, since the Sequanians are in both sentences the subject of the principal sentence. But the words "in his power," which in the former sentence were translated by in potestate sua, must now be expressed by in ejus potestate, since the antecedent of his (Ariovistus) no more stands in the infinitive-clause.

Since the Latin language has three words to express our personal pronoun (is, ipse, and sui), and since to these three words may be added the dis-junct demonstratives hic and ille, which likewise may be used with the force of a personal pronoun (§ 364, R. 22), it frequently happens, that it is utterly impossible to render Latin sentences literally into English, so as to make the sense clear. Thus in the following sentence of Caesar (B. G. 1. 34). Ariovistus respondit: Si quid ipsi a Cesare opus esset, sese ad eum venturum fuisse; et quid ille se velit, illum ad se venire oportere. In this sentence the words ipse, ille, and se all have the force of pronouns of the third person, and the place literally would be thus translated: Ariovistus answered: If to him anything was necessary (if he wanted anything) from Caesar, he would have come to him; if he wished anything of him, he ought to come to him. The meaning of the coördinate (if he wished, etc.), is here entirely obscure in the English version, and we ought to translate: but Caesar ought to come to him (emphatically), if he wished anything of him.

§ 390. The Predicate-Infinitive in infinitive-clauses stands either in the Present or in the Perfect (of either voice). Whether we use the one or the other, depends on the relation which the predicate of the Infinitive-clause has to that of the Principal sentence. When the time of the Predicate-infinitive is conceived as happening before that of the principal predicate, we use the PERFECT-INFINITIVE; else the PRESENT-INFINITIVE must be used, even if in English a past tense is employed, which in this language always is the case when the principal predicate is in a past tense. This tense in English is the Pluperfect, when the action of the CLAUSE is prior to the action of the principal predicate in a past tense.

EXAMPLES:—Gajus believed, that the enemies had been defeated, Gajus putavit, hostis victos esse (the defeating precedes the believing; hence perfect-infinitive).—Gajus saw, that his brother was absent, Gajus vidit, fratrem suum absentem esse (the absence happened at the same time, as it was seen; hence Present-Infinitive).—I hear, that Gajus has been sick, Audio Gajum aegrotum fuisse (the sickness has existed before it was heard from: hence Perfect-Infinitive).—I wish, that Gajus would arrive, Cupio, Gajum adventre (the arriving cannot precede the wishing, but must follow it; hence Present).—He gave directions, that the field should be ploughed, Jussit, agrum arari (the ploughing does not precede, but follows the direction; hence Present-Infinitive).

Rem. 22. For the use of the infinitives of the Periphrastic Conjugations, see P. II, p. 134 foll.; p. 630 foll.

§ 391. When a Finite Clause is dependent on an Infinitive Clause, the predicate of the former generally stands in the Subjunctive, subject to the law of consecution. The tense of the Subjunctive however generally is not determined by the Predicate-infinitive, but by the Principal Predicate of the whole sentence.

The Germans said, that they intended to keep the lands which they had taken by arms, Germani dixerunt, se agros, quos armis cepissent, tenere velle. Here the relative clause "which they had taken" is dependent on an infinitive clause, and consequently must be placed in the Subjunctive. The Tense of this subjunctive is not determined by the governing infinitive (velle), which would require a Perfect subjunctive, but by the Principal Predicate of the whole sentence (dixerunt), which requires a Pluperfect.

Cicero wrote, that he was daily expecting letters, because he was very much troubled by the health of his daughter, Cicero scripsit, se litteras quotidie expectare, quia filiae valetudine vehementer angeretur. Here the predicate of the clause angeretur is in the subjunctive, because it is dependent on an Infinitive-clause, and in the Imperfect, because its tense is determined by the Principal Predicate scripsit of the whole sentence.

Rem. 23. When COMPARATIVE PERIODS are introduced by "that," and must be expressed by a Latin infinitive-clause, the Nominative-subject not only of the first but also of the second member generally is made an Accusative, and the common predicate always stands in the Infinitive. This is also the rule, when the predicates are different. But sometimes the second member is treated like a dependent clause, and then its predicate must have a Finite Form, and be placed in the Subjunctive. For these exceptions see Book VI. (comparative clauses).

I assert, that Philip was greater than Alexander, Ajo Philippum majorem fuisse quam Alexandrum (or majorem fuisse Alexandro. See § 310).—It is more just, that a guilty person should be acquitted, than that an innocent one should be condemned, Justius est nocentem absolvi, quam innocentem damnari.

Rem. 24. Infinitive Clauses are connected by coördination by means of the same conjunctions, and according to the same rules, as Independent Propositions. The conjunction "that" in the English clauses is here sometimes repeated, sometimes not. It generally is repugnant to the English idiom, to make a causal coördination dependent on the conjunction "that," while in Latin causal coördinations are frequently placed in the construction of the accusative with the infinitive. CONCLUSIVE Coördinations in English generally assume a double coördination, a copulative and conclusive conjunction (and therefore). In Latin the COPULATIVE conjunction must be omitted.

Gajus dicit, hunc praesentem, illum (vero) absentem fuisse, Gajus says, that the latter had been present, but that the former had been absent.—Gajus dixit, se utrumque contemnere; nihil enim fedius esse quam ejusmodi inimicitias, Gajus said, that he despised both; for (that) nothing was more abominable than such an enmity. [Here the conjunction "that" ought to be omitted in English; but the proposition, introduced by for, can never be made a finite clause or sentence in Latin, when it is coördinate to an infinitive-clause]. Gajus narravit, muros fortiter a nostris defensos esse; hostis igitur se recepisse, Gajus reported, that the walls had been bravely defended by our troops, and that therefore the enemies had retreated. (We cannot say in Latin "et hostis igitur;" but must omit the copulative conjunction.)

§ 392. The Principal Predicate very frequently is placed after the Infinitive clause in Latin, and especially, when the latter is short, as: Gajus se heri advenisse dicit, Gajus says, that he arrived yesterday.—Dux castra moveri jussit, The general gave orders, that the camp should be moved.

Rem. 25. Every one of the infinitive-clauses, given as examples, might assume an arrangement according to this rule. The beginner ought to make use of this form, whenever the infinitive-clause has no dependent clauses, especially when the principal sentence consists only of a predicative phrase.

§ 393. The English conjunction "that" is translated either

Such attributive participles in connection with the words dependent on them, when they must be resolved into English clauses, are called: PARTICIPIAL CLAUSES.

Rem. 31. When and how English clauses may be changed into Participial clauses, will be shown Book VI. The grammatical form, in which these clauses appear, is that of a common attributive phrase, except in the case of the ABSOLUTE ABLATIVES. See § 395.

§ 395. The ABSOLUTE ABLATIVES form a Predicative Phrase, consisting of a Substantive (noun, pronoun, absolute or disjunct adjective) in the Ablative, as Subject, and a Participle agreeing with it in gender, number, and case as Predicate. Clauses in which the absolute ablatives form the predicative phrase are called ABSOLUTE PARTICIPIAL CLAUSES, while those participial clauses in which the participle agrees like a common attribute with a substantive of the principal sentence, are called: ATTRIBUTIVE PARTICIPIAL CLAUSES.<sup>1</sup>

Rem. 32. Every adverbial clause (i. e. a clause introduced by an adverbial conjunction, as 'while, after, because, although, if', see P. II, p. 488) may be expressed in the form of ablatives absolute if the subject of the clause is different from that of the principal sentence. P. II, p. 179.

§ 396. The form of the Absolute Participial Clause is chiefly used, when a clause, introduced by one of the temporal conjunctions after, when, or while, has a subject, different from that of its principal sentence. But in order to employ this construction it is necessary, 1) that clauses, whose time precedes that of the principal predicate, should have a Passive Predicate; 2) that clauses, whose time coincides with that of the principal predicate, should have an Active Predicate. Hence clauses, introduced by "after," which always presupposes a difference in the time of the two predicates, can only assume this form, when they have a Passive predicate; while clauses, introduced by "while," which always presupposes coincidence of time, necessarily require an Active predicate for the use of the absolute ablatives.

In both instances the Subject of the clause is placed in the Ablative Case. When the Predicate is a Passive, it is placed in the Perfect participle, when an Active, it is placed in the Present participle; in either instance it must stand in the Ablative, agreeing with the Subject-ablative in gender, number, and case. The conjunctions after, while, or when are not translated.

<sup>1</sup> It is often discretionary in Latin, to employ CONJUNCTIONS or RELATIVES with a finite clause, or a PARTICIPIAL clause. This will be illustrated by special rules in Book VI. In the following exercises it is always suggested, when English conjunctions must be rendered by Latin Participial Clauses.

EXAMPLES:—After the enemies had been defeated, hostibus victis.—After the queen had been killed, regina interfecta.—After this had been obtained, huc re impetrata.—After the consul had been slain, consule trucidato.—When a council had been called together, Cæsar accused the centurions seriously, Cæsar, concilio convocato, centuriones graviter incusavit.—When the arrival of Cæsar had become known, Ariovistus sent ambassadors to him, Cæsaris adventu cognito, Ariovistus legatos ad eum misit. In the last sentence the predicate 1) is a passive (to become known, cognosci), 2) its time precedes that of the principal sentence (sent), 3) the subject of the principal sentence is different from that of the clause. We therefore employ absolute ablatives with a perfect participle (cognito).

While the army approached, exercitu appropinquante.—While the enemies fled, hostibus fugientibus.—While money is wanting, pecuniâ deficiente.—While Tarquinius Superbus reigned Pythagoras came to Italy, Tarquinius Superbo regnante Pythagoras in Italiam venit.—When nothing hinders, I shall come to-morrow to see thee, Nullâ re impediente, cras te visum veniam. In the last example the predicate of the clause is an active; the times of the principal and dependent predicate are the same; the Subjects of the clause and the principal sentence are different. We employ therefore the Absolute Ablatives with a Present Participle.

Rem. 33. If any of the requirements for this construction is wanting, ablatives absolute cannot be used. Thus the sentence 'After Dionysius had been expelled from Syracuse, he taught school at Corinth', cannot be rendered 'Dionysio Syracusis expulso', but by an attributive participial construction: Dionysius, Syracusis expulsus, Corinthi pueros docebat. Cic. Tusc. 3. 12.—'I heard (the lectures of) the greatest men after I had come as questor to Athens', can neither be rendered by ablatives absolute, nor by an attributive participial clause, but requires a finite temporal clause: Audivi summos homines quum questor venissem Athenas. Cic. Or. 1. 11.

Rem. 34. A clause with a predicate in a perfect active cannot take the form of ablatives absolute, unless the verb is a DEONENT. But only a few perfect Deponent participles are used in this construction, especially mori and the compounds of gredi (ingredi, etc.), as: Servio Tullio mortuo, After Servius Tullius had died.

Rem. 35. Coördinate subject ablatives have their predicate-ablatives in the plural or singular, as in a finite sentence (§ 127).

Rem. 36. When present participles are employed in this construction, their ablative singular always takes the ending e, never i.

§ 397. When the Predicate of a Clause consists of a Copula with a Predicative Adjective or Noun, the clause can only then be changed into an Absolute Participial construction, when the times of both the clause and the principal sentence are the same, and hence never when the clause is introduced by "after." The Copula is then altogether omitted, and the Predicative Adjective or Noun is placed in the Ablative with the force of a Participle. For the use of ablatives absolute when verbs other than esse have the office of the copula, see P. II, p. 76.

EXAMPLES:—Cicerone consule, while Cicero was consul.—Bruto (et) Collatino consulibus (generally written Coss. by abbreviation), during the consulship of Brutus and Collatinus.—Sereno quoque celo aliquando tonat, even while the sky is clear, it sometimes thunders.—Alexandro irato, while Alexander was angry.

Rem. 37. Not only Nouns but also Pronouns, and Absolute or Disjunct Adjectives, may be the subjects of Absolute Ablatives, as: me liberato, after I had been released; te presente, while thou wast present; eo interfecto, after he had been killed; multis repugnantibus, while many objected.

Rem. 38. The Latin often expresses by absolute ablatives, what we express by verbal or other abstract nouns. Here belong the following idioms:

Urbe condita, after the building of the city (of Rome); Gajo adjutore, with the help of Gajus; me deprecatore, by my mediation; natura duce, by the guidance of nature; Cæsare duce, under the command of Cæsar; me puero, in my boyhood (when I was a boy); me invito, against my will; Cæsare invito, against Cæsar's will; te auctore, by thy authority, by thy influence, by thy instigation; me nescio, without my knowledge; me teste, by my testimony.

Rem. 39. The arrangement of the absolute participial clauses follows the general rules of the arrangement of the phrases and words. As for the place which the absolute participial clauses occupy in the principal sentence, they generally are placed in the same way as the corresponding English clauses. They may begin the sentence, or be inserted after the subject or other members of the sentence. But they generally do not follow the whole sentence, unless they contain several objective or attributive phrases besides the absolute ablatives, as: Germani—quam maximas manus possunt cogunt et de improviso ad Ciceronis hiberna advolant, nondum ad eum fama de Titurii morte perlata, The Germans—raise as many troops as possible, and on a sudden hasten to Cicero's winter-quarters, the rumor of Titurius' death having not yet been brought to him (been heard by him). Cæs. B. G. 5, 39.

Participial clauses, as it is apparent from the last example, may contain, besides their predicative phrases, objective and attributive phrases. The form of these phrases is not affected by the Participial construction, and they are arranged according to the general rules.

V. AFFIRMATIVE AND NEGATIVE SENTENCES.

§ 398. If the speaker represents the Predicate as real, we call the sentence AFFIRMATIVE; if he denies the reality of the predicate, the sentence is called negative.

Rem. 40. We must here, as in many other points, distinguish between the logical and grammatical form of the sentence. There are between a pure affirmation and a pure negation many intermediate degrees, those of possibility, probability, and doubt. Logically we would not call such sentences affirmative, but grammatically we call all sentences affirmative which contain no negative words. On the other hand, many sentences would be logically called affirmative, although they contain negative words, as for instance the copulative coördination by "not only—but also," and negative questions, as: "Have I not done this?"

§ 400. A pure Affirmation is not expressed by any special words; but the Negation is rendered by NEGATIVE PARTICLES (non, haud, ne) or by other negative words (nemo, nunquam, etc.) The different degrees between affirmation and negation are expressed by LIMITING PARTICLES (fere, fortasse, vix, etc.) Both, negation and affirmation, are increased in force: 1) by the form of the sentence; 2) by interjections; 3) by emphatic particles.

Rem. 41. By giving to a sentence the form of an EXCLAMATION (exclamatory sentence), we increase either its affirmative or negative force. Such exclamations generally are made in the form of an interrogative sentence, introduced by interrogative adjectives or adverbs (as: How great is the goodness of God! instead of an emphatic affirmation of the sentence: The goodness of God is great). Sentences of this kind strictly follow the rules of interrogative sentences. (See § 422 and § 423, Rem. 73.)

Rem. 42. Interjections belong to the class of PARTICLES. Particles are those parts of speech by which the conception of the speaker in regard to the reality of the predicate (and the different degrees of this reality) is expressed. Interjections are exclamatory particles, which increase the force of an affirmation or negation, or denote the different emotions of the mind. The ancients used many interjections, and oaths, without considering them as improper. Most of them cannot be translated into English, since corresponding words are either wanting in the language, or profane. The most usual of them are: heu, heus, eheu, alas! en, ecce lo! behold! hercle, mehercle or hercule (by Hercules); medius fidius, by the son of Jove (instead of me Jovis filius); mecastor, by Castor; edepol, by Pollux. Here belong also the phrases "per deos" (by the gods), "per deum fidem," etc.

§ 401. PARTICLES either refer to the whole sentence or to single members of the sentence. The former is the case when the reality of the Predicate as such is either affirmed, denied, or limited. The latter is the case, when the action, expressed by the predicate, is restricted to single members of the sentence. Then the particle is said to be EMPHATIC, and the word to which it refers is called the EMPHATIC WORD.

1) Equivalents of "indeed"; Næ, profecto, vero, sane, certe, quidem, omnino, prorsus; 2) equivalents of "at least"; Certe, saltem, modo; 3) equivalents of "also"; etiam, quoque, et; 4) equivalents of "even"; vel, etiam, et, quoque; 5) equivalents of "especially"; imprimis, præcipue, maxime, potissimum, præsertim; 6) potius, rather; 7) equivalents of "only"; tantum, modo, tantummodo, solum, demum, dumtaxat; 8) fortasse (forsitan), perhaps; 9) equivalents of "almost"; fere (ferme), pene, prope, circiter; 10) vix, scarcely, hardly; 11) equivalents of "not"; non, haud, ne.

The particles nempe, nimirum, scilicet, videlicet are idiomatically used in certain connections, either in an ironical sense, or = 'evidently', 'namely'. For tandem as particle, see p. 310, R. 71, and P. II, p. 224, Obs. 5.

is used before superlatives, as: Vel amicissimi, even the best friends.—Concordia parvæ res crescunt, discordiæ vel maximæ dilabuntur, By concord small states grow; by discord even the greatest are ruined. Sall. Else etiam and quoque are synonyms of vel; but more frequently the former than the latter. Both etiam and quoque originally mean "also," and are entirely synonymous, except in their positions. Et in both significations, even and also, is limited to certain connections, at least in classical language. It mostly is used after nam and sed, and before pronouns and demonstratives, as: Sed et hoc (illud) tenere debetis, but you must mind also (even) this. Nam et nobis displicet, etc., For it is unpleasant also (even) to us, etc.

Rem. 45. The use of ipse for even (§ 279) is confined to nouns without adjective attributes, to pronouns and disjunct demonstratives.

§ 405. The equivalents of especially and rather denote a comparative affirmation (Rem. 48). Potissimum (especially, chiefly, mainly) and potius (rather) represent a predicate, as referring to certain persons, things or actions rather, than to others, either with or without excluding the latter. Potius is opposed to one, and potissimum to all other persons, things or actions. The latter very frequently may be rendered by the English particle "just." By præsertim we add to the sentence a clause, containing a reason or condition, which more than others, and without excluding the latter, go to establish the reality of the predicate. Therefore it is followed by clauses, introduced by cum or si, or by words or phrases which may be resolved into such clauses.

Sed tamen—quantum mihi vel fraus inimicorum, vel res publica tribuat otii, ad scribendum potissimum conferam. But still, so much leisure as the cunning of my enemies or the republic leave to me, I shall especially apply to writing (mainly, chiefly to writing). Cic. de Orat. 1, 1, 3.—Credo ego; vos—mirari. quid sit. quod—ego potissimum surrexerim, I believe, that you wonder, why it is, that just I have arisen. Cic. Rosc. Amer. 1, 1.—Quid primum querar, aut unde potissimum ordiar? Of what shall I complain first, or where shall I chiefly begin? Cic. Rosc. Amer. 11.—Ut audiremus potius ex te, quam te afficeremus ulli molestiâ. That we rather hear you, than give you any inconvenience. Cic. Brut. 3, 11.—Cæsar graviter eos accusat, quod ab his non sublecebatur, præsertim cum eorum precibus, adductus bellum suscepit. Cæsar reproaches them seriously, for not being relieved by them, especially since he had undertaken the war, induced by their prayers. Cæs. B. G. 1, 16.—Faciam vero, Læli, præsertim si utrique vestrum gratum futurum est. Yes, I shall do it. O Lælius, especially if it will be pleasant to both of you. Cic. Sen. 2, 6.—Quamobrem non ista me sapientiæ fama delectat, falsa præsertim. I am therefore not pleased with this notoriety of scholarship, especially a false one (that is, especially if it is false). Cic. Læl. 4, 15.

Rem. 46. Instead of potissimum very frequently maxime is used in the same signification, as: Id eâ maxime ratione fecit, quod noluit eum locum—vacare. He did this especially for this reason, that he did not wish that place to be vacant. Cæs. B. G. 1, 28.—Imprimis (properly meaning "among the first, before the others") and præcipue (properly meaning "by preference") sometimes, but more rarely, are used with the force either of potissimum or of præsertim, in order to increase its force, as: Fortuna, quæ plurimum potest quum in reliquis rebus, tum præcipue in bello. Fortune, which is most powerful in other respects as well as especially in war. Cæs. B. Civ. 3, 68.—Multa me movent in discessu, imprimis, mehercule, quod disjungor a te. Many things affect me on my departure, especially—because I am severed from thee. Cic. Att. 16, 3.

Rem. 47. Imprimis and præcipue (especially, particularly) are mainly used as adverbs with the force of an absolute degree (§ 313), in order to increase the intensity of the predicate, and maxime is especially used to form the superlative degree of descriptive adjectives (§ 293), as: Homo imprimis doctus (instead of admodum doctus), an extremely learned man.—Huic legioni Cæsar et indulserat præcipue et propter virtutem confidebat maxime. Cæsar had been extremely partial to this legion, and very greatly confided (had the most unbounded confidence) in it on account of its excellent qualities. Cæs. B. G. 1, 40.

Rem. 48. The equivalents of "especially," when used as PARTICLES, must be distinguished from ADVERBS, and especially from the comparative adverbs (superlatives), since they represent a comparison not of the predicate itself and its intensity, but of its reality. In none of the mentioned examples (except those of Rem. 46), these particles form a phrase with the predicate, and less yet with their emphatic words; but they must be considered as one of those forms by which the speaker affirms or limits his affirmation.

The particle potius, although it may be followed, like comparative adverbs, by quam, is distinguished from a real comparison by the fact, that it does not compare but exclude the second member of the comparison.

§ 406. Fere, prope, pæne denote "almost, nearly," without much difference in meaning. But fere, more than prope and pæne, is used, with form-adjectives (as nemo fere, omnes fere) and adverbs of time and place (semper fere, numquam fere), as:

Bello Helvetiorum confecto totius fere Galliæ legati ad Cæsarem conveniunt. After the war of the Helvetians was ended, the ambassadors of almost the whole of Gaul came to Cæsar. Cæs. B. G. 1, 30.—Propterea quod flumen Dubis pæne totum oppidum cingit, because the river Dubis encloses nearly the whole town. Cæs. B. G. 1, 38.—Prope firmissima eorum regionum civitas, almost the strongest community of those regions. Cæs. B. G. 5, 20.

Circiter is used only of numbers (meaning about), as: Horâ circiter tertiâ, at the third hour about. Fere with numerals means "quite," as: Mille fere hostes occisi sunt, quite a thousand enemies were killed.

Rem. 49. Satis fere means "quite enough." His fere verbis, chiefly (mainly) with these words.—Hæc fere dicere habui, I had chiefly this to say.

THE NEGATION.

§ 407. The regular negation is non. The use of ne is confined to imperative sentences, to negative coördinations (§ 409) and to certain clauses and phrases (§ 415). Haud is used in certain connections only, especially in haud scio, instead of nescio, haud magnus, haud exiguus, haud multus, haud mediocris, haud difficilis, haud sane (indeed not). In Cæsar haud occurs only once (haud scio an, B. G. 5, 54), in Cicero rarely.

The place of non, when it refers to the whole sentence, generally is immediately before the finite verb (in infinitive and participial sentences before the predicate), and hence before esse, whether this word is a copula or an auxiliary, as: hoc fieri non potest; hostibus enim non prohibentibus; dixit, se hanc calamitatem ferre non posse; hæc necessaria non sunt; castra expugnata non sunt. But when the negation, as emphatic particle, refers to single members of the sentence, it immediately precedes them, as: Non Gajus (sed Sejus) hoc mihi dixit.—Non omne facinus in omni vitâ nascitur; Not every crime appears in every rank of life. Cic. Rosc. Am. 47.

Rem. 50. Non frequently opens the whole sentence to increase the stress of the negation.—Non before adjectives imparts to them a negative meaning, which may also be expressed by the prefix in (non gratus = ingratus; non multi = pauci). The quantitative adjective and adverb "little" is generally expressed by non multum, not by paullum, which denotes "a little". The English "do" in negative sentences is not separately rendered: The general did not grant the conditions, Dux conditiones non concessit. The English "no" before adjectives and adverbs, is rendered non, not nullus: I had no great pleasure, Voluptatem habui non magnam.

Rem. 51. Often two negations are connected in the same sentence: 1) Non possum non with an object-infinitive means "I cannot help doing something", "it is impossible not to", "I must": Equidem (quam non potui non probare); It was impossible for me not to acknowledge (I could not help acknowledging) your fairness. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 26.—Non possum non confiteri, cumulari me maximo gaudio, I must confess to be overwhelmed with the greatest joy. Ib. 1, 9, 1.—2) Non with a negative form-adjective or adverb (§ 408) has a different meaning according as the negation precedes or follows (non nunquam = sometimes; nunquam non = always (p. 259. R. 5; p. 261. R. 12).—3) Nec non, nec nihil have the force of an affirmative particle added to a copulative coordination: Nec hoc Zeno non vidit; Nor indeed did this escape Zeno's attention (= and indeed Zeno noticed this). Cic. Fin. 4, 22.—Nec tamen scit nihil; And yet he really knows something. Cic. Att. 2, 20.—4) Neque... neque, following a negative word have the meaning of and... and: Mihi nihil neque a te ipso neque ab ullo alio de adventu tuo scriptum est (Nothing has been written to me either by thyself, or etc.). Cic. Fam. 2, 19, 1.—5) For ne non see R. 56. For non nisi see P. II, p. 740.

Rem. 52. The force of the negation often is increased by the usual emphatic particles: non sane, indeed not; ferè non, almost not; omnino non, not at all, under no circumstances, by no means. Instead of omnino non, the adverb nequāquam, or the phrases nullo modo, nullo pacto are frequently used. Not even is not expressed by non vel or non etiam, but by ne—quidem, the emphatic word being placed between ne and quidem, as: He does not even laugh, Ne ridet quidem.—I did not even tell the king, that, etc., Ne regi quidem dixi, etc. The emphatic word, which in the last example is "king," is not always indicated by position in English, but must be inferred from the connection. In Latin the position of the emphatic word between ne and quidem never can be changed.

§ 408. Many words attract the negation; that is, the negation is blended with them into one word, as: nescire, nequire, nolle, negare, the form-adjectives nemo, nihil, nullus, neuter, the adverbs nunquam, nusquam (nowhere), nequāquam (by no means), nondum (not yet), nihilum (nothing yet), nullusdum, nemodum (none, nobody yet), and the conjunctions neque, neve, nisi. In the combinations of these negative expressions, the Latin idiom frequently is different from the English:

1. The verbs nescire, nequire, and nolle cannot stand in the same sentence with any form-adjective or adverb having the meaning "any" or "ever." Thus we must say: You do not know how to do anything, Nihil facere scitis (not quicquam facere nescitis.—We cannot see anybody, Neminem videre possumus (not quemquam videre nequimus).—We are not willing ever to change this law, Hanc legem mutare nunquam volumus (not hanc legem unquam mutare nolumus). Hence form-adjectives and negative adverbs attract the negation more strongly than verbs.

2. When FORM-ADJECTIVES and ADVERBS, both of which may attract the negation, are in the same sentence, the negation generally is attracted by the FORM-ADJECTIVE. Thus the English expressions never anybody, never anything must be changed into nobody ever, nothing ever (nemo unquam, nullus unquam, nihil unquam; not nunquam quisquam, nunquam ullus, nunquam quicquam, although under special circumstances the latter expressions may become correct).

3. When a negative sentence, or a sentence containing negative form-adjectives, adverbs or verbs, is placed in coordination with a preceding proposition, the negation must be taken from its place before the finite verb, or from its combination with the negative words, and must be joined with the conjunction. The negative words then assume their affirmative forms, and instead of nemo we must use quisquam or ullus; instead of nihil, quicquam; instead of nullus, ullus; instead of neuter, uter (either). The conjunctions et (atque, etc.) take the form neque or nec (nor, and not). The other conjunctions take the negation before them, either in the form of non or of neque (nec). Thus "but not" is rendered by neque (nec) vero,<sup>1</sup> yet not, still not, however not, by neque (nec) tamen; for not by non enim or neque (nec) enim (not by nam non); therefore (hence) not, by non ergo or non igitur or neque igitur (not by ergo non, etc.) From this rule the disjunctive conjunctions alone make an exception, which produce no change in negative propositions.

EXAMPLES:—And we have seen nobody (nor did we see anybody), neque (nec) quemquam vidimus (not et neminem). And he never returned (nor did he ever return), neque (nec) unquam rediit (not et nunquam). And he cannot see the enemies (nor can he see the enemies), neque hostis videre potest (not et hostis videre non potest, or nequit). And this is by no means certain, neque hoc ullo modo certum est (not et—nullo modo).—But he did not say this, neque (nec) vero hoc dixit.—Still I did not learn this from thy oration, neque tamen hoc ex oratione tua didici (not tamen—non didici).—For he did not fear to die, neque enim (non enim) mori timebat (not nam mori non timebat).—Therefore such men ought not to live, non ergo (igitur) ejusmodi homines vivere debent (not ergo—non debent).—But we shall not only take pains, but, etc., nec vero operam dabimus solum, sed etc. (not sed non solum operam dabimus, sed).

Rem. 53. Both "nor" and "and not" are generally rendered by neque (for neve see R. 55), but in the following instances by et non: 1) Et non MAY be used instead of neque if the negation closely belongs to a single word of the sentence (so that we may in English unite not by a hyphen with this word), as: Demetrius, vetus et non ignobilis dicendi magister; an old and not obscure (not-obscure) teacher of rhetoric. Cic. Brut. 91. 2) Et non is always used instead of neque if it is virtually affirmative in clauses introduced by si, tamquam (as if), quasi (as if) and ut, "et non" having the force of "instead of": Nulla res recte potest administrari si unusquisque velit verba spectare, ET NON ad voluntatem ejus qui verba habuerit accedere; if every one would regard the words only, AND NOT enter (= instead of entering) into the meaning of the speaker (i. e. it is proper that everyone should enter into the meaning etc.) Cic. Inv. 2, 47.—Lippitudine adductus sum ut dicterem hanc epistolam, ET NON ipse scriberem; I am compelled by sore eyes to dictate this letter, INSTEAD OF writing it myself. Cic. Qu. Fr. 2, 2, 1.—3) "And not" (but not), connecting single members of a sentence is asyndetically expressed by non, without et: "I mean Gajus, and (but) not Sejus", Gajum, non Sejum, dico.

4. Negations in CLAUSES introduced by subordinating conjunctions do not combine with the conjunctions, except with ut (that) and si. Ut generally takes the form ne, or ut ne (always with subjunctive), the negative words of the clause becoming affirmative (as in No. 3), aliquis & quisquam being changed into quis (ne quis, ne quid). In English "lest", or "that not" is used, or an infinitive after not. But when that not is preceded by so or thus (tam, ita, sic etc.), non retains its place and that is translated by ut.

EXAMPLES:—Birds warm their young ones with their feathers, lest they may be hurt (that they may not be hurt) by cold, Aves pullos pennis fovēt, ne frigore ledantur.—Who stands, must strive not to fall, Qui stat niti debet ne labatur.—We demand that nobody's offences be punished, Postulāmus, ne cuius injuriæ puniantur.—They asked, that those conditions should never be changed. Orābant, ne unquam conditiones illæ mutarentur.—The troops were so tired, that they could not advance any farther. Copie tam fessæ erant, ut longius progredi non possent.—The orator spoke so, that nobody understood him. Orator ita locutus est, ut nemo eum audiret.

<sup>1</sup> By sed non only in the case of a direct or restrictive opposition, and then non is placed immediately after sed.

The conjunction si introducing a negative sentence, is generally changed into nisi, and translated by unless or if not, as: Nisi hæc ita sunt, unless this is so (if this is not so). Nisi forte means "unless perhaps" (not nisi fortasse).

Rem. 54. For the use of si non instead of nisi, see Book VI.

Rem. 55. When a negative proposition is copulatively connected with a clause introduced by ut or ne, and not or nor are not translated by neque but by neve (neu), as: Cæsar exhorts them to throw their darts from afar, and not to approach (any) nearer. Cæsar exhortatur eos, ut procul tela coniciant, neve (neu) propius accedant.—I ask thee, not to lose courage, and not (nor) let thyself be overwhelmed by the greatness of the task. Rogo te ne animum demittas, neve te obrui negotii magnitudine sinas.

Rem. 56. The English conjunction lest after verbs of FEARING is equivalent to that, but in Latin is expressed by ne, while the conjunction lest not or that not, is translated by ut, or ne non: Timeo ne veniat; I am afraid lest (that) he may come.—Verbar ut redderetur litteræ. I was afraid that (lest) the letter would not be delivered. (Cic. Fam. 12. 19. 1.—Vereor ne non liceat; I am afraid it will not be allowed. Ib. Att. 2. 19. 3.—Timeo ne non impetrem; I am afraid that I shall not succeed. Ib. 9. 6. 6.

§ 409. The COPULATIVE COÖRDINATION of two negative phrases or sentences is made by neque (nec)—neque (nec), neither—nor, corresponding to the affirmative et—et, non solum—sed etiam. But when clauses connected by "neither—nor" are dependent on the conjunction "that," so that the latter in negative sentences would be rendered by ne, we translate the English "neither" by ne, and the English nor by neve (neu).

EXAMPLES: The ambassadors neither can nor will consent, Legāti consentire nec possunt nec volunt.—Neither Scipio nor Lælius was present, Neque Scipio neque Lælius adfuit.—The Gauls neither wished to leave the camp, nor were they ready to give battle, Galli neque castra relinquere volebant, neque pugnare parati erant.—Cæsar demanded, that he should neither provoke the Aduans without cause, nor should make war on them or (and) their allies, Cæsar postulavit ne Aduos injuriâ (without cause) lacerasset, neve his sociisque (or sociisve) eorum bellum inferret.

§ 410. The English negative coördination with "not only—but even" is expressed by non modo (solum) non—sed etiam. The coördination with "not only not—but not even" is made by non modo (solum) non—sed ne quidem (or sed vix), as:

My pain is not only not diminished, but even increased, Dolor meus non modo (solum) non minuitur, sed etiam augetur.—I not only am not angry with thee, but do not even censure thy action, Ego non modo tibi non irascor, sed factum tuum ne reprehendo quidem.

Rem. 57. When coördinate sentences with "not only not—but not even" have the same predicate, the coördination is made in Latin by non modo (solum)—sed ne quidem, leaving out the second non of the first proposition, as: To the Senate it was not only not allowed to help the republic, but not even to mourn, Senatui non solum servare rempublicam, sed ne lugere quidem licuit.

§ 411. INFINITIVE CLAUSES are made negative according to the general rules, but when they are governed by a verb denoting an utterance (verbum dicendi) (§ 393, Rem. 26), it is customary to take out the negation from the infinitive clause, and to change the verbum dicendi into the verb negare (to deny), as: The ambassadors declared, that they had not seen the enemies, Legāti se hostis vidisse negarunt.—He promised that, if they would do so, he would not violate their territory, Si ita fecissent (§ 347) finis eorum se violaturum (§ 347) negavit. Cæsar B. G. 6, 32.

§ 412. When the first member of a COMPARATIVE PERIOD is made negative, the comparison of difference (§ 295) is hereby made a comparison of equality, and non magis—quam (not more—than) assumes then the meaning of "as little—as," while non minus—quam (not less—than) stands for "as much as." Non minus—quam is the general way to render the English "as much as" (see § 301), and non magis—quam the only way to render the English "as little as." P. II, p. 757.

I love thee as much, as thou dost me, Ego te non minus amo, quam tu me (Ego te tantum amo quantum tu me, would mean: I love thee only as much as—no more than—thou dost me).—Gaius will hurt you as little as I, Gaius vos non magis lædet, quam ego.—Non nascitur ex malo bonum, non magis quam fœus ex olea, Good does not grow from evil, as little as (no more than) a fig from an olive-tree. Sen. Benef. 5, 7.

Rem. 58. When a comparison of EQUALITY (by tam—quam) is made negative (non tam—quam), it means either less—than, or not so much—as. Hoc non tam facile est nobis quam tibi, This is less easy (not as easy) to us, than (as) to thee.—Ut eos non tam constantia nostra delectet, quam splendor offendant, So that our firmness does not so much please, as our renown hurts them.

Rem. 59. The English "not so...as not to" is expressed by "non tam" with ut: Non tam dives sum ut hoc emere possim; I am not so rich as to be able to buy this.

Rem. 60. "No more than" before numerals (§ 312) is expressed by non amplius or non plus, which is often placed after the numeral: No more than 500 soldiers were killed; Non amplius (plus) quingenti milites (or quingenti, non amplius, milites) interfecti sunt. Non amplius also means "no longer," "not any longer," referring to TIME.

VI. IMPERATIVE SENTENCES.

§ 413. Imperative sentences are those whose predicates are represented as 'willed' by the speaker. They are either independent or dependent, the latter being called 'Imperative clauses'.

EXPLANATION. Independent imperative sentences are shown to be imperative by the mere grammatical form of their predicates, which, in Latin, is either the IMPERATIVE MOOD, or the SUBJUNCTIVE, or the FUTURE, and in English the imperative mood (for the second person), the circumlocution with 'let,' or the potential with 'may' (for the first person plural, and for the third person), or the future with shall.—DEPENDENT sentences are marked as imperative, 1) by the GOVERNING VERB (I commanded, wished, allowed, etc.); 2) by the grammatical form of the CLAUSE, which is always a That-clause with its predicate in the subjunctive.

§ 414. If the predicate of an independent affirmative imperative sentence is in the SECOND PERSON, it is generally in the first form of the imperative mood, but sometimes in the present subjunctive, or in the second form of the imperative, or in the future tense (R. 61).—2. If the predicate is in the THIRD PER-

Ib. Fam. 4, 16. — Vellim animo sapienti fortisque sis; Be of a wise and strong mind (I wish you would be, etc.). Ib. Fam. 9, 12. — Often Quæso, rogo, obsecro (pray, I implore you) are parenthetically inserted in imperative sentences.

Rem. 63. If the predicate of an affirmative imperative sentence is in the THIRD PERSON, it is generally placed in the present subjunctive: Vineat utilitas reipublicæ; Let the interest of the republic prevail. Cic. Off. 3, 23. — Religio et fides antepōnātur amicitie; Let religion and duty be placed before friendship. Ib. 3, 10. — Omnes sciant; May all know it. Sen. Ep. 42. — The THIRD PERSON of the SECOND FORM of the IMPERATIVE is used: 1) In the LAWS of the republican time (but not in those of the later periods, nor in the decrees of the Senate or in the edicts of the magistrates); Ni judicatum facit, vincito; If he does not satisfy the judgment, he (the complainant) shall fetter him. XII Tab. 3. — Illis hominibus eam pecuniam capere licito; It shall be lawful for those men to receive that money. Lex Cornelia de Quæstor. (Ritschl C. I. 674). — So if the language of the law is imitated: Qui tyrannum occiderit, Olympionidem præmia capito. Cic. Inv. 2, 49. — Viri in urbibus delubra habento. Ib. Leg. 2, 8. — 2) In PUBLIC TREATIES with other nations and kings: Amœchus, credito ca urbis eis Taurin; A. shall evacuate the cities this side Mount Taurus. Liv. 38, 38. — 3) In LEGAL INSTRUMENTS, especially testaments: Tullius, meus, Terentia uxori meæ XXX pondo vasorum argenteorum dato; Tullius shall give to Terentia 30 pounds of silver vessels. Auct. Her. 1, 12. — 4) Sometimes this form occurs in the poets in didactic rules: Non satis est pulchra esse poemata; dulcia sunto, et quocunque coeant, auctoritas datioris aperit. Hor. A. P. 99. — 5) The 3d pers. imperative esto is frequently used in the meaning 'be it so'. So Verum esto, let this be true. Cic. Flacc. 29.

§ 415. Negative imperative sentences with predicates in the second person are generally expressed by a circumlocution of noli (nolite) with an object-infinitive (sometimes by cave or by fac ne with a present subjunctive); more rarely by ne with a PERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE. If the predicate is in the 3. person, or 1. pers. plur., ne is used with PRESENT SUBJUNCTIVE (ne quis = nobody; ne quid = nothing).

Noli. Cato, maiorum instituta reprehendere; Do not, O Cato, censure the institutions of our ancestors. Cic. Mur. 36, 75. — Nolite id velle quod fieri non potest; Do not wish what is impossible. Ib. Phil. 7, 25. — Cave existimes me abieciisse curam reipublicæ; Do not believe that I have given up the care for the republic. Ib. Fam. 9, 24. — Tu, mi, frater, primam navigationem ne omiseris; Do not miss the first opportunity of sailing. Cic. Qu. Fr. 2, 6, 3. — Ne dubitatis eas mittere; Do not hesitate to send them. Ib. Att. 1, 9. — Socum illius de sua egestate ne aspernatus sis (do not slight his jest, etc.). Ib. 2, 12. — Ne sis perturbatus. Ib. 2, 24. — Ne quis fastidial grammatices elementa; Let nobody disdain the elements of grammar. Quint. 1, 46.

Rem. 64. Ne with a perfect subjunctive mostly corresponds to the second form of the imperative in affirmative sentences. Ne with present subjunctive of the 2. person is chiefly ante-classical, as: Ne illum verberes. Plaut. Bacch. 4, 3, 110. In classical prose it is sometimes used of uncertain persons; else it is extremely rare: Istud bonum, quam absit, ne requiras. Cic. Sen. 10. — Scribere ne pigrescere; Be not negligent in writing. Ib. Att. 14, 1. — Ne with the first form of the imperative is ante-classical and poetical: Ne interturbat. Plaut. Bacch. 4, 3, 96. — Ne formidet. Ib. Asin. 2, 4, 56. — Ne clama nimis. Ib. Most. 3, 1, 43. — Ne seri. Virg. Æn. 6, 544. — Ne with the SECOND FORM of the imperative either with the second or third person is confined to the republican laws in the strict sense: Hominem mortuum is qui in sepulchro, nec vivit, nec vult. XII Tab. 10. — Ne quis in contum decuriones legito, neve sublegito, neve cooptato, nisi, etc. Lex Jul. Munic. (Ritschl C. I. 206). In didactic rules and other commandments ne with the perf. subj. is employed, which must always be used, if an affirmative sentence would require the second form in to: Hec omnia decoquito; oleum ne addideris. Cato R. R. 158. — So in the ethic laws of the Stoics: Nihil ignoveris; misericordiam commotus ne sis. Cic. Mur. 31, 65. Pliny, however, uses ne with the second form of the imperative in rules on agriculture: Stercus, nisi decrescente luna, ne tangito. Plin. H. N. 18, 75. — Vento flante ne arato. Ib. 18, 77.

Rem. 65. DEPENDENT imperative sentences (§ 413) are introduced by ut, and if negative by ne (sometimes ut ne). Often the mere subjunctive is used instead of ut with a subjunctive. In such clauses, neve takes the place of neque (neither, nor, and not). See P. II. p. 389; p. 595 foll.

Peto a te ut id a me neve in hoc reo, neve in aliis requiras; I ask you, to require this of me neither in regard to this defendant, nor in regard to others. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 19. — Divitiacus Cæsarem obsecravit ne quid gravius in fratrem statueret; D. implored Cæsar not to take any harsh measures against his brother. Cæs. B. G. 1, 20. — Cæsar Labiæno mandat Remos aleat; Cæsar orders Labienus to proceed to the Remi. Ib. 3, 11.

VII. INTERROGATIVE SENTENCES.

§ 416. Interrogative sentences express a doubt as to the reality of the predicate, implying a request that the person addressed should remove the doubt. They are either ABSOLUTE or RELATIVE. In the former the doubt refers to the predicate, the answer 'yes' or 'no' being expected; in the latter the doubt refers to any other member of the sentence.

Rem. 66. The English absolute interrogative sentence is distinguished by the inversion of the predicate, which is placed before the subject, and especially by placing the auxiliaries at the beginning of the sentence. In the simple tenses the auxiliary "do" is generally used, which word, neither here, nor in any other case where it is used as an auxiliary, can be expressed in Latin.

§ 417. The Absolute interrogative sentences in Latin generally are introduced by one of the interrogative particles num or ne,<sup>1</sup> without changing the position of the words on account of the question. The particle ne is enclitic, and is attached to the end of the most prominent word, which then must open the sentence. Num is used, when the answer "no" is expected; ne, when the answer is doubtful, as:

*Meministine me ante diem XII Kalendas Novembris dicere in senatu fore in armis—C. Manlium? Num me fecerit, Catilina, non modo res tanta, etc.? Doest thou remember that I said, on the 12th before the Calends of November in the Senate, that C. Manlius would be in arms? Was I mistaken, O Catiline, not only in so great an event, etc.? Cic. Cat. 1, 3, 7. — *Num, quæ tempestas impendat, vates melius conjiciet quam gubernator? Will the poet guess better than the commander (of a ship), what weather is impending? Cic. Div. 2, 12. — *Num te fugi? Num a domo absum? Have I fled before thee? Am I absent from home? Plaut. Epid. 5, 2, 16. — *Apollinemne tu Delium spoliare ausus es? Didst thou dare to plunder the Delian Apollo? Cic. Verr. 1, 18. — *Itane facere oportet? Must you act thus? Ter. Phorm. 3, 2, 42. — *Quid! Duasne is uxores habet? What! has that man two wives? Ter. Phorm. 5, 1, 27.***

Rem. 67. Notice, that after num, aliquis and quisquam must be changed into quis (§ 357, Rem. 4, and § 359, Rem. 11), as: *Num quis hic alius præter me atque te (est)? Is here any one besides me and thee? Ter. Andr. 2, 2, 19. — In Servio Tullio—num quod eloquentiæ vestigium apparet? In Serv. Tullius—does any trace of eloquence appear (in him)? Cic. opt. gen. dic. 5, 16. When ne is used, and the subject of the interrogative sentence is the second person, the latter generally is expre sed. If it has the emphasis it stands at the first, if not, at the second place, as: *Vixne tu te, Serri, cohibere? Wilt thou not restrain thyself, O Servius? Cic. Fam. 4, 5, 10. — *Tunc dixerat huic? Hast thou told him (that)? Ter. Phorm. 4, 3, 8.

<sup>1</sup> The interrogative particle nē must be distinguished from the negative particle or conjunction nē; the former has a short, and the latter a long e.

The ending s of the second person of the verb, if ne is attached and tu follows, frequently is elided, together with the vowel e of the enclitic, as: Ain'tu (instead of aisne tu), doest thou say? Censen'tu (for censesne tu), doest thou believe? Vin'tu (for visne tu), doest thou wish? The demonstrative hic, and the adverb sic (thus), when ne is attached, assume the syllable ci before ne, as: Hecine tua domus est, Is this thy house? Plaut. Amph. 1, 1.

Rem. 68. In rhetorical style the interrogative particles frequently are omitted, as: Tu id nesciebas? Didst thou not know this?

§ 418. If the question is NEGATIVE, and consequently an affirmative answer is expected, the sentence is introduced by the particle nonne, corresponding to the English negation not, as: Nonne poëtae post mortem nobilitari volunt? Do not poets wish to be celebrated after death? Cic. Tusc. 1, 43.

§ 419. If two questions are connected by disjunctive conjunctions (disjunctive questions), each of them must be introduced by an interrogative particle, the former by utrum or the enclitic ne, the latter by an, which corresponds to the English or. When the second question consists only of the words or not, it is translated by annon.

Utrum ignorant di, quæ res maximæ sint; an vim non habent, quæ tantas res sustineant et gerant? Are the gods ignorant of what the greatest things are, or have they not (do they lack) the power, by which they may sustain and rule such things? Cic. Nat. Deor. 2, 77.—Vosne Lucium Domitium, an vos L. Domitius deseruit? Did you desert (from) L. Domitius or did L. Domitius desert (from) you? Caesar B. C. 2, 32.—Isne est quem quero, annon? Is this (the man) for whom I am asking or not? Ter. Phorm. 5, 6, 12.

Rem. 69. The English or cannot always be translated by an, when it occurs in questions, but only when there are two alternatives, that is, alternative (§ 381) questions, so that the answers, which are given to each, would form two distinct sentences. In the case of a disjunctive coordination, as in the foregoing sentence: Utrum quis potius videtur quam deus habere vim? Does pleasure make a man better or more praiseworthy? Cic. Part. 1, 3. Here are no alternatives, and virtually there is only one question. If the question should be separated in two, the answers would be the same to both, and form no alternatives. Hence, not an but aut must be used, according to the rules on improper disjunction.

§ 420. An AFFIRMATIVE ANSWER to a question is expressed by ita, ita vero, vero (yes); sane, sane quidem, prorsus, ita prorsus, omnino (certainly, unquestionably), or by a repetition of the predicate with vero, corresponding to the repetition of the English auxiliary, as:

Has Gajus returned? Yes. Rediitne Gajus, Ita, vero, or ita vero.—Hast thou not often seen my brother? Certainly. Nonne fratrem meum sæpe vidisti? Sane (sane quidem).—Have not even the most renowned men sometimes been punished with death? Certainly. Nonne vel clarissimi (not ne- quidem) viri morte sæpe puniti sunt? Prorsus (ita prorsus).—Canst thou not do this? I can. Nonne hoc facere potes? Possum vero.—Hast thou read Cicerō's works? I have. Legistine tu Cicerōnis opera? Legi vero.—Doest thou not remember that man? I do. Illiusne tu viri meministi? Memini vero.

Negative answers (English: No, I do not, am not, by no means, etc.) are expressed by minime, minime vero, non, or by non with the repetition of the predicate or copula. If a negative or affirmative answer is combined with a correction, the particles immo or immo vero are used (no but, no on the contrary, nay more, not only this, but). If an affirmative answer is connected with a modification, we use omnino sed (yes, but).

Num Romæ fuit? Immo, longe abfuit, Was he in Rome? no, on the contrary, he was far away.—Ille tamen vivit. Vivit? Immo vero, etiam in Senatum venit, Still this man lives. Lives? Nay more, he comes even into the Senate.—Cur fiat quidque queris? Recte omnino, sed non nunc id agitur, Thou askest, why everything happens? Yes, right; but this is not the question now. Cic. Div. 1, 39, 86.—Num quis propinquus fuit? Non (non fuit), Was he any relation? No (he was not).—Num igitur erramus? Minime vero, Are we therefore in an error? Certainly not.—Non existimas cadere in sapientem ægritudinem? Prorsus non arbitror, Thou believest not that sorrow affects a wise man? I certainly do not. Cic. Tusc. 1, 6.

§ 421. The RELATIVE INTERROGATIVE sentences are introduced by one of the interrogative adjectives (§§ 243, 254, 260, 261, 263, 267, 268) or adverbs. To these belong, besides the numeral and quantitative adverbs (quoties, quantum, quam [how], quantopere): 1) the local adverbs ubi (where), unde (whence), quo (whither), quatenus and quousque (to what point, how far); 2) the temporal adverbs quando (when), quamdiu (how long, for how long); 3) the modal adverbs quomodo, quemadmodum and quā (how); 4) the causal adverbs cur or quid (why), cur non, quidni or quān (why not?)

The interrogative adjectives and adverbs frequently are made more emphatic by the enclitic nam, as: quisnam, ubīnam, curnam.

Whose letters doest thou bring? Cujus litteras affers? (Answer: those of Gajus, Gaji.)—Why do you not answer? Cur non respondētis?—Whence does he come? Unde venit?—Who has written this letter? Quisnam has litteras scripsit?—Where hast thou been? Ubīnam fuisti?—When will Gajus return? Quando Gajus redibit?—Quæ potest esse jucunditas vitæ, sublati amicitii? What can be the charm of life, after friendships have been taken away? Cic. Planc. 33.—Quo Senatus consulto erat hoc legito permissum? Nullo. Cur fecit? Coactus est. By what decree of the Senate has this been permitted to the delegate? By none. Why did he do it? He was compelled. Cic. Verr. 3, 39.—Uter vestrum est celerior? Which of you is quicker? Plaut. Aul. 2, 4, 42.

Rem. 70. We must distinguish between the quantitative and the modal adverb "how." The quantitative how, asking for the intensity of an adjective or adverb, is translated by quam (§ 269, Rem. 11: § 303), while the modal adverb how, asking for the manner of an action, is translated by quomodo, quemadmodum, or qui. The latter are governed by verbs, while quam depends on an adjective or adverb (quam acuti, quam fortiter, quam difficilis, but qui fit, how happens it? quomodo scribit, how does he write?).

The temporal adverb quando (when, at which time?) must be distinguished from the conjunction quum (when, at the time when). Quidni is always followed by the subjunctive, corresponding to our why should, as: Quidni meminerim, Why should I not remember? Cur non, however, stands (with the subjunctive only) in indirect questions (§ 422).

Rem. 71. The emphasis of a relative question is increased by the adverb tandem (still more than by nam). This is often difficult to translate. It corresponds most closely to the English colloquial expression "in the world," as, Quid tandem agebātis? What in the world did you do? Plaut. Men. 5, 1, 12. Often we may translate it by our "pray."

Rem. 72. A relative question, introduced by uter (§ 243, Rem. 5), may be followed by a disjunctive question. The first member must then be connected with the enclitic ne, not with utrum, as: Uter nostrum popularis est, tunc an ego? Which of us is popular, thou or I? Cic. Rab. 4, 11.

Rem. 73. In relative questions the English language does not admit more than one doubtful member (§ 416); and therefore only one interrogative word can occur in the same question. But in Latin there may be two and even three doubtful members in the same relative question, and thus two or three interrogatives may occur in the same sentence. Such constructions, mostly occurring in indirect questions, are variously recast in English, as: Uter utri insidias fecit? Which of the two waylaid the other? Cic. Mil. 9.—Utinam, quante aliorum fundamine imperium meo non cum pice delerit! Think, how almost one night destroyed an empire founded with so great labor. Ib. Cat. 4, 9.—Ego quid cui d-beam scio? I know what I am owing, and to whom. Sen. Ben. 4, 32.—Milo si Clodium interficere voluisset, quanta, quante occasiones fuissent! Had Milo intended to kill Clodius, how great and many occasions would there have been! Cic. Mil., 14.

Rem. 74. In Latin, relative questions may be INCORPORATED in infinitive and participial clauses. Such combinations, which are called 'INTERROGATIVE INVOLUTION' must be recast in English, as: Quid petentes venistis? What is the object of your coming? (literally "What asking have you come?")—Quid me fecisse existimātis? What, do you think, I did?—So with ablatives absolute: Qua frequentia omnium generum prosequente creditis nos Capuā profectos? By what crowds of all kinds do you think we were accompanied when we departed from Capua? Liv. 7, 30.

§ 422. If a sentence, by which a question is expressed, is dependent on another sentence, it is called an INTERROGATIVE CLAUSE or INDIRECT QUESTION, as: "I do not know, whether he will come;" "It is uncertain, how long it will last." Such a clause is either the object of one of the members of the principal sentence, or the impersonal subject of its predicate, as in the latter of the mentioned examples. The governing word of the indirect question either expresses the act of asking itself, as (I asked, what he was doing), or it implies a doubt or uncertainty, in regard to some fact, which is added in the form of a question, as: "I wonder, what he is doing;" "I wished him to ascertain, what was going on in the city."

Rem. 75. Clauses, containing a thought without any uncertainty or doubt, frequently are expressed in the form of an indirect question, when they are conceived as exclamations (§ 399, R. 41), as: Sæpe mecum cogitari, quam esset difficile sensum in republica deponere, I often thought, how difficult it was, to lay aside one's feeling for the country. Here the author means nothing but: "I thought, that it was very difficult," etc. But he conceives the thought as in exclamation (how difficult is it, to, etc.), and hence the sentence has assumed the form of an interrogative proposition.

§ 423. INTERROGATIVE CLAUSES are either absolute or relative, like the sentences, and are introduced by the same words (whether particles, form-adjectives, or adverbs), as if they were expressed as independent sentences. Only the adverb quidni and the particle annon are not used in indirect questions. Instead of them cur non and necne must be employed.

The absolute interrogative clauses in English are introduced by whether or if; in Latin by num or the enclitic ne. If they are negative (whether not, if not), they are introduced by nonne. If the indirect question is disjunctive, we use utrum or ne in the first, as in direct questions, and necne (instead of annon) in the second member. The particles of the first member (utrum and ne) sometimes are omitted.

The mood of the predicate in all interrogative clauses always is the subjunctive, subject to the rules of consecution (§ 349).

Legati cognoscere jussi sunt, num Perseus socios sollicitasset, The ambassadors were directed to ascertain, whether (if) Perseus had solicited the allies.—Scire velim, locutusne sit hæc verba Sempronius, I should wish to know, whether Sempronius spoke these words.—Nescio, utrum dux hostis vicerit necne, I do not know, whether the general has defeated the enemies, or not.—Quæsit, nonne secum ire mallet, He asked, whether he did not rather wish to go with him.—Sæpe et multum hoc mecum cogitari, bonine an mali plus attulerit hominibus eloquentiæ studium, I have often and much considered, whether the study of eloquence has caused more good or evil to men. Cic. Inv. 1, 1.—Cæsar legatum cognoscere jussit, quæ in castris gererentur, Cæsar directed his lieutenant, to ascertain, what was going on in the camp.—Dux nescit, quo hostes iter facerent, The general did not know, whither the enemies were marching.—Intelligere nequeo, cur hoc duci non nuntiaveris, I cannot understand, why thou hast not announced this to the general.

Rem. 76. In interrogative clauses the pronoun of the third person takes the reflexive form, if referring to the logical subject of the principal sentence, the same as in infinitive clauses (§ 388 and R. 20), as: Cæsari in mentem venit, quantā audaciā hostes insidias sibi struxissent, Cæsar remembered, with what boldness the enemies had laid a snare for him. Here Cæsari is the logical subject of the principal sentence, and hence the pronoun him in the interrogative (here exclamatory) clause, must be translated by sibi, not by ei.

Rem. 77. Interrogative clauses are frequently used as SUBJECTS of impersonal predicates, such as incertum est, dubium est, quæritur (— it is the question whether etc.). Here belong the impersonal verbs interest and refert, generally translated by "it is important," "it makes a difference;" negatively non or nihil refert, non or nihil interest (there is no difference, it is unimportant), or with an interrogative adjective quid interest, what is the difference, what difference does it make?; or with quantitative adverbs (multum interest, magnopere refert, it makes a great difference, is very important), as: Multum interest, utrum hanc imaginem sit, an salus discatur, It makes a great difference, whether a prize is diminished, or one's happiness is given up.—Quid refert, quo quis die morietur, What difference does it make (what matters it), on which day somebody dies?

Rem. 78. The words nescio, dubito, incertum est, followed by an interrogative clause, which is introduced by an (nescio an, dubito an, incertum est an) have the meaning perhaps. These expressions are either followed by an affirmative assertion, and then they are translated by: I should think that, etc., or by I am doubtful, whether not perhaps. Or they are followed by a negative clause, and then they are translated by: I should not think that, or I doubt whether. But in this case the Latin negative clause becomes affirmative in English, as: Nescio an melius facere potuissem; I should think, that I might have done better; or: I am doubtful, whether I might not perhaps have done better.—Dubito (or nescio) an nunquam hoc dicat, I doubt whether he ever said so; or: I should not think, that he ever said so; or: I should think, that he never said so.

Rem. 79. In disjunctive interrogative sentences the student should be careful, to connect only the disjunctive members of the sentence, and not also the common words, by the interrogative particles. Thus the sentence: Ido mihi laus, whether this task is difficult or easy, must be translated by: Asserit dignum, an utrum laus sit, an labor, or by: hoc meritum, an laboris, not utrum dignum sit, an labor; and not by: Ido laus, an labor, etc. The coordinate members are utrum and an, and these alone, not the common words laus, meritum, can be placed within the two disjunctive particles.

EXERCISES.

COORDINATION OF SENTENCES.

1. Scelerum promissio<sup>1</sup> et eis, qui expectant præmium, turpis, et eis qui promittunt<sup>2</sup> perniciosā est.—2. A rege et Atheniensibus auxilium promissum, et Etolis bellum indictum<sup>3</sup> est.—3. Hannibal non solum fortitudine et ingenio militari, sed etiam sapientiā et animi magnitudine ceteros Carthaginienſis superavit.—4. Nero provincias ita exhaust, ut dona amplissima<sup>1</sup> non modo reciperet, sed etiam flagitaret.<sup>2</sup>—5. Rabirius se abdidit,<sup>3</sup> non modo ut pœnam effugeret, sed etiam ut nova scelera excogitaret.<sup>4</sup>—6. Sabirus castris (within the camp) se semper tenebat, ut (so that) jam non solum ab hostibus contemneretur, sed etiam nostrorum militum vocibus nonnihil<sup>5</sup> carperetur.<sup>6</sup>—7. Dulce est ipsum pacis nomen, res vero ipsa cum jucunda rum salutāris<sup>7</sup> (est).—8. Sex. Roscius quum omni tempore (at all time) nobilitatis<sup>8</sup> fautor<sup>9</sup> fuisset, tum hoc bello proximo (in this last war) nostram partem (party) causamque defendit.—9. Quum omnium rerum simulatio (a feigning of everything) vitiōsa<sup>10</sup> est, tum amicitiae maxime<sup>11</sup> repugnat.—10. Non meis sed Sempronii nostri periculis graviter angor.<sup>12</sup>—11. Non exercitus mihi, sed duces defuerunt.—12. Hortensius hanc quidem opinionem defendit, sed suaviter (mildly) ac moderate.—13. Sempronius nobilium auctoritate, Lucilius autem plebis voluntate (love) atque exercitu sustinetur.—14. Hic vir a plurimis laudatur; nobis vero Gajus omnium candidatōrum praeſtantissimus videtur.—15. Et civitates et singuli homines concordia valent, discordia intereunt.—16. Quæſtiōnes dialecticæ (philosophical) opinionum gravitate (weight) dijudicari debent, non numero ac gratia.—17. Reus aut culpam suam confiteri debebit, aut innocentiam suam novis argumentis probare.—18. Catinienses (inhabitants of Catina) sive metu (from fear) Atheniensium, sive tædio<sup>13</sup> belli pacem facere cupiunt.—19. Syracusani vel vi coëgi vel consilio adduci poterant, ut civibus nostris satisfacerent (to give satisfaction).—20. Facile est, multos vel liberos vel servos dicere (to mention), qui hujus rei testes<sup>14</sup> fuerunt.—21. Hæc expeditio sive ducum (officers) imbecillitate,<sup>15</sup> sive exiguo militum numero, infeliciter terminavit.<sup>16</sup>—22. Hoc oppidum vi expugnare difficile erit; ipsius enim loci natura (situation) et munimentis validissimis defenditur.—23. Hæc ego consilia secutus essem, si tu præsens fuisses. Novi enim temperantiam<sup>17</sup> et moderationem<sup>18</sup> naturæ tuæ.—24. Consilia tua perfici non poterunt; nam et adversariōrum tuōrum invidia et ipsa inopia tua tibi obstabunt (to be an obstacle).—25. Hæc pugna nihil est nobilius. Nulla enim unquam tam exigua manus (band, number), tantas opes<sup>19</sup> prostravit (to crush).—26. Phocio vitæ suæ integritate multo notior<sup>20</sup> fuit quam gloria militari. Itaque hujus memoria nulla est, illius autem fama magna (est).—27. Qui talia affirmant<sup>21</sup> aut indocti sunt, aut improbi. Sempronius autem et affirmavit et doctus est. Ergo Sempronius improbus esse videtur.—28. Si Gajus hoc dicit, mentitur; dicit autem: mentitur igitur.—29. Hæc erat loci natura, ut copiae nostræ undique (everywhere) hostium telis<sup>22</sup> attingerentur.<sup>23</sup> Dux igitur receptui canere jussit (gave the signal for retreat).

<sup>1</sup> Promise.—<sup>2</sup> To make a promise.—<sup>3</sup> To announce.

1. Eight towns of the Prænestians<sup>24</sup> were captured, and their fields divided.—2. This rumor was told (narrare) (to) me by Sejus and confirmed by my brother.—3. The army of the Latins occupied the left bank of the river and that of the allies the right one.—4. The general censured the indolent (ignāvus) and slothful (socors), but praised the active and careful (diligens).—5. Cæsar was able to conquer as well the bodies of his adversaries as their hearts (animus).—6. We intend both to uphold<sup>25</sup> the laws and to protect the liberty of the people.—7. The consul did not only appease the hearts of the inhabitants, but also renewed the old (vetus) friendship (with them).—8. Sempronius squandered<sup>1</sup> not only his own property (bona), but also that of others (§ 357, R. 6).—9. As always the welfare of the republic was dearest to him, so was he a most zealous advocate of the last war.—10. As many things are not sufficiently (§§ 263, 269) explained,<sup>2</sup> so is this question more difficult than the others.—11. By these words I intend not to depress<sup>4</sup> but to encourage (erigere) thee.—12. This speech (oratio) did not bring light (lux) and day to me, but darkness (caligo) and night.—13. Thou hast indeed lost thy property, but thy honor (existimatio) will be intact (integer).—14. Many indeed endeavored to explain this question, but nobody treated it better, than either thou or Gajus.—15. The others betook (intredire) themselves to a most disgraceful flight, but the fifth legion sustained bravely the attack of the enemies.—16. So great dangers were overcome by both consuls; but the army of the Samnites (Samnites) tried to reach<sup>5</sup> the town of Capua.—17. Thus the ambassadors of the Sigambri addressed Caesar; but the latter demanded, that not only all the arms, but also 600 hostages, the noblest of the state, should be delivered to him (sibi).—18. Thou wilt carry (impetrare) the first prize (premium), but Gajus will obtain (obtinere) the third.—19. The activity (industria) of Domitius carried help to Cassius, but the quickness of Scipio to Favonius.—20. The war seemed already finished. But Jugurtha unexpectedly won<sup>6</sup> the friendship of Bocchus.—21. Sulla was kind to his friends, but inexorable<sup>7</sup> to his enemies.—22. Everything may (posse) either be refuted or proved by reasons.—23. All states are governed either by many, or by few or by one.—24. We approve the reasons of neither; however, it will be necessary to adopt (accipere) the opinion either of the one (hic) or of the other (ille).—25. How many brave youths are perishing either by disease or by the sword of the enemies!—26. How great bravery show<sup>8</sup> our soldiers, whether conquering<sup>9</sup> or conquered!—27. It will be very easy either to eject (ejicere) the nobility by force or to intimidate<sup>10</sup> them by fear (metus).—28. Cottaianus forbade the troops to violate the possessions (agri) of the Patricians, either because he was irritated against<sup>11</sup> the plebs, or in order to (ut) divide the Patricians (patres) and the plebs by discord.—29. A few of these, either by some [good] fortune (felicitas), or by the goodness (clementia) of their nature, or by some other reason have followed a better way.—30. What can be better than the friendship of good [men], or what more abominable (fodius), than the hatred and the enmity of the wicked?—31. I shall thus obtain either a certain help, or the favor (gratia) and [good] will (voluntas) of all good [men].—32. I prayed (orare) the general, to (ut) give [to] me this embassy,<sup>12</sup> or, if he should be prevented (solv. imperf.) from doing this, to allow me to leave the army.—33. Nothing can be either more pleasant or more useful than the intimate (familiaris) conversation<sup>13</sup> with (transl. of) this man.—34. The republic seems to be governed<sup>14</sup> now by the authority or rather the pleasure (arbitrium) of one man.—35. We directed this man, or rather animal, to be silent.—36. If thou hadst either praised Gajus more or scolded [him] less, he (that one) would now treat thee more kindly.—37. Hannibal, after he had quieted (pacare) the others by threats (metu) or by money (pretio), resolved to invade (ingredi) the district of Neapolis.<sup>1</sup>—38. Thy brother will be able to accomplish this task (labor) excellently; for everything seems easy to him.—39. That boy did not learn (discere) enough; for he devoted (tribuere) too much time to trifles (nugæ).—40. The treatise (liber) of Gajus pleases<sup>2</sup> me more than that of Sempronius; for it has been written more concisely<sup>3</sup> and accurately.—41. The Romans suddenly perceived<sup>4</sup> a great quantity<sup>5</sup> of dust; for a field, planted<sup>6</sup> with (by) shrubs<sup>7</sup> had hindered (prohibere) the prospect.<sup>8</sup>—42. Metellus resolved to wage<sup>9</sup> the war in (by) another manner.<sup>10</sup> Therefore he began to devastate the fields, to take towns and castles (castellum), and to plunder the property of the inhabitants.—43. Meanwhile (interea) Jugurtha was increasing his army. Metellus therefore resolved to renew the war.—44. No wise [man] can be unhappy. But thou art a wise man. Hence thou canst not be unhappy.—45. The shade (umbra) of the earth is round. It must therefore be round itself.—46. The weather<sup>11</sup> will be stormy.<sup>12</sup> Therefore we shall stay<sup>13</sup> home (domi).

<sup>1</sup> Amplius, splendid.—<sup>2</sup> To demand.—<sup>3</sup> To conceal.—<sup>4</sup> To devise.—<sup>5</sup> Somewhat.—<sup>6</sup> To tease.—<sup>7</sup> Beneficial.—<sup>8</sup> Nobility.—<sup>9</sup> Adherent.—<sup>10</sup> Vicious, wicked.—<sup>11</sup> Especially, mostly.—<sup>12</sup> Angere, to trouble, to make uneasy.—<sup>13</sup> Disgust.—<sup>14</sup> Witness.—<sup>15</sup> Ignorance.—<sup>16</sup> To terminate.—<sup>17</sup> Moderation.—<sup>18</sup> Discretion.—<sup>19</sup> Opes in plur., power.—<sup>20</sup> Notus, known.—<sup>21</sup> Assert.—<sup>22</sup> Telum, a dart.—<sup>23</sup> Attingere, to reach.—<sup>24</sup> Prænestinus.—<sup>25</sup> Sustinere.

<sup>1</sup> Dissipare. —<sup>2</sup> Advocate, suator ac factor. —<sup>3</sup> Diligere. —<sup>4</sup> Deprimere. —<sup>5</sup> To try to reach, petere. —<sup>6</sup> Translate: he concluded to himself. —<sup>7</sup> Inexorabilis. —<sup>8</sup> Prodere. —<sup>9</sup> Vincere. —<sup>10</sup> Perterrere. —<sup>11</sup> Transl. hostile (adversus) to. —<sup>12</sup> Legatio. —<sup>13</sup> Sermo, in the plur. —<sup>14</sup> Gubernare.

INFINITIVE CLAUSES.

1. Omnes arbitrāmur, ducem nostrum et ingenio et virtute præstare.—2. Frater meus bene scit, Sempronium hæc verba dixisse.—3. Cæsar cognovit,<sup>14</sup> hostium copias magnis itineribus<sup>15</sup> appropinquare.—4. Labienus hostium copias montem occupasse confirmavit.—5. Legati Cæsarem adfuisse intellexērunt.—6. Fratrem tuum diligentem esse video.—7. Hanc aquam nimis calidam esse arbitror.—8. Milites impatientis fuisse scribit.—9. Hæc negotia fratri tuo nimis difficilia esse novimus.—10. Scimus te fortissime pugnasse.—11. Spero me hoc facillime discere posse.—12. Te regni cupidum esse audivi.—13. Vos ita vincere nunquam posse credo.—14. Eum nunquam ita locutum esse existimo (believe).—15. Lucilius mihi sæpissime dixit, se nunquam aliud quid compertire potuisse.—16. Gajus se spei plenum esse scripsit.—17. Gajus confirmavit, Sempronium sui invidum esse.—18. Frater meus, hoc sibi accidisse negat.—19. Sempronius fratrem suum redisse scribit.—20. Omnes novimus, mundum a Deo gubernari.—21. Certo scio, hoc negotium a Sejo jamdiu finitum esse.—22. Brutus noster scripsit, Laberium ab omnibus derideri.—23. Cæsar se a Gallis deceptum esse intellexit.—24. Sempronius hanc statum sibi a Gajo datam esse negat.—25. Consul compertit, multa jam oppida a Persæ rege occupata esse.—26. Nuntius juravit, hostis a se visos esse, eosque proximos montis magnâ multitudine tenere.—27. Oppidani hostis noctu advenisse, ac tormenta<sup>16</sup> jam mœnibus admoveri vident.—28. Omnes credimus, solem longius distare<sup>17</sup> quam lunam.—29. Sempronius nuntiavit, eos quos Cæsar pabulatum misisset, in castra (into the camp) redisse.—30. Omnes sciunt, milites qui scelus aliquod commiserint, gravius puniri quam ceteros civis.—31. Frater meus putat, te hoc negotium finire nolle, quia laboribus gravioribus prohibeâris.—32. Meministi, me sæpius hoc dixisse, fratrem autem meum aliam opiniõnem habere.—33. Sempronius te male locutum esse existimat; nihil enim minus probari<sup>18</sup> posse, quam rationem illam, qua adversarios tuos aggressus sis.—34. Legati responderunt, regem omnis conditiones rejecisse; nullam igitur pacis spem reliquam (left) esse.

<sup>1</sup> Neapolitanus, belonging to Neapolis. —<sup>2</sup> Delectare. —<sup>3</sup> Concise, concinnus. —<sup>4</sup> Animadvertere. —<sup>5</sup> Vis. —<sup>6</sup> Consilium. —<sup>7</sup> Arbustum. —<sup>8</sup> Prospectus. —<sup>9</sup> Gerere. —<sup>10</sup> Mos. —<sup>11</sup> Tempestas. —<sup>12</sup> Turbulentus. —<sup>13</sup> Manere. —<sup>14</sup> To learn. —<sup>15</sup> Per, a march. —<sup>16</sup> Tormenta, heavy artillery (that is, instruments and missiles for attacking a besieged city). —<sup>17</sup> To be distant. —<sup>18</sup> Probare, to praise, allow.

1. My brother writes, that Gajus is well.—2. My father confirms [the report], that the enemies are approaching.—3. You all know, that the sun is larger than the moon.—4. Cicero says (ajō), that virtue is contented with (by) itself.—5. The ambassador reports (renuntiare), that the captives are still alive.—6. We all know, that Cicero was the greatest of all Roman writers.—7. The scouts<sup>2</sup> confirmed, that the enemies were approaching with (by) great quickness.—8. The ambassadors answered, that their states were desirous of the friendship of the Roman people.—9. The messengers announced to Cæsar, that all Belgians had conspired.<sup>3</sup>—10. We know, that Gajus always was unmindful of his duty.—11. I suppose,<sup>4</sup> that thou writest better than Gajus.—12. I acknowledge,<sup>5</sup> that I have broken<sup>6</sup> the laws both of God and men.—13. He acknowledges, that he has committed that murder.<sup>7</sup>—14. We see, that you have acted with (by) great prudence, and have well accomplished this whole business.—15. The messengers denied, that they had been able to learn<sup>8</sup> anything new.—16. Gajus denies that he ever spoke thus.—17. Sempronius suspects that Gajus is jealous<sup>9</sup> of him.—18. Solon pretended<sup>10</sup> to be mad.<sup>11</sup>—19. Ariovistus boasted (prædicare), that nobody had ever made<sup>12</sup> war on (to) him with impunity (§ 220, Rem. 6).—20. Thales of Miletus<sup>13</sup> (§ 112, B.) has said, that water is the beginning of everything.—21. Xenophanes states (ajō), that the moon is inhabited, and that she is an earth with (transl. of) many cities and mountains.—22. My brother acknowledges, that the president<sup>14</sup> of the republic has been killed by him, and that he has been induced<sup>15</sup> to (ut) do<sup>16</sup> [it] by promises and bribes.<sup>17</sup>—23. The chiefs of the state denied, that they were filled with<sup>18</sup> any envy or hatred toward (transl. of) the Roman people.—24. When the king saw, that he had been deserted by the greatest part of the army, he sent ambassadors to (§ 351) treat for<sup>19</sup> peace.—25. If I had learned (cognoscere), that the city had been occupied by the enemies, I never would have returned there.<sup>20</sup>—26. The king already believed that he had obtained<sup>21</sup> victory, when (cum with indicat.) Lucius approached on horseback,<sup>22</sup> shouting, that the second line of battle had been destroyed<sup>23</sup> by a stronger force<sup>24</sup> of the enemies.—27. When (cum with subjunct.) the chiefs of the states had understood,<sup>25</sup> that their troops everywhere<sup>26</sup> were defeated by our [soldiers], they implored Cæsar, to state<sup>27</sup> the conditions of peace.—28. When (cum with ind.) Brutus pretended to be mad, he deceived the king in order to give liberty to the republic.—29. We know, that the diligence of Gajus is greater than that of Sempronius, but that the latter has more talent than the former.—30. The scouts reported, that they had been in sight (in conspectu) of the enemies; that those, whom they had seen, had had arms, and that their number was much smaller than that of our soldiers.—31. Tiro wrote, that he had made a most unfortunate voyage;<sup>28</sup> for the ship, which he had chartered,<sup>29</sup> had been lost<sup>30</sup> by shipwreck,<sup>31</sup> although his life had been saved.—32. Gajus wrote, that these affairs (negotium) were daily becoming more difficult, because he was assisted (adjuvare) by nobody's help.—33. We often observe (animadvertere), that those who laugh most (§ 302, Rem. 14), generally (§ 80, 3) grieve most if something unfortunate (adversus) has happened<sup>1</sup> to them.—34. The inhabitants observed, that some of the besiegers<sup>2</sup> were throwing<sup>3</sup> darts,<sup>4</sup> and (§ 356, 5) that others were approaching (subire) the town by a covered way.<sup>5</sup>—35. Cæsar understood, that if they had reduced (perfringere) the fortifications, the end of all labors was on hand.<sup>6</sup>—36. The general observed, that those, who were attacking the first line of battle, were fighting with greater energy,<sup>7</sup> than those who were occupying the forest.—37. I hear with pleasure (gaudeo), that thou hast bought the estate.

<sup>1</sup> Vires. — <sup>2</sup> Explorator. — <sup>3</sup> To conspire, conjurare. — <sup>4</sup> Parare. — <sup>5</sup> Confiteri. — <sup>6</sup> Violare. — <sup>7</sup> Crimes. — <sup>8</sup> Cognoscere. — <sup>9</sup> Jealous. — <sup>10</sup> Simulare. — <sup>11</sup> To be mad. — <sup>12</sup> Initare. — <sup>13</sup> Belonging to Miletus. — <sup>14</sup> Milesius. — <sup>15</sup> Princeps. — <sup>16</sup> Mille. — <sup>17</sup> Facere. — <sup>18</sup> Langitudo. — <sup>19</sup> Transl. were moved by. — <sup>20</sup> To sue for peace, pacem rogare. — <sup>21</sup> Eo. — <sup>22</sup> Nancisci. — <sup>23</sup> To approach on horseback, adquire. — <sup>24</sup> To destroy, opprimere. — <sup>25</sup> Transl. by a greater number. — <sup>26</sup> Intelligere. — <sup>27</sup> Ubique. — <sup>28</sup> Statuere. — <sup>29</sup> Transl. had sailed most unfortunately (infelix). — <sup>30</sup> Conducere. — <sup>31</sup> Transl. had perished. — <sup>32</sup> Naufragium.

PARTICIPIAL CLAUSES.

1. Naturā repugnante labor irritus est.—2. Omne pondus, nullā re impediēte, perpetuo movetur et fertur.—3. Astyage regnante, Thales Milesius defectionem<sup>8</sup> solis prædixit.—4. Athenienses, Lacedæmoniis nihil sentientibus (to perceive), navis ascenderunt.—5. Me et te consentientibus nemo repugnabit.—6. Græci, advenientibus Persis, Thermopylas occupaverant.—7. Camillus novum exercitum conscripsit,<sup>9</sup> nullo militiam detrectante.<sup>10</sup>—8. Darius copias suas duxit, uxore et matre exercitum sequentibus.—9. Pythagoras Tarquinio Superbo regnante vixisse videtur.—10. Trajāno mortuo Ælius Hadriānus imperium (throne) occupavit.—11. Diōne interfecto, Dionysius rursus Syracusarum imperii potitus est (to take possession).—12. Ænēas, Trojā a Græcis expugnata, in (to) Italiam venit.—13. Sardanapālus victus, exstructā<sup>11</sup> incensāque<sup>12</sup> pyrā<sup>13</sup> et se et divitias suas concremavit.—14. Alii tela conjiciunt (throw), alii testudine factā oppidum subeunt.<sup>14</sup>—15. Regibus Bruti virtute exterminatis<sup>15</sup> libertas constituta (to establish) est.—16. Oculis amissis alba et atra discernere<sup>16</sup> non possumus, sed bona et mala, honesta et turpia, utilia et inutilia.—17. Cæsar, his rebus gestis,<sup>17</sup> legatos civitatum finitimarum convocavit.—18. Sulpicius consul bello (in the war) Macedonico Antipatrem expugnavit pueribusque<sup>18</sup> interfectis ac prædā omni militibus concessā (to leave) muros diruit atque urbem incendit.<sup>19</sup>—19. Anno quingentesimo quinquagesimo ab urbe condita (after the building of the city), Sulpicio Galbā (et) C. Aurelio Coss., Philippo bellum indictum est.—20. Pater meus me puero hanc rem sæpe narravit.—21. Romāni, Hannibale vivo se nunquam securos esse posse existimabant.—22. Eis invitis, a quibus Pharus tenetur, naves Alexandriæ portem intrare nequeunt.—23. Parvis adhuc rebus<sup>20</sup>, Romānis virtus tamen militaris magna erat.—24. Fulminum opera mira sunt: oculis<sup>21</sup> integris argentum conflatur,<sup>22</sup> manente vaginā<sup>23</sup> gladius liquescit (becomes liquid).—25. Novimus, solis defectionem nonnisi<sup>24</sup> lunā novissimā<sup>25</sup> fieri (happen) posse.—26. Pompējum tibi valde amicum (kind) esse cognovi (I know), et eo tu consule omnia quæ voles obtinebis.—27. Solis occāsu<sup>26</sup> (at) Ariovistus copias suas multis vulneribus et illatis<sup>27</sup> et acceptis (supply ab eis) in castra (into the camp) reduxit.—28. Cæsar duobus maximis bellis unā æstate (in one summer) confectis, exercitum paullo maturius,<sup>28</sup> quam tempus anni postulabat, in hiberna (into winter-quarters) deduxit.<sup>29</sup>

1. While Tiberius reigned (regnare), the Parthians<sup>30</sup> were subjected<sup>31</sup> by the Romans.—2. While the ambassadors of the Grecian states were assembling,<sup>1</sup> the army of the Macedonians<sup>2</sup> prepared to invade (invadere) Greece.—3. While pleasure rules,<sup>3</sup> the greatest virtues are prostrate.<sup>4</sup>—4. While I was staying<sup>5</sup> with thee (apud te) the vices of Dolabella were unknown to me.—5. While they were thus disputing, a lightning struck (tungere) the ship.—6. While this man governs (gubernāri), the republic will be safe (salvus).—7. When a storm<sup>6</sup> arises,<sup>7</sup> the sails<sup>8</sup> must be struck (subducere).—8. The soldiers entered the city, Labienus leading<sup>9</sup> (while Labienus led) the rear rank.<sup>10</sup>—9. The other legions attacked (aggredi) the enemies, while Varro and Æmilius defended the camp.—10. While thou wast absent, I received two letters of Cicero.—11. I should wish, that all these things had been done in my presence.—12. Augustus was born while Cicero and Antonius were consuls.—13. In (mere ablative) the 249th year after the building of the city the kings were expelled at the instigation of Brutus.—14. Octavianus hoped, that he by the help of Antonius and Lepidus could take possession<sup>11</sup> of the government.<sup>12</sup>—15. All these things were done (gerere), when thou wast a boy.—16. This house, while thy father was living, was mine.—17. The Helvetians thought (putare) that against their will no army could enter these defiles.<sup>13</sup>—18. Gajus has arrived, not only against my will, but also without my knowledge.—19. The captives were cruelly (fedus) mutilated,<sup>14</sup> more than 2000 men being (while they were) witnesses.—20. Horatius Cocles, after the bridge had been destroyed (rescindere), crossed the Tiber<sup>15</sup> by swimming.<sup>16</sup>—21. Physicians think, that after the cure<sup>17</sup> of a disease has been discovered,<sup>18</sup> the remedy has been discovered.—22. After Licinius had been murdered (occidere), Constantinus took possession of the empire.—23. After Darius, the king of the Persians, had died, Artaxerxes accused Cyrus his younger (§ 291, R. 11) brother, of aspiring (that he aspired) to<sup>19</sup> the throne.<sup>20</sup>—24. Jugurtha, after [his] friends had died, the most of whom he had killed himself, was suddenly seized<sup>21</sup> by a strange (mirus) insanity.<sup>22</sup>—25. The king thought (existimare), that after I and my brother had been dismissed, he could commit these crimes with impunity (§ 220, R. 6).—26. When nobody (§ 249) contradicts, I shall take the liberty (conari) to submit (proponere) this whole question to you.—27. After these two most difficult labors have been accomplished [by me] in one summer, I shall endeavor to finish the other easier ones.

<sup>1</sup> Accidere. — <sup>2</sup> Transl. the besieging ones. — <sup>3</sup> Conjicere. — <sup>4</sup> A dart, telum. — <sup>5</sup> A covered way, testudo. — <sup>6</sup> To be on hand, adesse. — <sup>7</sup> With great energy, vehementer. — <sup>8</sup> Eclipse. — <sup>9</sup> To draft. — <sup>10</sup> To decline. — <sup>11</sup> To erect. — <sup>12</sup> To kindle. — <sup>13</sup> A funeral pile. — <sup>14</sup> To approach. — <sup>15</sup> To exterminate. — <sup>16</sup> To distinguish. — <sup>17</sup> To carry out. — <sup>18</sup> § 214. — <sup>19</sup> Burn. — <sup>20</sup> Res in the plural often is the same as res publica in the sing. — <sup>21</sup> Loculi, a casket, a box (plur. tant.). — <sup>22</sup> Conflare, to melt. — <sup>23</sup> Scabbard. — <sup>24</sup> Only. — <sup>25</sup> Absol. degree, to be translated by exactly. — <sup>26</sup> Set (§ 229). — <sup>27</sup> To inflict. — <sup>28</sup> Sooner. — <sup>29</sup> To lead. — <sup>30</sup> Parthi. — <sup>31</sup> Domare.

AFFIRMATIVE SENTENCES AND PARTICLES.

1. Epistola tua gratissima fuit Tulliae meae et mehercule mihi.—2. Næ ego homo infelix fui.—3. Næ tu malus orator es!—4. Næ ille, medius fidius, nescit, parvum hoc lucrum<sup>23</sup> ingentem<sup>24</sup> sibi damnum afferre.<sup>25</sup>—5. Meministi enim profecto omnium harum rerum.—6. Omnes profecto liberi quam servi esse malumus.—7. Magnum profecto patientiae documentum dedistis!—8. Hoc sane nunquam credidissem, nisi ipse tu confirmares.—9. Gajus redibit sane, si hoc cognoverit (to learn).—10. Hæc quidem opinio a philosophis nostris jam diu refutata est.—11. Sempronio quidem nihil inexpectatum aut mirabile esse videtur.—12. Equidem semper existimavi, has res multo facilius reprehendi quam emendari posse.—13. Sempronius quidem primo respondit, se nihil intellexisse, deinde (§ 261, Rem. 18) se id facere non posse; postrēmo se jam fecisse.—14. Mihi quidem nihil exoptatius,<sup>1</sup> nihil jucundius esse potuit.—15. Omnino errare videris.—16. Verbum prorsus nullum intelligo.—17. Hoc quidem prorsus intelligo, te domi (at home) manere nolle.—18. Si aliud nihil fieri potest, hoc certe efficiemus, ut minore suffragiorum numero quam unquam antea vincamur.<sup>2</sup>—19. Hæc, si laudari non possunt, vituperari certe non debent.—20. Pompējo certe hoc senatus consultum (§ 227) pergratum fuisse videtur.—21. Veri nihil dicere potes: finge<sup>3</sup> saltem aliquid commode.<sup>4</sup>—22. Si pecuniam mihi dare nequis, velim consilium saltem des.—23. Mihi quidem etiam Appii Cæci carmen Pythagoræum<sup>5</sup> esse videtur.—24. Video alios etiam eisdem vitiis deditos<sup>6</sup> esse.—25. Nam qui opibus,<sup>7</sup> armis, potentia<sup>8</sup> plus valent, adversariorum stultitia et inconstantia<sup>9</sup> tantum mihi profecisse<sup>10</sup> videntur, ut jam (now) etiam auctoritate plus valeant.—26. Nefas est nocere patriæ: ergo civi<sup>11</sup> quoque, nam hic pars patriæ est; ergo etiam homini, nam hic in majore urbe tibi<sup>12</sup> civis est. Sen. Ira 61.—27. Ea quæ docētis exemplis etiam vestris confirmare debētis.—28. Velim nobis quoque orationem tuam legas.—29. Hæc quoque a majoribus nostris melius quam a nobis facta sunt.—30. In victoria (in victory) vel ignavis gloriari licet, adversæ res (misfortune) etiam bonos detrectant (degrade).—31. Vel iniquissimam pacem bello justissimo antepōno.—32. In fidibus<sup>13</sup> musicorum<sup>14</sup> aures vel minima<sup>15</sup> sentiunt (notice).—33. Marius vel amicus suis funestus erat.—34. Prædones, agro Vibonensi<sup>16</sup> depopulato,<sup>17</sup> etiam urbem terrabant.—35. Olim seditio (rebellion) suppliciis<sup>18</sup> gravissimis puniebatur; nunc vero rebellare vel virtus videtur.—36. Is quidem ita judicat, sed et nobis hæc Epicuri opinio falsa videtur.—37. Sempronius et Lucilius plus consentiunt, quam existimas; nam et ille existimat, hominum animos nunquam interire.—38. Hoc oppidum magno tantum præsidio defendi poterit.—39. Scribis, te tris libros mihi misisse; sed unum modo accēpi.—40. Si tantummodo cogitare vis, facile invenies, hoc consilium vel utriusque nostrum perniciosum fore (that it will be).—41. Tum demum beate vivere potes, si te ipse noveris.—42. Tum demum legati litteras, eis<sup>19</sup> a rege datas, protulerunt (to show).—43. Sempronius hoc imprimis effici vult, ut eadem jura omnibus hominibus reddantur.<sup>20</sup>—44. Omnes regionis nostræ terræ hanc herbam gignunt,<sup>21</sup> imprimis autem meridianæ.<sup>22</sup>—45. Mirum me desiderium tenet<sup>23</sup> urbis, incredibile (supply desiderium) meorum atque imprimis tui.<sup>24</sup>—46. Nos quidem omnium hominum jura defendimus, præcipue autem civium nostrorum.—47. Scio te Græcas potissimum litteras colere (to like), nostras vero negligere, aut illis certe posthabere (postpone).—48. Memini, te his potissimum libris delectari, qui non solum pulchra, sed etiam utilia propōnunt (teach).—49. Cæsar hæc eā<sup>25</sup> maxime ratione fecit, ut mercatores libentius (more readily) provinciam nostram adfrent (to visit).—50. Hæ conditiones a legatis rejectæ sunt, præsertim cum militum iram timērent.—51. Si celeriter progredi vis, libros utilis potius quam jucundos lege.—52. Itaque non tam (not so much) negre tuli, quod scribere impeditus fuisset, sed potius letatus sum.—53. Omnes fere, qui morbo aliquo laborabant,<sup>2</sup> ab hoc potissimum medico curari<sup>3</sup> volēbant.—54. Terrarum distantiae nunc pene sublatae (annihilated) sunt, ut (so that) vel remotissimas<sup>4</sup> regiones oculis fere vidēre aut manibus attingere<sup>5</sup> videāmur.—55. Hoc vulnus prope fatale fuit.—56. Hoc non tam me, quam te delectabit, qui illius loci prope in conspectu (in sight) es.—57. Duo fere militum millia interfecta sunt ac tria circiter millia vulnerata.—58. Has nugae satis fere audivi.—59. Haec vix a sapientissimis, multo minus a barbaris atque indoctis intelligi queunt.—60. Nulla fortasse inventio<sup>6</sup> generi humano utilior fuit, quam illa, qua libros imprimere<sup>7</sup> docemur.

<sup>1</sup> Convenire.—<sup>2</sup> See § 152, exc.—<sup>3</sup> Dominari.—<sup>4</sup> To be prostrate, jacere.—<sup>5</sup> Commovēri. <sup>6</sup> Tempestas.—<sup>7</sup> Oriri.—<sup>8</sup> Velum.—<sup>9</sup> Ducere.—<sup>10</sup> Agmen novissimum.—<sup>11</sup> To take possession, potiri.—<sup>12</sup> Respublica.—<sup>13</sup> Angustie.—<sup>14</sup> Mutilare.—<sup>15</sup> § 179.—<sup>16</sup> To cross by swimming, transire.—<sup>17</sup> Curatio.—<sup>18</sup> Inventire.—<sup>19</sup> Transl. coveting (concupiscere) the throne.—<sup>20</sup> Regnum.—<sup>21</sup> Corripere.—<sup>22</sup> Dementia.—<sup>23</sup> Gain, profit.—<sup>24</sup> Enormous.—<sup>25</sup> To cause.

<sup>1</sup> Acceptatior.—<sup>2</sup> Vincere, to beat.—<sup>3</sup> Fingere, to invent.—<sup>4</sup> Decently.—<sup>5</sup> Pythagorean.—<sup>6</sup> Given.—<sup>7</sup> Opes, wealth.—<sup>8</sup> Power.—<sup>9</sup> Frivolousness.—<sup>10</sup> Proficere, to gain.—<sup>11</sup> Supply notice to his est.—<sup>12</sup> Latere, to be hidden.—<sup>13</sup> Latere, to be hidden.—<sup>14</sup> A frequent Latin idiom instead of music, as governing nouns.—<sup>15</sup> Latere, to be hidden.—<sup>16</sup> A musician.—<sup>17</sup> Supply utilitatem, to be useful.—<sup>18</sup> Latere, to be hidden.—<sup>19</sup> Why should I care here de, and not sibi?—<sup>20</sup> Reddere, to allow.—<sup>21</sup> To produce.—<sup>22</sup> Southern.—<sup>23</sup> Desiderium urbis, a desire for the city; a longing for the city.—<sup>24</sup> Desiderium me tenet, a longing holds me, has taken possession of me.—<sup>25</sup> § 281, Rem. 7.—<sup>26</sup> Est ratio, for this reason.

1. Nothing, by Hercules, can ever induce (adducere) me, to change (deponere) my political views.<sup>8</sup>—2. Verily, Corruccius, thou art a kind accuser.<sup>9</sup>—3. I indeed (unquestionably) was lucky,<sup>10</sup> to<sup>11</sup> have seen that man just at<sup>12</sup> this time.—4. Indeed that man is an honest thief!—5. To oppress a free state is a great crime indeed!—6. To know one's self (§ 281) is difficult indeed!—7. Thou canst imagine (cogitare) no absurder thing indeed, than a grown (pubes) [man], treating puerile [things].—8. This man indeed will keep (praestare), what he promises (§ 369, R. 28).—9. Gajus indeed seems to be satisfied<sup>13</sup> with (by) this.—10. I, on my part, have always thought (existimare), that a wise [man] can never be unhappy.<sup>14</sup>—11. Gajus declared, that he, on his part, could be induced by nothing, to do this.—12. This is altogether the same as (§ 369) you have said before.—13. This opinion seems to me entirely erroneous.—14. If we make the attack, our soldiers certainly will be beaten (vincere).—15. Copernicus certainly did not know, that this theory (ratio) had already been advanced (proponere) by Hipparchus.—16. If any one at all can perform this business, Brutus certainly will be able [to do it].—17. If nothing else has been effected by these struggles (certamen), this at least seems to have been gained,<sup>15</sup> that our republic can never be dissevered<sup>16</sup> or divided.—18. Thou hast refused to act thyself: tell (dicere) at least thy opinion.—19. Also Caesar had the same opinion.—20. This is understood (perspicere) also by us.—21. I shall add also this, that many [things] are repugnant<sup>17</sup> to our neighbors,<sup>18</sup> which to us, on our part, seem entirely tolerable<sup>19</sup> and even good.—22. Even thy brother has censured thy proceedings.<sup>20</sup>—23. Our citizens are well received (excipere) even by the most remote nations (gens).—24. A good (probus) man defends even [his] enemies, [but] a bad (improbus) man slanders<sup>21</sup> even his best friends (§ 355, R. 2).—25. I should wish, that this would also happen (evenire) to us.—26. Brutus said the same thing; but even his<sup>22</sup> opinion may (can) easily be refuted.—27. This crime can<sup>23</sup> have been committed only by some cowardly [man].—28. That question can be solved (solvere) by the greatest scholars only.—29. Only this I intended to remark (monere), that our adherents<sup>24</sup> at least have never acknowledged (agnoscere) that law.—30. This man avers (ajo), that he has paid<sup>25</sup> 3000 sesterces (P. I., p. 183), while (cum with subjunctive) the treasury<sup>1</sup> has received (accipere) two thousand only.—31. Then only shall we be happy, if we shall prefer (anteponere) the commands (praeceptum) of God to our pleasures.—32. Then only did Liscus, encouraged<sup>2</sup> by the address<sup>3</sup> of Caesar, disclose<sup>4</sup> what (§ 369, R. 27) he had concealed<sup>5</sup> before.—33. Say only the word, [and] we gratify thy wishes.<sup>6</sup>—34. The general exhorted the soldiers, but especially the centurions,<sup>7</sup> to (ut) search<sup>8</sup> most carefully<sup>9</sup> the forest.—35. Laelius had selected<sup>10</sup> just this place, because he intended to live as quietly as possible.—36. Chiefly by these reasons I have been induced, to embrace (suscipere) the cause of Roscius.—37. If it seems strange<sup>11</sup> to somebody, that (infin. clause) just I have undertaken this business, I should wish you to understand, that nobody else was willing to expose (objicere) himself to so great a danger.—38. I believe, that you are willing to gratify my wishes, especially since the war, which is imminent (impendere) to the republic, can be prevented (prohibere) by me only (§ 278).—39. The enemy can never cross this line (finis plur.), especially if our generals are watchful (vigilans) and attentive.—40. Our fellow-citizens have always been exceedingly partial<sup>12</sup> to this man.—41. We rather<sup>13</sup> hear that we ourselves, than that others are praised.—42. Then we saw the very flame of civil discord or rather of war.—43. By this naval battle the power<sup>14</sup> of the Athenians was almost destroyed (extinguere).—44. Almost nobody will deny, that these conditions were entirely fair.—45. The laws almost of no state are as free as ours.—46. These laws are now nearly obliterated<sup>15</sup> and forgotten.<sup>16</sup>—47. We have lost quite enough money.—48. Caesar explained his opinion chiefly with these words:—49. This city is about 20,000 paces (§ 311) distant.—50. When these [events] transpired (evenire) we were almost in sight of the Gallic shore.—51. In (by) this skirmish<sup>17</sup> the enemies lost quite 400 [in] killed and about 2000 prisoners (captus).—52. The Gauls complained especially (queri) that (quod with subj.) almost in their sight their towns were pillaged (diripere), their fields devastated and their wives and children carried away (abducere).—53. The sight of nothing perhaps has delighted me more, than the triumphal procession (triumphus) of our general.—54. The soldiers were so few, that they scarcely filled (complere) one ship.

<sup>1</sup> Eripe fere, quod, to be sorry for. <sup>2</sup> Laborare, to be troubled. <sup>3</sup> Curare, to treat. <sup>4</sup> Remote. <sup>5</sup> To reach, touch. <sup>6</sup> Discovery. <sup>7</sup> To print. <sup>8</sup> Periculis, dangers. <sup>9</sup> Accusator. <sup>10</sup> Fortunatus. <sup>11</sup> Quasi, with subj. <sup>12</sup> At. <sup>13</sup> Contentus. <sup>14</sup> Misere. <sup>15</sup> To be gained, added. <sup>16</sup> To dissever, a line, tempore. <sup>17</sup> Contentus. <sup>18</sup> Misere. <sup>19</sup> To be gained, added. <sup>20</sup> To dissever, a line, tempore. <sup>21</sup> To be repugnant, repugnare. <sup>22</sup> Finitimus. <sup>23</sup> Ferendus. <sup>24</sup> A proceed-ing, gestum. <sup>25</sup> To shew, detestare. <sup>26</sup> Transl. the opinion of this one. <sup>27</sup> Transl. could be committed. <sup>28</sup> Homo. <sup>29</sup> Numerare.

NEGATIVE SENTENCES AND PARTICLES.

1. Newtonius haud mediocri<sup>18</sup> sane ingenio, totam hanc rationem (theory) excogitavit.<sup>19</sup>—2. Hostes milites nostros aggredi ausi non sunt.—3. Caesar Aeduos graviter vituperavit, quod, tam propinquis hostibus, frumentum ab eis missum non esset.—4. Liscus respondit, se hoc facere non potuisse, quum frumentum in agris (in the fields) maturum<sup>20</sup> non esset.—5. Ariovistus Caesari respondet, copias suas hostem non vereri.—6. Magnum est nomen ejus, qui non manibus, sed vapore<sup>21</sup> nos laborare docuit.—7. Gajus non me, sed te invitavit.—8. Liber iste, qui tunc omnibus notus erat, nunc fere non legitur.—9. Ne barbari quidem talia credunt.—10. Ne summi quidem homines has res explanare possunt.—11. Si ejusmodi laborem suscipere velles, ne Herculis quidem vires tibi sufficerent.<sup>22</sup>—12. Caesari hoc opus ne incipere quidem licuit.—13. A. Si hoc ita est, tribuni plebis curābunt,<sup>1</sup> ut jus tuum<sup>2</sup> tibi a populo reddatur.<sup>3</sup> B. At tribūni plebis me ne audiērent quidem!—14. Labiēnus, quum Cæsar nondum adesset, prœlium differre constituit.—15. Natūræ leges a mortalibus mutārī nullo modo possunt.—16. His rationibus Epicūri opinio probārī omnino non potest.—17. Exploratōres<sup>4</sup> Cæsari nuntiārent, se nihil omnino vidisse.—18. Nullum omnino negotium invito deo fieri potest.—19. Nihil omnino perficere scitis.—20. Nullum unquam militem Alcibiade fortiōrem noveramus.—21. Dux existimāvit, hostis jam fugere, neque nostrōrum impetum sustinēre posse.—22. Lucullus belli gloriam imprimis appetivit,<sup>5</sup> neque minus gloriæ quam divitiarum cupidus erat.—23. Hoc sane quam diligentissime faciam, neque a me ulla res, quæ quidem tibi curæ erit,<sup>6</sup> negligetur.—24. Oppidāni neque muros defendere, neque oppidum hostibus tradere voluerunt.—25. Consul, postquam vidit, urbem neque vi neque dolo capi posse, obsidiōnem relinquere (to raise) constituit.—26. Captivos inermis interficere nec debemus nec volumus.—27. Gajus hoc opus non modo non finivit, sed ne inchoāvit quidem.—28. Hi juvenes non modo timidi non sunt, sed etiam audāces ac temerarii fieri videntur.—29. Ego autem ita sentio, Latīnam linguam non modo non inōpem,<sup>7</sup> sed locupletiorē<sup>8</sup> esse quam Græcam. Cic. Fin. 1, 3, 10.—30. Non modo res (the event) me non fecellit,<sup>9</sup> sed ne dies quidem.—31. Non modo æternam, sed ne diuturnam<sup>10</sup> quidem gloriam assecutus est.—32. His rationibus non modo sapientis, sed ne insipientis quidem decipere potes.—33. Ea enim est cōsuetudo, quæ ei non modo dignitatis, sed ne libertatis quidem partem<sup>11</sup> relinquunt.—34. Nihil menti tam nefarium est, quam voluptas. Nec enim libidine dominante recte cogitare possumus.—35. Interea rex aliquot Illyriæ oppida expugnauerat et Thraciam invadere voluit. Nec vero Lacedæmonii quievēre.<sup>12</sup>—36. Dux Aristidem Ætōlis auxilium ferre iussit. Neque tamen hic, invito rege, obsidiōnem relinquere voluit.—37. Curare debemus, ne benignitas<sup>13</sup> nostra major sit quam facultates (means).—38. Rogo te, ne ejusmodi nugis vitam consūmas.<sup>14</sup>—39. Dux hæc præcepit,<sup>15</sup> ne quis militum se nescio navis relinquere posset.—40. Cæsar omnis equos amoveri<sup>16</sup> iussit, ne cui ulla fugæ spes reliqua esset.<sup>17</sup>—41. Hæc Cæsar eā maxime ratione fecit, ne quid ab hostibus serio (§ 69) susciperetur.—42. Copiæ flumen transierunt, ne ab hostibus circumirentur.<sup>18</sup>—43. Non punimus homines quia peccarunt, sed ne peccent.—44. Socrates ita locutus est, ut non supplex aut reus, sed magister aut dominus (ruler) iudicium esse videretur.—45. Hæc quæstio tam difficilis videtur, ut a nobis quidem solvi non possit.—46. Dux milites hortatus est, ne deficerent,<sup>19</sup> neve hostis fugientis vincere paterentur.—47. Timēbam, ne evenirent ea, quæ acciderunt (came to pass).—48. Cæsar postulāvit, ne Germānos frumento neve aliā re adjuvarent.—49. Video te omnis labores subire, ac timeo ut sustineas (eos).—50. Vereor, ut pons ille satis firmus sit.—51. Non vereor, ne hunc laborem ferre<sup>20</sup> non possis.—52. Hannibalem non magis (§ 412) barbarum quam Scipiōnem fuisse credo.—53. Alcibiadem non tam perfidum atque impium, quam levem<sup>1</sup> et imprudentem, non tam negligentem quam incuriosum<sup>2</sup> fuisse novimus.—54. Themistocles non minus celeriter gessit<sup>3</sup> res quam excogitavit.<sup>4</sup>—55. Scio, te, quum hæc fierent, nondum natum<sup>5</sup> fuisse. Non ergo quæ nunc ais vera esse possunt.

<sup>1</sup> Esum. <sup>2</sup> To encourage, adducere. <sup>3</sup> Oratio. <sup>4</sup> Proponere. <sup>5</sup> Tacere. <sup>6</sup> Gratify. <sup>7</sup> Centurions. <sup>8</sup> To search, carry, anteponere, to place, anteponere, to place. <sup>9</sup> Carefully. <sup>10</sup> Perscrutari. <sup>11</sup> Strange. <sup>12</sup> Partial. <sup>13</sup> Rather. <sup>14</sup> Power. <sup>15</sup> Obliterated. <sup>16</sup> Oblitus. <sup>17</sup> Skirmish. <sup>18</sup> Haud mediocri, no little. <sup>19</sup> Discover. <sup>20</sup> Ripe. <sup>21</sup> Steam. <sup>22</sup> To be sufficient.

<sup>1</sup> To take care.—<sup>2</sup> Jus suum (meum, tuum, etc.), literally: one's (my, thy, etc.) right, or, as we say in English: justice. The word justitia can only be used in an abstract sense.—<sup>3</sup> To render.—<sup>4</sup> Scout.—<sup>5</sup> To covet.—<sup>6</sup> Quæ quidem tibi curæ erit, Such, at least, as you will care for.—<sup>7</sup> Poor.—<sup>8</sup> Rich.—<sup>9</sup> Res me non fallit, I am not deceived in a thing. The negation often is retained, when the common predicate is expressed in the first of the coordinate members.—<sup>10</sup> Lasting.—<sup>11</sup> The part of freedom: that is: the state, the condition of freedom.—<sup>12</sup> Quiescere, to remain quiet.—<sup>13</sup> Benevolence.—<sup>14</sup> Consumere, to squander away.—<sup>15</sup> Hæc præcepit, gave these directions.—<sup>16</sup> Amovere, to remove.—<sup>17</sup> Relinquere, to be left.—<sup>18</sup> To outflank.—<sup>19</sup> Deficere, to fail.—<sup>20</sup> To endure.

1. Thou hast undertaken no difficult business indeed.—2. It was not allowed to the Gauls, to import wine.—3. Thy friends do not desist from slandering us.—4. The Senate is not accustomed (§ 342, R. 4) to make (inferre) war on (to) the weak.—5. The soldiers did not suspect, that the mountain was already occupied by the enemies.—6. The soldiers could not be induced, to (ut) renew the attack.—7. The enemies, since they had not been assisted (adjuvare) by [their] allies, could not sustain the attack of our legions.—8. Lucilius felt, that not Sulpicius, but he, was designated by the speaker (orator).—9. They said, that they did not fear the enemy, but the bad roads,<sup>6</sup> and the vastness<sup>7</sup> of the forests.—10. Themistocles was not less distinguished<sup>8</sup> by [his] diligence, than by the quickness of [his] mind.—11. Thus 50,000 of the barbarians were beaten by no more than 10,000 of our soldiers.—12. So great a fear suddenly seized (occupare) the army, that the souls and minds of all were not slightly (mediocriter) disturbed.—13. We have not yet learned (discere), that by battles and wars the lot (fatum) of the human race is ameliorated.—14. Not even by the greatest scholars can future [things] be foreknown (præscire), unless they<sup>10</sup> have been determined<sup>11</sup> by certain laws of nature.—15. Gajus could not even understand these words, but Sempronius did (facere) almost everything he had been directed [to do].—16. The laws of nature are of that kind,<sup>12</sup> that they cannot at all be violated with impunity.—17. The soldiers of the allies complained (queri) that (quod with subj.) they had not received any booty at all.—18. The general saw, that he could by no means break (perfringere) the battle-line of the enemies.—19. The soldiers saw, that they could not find any provisions at all.—20. We know, that nobody ever was wiser than Plato.—21. We never knew (novisse) any greater scholar than Varro.—22. No less than 10,000 of our soldiers were killed or wounded; nor was this battle more destructive<sup>13</sup> to us than to the enemies.—23. Cæsar saw, that this was dangerous to the Roman people, and did not think (existimare), that they ought (debere) to tolerate (ferre) the arrogance of Ariovistus.—24. We perceived,<sup>14</sup> that the enemies were retreating,<sup>15</sup> and that none of them dared to show [their] faces<sup>16</sup> to our soldiers.—25. It is known,<sup>17</sup> that the Scythians are barbarians, and that no arts at all are practised<sup>18</sup> by them.—26. Nothing is more remarkable<sup>19</sup> than this battle, and never did so small a band<sup>20</sup> crush<sup>21</sup> so great a power (opes).—27. These [men] could neither control<sup>22</sup> their faces,<sup>23</sup> nor sometimes restrain<sup>24</sup> tears.—28. Ariovistus remarked (dicere) to Cæsar, that he declined<sup>25</sup> neither his (Cæsar's) friendship, nor that of the Roman people.—29. The officers<sup>26</sup> declared, that they neither dared to leave the town without Cæsar's will, nor were able to defend the walls, if the enemies should make (subj. imperf.) an attack with (by) all troops.—30. The most renowned citizens not only did not disgrace,<sup>27</sup> but even honored<sup>1</sup> themselves by the blood of Saturninus and Flaccus.—31. But the general did not only not pursue the fleeing enemies, but not even followed [them].—32. We accused Gracchus, but thee we not only cannot accuse, but not even censure.—33. I believe, that these not only are not wise, but not even sane.—34. These words were useless; for the soldiers were unwilling to deliver their general to his adversaries.—35. I employ thy Sulpicius to everything; for I do not think (judicare) that any of thy relatives<sup>2</sup> is more prudent, nor more attached<sup>3</sup> to me.—36. Our horsemen returned (reverti), after they had pursued the first battle-line of the enemies for some time;<sup>4</sup> but they had not perceived<sup>5</sup> that the centre<sup>6</sup> had in the mean time<sup>7</sup> occupied the town.—37. We must praise, but not censure these efforts<sup>8</sup> of the young men.—38. Pyrrhus tried to bribe Fabricius; the latter, however, could not be induced to betray his country.—39. Caesar gave orders (imperare) to his soldiers, not to throw (conicere) any dart at all.—40. Ariovistus said, that he was not so barbarous (barbarus), as not to know, that the Romans had never before carried (ferre) help to the Æduans.—41. Ariovistus demanded, that Caesar should bring<sup>9</sup> no foot-soldier [with him].—42. Caesar demanded, that Ariovistus should return the hostages, that he should not trouble<sup>10</sup> the Æduans [any] longer (amplius), nor make war on the latter and their allies.—43. Caesar did this, lest it might<sup>11</sup> be said, that he had circumvented (circumvenire) Ariovistus by treachery.—44. Caesar was afraid, that the Germans might be troublesome<sup>12</sup> to our province.—45. I admonish you, never to (that you, etc.) lose<sup>13</sup> [your] courage by anybody's injury.—46. We demand, that nobody be accused for having embraced<sup>14</sup> the cause of the enemies.—47. I am afraid, that some one of you also may have this opinion.—48. The general published,<sup>15</sup> that no (§ 263, foll.) wine should be given to the soldiers, and that no sutlers<sup>16</sup> should enter (adire) the camp.—49. I am afraid, that I cannot accomplish what I have undertaken.—50. I am not afraid, that you should not accomplish this business.—51. The soldiers were afraid, that Scipio's wound was mortal.<sup>17</sup>—52. I think (existimare) that Sempronius was as little skilled<sup>18</sup> (§ 293) in (of) military art, as Varro.—53. I accuse thee of this crime as little as [I would] the king himself.—54. I think that Sempronius was not so much incompetent<sup>19</sup> as unhappy.<sup>20</sup>—55. I know that you have fought as (negatively) bravely as we ourselves.—56. What<sup>21</sup> thou hast promised<sup>22</sup> (to) me is worthless.<sup>23</sup> Therefore I shall not follow<sup>24</sup> thy way.—57. The general declared, that he had not intended to diminish the pay of the soldiers.

<sup>1</sup> Fickle.—<sup>2</sup> Careless.—<sup>3</sup> Gerere, to carry out.—<sup>4</sup> To conceive.—<sup>5</sup> Natus, born; here used as a predicative adjective. Natum fuisse is not a perfect infinitive of nasci.—<sup>6</sup> Bad roads, viarum angustiae.—<sup>7</sup> Magnitudo.—<sup>8</sup> To be distinguished, præstare.—<sup>9</sup> Translate: is made better.—<sup>10</sup> Transl.: unless which are determined.—<sup>11</sup> Define.—<sup>12</sup> Transl.: are those (is. ea, id).—<sup>13</sup> Funestus.—<sup>14</sup> Animadvertere.—<sup>15</sup> To retreat, se recipere.—<sup>16</sup> Os, in the sing.—<sup>17</sup> Constat, with an infinitive clause.—<sup>18</sup> Exercere.—<sup>19</sup> Nobilis.—<sup>20</sup> Manus.—<sup>21</sup> Prostrernere.—<sup>22</sup> Fingere.—<sup>23</sup> Vultus (sing. in Latin).—<sup>24</sup> Tenere.—<sup>25</sup> Repudiare.—<sup>26</sup> Dux.—<sup>27</sup> Contaminare.

IMPERATIVE SENTENCES.

1. Cela iram tuam, et dic, si quid mali fecimus.—2. Abi, Parmeni, et me venisse nuntia!—3. Salve, mi frater, gaudeo te advenisse.—4. Mitte<sup>25</sup> hunc virum, obsecro, aut me abire sine.—5. Ora, quæ exoptas;<sup>26</sup> dabo!—6. Redde mihi, O Vare, legiones meas!—7. Audite, di, audite! obruite irā vestrā sceleratum<sup>27</sup> istum!—8. Si irāti estis, O di, me potius punite, quam patriam meam!—9. Valēte, liberi, et quæ meditamini audacter ac fortiter exsequimini!—10. Confitere culpam tuam, mi fili, neve amplius<sup>1</sup> cunctare!—11. Vide,<sup>2</sup> ne hoc negotium male perficias.—12. Fac ut celeriter proficiscaris, neque enim multum tibi temporis restat.<sup>3</sup>—13. Certe manus, veteremque amicitiam renovate!—14. Cedo hoc poculum;<sup>4</sup> est enim meum.—15. Scito me quam avidissime adventum tuum expectare.—16. Tu vero eis rebus contentus esto, quas Deus tibi concessit.—17. Laurus Apollini sacra esto!—18. Cornelius et Sallustius æquis (at) partibus heredes sunt.—19. Si quis intestato<sup>5</sup> moritur, nec liberos habet, agnatus<sup>6</sup> proximus familiam<sup>7</sup> habeto.—20. Ne hominem necato, neve furtum committito.—21. Ne aliena appetiveris; tuis<sup>8</sup> contentus esto.—22. Imperator hoc<sup>9</sup> edictum (edict) proposuit:<sup>10</sup> Ne milites arma sua neve vestimenta vendant; ne duces<sup>11</sup> plus tris servos equosque habeant.—23. Fac ut bono æquoque animo<sup>12</sup> sis, optimaque speres.<sup>13</sup>—24. Nolite enim putare, eos qui aliquid impii sceleratique<sup>14</sup> commiserint ardentibus Furiarum tedist<sup>15</sup> perterreri.—25. Noli vereri, ne ei molestus sim,<sup>16</sup> qui te tantopere diligit.—26. Nolite unquam putare, me optatis<sup>17</sup> vestris contrarium esse.—27. Noli putare, me cuiquam longiores quam tibi epistolas scribere.—28. Velim tabellarios<sup>18</sup> certos<sup>19</sup> instituatis,<sup>20</sup> ut quotidie aliquas litteras accipiam.—29. Ut nunc se res habent,<sup>21</sup> te neve navibus neve viæ commiseris.<sup>22</sup>—30. Valetudini tantum diligentiae adhibe,<sup>23</sup> quantum me desiderare scis.—31. Cave existimes me quicquam audisse, nisi<sup>24</sup> quod a te ipso cognovi.—32. Nisi eum gravissime punivero, me esse dicito ignavissimum (the greatest coward).—33. Ne quis propius accedat, quam imperatoris edicto concessum est.—34. Resistito, si præfectus Lucium gravius multabit quam legibus sanctum<sup>25</sup> est.—35. Accedant<sup>26</sup> captivi, sententiamque a iudicibus latam<sup>27</sup> audiant!—36. Me scito omnem meum laborem consumere in (devote to) tuā salutē.—37. Sic semper vivamus, ut injurias perpeti quam inferre<sup>28</sup> malimus.—38. Sempronius reliquos exhortatur, ne laboribus succumbant.—39. Aces Datami dixit, ne ab exercitu decederet.—40. Consul Fulvio scripsit, ut exercitum statim deduceret.<sup>29</sup>—41. Sed eos moneo, desinant furere.<sup>30</sup>—42. Quid vis faciam?—43. Cave hoc facias!—44. Fac ne hoc negotium amplius differas!

<sup>1</sup> Honestare.—<sup>2</sup> Propinquus.—<sup>3</sup> Attached to, amans with gen.—<sup>4</sup> For some time, aliquamdiu.—<sup>5</sup> Animadvertere.—<sup>6</sup> Centre, media acies.—<sup>7</sup> Interim.—<sup>8</sup> Studium.—<sup>9</sup> Adducere.—<sup>10</sup> Lacerare.—<sup>11</sup> Posse.—<sup>12</sup> Molestus.—<sup>13</sup> Demittere.—<sup>14</sup> Suscipere.—<sup>15</sup> Edicere.—<sup>16</sup> A sutler, lixa.—<sup>17</sup> Mortifer.—<sup>18</sup> Peritus.—<sup>19</sup> Incapax.—<sup>20</sup> Infelix.—<sup>21</sup> [Those things], which.—<sup>22</sup> Polliceri.—<sup>23</sup> Worthless, nullus.—<sup>24</sup> Insequi.—<sup>25</sup> Mittere, to send away.—<sup>26</sup> Exoptare, to desire.—<sup>27</sup> Villain.

1. Pray, add this to thy innumerable favors,<sup>31</sup> to (ut) attend<sup>32</sup> to the interests<sup>33</sup> of my son as far as<sup>34</sup> thou wilt be able.—2. But thou, pursue (consequi) that glory which always inflamed<sup>35</sup> thee, with (by) all care (diligentia) and energy (industria).—3. Send as soon as possible thy slave Pollex away,<sup>36</sup> if he has not yet departed (proficisci).—4. Help (adjuvare) us as much as (§ 315, R. 17) you can with thy advice, and never forget, that nothing can be more pleasant to us.—5. But thou, if thou lovest us all, and especially me, thy teacher, strengthen (confirmare) thy health.—6. Sosias tells me, that thou hast lost much money. But be of good cheer,<sup>1</sup> and do (facere) everything to (ut) recover<sup>2</sup> it.—7. Close the bargain,<sup>3</sup> if thou canst; for I am afraid, that it will be nothing (nullius), if thou barriest.—8. Therefore I am afraid, that it will be nothing (nullius), if thou barriest.—8. Therefore follow me, O soldiers, and remember, that our ancestors (§ 353, R. 3) have beaten larger armies with (by) less troops.—9. Select<sup>4</sup> [each of you] (§ 259) nine soldiers, similar to yourselves.<sup>5</sup>—10. But if fortune will be doubtful, seek<sup>6</sup> (you) death rather in (by) battle than in flight.—11. Thou shalt fear (vereri) God more than men.—12. Thou shalt teach the ignorant.—13. Thou shalt honor<sup>7</sup> thy father and thy mother.—14. You shall strengthen<sup>8</sup> the weak, but admonish those (§ 356) that have no (not) faith.—15. Farewell, O Sulpicius, and continue to love me.—16. Be welcome, O fellow-citizens, and come in.<sup>9</sup>—17. Add (circumlocution by fac) more to thy liberality,<sup>12</sup> than thou takest away.<sup>13</sup>—18. But thou, instruct<sup>14</sup> thyself, as by those studies (ars), to which thou always hast been devoted,<sup>15</sup> so especially by the imitation (imitatio) of that man, whom we all love so much.—19. Know this one [thing]: If thou only (neque) will remain to me, I shall not believe that I am altogether unhappy (infortunatus).—20. No citizen shall keep (habere) more than two dogs!—21. The welfare of the people shall be the highest (supremus) law for (to) the consuls.—22. The rights of the gods of the dead<sup>16</sup> shall be sacred.—23. The citizens shall preserve (servare) the usages<sup>17</sup> of [their] fathers.—24. The Vestal<sup>18</sup> Virgins shall guard the eternal fire of the public hearth.<sup>19</sup>—25. Not only the heavenly<sup>20</sup> gods shall be worshipped (colere), but [those] also, who by their merits have become gods, [as] Hercules, Castor, Pollux, and Quirinus.—26. May each one believe, that he is protecting by [his] arms not his own body, but his wife and children; and may he not only think (agitare) [of] domestic cares, but ponder<sup>21</sup> [on] this, that (inf. clause) the Roman Senate and people are looking (intueri) [upon] our band (manus).—27. Let thy signature<sup>22</sup> be a testimony of thy [own] will,<sup>23</sup> not the tool<sup>24</sup> of that of others.—28. Let it be known (cognitus) to the whole province, that (inf. clause) the welfare, fame, children, and fortunes of all are most dear to thee.—29. Restrain (subiungere) I pray thee, thy tongue, and do not allow (committere) that (ut) the feelings<sup>25</sup> of the citizens are hurt<sup>26</sup> by thy anger.—30. Let only those be employed by thee, to whom the habits (mos) of men will be best known.—31. Let us reward the general by a most magnificent<sup>27</sup> gift.—32. Do not wonder, that (inf. clause) I recommend these things to thee.—33. Do not censure Sulpicius, that (quod with subj.) he concealed<sup>28</sup> all this.—34. Do not (by cave) undertake more than thou canst carry out (efficere).—35. May my exhortation<sup>29</sup> never seem causeless<sup>30</sup> or rashly<sup>31</sup> conceived<sup>32</sup> to thee.—36. May the citizens not be frightened by this threatening<sup>33</sup> paper (litteræ).—37. Let nothing hinder you from laying down<sup>34</sup> [your] arms.—38. If he asks (rogare, fut.-perf.) answer that you are ready to follow.—39. If he will require [it], do not do [it].—40. The magistrates of the people shall neither accept (capere) nor make (dare) gifts [style of law].—41. Do not adore images, nor worship (colere) more than one god.—42. Do not (by fac) stain<sup>1</sup> thy writings<sup>2</sup> with (by) false statements.<sup>3</sup>—43. The ambassadors brought word<sup>4</sup> to Lucilius, not to suffer (sistere) his army to rest longer (amplius, § 312) than one day.—44. Pompey wrote to his lieutenants,<sup>5</sup> that they should retreat,<sup>7</sup> and not engage rashly in<sup>8</sup> battle.—45. Caesar admonished his [soldiers], to restrain their impatience, and wait<sup>9</sup> till he himself gave the signal (signum) for (of) battle.—46. Thou wishest (velle) me to (imperative clause) do nothing; but I shall not gratify thee (morem gerere with dative).

<sup>1</sup> Any longer.—<sup>2</sup> Videre with ut or ne means: to take care, that (or lest) something is done.—<sup>3</sup> Restare, to be left.—<sup>4</sup> Goblet.—<sup>5</sup> Without a will.—<sup>6</sup> Kindred. But the word agnatus has no corresponding term in English. Agnati are all those who either are under the same paternal power, or would be under it, if not the death of the father had dissolved the relation. Thus married daughters, and all children emancipated from paternal power, were not agnati, but cognati, in regard to the rest of the family.—<sup>7</sup> Estate.—<sup>8</sup> Why is not a phrase with res used?—<sup>9</sup> The following.—<sup>10</sup> To publish.—<sup>11</sup> Officers.—<sup>12</sup> Of cheerful mind.—<sup>13</sup> The Latin says: to hope the best. We say: "to hope for the best."—<sup>14</sup> Wicked.—<sup>15</sup> Torch.—<sup>16</sup> Molestum esse often means "to harm," "to inconvenience."—<sup>17</sup> Optatum, a wish.—<sup>18</sup> Letter-carrier.—<sup>19</sup> Regular.—<sup>20</sup> Instituire, to appoint.—<sup>21</sup> Ut nunc se res habent, as matters now stand.—<sup>22</sup> To intrust, to trust.—<sup>23</sup> To devote.—<sup>24</sup> Nisi quod, except what.—<sup>25</sup> Sancire, to sanction.—<sup>26</sup> Accedere, to approach.—<sup>27</sup> Sententiam ferre, to pronounce a sentence.—<sup>28</sup> To inflict.—<sup>29</sup> Deducere, to withdraw (something).—<sup>30</sup> To be insane.—<sup>31</sup> Beneficium.—<sup>32</sup> Consulere.—<sup>33</sup> Interests, res (plur.).—<sup>34</sup> As far as, quoad.—<sup>35</sup> Indammare.—<sup>36</sup> To send away, mittere.

<sup>1</sup> To be of good cheer, bono animo esse.—<sup>2</sup> Recipere.—<sup>3</sup> Conficere.—<sup>4</sup> Nominare.—<sup>5</sup> Morari.—<sup>6</sup> Deligere.—<sup>7</sup> This word is a simple reflexive here (§ 280, R. 4).—<sup>8</sup> Oppetere.—<sup>9</sup> Confirmare.—<sup>10</sup> Confirmare.—<sup>11</sup> To come in, introire.—<sup>12</sup> Munificentia.—<sup>13</sup> Demere, to take away.—<sup>14</sup> Erudire.—<sup>15</sup> To be devoted, studere.—<sup>16</sup> The gods of the dead, di manes (plur. tant); supposed sing., manes).—<sup>17</sup> Ritus, 4th decl.—<sup>18</sup> Vestalis.—<sup>19</sup> Focus.—<sup>20</sup> Celestis.—<sup>21</sup> To ponder, animo reputare.—<sup>22</sup> The Latin says ring (seal), instead of signature; anulus or annulus.—<sup>23</sup> Voluntas.—<sup>24</sup> Minister.—<sup>25</sup> Animi.—<sup>26</sup> Offendere.—<sup>27</sup> Magnificens.—<sup>28</sup> Tacere.—<sup>29</sup> Cohortatio.—<sup>30</sup> Inanis.—<sup>31</sup> Temere.—<sup>32</sup> To conceive, concipere.—<sup>33</sup> Minax.—<sup>34</sup> To lay down, deponere.

INTERROGATIVE SENTENCES.

1. Num ego te ditior sum?—2. Tunc tardus es, si discere debes, sed celer, si ludere vis?—3. Num Nero clementior fuit Cæsare?—4. Nonne Marius major fuisset si minus diu<sup>10</sup> vixisset?—5. Num Spartani tam eruditi fuere, quam Athenienses?—6. Num tu sceleratum illum Hannibali comparabis, quorum hic ingrātam patriam semper adamavit,<sup>11</sup> ille vero gratam pæne perdidit?—7. Num quis consilia nostra hostibus prodidit?—8. Num cujus vestigia<sup>12</sup> invenisti?—9. Num recte<sup>13</sup> Cæsari antepōnimus Alexandrum, quorum alter humanitate ac temperantia<sup>14</sup> vel inimicissimos conciliavit, alter iracundiā vel amicissimos sustulit?<sup>15</sup>—10. Credisne tu tale me facinus perpetrasset?—11. Num quid novi audisti, mi fili?—12. Censen'tu, tantum illius hominis fuisse<sup>16</sup> ingenium, ut vel summos veterum superaret? Ita prorsus.—13. Attulistine tu librum, quem mihi heri pollicitus es? Sane quidem.—14. Nonne cum nuper rusticaremini, libros illos accepistis quos Gajus vobis misit? Accepimus sane.—15. Nonne satius est (§ 290, R. 6), bene parta<sup>17</sup> amittere, quam male parta tenere (to keep)? Omnino.—16. Nonne consueverunt (§ 342, R. 4) di immortales, improbis diuturniorem<sup>18</sup> interdum impunitatem<sup>19</sup> concedere, ut gravius<sup>20</sup> eos postea puniant? Ita sane est.—17. Num hostes copias nostras vicērunt? Immo vero, fugāti sunt.—18. Num hic homo causam habet justam? Immo vero, justissimam.—19. Utrum Stoicos<sup>21</sup> sequeris, qui summum bonum virtutem esse ajunt, an Epicūrum, qui bona omnia solā voluptate definit?—20. Voluptatesne fugere<sup>22</sup> an expetere<sup>23</sup> debemus?—21. Gajumne an Sempronium negotio illi adhibuisti?—22. Judices improbum illum civem utrum condemnarunt, annon?—23. Hostesne legatos pacem rogātum miserunt, annon?—24. Num quid tantā petulantia<sup>24</sup> (recklessness) mali factum est? Immo multum boni.—25. Nonne Gajus jamdiu rediit? Omnino, sed rursus abiit.—26. Cujusnam operā ac studio hoc opus tam egregie perfectum est?—27. Utri palnam (præ) datis, Sophocli an Euripidi?—28. Utrum majorem fuisse credis, Cæsaremne an Hannibalem?—29. Cuiam hunc casum accidisse dixisti?—30. Ubinam exercitum nostrum pugnasse credis?—31. Unde colligitis<sup>25</sup> solem majorem esse quam lunam?—32. Quonam hostium exercitus profectus est?—33. Cur Philippum Alexandro antepōnis?—34. Quid cunctāris? cur non respondes? quid auxilii expectas? quamdiu audacia tua nos eludet?<sup>26</sup>—35. Quotusquisque

<sup>1</sup> Stain, maculare.—<sup>2</sup> Serpentes.—<sup>3</sup> Sententia.—<sup>4</sup> To bring word, dicere.—<sup>5</sup> Quiescere.—<sup>6</sup> Longius.—<sup>7</sup> To retreat, recedere.—<sup>8</sup> To engage in battle, pugnare.—<sup>9</sup> Expectare with accusative.—<sup>10</sup> Minus, less long; for a shorter time.—<sup>11</sup> The Latin like to express comparatives of intransitive verbs by minus, as: minus sapio, less often, or minus scio.—<sup>12</sup> The adverb perpetuus in this sense is hardly ever found.—<sup>13</sup> To recte.—<sup>14</sup> Moderation.—<sup>15</sup> To destroy.—<sup>16</sup> To destroy.—<sup>17</sup> The rare § 391 is rarely observed, when the predicate infinitive is in the p.-fect.—<sup>18</sup> Parere, to acquire. To the absolute participle supply the word propetere.—<sup>19</sup> Diuturnus, long (of time).—<sup>20</sup> In punitio.—<sup>21</sup> Harder.—<sup>22</sup> The Stoics.—<sup>23</sup> To seek.—<sup>24</sup> To inter.—<sup>25</sup> To mock.

(§ 261, R. 16) enim doctrinā præstat, illā quidem<sup>1</sup> quæ hominibus prosit? — 36. Quale negotium qualibus sociis suscepisti? — 37. Quam multi vero ne hoc quidem intelligunt! — 38. Quid primum querar?<sup>2</sup> aut unde potissimum, iudices, ordiar? aut quod aut a quibus auxilium petam?

1. Am I as rich and powerful<sup>3</sup> as thou? — 2. Art thou accustomed to weep, if something unpleasant happens (accidere) to thee? — 3. Was Socrates silent when he was accused of impiety?<sup>4</sup> — 4. Will not Brutus see thee, when he returns (§ 347)? — 5. Were the soldiers sad, after they had heard that the general had returned? — 6. Has any one ever heard anything more absurd? — 7. Has he been slain (tollere) by somebody's treachery? — 8. Do you know (nosse) somebody who is able to do this? — 9. Didst thou carry (ferre) anything else, when Sulpicius met<sup>5</sup> thee? I did not. — 10. Doest thou not believe, that Gajus has lost more than 2000 sesterces? I do. — 11. Does not, while (abl. abs.) the war lasts,<sup>7</sup> all trade<sup>6</sup> lie down? Unquestionably. — 12. Didst thou see that man, whom I had pointed out<sup>8</sup> to thee? I did. — 13. Do you think (putare), that all this has happened accidentally (§ 69)? By no means. — 14. Didst thou say, that I could do this better than any one else? Certainly, I did. — 15. Is it not better to proceed a little (§ 311) slower, than to ruin everything by undue (nimius) haste?<sup>10</sup> By all means. — 16. Did Gajus obtain<sup>11</sup> the first place? No, but the second. — 17. Is Sulpicius a better scholar than Sejus? Not only this, but he is the best of all. — 18. Does the accused confess, that he has committed that murder (caedes)? On the contrary, he denies [it]. — 19. Do you wish rather, that we are your enemies or your friends? Neither (§ 246). — 20. Do you intend to seek<sup>12</sup> [your] safety by flight, or to die, fighting bravely? — 21. Have these things been done in thy presence or absence? — 22. Wilt thou leave the city directly, or wilt thou wait till thy brother returns? — 23. Do you think, that you can endure (ferre) these hardships, or not? — 24. Will it be possible (§ 18, R. 2) to bend (flexum) the will of this man, or not? — 25. Who (§ 243, R. 5) do you think has spoken better, Sulpicius or Sempronius? — 26. Whose chance (spes) do you think is better, [that] of Grant (§ 58, R. 4) or [that] of Seymour (Simōrus)? — 27. Whom did you say, you expected so long (§ 70)? — 28. Whose words didst thou quote,<sup>13</sup> when I saw thee the other day?<sup>14</sup> — 29. By which reasons hast thou been induced, to take<sup>15</sup> so serious a resolution? — 30. To whom did Gajus rent<sup>16</sup> his farm?<sup>17</sup> — 31. What do you wish to be done? — 32. At what o'clock (§ 25, R. 16) did Cæsar arrive? At nine. — 33. At (by) what an expense<sup>18</sup> did Gajus give<sup>19</sup> the last (proximus) games? At about a million of sesterces. — 34. How often (§ 258) did not Cæsar say, that he rather wished, that (inf. clause) a guilty<sup>20</sup> [person] should escape,<sup>21</sup> than that an innocent one should be punished! — 35. How will it be possible to settle (§ 37) these difficulties of the republic? — 36. To how relentless<sup>22</sup> an enemy have we left our affairs! — 37. How much (§ 311) more certain is the chance of victory to the Romans, than to Antiochus! — 38. What kind of remedies are applied by this physician? — 39. How many soldiers have been killed by the enemies? — 40. How many existed,<sup>23</sup> who (with subj.) were not willing to believe even this? — 41. How few understand, that all this is empty<sup>1</sup> and worthless?<sup>2</sup> — 42. How long did this war last? — 43. Whence did Cæsar come, when he made war on his country? — 44. Whither did Hannibal proceed,<sup>3</sup> after he had been defeated<sup>4</sup> by Scipio? — 45. Where did Milo dwell, when he had been expelled by the Roman people? — 46. When will you return to me the book, which I lent<sup>5</sup> to you the other day? — 47. Why do you believe that Gajus was absent?<sup>6</sup> — 48. Why didst thou not hurry hither,<sup>7</sup> when thou hadst heard (accipere), that the arrival of the enemies was expected?

<sup>1</sup> At least. — <sup>2</sup> For this subj. see P. II. — <sup>3</sup> Querī, to complain (of something; the Latin says: to complain complain). — <sup>4</sup> Potens. — <sup>5</sup> Impietas. — <sup>6</sup> Offendere. — <sup>7</sup> Durare. — <sup>8</sup> Transl. says: to complain complain. — <sup>9</sup> Potens. — <sup>10</sup> Impietas. — <sup>11</sup> Offendere. — <sup>12</sup> Durare. — <sup>13</sup> Transl. says: to complain complain. — <sup>14</sup> Potens. — <sup>15</sup> Impietas. — <sup>16</sup> Offendere. — <sup>17</sup> Durare. — <sup>18</sup> Transl. says: to complain complain. — <sup>19</sup> Potens. — <sup>20</sup> Impietas. — <sup>21</sup> Offendere. — <sup>22</sup> Durare. — <sup>23</sup> Transl. says: to complain complain.

INDIRECT QUESTIONS.

1. Thales, interrogatus, num facta<sup>8</sup> hominum deum fallerent:<sup>9</sup> Ne cogitata<sup>10</sup> quidem, inquit. — 2. Solon, quondam (once) a Cræso rege interrogatus est, num quemquam ipso (§ 389, R. 21) vidisset beatiorem? — 3. Interrogo vos, iudices, istiusne scelus dubium esse possit? — 4. Animadvertite igitur, rectene hanc sententiam interpreter? — 5. Videamus primo, deſine providentiā mundus regatur, deinde (§ 261, R. 10) consulatne<sup>11</sup> rebus humanis? — 6. Incerti fuerunt, hostisne aggredi, an castra defendere, an fugā salutem petere præstaret? — 7. Interrogaveras me, nonne putārem, nostros oratōres a Græcis longe (§ 311, R. 11) superatos esse? — 8. Queritur,<sup>12</sup> utrum mundus terrā stante circumeat,<sup>13</sup> an mundo stante terra vertatur?<sup>14</sup> — 9. Si sitis, nihil interest, utrum aqua sit an vinum, nec refert, utrum sit aureum poculum<sup>15</sup> an vitreum,<sup>16</sup> an manus concāva.<sup>17</sup> — 10. Eucrates querenti cui-dam, uter esse mallet, Cræsus an Socrates, respondit: Vivus<sup>18</sup> mallet esse Cræsus, moriens autem Socrates. — 11. Aristoteles haud scio an princeps fuerit philosophorum. — 12. Ter sortibus<sup>19</sup> consuluerunt,<sup>20</sup> utrum Valerius statim igni necaretur, an in<sup>21</sup> aliud tempus reservaretur?<sup>22</sup> — 13. Num unquam hominem ullum tantā præditum<sup>23</sup> constantiā vidistis? Constantiam dico? Nescio an melius patientiam possim dicere. — 14. Dubito an tantam fidem ac constantiam præmio aliquo remunerari debeamus. — 15. Thales percontanti,<sup>24</sup> quid esset difficile? Se ipsum, inquit, nosse. — 16. Dionysius, regno<sup>25</sup> expulsus, cui-dam dicenti, quid sibi Plato et philosophia profuisset?<sup>26</sup> Ut tantam, inquit, fortunæ mutationem<sup>27</sup> facile feram (endure). — 17. Epictetus, interrogatus, quis esset dives? Is, inquit, cui id, quod habet, satis est. — 18. Socrates, cum interrogaretur, cuiatem (§ 357, Rem. 8) se esse diceret? Mundanum,<sup>28</sup> inquit. — 19. Agis Lacedæmonius, interrogatus, quot haberet milites: Quot<sup>29</sup> sufficiunt<sup>30</sup>, inquit, ut hostes vincantur. — 20. Quidam, cum interrogaretur, qualem Socrates vitam egisset, qualem,<sup>31</sup> inquit, cum moriar, egisse ipse cupiero. — 21. Aristippus interroganti cui-dam, quanta esset hominis cuiusdam honestas,<sup>32</sup> inquit, i et metire!<sup>33</sup> — 22. Thales percontanti, cui-dam, ubinam esset deus, interroges potius, inquit, ubi non sit. — 23. Equites obvios<sup>34</sup> percontati sunt, quæ fortuna (the fate) consulum atque exercitus esset, ubi copiae essent, quo se Hannibal contulisset, quid pararet,

<sup>1</sup> Inanis. — <sup>2</sup> Nullus. — <sup>3</sup> To proceed, se conferre. — <sup>4</sup> Transl. having been defeated. — <sup>5</sup> Commodare. — <sup>6</sup> To be absent, abesse. — <sup>7</sup> To hurry hither, advolare. — <sup>8</sup> Factum, a deed. — <sup>9</sup> Aliquid me fallit, something escapes me. — <sup>10</sup> Literally, the things thought; that is: the thoughts. — <sup>11</sup> To attend. — <sup>12</sup> Queritur, it is the question. — <sup>13</sup> Circumire, to go round, to turn. — <sup>14</sup> Verti, to be turned, to revolve. — <sup>15</sup> A goblet. — <sup>16</sup> Poculum vitreum, a glass goblet. — <sup>17</sup> Hollow. — <sup>18</sup> Transl. if alive, if living; moriens, if dying. — <sup>19</sup> Sors, a lot. — <sup>20</sup> Consultare, to deliberate. — <sup>21</sup> For another time. — <sup>22</sup> Reservare, to reserve, to spare. — <sup>23</sup> Endowed with. — <sup>24</sup> Percontari, to ask. — <sup>25</sup> From his kingdom. — <sup>26</sup> Quid prodest, of what use is... — <sup>27</sup> Change. — <sup>28</sup> A world-citizen. — <sup>29</sup> Instead of tot quot. — <sup>30</sup> Sufficere, to be sufficient. — <sup>31</sup> Instead of talem (vitam), qualem. — <sup>32</sup> Honesty. — <sup>33</sup> Metiri, to measure. — <sup>34</sup> Those, whom they met on the road.

quid ageret?—24. Demōnax, interrogātus, quando cōpisset philosophārī, Tum, inquit, cum cognoscere me ipsum cōpi.—25. Paucos ibi (there) morātus est dies Cato, dum (till) explorāret;<sup>2</sup> ubi et quantē hostium copiā essent.—26. Meministi profecto, Attice, quanta tū esset hominum vel admiratio<sup>3</sup> vel querēla.<sup>4</sup>—27. Sape animo reputāvi,<sup>5</sup> quam pauci hanc quæstionem recte<sup>6</sup> perspexissent.<sup>7</sup>

1. Thales, [when] asked, what was easy, replied: To admonish others.—2. Fabius Pictor was sent, to (§ 351) inquire<sup>8</sup> by what prayers<sup>9</sup> and supplications<sup>10</sup> the gods could be appeased?—3. It is very important what [our] enemies, [and] what [our] allies think (existitatio).—4. King Agis replied to a wicked<sup>11</sup> [man], who (participles) asked, who was the best of the Spartans, He, who is most dissimilar to<sup>12</sup> thee.—5. Cyneus, [when] asked by Pyrrhus, what kind of [a city] Rome was, answered, that he had found a city of kings.—6. When (abst. absol.) the king of the Thracians<sup>13</sup> asked Orestes and Pylades, which of them was Orestes, Pylades said, that he was Orestes.—7. The guards<sup>14</sup> asked Lucilius, who he was, whence he came, and whither he wished to proceed.<sup>15</sup>—8. If you deny, that those [things] are true, I, on my part, confess, that I do not understand, what truth (verum) is.—9. People ask me, how thou bearest (ferre) the death of Africanus?—10. Thou hast asked<sup>16</sup> me to (an) write, how anger might (posse) be softened.<sup>17</sup>—11. Thou wilt very easily decide (judicare) which of the two was greater, Scipio or Hannibal.—12. It makes no difference, by whom this has been said.—13. Not even a single (ullus) letter of thine (§ 272, Rem. 1) informs<sup>18</sup> me, how (transl.: what) thou art doing (agere), and where I may (posse) see thee.—14. Caesar had never told me, how many [persons] had applied to him.<sup>19</sup>—15. See, how much time I have devoted (tribuere) to thee.—16. Then I could not even suspect, of what kind and how important<sup>20</sup> these [matters] were.—17. I do not understand, why we should take pains<sup>21</sup> just with these things.—18. The consul directed the scouts, to ascertain,<sup>22</sup> what [men] inhabited<sup>23</sup> the island, whence they derived<sup>24</sup> [their] origin, which were their manners,<sup>25</sup> and how much assistance could be expected from (transl.: by, ab) them.—19. But really (plane) where or when I have seen him, I cannot even suspect.—20. How dear Scipio was to the community (civitas), has been indicated by the mourning<sup>26</sup> at (transl.: of) [his] funeral.<sup>27</sup>—21. The Lucetani remembered, how often they had laid waste<sup>28</sup> the fields of the besiegers,<sup>29</sup> and how frequently they had put them to flight and had routed<sup>30</sup> them in battle (ecce).—22. It can scarcely be expressed, how much joy thy letter has caused (afferre) to me.—23. It is uncertain, whether men govern nature, or are governed by it.—24. The witness (testis), [when] asked, whether he knew (nosse) Sempronius or not, said, that he did not.—25. It makes a great difference, whether an ambush is laid<sup>31</sup> to the enemies, or to [one's] fellow-citizens.—26. It makes no difference, whether thou hast committed the crime thyself, or hast induced another, to commit it.—27. I wish to see, whether shame<sup>32</sup> and duty or fear prevails<sup>1</sup> with you (apud vos).—28. Tell me, whether thou wast not angry,<sup>2</sup> when thou didst learn (cognoscere), that thou hadst been deceived by the king.—29. I should wish to know if these judges passed judgment<sup>3</sup> in (by) good faith.—30. The judges asked the accused whether he wished to say anything.—31. I do not know whether not perhaps also one<sup>4</sup> of you is deceived<sup>5</sup> by this error.—32. Perhaps the Stoics were right, when they said<sup>6</sup> that only a wise [man] could be happy.—33. I doubt whether anything of the kind (ejusmodi) ever happened before.

<sup>1</sup> To treat philosophy. <sup>2</sup> Explorare, to find out. <sup>3</sup> Admiration. <sup>4</sup> Fretful finding. <sup>5</sup> Animo reputare, to consider. <sup>6</sup> Recte, correctly. <sup>7</sup> To understand. <sup>8</sup> Sciscitare. <sup>9</sup> Preces. <sup>10</sup> Supplicium. <sup>11</sup> Improbus. <sup>12</sup> Transl.: of. <sup>13</sup> Thrac. <sup>14</sup> Statio. <sup>15</sup> So contendere. <sup>16</sup> Rogare. The difference between perire and interire is, that the former means, to ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>17</sup> Latere. <sup>18</sup> Do. <sup>19</sup> Ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>20</sup> Latere. <sup>21</sup> Do. <sup>22</sup> Ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>23</sup> Latere. <sup>24</sup> Do. <sup>25</sup> Ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>26</sup> Latere. <sup>27</sup> Do. <sup>28</sup> Ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>29</sup> Latere. <sup>30</sup> Do. <sup>31</sup> Ask somebody to do a thing, and the latter, to answer a question. <sup>32</sup> Latere. <sup>33</sup> Do.

<sup>1</sup> Valere.—<sup>2</sup> Angry, iratus.—<sup>3</sup> To pass judgment, judicium dare.—<sup>4</sup> Quis.—<sup>5</sup> To be deceived, labi.—<sup>6</sup> Translate: I do not know whether not perhaps the Stoics said rightly (recte), that only a wise man, etc.

Appendix I.

APPENDIX I.

SUPPLEMENTARY RULES ON DECLENSION, INCLUDING THE DECLENSION OF GREEK NOUNS.

1. DECLENSION IN GENERAL.

1. The Latin language has five declensions of nouns, which are distinguished by their characteristics, i. e. the terminating vowels or consonants of their STEMS. The first declension has the vowel a as characteristic (mens-a); the second declension has the vowel o (hort-u-s, instead of hort-o-s, which is the original form of the nominative in this declension); the third declension has the vowel i or a consonant (civ-i-s, consu-l, nome-n, ple-b-s); the fourth declension has the vowel u (fruct-u-s); the fifth has the vowel e (di-e-s). Thus each of the five vowels is assigned to a special declension, while all consonantic characteristics belong to the third.

2. The Latin language has two systems of case-endings, which are shown in the following synopsis:

| FIRST SYSTEM. |                                | SECOND SYSTEM. |                        |
|---------------|--------------------------------|----------------|------------------------|
|               |                                | SINGULAR.      |                        |
| Nom.          | — or s (neuters of the II. um) | Nom.           | — or s                 |
| Gen.          | i                              | Gen.           | is                     |
| Dat.          | i                              | Dat.           | i                      |
| Acc.          | em (neuters like Nom.)         | Acc.           | em (neuters like Nom.) |
| Voc.          | like Nom. (masc. in the II. e) | Voc.           | like Nom.              |
| Abl.          | e                              | Abl.           | e                      |
|               |                                | PLURAL.        |                        |
| Nom.          | i, neuters a                   | Nom.           | es, neuters a          |
| Gen.          | rum                            | Gen.           | um                     |
| Dat.          | is                             | Dat.           | ibus                   |
| Acc.          | es, neuters a                  | Acc.           | es, neuters a          |
| Voc.          | like Nom.                      | Voc.           | like Nom.              |
| Abl.          | is                             | Abl.           | ibus                   |

The FIRST SYSTEM is applied to the first and second declensions; the SECOND SYSTEM belongs to the third and fourth declensions. In the fifth declension some cases are formed according to the FIRST system, and others according to the SECOND.

3. These case-endings, in the forms which are given in the synopsis, appear only in the consonant-stems of the third declension, and in the genitive plural of all declensions. Generally they are so blended with the characteristic that either the first vowel of the ending, or the characteris-

STONES and RARER ANIMALS, are nearly all taken from the GREEK. Many of these nouns, even in the classical period retain in some of the oblique cases their Greek case-terminations, and in the FIRST declension a system of case-terminations has been formed consisting partly of Latin, partly of Greek endings, which is called the GREEK FIRST DECLENSION. See § 6.

5. QUANTITY OF THE CASE-TERMINATIONS.

The termination a of all cases is short, except the Abl. sing. of the first declension and the Voc. sing. of Greek Proper nouns in as: mensā, Pythagorā. e is short except in the Abl. sing. of the 5th decl. and in the Nom. Voc. and Abl. sing. of Greek nouns in e and es of the first decl.: diē, epitomē, dynastē.

i is always long, as horti, ciri, fructū, spēi. o is long in the DATIVE and ABLATIVE of the second, but long or short in the NOMINATIVE of the third declension—virgo, sermo.

u is always long—fructū, cornū. m always shortens the preceding vowel—mensām, fructūm, sestertiūm, dīēm. as is long (aiās, mensās), some wrongly excepting anās. In the GREEK nouns of the first declension as is long after a vowel and after r; but short after the other consonants (boreās, Pythagorās, Pelopidās).

es is long (trupēs, cirēs, dīēs), except in the nom. sing. of those nouns of the third declension, where the characteristic t is dropped before the ending (mīlēs stem mīlit, herēs st. herēt). But in ariēs, abiēs, and pariēs the termination es is long, although their stems terminate in et.

is is short in the SINGULAR (flūis, maris), but long in the PLURAL (lectūs, flūis). It is also long in Quirīs and Samnīs (st. it).

os is long (honōs, nepōs, hortōs) except the GREEK nominatives in os of the second declension, unless they belong to the Attic declension (Lemmōs, but Athōs).

us is short, except in GEN. SING., and NOM. and ACCUS. PLUR. of the fourth decl. (fructūs), and in those nouns of the third decl. in which u is radical (virtus, stem virtūt; bellūs, st. bellūt; pūas st. pūad; pacūs st. pacūt).

In the dissyllabic terminations the PENULT is always long in the first and second, and always short in the third and fourth declensions (aulāi, mensūrum, deūbus, ventūrum; but civium, maria, flūibus, fructūum, acūbus). In the fifth declension the pen. It is generally long, except the GEN. and DAT. SING., if the termination is preceded by a consonant, as: fidēi, plūbēi; but diēi, acūi.

The quantity of nominative-terminations not belonging to those mentioned above, is regulated by the following three rules:

1. MONOSYLLABLES are long, except cōr, fēl, mēl, ōs (ossis), cōn. 2. POLYSYLLABLES have the vowels of their final syllables short, as: pūer, dolōr, capūt, rectigūt. But the final syllables of those, terminating in x are long by position, the letter x taking the place of a K-mute with s.—3. GREEK nouns generally retain the quantity, which they have in Greek, as: cratēr, delphūn, Træzēn.

2. FIRST GREEK DECLENSION.

6. The GREEK first declension (see § 4) comprises nouns, terminating in ē, ēs, ās. In the SINGULAR they have a peculiar system of terminations, partly LATIN, partly GREEK; but in the PLURAL they have the regular LATIN terminations. Those in ē are feminine, the others, masculine. Hence the plurale tantum etesias (trade-winds) is a MASCULINE, since it must be derived from a Greek singular etesias (ὁ ἐτησίας). The singulars are declined after the following paradigms.

| an epitome   | the north-wind | a reader       |
|--------------|----------------|----------------|
| N. epitom-ē  | bore-ās        | anagnost-ēs    |
| G. epitom-ēs | bore-ae        | anagnost-ae    |
| D. epitom-ai | bore-ae        | anagnost-ai    |
| A. epitom-ēn | bore-am (ān)   | anagnost-ēn    |
| V. epitom-ē  | bore-ā         | anagnost-ē     |
| A. epitom-ē  | bore-ā         | anagnost-ē (ā) |

Rem. The terminations ē, ēs, ās are the Greek terminations η, ης, ας. The Greek nouns of the first decl., terminating in α, retain this termination in Latin, and are declined like Latin nouns, as: philosophia (φιλοσοφία), historia (ἱστορία), Electra (Ἠλέκτρα) etc. Of those that terminate in η and ης, many have assumed the LATIN termination a, and are then likewise declined like LATIN nouns; as: pæna (ποῖνη), syllaba (συλλαβή), bibliotheca (βιβλιοθήκη), schola (σχολή), epistola (ἐπιστολή), margarita (μαργαρίτης), poëta (ποιητής), pirata (πειρατής). Others retain the GREEK termination, but have a collateral Latin form in a, as: epitome and epitoma, musica and musicā, Helene and Helena, Niobe and Nioba, athlētēs and athlēta, Persēs and Persa, Lapithēs and Lapitha. Other nouns take the Greek termination exclusively, as hyperbole, magice, Hebe, Euterpe, acinaces, tetrarches, Poliorcētēs, Thyestes.

7. To the Greek declension in ē belong: (a) all female proper nouns in e, as Circe, Dandē, Hecate; (b) the names of Greek cities, and of cities named by the Greeks, in e, as: Cyllēnē, Cyrēnē, Dilymē, Messēnē, Mitylēnē, Sinōpē; (c) the mythological river Lethē, and some APPELLATIVE nouns, especially the names of ARTS and SCIENCES in icē, as rhetoricē, grammaticē, musicē.

Rem. The appellative nouns in ē are mostly POSTCLASSICAL, as crambē<sup>1</sup>, aloe<sup>2</sup>, hyperbole<sup>3</sup>, apostrophen<sup>4</sup>, plasticē<sup>5</sup>, clinacē<sup>6</sup>, magice<sup>7</sup>, ethice<sup>8</sup>, etymologicē<sup>9</sup>. Only epitome<sup>10</sup>, grammaticē<sup>11</sup>, rhetoricē<sup>12</sup>, and musicē<sup>13</sup> have CLASSICAL authority, and even these are by far more usual in their LATIN forms in a, as epitoma, grammatica etc.

8. To the declension in ēs belong: (a) the PATRONYMICS, that is the names of men in the heroic age, derived from the names of their fathers or ancestors, as Atrides<sup>14</sup>, Pelides<sup>15</sup>, Priamides<sup>16</sup>, Tydidēs, Laertiades, Heracleides<sup>17</sup>. They terminate in ides, ides, or iades; (b) Some MALE proper names, as Anchises, Laertes, Philoctetes etc.; (c) Some CIVIC and NATIONAL nouns, as Crotoniades<sup>18</sup>, Abderites<sup>19</sup>, Spartiates<sup>20</sup>, Epirotes<sup>21</sup>, Stagiritēs, Mullotes, Heracleotes; (d) Many APPELLATIVE nouns, as anagnostēs<sup>22</sup>, sophistes<sup>23</sup>, geomētrēs<sup>24</sup>.

Rem. 1. The majority of the Greek proper nouns in ēs follow the third declension, even if in GREEK they are inflected after the first declension; as Euripides (GEN. Euripidis), Miltiades (GEN. Miltiadis), while in GREEK all proper nouns in ιδης and αδης belong to the first declension. Even three appellative nouns in ēs (sorites<sup>25</sup>, acinaces<sup>26</sup>, and satrapes<sup>27</sup>), which in Greek follow the first declension, are in Latin, in the singular at least, inflected after the third, while in the PLURAL they follow the first declension<sup>28</sup>. Among the proper nouns in ēs, the following belong in LATIN, to the first Greek declension: Epiros, Anchises, Chryses, Laertes, Philoctetes, Procrustes, Thersites, Thyestes, Echecrates, Ephialtes, Epicrates, Leotychides, Melicertes, Poliorcetes, Polydectes, Achates, Agamēdes, Orontes, Phraotes and some others less usual.

Rem. 2. The appellative nouns in ēs are mostly POSTCLASSICAL, as comētes<sup>29</sup>, pancratiastes<sup>30</sup>, chorantes<sup>31</sup>, marathites<sup>32</sup>, meses<sup>33</sup>, mystes<sup>34</sup>, plastēs<sup>35</sup>, the PLURALE TANTUM Pandectēs<sup>36</sup>, and many names of STONES, as achates<sup>37</sup>, chrysites<sup>38</sup>, pyrites<sup>39</sup>. Classical authority have only: anagnostēs<sup>40</sup>, sophistes<sup>41</sup>, geomētrēs<sup>42</sup>, sorites<sup>43</sup>, satrapes, Areopagites<sup>44</sup>, and some compounds of arches (ἀρχης), denoting the chief of a country (as Boeotarchēs<sup>45</sup>, Ma- gnatarches, tetrarches?). Such nouns as occur but once or twice in familiar style (as al darches and al dres in Cicero's letters), cannot be considered as received Latin words.

<sup>1</sup> Cabbage.—<sup>2</sup> the plant aloe.—<sup>3</sup> a rhetorical figure (exaggeration).—<sup>4</sup> a rhetorical figure.—<sup>5</sup> the plastic art.—<sup>6</sup> the art of practical medicine.—<sup>7</sup> magic.—<sup>8</sup> ethics.—<sup>9</sup> etymology.—<sup>10</sup> abridgment.—<sup>11</sup> grammar.—<sup>12</sup> rhetoric.—<sup>13</sup> music.—<sup>14</sup> grandson of Atræus, a designation of Agamemnon and Menelaus.—<sup>15</sup> son of Peleus, designation of Achilles.—<sup>16</sup> a son of Priamus.—<sup>17</sup> a descendant of Hercules.—<sup>18</sup> inhabitant of Croton.—<sup>19</sup> inhabitant of Abdera.—<sup>20</sup> Spartan.—<sup>21</sup> inhabitant of Epirus.—<sup>22</sup> a reader.—<sup>23</sup> a sophist.—<sup>24</sup> a geometer.—<sup>25</sup> a certain kind of sophism.—<sup>26</sup> a Persian sabre.—<sup>27</sup> a satrap (Persian viceroy).—<sup>28</sup> The noun satrapes belongs to the 3d declension only in the GEN. SING. But sorites is in the whole of the singular inflected after the 3d declension. Quomodo soriti resistas? Cic. Div. 2, 4.—<sup>29</sup> a comet. Cicero quotes this word only once as a GREEK expression: stellis his, quas Græci comētas, nostri crinitas vocant, Nat. Deor. 2, 5. At a later period the word was received in the language, but only with the GREEK termination ēs. The form comēta is found only in the latest Latinity. The noun planētes (a planet) instead of the classical stellæ errantes belongs to the Latinity of the middle ages.—<sup>30</sup> a combatant in all kinds of gymnastics.—<sup>31</sup> a flute-player.—<sup>32</sup> fennel-wine.—<sup>33</sup> the north-north-east-wind.—<sup>34</sup> a priest in the mysteries.—<sup>35</sup> a sculptor.—<sup>36</sup> a part of the civil law, codified by Justinian.—<sup>37</sup> agate.—<sup>38</sup> topaz.—<sup>39</sup> flint.—<sup>40</sup> a reader.—<sup>41</sup> a sophist.—<sup>42</sup> a geometer.—<sup>43</sup> a certain kind of sophism.—<sup>44</sup> a member of the Areopagus, the high criminal court at Athens.—<sup>45</sup> chief of the Boeotians.

9. To the declension in as belong: (a) most of the Greek proper names in as, as the male proper names Pythagoras, Pelopidas, Leonidas, Epanonidas, Marsyas etc., and the river Eurōtas; (b) the APPELLATIVE nouns boreas<sup>3</sup>, tiāras<sup>4</sup>, carbas<sup>5</sup> and the plurale tantum etesiae, only the last of which has classical authority.

Rem. It must be considered as a rule, that proper nouns in as belong to the first Greek declension. But several Greek proper nouns in as with the GEN. antis and adis belong to the third declension, as Diogenes, Pythagoras; Alcibiades, Alcibiades; Phidias, Phidias. For these see 'third declension'. Aside from the chief nouns in as, there are but two LATIN proper nouns in as belonging to the third declension: Larentis, GEN. Larentis, and Maccenas, GEN. Maccenas.—The Greek nouns in as generally do not assume the Latin ending a, as many of those in η and ης. Exceptions are the nouns Marsyas and tiāras, of which the collateral forms Marsya and tiāra occur.

10. GENDER OF GREEK NOUNS. If Greek nouns in ης or ας assume the Latin termination a, they also change their Greek GENDER, becoming FEMININE, as haec margarita (from the Greek μαργαρίτης), haec metretis (in Greek μετρητής). If both the GREEK and the LATIN forms are in use, the gender is different according to the termination, as: tiāras, masc., and tiāra, fem.

Rem. According to this rule the controversy, whether the noun Pandecta is a MASCULINE or a FEMININE, must be thus decided, that both genders are admissible, according as we assume the singular Pandecta or Pandectes, both of which forms occur, though in significations different from the PLURAL.

11. EXCEPTIONAL CASE ENDINGS.

(a) The DATIVE SING. of the Greek nouns in η and ης often assumes the termination e, as NOM. Anchises, DAT. Anchisē. This is an imitation of the Greek termination η, dropping its ist subscript. In the later periods of the language this was the regular DATIVE-TERMINATION of the Greek nouns in η and ης. See Charisius p. 20 Keil.

(b) The ACCUSATIVE SING. of the Greek nouns in as sometimes, especially in poets, (in Virgil always) assumes the termination an, after the Greek accusative in αν. Thus we always find in Livy the accusative Aenēan.

(c) Proper names in ēs generally have in the VOCATIVE and ABLATIVE SING. the LATIN terminations ā (for the voc.), and ā (for the abl.) instead of the Greek terminations ē and ē, as VOC. Atridā, ABL. Atridā.

3. SECOND DECLENSION.

A. Additional Remarks to Less. VIII., IX., X.

12. (Add. to § 32.) The characteristic o of this declension had already in the anteclassical period changed into a in the nominative and accusative singular. But after v we frequently find the endings os and om instead of us and um in the poets, both anteclassical and classical (as seiros, aros in Plautus; erom in Lucret. and Virg.). While the Inscriptions of the archaic period sometimes give the terminations os and om, instead of us and um (as primos in the epitaphs of the Scipios, and on the Columna Rostrata; Duvios, oppidom, poplom, caplom in the latter inscription), the orthography of these monuments often presents o instead of an organic u, aside from the characteristic of the second declension, as poplom, caplom, etc. This shows that o and u, in general, often interchanged in the old language.

13. (Add. to § 38.) The termination ius by which many proper names of this declen-

<sup>1</sup> Chief of the Magnetians. — <sup>2</sup> chief of a country in general. — <sup>3</sup> north-wind. — <sup>4</sup> turban. — <sup>5</sup> east-north-east-wind. — <sup>6</sup> a Greek measure.

sion are formed (and in the first declension the ending ia) is originally a derivative ending for ADJECTIVES, i being the derivative element. Hence the ending occurs in all three genders. Of the same origin is the characteristic i in the nouns of the third declension belonging to the vowel-class. This letter i, as a derivative element, is of the greatest antiquity, since all cognate languages show it in their declension of nouns. In the cognate languages this derivative i generally appears in its consonantic form (j) which, in Latin, is used only after vowels (Vellėjus, Pompėjus, Gėjus, Mėjus), always lengthening the preceding vowel.

The adjective termination ius is especially employed to designate the Roman gentes, i. e. the combinations of those families which were derived from a common ancestor. Thus gens Julia was that gens which, since Caesar, derived its origin from Iulus, the son of Enēas. The females had no other names but the name of their gens, those of the same family being distinguished by ordinal numerals (Prima, Allera, Tertia etc.). A trace of such a distinction we also find in the first names of males, as Quintus, Sextus, Decimus. Hence the names of Roman families up to the Augustan age always end in ius. Since that time diminutive forms began to be introduced for female names, as Drusilla, Agrippina, Messalina. Already Cicero almost always calls his daughter Tullia by the diminutive Tulliola.

14. (Add. to § 38. R. 5.) The rule given in most grammars that the noun genius (tutelary deity) forms its vocative in i, rests on the authority of a single passage in Tibull. 4, 5, 9, in which the reading 'magne geni' is critically doubtful, the correct reading (confirmed by several manuscripts) being alme veni. The reason that the e of the vocative of proper names in ius and of the noun genius was dropped, is the very frequent use of these vocatives in daily intercourse. This reason does not apply to the noun genius, the vocative of which must have been very rarely used, since it does not occur in any form in the ancient writers.

15. (Add. to § 34–38.) Mostly to the second declension, but also to the first, belong the frequent DIMINUTIVES of the Latin language, which either impart the idea of SMALLNESS to their primitive nouns, or are used as terms of ENDEARMENT. They have the endings ulus, ula, ulum, or culus, cula, culum, according to the GENDER of the primitive noun, as rius — riulus, mensa — mensula, oppidum — oppidulum, mulier — muliercula. Hence diminutives serve as tests for the gender of their primitives in the case of doubt.

Rem. 1. The endings ulus, a, um, which after a vowel are changed into ulus, a, um, are attached to the nouns of the first, second, and to those of the third declension, which have MUTE STEMS. The nouns of the first and second declensions attach these endings to their DECLENSION-STEMS. Thus are formed:

|   |                                  |   |
|---|----------------------------------|---|
| 1ST DECL. arca — arca                             | filia — filiola    | taba , ( obsol. ) — tabula |
| cena — cenula                                     | villa — villula    | bestia — bestiola                 |
| 2D DECL. nidus — nidulus                          | puer — puerulus    | malleus — malleolus               |
| saxum — saxulum                                   | seutum — seutulum  | negotium — negotiolum             |
| 3D DECL. ( disceps , obsol. ) — discipulus | rex — regulus      | merces — mercedula                |
| caput — capitulum                                 | fornax — fornacula | vox — vocula                      |
| nepos — nepotulus                                 | stips — stipula    | radix — radicula                  |

When the declension-stem ends in n or r, these letters, together with their preceding vowels, are generally dropped, and the endings ulus, a, um, or ulus, a, um are attached, as ager — agellus, liber — libellus, catēna — catella, opera — opella, lucrum — lucellum, sigillum — sigillum, lignum — lignillum. Lapis forms lapillus, and codex — codicillus. Pes irregularly forms pediculus, and rana has two diminutives, the regular ranula and the irregular ranuncululus, the latter pointing at an obsolete noun rano, G. ranōnis. (See R. 2.)

Rem. 2. The endings culus, a, um are attached to the nouns of the fourth and fifth declensions, and to those with LIQUID and VOWEL-STEMS of the third declension. They are always attached to the TRUE stem.

1) The VOWEL-STEMS of the 3d declension retain their characteristic i, to which the diminutive endings culus, a, um are attached:

|   |   |
|---|---|
| piscis (st. pisci ) — pisci-culus  | rete (st. reti ) — reticulum   |
| navis (st. navi ) — navicula       | pons (st. ponti ) — ponticulus |
| linter (st. lintri ) — lintriculus | pars (st. parti ) — particula  |
| venter (st. ventri ) — ventriculus | sors (st. sorti ) — sorticula  |

Nouns, which form their nominatives in ēs, instead of the true characteristic i, retain the vowel ē in their diminutives, as nubēs — nubēcula, vulpēs — vulpēcula, sedēs — se- dēcula.—Falx forms falcūla and falcicūla, glans—glandula, cor—corculum, and adolescens—adolescentulus. Ad- changes the vowel preceding their characteristic in the NOM.

2) The LIQUID stems, which change the vowel preceding their characteristic in the NOM. SING., retain this changed vowel in their DIMINUTIVES, as pulvis (st. pulveris) — pulvisculus, corpus (st. corpore) — corpusculum. Those nouns of the N-class, which take the termination o in the nominative, change this vowel into a, retaining the characteristic n, as homo — homunculus.

|                         |                      |                      |
|-------------------------|----------------------|----------------------|
| mel — melculum          | frater — fraterculus | mas — masculus       |
| carbo — carbunculus     | tuber — tuberculum   | os (mouth) — osculum |
| virgo — virguncula      | flos — flosculus     | opus — opusculum     |
| narratio — narratuncula | lepus — lepusculus   | vas — vasculum       |

Cura forms curemēdi, although it properly belongs to the VOWEL CLASS; arbor forms arborēdi, vapor vaporēdi. Os also belongs, since it belongs to the VOWEL-CLASS, makes ossicūm.

3. The nouns of the fourth declension change their character stē q into us ap os — ap-riculus, cornu — corniculū, anus — anulū. But diap us forms diapulū. In the fifth declension there is only the diminutive dicula from dies.

R. m. 3. Each adjectives may assume a diminutive form, as parvus = parvulus, levis = leviculus, acer = aculeolus, altus = alticulus. Even form a few cases marked withatives, as quantus = quantulus; totus = totulus. While quantulus and totulus mean 'how much' and 'so much', quantulus and leviculus mean 'how little' and 'so little'.

16. (Add. to § 32-38.) In the classical period the GENITIVE SING. of nouns (not ADJECTIVES) in ius and iun was uritten and pronounced with a single i, always taking the accent on the PENULT, as Laberius, GEN. La-be-ri (not Labe-ri); aurilius, GEN. auri-li (not auri-ri); ingenium, GEN. inge-ni (not ingen-ri).

Item. Although the Latin grammarians of the fourth and fifth centuries expressly direct that the GEN. SING. of nouns in ius and jura be formed with double i, and not with single i, alleging it to be contrary to grammatical rules to form the genitive a syncope softer than the nominative, it is nevertheless undeniable that during the CLASSICAL period the genitive of these nouns was exclusively formed with a single i. This was first noticed by BENTLEY to Terent., Act. 2. l. 20, and afterwards by Gellius in his treatise of Varias, p. 68, by Gellius (Noct. Att. 13. 25), that he could distinguish the genders and numbers of Varias in Gellius (Noct. Att. 13. 25), that he could distinguish the genders and numbers of Varias in Gellius (Noct. Att. 13. 25), that he could distinguish the genders and numbers of Varias in Gellius (Noct. Att. 13. 25). VARRIO, the cotemporary of CICERO, acknowledges this usage as a fact, remarking, that the genitives of Plautus and Plautius had the same form, although he finds fault with it as being contrary to strict grammar. In Lucretius, Virgil and Horace we invariably find in the genitive of nouns in ius (jus) and jura the single i. But in the post-classical periods the double i gradually was adopted, and became the best times of the language. Our modern editions of the classical authors have the DOUBLE i, though in some of the best editions the SINGLE i has been restored. See Schneider Gr. p. 59, and Spalding to Quintilian, Vol. I., p. 472; Vol. IV., p. 19.

17. (Add. to § 44, b and c) 1. The names of cities in us are either GREEK or named by the Greeks, and therefore retain their GREEK gender, which is FEMININE. Only Canopus is a MASCULINE. The PLURALIA TANTUM in i, as Circējī, Vējī, Pompejī, Gomphī, many of which are of LATIN origin, have the FEMININE PLURAL ending. The names of countries in us are likewise taken from the GREEK, and follow the GREEK gender. Besides those mentioned § 44, d, there are four more names of countries in us: Paphos, Heliopolis, Bosphorus and Isthmus, which are MASCULINE, as in Greek.

2. The names of shrubs and smaller plants in us almost all are borrowed from the Greek language, and retain in Latin their Greek genders. They are mostly MASCULINE, as aspidargus, holodendrus, rufipetens, radish. But some are FEMININE, as ficus, laurea (box tree), gigas, holidendrus, rufipetens, radish. But some are FEMININE, as ficus, laurea (box tree), gigas, holidendrus, rufipetens, radish. But some are FEMININE, as ficus, laurea (box tree), gigas, holidendrus, rufipetens, radish.

18. I add, to § 49, 1, l'ère and its compounds, and the noun hère, are the only LATIN nouns in fr. in common use, frère, with the collateral form, frere, being unquestionably of Celtic or German origin. The indeclinable noun hère, or he, the root of the family, occurs in an unmistakable passage of Lullius, cfr. Flu. 2, 8; also it is early known by the Roman grammarians, who give the significance of the word as stated above, some deriving it from hærēre. Some modern grammarians derive it from the Greek χέρη.

The noun levir (brother-in-law; a husband's brother) was considered by the Roman grammarians a compound of vir, and a corruption of levus vir ('a left-hand man'). See

Non. 557, 8 : Fest. p. 115). This derivation is the more improbable because lexus belonged to the regular words of 'ill omen', and, in its literal meaning, as opposed to 'right hand', would be a very strange designation of a husband's brother. The word is hardly made, or compounded by the Romans, but existed already before the separation of the Indo-European languages. For it is found in Sanscrit in the form deor, in Greek in the form δᾶνρ, and in the Germanic and Slavonic families. The change of organic d into l is frequent, as in diqua and lingua, lacrima and lacrima, filius and filius, and in other words. That it cannot have been borrowed from the Greek (as most of the modern so-called etymologists assert) appears from the fact that the form of the word which occurs in the Sanscrit and the other cognate languages stands much nearer to the Latin, than the Greek form.

B. The second declension of nouns borrowed from the Greek.

19. The Latin terminations us and um correspond to those of the GREEK second declension in ος and ον. The Latin language has borrowed many of these Greek nouns, either changing the Greek terminations ος and ον into us and um, as dulcorus<sup>1</sup> (δολωροϋς), pedagogus<sup>2</sup> (παιδαγωγος), theatrum<sup>3</sup> (θεατρον), metrum<sup>4</sup> (μετρον); or retaining the Greek termination, as barbites<sup>5</sup>, diaboles<sup>6</sup>, diametros<sup>7</sup>, epulos<sup>8</sup>, periclon<sup>9</sup>, clymon<sup>10</sup>, Herapyllus<sup>11</sup>, Didymaton<sup>12</sup>; or admitting both, the Greek and the Latin terminations in the nominative, as lotos and lotus<sup>13</sup>, nomos and nomus<sup>14</sup>, rythmos and rythmus<sup>15</sup>, anabolen and anadoleum<sup>16</sup>; colan and colum<sup>17</sup>. So especially names of cities: Pylos and Pylius, Paphos and Paphus, Rion and Rium.

50. Those GREEK nouns which, by common usage, had been received in the language during the CLASSICAL period, always took the LATIN terminations us and um, and were inflected like LATIN nouns. Only the names of Greek cities and i-lands were used with both the Latin and the Greek terminations. The ATTRIBUTIVE nouns in us and um generally were proper nouns, or postclassical, and being, like those of the first declension, in use in ARTS AND SCIENCES, especially in GRAMMAR, RHETORIC, ARCHITECTURE, and BOTANY.

21. Greek nouns in ooz, preceded by a mute consonant, like the LATIN R-stems, generally assume the termination ee, so that the z in the oblique cases is dropped. But the following z nouns either retain the Greek termination ros, or receive the LATIN termination us: the names of the cities Andros or and, Antrostr (or us), Hybros (or us); the male proper name Crostr, and the appellative nouns cyandroz, cyandroz<sup>18</sup> and hydrae<sup>19</sup> (or oi). The proper name ΜΑΛΑΚΡΟΖ is found in both forms, Malakros and Malakros, and the compounds of μετρηος retain the Greek termination ros, when they are FEMININE, as hec diametros, hec perimetros; but when they are MASCULINE they are formed in ee, as hec dimeter<sup>20</sup>, hec irimeter, tetrameter, pentameter etc. But the last-mentioned compounds, except pentameter and hectometer, are also formed in ros.

22. Those Greek nouns, which retain the Greek termination os, have in the ACCUSATIVE SING. the Greek termination on (or). They have the LATIN termination um exclusively, when the NOMINATIVE is formed only in us. If the nominative has both the LATIN and the GREEK terminations, the accusative takes either on or um. Thus we form the ACCUSATIVE of dux or Dux on, duxum or duxum; but barbarus, not barbarum, diogenes, not diogenem.

23. The other cases regularly receive the LATIN endings, as dialectos, dialecti, dialecto etc. But the GEN. SING. and NOM. ACC. GEN. PLUR. if things with GREEK individual names are mentioned by these names, are formed with GREEK ENDINGS. The GEN. SING. is then formed in ŭ (ov), as turris Eudŭru, Liv. 44. 3; hortus Bagŭdŭ, Plin. 13. 9. The NOM. PLUR. takes the termination oe (oi), as camephoroe (the basket-bearers, name of a Greek statue) Cic. Ver. 4. 3, 5; cosmoe (the name of Chelon magistrates) Cic. Rep. 2. 33. The GEN. PLUR. takes then the termination on (ων), especially in titles of BOOKS, as Ovidi Metamorphoseon, Horati epodon, Virgili Georgicon libri.

<sup>1</sup> A dialogue.—<sup>2</sup> the overseer of the children.—<sup>3</sup> a theatre.—<sup>4</sup> a mine, a metal.—<sup>5</sup> a lyre.—<sup>6</sup> a dialect.—<sup>7</sup> a diameter.—<sup>8</sup> a kind of lyric poem.—<sup>9</sup> a mock sun.—<sup>10</sup> derivation of a word.—<sup>11</sup> a gate in Syracuse.—<sup>12</sup> an oracle near Didyme.—<sup>13</sup> a water-lily.—<sup>14</sup> a district.—<sup>15</sup> rhythm.—<sup>16</sup> an antidote.—<sup>17</sup> a member of a verse; colic.—<sup>18</sup> a roller.—<sup>19</sup> a verse of two measures.—<sup>20</sup> an island in the Aegean Sea.

24. The Greek proper names of the ATTIC SECOND DECLENSION in  $\omega\varsigma$  take either  $\alpha\varsigma$  or  $\upsilon\varsigma$  as nominative-termination, Athos ( $\text{Ἄθος}$ ), Androgeus or  $\alpha\varsigma$  ( $\text{Ἀνδρόγεωϛ}$ ); Tyndareus ( $\text{Τυνδαρέωϛ}$ ). The other cases generally take the LATIN inflection (GEN. Androgei, Tyndarei). But sometimes the poets borrow the peculiar case-terminations of the ATTIC declension. Thus Virgil (Æn. 6, 20) forms the GEN. Androgeō after the Greek GEN.  $\text{Ἀνδρόγεω}$ . Of the noun Athos the same poet (Georg. 331) forms the Accusative Atho, according to the Greek  $\text{Ἄθω}$ , while Pliny 1, 4, 10 has the acc. Athon. According to the testimony of Priscianus, Cicero formed the Accus. Athōnem after the 3d declension. The noun Cos<sup>1</sup>, ( $\text{Κῶς}$ ) forms its cases after its collateral form Cous (GEN. Coi etc.); but the ABLAT. is regularly Co.

25. The proper nouns in  $\epsilon\upsilon\varsigma$  of the 3d Greek declension generally assume in Latin the termination eus, and are inflected after the second declension, as Orpheus GEN. Orphēi, DAT. Orpheo, Prometheus, GEN. Promethei etc. The accusative of these nouns is partly formed after the Latin, partly in  $\alpha$  after the Greek rule. Livy always uses the accusative Persea. The VOCATIVE is formed in eu, after the Greek termination  $\epsilon\upsilon$ , as Orpheu, Prometheu. But some of the nouns in  $\epsilon\upsilon\varsigma$  receive the Latin termination es, and follow the third declension. Achilles ( $\text{Ἀχιλλεύς}$ ) and Ulysses ( $\text{Ὀδυσσεύς}$ ) are always thus formed, and of Perseus the collateral form Perse is found (always in Cicero with the Acc. Perse).

26. Some neuters in  $\alpha\varsigma$  of the 3d Greek declension retain in Latin the termination  $\alpha\varsigma$ , but form their cases after the second declension, as chaos<sup>2</sup> ( $\text{τὸ χάος}$ ), GEN. chai, DAT. chao; melos<sup>3</sup>, GEN. meli. The neuter  $\text{Ἄργος}$  is generally changed into the MASCULINE PLURALE TANTUM Argi, GEN. Argōrum. But it is also found in the NOM. and ACC. SING. as a neuter (hoc Argos).

27. GENDER. The nouns in  $\alpha\varsigma$ , the same as in Greek, generally are MASCULINE, and those in  $\alpha\omega$  without exception NEUTER. But nouns in  $\alpha\omega$ , which in Greek are FEMININE, generally retain this gender in LATIN, whether they assume the LATIN, or retain the GREEK termination.

Rem. The following Greek nouns in  $\alpha\varsigma$  and  $\alpha\omega$  are FEMININE: antidotus ( $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\iota}\delta\omicron\tau\omicron\varsigma$ )<sup>4</sup>, apostro-phos<sup>5</sup>, arctos<sup>6</sup>, atomus<sup>7</sup>, carbasus<sup>8</sup>, cathetus<sup>9</sup>, dialectos, diametros<sup>10</sup>, dibaphus<sup>11</sup>, diphthongus<sup>12</sup>, millos<sup>13</sup>, perimetros<sup>14</sup>, and the names of some GEMS, as amethystus, cyanos, sapphirus. The following are used in both genders: barbitos, crystalinus<sup>15</sup>, phaselus<sup>16</sup>, balanus<sup>17</sup>, plinthus<sup>18</sup>. Several nouns, generally enumerated as FEMININE in our grammars, belong to the Latinity of the middle ages, as abyssus, evēnus, paragaphus. The compounds of  $\acute{\omicron}\delta\omicron\varsigma$ <sup>19</sup>, which in Greek are FEMININE, belong either to the ecclesiastical Latinity, as hæc exodus<sup>20</sup>, hæc synodus<sup>21</sup>, or they rest on the authority of the latest writers, as methodos. Hæc periodus occurs in the ancient grammarians, but always with a Latin interpretation, which is an evidence that the word was not generally understood by the Romans.

4. THE DECLENSION OF NOUNS BORROWED FROM THE GREEK AFTER THE THIRD DECLENSION.

28. The classes of Greek nouns of the third declension, with a few exceptions, agree with those of the Latin language belonging to the same declension. The Greek nouns of this declension are divided into the same classes, and according to the same principles, as the Latin nouns of the third declension. The main differences between both languages are 1) that the liquid-mutes of the Greek language do not belong to the vowel-class, but to the mute classes; 2) that the vowel characteristics in Greek are the vowels  $\acute{\epsilon}$ ,  $\alpha$ , and  $\gamma$ , being not confined to the vowel  $\acute{\iota}$ , as in Latin;

<sup>1</sup> An island in the Aegean Sea.—<sup>2</sup> the chaos.—<sup>3</sup> a tune, a song.—<sup>4</sup> a counter poison.—<sup>5</sup> an apostrophe.—<sup>6</sup> the constellation Bear.—<sup>7</sup> an atom in metaphysics.—<sup>8</sup> flax.—<sup>9</sup> a perpendicular.—<sup>10</sup> a diameter.—<sup>11</sup> a garment twice dyed with purple.—<sup>12</sup> a diphthong.—<sup>13</sup> red lead.—<sup>14</sup> the circumference of a circle.—<sup>15</sup> a crystal.—<sup>16</sup> a bean.—<sup>17</sup> an acorn.—<sup>18</sup> the base of a column.—<sup>19</sup> a way.—<sup>20</sup> the second book of the Pentateuch.—<sup>21</sup> a council of bishops.

3) the difference in the treatment of the N-class and S-class (§ 30 and 31); 4) the difference in the form of the case-endings.

Rem. In the words borrowed from the Greek, including the nouns of the first and second declensions, the diphthongs  $\alpha\iota$  and  $\alpha\omicron$  are regularly changed into Latin  $ae$  and  $oe$  (Ἀσπερ = Asper, Ἰσπερ = Isper), but before vowels sometimes into  $aj$  and  $oj$  (Ἄας = Ajar, Τροία = Troja). The diphthong  $\epsilon\iota$  generally changes into  $i$  (Σειρήν = Siren), but before vowels sometimes into  $ē$  (Ἀίνας = Aenās). The vowel  $\upsilon$  is regularly replaced by  $y$ , but occasionally by  $a$  (Κυλίσ = Calis), and by  $u$  (ἄστν = astu). The diphthong  $\epsilon\upsilon$  always changes into  $eu$ , and  $\alpha\upsilon$  into  $u$ . Some words are more thoroughly changed by corruption, as Ὀδυσσεύς = Ulixes, or Ulysses.

29. The Greek VOWEL-STEMS of the third declension terminate in  $\tau$  ( $\epsilon$ ),  $\upsilon$  ( $\epsilon\upsilon$ ), and  $\alpha$ , those in  $\tau$  and  $\upsilon$  almost always adding the ending  $\varsigma$  in nom. sing., which ending is retained in Latin.

Rem. 1. Greek nouns in  $\alpha$  mostly belong to the T-class (GEN.  $\alpha\alpha\varsigma$ ). Those belonging to the vowel-class ( $\alpha\omega$ ), as ἄσπερ in Latin, have the endings of the strict vowel-d declension (GEN.  $\alpha\alpha$ , DAT.  $\alpha\alpha$ , ACC.  $\alpha\alpha$ , etc.). If they form a plural, which is very rare, the following nouns:

(a) COMMON NOUNS, of which the following occur in classical prose: basis<sup>1</sup>, cannabis, herosis<sup>2</sup>, pietris<sup>3</sup> (pristis), poësis, tigris (collateral stem tigrūd). The following occur in later writers only: mathēsis, metropolis, pardalis, pylaniis<sup>4</sup>, and several names of plants, beasts, and minerals, as cenchris, agrostis, coris, echis, etc. They are all feminine. The Greek neuters in  $\alpha$  generally take feminine forms in  $\alpha\varsigma$  in Latin (ῥινῶπις<sup>5</sup>, capparis), but sometimes (rarely) they occur as neuters in the Greek form (ῥινῶπις, cappari). (b) Some FEMALE proper names, as Alceſtis, Lachesis, Nemesis, Charybdis (also used as the name of an eddy near the Sicilian coast); but most of the female names, and all the male names, in  $\alpha\varsigma$ , belong to the T-class (see p. 343, R. 4). Male names in  $\alpha\varsigma$ , declined with vowel-endings, are of Latin origin (Juvēnalis, Martialis, etc.). (c) Names of rivers in  $\alpha\varsigma$  in barbaric countries, named by the Greeks, most of which have collateral stems in  $\alpha\omega$ , as Tigris, Anāpis, Tanais, Belis, Tamēsis. They are all masculine. (d) Several names of cities, most of which are compounds of polis, as Nepolis, Persepolis, Hierapolis, Lampropolis; also Sardis, Hephaestia, Babylis, Leptis, Marpis. Most of these, compounded with polis have stems in  $\alpha\omega$  in Greek, which are sometimes also used in Latin. The sand-bank Syntis likewise follows the vowel-declension in Latin, while in Greek it has a stem in  $\alpha\omega$ . The plur. tantum Sardes (GEN. Sardium), and Tralles (GEN. Trallium), have vowel stems both in Latin and Greek (Ἰς Σάρδεϛ, etc.). The plur. tantum Cales (Calium) and Gades (Gadium) have different forms in Greek (Καλήστια, Γαδεῖρα). All these nouns are feminine.

Rem. 2. Greek vowel-stems in  $\upsilon\varsigma$  rarely occur in Latin; of common nouns only the fem. chelys, and of proper names (a) the male names Atys, Carys, Cotys, Phorcys (which is also a female name, but with a stem in  $\gamma\alpha$ ); (b) the female names Tethys and Erinyes; (c) the mountain Othrys, m., and the river Halys, m. All these nouns occur only with Greek case-endings (see p. 345, R. 1).—Of Greek neuter stems there are only the names of plants misy, and moly, likewise with Greek case-endings, and astu<sup>6</sup> ( $\alpha\sigma\tau\nu$ ), occurring unchanged in nom., acc., and abl.

Rem. 3. Of the Greek vowel-stems in  $\epsilon\upsilon$ , with the termination  $\epsilon\upsilon\varsigma$ , only the male proper names and the name of the town and seaport Hephaestus (in Latin either Piræus or Piræus) occur in Latin. They are generally declined after the second declension, but sometimes take the Greek case-endings of the third declension (see p. 340, 25; p. 345, R. 3; p. 346, R. 6 and 7). The names Ἀχιλλεύς and Ὀδυσσεύς are changed into Achilles, Ulysses, being declined like Greek names in  $\epsilon\upsilon$  after the third declension. Hephaestus, in some authors, takes the form Perseus (so in Livy, who declines Persei, Perseo, Persea), in others the form Perse (so in Cicero, who declines Perseæ, Perse, Perse). The national noun  $\Deltaωπεύς$  (pl.  $\Deltaωπεῖς$ ) occurs only in the plural in Latin, taking the form of the R-class (Dorēs, G. Dorum, as if from a nom. sing. Dor).

Rem. 4. Greek stems in  $\alpha$  (except the nom. ending  $\varsigma$ ). Of these the female proper names in  $\alpha\omega$ , as Atys, Carys, Cotys, Phorcys, etc., are used in Latin, retaining the Greek case-endings in  $\alpha\varsigma$  (GEN. Atidis, Carys, Cotys, Phorcys), or taking the Latin termination  $\alpha\varsigma$  of the N-class (Atidis, Carys, Cotys, Phorcys). Here we must note the name of the shrine Atys from Greek poets (Atys, poos), which is declined G. Atidis, of Atys; Atys, poos or Atys; Atys, poos.

<sup>1</sup> A base.—<sup>2</sup> a sect.—<sup>3</sup> designation of large sea-fishes; also a kind of quick-sailing vessels.—<sup>4</sup> an Athenian magistrate.—<sup>5</sup> mustard.—<sup>6</sup> the city of Athens.

Rem. 6. Poets form the ACCUSATIVE of nouns in the 3rd decl. in is or es, as Orphēis, Thyphalā, hymenēis, Lincol, in Virg. (For Cicero's P. see § 37). Of nouns in is the Greek accusative in es occurs only in Quint. in es 12, 10, 24. But in other places Quintilianus has Proserpina. Lary always has Perses as accusative of Persus.

Rem. 7. VOCATIVE SING. Proper names, terminating in is, es, drop their final s in this case, as Daphnē, Ulyssēs, Orestēs. Those in as, es, terminate in the voc. in a or ē, as Callistē, and those in es have the termination ē, as Agamē, or ē, after the first declension, as Socrātēs or Socratē.

Rem. 8. NOM. PLUR. The poets frequently form this case with the Greek ending ēs, instead of the Latin ēs, as Arctidēs, Erinyēs. The Greek neuters in os and ea take the ending ō (m), as celos, pl. celō; cacoēthes, pl. cacoēthō. Here belongs the plur. tant. Tempē.

Rem. 9. The GEN. PLUR. has the ending ōn in times of Boeotia, as Mētemphosōn.

Rem. 10. In the DATIVE PLUR. the Greek ending ois or ois sometimes occurs in the poets, as Dionysi inst. of Dionysiōis; homeri inst. of homeriōis. The datives athēnais and homeri (from athē and homer) are found in Varro; and the dat. Mētemphosōis in Quintilianus.

Rem. 11. The ACC. PLUR. is formed with the Greek ending ēs wherever the voc. sing. takes the ending a, as admiratēs. Here belong the Greek and barbaric national nouns of the third declension, as Macedōnas, Allobrogus.

6. IRREGULAR DECLENSION.

See §§ 14. 15. 36. 37. 187. 188. 190.

34. Irregular nouns are of five kinds: 1) indeclinable; 2) defective; 3) heterological; 4) heteroclitite; 5) heterogeneous.

35. INDECLINABLE nouns are those that in all cases have the same grammatical form. The old grammarians call them also monoptota. But others call monoptota those defective nouns which are used only in ONE CASE, as for inst. the ablative sponte.

Rem. 1. To the indeclinable nouns mentioned § 190 must be added 1) the nouns secus, gūt, frit; 2) the names of the letters; 3) the Hebrew proper names, according to the usage of the ecclesiastical writers; 4) the Greek nouns cepe (onion) and ασαγ (the city of Athens).

Rem. 2. Secus is a collateral form of seus (see), and occurs in the poets and historians, almost always in combination with a word denoting a place, especially maior, bre, secus, maior, secus. These phrases are generally used with the force of an attributive genitive, being rarely, and only poet classically, used as substantives or objects, as Liber puer capulum cecus ad dextra mittere, almost 10,000 children of the male sex (male children) were captured. Liv. 26, 47.

Rem. 3. Ōm is the name of a plant, occurring in the agricultural and scientific writers; frit means the top of an ear of wheat or barley (Varro R. R. 1, 48, 2).

Rem. 4. As names of letters are used either their mere characters, as a, b, c, r, or the Greek names alpha, beta, etc. The indeclinable tops of the letters are indivisi, being used in the same grammatical form in all cases required by the construction, as Q. dicit and sententia in r. deservit, as are all nouns ending in r. (See § 14, 76). It is doubtful how these characters were pronounced by the Romans; but most probably this pronunciation was the same as it is today with the initials of continental Europe. Often, however, the letters were named after the Greek fashion alpha, beta, etc., and in this case they occur only in the nominative or accusative, which makes them virtually indeclinable, as Demosthenes quare pro ditione cepit, since Demosthenes could not pronounce the letter r, c. d. Dia 2, 46. Some of these names of letters, however, are occasionally declined, either after the third declension, as signet, G. signetis, or after the first (genitive), G. gammata.

Rem. 5. The indeclinability of the Hebrew proper names is non-classical, being introduced by the ecclesiastical writers, as hōjas Bethlem, hōjas Beth, etc. To these nouns the rule that indeclinable nouns are of neuter gender cannot be applied. The new proper names are very frequently declined, some after the third, as Israhel, Gen. Israhelis; Israhel, Gen. Israhelis, others after the first declension, as Adel, Gen. Adelis. Jesus makes the accusative Jesum, in all other cases it has Jesu. The regular way to add Hebrew names is to attach to them Latin terminations, if their final letters are not the regular terminations of one of the Latin classes, as Abrahāmus, Gen. Abrahāmā.

36. DEFECTIVE nouns are those, which want either some of their CASES, or a whole number, either the singular or the plural.

Rem. 1. Of those that are defective in CASES the following have no NOMINATIVES: (daps) G. dapis<sup>1</sup>, (dilio) G. dilionis<sup>2</sup>, (internecio) G. internecionis<sup>3</sup>, (frux) G. frugis, (ops) G. opis, (vicis) G. vicis<sup>4</sup>. Of those, that are defective in the other cases, there is a great number, but the most of them are of rare occurrence. 1) (ops) opis opem ope, PLUR. complete; 2) (vicis) vicis vicem vice; PLUR. vices vicibus; 3) vis vim vi; PLUR. vires complete; 4) lues (plague) luem lue; PLUR. wanting; 5) fors (chance) forte (by chance).

Rem. 2. Many nouns occur in ONE CASE only, especially in certain phrases, as: sponte (of one's own accord), in connection with POSSESSIVES (meā, tuā, etc. sponte); jussu, injussu, mandatu, monitu, rogatu, and other ablatives of the fourth declension, derived from the past participles of VERBS, mostly in connection with genitives or possessive adjectives as: jussu Ciceronis, meo, tuo, on Cicero's, on my, thy command. Very frequent is the abl. natu (by birth, in connection with major and minor in the meaning 'older' and 'younger', sometimes also with annos and a numeral, in the signification 'old'. The abl. promptu is used in the phrase in promptu esse or habere, to be or to have at hand. Here belong the following phrases: divis causā, for form's sake; venum dare, to sell; venum ire, to be sold; suppelius ferre, to bring assistance; infiliis ire, to deny.

Rem. 3. Nouns, defective in number, want either the PLURAL (singularia tantum), or the SINGULAR (pluralia tantum). Singularia tantum are: 1) Those which do not admit of a plural on account of their meaning. Here belong: a) PROPER NAMES, as Roma, Cicero; b) ABSTRACT NOUNS, as justitia, amor; c) the nouns denoting materials, as aurum, lignum. 2) Those which conventionally lack the plural. Here belong most of the nouns of the fifth declension, and many single nouns, as aër, lues, ver, specimen, which must be learned from the lexicons. For the PLURALIA TANTUM and HETEROLOGICAL NOUNS see §§ 14. 15. 36. 37.

Rem. 4. Proper names are used in the plural, if two or more individuals of the same name are mentioned, as duo Plinii, Lucius et Publius Scipiones.

ABSTRACT nouns often assume the plural, if single instances, examples, or kinds of something are to be expressed, as insanīe, instances or examples of madness; praesentiae deorum, apparitions of gods; interitūs exercituum, examples of the destruction of armies; omnes ignominīe, all kinds of indignities; clarae mortes, renowned examples of death. Sometimes the plural of abstracts is used in the signification of a singular, as: negotia, business; odia hominum, the hatred of men; invidia multitudinis, the envy of the multitude.

Nouns denoting materials are sometimes used in the plural in order to designate different kinds, or single pieces, of the same material, as vina, wines (kinds of wines); pices, kinds of pitch; ligna, pieces of wood; panes, loaves of bread; carnes, pieces of meat.

37. HETEROCLITES are those nouns which in the formation of their cases assume CHARACTERISTICS belonging either to no regular declension, or to two different declensions, or to different classes of the same declension. They are either anomalous, metaplastic, heteroplastic, or redundant.

Rem. 1. ANOMALOUS are those which have characteristics belonging only to particular nouns, but to no general class, as sus, grus, box, (gen. boris), the characteristics u and o not occurring in any of the regular classes of the third declension (see § 188).

Rem. 2. METAPLASTICS are those which, having but one form of their nominative, make their other cases after two different declensions. Here belong 1) several nouns, mostly denoting TREES, which form their cases partly after the second, partly after the fourth declension, as cornus (a cornel-tree), cupressus (a cypress-tree), ficus (a fig-tree), laurus (a laurel-tree), myrtus (a myrtle-tree), quercus (an oak-tree). Among these nouns are domus and colus (§ 222), penus (victuals), and (sometimes) senatus and tamultus.—2) After the second and third declensions are declined: jagerum (the Roman acre), which in the genitive plural has jagerum only, but in all other cases is declined after the second; and the plural names of Roman festivals in alia, which often form their genitives after the second declension (Bacchanaliorum), while the other cases are inflected after the third.—3) After the third and fifth is inflected requies which forms its accusative and ablative either requiem, requie, or requietem, requiete. Fames, G. famis, has always famē in the ablative after the fifth declension in the poets.

Rem. 3. HETEROPLASTICS are those whose nominatives have a form belonging to a class of the same declension, different from that of the oblique cases, as imber, which,

<sup>1</sup> Daps, in classical prose, denotes a religious feast, or banquet in honor of the gods. In the poets and later authors it is used of all kinds of banquets. Daps is the ASSUMED nominative; but it might be daps (a genitive plural not occurring).—<sup>2</sup> power, sovereignty.—<sup>3</sup> destruction, especially occurring after ad. It means a total annihilation.—<sup>4</sup> chance, turn.

VERBS, consists in ASSIMILATION, that is a change of the last consonant of the preposition into the first consonant of the VERB, as afferre inst. of ad-ferre. Sometimes the last letter or letters of the prepositions are dropped, as exuere, inst. of ex-tuere; amovēre, inst. of ab-movēre; trajicere, inst. of transjacere. Some prepositions increase by a letter (d)*, as prodire, inst. of pro-īre; and in some the VOWELS are changed, as componere, inst. of cum-ponere; anticipāre, inst. of ante-cipāre.

Rm. 4. The special rules on the changes of prepositions, which generally apply also to the composition of prepositional words with other words than variables, are the following:

[illegible]

Ante is changed only in ante and apostrophe — Ante is changed in ante only, but apostrophe also is in use. Inter is changed in interdiction only.

but circumfer also is possible. Per is assumed to be a preposition.

Wh is assumed to be a  $\bar{A}$  in per. The wh is dropped in another rule chain and wh is in circumfer. Before another wh is formed, circumfer is dropped, circumfer is circumfer. Before another wh is formed, circumfer is dropped, circumfer is circumfer. Per is assumed to be a preposition.

Tridius loses its s before another s; ts lost after ts or ss. ts drops the s also, or remains unchanged. In some verbs with the shortened and complete forms co-occurring, ts loses s after ts, ts and ss after ts and ss before s and t it takes the form th.

As drops the b before the consonants m and n, before r it takes the form ab, while in diphenic and diphonic is changed into a; before t it is changed into au. Before other letters it does not change; e.g., obiter, alter, inter, quater, duodecim; absque, basilica, etc.; distinctor, diffinitio.

it assimilates before the liquids l, r, r' and is dropped before vowels and h.
except b, m, n, before which it remains unchanged: conferre, conferre, conferre;
conjugare, conjugare, conjugare; conjugare, conjugare, conjugare; conjugare, conjugare, conjugare.

Ex retains its form before vowels and the consonants c, h, p, q, s, t. It assimilates before f, and before all other consonants drops the x; e.g., excedere, exhibere, evire, exprimere; fore f, and before all other consonants drops the x; e.g., excipere, extinguere, extrahere.

$\Pi$  is assimilated before  $k$  and  $x$ . The  $a$ 's are changed into  $e$ 's before  $b$ ,  $m$  and  $p$ ;  $e$ 's into  $i$ 's before  $gn$ , and before the other letters remains unchanged;  $c$  or  $s$  or  $z$  before  $t$  becomes  $d$ .

Pro is changed into good when a and b, else it remains another d: pro-embryo, pro-dete-protein; pro-life, pro-labor; pro-death.

[illegible]

3. Some prepositions occur in COMPOSITION only, and cannot be used as separate words. They are: 1) amb, which drops the b before p (as in amputāre) and changes into an in anquīrere and extrānāre; 2) dis, which drops its s before v, the middle mutes (d and g), and all LIQUIDS; 3) re, which before h, before vowels, and the verb dare is changed into re (redire, redhibere, retulere); 4) se, which in VERBS remains unchanged (ducere, secedere, secernere) except in solvere (instead of seluere).

Rem. 5. Amb is the Greek preposition ἀντι, and means 'around', as ἀντιπρόσ, to embrace. Dis means 'asunder', as διτάβη, to fall asunder. In this preposition the s is assimilated before f (diffundere, to cut asunder), and changed into r before a vowel, as dirimere. Re signifies 'back', as in remittere, to send back. S means 'apart, aside, astray', as in seducere, to lead astray.

4. To the rule, that verbs cannot be compounded with any other word than PREPOSITIONS (§ 283) there are some few exceptions, the most inportant of which refers to the verb facere. This verb occurs in composition with other verbs of the second and third conjugations (which in this composition take the first place), in order to express a causing of the STATE or ACTION contained in such verbs, as tremefacere, to make tremble. The verb facere in these compositions takes the place of the infinitive-ending re of those verbs with which it is compounded, shortening at the same time the characteristic e of verbs of the second conjugation. In these verbal compounds the STEM-VOWEL of the verb facere is not changed into i. The verbs, which are found in composition with facere, are the following:

* The form prod was the earliest form of this preposition which frequently occurs in the archaic monuments of the language.

are-cere (stem arē) — arefacere, assuescere (st. assuē) — assuafacere, consuescere (st. con- suē) — consuefacere, calēre — calefacere, docēre — condocufacere, madēre — madefacere, monēre — commonefacere, patēre — patefacere, labi (DEP.) — labefacere, tremere — tremefacere.

One verb of the first conjugation (vacāre) occurs in composition with facere, whose characteristic ā is changed into ŕĕ — vacuefacere.

Rem. 7. The deponent partiri (which in composition becomes ACTIVE) forms with NUMERALS the compounds bipartire, tripartire, quadripartire. The verbs nescire, neguire, negligere (inst. of nec-legere) and nolle (inst. of non velle) are compounded with the NEGATION. The verbs posse (inst. of potis esse) and maie (inst. of magis velle) are compounded with ADVERBS.

Rem. 8. Many compositions, which seem to be exceptions to the rule No. 1, are not real verbal compounds, but verbs, derived from other words, in which such compositions already existed. Thus judicāre is not immediately derived from jas and dicere, but from juder (st. ju-dir). The words pars and capere first entered into the composition particeps, and from the latter word the verb participāre is derived. Thus the following derivations are made:

magni facere — magnificus — magnificāre, morem facere — moriger — morigerāri, sacrum facere — sacrificans — sacrificāre,

Verbs, thus compounded, are all DERIVATIVES of the first conjugation. Sometimes, but rarely, verbs of this kind enter into composition with NOUNS, even if an intermediate word does not exist, as aedīs facere—aedificāre (as if from aedificus or aedifex), tergum vertere—tergiversāri.

Rem. 9. Several verbs have the APPEARANCE of COMPOUNDS, because they are connected with COMPLEMENTS (mostly adverbial), which often are written in one word with the verb. Here belong: maledicere, benedicere, lucrifacere, animadvertere (inst. of animum advertere), pesummare, venummare, satisfacere. It is more correct, to write such words separately.

5. The CONJUGATION of compound verbs in every respect is like that of the SIMPLE VERB. Exceptions to this rule most frequently occur in the formation of the PERFECT tense.

APPENDIX VI.

FORMATION OF THE PERFECT AND SUPINE.

I. GENERAL REMARKS.

1. All tenses, moods, and other forms of the Perfect-system are derived from two cardinal forms : 1) the PERFECT of the ACTIVE VOICE, or the FIRST CARDINAL FORM; 2) the SUPINE (or in deponents the PERFECT PARTICIPLE), which is called the SECOND CARDINAL FORM (§ 336). In order to find the two cardinal forms of any given verb, three things must be known : (a) the STEM of its PERFECT SYSTEM (for instance that petere has in the perfect system the stem peti-; that juvāre has in the perfect system the stem ju-); (b) the ACTIVE and the PASSIVE signs which, if any, the given verb requires in the perfect and supine (for inst. that colere requires the active sign u : colui; that carpere requires the active sign s : carpsi; that dividere requires the passive sign s : divisum) : (c) the changes to which the stem of many verbs is subjected (for inst. that dividere drops the d in the supine; that facere changes its stem fac into fēc).

2. The stem of the perfect system belongs either to the VOWEL-FORM, or to the CONSONANT-FORM. But not every verb whose present system has a VOWEL-STEM, belongs to the VOWEL-FORM in the PERFECT system, nor do all the verbs which in the present system have CONSONANT stems retain these stems also in the PERFECT system. Thus the verb docēre, which has the vowel-stem docē in the present system, has the consonant stem docui (docui, docui) in the perfect system; and the verb petere, which in the present system has the consonant stem pet, assumes the vowel-stem peti in the perfect system.

3. When the stem is thus found, the signs are attached to it. The signs are (a) that of the PERFECT active, which is called the ACTIVE sign, and consists in one of the letters v, u, or s; or (b) that of the SUPINE (or perfect participle) which is called the PASSIVE sign, and consists in one of the consonants t, or x, or in the syllable it. One class of the consonant-form (the radical class) forms the perfect active without any sign; but all supines and perfect participles must take one of the passive signs mentioned.

4. The CHANGES of the stem in the perfect system consist either a) in a PREFIX (reduplication, as pendere — pependi); or b) in a CHANGE of the stem-vowel (facere — feci, petere — peti); or c) in LENGTHENING the stem-vowel (legere — legi, videre — vidi); or d) in DROPPING a radical consonant (m or n, as in frangere — frēgi, capere — cepī); or e) in a TRANSPOSITION of the letters (metathesis, as in cernere — crēci, sternere — strāci).

If the perfect is formed without an active sign, the stem undergoes one or more of these changes, and conversely if there is an active sign in the perfect, the stem generally remains intact.

Rem. 1. Merely epenthetic changes take place, when the characteristic is a mute consonant preceding the active or passive sign s or t, as in scribere, scripsi, scriptus. See No. 11.

Rem. 2. The perfect system of the inchoative (inceptive) verbs is not formed from the stem of the inceptive verb (inceptive stem, as crece of crescere), but according to the class to which the primitive verb belongs. Thus the perfect system of crescere is formed as if the verb were crece, of noscere, as if the verb were nore, of scire, as if the verb were scire.

Rem. 3. The stems of the inceptives are found by removing the termination scere. The final letter of the remaining part shows the characteristic of the primitive verb. Thus inveterascere has the stem inveterā; delitescere has the stem delitē. If the letter before the termination scere is the vowel i, this letter also must be removed, the STEM-VERB belonging to the third conjugation, as contremiscere, stem contrem (tremere). But three inceptives with the letter i, preceding the termination scere, have stem-verbs belonging to the fourth conjugation (irrauciscere — raucire, obdormiscere — dormire, seiscere — scire). Two inceptives, compescere and poscere retain their inceptive stems in the perfect-system (compescui, poscui).

Rem. 4. All inceptives whose perfect-stems belong to the VOWEL-FORM, have a complete PERFECT system, as assu-scere, quiescere, desciscere. But most of those belonging to the CONSONANT-FORM, lack the second cardinal form, except the following five: coalescere, conalescere, exardescere, indulescere, revirescere, which have both cardinal forms. The DEPENDENT inceptives, as atropiscere, proliscere, have no first, but generally the second cardinal form, except vesci, which forms no perfect system.

Rem. 5. Some inceptives have no verbal stems at all, but are derived either from NOUNS as ignescere, sillescere, or from ADJECTIVES, as percrebrascere, obmutescere. These generally form no perfect system. But some adjective inceptives form the ACTIVE tenses by the sign u, which they attach to the consonant-stem of the adjective, as percrebrascere, from crebrus (stem crebr-), obmutescere, from mutus (stem mut-). See the U-class. Thus tristis forms the perfect tristisui of the verb tristescere, which is derived from the noun tristis.

II. THE VOWEL-FORM OF THE PERFECT SYSTEM.

5. All verbs, whose perfect-system is formed from VOWEL-STEMS, take the ACTIVE sign v, and the PASSIVE sign t, which are attached to the VOWEL-STEM, as :

| ACTIVES.                   |          |          | DEPONENTS.                    |             |
|----------------------------|----------|----------|-------------------------------|-------------|
| Infinitive.                | Perfect. | Supine.  | Infinitive.                   | Participle. |
| amāre.                     | amāvī.   | amātum.  | hortārī.                      | hortātus.   |
| delēre.                    | delēvī.  | delētum. | rēri (st. rā ).        | rātus.      |
| finīre.                    | finīvī.  | finītum. | nascī (st. nā ).       | nātus.      |
| petere (st. peti ). | petīvī.  | petītum. | partīri.                      | partītus.   |
| noscere (st. nō ).  | nōvī.    | nōtum.   | oblivisci (st. oblī ). | oblītus.    |

6. The following verbs have VOWEL-STEMS in the perfect system :

1) STEMS in ā : (a) All ACTIVE and NEUTER verbs of the first conjugation, except: culāre, ducere, domare, juvare, lucare, micare, the obsolete placare, scire, stare, tonare, velare, which have CONSONANT stems (cul, dom, etc.). (b) All DEPONENTS of the first conjugation without exception. (c) The INCEPTIVES pascere (st. pā), labascere (st. labā), inveterascere (st. inveterā), irasci (st. irā), nasci (st. nā). (d) The active sternere (st. strā), and the deponent reri (st. rā).

2) STEMS in ē : (a) The following verbs of the second conjugation: delere, flere, nere, placere, the anteclassical viere, and the compounds of the obsolete plere, as implere, explere etc. (b) The following INCEPTIVES: crescere (st. crē), quiescere (st. quīē), suasce, (st. suē), and the compounds of the obsolete olescere (abolescere, adolescere, exolescere, obsolescere, st. olē). (c) Three verbs of the third conjugation: cernere (st. crē), spernere (st. spērē), to (st. tē), and sometimes linere (perfect lēvi or livi, supine litum).

3) STEMS in i : (a) The verbs of the fourth conjugation except: scire, venire (to come), juvare, juvire, haurire, sancire, sarcire, sentire, sepire, amicire, the compounds of parere, operire, reperire, and the deponents assentiri, meliri, ordiri, oriri, all of which have CONSONANT-STEMS in the perfect system. (b) The INCEPTIVES obdormiscere, seiscere, concupiscere, and obsciscere (st. obscī). (c) The verb ciere (st. ci). (d) The following verbs of the third conjugation: cupere (st. cupi), linere (st. li or lē), petere (st. peti), querere (st. quesi), supere (st. supi or sup, see below), vinere (st. vi), terere (st. trī), and the derivatives in essere with stems in ess- (arcessere — arcessi — arcessum; capessere — capessi — capessum; cupessere — cupessi — cupessum; descessere — descessi — descessum).

4) STEMS in ō. Only in noscere and its compounds (st. nō), and in the supine of potare stems potā and pō — potāvī — potātum, or pōtum.

5) STEMS in ū. (a) The verbs of the third conjugation with the characteristic ū in the present system (except fluere and struere, which have consonant-stems), as acūere, arguere (st. argū), argui (inst. of argūvī); (b) The verbs solvere (inst. of solūvī), volvère and esse (st. solū, volū and fū). (See R. 22.) In CLASSICAL language the ACTIVE sign v in these verbs is always dropped. The characteristic ū, which by this elision immediately precedes the initial vowels of the terminations, is then always shortened, and in solvere and volvère is replaced by the kindred consonant v, as :

|         |  |          |
|---------|--|----------|
| arguere | argūi (inst. of argūvī )                | argūtum. |
| diluere | dilūi (inst. of dilūvī )                | dilūtum. |
| solvere | solvi (inst. of solūvī , solūi ) | solūtum. |
| esse    | fūi (inst. of fūvī )                    |          |

To the stems with u belong the deponents loqui, sequi, and tueri, which have the vowel-stems locū, secū, tū, forming the participles locūtus, secūtus, tūtus.

Remarks.

1. The inceptive pascere makes the SUPINE pastum, not pātum.
2. Of micare the compound dimicare has a VOWEL-STEM dimicāri — dimicātum. But the simple verb micare and micare have CONSONANT-STEMS (perfect mic-ui). A SUPINE micātum stands in the lexicons, but does not occur.
3. The compounds of the obsolete placare have both, consonant- and vowel-stems in the perfect-system (explicāvi and explic-ui). But the verbs, derived from the multiplicative NOUNS triplex etc., as duplicare and of supplex (supplicare) have VOWEL-STEMS only.
4. Stare, which in the perfect system has the consonant stem st (see the reduplicating class), makes the supine stātum from the vowel-stem stā. The compounds of stare with dissyllabic prepositions, as circumstare, antestare, form no supines. The compounds with monosyllabic prepositions, as adstare, constare, distare, either form supines with consonant-stems, as adstare, constare, distare, or lack the supine. Prastare (often), and rarely parstare and pastare, form the verb, as prastare on the vowel-stem stare; prastatus, prastatus etc. p. distare, form the verb, as distare on the vowel-stem stare; distatus, distatus etc. p.

5. Necare has the regular vowel-stem. But its compound necare (and necare) has both a consonant-stem and a vowel-stem necare and necare, the former part being necare and the latter necare. Necare is generally considered as the perfect participle of the deponent necare.

6. The word irasci is generally considered as the perfect participle of the deponent irasci. Irasci, however, is used as an adjective only, meaning 'angry'. Irasci does not mean 'I am angry', but 'I am angry'. Irasci is therefore not derived from the noun ira (anger), but from the verb irasci (to be angry). Irasci must be considered as a substantive in the perfect, which according to No. L. R. 5, cannot form a perfect-system.

7. The verb desistere and the present verb desistere, compounds of the obsolete verbs desistere and desistere, make the supine desistum. But the other compounds of desistere and desistere make the supine desistum and desistum.

8. Serere, to sow, makes the supine satum; serere, to join, has a consonant-stem serere, serere. The compound inserere of the former makes insatum.

9. Vivere in the perfect system forms only the perfect vixi, which is classical, but in the present system the verb is vixi.

10. Sistere, per. sistere, makes the supine sistum.

11. Irasci in its compounds makes the supine irascum, not irascum, as irascum, irascum. Irasci (to be angry) is, to be sure, a compound of ira, which generally is used as passive of irasci, lacks the supine.

12. The desiderative verbs in uere (see App. IV., R. 5) and the verbs ferire, ferocire, inapire, pruere, superbire, form no perfect system.

13. Cedere makes the supine citum. The compounds of cedere, which in the pres. system are inflected as verbs of the fourth conjugation (cedere, cedere, cedere), form the regular supines cedere, cedere, cedere. But the participles cedere, cedere, cedere have the (rounded, excited) have a short i. The reason of this difference in the quality is that the active cedere etc. are compounds of the participle cedere from the simple verb cedere, while the participles cedere etc. are formed from the compound verb cedere. The perfect cedere and cedere are merely altered by the ancient grammarians. But of the respective compound cedere the perfect cedere occurs in Cicero, Att. 4. 5, and once in Plautus and Terence. In all these passages some manuscripts have the perfect cedere.

14. Opere and its compounds opere, opere, opere form a supine opere. The perfect opere and opere are merely altered by the ancient grammarians. But of the respective compound opere the perfect opere occurs in Cicero, Att. 4. 5, and once in Plautus and Terence. In all these passages some manuscripts have the perfect opere.

15. Ridere in classical Latin forms no perfect system. But Ridere (Met. 1. 7) has the perfect ridere.

16. Nascere and its compounds form their perfects regularly (nascere, nascere, nascere). But the supine is irregular in nascere and nascere, while the other compound and the simple verb form regular supines (nascere, nascere).

17. Ridere makes the supine ritum, but only in the compounds ridere, ridere. The simple verb forms no supine. See p. 381.

18. Of scire no perfect occurs, then scire is assumed by Priscian.

19. Of scire the perfect scire sometimes is found in M. texts.

20. Adire, appere, latere, perire, quiescere, seruare, sternere, suare, and the compounds of the obsolete quiescere and latere form no passive voice in the perfect system. But appere, adire, latere and suare form regular participles, which, however, are used as adjectives only (appere (sharp), appere (white), latere (still), latere (dark)). Adire and perire do not form Passives.

21. The participle latus generally has a passive meaning (separated, safe), and rarely occurs with its regular active signification. In the latter the participle latus generally takes its place. The participle latus, which stands in the text, rests on the doubtful reading of a single passage (Quintil. 5. 13. 36). The deponent latus and generally verbs in quiescere and latere have consonant stems, the latter quiescere and latere having the function of a single K-mute, except in quiescere.

22. The verbs in uere, including uere, uere and uere, anciently formed the perfects in uere. Examples of this form are yet extant, as: Nos sumus laudati, qui faximus uere, Rudini, Eum, in Cic. de Orat. 3. 42. — Uitulum paverat. Plautus Men. prol. v. 63. Tandem qui pueri ob facta infamia iuuit. Lucius in Non. 8. 47. See Varro de L. L. 6. 8.

23. The stem tol in the present system tolere forms a supine according to the vowel-form, with the characteristic i, dropping the letters tol (as tolere first, or tolere tolere). This stem supplies the wanting supine of the verb tolere. See in reduplicating verbs.

7. The compounds of the verbs mentioned form their perfects and supines according to the same rules as their simple verbs, except micare, necare, placare, serere, sapere, and ire, the compounds of which differ more or less in the formation of their perfects and supines. See the Remarks above.

III. THE CONSONANT FORM OF THE PERFECT SYSTEM IN GENERAL.

8. The CONSONANT-FORM has three classes: (a) the RADICAL class, which almost always changes the stem in the perfect, without taking any active sign (facere — fecit); (b) the U-CLASS, which takes the active sign u (habere — habui); (c) the S-CLASS, which takes the active sign s (carpere — carpsi).

Rem. 1. Very few verbs lack the active sign without changing their stems, as mandere, verere. Still more rarely occur radical changes in addition to an active sign, as in cumbere (perf. cubui).

Rem. 2. The supine, which always has a passive sign, rarely admits of radical changes, except those that consist in dropping a consonant. The passive sign regularly is it in the U-CLASS, and t in the radical and S-CLASSES. But it sometimes drops its i, and the sign t is sometimes changed into s. In one verb, the deponent mori, the passive sign is it (mortuus) which originally is a derivative adjective. — As for the classification of Deponent verbs, which take no active sign, we consider those among them which have the signs t or s, as belonging to the S-class, and those with the sign it as belonging to the U-class, because such would be the classes of their active forms, if they existed. But if the deponent is a compound of an active verb belonging to the radical class, the deponent is always considered as belonging to the radical class, whatever may be the sign of its participle.

Rem. 3. Compound verbs with consonant-stems generally form their perfects and supines like the simple verbs. But when a compound verb in the Present system changes its stem vowel (App. V.), it generally retains the changed vowel in the Perfect system, as:

| Simple Verbs. |        |          | Compounds.  |           |             |
|---------------|--------|----------|-------------|-----------|-------------|
| claudere      | clausi | clausum. | concludere  | conclūsi  | conclūsum.  |
| habere        | habui  | habitum. | inhibere    | inhibui   | inhibitum.  |
| spargere      | sparsi | sparsum. | conspargere | conspersi | conspersum. |
| tacere        | tacui  | tacitum. | conficere   | conficiui | confictum.  |

Rem. 4. This rule has several exceptions: 1) Some compounds belong to a class different from that of the simple verb, as emere — eti, but proemere — proemi; legere — legi, but dislegere — dislegi. 2) Some compounds lose the vowel change of their present system and resume the stem-vowel of the simple verb, as redimere — redemi; diligere — dilexi. 3) If the simple verb changes its stem-vowel in the perfect system, the compounds sometimes have peculiar changes different from both, those of the simple verb, and from those of their own present system, as:

| Simple Verbs. |      | Compounds. |           |            |
|---------------|------|------------|-----------|------------|
| facere        | fēci | factum.    | perficere | perfēci    |
| capere        | cēpi | captum.    | decipere  | decēpi     |
|               |      |            |           | perfectum. |
|               |      |            |           | deceptum.  |

All these exceptions are noticed at their proper places.

Rem. 5. A dropping of the active sign (u or s), as in the verbs of the VOWEL-FORM, does not take place in those of the CONSONANT-FORM. But in post-classical and colloquial language sometimes a CONTRACTION occurs in the TERMINATIONS, by dropping the syllable is, before another s or t in the verbs of the S-class, as dixisti (inst. of dixisti), promisti (promissis), extinxisti (extinxissem), prodixisti, cessisti, consumpsisti (produxisse, cessisse, consumpsisse).

IV. THE RADICAL CLASS.

9. The verbs belonging to this class do not take an ACTIVE SIGN in the perfect, and their stems are generally more or less affected. Their SUPINES, however, which rarely partake of the radical changes, always have a PASSIVE SIGN.

Rem. 1. The PASSIVE SIGN in the supine of the RADICAL class is regularly t, which is changed into s if the characteristic is a T-mute (cadere — cæsum), or one of the liquids l or r (vellere — uisum, currere — cursum), and sometimes when an r precedes a K-mute (parcere — parsum).

Rem. 2. The compounds of dare and sistere have the supines ditum and stitum (venditum).

Rem. 1. The lengthening verbs form the following perfects and supines:

|          |       |          |
|----------|-------|----------|
| frangere | frēgi | fractum. |
| fundere  | fūdi  | fūsum.   |
| linguere | līqui | lētum.   |
| rumpere  | rūpi  | ruptum.  |
| vincere  | vici  | victum.  |

Frangere at the same time changes its stem-vowel a into e. Its compounds (infringere etc.) do not retain their own vowel-change, but assume that of the simple verb (infrēgi — infractum). The SUPINES are formed according to the general rule No. 9, R. 7.

Rem. 2. The following verbs of this category reduplicate:

|                   |                                   |                               |
|-------------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| (cellere)         | (cecūdi)                          | (culsum) (only in compounds). |
| discere           | didici                            | —                             |
| findere           | fidi (inst. of ffidi )     | fissum.                       |
| pingere (pacisci) | pepi                              | partum.                       |
| pellere           | pepi                              | pulsum.                       |
| pungere           | pupugi                            | punctum.                      |
| scindere          | scidi (anteccl. sciōdi )   | scissum.                      |
| sistere           | steti                             | stātum.                       |
| tangere           | tetigi                            | tactum.                       |
| tollere           | sustuli (inst. of teluli ) | sublātum.                     |
| tundere           | tutuli                            | tunsum or tūsum.              |

Rem. 3. The compounds of these verbs drop the reduplication, except discere and sistere, as: repuli, attigi; but edidici, constiti.

Rem. 4. Cellere (the Greek κέλλειν) as a simple verb occurs only in the participle, which has the form celsus, and is used as an ADJECTIVE only. It must be considered as a reduplicating verb, its stem-syllable being shortened in the perfect of percellere — percūdi — perculsum. The compounds antecellere, excellere and præcellere are without a perfect system; but excellere forms the participle excelsus, with an adjective meaning. A perfect excellui, though acknowledged by Priscian, occurs only in one passage of Gellius.

Rem. 5. The perfect of findere, both of the simple verb and the compound diffindere, is extremely rare. Priscian, who acknowledges the perfect fidi, remarks, that some formed a perfect fisi. That findere must be placed among those verbs, which originally reduplicated, is evident from its short stem-vowel.

Rem. 6. Pungere with an anteclassical collateral from pagere, in the SIMPLE verb, regularly has pepi — partum. It also has pansi — pactum (after the S-class) in anteclassical language. Instead of reduplicating, pungere sometimes (once in Cicero) forms its perfect-system like the verbs of the first category (pēgi — pactum), and this is always the case in the compounds impungere and compungere, while the rare compounds depungere and repungere do not form a perfect.

Of pagere (which also was written pacere — Leg. XII Tab. in Gellius 1, 20, 1) the inceptive deponent pacisci (part. pactus) is formed.

Rem. 7. Sistere (stem st-) is derived from stāre with a reduplication in the PRESENT system, like bibere (st. be) and gignere (st. gen), analogous to the Greek ἵδμεν (inst. of βίβμεν, st. βτα). The perfect steti (like bibi) retains its PRESENT reduplication, taking the second consonant of the stem over into the reduplication-syllable. It is extremely rare in the simple verb, but frequent in the compounds, which in the supine change ā into i (desistere — desiti — desitum).

Rem. 8. The verb tollere, instead of its original perfect teluli and supine lātum, takes the perfect-system of its compound subtollere (sustuli — sublātum), which is not used in the present-system. The form teluli, which in anteclassical language is frequently found, loses its prefix te (tuli), and with its supine lātum is borrowed by the kindred verb ferre, in order to supply its wanting perfect and supine (ferre — tuli — lātum). The compound sufferre has neither a perfect, nor a supine, both being appropriated by ferre. The other compounds of ferre form their perfects and supines as compounds with feri and lātum, changing their prepositions according to the rules App. V. (afferre — abstuli — ablātum, afferre — attuli — allātum, afferre — extuli — elātum, inferre — intuli — illātum, etc.).

Rem. 9. The perfect tutuli from tundere is not found in the Latin authors extant, but is acknowledged by the ancient grammarians. These also acknowledge the perfects tunsi and tūsi. In the compounds the perfect tūdi is beyond doubt, although Ennius uses contūdi. The supines tunsum and tūsum both occur in the simple verb; but in the compounds tūsum has better authority (contūsum).

3) Verbs with long stem-vowels.

16. Nearly all verbs with long stem-vowels in consonant-stems belong to the S-class*. Of those verbs, that have a fully authenticated perfect-system, only the diphthongic stems cædere, hædere and haurire belong to the RADICAL class. All other verbs of this kind either belong to the S-class, or, in good prose, form no perfects, or no present-system. Of the verbs with diphthongic stems cædere reduplicates, being the only reduplicating verb which retains a long stem-vowel (cædere — cecūdi — cæsum). Hædere makes hesi — hæsum, and haurire, hausi — haustum. In both perfects the s is radical, being the original characteristic in the present-system (hædere, hausire).

Rem. 1. The compounds of cædere (abscidere, conscidere, occidere) change the diphthong æ into i, which they retain in the perfect-system, dropping the reduplication (occidi — occisum).

Rem. 2. The verbs stridere or stridire, cideri, sideri, videri, which in good prose do not form perfects, are generally classed among the perfects of the RADICAL class in our grammars. The perfect stridi occurs but once in a passage of Ennius, quoted by Priscian, who also acknowledges the perfect stridi. The perfect cidi occurs twice in Columella in compounds (occidi, percidi). The ancient grammarians acknowledge partly cūdi, partly cūsi as perfect. The supine cisum occurs in compounds only (occisum, percisum). The perfect sidi is found once in Propertius. Priscian is doubtful whether a perfect of videre existed or not. The compounds borrow the perfect-system of sideri, as considere — consēdi — consessum. A perfect vidi of videre, although alleged in the grammars, does not occur. The supine visum is borrowed from the verb videre.

Rem. 3. The perfect-verb capi must be considered as belonging to the verbs of the RADICAL class with long stem-vowels. But in classical language it lacks the PRESENT-system, which however is not infrequently found in Plautus (capiō, capiō). Capi is also used as stem-deponent (capiō is sum with the signification capi), and the participle capi is with active meaning, but only in connection with a PASSIVE infinitive. See § 342.

Rem. 4. The perfect verb adi, whose participle adus is used as deponent with active signification (verb. adj. adus), must be considered as belonging to the verbs with short stem-vowels (odio — odi — odum), but its present-system occurs only in the rare and postclassical forms adiceo, adicebas. The short quantity of the stem-vowel is proved by the derived noun adum.

V. S-CLASS.

17. The verbs belonging to this class take the ACTIVE sign s, which is added to the consonant-stem of the verb without any change of its stem-vowel, as carpere — carp-si, manere — man-si. The PASSIVE sign generally is t (carpere — carp-tum); but it is s: 1) If the characteristic is dropped (see No. 9, R. 1), as plaudere — plausi — plausum, flectere — flecti — flectum, mergere — mersi — mersum, uti — usus; 2) in the verbs manere (mansi — mansum), figere (fixi — fixum), and the deponent labi (lapsus).

Rem. 1. The following verbs, although dropping their characteristics, nevertheless have the passive sign t: labi — latus — latusum, torquere — torsi — torquum, torquere — torsi — torquum, fulgere — fulsi — fulsum, sarcire — sarsi — sartum, and the inceptive deponent abisci — abitus — abitusum.

Rem. 2. The characteristics in verbs of the S-class are subject to the following euphonical changes: 1) The characteristic ō is changed into p, as scribere — scripsi — scriptum; 2) The K-MUTES (c, q, gu and qu) either coalesce with the active and passive signs into x (regere — rex, dicere — dixi, figere — fixi — fixum, stingere — stinxi, coquere — coxi), or, if preceded by l or r, are dropped (mergere — mersi — mersum, torquere — torsi, fulgere — fulsi). G, qu and qu before the passive sign t are changed into c, as regere — rectum, tingere — tinclum, coquere — coctum. 3) The T-MUTES are dropped in the perfect system, the preceding vowel being lengthened, as dividere — divisi — divisum. In the following verbs the sign s is doubled instead of lengthening the previous vowel:

* Præbere, which belongs to the U-CLASS, is no exception to this rule, since it is contracted from præhibere.

|            |                                    |               |                                     |
|------------|------------------------------------|---------------|-------------------------------------|
| II. CONJ.  | ardēre                      | arsi   | arsum.                       |
|            | audēre                      | ausi   | ausum.                       |
|            | augēre                      | auxi   | auxum.                       |
|            | frīgēre                     | frixi  | fraxum.                      |
|            | gaudēre (st. gauid ) | jussi  | jussum.                      |
|            | jūbēre                      | lusi   | lustum.                      |
|            | lūcēre                      | lusi   | lustum.                      |
|            | lūgēre                      | mansi  | mansum.                      |
|            | manēre                      | risi   | risum.                       |
|            | vidēre                      | sūsi   | sūsum.                       |
| III. CONJ. | audēre                      | gessi  | gestum.                      |
|            | gerere                      | pressi | pressum.                     |
|            | prēmere                     | ussi   | ustum.                       |
|            | ūrere                       |               | questum.                     |
|            | queri                       |               | amictum.                     |
| IV. CONJ.  | amicire                     |               | sanctum ( sancitum ). |
|            | sancire                     | sensi  | sensum.                      |
|            | sentire                     | sensi  | sensum.                      |
|            | sepire ( sæpire )    | sepsi  | seplum.                      |
|            | vincire                     | vinxi  | vinctum.                     |
|            | meſiri                      |               | mensum.                      |
|            | ordiri                      |               | orsus.                       |

Rem. 15. Audire, gauidere, and audere are SEMIDEPONENTS. Gauidere is contracted from gauidere. According to the ancient grammarians, audere and gauidere formerly had the active perfects ausi and gauidi. The perfect subjunctive of audere has an active collateral form ausim (instead of auserim).

Torere belongs to the IMPERSONAL VERBS. The perfect-system of the SIMPLE verb is anteclassical, and in classical language is supplied by the compound per-torere (per-torsum est). The perfect torsit is found in the latest Latinity.

Rem. 16. Lucere forms the inceptive compound illucescere — illuxi, which is used impersonally. Sentire forms the deponent compound assentiri (assensus), and ardere the inceptive compound exardescere (exarsi — exarsum).

VI. U-CLASS.

19. The perfects of the verbs belonging to this class are formed by the active sign ŭ, which is added to the unchanged consonant-stem. The supine is formed by the passive sign it.

Rem. 1. In the following verbs of the U-class the STEM is affected: gignere (st. gēn), metere (st. mess), ponere (st. pos), and the compounds of the obsolete condere (st. cōd). The verbs collere, molere, molere have the same stems as they have in their PRESENT TENSES. The verb colere forms the supine colitum.

The characteristics u and q are changed into g and c. These occur in linguere with its inceptive linguere (perf. lingui, without a supine), and lingere with its inceptive lingere (perf. lingui, without a supine).

Torere, in the supine, changes rr into s, after the analogy of gerere and urere (sup. tosum). Miscere loses or transposes in the supine the characteristic u (mixtum or misctum).

Rem. 2. The passive sign it is dropped in censere (censi — censum) and often loses its i by syncope, especially after c, as docere — docui — doctum (inst. of doctum). Metere forms the supine messum. — The passive sign it seems to be a weakened ut, in which the u is corrupted in the same way as in several other penults, for inst. the superlative ending imus (instead of the former umus).

20. The following verbs constitute the U-class: 1) all verbs of the second conjugation, not belonging to the classes previously mentioned (forming the great majority of the verbs of this conjugation); 2) all inceptive verbs, derived from adjectives which have a perfect system (R. 7); 3) most verbs of the third conjugation with liquid characteristics; 4) 21 verbs of the first, third, and fourth conjugations with various characteristics (R. 13).

Rem. 1. The verbs of the second conjugation belonging to this class form their perfects and supines in the following way:

|                  |               |                    |
|------------------|---------------|--------------------|
| debere    | debui  | debitum.    |
| habere    | habui  | habitum.    |
| placere   | placui | placitum.   |
| mereri    |               | meritum.    |
| polliceri |               | pollicitum. |

The following verbs drop the i of the passive sign:

|                 |               |                                       |
|-----------------|---------------|---------------------------------------|
| docere   | docui  | doctum.                        |
| miscere  | miscui | mixtum ( mixtum ).      |
| tenere   | tenui  | tenum.                         |
| torrere  | torrui | torrum.                        |
| misereri |               | miseritum or miseritum. |

Rem. 2. The following verbs of the second conjugation belonging to this class are without supines: arcere (perf. arui), calere, candere, egere, eminere, florere, frondere, horre, languere, latere, madere, nitere, olere, pallere, palere, rigere, rubere, silere, sorbere, sordere, splendere, studere, stupere, timere, torpere, tumere, vigere.

Rem. 3. The following verbs of the second conjugation lack the whole perfect-system: avere, calere, candere, flaccere, flavere, fielere, hebere, humere, imminere, livere, maerere, pollere, renidere, scatere, squallere, regere, mederi. — The verb solere, as semideponent, lacks the first cardinal form. Its compound assolere has no perfect system.

Rem. 4. The following compounds of tenere: detinere, distinere and retinere, retain in the perfect their changed vowel i (detinui, etc.), but take the supine of the simple verb (detentum). The other compounds of tenere (as attinere, abstinere) form no supine.

Rem. 5. The compounds of arcere, as exercere and coercere, form not only PERFECTS, as the simple verb, but also SUPINES (exercitum, coercitum). Of the simple verb arcere the participle arctus is formed with the signification of an ADJECTIVE (narrow).

Rem. 6. Censere makes censi — censum. The supine censum has no sufficient authority (only the monumentum Ancyranum, and a passage in Suetonius); much less authority has the supine censitum, which occurs in a solitary (and quoted) passage of Claudianus, and not of the verb censere, but of its compound recensere. The supine (censum) occurs only in the form of the participle census in the passive tenses, when censere is used as a TRANSITIVE DEPONENT in the meaning 'to assess in the census'. Censeri is also used as a TRANSITIVE DEPONENT in the meaning 'to profess one's property at the taking of the census', as in Cic. Flacc. 32 (servos or pecuniam census es, thou hast professed in the census such a number of slaves, or such an amount of money). The irregular supine censum (instead of censitum) is explained by the original form and the derivation of censere. Our grammarians and lexicographers are in great doubt about the derivation of this word, some referring it to the Sanscrit root as, and some identifying it with pendere. The original form of this verb evidently was centere or centere, which was regularly conjugated centi — centum. Servius Tullius was the first who introduced the census; hence the word could hardly have existed before his time, its original meaning being unquestionably connected with the census. For the purpose of the new institution, he divided the whole people into 'centuriae', consisting of a hundred (centum) members each. From this must have sprung the expression 'centere populum' (to 'hundred' the people). From the regular supine of this new verb (censum) the noun census and the verb censere were derived, the latter of which kept its original supine (as for instance visere keeps the supine visum of its primitive videre). This derivation, which is extremely probable in itself, is confirmed by the form of the supine censum, which cannot be explained in any other way but by assuming that a T-mute was dropped before the s.

The compounds of censere are percensere (lacking the supine); recensere (not in Cic. and Cæs.), the supine of which has as good as no authority (see above); and succensere, which has the same supine as censere (succensum) and as succendere, and hence cannot be distinguished from the latter verb in the supine. Perhaps succensere has nothing to do with censere, but is a corruption from succendere, its meaning (to be inflamed with anger) pointing rather to the root cend than to centere. Succendere would then be in the same relation to succensere (succendere) as pendere to pendere; jacere to jacere.

Rem. 7. The following inchoatives derived from adjectives belong to this class: crebrescere (with its compounds increbrescere and percrebrescere (perf. crebrui), durescere with its compound obdurescere (perf. obduri), evanescere, innotescere, macrescere, maurescere, nigrescere, obmutescere, obsurdere, recrudescere, virescere, evalescere.

ascendēre, see scandēre.
audēre, audeo, ausus sum; p. 249, § 344.
augēre, augeo, auxi, auctum; p. 372, R. 14.
batuēre (battuēre), batuo, batui, —; p. 361, 6, 5.
bibiēre, bibo, bibi, p. 364, R. 4, 5; p. 365, R. 11.
cādēre, cādo, cecidi, cāsum; p. 364, R. 4. Compounds: decidēre, decido, decidi, —; occidēre, occido, occidi, occisum.
cādēre, cādo, cecidi, cāsum. Compounds change a into i, dropping the reduplication: occido, occidi, occisum, p. 369, No. 16, R. 1.
cālēre, caleo, calui, —; p. 373, R. 2.
callēre, calleo, callui, —; p. 373, R. 2.
calvēre, calveo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3.
candēre, only in compounds, which change a into e: incendēre, incendio, incendi, incensum; p. 367, R. 5.
candēre, candeo, candui, —; p. 373, R. 2. Inceptive: candescēre, candesco, candui, —.
cānēre, caneo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3.
cānēre, cāno, cecinī, cantum; p. 364, R. 4. Compounds: concīnēre, concīno, concīnui, —, p. 365, R. 8.
cāpēre, cāpio, cēpi, captum; p. 365, R. 11. Comp.: accipēre, accipio, accēpi, acceptum, p. 365, R. 12.
cāpessēre, capesso, capessivi, —; p. 361, 6, 3.
carpēre, carpo, carpsi, carptum; p. 369, 17. Comp.: decerpēre, decerpsi, decerptum.
cāvēre, cāvēo, cāvi, cautum; p. 365, R. 11.
cēdēre, cēdo, cessi, cessum; p. 370, 17, R. 2.
cellēre, only in the compound percellēre, percello, percūli, perculsum; p. 368, R. 4. — percellēre has no supine (postclassical) without a supine. The other compounds form no perfect system.
censēre, censeo, censui, censum; p. 373, R. 6. So succensēre, succensui, succensum (but see p. 373, R. 6). Percensēre, and recensēre lack the supine; recensitum (in late Latin).

cernēre, cerno, crēvi, crētum (adj. certus); p. 361, 6, 2.
cīrēre, cīeo, cīvi, cītum; p. 361, 6, 3. Comp.: accīrēre, accīo (rarely accīeo), accīvi, accītum (Virg. Æn. 1. 677); concīrēre, concīeo (rarely concīeo), concīvi, concītum (Lucr. 2, 267); see p. 362, 13.
cīngēre, cīngo, cīnxi, cīnctum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
clangēre, clangō, —, —.
claudēre, claudio, clausi, clausum; p. 369, 17, R. 2. Comp.: conclūdēre etc. (conclūsi, conclūsum); p. 371, R. 8.
clēpēre, clēpo, clepsi, cleptum; p. 369, 17.
cluēre (poet., anteclassical, postclassical), to be famous, clūeo, —, — (rarely cluēre, clūo). Inclūtus (inclutus, inclitus) is used as an adjective (=famous), also in classical style.
cōlēre, cōlo, cōlui, cultum; p. 374, R. 9. Accōlēre, incōlēre, without supine.
cōpēre, cōpio (anteclassical), cōpi, cōptum; p. 369, R. 3.
cōgēre, cōgo, cōgi, coactum, see agere, and p. 365, R. 12.
cōmēre, cōmo, compsi, comptum; see emere, p. 366, R. 16.
comminisci, comminiscor, comminiscus; see memini.
compēre, compērio, compēri, compertum; p. 365, R. 9; see parēre.
concupiscere, concupisco, concupivi, concupitum; p. 361, 6, 3; see cupēre.
condēre, condo, condidi, conditum; p. 365, R. 7; see dare.
consilēre, consilio, consūli, consul-tum; p. 374, R. 9.
coopēre, coopērio, cooperui, coopertum. See parēre.
cōquēre, coquo, coxi, coctum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

crebrescere, crebro, crebui, —, p. 373, R. 7.
crēdēre, crēdo, crēdidi, crēditum; p. 365, R. 7; see dare.
crēpāre, crēpo, crēpui, crēpītum; p. 374, R. 13.
crescere, cresco, crēvi, crētum; p. 361, 6, 2.
cūbāre, cūbo, cūbui, cūbītum; p. 374, R. 13.
cūdēre, cūdo [cūdi, cūsi], [cūsum], p. 369, R. 2.
cumbēre, only in compounds: procumbēre, procumbui, procumbītum (taking the conjugation of cubāre); p. 372, R. 1.
cūpēre, cūpio, cūpivi, cūptum. (Comp. incept.: concupiscere, concupivi etc.); p. 361, 6, 3.
currere, curro, cucurri, cursum; p. 367, No. 14. Compounds partly keep the reduplication (excucurri, præcucurri), partly drop it (accucurri, decurri, etc.); p. 367, R. 2.
dāre, do, dēdi, dātum, p. 364, R. 4. The comp. with monosyllabics take dēre in the infinitive, dēdi in the perfect, and dītum in the supine: condēre, condidi, condītum; vendēre, vendidi, vendītum; credēre, credidi, creditum. Polysyllabic compounds follow the simple verb: circumdāre, circumdēdi, circumdātum; p. 364, R. 6; p. 365, R. 7.
dēdēre, dēdo, dēdidi, dēdītum; see dare, p. 365, R. 7.
dēfendēre, see fendēre.
dēlēre, dēleo, dēlēvi, dēlētum; p. 361, 6, 2.
dēmēre, dēmo, dempsi, demptum; see emēre, p. 366, R. 16.
depsēre, depso, depui, depstum; p. 374, R. 9.
dēscendēre, see scandēre.
dēsciscere, see asciscere.
dīrēre, dīco, dixi, dictum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
dīligēre, dīlīgo, dīlexi, dīlectum; see legēre.
discēre, disco, dīdici, —; p. 368, R. 2. Compounds retain the reduplication (ēdidici); p. 368, R. 3.
dividēre, divīdo, divīsi, divīsum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
docēre, doceo, docui, doctum; p. 373, R. 1.
dōmāre, domo, domui, domītum; p. 374, R. 13.
dūcēre, dūco, duxi, ductum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
dūrescere, duresco, durui, —; p. 373, R. 7.
ēdēre (to eat), ēdo, ēdi, ēsum; p. 364, No. 11; ib. No. 9, R. 3. The supine is anteclassical and rare; but the participle obesus (of obēdere) frequently occurs, although not in classical prose. From ēdere the desiderative ēsūrīre (to be hungry), without a perfect, is formed.
ēdēre (to give out), ēdo, ēdidi, ēdītum; see dare, p. 365, R. 7.
ēgēre, egeo, egui, —; p. 373, R. 2. Comp.: indīgēre, indīgeo, indīgui, —.
ēmēre, ēmo, ēmi, emptum (emtum), p. 365, R. 11. Compounds change ē into i: adīmēre, adīmo, adēmi, adeptum; p. 366, R. 16. Irregular compounds: dēmēre, prōmēre, sūmēre, cōmēre, belonging to S-class. Cōmēre keeps the i in the present system.
ēmīnēre, see manēre.
ēo, see īre.
esse, sum, fui, — (verbal adj. futūrus); p. 361, 6, 5; p. 362, 22.
exercēre, see arcēre.
expergisci, see rēgere.
exolescere, see olēre.
exuēre, exūo, exūi, exūtum; p. 361, 6, 5.
evānescere, evanesco, evanui, —; p. 373, R. 7.
fūcēre, fūcio, feci, factum; p. 365, R. 11. For the change of the stem-vowel ā into i, see p. 106, R. 4, and p. 359. The compounds that retain the stem-vowel are conjugated like the simple verb. Those that change ā into i, make fēcī, fectum (interficēre, interficio, in-alligere, ellicere, pollicere (allicio, licui, licuor, licitus; p. 361, 6, 5. allexi, allectum, etc.). Ellicere, licco, luxi, —; p. 372, R. 14. makes ellicio, ellicui, ellicium; see Comp.: ellicere, illuxi. p. 371, R. 2. Lacere occurs only ludere, ludo, lusi, luserum; p. 369, 17, in the intensive form lucessere (lucisso, lucissivi, lucissitum); p. 361, 6, 3.

lucessere, see lacere.

ludere, ludo, lusi, luserum. Compounds take i: eludere, elusi, eluserum; p. 371, R. 8.

lambere, lambio, lambi, —; p. 367, R. 5.

languere, langueo, langui, —; p. 372, R. 1.

latere, lateo, latui, —; p. 373, R. 2.

Inceptive compound delitescere, delitescio, delitui, —.

lirare, livo, lavi, lantum or lōtum; p. 365, R. 11.

legere, lego, legi, lectum; p. 365, R. 11. The comp. allegere, praellegere, rellegere, keep the stem-vowel e. The other compounds generally change the stem-vowel into i, but negligere and intelligere may retain e. Diligere, latere, legere, intelligere belong to the S-class (lego, legi, legis, intelligo, intelligi, intelligitur); p. 366, R. 17.

libere, libet, libuit or libitum est. licere, licet, licuit or licitum est. The deponent liceri (liccor, licitus) is a regular personal verb.

linere, lino, lvi or lēvi, litum; p. 361, 6, 2. Compounds: illinere, illēvi, illitum. So collinere and delinere (without perf.).

lingere, lingo, —, linctum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

linquere, linquo, liqui, lictum; p. 368, R. 1. The simple verb is chiefly anteclassical and poetical; but the compounds relinquere, delinquere, derelinquere are frequent and classical. The supine lictum, in the simple verb, rests on doubtful authority.

liquere, liqueo, licui (liqui), —; p. 372, R. 1. Inceptive form; lique-scere, with its compound collique-scere, colliqui.

livere, liveo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3.

lucere, luceo, luxi, luxum; p. 372, R. 14. The noun lucus presupposes a supine luctum.

luere, luo, lui, — (dilutum); p. 362, 20.

macrescere, macresco, macrui, —; p. 373, R. 7.

madere, madeo, madui, —; p. 373, R. 2.

marere, mæreo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3.

malle, see velle.

mandere, mando, mandi (very rare), mansum; p. 367, R. 5.

manere, maneo, mansi, mansum; p. 372, R. 14. Compounds: eminerere, emineo, emineui, —; imminere (without a perfect system); perminere and remanere, like the simple verb (perminui etc.).

matrescere (without a perfect system).

maturare, muresco, maturui, —; p. 373, R. 7.

mederi, mædeor, —; p. 373, R. 3.

mentari, reduplicating Perfect-verb, from the root men, which forms no present system, except in the inceptive compounds comminisci and reminisci. The supine mentum occurs only in the compound comminisci (PERF.: commentusum); p. 364, 11, d.

mergere, mergo, mersi, mersum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

metere, mæto, —, messum; p. 372, R. 1. A perfect messui occurs in quotations by the ancient grammarians.

metiri, metior, mensus; p. 370, 17, 5; p. 372, R. 14.

metuere, metuo, metui, — (metitum, in Lucr.); p. 362, 20.

micare, mico, micui, —. So the compound emicare, but dimicare, dimicavi, dimicatum; p. 361, R. 2; p. 374, R. 13, 15.

mingere (mægere), mingo, minxi, minxitum and mictum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

minuere, minuo, minui, minutum; p. 361, 6, 5; p. 362, 22.

miscere, misceo, miscui, mistum or mixtum; p. 372, R. 1.

misereri, misereor, misertus (miseritus); p. 373, R. 1.

mittere, mitto, misi, missum; p. 370, 17, R. 2.

molare, molo, molui, molitum; p. 374, R. 9.

mordere, mordeo, momordi, morsum; p. 367, No. 14.

mori (moriri, antec.), morior, mortuus (verbal adj. moriturus); p. 374, R. 9.

movere, moveo, movi, motum; p. 365, R. 11.

mulcere, mulceo, mulsi, mulsum; p. 371, R. 13.

mulgere, mulgeo, mulsi, — (muletum, VARRO).

mungerere (the simple verb only in the Gloss. Philox.). Compound: emungerere, emungo, emunxi, emunctum; p. 369, 17, R. 2; p. 370, 18.

nancisci, nanciscor, nactus (nactus); p. 370, 17, R. 2.

nasci, nascor, natus; p. 361, 6, 1.

necare, neco, necavi (rarely necui), necatum; but enecare, eneco [enecui, postcl.; enecari, antec.], enectum (enecatum, antec.); p. 374, R. 15. Collateral forms: enicare and enicari (antec.).

nectere, necto, nexui (rarely nexi), nexum; p. 369, 17.

negligere (neglegere), see legere.

nere, neo, nēvi, nētum (poet., postcl.); p. 361, 6, 2.

nidere, only in the comp. renidere, renideo (the perf. renidui is quoted in Gloss. Philox.); p. 373, R. 3.

nigrescere, nigresco, nigrui, —; p. 373, R. 7.

ningere, ningit, ninxit, —; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

nitere, niteo, nitui, —; p. 273, R. 2.

niti, nitor, nusus (nixus); p. 369, 17, R. 2; 370, No. 18; 371, R. 11.

nivere (obsol.). Comp.: connivere, conniveo, —, —. The ancient grammarians variously state the perfect to be connivi, connixi, connipsi, without vouchers.

nolle, see velle.

noscere (inst. of gnoscere), nosco, novi, notum; p. 361, 6, 4. The comp. agnoscere, and cognoscere form the supines agnitum and cognitum. The other compounds follow the simple verb, p. 362, 16.

nubere, nubio, nupsi, nuptum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

nuere, only in compounds (annuere, annuo, annui, —); p. 362, 20. Nutus occurs as a noun.

oblivisci, obliviscor, oblitus; p. 361, 6, 3.

obmutescere, obmutesco, obmutui, —; p. 373, R. 7.

obsolescere, see olere.

obsurdescere, obsurdesco, obsurui, —; p. 373, R. 7.

oculere, oculo, ocului, occultum; p. 374, R. 9.

[odere], [odio], odi, osum; p. 369, R. 4.

olere (to smell), oleo, olui, —; p. 373, R. 2.

olere (to grow); only in the compounds abolere (abolescere), adulescere (adolere), obsolescere and exolescere. Abolere, abolēvi, abolitum; adulescere, adulēvi, adultum; obsolescere, obsolēvi, obsolētum; exolescere, exolēvi, exolētum. See p. 361, 6, 2; p. 362, 7.

operire, see parere.

oportere, oportet, oportuit, —.

opperiri, see parere.

ordiri, ordior, orsus; p. 372, R. 14.

oriri, orior, ortus (verbal adj. oriturus); p. 374, R. 13.

pacisci, see pangere.

pallere, palleo, pallui, —; p. 373, R. 2.

pandere, pando, pandi, passum (rarely pansum); p. 367, R. 5.

pangere, pango, pepigi, pactum; p.

368, R. 2. Anteccl.: parari, paratum, parere, pāreo. —, —. The perf. pāri rests on the statement of Charisius, without vouchers. Compounds change a into i, and are conjugated according to the scheme pario, pēgi, paritum (im- pectere, pecto, pexi, pexum; p. 369, 17. pingere, impēgi, impictum). From the anteclassical collateral form pehere, pello, pepuli, pulsum; p. 368, R. 2. Compounds without reduplication (compuldere, compuli, compulsum).

parere, parco, peperi. —; p. 367, No. 14. Anteccl. perf. pari (once parui). The verbal adj. parurus occurs in Livy and Suetonius, and paritūrus in Pliny; p. 367, R. 3. The ante- and post-classical compounds comparere and reparere (in the latest Latinity also comperere) are without a perfect system. Imperere occurs only in Plautus.

parere, pārio, pēperi, paritum; p. 364, R. 4. The compounds change a into ē, dropping the reduplication, but forming their present system from the obsolete derivative verb parere (reparere, repērio, repēri or parere, peto, petivi, petitum; p. 361, 6, 3. repperi, reperitum; comparere, compērio, compēri, compertum). The compounds aperire and operire take the perfects aperui and operui; but supines in peritum. The deponents apparere and experire have the participle in peritus; op-periri, in anteclassical language, also forms opperitus. The simple verb perire occurs in the participle peritus, which is only used as an adjective (experienced). See p. 365, R. 9.

pārere (to obey), pāreo, parui, — (paritum est, and paritūrus, post-classical).

pārere (to be evident), pāret (it is evident), —, — (used in juridical language in the pretorian formulas).

pascere, pasco, pāvi, pastum; p. 361, 6, 1.

pātēre, pateo, patui, —; p. 373, R. 2.

pāti, patior, passus; p. 370, 17, 3. Compounds change a into ē: perpeti, perpetior, perpessus; p. 371, R. 8.

pendere (to hang, be suspended), pendeo, pendidi, pensum; p. 367, No. 14. Compounds without reduplication (dependere, dependi, dependum); p. 367, R. 2.

pendere (to hang, to suspend), pendo, pendidi, pensum; p. 367, No. 14. Compounds without reduplication. pendere, pendo, pendidi, penditum; see dare.

perdere, perdo, perdididi, perditum; see dare.

perdere, only in compounds (compescere, compesco, compescui, —); p. 374, R. 11. It is doubtful whether pescere is identical with pascere.

perdere, peto, petivi, petitum; p. 361, 6, 3.

perdere, piget [pigit and pigitum est, both postcl.]. —.

pingere, pingo, pinxi, pictum; p. 370, R. 2, 5.

pingere, pinso (piso). The perfect system doubtful; p. 374, R. 11.

plangere, plango, plaxi, placium; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

plaudere, plaudo, plausi, plausum. So applaudere; the other comp. change au into ō (explodere, explōsi, explōsum); p. 371, R. 8.

plectere (to strike), plecto, —, —; p. 371, R. 12.

plectere (to braid), plecto [plexi], [plexum]. The compounds are deponents: amplecti, amplexus; complexi, complexus; p. 371, R. 12.

plere, only in compounds: complere, compleo, complēvi, complēum. So implere, explere, deplere etc. p. 361, 6, 2.

plicare, plico, plicui (plicāvi), plicitum (plicatum); p. 361, R. 3; p. 375, R. 18. The simple verb is ante- and post-classical. The compounds applicare, implicare, etc., make either -plicui, plicitum, or quātere, quatio, —, quassum; p. 370, 17, R. 2. The compounds change quā into cū (concūtere, concūtio, concussi, concussum); p. 371, R. 8; R. 10.

plodere, see plaudere.

pluere, pluit (sometimes plūvit), —; p. 362, 22.

pœnitere, pœnitet, pœnituit. A verbal adjective pœnitūrus is quoted by ancient grammarians as anteclassical, and Quintilian censures Sallust for using this form.

pollere, polleo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3.

pollucere (ante- and post-class.), polluceo, —, polluctum.

pōnere, pōno, pōsui, pōsitum; p. 373, R. 2.

poscere, posco, poposci, —; p. 367, No. 14. Compounds reduplicate: reposcere, repoposci, etc.

posse, possum, potui, —; p. 374, R. 13.

pōtare, poto, potāvi, potatum or pōtum; p. 361, 6, 4.

prandere, prandeo, prandi, pransum; p. 367, R. 5; R. 8.

prehendere (prendere), prehendo, prehendi, prehensum; p. 367, R. 5.

premere, prēmo, pressi, pressum; p. 370, 17, 5. Compounds take i (deprimere, deprimō, depressi, depressum); p. 370, R. 3.

prodere, prodo, prodidi, proditum; see dare.

proficisci, profiscor, profectus; inceptive compound of facere; see facere; p. 365, R. 12.

promere, prōmo, prompsi, promptum; p. 366, R. 16 (comp. of ēmere).

prurire, prurio, —, —; p. 362, 12.

psallere, psallo, —, —. A perfect psalli is quoted by Priscian; p. 366, 12, 6; p. 367, R. 5.

pungere, pungo, pupūgi, punctum; p. 368, R. 2. Comp.: compungere, expungere, which make -punxi, punctum. Repungere and depungere have no perfect system.

querere, quæro, quæsi, quæsitum; p. 361, 6, 3. Comp.: conquerere etc. (conquistvi, conquistum).

quætere, quatio, —, quassum; p. 370, 17, R. 2. The compounds change quā into cū (concūtere, concūtio, concussi, concussum); p. 371, R. 8; R. 10.

quæri, quæror, questus; p. 370, No. 17, R. 2.

quiescere, quiesco, quievi, quietum; p. 361, 6, 2.

quire (comp. of ire), quæro, quæsi, quæsitum.

rabere, rābo, —, — (poetical and post-classical).

rādere, rādo, rāsi, rāsum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.

rāpere, rāpio, rāpui, raptum; p. 375, R. 20. Compounds take i in the perfect, and ē in the supine.

rāvire, rāvio, —, — (to be hoarse); occurring Plaut. Pœn. 3, 5, 33. The anteccl. verbal adjective rausurus may be referred either to this verb, or to an assumed raucire or raucere (according to the analogy of sarcire, farcire, and parcere). The perfect irrausi (used once by Cicero) refers to an inceptive compound, which may be either irrauscere, or irrauscere, neither of which is actually found. See p. 370, R. 3.

recrudescere, recrudesco, recrudui, p. 373, R. 7.

reddere, reddo, reddidi, redditum; see dare.

regere, rēgo, rex, rectum; p. 369, 17, R. 2. The compounds dirigere, porrigere, erigere etc. change ē into i, but only in the present system (dirigo, dirēxi, directum). The ē of the stem is syncopated in the present system of surgere, pergere, and the inceptive deponent expergisci (= subregere etc.): surrexi, surrectum; perrexi, perrectum; experrectus. See p. 370 foll., 18, R. 2.

reminisci, see memini.

repere, rēpo, repsi, reptum; p. 369, 17.

repërere, repërio, repëri (better repperere, repertum; see parere. The doubling of p in repperi is owing to the reduplication (=reperiri).
as rettuli = retuli.
rëri, reor, rätus; p. 361, 6, 1.
rüdere, rüdeo, rüsi, rüsum; p. 372, R. 14.
rügere, rügeo, —, — (perfect doubtful);
p. 373, R. 2.
rügi, ringor, —. The noun rictus presupposes a participle rictus.
rödere, rödo, rösi, rösum; p. 369, 17,
R. 2.
rübere, rubeo, —, —. The inceptive compound erubescere forms the perf. erubui. See p. 373, R. 2.
rütere, rüdo (Pers. 3, 9), rüdi (Appul. Met. 1, 7), —; p. 362, 15.
ruere, rüo, rüi, rütum (the supine only in compounds). The verbal adjective rutarius anteclassical and postclassical. The participle rutus (with long u) occurs as an absolute neuter adjective in the juridical expression 'rüta cæsa' (=ruta et cæsa), referring to the appurtenances of farm-property, which have been separated from the land by manual labor.
rumpere, rumpo, rüpi, ruptum; p.
368, R. 1.
sälire (to leap), salio, salui, —; p. 374,
R. 13. Compounds take i: desi-lire, desilui (sometimes desilui); p.
374, R. 16.
sälire (to salt; collateral forms: sällori, sällic), —, sälitum or sälum.
Both supines are rare; but the perfect part. salsus, as an adjective (salted), very frequent.
sancire, sancio, sanxi, sanctum (san-citur); p. 372, R. 14.
säpëre, säpio, säpivi (antecl.), —. The perf. säpui rests on Priscian's statement. Comp.: desäpëre and insäpëre form no perfect; but resä-piscere, resäpui, resäpivi or resäpui, the latter being doubtful; p. 375,
R. 17; p. 362, 14.
sarcire, sarcio, sarsi, sartum; p. 371,
R. 13.

scabere, scäbo, scäbi, —; p. 364, No.
11; p. 365, 11. The perf. scäbi rests only on a passage quoted by Priscian.
scäpëre, scäpo, scäpsi, scäptum;
p. 369, 17.
scandere, scando, scandi, scansum; Compounds change a into e: descändere, descendi, descensum; p.
367, R. 5.
scätere (also scätire, poet.), scäteo, —,
—; p. 373, R. 3.
scindere, scindo, scädi (scäcädi, antecl.), scissum; p. 368, R. 2.
scribere, scribo, scripsi, scriptum; p.
369, 17, R. 2.
sculpere, sculpo, sculpsi, sculptum;
p. 369, 17.
scire, scëo, scëui, sectum; p. 374,
R. 13; p. 375, 19.
R. 11. Compounds with mono-syllabics change e into i in the present system: assädere, assädi, assessum. But those with dissyllabics retain the e: circumsedere, supersedere.
sentire, sentio, sensi, sensum; p. 372,
R. 14. Deponent comp.: assentiri, assensus; p. 372, R. 11.
sepelire, sepelio, sepelivi, sepultum;
p. 362, 10.
sëpire (sëpire), sepio, sepsi, septum;
p. 372, R. 14.
sëqui, sëquor, sëcütus; p. 361, 6, 5.
sëre (to sow), sëro, sëvi, sätum; p.
361, 6, 2; p. 362, 8. Comp. make
-sëvi, -sätum (consëre), consëvi, consätum); dissëre lacks the perfect (dissëro, —, dissätum); persë-rere (postclass.) lacks the supine (persëro, persëvi, —).
serere (to connect), sëro, —, — (ser-tum, pl. t., a garland). The compounds belong to the U-class: desserere, desëui, desertum, p. 374,
R. 9.
serpere, serpo, serpsi, serptum; p.
369, 17.

siidere, sïdo, sïdi (poet.), —. The compounds borrow the perf. and supine of sëdere: consïdo, consëdi, consessum; p. 369, No. 16, R. 2.
sïlere, sïleo, sïlui, —; p. 373, R. 2.
sïnere, sïno, sïvi, sïtum; p. 361, 6, 3.
The comp. drop the o of the perfect: desïno, desïi, desïtum. Pö-nëre (= posinere) makes pösui (po-sivi, frequent in antecl. language).
sistere, sisto, stiti, stätum; p. 368, R.
2 (dies stätus, sacrificia stäta; stä-tum est, postclass.). The compounds desistere and obstistere change stätum into stitum: desistere, destiti, destitum; p. 368, R.
7. The other compounds form no supine (insistere, institi, —; so per-sistere, assistere). Of existere (ex-istere), the lexicons give the su-pine existum. But I doubt whether it be found anywhere. Circum-sistere forms neither perfect nor supine. The lexicons erroneously give the perf. circumstati.
solvere, solëo, solütus (semi-deponent).
solvere, solvo, solvi (sölui, poet.), so-lütum; p. 361, 6, 5; p. 362, 19, 22.
sonare, sono, sonui, sonütum; p. 374,
R. 13.
sorbere, sorbeo, sorbui, —; p. 373, R.
2. Comp.: absorbere, absorbui (absorpsi, rare), absorptum (merely stripure, quoted by ancient grammarians, and without sufficient authority).
Stridere (stridere), strideo (strido), [stridui or stridi], —. The per-fects rest on the statement of Priscian; p. 369, R. 2.
sordere, sordeo, sordui, —; p. 373, R.
2 (the perf. sordui is doubtful).
spargere, spargo, sparsi, sparsum.
Compounds change a into e: con-spargo, conspersi, conspersum; p.
371, R. 6.
spicere (spicere), spëcio, —, — (the simple verb, antecl.). The compounds (as conspicere etc.) make
-spicere, spëcio, spëxi, spëctum;
p. 371, R. 2.
spernere, sperno, sprëvi, sprëtum; p.
361, 6, 2.
splendere, splendo, splendui, —; p.

373, R. 2. The perf. of the simple verb is doubtful; but the inceptive compound explendescere makes ex-plendui (Suet.).
spondere, spondeo, sponendi, spon-sum; p. 367, No. 14. Compounds without reduplication: respondere, respondi, responsum; p. 367, R. 2.
spuere, spuo, —, —; p. 362, 20. The noun spütum presupposes the su-pine spütum.
squälere, squaleo, —, —; p. 373,
R. 3.
stare, sto, stëti, stätum. So some of the compounds, both monosyllabic and dissyllabic (circumstare); but præstare makes præstiti, præstitum; p. 361, R. 4; p. 363, 9, R. 2.
Verbal adj.: præstaturus.
statuere, statuo, statui, statütum; p.
361, 6, No. 5. The compounds take i: constituere, constitui, con-stitütum.
sternere, sterno, strävi, strätum; p.
361, 6, 1.
sternuere, sternuo, —, —; p. 362, 20.
stertere, sterto, stertui, —; p. 374,
R. 14.
stinguere (obsol.). Comp.: -stinguo,
-stinxi, -stinctum (restinguere, exstinguere).
strepere, strepo, strepui, strepitum;
p. 374, R. 13.
Stridere (stridere), strideo (strido), [stridui or stridi], —. The per-fects rest on the statement of Priscian; p. 369, R. 2.
stringere, stringo, strinxi, strictum;
p. 370, 17, R. 2, 5.
struere, struo, struxi, structum; p.
370, 18, R. 1.
studere, studeo, studui, —; p. 373,
R. 2.
stupere, stupeo, stupui, —; p. 373,
R. 2. Inceptive comp.: obstupere (obstupescere), obstupui, —.
suadere, suädeo, suäsi, suäsum; p.
372, R. 14.
subdere, subdo, subdidi, subdütum;
p. 365, R. 7. See dare.

suere, suo, —, — (sutus, stitched; adj.); p. 363, 18, 20.
suescere, suesco, suēvi, suctum; p. 361, 6, 2. Mostly in the compounds assuescere and consuescere (suere, poet.).
sugere, sūgo, suxi, suctum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
sumere, sūmo, sumpsi, sumptum; p. 366, R. 16; see emere.
superbire, superbio, —, —; p. 362, 12.
surgere, surgo, surrexi, surrectum; see regere.
tædere, tædet, pertæsum est (semi-deponent); p. 372, R. 15.
tangere, tango, tēgi, tactum; p. 368, R. 2. Compounds take i in the present system, dropping the reduplication in the perfect; contingere, contigi, contactum; p. 368, R. 3.
tēgere, tego, texi, tectum; p. 369, 17, R. 2.
temnere (as a simple verb, poet.), temno, tempsi (temsi), temptum (temtum); p. 370, R. 4, 2. So the compound contemnere.
tendere, tendo, tetendi, tentum or tremere, tremo, tremui, —; p. 373, tensum; p. 367, No. 14. The comp. drop the reduplication. The supine is tensum in ostendere (but ostentum, as a noun). For the other compounds see p. 367, R. 4.
tēnere, teneo, tenui, tentum; p. 373, R. 1. The comp. change ē into i, resuming e in the supine (retinere, retinui, retentum). Attinere and abstinere form no supine; p. 373, R. 4. Continere forms contentus, as an adjective only. The perfect tetini (antecl.) is quoted by ancient grammarians.
tēre, tēro, trivi, tritum; p. 361, 6, 3.
tergere (tergere), tergo (tergeo), tersi, tersum; p. 369, 17, R. 2; p. 371, R. 13.
texere, texo, texui, textum; p. 374, R. 9.
timere, timeo, timui; p. 373, R. 2.
tinguere (tingere), tingo, tinxi, tinctum. Comp.: distinguere, distinxī, etc.; p. 371, R. 3.
tolere, tollo, sustuli, sublātum. See p. 368, R. 8. Attollere, without a perfect system.
tondere, tondeo, totondi, tonsum; p. 367, No. 14.
tonare, tonō, tonui, tonitum; p. 374, R. 13. Attonare poetical; but the partic. attonitus (thunderstruck, amazed) frequently occurring as an adjective and accessory predicate.
torpere, torpeo, torpui, —. The perf. torpui seems to belong to the inceptive torpescere only (Comp. Ov. Her. 10, 44; ib. 11, 22). Comp.: obtorpescere, obtorpui (Liv. 32, 20; Ib. 34, 38).
torquere, torqueo, torsi, tortum; p. 371, R. 13.
torrere, torreo, torrui, tostum; p. 372, R. 1.
tradere, trado, tradidi, traditum; p. 365, R. 7; see dare. Frequently written transdo etc.
trahere, traho, traxi, tractum; p. 370, 18, R. 1; R. 4.
trēmere, tremo, tremui, —; p. 373, R. 9.
tribuere, tribuo, tribui, tributum; p. 361, 6, 5. trūdere, trūdo, trūsi, trūsum; p. 369, R. 2.
tuēri, tueor [tutus]; p. 362, 21. The compounds contuēri and intuēri, ante- and post-classically take the supines contuītu, and intuītu.
tūmere, tūmeo, tūmui, —; p. 373, R. 2. Doubtful, whether the perfect tumui belongs to tūmere or to its inceptive compounds only: intumesco, intumui (Ov. I. 1, 215; Ib. Pont. 4, 14, 34; Plin. H. N. 20, 6, 23).
tundere, tundo [tutūdi, tunsi, tūsi], tunsum (tūsum). Comp.: contundere, contūdi, contūsum; p. 368, R. 9.
turgere, turgeo, tursi (antecl.). —; p. 371, R. 13. The inceptive turgescere, without a perfect system.

ulcisci, ulciscor, ultus; p. 369, 17, R. 1.
ungere (ungere), ungo (unguo), unxi, unctum; p. 369, R. 17.
urere, uro, ussi, ustum; p. 370, R. 2, 4. The compound combūrere (from an ancient collateral form burere) makes combussi, combustum; p. 370, R. 3.
urgere (urgere), urgeo (urgueo), ursi, —; p. 371, R. 13.
vadere, vado, —, —. The comp. evadere makes evasi, evasum; p. 371, R. 9.
vegere, vegeo, —, —; p. 373, R. 3. Vegētus (which is scanned vegētus in the poets) frequently occurs as an adjective.
vēhere, vēho, vexi, vectum; p. 370, R. 4.
velle, vōlo, vōlui, —. The comp. malle and nolle, make mālui, nōlui; p. 372, R. 1.
vellere, vello, velli (vulsi), vulsum; p. 367, R. 5.
vendere, vendo, vendidi, venditum; p. 365, R. 7; see dare.
venire (to come), vēnio, vēni, ventum; p. 365, R. 11.
venire (to be for sale), vēneo, venii (veni), —; p. 362, No. 11.
vergere, vergo, —, —. The perf. versi rests on a mere conjecture in the passage Ov. Pont. 1, 9, 52. KÜHNER erroneously derives the preposition versus from vergere (see vertere).
vertere, verro [verri], —; p. 367, R. 5.
vertere (vortere, in Sallust and the poets; also antecl.), verito (vorto), verti, versum (vorsum). The partic. versus (vorsus), used as preposition. The compounds with re, di, and præ, are deponents in the present system; but generally take active perfects: revertor, perf. reverti; see p. 367, R. 7.
vesci, vescor, —, —. Inceptive, derived from the root ve, from which vivere is formed by present reduplication.
vētare, veto, vetui, vetitum; p. 370, R. 13.
videre, vīdeo, vīdi, vīsum; p. 364, No. 11; p. 365, R. 11.
viere, vīeo, —, vīetum; p. 361, 6, 2; p. 362, 9.
vigere, vīgeo, vigui, —; p. 373, R. 2. The perf. vigui does not belong to the inceptive vigescere (as the lexicons give it), but to the stem-verb vigere (Tum aræ vestræ viguerunt, vestra vis valuit; Cic. Mil. 31). Pervigui occurs in Tac. A. 4, 34, unquestionably derived from pervigere.
vincere, vinco, vīci, victum; p. 368, R. 1.
vincire, vincio, vinxi, vinctum; p. 372, R. 14.
virere, vīreo, —, —; p. 373, R. 2.
visere, vīso, —, vīsum; p. 369, R. 2.
vivere, vivo, vixi, victum; p. 370, R. 4. Inceptive compound: reviviscere, revixi, revictum.
volvere, volvo, volvi, volūtum; p. 362, 22.
vomere, vomo, vomui, vomitum; p. 374, R. 9.
vovere, vōveo, vōvi, vōtum; p. 364, 11; p. 365, R. 11.

4. o is short (o) in the adverbs otŭ, imnŭ, plŭ, celŭ, monŭ and its compounds, and in otŭ, deŭ, celŭ. o is long or short in the Latin case of the third declension (otŭm or otum, deŭm, celŭm). The poets of the silver age use the verbal ending o LONG or short, while the classical poets and the earlier poets of the silver age have then o almost always LONG.

10. Terminations in ds, cs, os are LONG (mcusds, regos, mullos).

EXCEPTIONS.

EXCEPTIONS.—1. as is short in the nominative of Greek nouns with the genitive in adis (Pythias), and in the Greek accusative plural of the third declension (theatras). Many grammarians innumerate the north as as a diphthong among the exceptions. But this rests on a very improbable conjecture of Vossius in a passage of Petronius (lit. pictis anas enotata pempit), which is no proof whatever.

2. es is short (a) in the rom. pair of Greek nouns of the third declension (Amatōmēs; mīs), which is to proof what-ever.

(b) in those nouns in es which belong to the T-class (p. 127 foll.), as μάδος, πέγης, χάσις.

But αἰώς, αῖρης, παῖς, and the compounds of pēs are LONG; (c) In the compounds of the second pers., sing. es (αἶψας, ποδός etc.); (d) in the preposition πενέθ.

3. es is short (a) in Campūs, cinēps, (e) in the case-ending us of Greek nouns (Δελός,

3, as is short o in campus, trapes, etc. in the case-ending o of Greek nouns (Delos, Palladōs).
Paladōs are short (lignis, tempus, Cotys).

Palladōs). . . . . is ne ne are SHORT (ignis, tempus, Cotys).

§ 11. Terminations in is, us, ys are SHORT (ignis, tempus, ager);

EXCEPTIONS. (1) in the genitive case of the plural (pueris, nobis, civis); (2) in Samuī, Flau-

EXCEPTIONS.

EXCEPTIONS.

1. i is LONG (a) in all the cases of the plural (pueris, nobis, civibus): (b) in Samiſis, Eteuſtis, Samois, and Salamis: (c) in the second pers. sing. pres. of the 4th conjugation (audies): (d) in the second persons tis, tis, fis, tis, mis, nitis; hence also in quidie: (e) in quatis: a, NON or SHORT in the second pers. sing. perfect subjunctive and quameris and quaris: e, NON or SHORT in the second pers. sing. perfect subjunctive and of the future-perfect (pudueris etc.). . . .

a is the nominative of the nouns of the T-alas (civitas, urbs etc.): p. . . .
i is the nominative of the nouns of the T-alas (civitas, urbs etc.): p. . . .
The vowels i and e are long in the first pers. sing. and in the . . . .

2. us is LONG (u) in the nominative of the nouns of the T-class (virūs, scīs etc.; p. 126), and whenever the genitive has a long (ul' aris); (u) in the gen. sing. and in the plural of the fourth declension; (u) if it stands for Greek ous (phōis), except (Phōipās).

§ 12. Terminations in a consonant other than s are SHORT (vinu, car-mén, aměr, laudăt, doněc, seměl).

EXCEPTIONS.

LONG. are a'te, h'te, the form-adjectives i'te and e'te, and the terminations of nouns taken from the Greek when they are long in this language, except those in ea, which are always short (Nestôr).

III. THE USE OF METRES IN POETRY.

A. General Rules.

§ 13 In Greek and Latin poetry, the words are arranged according to the METRE, by which we understand a systematic arrangement of long and short syllables, succeeding each other according to the various schemes used by the poets. These schemes are likewise called METRES.

Obs. 1. In poetry a short syllable is sustained by the voice half the time of a long syllable, which, therefore, has the metrical value of two short syllables. Hence in all iambic and trochaic metres (but not generally in the other metres) two short syllables may generally be substituted for one long syllable (see below). The space of time allowed to a single syllable is, therefore, termed a metre, a short syllable being half a metre. This long syllable is, therefore, termed a metre. Since the above the same given to a metre however, must only be understood relative &c. since the above the same given to a metre may circulate with the different classes of composition, or even with different passages in the same poem.

Obs. 2. The RHYME was unknown to the ancients, and was first employed in the Christian hymns, at a time when the Latin language had ceased to be a living tongue. The rhythms used in the Christian hymns (after the third century of the Christian era), are rhythms used in the Christian hymns (after the third century of the Christian era), are not considered here. These rhythms are not 'metres' in the sense defined above, since the length and shortness of syllables are altogether disregarded in them. The Latin, used in these hymns, was not the Latin spoken by the people at any time, but an artificial, used in the so-called 'ecclesiastical' Latin. This Latin is a species of the so-called 'ecclesiastical' Latin. This Latin is a species of the so-called 'ecclesiastical' Latin.

§ 14. Generally a composition in verse consists of certain METRICAL PERIODS, each of which contains the metre (metrical scheme) employed, which recurs in regular succession. Such periods are called STROPHES.

A strophe consisting of four lines is called a STANZA. If a composition consists of one single verse or strophe, which is not repeated, it is called an EPIGRAM.

§ 15. Strophes are divided into LINES, called VERSES, and each verse is divided into FEET, which contain a certain succession of two, three, or four syllables. The feet employed in Latin poetry are the following:

— Iambus, as lĕgūnt, pătrēs.

— Trochee (Trochæus, choræus), scripsit, terrâ.

— — Spondee, scribens, terrā.

— — — Dactyl (Dactylus), scriběře, flūmínā.

— Anapest, (Anapæstus), lăgărent, hōmīnī.

— ८ — Amphimacer or Creticus, grātiās. cōgītans.

— — — Bachius, dōlōrī, āmāvī.

- - - Choriambus (i.e. Choreus and Iambus), prāētērēunt, eximīōs.

— — — Ionicus a minōre, ādāmārī, ādōlēscens.

— — — — — Ionicus a majore, sententia, mūtābilis.*

§ 16. RHYTHM is the system of rise or fall of the voice at certain intervals, as represented by the feet. The iambus and anapest constitute the rising rhythm; the trochee and dactyl, the falling rhythm. The spondee belongs to either. The other feet combine both the rising and falling rhythm. Thus the Creticus begins with a falling rhythm, and ends with a rise, while the Bacchius begins with a rise, and ends with a fall. The pitch (highest rise) of the voice is called arsis; the sinking of the voice is called thesis. The arsis is marked by an acute accent; as:

lambus,  $\cup \perp$

Anapest,  $\cup \cup \text{—}$ .

Trochee,  $\underline{\text{—}} \text{ } \underline{\text{—}}$ .

Dactyl,  $\underline{\text{—}}$   $\cup$   $\cup$

Spondee, either  $\text{— —}$ , or  $\text{— —}$ .

Creticus, with two arses,  $\frac{\text{—}}{\text{—}} \cup \frac{\text{—}}{\text{—}}$ .

Bacchius,  $\cup \perp -$ .

Choriambus, which two arses,  $\text{—} \cup \cup \text{—}$ .

Ionicus a minore,  $\sim \sim \perp -$ .

Ionicus a majore, —  $\angle \cup \cup$ .

* A poetic theory, devised by the ancient grammarian Hephaestio, assumes that every possible combination of two, three, and four syllables, may form a metrical foot. These 'possible' feet have been carefully calculated (there are 4 dissyllabic combinations; 8 trisyllabic, and 16 tetrasyllabic), and specific names have been bestowed on each. Thus -- is called a Pyrrhicus; - - - a Tribrachys; - - - a Molossus; - - - an Anapaesticus; - - - - a Paeoniacus. There are four Paeons, according as one long syllable with three short ones occupies the first, second, third, or fourth place, there are four Epitrits, applying the same principle to feet of one short syllable with three long ones. The foot - - - - is called a Brachmus; - - - -, a Di trochæus; - - - -, a Dispondeus; - - - -, an Antispasmus. All this is mere theoretical speculation. We have only to deal with those feet actually employed by the Latin poets. These are the feet mentioned above, of which the Cretics, the Bacchus, and the two Ionics are of extremely rare occurrence.

Obs. Simple metres are chiefly composed of the following kinds of feet: 1) Iambic; 2) Trochaic; 3) Dactylic. Rarely are employed the Anapest, the Cretic, the Bacchic, and the two Ionics. The other feet do not form metres by themselves, and are only employed in mixed metres (see below).

§ 22. IAMBIC VERSES. In every Iambic verse, the short syllable of the Iambus (i. e. its thesis) in every odd foot (No. 1, 3, 5) may be replaced by a long syllable, so that a Spondee is substituted for the Iambus; and the long syllable of an Iambus (i. e. its arsis) may be replaced by two short syllables (a tribrachys,  $\sim \sim \sim$ , in any of the first five feet; a dactyl in No. 1 and 3; and an anapest in No. 1). All the substituted feet should be scanned and read like Iambic feet (see below). The most frequent of Iambic verses is the Trimeter acatalectic or senarius.

Obs. 1. The measure of the pure IAMBIC TRIMETER ACATALECTIC is

$\sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim$

as: Ea fm|pūdi|cūs | ét | vōrāx | ēt ā|lēō. Cat. 29, 11.

In the following line the first, third, and fifth feet are Spondees:

*Unxē*re mā|tres | Iūā|ad|ciētūm | foris. Hor. Ep. 17, 11.

In the following line a tribrachys ( $\sim \sim \sim$ ) stands in the third, and a spondee in the fifth foot:

Libēt jacēre mōdō sūb āntiqua mē|re. Hor. Ep. 2, 23.

(SCAN: libēt | jacē|rē mō|dō | sūb ān|tiquā | licē.)

The following verse has an anapest in the first and spondees in the third and fifth feet:

*Pō*st|itōsque vērmas dītis ēxamēn domūs. Hor. Ep. 2, 65.

In the following a dactyl stands in the first, and spondees in the third and fifth feet:

Aut ām|itē lē|vī rā|rā tēn|dīt rē|tia. Hor. Ep. 2, 33.

(SCAN: 'aut ām' | tē lē' etc.)

In the following, the third foot is a dactyl, the first and fifth feet being spondees:

Quo, quo, scelesti, ruitis, aut cur dexte|ris etc. Hor. Ep. 3, 1.

(SCAN: quo quō | scē|lēstī rui|tīs aut, etc.)

Obs. 2. An interesting species of the Iambic Trimeter Acatalectic is the CHOLIAMBUS or SCAZON (limping Iambus), in which a dactyl or a trochee takes place in the sixth foot, the sixth foot being always a trochee (or a spondee, with the arsis on the first syllable), while the fifth foot is by necessity an Iambus. The abrupt change of the rhythm in the sixth foot has a striking effect. This measure, which strictly belongs to the mixed metres, is used in Catullus 8; 22; 31; 51; 59; 113; 59.

*Misē*r, Cam|lē dē|sūis | trē|ō tūc.
Et quōd | vīdēs | pēis se pē|dītūm | dūcas.

Obs. 3. The Iambic Trimeter Acatalectic occurs in several of the Horatian poems, but as a measure by itself (i. e. recurring without any other kind of verse intervening), only in Ep. 17. It is the regular measure employed by Plautus, and in the ancient comedy and tragedy. But the metres of Plautus and Terence are frequently interspersed with other metres, and offer many considerable difficulties of their own. Comp. Plautus and Terence by C. F. W. Müller. Berlin, 1869.

Obs. 4. The following Iambic measures occur besides the trimeter acatalectic:

(a) The TETRAMETER CATALECTIC (used Cat. 45), as:

Quæ nunc | tuīs | ab un|guibus | reglū|tina ēt | remitte.

(b) The DIMETER HYPERCATALECTIC (occurring only as the third line of the Alcaic stanza (see below), as:

Si frāc|tūs fl|lūbā|tūr ōr|bis. Hor. Carm. 3, 3, 7.

(c) The TRIMETER CATALECTIC, used by Horace in combination with other verses (Carm. 1, 4; 2, 18), as:

Mēā | ren|det in | domō | lacū|nar. Hor. Carm. 2, 18, 2.

(d) The DIMETER ACATALECTIC, used by Horace in combination with the Trimeter Acatalectic, or with Hexameters (Ep. 1, 10; Ep. 14, 15), as:

Oblī|vīō|nem sēn|sibūs. Hor. Ep. 10, 1.

Ut prīs|ca gēns | mortā|liūm. Ib. Ep. 2, 2.

(e) The DIMETER CATALECTIC (the measure used by Anacreon) occurs in Latin only in the later poets (rarely), as:

Manū, | puēr, | loquā|ci. Petr. Frg. 2.

§ 23. TROCHAIC VERSES are rarely used by the Latin poets (except in certain passages of the tragedies and the comics, especially Terence). The trochees admit of substituted feet in the same way as the Iambi in the Iambic metres (§ 22).

Obs. The following two varieties of trochaic measures occur:

(a) TROCHAIC TETRAMETER CATALECTIC, occurring in a few epigrams of the Anthology, and in the Pervigilium Veneris, as:

Crās a|met qui | nūmquam a|māvit, | quīquē a|māvit | crās a|mēt.

Vēr no|vūm, ver | jān ca|nōrum, | vére | nātus | ōr|bis | ést.

The following lines are from Terentianus Maurus's didactic poem 'De litteris et metris', a composition in which all possible metres are used:

Nūlla | vōx hu|māna | cōstat | ābsque | séptem | lítte|rīs,

Rīte | vōca|lēs vo|cāvit | quās ma|gistra | Grāci|ā.

(b) TROCHAIC DIMETER CATALECTIC ( $\sim \sim | \sim \sim | \sim \sim$ ), occurs only once, in Hor. Carm. 2, 18 (alternately with the Iambic Trimeter Catalectic, without any substituted feet): Nōn ē|būr nē, quē aūrē|ūm.

§ 24. Of DACTYLIC VERSES only two are frequent: 1) the DACTYLIC HEXAMETER ACATALECTIC (generally called 'Hexameter', without any other addition), and the DACTYLIC PENTAMETER ACATALECTIC, generally called 'PENTAMETER', without any further addition. In dactylic verses no other feet can be substituted but Spondees. The last syllable of the last foot, of course, may be short (according to the general principle § 18), and hence a Trochee may appear as the last foot.

§ 25. The following is the metre of the Hexameter:

$\sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim | \sim \sim \sim$

The sixth foot must be always a Spondee (or Trochee). In all the other feet spondees may be substituted, except in the fifth, in which the substitution of a Spondee is very rare (generally for producing certain impressions on the mind of the reader). Hexameters, in which the fifth foot is a Spondee, are called Spondaic Hexameters (versus spondiacus). Hexameters are used, without any other verses, as the sole metre in epic poems. For their use in connection with other metres, see below (metrical schemes).

Obs. 1. The proportion of the spondees and dactyls in the hexameter chiefly depends on the taste of the poet. Hexameters merely consisting of spondees are extremely rare, and confined to the Ante-Augustan poets, as:

Olli | rēspōn|dēt rex | Al|ba, í long|ái. Enn. Frgm. Ann. 1.

Cíves | Rōma|nī tunc | fácti | sūnt Cam|pāni. Enn.

An cē|lūm no|bīs na|tura|ul|trō cor|rūptum. Lucr. 6, 1134.

Quis te | lēni|rēm no|bīs neu | cōna|rēre. Cat. 116, 3.

Obs. 2. When Spondaic Hexameters are exceptionally used, they must at least have a dactyl in the fourth foot, as:

Cūm soci|s na|tóque Pe|nātibus | ét mag|nīs dīs. Virg. Æn. 3, 12.

Cāra de|ūm sobo|lēs, mag|nūm Jovis | íncre|mētum. Ib. Ecl. 4, 49.

Cōstitit | átuē oca|līs Phrygi|ā ágmina | círcum|spēxit. Ib. Æn. 2, 68.

Obs. 3. Many dactyls in succession, express rapidity of the action described. Many spondees in succession are expressive of heavy and ponderous work:

Quádrupedánte pultrém sonitú quatit | ángula | cámpum. Virg. Æn. 8, 596.
 Illi in tē se se magná vi | bráchia | tollunt. Ib. Georg. 4, 174.

Obs. 1. The use of a single word at the end of a hexameter is rare, and often expressive of unexpected and strange events, as:

Dát latus. Insuper tūc enim ó praecipitis a qua mons. Virg. Æn. 1, 106.
 Parui in montes, nascitur pulchra las mas. Hor. A. P. 139.

Often, however, after a participle or adjective is used as the last word of a hexameter, as:

Ad quem | tūc | in ó sup plēx hū | vóibus | úsa st. Virg. Æn. 1, 64.

Obs. 5. The regular caesura in a hexameter is after the arsis of the third foot i. e. after the fifth mora: caesura penthemimeris, as:

Insonu | ere ca | vie | genitūque | dē | dēre ca | verna. Virg. Æn. 2, 53.

If a caesura penthemimeris cannot be employed, a double caesura is generally used, the first after the arsis of the second foot i. e. after the third mora; caesura trihemimeris; and the second after the arsis of the fourth foot caesura heptemimeris, as:

Inde | lo | cō | pater | Æne | ás | sic | órsus ab | álto :

Infan | dūm | re | gina | ju | bes | reno | vāre | dō | lōrem. Virg. Æn. 2, 2.

Sometimes either of the two last mentioned caesurae occur without the other. But in this instance generally another caesura is added after the first short syllable of the third foot (trochaic caesura), as:

Incipi | ūnt | agi | tāta | tu | méscere | et | áridus | ál | tis. Virg. G. 1, 357.

Sí | to | ra | dé | seru | ere | , | la | tēt | sub | clássibus | æ | quor. Ib. Æn. 4, 582.

Very rarely, a trochaic caesura occurs without any other caesura, as:

Spárgens | hú | mida | mélla | so | póricē | tū | que | pa | paver. Virg. Æn. 4, 186.

§ 26. The DACTYLIC PENTAMETER (generally named 'Pentameter' without any other addition) consists of two hexametric penthemimers joined together i. e. of two halves of a hexameter up to the caesura penthemimeris), forming the following scheme

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

In the first half of the pentameter, spondees may be substituted for the dactyls, but in the second half the two dactyls cannot be replaced by spondees. The first half must always end with a caesura, as:

Flébam | súcces | sú | póssē | cā | rēre | dō | lōs. Ov. H. 18, 202.

Né pos | sēs um | quā | m | , Cí | na, pe | ríre | fá | mé. Mart. 5, 79.

Obs. 1. The name Pentameter for the above-mentioned metre, is not in exact accordance with the nomenclature mentioned § 21. There are four dactyls + the two arses at the end of each penthemimer, which are counted for one dactyl. Or, the name may be explained by taking 'Pentameter' as equivalent to 'two Penthemimers'; one Penthemimer being = five half-metres, and hence two Penthemimers = five metres, a pentameter. The explanation of most prosodians, that the ancient pentameters end by a trochee, is extremely improbable. They overlook that in this instance the two anapests, at the end, would only have formed one metre together, so that the line, constituted in this way, would only have contained four metres.

Obs. 2. Pentameters are not used in a system by themselves, and always occur alternately with hexameters forming the elegiac distich, or the elegiac couplet. They are the almost exclusive form for epigrammatic and sententious poetry, also for that variety of lyric poetry which is called 'elegiac'. It is used by Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, Propertius, and Martialis; but not by Virgil and Horace.

§ 27. Other dactylic measures are 1) the Dactylic Tetrameter Acatalectic (— — — | — — — | — — — | — — —), used by Horace in combination with the hexameter (see the metrical schemes); 2) the Dactylic Trimeter Hypercatalectic (— — — | — — — | — — —), used by Ausonius as a continuous scheme; 3) The Dactylic Trimeter Catalectic (consisting of the second half of a Pentameter (— — — | — — — | —), used by Horace in combination with the Hexameter, as: Flúmina prætereúnt; 4) The Dactylic Dimeter Acatalectic or Adonic verse, consisting of the fifth and sixth feet of a Hexameter (— — — | — —), used by Horace as the fourth verse in the Sapphic stanza, as: Fúsee, pharétra.

§ 28. In ANAPESTIC verses, Spondees and Dactyls may be substituted without restriction. This measure is not used in the classical poets, but occurs in Seneca, and the later lyric poets (Claudianus, Ausonius, Prudentius, Boethius).

Obs. The following varieties of Anapestic verses are used:

1. The ANAPESTIC DIMETER ACATALECTIC:

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

Fúrt út | Phrygiúm | lugeát | Attin,
 Non ést | lacrimis | , Cassán | dra, modús,
 Quia quæ | patimúr | vicé | re modúm. Sen. Ag. 689.

2. The ANAPESTIC DIMETER CATALECTIC, or Paræmiac:

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

Véníént | clíð | æ | cūlā | quúm | jam,
 Sōcús | cālōr | ós | sá | rēv | sat. Prud. Cathem. 10, 37.

3. ANAPESTIC MONOMETER ACATALECTIC:

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

O flōs | jūvénúm,
 Spes | hie | ta | patris,
 Nec | cer | ta | tuæ
 Data | res | patriæ
 Rhetor | A | lethi. Auson. Prof. 6, 1.

§ 29. IONIC VERSES, consisting of Ionics a majore, or Ionics a minore, rarely occur. An interesting system of Ionics a minore,

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

which may be considered either as Tetrameters Acatalectic, or as two Dimeters Acatalectic, occurs in Hor. Carm. 3, 12, as:

Misérarum | st | nēque | amóri | dāre | lúdum | nēquē | dúlci.

Obs. Tetrameters catalectic, or Sotadean verses (formed from three Ionics a majore and one Ionics a minore, or four Ionics a minore, generally considered as having a falling rhythm,

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

occur in a few verses of Martial's, Petronius, and Terentianus Maurus, also in a fragment of Ennius. As a specimen, the following pretty line of Scaliger may serve:

Túto maris | frās videt | é litore | náta.

But it is extremely doubtful whether the Sotadean verses must not be considered as having a rising rhythm, thus:

— — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — — | — — —

§ 30. CRETIC and BACCHIC verses sometimes occur in interspersed lines, or in shorter, or longer periods, in the Comies, as, for instance, a CRETIC TETRAMETER ACATALECTIC, consisting of four Amphimacers (cretici):

Tántā vé | córdia | in | náta | cuí | quam | út | siét. Ter. Andr. 4, 12 foll.

5. The first Glyconian stanza (dicolon) consists of three Glyconians and a Pherecratean :

1 - 1 2 3 4 5 6 7
 1 - 1 2 3 4 5 6 7
 1 - 1 2 3 4 5 6 7
 1 - 1 2 3 4 5 6 7

It occurs in Cat. 34, but not in Horace.

§ 39. PENTASTICHA do not occur in Horace. But Catullus uses a Pentastichon dicolon (Second Glyconian) in the Epithalamium (Carm. 61), which consists of four Glyconians with a Pherecratean (see § 38 5).

END OF PART I

VOCABULARIES.

I. NOUNS OF THE FIRST DECLENSION.

|                                    |                                     |                                    |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| abstinentia, abstinence.    | conscientia, conscience.     | gloria, glory.              |
| abundantia, abundance.      | constantia, constancy,       | grammatica, grammar.        |
| adolescentia, youth, young  | firmness.                           | gratia, favor, influence.   |
| age.                               | continentia, abstinence.     | hasta, lance.               |
| advena, immigrant, stran-   | controversia, controversy,   | herba, plant.               |
| ger.                               | dispute, strife.             | historia, history.          |
| ærumna, hardship.           | contumacia, disobedience,    | homicida, murderer.         |
| agricola, farmer.           | obstinacy.                          | hora, hour.                 |
| agricultura, agriculture.   | contumelia, disgrace.        | ignavia, indolence.         |
| ala, wing.                  | conviva, guest, table-com-   | ignominia, disgrace.        |
| alauda, lark.               | panion.                             | ignorantia, ignorance.      |
| alienigena, foreigner.      | corona, crown.               | impensæ, expenses.          |
| amentia, folly.             | corruptela, corruption.      | imprudencia, imprudence.    |
| amicitia, friendship.       | culpa, guilt.                | incola, inhabitant.         |
| anima, breath.              | cura, care.                  | industria, industry.        |
| annona, provisions, grain.  | curia, court, senate-house.  | indulgentia, indulgence.    |
| aqua, water.                | custodia, custody, prison.   | infamia, infamy.            |
| aquila, eagle.              | dea, goddess.                | injuria, injury, wrong.     |
| ara, altar.                 | dementia, folly.             | injustitia, injustice.      |
| arrogantia, arrogance.      | desidia, laziness.           | innocentia, innocence.      |
| asseccla, follower.         | diligentia, diligence.       | inopia, want, poverty.      |
| astutia, cunning.           | distantia, distance.         | insula, island.             |
| audacia, boldness.          | disciplina, discipline.      | invidia, envy, hatred.      |
| avaritia, avarice.          | discordia, discord.          | ira,                               |
| barba, beard.               | doctrina, scholarship.       | iracundia, anger.           |
| Belga, Belgian.             | elegantia, elegance, beauty. | jactura, loss.              |
| benevolentia, benevolence   | eloquentia, eloquence.       | justitia, justice.          |
| bestia, beast.              | epistola, letter.            | lacrima, tear.              |
| bibliotheca, library.       | fabula, fable.               | læticia, gladness.          |
| blanditia, flattery.        | fallacia, intrigue, fallacy. | libra, pound.               |
| calumnia, slander.          | fama, fame, rumor.           | littera, letter.            |
| catena, chain, fetter.      | femina, female, woman.       | lingua, tongue, language.   |
| caterva, crowd, swarm.      | ferocia, wildness.           | luna, moon.                 |
| cauda, tail.                | fiducia, confidence.         | luxuria, luxury.            |
| causa, cause, reason, case. | figūra, figure, form.        | medecina, medicine, relief. |
| cella, storehouse.          | filia, daughter.             | memoria, memory.            |
| charta, paper.              | flamma, flame.               | mercatura, commerce.        |
| clava, club.                | forma, form.                 | militia, military service.  |
| clementia, clemency, mild-  | fossa, ditch.                | miseria, misery.            |
| ness.                              | fortuna, fortune.            | miser cordia, pity, sym-    |
| cœna, dinner.               | frequentia, frequency.       | pathy.                             |
| colonia, colony.            | fuga, flight.                | modestia, modesty.          |
| columna, column.            | Gallia, Gaul.                | mora, delay.                |
| comœdia, comedy.            | gallina, hen.                | natūra, nature.             |
| concordia, harmony.         | Germania, Germany.           | nauta, sailor.              | negligentia, negligence.

obedientia, obedience.
ora, shore.
opera, labor, effort.
patientia, patience.
patria, (one's) country.
pecunia, money.
perfidia, treachery.
perfuga, deserter.
perseverantia, perseverance.
philosophia, philosophy.
pirata, pirate.
pœna, punishment.
poëta, poet.
porta, gate.
præda, booty.

præstantia, excellence.
provincia, province.
prudentia, prudence.
puella, girl.
pugna, battle.
rapina, robbery.
regina, queen.
regula, rule.
ripa, bank (of a river).
rosa, rose.
sævitia, cruelty.
sagitta, arrow.
sapientia, wisdom.
schola, school.
scientia, knowledge.
scriba, scribe.
sella, chair.

sententia, sentence, opinion.
silva, forest.
statua, statue.
stella, star.
superbia, pride.
tabula, table, picture.
terra, earth, country, land.
tragedia, tragedy.
tristitia, sadness.
unda, wave.
venia, permission, forgiveness.
via, way, road.
victoria, victory.
vigilantia, vigilance.
vita, life.
tutela, protection.

II. NOUNS OF THE SECOND DECLENSION.

1. WITH THE ENDINGS us AND um.

acervus, heap.
adversarius, adversary, enemy.
æmulus, rival.
ærarium, treasury.
ævum, age (period of time).
amicus, friend.
animus, soul, mind, courage.
annulus, ring.
annus, year.
argumentum, argument, proof.
artificium, artifice, trick.
aurum, gold.
auxilium, help, assistance.
avus, grandfather.
barbarus, barbarian.
bellum, war.
beneficium, benefit, favor.
brachium, arm.
calamus, reed, pen.
campus, field.
candidatus, candidate.
Capitolium, the Capitol.
captivus, prisoner.
cerasus, cherry-tree.
cerebrum, brain.
cibus, food.
circulus, circle.
cælum, heaven.
collegium, college, guild, board.
commodum, advantage.
commercium, commerce.

consilium, plan, advice, purpose, measure.
consortium, company.
convicium, abuse.
decretum, decree.
delictum, misdeemeanor.
desiderium, desire.
letimentum, loss, damage.
digitus, a finger.
discipulus, scholar, disciple.
documentum, evidence.
dolus, fraud.
dominus, master.
domus, house.
donum, gift, present.
equus, horse.
excidium, { destruction.
exitium, }.
exemplum, example.
fatum, fate.
filius, son.
flagitium, crime.
fluvius, river.
forum, market-place (the place for judicial business in Rome).
fragmentum, fragment, piece.
frumentum, grain, provision.
fundamentum, foundation.
fundus, estate.
furtum, theft.

gaudium, joy.
Germanus, a German.
gladius, sword.
humus, ground.
imperium, empire, power.
incendium, conflagration.
inceptum, undertaking.
ingenium, mind, genius, talent.
inimicus, enemy.
initium, beginning.
Italus, Italian.
Judæus, Jew.
iudicium, judgment.
jugum, yoke.
jumentum, horse (draft).
jussum, command, behest.
Latinus, Latin.
lectus, bed.
legatum, bequest.
legatus, ambassador.
letum, death (violent).
libertus, freedman.
locus, place.
lucus, grove.
lupus, wolf.
malum, evil.
medicus, physician.
membrum, limb.
mendacium, falsehood.
mendicus, beggar.
meritum, merit.
metallum, metal.
miraculum, miracle.
monumentum, monument.

momentum, force, importance.
morbus, disease, sickness.
modus, manner, means.
mundus, world.
munimentum, fortification.
murus, wall.
negotium, business, affair.
numerus, number.
nummus, coin.
nuntius, messenger, message, news.
oculus, eye.
odium, hatred.
officium, duty, service.
oppidanus, inhabitant (of a town).
oppidum, town.
opprobrium, reproach.
ornamentum, ornament.
otium, leisure.
oraculum, oracle.
patricius, patrician.
peccatum, sin, offence.
pertugium, refuge.
periculum, danger.
philosophus, philosopher.
plaustrum, wagon.

plebejus, plebeian.
Pœnus, Carthaginian. pōpulus, people.
pōpulus, poplar.
præceptum, precept.
præfectus, prefect.
præmium, reward.
præsidium, garrison.
pratium, meadow.
pretium, value, price.
principium, principle.
prælium, battle.
promissum, promise.
propinquus, relative.
propositum, purpose.
regnum, kingdom.
reus, accused.
remedium, remedy.
Romānus, Roman.
saxum, rock.
scutum, shield.
secretum, secret.
sepulcrum, grave.
servus, slave.
sicarius, assassin.
Siculus, Sicilian.
signum, sign, signal, station.
socius, ally, companion.

solum, soil.
somnia, dream.
somnia, sleep.
Spartānus, Spartan.
spectaculum, sight.
stilus, pen, pencil.
stimulus, spur.
stipendium, pay, fee.
studium, zeal, effort, study.
suffragium, vote.
taurus, steer.
tectum, roof.
templum, temple.
testimonium, testimony.
tribūnus, tribune (representative of the people).
triumphus, triumph.
tyrannus, tyrant.
vadum, ford.
vallum, rampart.
venenum, poison.
verbum, word.
vicinus, neighbor.
vicus, village, street.
vinculum, bond, chain.
vinum, wine.
vitium, vice, fault.
votum, vow.
vulgus, mob.

2. R-STEMS.

Afer, African.
ager, field.
adulter, adulterer.
aper, boar.
arbitr, umpire.
armiger, armor-bearer.
auster, south-wind.
cancer, crab.
caper, goat.

coluber, serpent.
cultor, knave.
faber, mechanic.
gener, son-in-law.
liber, book.
liberi, children.
magister, teacher.
minister, assistant.
oleaster, wild olive.

onager [onagrus], wild ass.
pinaster, wild pine.
puer, boy.
presbyter [ecclesiastical Latin], elder.
signifer, standard-bearer.
socer, father-in-law.
vesper, evening.
vir, man.

III. NOUNS OF THE THIRD DECLENSION.

adolescens, young man.
aër, air.
æs, bronze, brass.
ætas, age.
amor, love.
animal, animal.
anser, goose.
apis, bee.
arbor, tree.
ars, art.
artifex, artist.
arx, castle.
Atheniensis, Athenian.

auctor, author.
auctoritas, authority.
auris, ear.
avis, bird.
bos, ox, cow.
brevitas, shortness.
cadaver, corpse.
cædes, murder, slaughter.
calamitas, disaster.
calcar, spur.
calor, heat.
caput, head, capital.
carbo, charcoal.

carcer, prison.
carmen, poem.
caro, flesh, meat.
celeritas, swiftness.
certamen, strife, struggle.
civis, citizen.
civitas, state, city.
clades, defeat.
clamor, shouting.
classis, fleet.
clavis, key.
cognomen, surname.
collis, hill.

color, color.
comes, companion.
conditio, ambition.
conjuratio, conspiracy.
consuetudo, habit, custom.
consul, consul [one of the two chief-magistrates of Rome].
cor, heart.
corpus, body.
crus, leg.
custos, guard, guardian.
defensor, defender.
dens, tooth.
difficultas, difficulty.
dignitas, dignity.
disputatio, discussion.
dolor, pain.
dux, leader, commander.
emptio, purchase.
emptor, purchaser, buyer.
eques, (Roman) knight, horseman.
error, mis-take.
excusatio, excuse.
expeditio, expedition.
facinus, deed.
factio, party, faction.
falx, sickle.
fames, hunger.
favor, favor.
febris, fever.
fel, bile, gall.
fins, limit, end, boundary.
flamen, flamen [PRIEST OF A SPECIAL DEITY]. flos, flower.
flumen, river.
foedus, treaty.
fons, fountain, source.
fortitudo, bravery.
frater, brother.
fraus, fraud.
frigus, cold.
frons (tis), forehead, front.
frons (dis), foliage, leaves.
frux, field fruit.
fulgur, lightning.
fulmen, lightning.
Fulmen, the lightning that STRIKES; fulgur,

the lightning that AP-PEARS.
funis, rope.
funus, funeral.
fur, thief.
furor, fury.
fustis, club.
gens, people, nation, tribe.
genus, kind, race, gender.
gravitas, weight, dignity, gravity.
grex, herd.
haruspex, soothsayer.
hereditas, inheritance.
heres, heir, heiress.
hiems, winter.
homo, man.
honos, honor.
hostis, enemy, foe.
humanitas, humanity.
ignis, fire.
imago, image.
imber, shower.
imperator, general.
infans, child.
interrogatio, question.
iter, march, journey, road.
juvenis, youth, young man.
juventus, youth, young age.
labor, labor, hardship.
lac, milk.
lapis, stone.
laus, praise.
legio, legion.
lepus, hare.
lex, law.
libertas, liberty.
libido, passion.
lis, lawsuit.
litus, coast.
longitudo, length.
lux, light.
magnitudo, greatness.
margo, margin.
mas, male.
mater, mother.
mens, mind.
merces, pay, wages.
merx, ware.
messis, harvest.

miles, soldier.
mons, mountain.
mors, death.
mos, habit, custom.
mulier, woman.
multitudo, multitude.
munus, gift.
mus, mouse.
natio, nation.
navis, ship.
nix, snow.
nomen, name.
nox, night.
numen, deity.
nux, nut.
obses, hostage.
obsidio, siege.
occasio, occasion.
onus, burden.
opinio, opinion.
opportunitas, opportunity.
opus, work.
orator, orator.
orbis, circle.
ordo, order, rank.
origo, origin.
os (oris), mouth.
os (ossis), bone.
ovis, sheep.
palus, marsh.
panis, bread.
parens, parent.
paries, wall (of a house).
pars, part, party.
pater, father.
paupertas, poverty.
pavor, trembling.
pax, peace.
pecten, comb.
pectus, breast.
pecus (edis), head of cattle.
pecus (oris), cattle in the ABSTRACT.
pedes, foot-soldier.
pes, foot.
piscis, fish.
plebs, the Plebeians.
pondus, weight.
pons, bridge.
pontifex, chief-priest.
praeceptor, teacher.

<sup>1</sup> Adversarius, a POLITICAL or LITERARY ENEMY; inimicus, a PRIVATE enemy; hostis, a PUBLIC enemy.
<sup>2</sup> Liberi are one's own children; infantes are children in general, from the FIRST to the SEVENTH year.
<sup>3</sup> Mulier is opposed to vir; femina to mas.
<sup>4</sup> Natio is a FOREIGN (generally barbarous) nation. Gens is nation in GENERAL.

praedo, robber.
princeps, chief.
pulcritudo, beauty.
pulvinar, couch, cushion.
pulvis, dust.
quaestio, question, trial.
quies, repose.
radix, root.
ratio, system, method, reason.
regio, region.
religio, reverence, conscientiousness, religion.
rex, king.
rus, country.
sacerdos, priest.
sal, salt.
salus, welfare.
sanguis, blood.
scelus, crime.
scriptor, writer.

securis, axe.
sedes, seat.
seges, crop [standing].
senator, senator.
senectus, old age.
senex, old man.
sermo, language, speech.
societas, company.
sol, sun.
soror, sister.
sors, lot.
stercus, manure.
sus, swine.
suspicio, suspicion.
temeritas, rashness.
tempestas, storm.
tempus, time.
timor, fear.
traditio, surrender, delivery.
turrus, tower.

tussis, cough.
urbs, city.
utilitas, usefulness.
uxor, wife.
valetudo, health.
vallis, valley.
vas, vasis, vessel.
vas, vadis, bondsman.
vates, seer.
vectigal, tax.
ver, spring.
veritas, truth.
vestis, garment.
virgo, virgin.
virtus, bravery, virtue.
vis, force, power, violence.
voluptas, pleasure.
vox, voice, word.
vulnus, wound.

IV. NOUNS OF THE FOURTH DECLENSION.

acus, needle.
aspectus, sight.
aditus, access, approach.
ambitus, bribery [for obtaining OFFICE].
anus, old woman.
appetitus, desire.
arens, arch.
auditus, hearing.
cantus, song.
casus, accident, case.
census, census.
cœtus, assembly.
concursum, concourse.
conspicuum, sight.
consulatus, consulship.
cultus, culture.
currus, wagon.
cursus, course.
delectus, choice, draft.
equitatus, cavalry.
exercitus, army.
exitus, issue, end.
fletus, weeping.
fluctus, flood.
fremitus, noise.
fructus, fruit.
gemitus, wailing.
gestus, bearing.

gradus, degree.
gustus, taste.
habitus, bearing, plight.
ictus, stroke.
impetus, attack, violence.
intellectus, intelligence.
interitus, destruction.
jactus, loss.
lacus, lake.
luctus, mourning.
lusus, play.
luxus, luxury.
magistratus, magistrate.
manus, hand, band.
metus, fear.
motus, motion.
nurus, daughter-in-law.
nutus, hint.
occasus, setting.
olfactus, smell.
ortus, rising.
partus, birth.
penus, provisions.
passus, step.
porticus, portico.
portus, harbor.
potus, drink.
principatus, supremacy.
progressus, progress.

quaestus, gain.
querens, oak.
questus, complaint.
reditus, return.
saltus, forest.
senatus, senate.
sensus, sense.
sexus, sex.
sinus, bosom, gulf.
situs, situation.
socrus, mother-in-law.
specus, cave.
spiritus, breath, spirit.
status, state.
strepitus, noise.
sumtus, expense.
tactus, touch.
tonitrus, thunder.
tribunatus, tribunate.
tribus, tribe.
tumultus, tumult.
usus, use.
versus, verse.
vestitus, attire.
victus, sustenance.
visus, sight.
vultus, glance, mien.

V. NOUNS OF THE FIFTH DECLENSION.

acies, keenness, line of battle.
barbaries, rudeness.

caesaries, head of hair.
canities, hoariness.
caries, rottenness.

congeries, heap, pile.
dies, day.
diluvies, deluge.

effigies, image.
 eluvies, washing away, inundation.
 facies, face.
 fides, faith.
 glacies, smoothness, ice.
 ingluvies, gluttony.
 luxuries, luxury.
 macies, leanness.

materies, material, timber.
 meridies, midday.
 molities, effeminacy.
 mundities, cleanness.
 perniciēs, destruction.
 planities, plain.
 progenies, lineage, progeny.
 rabies, fury, madness.

res, thing, affair.
 sanies, bloody matter.
 seabies, itch.
 segnities, laziness.
 series, series, race.
 species, form, shape.
 spēs, hope.
 superficies, surface.

VI. PLURALIA TANTUM.

1. FIRST DECLENSION.

angustiae, narrows, narrow places.
 argutiae, wit.
 Athēnae, Athens.
 bigae, two-horse chariot.
 Calendae, the first of the month.
 cunae, cradle.
 deliciae, delight.
 divitiae, riches.
 exenbiae, watches, sentinels.
 exsequiae, funeral.
 exuviae, spoils.

facetiae, pleasantry.
 feriae, vacation.
 indutiae, armistice.
 inferiae, sacrifices in honor of the dead.
 inimicitiae, enmity.
 insidiae, ambuscade.
 lapicidinae, quarry.
 manubiae, booty.
 minae, threat.
 Nonaē, Nones (the 5th or 7th of the month).
 nugae, non-sense.
 nundinae, market.

nuptiae, wedding.
 parietinae, old walls.
 phaleriae, trappings.
 quadrigae, four-horse chariot.
 reliquiae, remains.
 salinae, salt-works.
 scalae, ladder.
 scopae, broom.
 Syracūsae, Syracuse.
 tenebrae, darkness.
 Thebae, Thebes.
 tricae, trifles.
 valvae, folding doors.

2. SECOND DECLENSION.

arma, arms.
 armamenta, armament.
 cancelli, balustrades.
 cibaria, victuals.
 clathri, trellis.
 codicilli, note-book, writings.

crepundia, rattle.
 cunabula, cradle.
 exta, intestina, entrails.
 fasti, calendar.
 lamenta, wailing, lamentation.

liberi, children.
 praecordia, diaphragm.
 serta, garlands.
 spolia, spoils.
 virgulta, bushes.

3. THIRD DECLENSION.

Alpes, Alps.
 altaria, altar.
 ambages, evasion, digression.
 compedes, fetter.
 casces, hunter's net.
 cervices, neck.
 fauces, throat, defiles.
 fides, lyre, lute.
 fraces, dregs of oil.

ilia, flank (of the body).
 lautia, presents to ambassadors.
 lemures, spectres.
 majores, ancestors.
 manes, shades.
 moenia, walls (of a city).
 munia, official duties.
 nares, nostrils.
 optimates, aristocracy.

penites, household gods.
 preces, prayer.
 proceres, nobles.
 Quirites, Romans.
 renes, kidneys.
 sordes, filth.
 tormina, colic pains.
 vepres, thorns.
 verbera, scourging.
 viscera, entrails.

4. FOURTH DECLENSION.

artus, limbs.

Idus, the Ides, (18th or 15th of the month.)
 Quinquātrus, a festival of Minerva.

VII. HETEROLOGICAL NOUNS.

1. FIRST DECLENSION.

SINGULAR.

aqua, water.
 copia, abundance.
 cupidia, daintiness.
 fortuna, fortune.
 gratia, favor, influence, thanks.

littera, letter (of the alphabet).

opera, effort, labor.

PLURAL.

† aquae, medicinal springs.
 † copiae, troops.
 cupidiae [cupedia, drum] dainties.
 fortunae, riches.
 gratiae, thanks [only in the phrase 'gratias agere,' to return thanks].
 † litterae, epistle, papers, sciences, literature.
 operae, workmen.

2. SECOND DECLENSION.

auxilium, help.
 bonum, a good.
 cibus, food.
 castrum, castle.
 epulum, banquet.
 hortus, garden.
 impedimentum, impediment.
 ludus, play, game.
 rostrum, beak.

auxilia, resources, auxiliary troops.
 bona, goods, property.
 cibi, victuals.
 castra, camp.
 epulae, dishes (on the table).
 † horti, park.
 † impedimenta, baggage.
 † ludi, the public games.
 † rostra, the Rostra (stage for speakers.)

3. THIRD DECLENSION.

aedes, temple.
 carcer, prison.
 facultas, faculty.
 natalis, birth day.
 (ops) opis, help.
 pars, part.
 sal, salt.
 vis, power, force.

† aedes, aedium, house.
 carceres, barriers of a race-course.
 † facultates, property, means.
 natales, parentage.
 opes, power, wealth.
 † partes, party.
 sales, witticisms.
 vires, strength.

VIII. MOVABLE ADJECTIVES.

1. WITH THE ENDING us.

absurdus, absurd.
 accuratus, accurate.
 acerbus, bitter, hard (of pains).
 acutus, acute, pointed, sharp.
 adversus, adverse.
 aegrotus, sick.
 aequus, even, fair.
 aeternus, eternal.
 alienus, strange, foreign.
 altus, deep, high.
 ambiguus, ambiguous.
 amicus, friendly.
 amplus, ample.
 angustus, narrow.
 antiquus, ancient, old.
 apertus, open.
 aptus, apt, fit.
 arduus, hard, difficult.
 arenosus, sandy.

aridus, dry.
 assiduus, assiduous, zealous.
 attentus, attentive.
 augustus, august, venerable.
 aureus, golden.
 beatus, happy.
 benevolus, benevolent.
 benignus, kind, mild.
 bonus, good.
 caecus, blind.
 calidus, hot.
 callidus, crafty.
 carus, dear.
 castus, chaste. cautus, cautious.
 celsus, high (of trees, masts, &c.) certus, certain.
 clarus, noble, renowned.

contentus, contented.
 contrarius, contrary, adverse.
 crassus, thick.
 cruentus, bloody.
 cupidus, desirous, eager.
 decorus, decent, honorable.
 densus, dense.
 dignus, worthy.
 disertus, eloquent.
 diversus, different.
 divinus, divine.
 doctus, learned.
 dubius, doubtful.
 durus, hard (for the touch).
 egenus, poor, needy.
 egregius, excellent.
 erroneus, erroneous.
 exiguus, small.
 eximius, excellent.

† The plurals thus marked occur also in significations, answering their SINGULAR meanings.

exitiosus, pernicious.
 exterus, { foreign, exter externus, { nul.
 falsus, false.
 fecundus, fertile.
 ferus, wild.
 fessus, tired.
 fidus, faithful.
 finitimus, neighboring.
 firmus, firm.
 fœdus, abominable.
 flagitiosus, criminal.
 frigidus, cold.
 fructuosus, profitable.
 funestus, pernicious.
 furiosus, furious.
 futurus, future.
 generosus, noble, generous.
 gloriosus, glorious, boastful.
 Græcus, Grecian, Greek. gratus, thankful, pleasant.
 honestus, honest, virtuous, honorable.
 humanus, humane.
 idoneus, fit, adapted.
 ignarus, ignorant.
 ignavus, lazy, cowardly.
 igneus, fiery.
 ignominiosus, disgraceful.
 imbecillus, weak.
 immensus, immense.
 immodicus, immoderate.
 immundus, unclean.
 immutatus, unchanged, unchangeable.
 imperitus, inexperienced.
 improbus, impious.
 inauditus, unheard of.
 incertus, uncertain.
 incognitus, unknown.
 indignus, unworthy.
 indoctus, unlearned.
 ineptus, absurd.
 inexpectatus, unexpected.
 infestus, hostile.
 infinitus, infinite.
 ingeniosus, ingenious.
 ingratus, ungrateful.
 iniquus, unfair.
 injustus, unjust.
 insanus, insane.
 insperatus, unhoped for.
 intestinus, inner, internal.
 inultus, unrevenge.
 inveteratus, inveterate.
 invictus, invincible.
 invidus, envious.
 invitus, unwilling.

æger, sick.
 asper, rough.

iracundus, { angry.
 iratus, {
 irritus, useless, ineffectual.
 jejūnus, dry, erroneous.
 jucundus, pleasant, agreeable.
 justus, just.
 laboriosus, industrious.
 laetus, glad.
 laevus, left (of the hand or side).
 Latinus, Latin.
 latus, broad.
 ligneus, wooden.
 longus, long.
 madidus, wet.
 maestus, sad, sorrowful.
 magnificus, magnificent, splendid.
 magnus, great, large.
 malus, bad.
 manifestus, manifest.
 maritimus, maritime, naval.
 medius, middle.
 mirus, wonderful.
 moderatus, moderate (full of moderation).
 modicus, moderate, incon siderable.
 modestus, modest.
 molestus, unpleasant.
 moribundus, dying.
 mundus, clean.
 mutuus, mutual.
 necessarius, necessary.
 necopinatus, unforeseen.
 nefarius, nefarious.
 novus, new.
 noxius, hurtful, injurious.
 nudus, naked, bare.
 obscurus, obscure, dark.
 occultus, hidden, secret.
 opulentus, wealthy.
 otiosus, idle.
 paratus, ready, prepared.
 parcus, economical.
 parvus, small, little.
 paternus, paternal.
 peregrinus, foreign.
 perfidus, perfidious, treacherous.
 periculōsus, dangerous.
 peritus, experienced.
 perniciosus, pernicious.
 perpetuus, perpetual.
 perspicuus, clear, perspicuous.
 placidus, gentle, mild.

2. R-STEMS.

ater, black.
 aurifer, carrying gold.

pius, pious.
 plenus, full.
 præcipuus, principal, especial.
 præclarus, renowned, excellent.
 pretiosus, valuable.
 privatus, private.
 probus, honest.
 prodigus, prodigal.
 profanus, profane.
 propinquus, near.
 proprius, proper, peculiar.
 publicus, public.
 purus, pure.
 quietus, quiet.
 rarus, rare.
 rectus, right, correct.
 regius, royal.
 religiosus, conscientious.
 ridiculus, ridiculous.
 rotundus, round.
 Romanus, Roman. saevus, cruel.
 salvus, safe, healthy.
 sanctus, holy.
 sanus, sound.
 secretus, secret.
 securus, safe, secure.
 seditiosus, rebellious.
 sedulus, active, busy.
 sempiternus, eternal.
 serenus, serene, placid.
 severus, severe.
 sobrius, sober.
 sordidus, mean, vulgar.
 speciosus, plausible.
 studiosus, zealous.
 stultus, foolish.
 strenuus, brave.
 subitus, sudden.
 superbus, proud.
 tardus, slow.
 temerarius, rash.
 tempestivus, timely.
 timidus, timid.
 tranquillus, tranquil.
 universus, universal, whole.
 urbanus, polite.
 validus, strong.
 vanus, vain.
 varius, various.
 vastus, vast, waste.
 verecundus, respectful.
 verus, true.
 vetustus, old.
 violentus, violent.
 voluntarius, voluntary.

creber, frequent.
 creper, dusky.

dexter, right (of the hand or side).
 frugifer, fruit-bearing.
 glaber, smooth.
 impiger, active.
 integer, unhurt, complete.
 lacer, torn.
 liber, free.
 macer, lean.

miser, wretched.
 niger, black.
 pestifer (pestiferus), pestiferous.
 piger, lazy.
 prosper (more frequent), prosperous.
 pulcher, beautiful.
 ruber, red.

sacer, sacred.
 satur, sated.
 scaber, scurfy.
 sinister, left.
 tæter (teter), abominable.
 tener, tender.
 vafēr, crafty.

IX. ADJECTIVES OF COMMON GENDER.

absens, absent.
 acer, sharp.
 admirabilis, admirable.
 agrestis, rustic, uncultivated.
 alacer, cheerful.
 anceps, doubtful.
 Atheniensis, Athenian.
 atrox, atrocious.
 audax, bold.
 brevis, short.
 celebs, unmarried.
 campester, level [of a country].
 celeberrimus, frequented, populous, renowned.
 celer, quick.
 civilis, civil.
 clemens, merciful.
 comis, polite.
 communis, common.
 compos, having control over.
 concors, harmonious.
 constans, constant.
 crudelis, cruel.
 degener, d-generate.
 demens, insane.
 difficilis, difficult.
 diligens, diligent.
 dispar, unequal, dissimilar.
 dissimilis, dissimilar.
 dives, rich.
 docilis, docile.
 dulcis, sweet.
 equester, equestrian.
 expertus, inexperienced, ignorant [of].
 facilis, easy.
 fallax, fallacious.
 familiaris, familiar.
 fatalis, fatal.
 felix, happy.
 ferox, ferocious, defiant.
 fertilis, fertile.
 fidelis, faithful.
 fortis, brave.
 frequens, frequent.
 gracilis, slender.

gravis, heavy, serious, grave.
 hebes, dull.
 Hispaniensis, Hispanian. hostilis, hostile.
 humilis, low, humble.
 ignobilis, ignoble.
 illustris, illustrious.
 immemor, unmindful.
 immobilis, immovable.
 immortalis, immortal.
 impatiens, impatient.
 impar, unequal.
 impotens, powerless.
 imprudens, imprudent.
 inanis, empty.
 incredibilis, incredible.
 incolumis, unhurt.
 inermis, unarmed.
 iners, inactive, sluggish.
 infelix, unhappy.
 ingens, enormous.
 innocens, innocent.
 innumerabilis, innumerable.
 inops, helpless.
 insignis, distinguished.
 insolens, insolent.
 inutilis, useless.
 laudabilis, praiseworthy.
 lenis, mild.
 levis, light.
 liberalis, liberal.
 locuples, wealthy.
 memor, mindful, remembering.
 memorabilis, remarkable.
 militaris, military.
 mirabilis, wonderful.
 mitis, mild.
 mobilis, movable.
 mortalis, mortal.
 mortalis, unmanly.
 naturalis, natural.
 navalis, naval.
 nobilis, noble.
 paluster, swampy.
 par, equal.
 particeps, partaking, participating.

patiens, patient.
 pauper, poor.
 pedester, pedestrian.
 præceps, sleep, head-ling.
 præcox, precocious.
 præsens, present.
 præstans, excellent.
 probabilis, probable.
 prudens, prudent.
 pubes, adult.
 puerilis, puerile.
 recens, recent, new.
 rudis, rough, raw, ignorant.
 sagax, sagacious.
 saluber, wholesome.
 salutaris, {
 sapiens, wise.
 silvestris, woody.
 similis, similar.
 simplex, simple.
 solers, ingenious.
 sospes, safe, sound and safe, unhurt.
 sterilis, sterile.
 suavis, pleasant.
 sublimis, sublime.
 superstes, surviving.
 supplex, submissive, suppliant.
 tenuis, thin, poor, scanty.
 terrestris, belonging to earth.
 terribilis, terrible.
 tristis, sad, sorrowful.
 turpis, disgraceful.
 uber, rich [of things].
 utilis, useful.
 vehemens, vehement.
 velox, quick.
 verisimilis, probable.
 versicolor, particolored.
 vetus, old.
 viridis, green.
 virilis, manly.
 volucer, winged.
 vorax, voracious.
 vulgaris, vulgar.

X. DEFINITE NUMERALS.

1. CARDINALS.

*Adjectives.*unus, a, um, one.2. II. duo, æ, o, two.ambo, æ, o, both.tres, tria, three.4. IV. quattuor, (quatuor).5. V. quinque.6. VI. sex.7. VII. septem.8. VIII. octo.9. IX. novem.10. X. decem.11. XI. undecim.12. XII. duodecim.13. XIII. tredecim.14. XIV. quattuordecim.15. XV. quindecim, or decem et sex.16. XVI. sedecim, or decem et septem.17. XVII. septendecim, or decem et octo.18. XVIII. decem et octo, or duodeviginti.19. XIX. decem et novem, or undeviginti.20. XX. viginti.21. XXI. unus et viginti, or viginti unus.22. XXII. duo et viginti, or viginti duo.23. XXIII. tres et viginti, or viginti tres.*Adverbs.*semel, once.bis, twice.ter, three times.

quater.

quinquies.

sexies.

septies.

octies.

novies.

decies.

undecies.

duodecies.

tredecies.

quaterdecies.

quinquedecies.

sexquedecies, or sedecies.

septisedecies.

2. DISTRIBUTIVES.

Adjectives.

singuli, æ, a one to each.

bini, æ, a,

two to each.

terni [trini].

quaterni

quini.

seni.

septēni.

octōni.

novēni.

deni.

undēni.

duodēni.

terni deni.

quaterni deni.

quini deni.

seni deni.

septēni deni.

2. ORDINALS.

*Adjectives.*primus, a, um, the first,prior, first of two, former.secundus, the second, alter,the other, second.

tertius.

quartus.

quintus.

sextus.

septimus.

octāvus.

nonus.

decimus.

undecimus.

duodecimus.

tertius decimus.

quartus decimus.

quintus decimus.

sextus decimus.

septimus decimus.

duodevicesimus or octāvus

decimus

undevicesimus, or nonus

decimus

vicesimus [vigesimus].

unus et vicesimus or primus et vicesimus.

alter et vicesimus, or secundus et vicesimus.

tertius et vicesimus

1. CARDINALS.

*Adjectives.*quattuor et viginti, or viginti quattuor.

25. XXV. quinque et viginti.26. XXVI. sex et viginti.27. XXVII. septem et viginti.28. XXVIII. duodeviginti or octo et viginti.

29. XXIX. undeviginti, or novem et viginti.

30. XXX. triginta.40. XL. quadraginta.50. L. quinquaginta.60. LX. sexaginta.70. LXX. septuaginta.80. LXXX. octoginta.90. XC. nonaginta.100. C. centum.200. CC. ducenti, a, a.300. CCC. trecenti, a, a.400. CCC. quadringenti, æ, a.500. D. quingenti, æ, a.600. DC. sexcenti, æ, a.700. DCC. septingenti, æ, a.800. DCC. octingenti, æ, a.900. DCCC. nongenti, æ, a.1000. M (ciro).2000. MM or cicicic.

3000. MMM.10000. CCCC.100000. CCCCC.duo millia, or bis mille.

tria millia.

decem millia.

centum millia.

2. DISTRIBUTIVES.

Adjectives.

vicēni quaterni.

vicēni quini.

vicēni seni.

vicēni septēni

vicēni octōni.

vicēni novēni.

triciēni.

quadrageēni.

sexageēni.

septuagēni.

octogēni.

nonagēni.

centēni.

ducentēni.

trecentēni.

quingēni.

sexcentēni.

septingēni.

octingēni.

nongēni.

singula millia.

bina millia.

terna millia.

dena millia.

centena millia.

3. ORDINALS.

Adjectives.

quartus et vicesimus.

quintus et vicesimus.

sextus et vicesimus.

septimus et vicesimus.

duodevicesimus, or octā-vus et vicesimus.

undevicesimus, or nonus

et vicesimus.

tricesimus.

quadragesimus.

quinquagesimus.

sexagesimus.

septuagesimus.

octogesimus.

nonagesimus.

centesimus.

ducentesimus.

trecentesimus.

quadragesimus.

quingentesimus.

sexcentesimus.

septingentesimus.

octingentesimus.

nongentesimus.

millesimus.

bis millesimus.

ter millesimus.

decies millesimus.

centies millesimus.

4. ORDINAL ADVERBS.

| Local.  | Temporal.                             |
|---|---------------------------------------|
| primo, in the first place,                      | primum, at first, for the first time. |
| secundo, deinde, in the second place, secondly. | iterum, for the second time, again.   |
| tertio, in the third place, thirdly.            | tertium, for the third time.          |
| quarto, in the fourth place, fourthly.          | quartum, for the fourth time.         |
| quinto, &c.                                     | quintum, &c.                          |
| —   | sextum.                               |
| —   | septimum.                             |
| —   | octavum.                              |
| —   | decimum.                              |

5. MULTIPLICATIVES.

|             |  |
|-------------|--|
| simplex,    | simplus, simple, single.                 |
| duplex,     | duplus, double, twofold, twice as much.  |
| triplex,    | triplus, threefold, three times as much. |
| quadriplex, | quadriplus, fourfold, &c.                |
| quintuplex, | quintuplus.                              |
| —           | —  |
| septemplex, | septuplus.                               |
| —           | octuplus.                                |
| decemplex,  | —  |
| centuplex,  | —  |

XI. VERBS OF THE FIRST CONJUGATION

1. ACTIVES.

|                                 |                                    |                                       |
|---------------------------------|------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|
| Abalienare, to estrange.        | concremare, burn (some-thing).     | deseerare, desecrate.                 |
| abrogare, repeal.               | condemnare, condemn, convict.      | desiderare, desire.                   |
| abundare, abound.               | condonare, pardon, forgive.        | designare, designate.                 |
| accommodare, adapt.             | confirmare, confirm.               | desperare, despair.                   |
| accusare, accuse.               | conjurare, conspire.               | destinare, destine.                   |
| adjudicare, award.              | consecrare, consecrate.            | devorare, devour.                     |
| adjuvare, help, assist.         | conservare, preserve.              | dijudicare, decide.                   |
| adorare, adore, worship.        | contaminare, stain, disgrace.      | dimicare, contest, fight.             |
| adoptare, adopt.                | continuare, continue.              | disputare, dispute.                   |
| aedificare, build.              | conturbare, disturb.               | disperare, disperse.                  |
| aestimare, estimate, value.     | convocare, convoke, call together. | disturbare, disturb.                  |
| ambulare, walk.                 | coronare, crown.                   | ditare, enrich.                       |
| amplificare, enlarge, extend.   | creare, create, elect.             | divulgare, divulge.                   |
| approbare, approve.             | cremare, burn (some-thing).        | domare, conquer, subdue, subject.     |
| aptare, fit.                    | curare, care, mind.                | donare, give (gratuitously), present. |
| appropinquare, approach.        | damnare, condemn, convict.         | dubitare, doubt, hesitate.            |
| arare, plough.                  | dare, give.                        | durare, last.                         |
| armare, arm.                    | debellare, finish a war.           | educare, educate, bring up.           |
| bellare, wage a war or wars.    | debilitare, weaken.                | effeminare, effeminate.               |
| caelare, chisel.                | declinare, decline, deny.          | elaborare, elaborate.                 |
| cantare, sing.                  | delectare, delight.                | emendare, correct.                    |
| castigare, chastise.            | deliberare, consider, deliberate.  | emigrare, emigrate.                   |
| celare, conceal.                | demonstrare, demonstrate, prove.   | enarrare, explain.                    |
| celebrare, celebrate.           | denegare, decline, deny.           | enuntiare, pronounce, utter.          |
| cessare, cease.                 | denuntiare, denounce.              | equitare, ride (on a horse.)          |
| circumdare, surround.           | depravare, spoil, deteriorate.     | errare, err, make mistakes.           |
| clamare, shout.                 | —                                  | excitare, excite, rouse.              |
| comare, dine.                   | —                                  | excusare, excuse.                     |
| cogitare, think, mean, imagine. | —                                  | exornare, adorn, embellish.           |
| commendare, recommend.          | —                                  | explanare, { explain.                 |
| communicare, communicate.       | —                                  | explicare, {                          |
| comparare, acquire, compare.    | —                                  | explorare, explore.                   |
| conciliare, reconcile, win.     | —                                  | expugnare, capture.                   |
| —                               | —                                  | expectare, expect, await.             |

|                                       |                                       |                                  |
|---------------------------------------|---------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| evitare, avoid.                       | narrare, tell, relate.                | recusare, refuse.                |
| fatigare, tire, weary.                | navigare, sail.                       | refutare, refute.                |
| festinare, hasten.                    | necare, kill.                         | regnare, reign.                  |
| flagrare, burn, be on fire.           | negare, deny.                         | relegare, banish.                |
| flare, blow.                          | nobilitare, make famous.              | renovare, renew.                 |
| fugare, put to flight.                | numerare, count.                      | repugnare, resist, oppose.       |
| gubernare, govern.                    | nuntiare, announce, report.           | revocare, recall.                |
| habitare, dwell.                      | objurgare, scold, rebuke.             | rogare, ask.                     |
| imperare, command.                    | observare, observe.                   | sacrificare, sacrifice.          |
| impetrare, obtain.                    | obstare, to be an obstacle.           | saltare, dance.                  |
| implorare, implore.                   | obtemperare, conform, obey.           | salutare, greet.                 |
| importare, import.                    | obtretere, slander.                   | sanare, heal.                    |
| impugnare, attack.                    | occupare, occupy.                     | separare, separate, sever.       |
| inchoare, commence, leave unfinished. | onerare, burden.                      | servare, save.                   |
| incitare, excite, hasten, spur on.    | oppugnare, besiege.                   | significare, signify, designate. |
| increpare, scold.                     | orare, to pray.                       | simulare, feign, dissemble.      |
| indicare, indicate.                   | ornare, adorn.                        | sonare, sound.                   |
| infirmare, weaken.                    | parare, prepare.                      | sperare, hope.                   |
| inhabitare, inhabit.                  | peccare, sin.                         | spoliare, plunder.               |
| instare, impend, urge.                | penetrare, penetrate.                 | stare, stand.                    |
| interrogare, ask (a question.)        | perorare, plead.                      | superare, overcome, surpass.     |
| intrare, enter.                       | perpetrare, commit (a crime).         | supplicare, beg, implore.        |
| inundare, overflow.                   | perseverare, persevere.               | tentare, try.                    |
| investigare, examine.                 | placare, soften, appease.             | tolerare, endure.                |
| invitare, invite.                     | portare, carry.                       | tonare, thunder.                 |
| judicare, judge.                      | postulare, demand, require.           | tractare, treat.                 |
| jurare, swear.                        | prestare, excel, to be distinguished. | triumphare, triumph.             |
| juvare, delight.                      | privare, deprive.                     | turbare, disturb.                |
| laborare, work, labor.                | probare, prove, approve.              | usurpare, employ, use.           |
| laudare, praise.                      | promulgare, publish.                  | variare, vary, change.           |
| liberare, release, free.              | proporare, hasten.                    | vastare, devastate.              |
| locare, hire.                         | pugnare, fight.                       | vetare, forbid.                  |
| mandare, commit, charge.              | putare, believe.                      | vexare, harass, tease.           |
| memorare, mention.                    | rebellare, rebel.                     | vigilare, watch.                 |
| mendare, correct, improve.            | reconciliare, reconcile.              | vindicare, reclaim, avenge.      |
| monstrare, show.                      | recreare, refresh.                    | violare, hurt, violate.          |
| mutare, change.                       | recuperare, recover (something).      | vitare, avoid.                   |
| nare, { swim.                         | —                                     | vituperare, censure.             |
| natare, {                             | —                                     | vocare, call.                    |
| —                                     | —                                     | volare, fly.                     |
| —                                     | —                                     | vulnerare, wound.                |

2. DEPONENTS.

|                              |   |                                   |
|------------------------------|---|-----------------------------------|
| Admirari, admire.            | conari, endeavor, attempt.                | gratificari, gratify.             |
| adversari, oppose.           | concionari, harangue, address the people. | gratulari, congratulate.          |
| adulari, flatter.            | consolari, console.                       | hortari, exhort.                  |
| altercari, dispute, quarrel. | contemplari, contemplate.                 | imitari, imitate.                 |
| amplexari, embrace.          | criminari, incriminate.                   | indignari, be indignant.          |
| amulari, rival.              | cunctari, hesitate, delay.                | infutari, deny.                   |
| arbitrari, be of opinion.    | dominari, rule.                           | interpretari, interpret.          |
| aspernari, disdain.          | frumentari, forage.                       | lacrimari, to weep.               |
| auxiliari, carry help.       | frustrari, frustrate.                     | lætari, rejoice.                  |
| cavillari, deride.           | furari, steal.                            | lamentari, lament.                |
| comitari, a company.         | gloriar, boast.                           | latrocinari, commit depredations. |
| commorari, sojourn.          | —   | —                                 | lucrari, gain.

machinari, devise, plan.
meditari, meditate.
minari, threaten.
minitari, threaten.
mirari, wonder.
moderari, rule.
morari, delay, sojourn.
mutuari, borrow.
negotiar, trade.
pabulari, forage.
percentari, ask, examine.

perscrutari, search, investigate.
philosophari, philosophize.
populari, lay waste.
precari, pray, entreat.
recordari, remember.
ratiocinari, reason, argue.
remunerari, reward.
rusticari, live in the country.
sermocinari, converse.
susplicari, suspect.
testari [testificari], witness.
tumultuari, raise a tumult.
tutari, protect.
vagari, wander, roam.
vaticinari, prophesy.
venerari, revere.
versari, be involved, engaged, employed.
vociferari, quarrel, bawl, cry aloud.

XII. VERBS OF THE SECOND CONJUGATION.

1. ACTIVES.

Abhorrere, detest. adhibere, employ.
adherere, adhere.
admonere, admonish, re mind.
admovere, bring near.
amovere, remove.
apparere, appear.
arere, hold off, ward off.
ardere, burn, be on fire.
arere, be dry.
audere, dare.
augere, increase.
calere, be warm.
cavere, be on one's guard, beware.
ciere, move, stir, rouse.
coercere, restrain.
complere, fulfil, complete.
continere, contain, restrain.
debere, owe, be obliged, must.
decere, be decent, becoming.
delere, destroy.
deridere, deride.
deterere, deter, discourage.
detinere, detain.
displicere, displease.
dissuadere, dissuade.
docere, teach.
dolere, grieve, regret.
egere, need, to be in need.
eminere, be prominent, conspicuous.
exercere, exercise.
exhibere, show, display.
explere, fill up.
favere, favor.
fervere, boil.
flaccere, droop.
flere, weep.
florere, flourish.
frigere, be cold, freeze.
fulgere, glitter.
gaudere, be glad, rejoice.
habere, have.
herere, stick.
imminere, be imminent.
implere, fill up.
indigere, need.
indulgere, indulge.
invidere, envy, hate.
jacere, lie (down).
jubere, direct, bid, give orders, command.
languere, languish.
latere, be hidden.
licere, be exposed for sale, be allowed, permitted.
lucere, shine.
lugere, mourn.
madere, be wet.
manere, remain.
merere, deserve, earn.
miscere, mix.
monere, admonish.
movere, move, affect, influence.
nere, spin.
nitere, shine.
nocere, be injurious, hurt.
obsidere, besiege.
obtinere, obtain.
parere, be obedient, obey.
patere, be open, clear, extend.
pavere, tremble.
pendere, hang, be in suspense.
persuadere, persuade.
perterrere, frighten.
placere, please, be pleasant, agreeable.
pollere, be powerful.
possidere, possess, own.
prebhere, furnish, grant.
prevailere, prevail.
prandere, take breakfast.
prohibere, prohibit.
removere, remove.
replere, fill up.
respondere, answer.
retinere, retain.
ridere, laugh, smile.
sedere, sit.
silere, be silent.
solere, be accustomed, wont, use (to act).
splendere, shine, be splendid.
studere, try, study.
stupere, be astonished.
suadere, advise, give advice.
saccensere, be angry.
sustinere, sustain, uphold, maintain.
tacere, be silent.
tenere, hold.
terrere, frighten, terrify.
timere, fear.
torpere, be torpid.
torquere, torture.
urgere, urge, press.
valere, be well, healthy, strong, fare well.
videre, see.
vigere, be strong, vigorous, flourish.
vivere, live.

2 DEPONENTS.

Confiteri, confess, acknowledge.
fatari, know, gaze.
contuere, behold, gaze.
intuere, behold, gaze.
licere, bid a price (on things in auction).
mederi, heal.
mereri, deserve.
misereri, pity.
profitari, profess.
polliceri, promise.
reri, suppose.
tuere, protect.
vereri, fear, dread.

XIII. VERBS OF THE THIRD CONJUGATION.

1. ACTIVES.

A. STEM-VERBS.

Abducere, lead away, abduct, remove.
abesse, to be absent.
abjicere, throw away.
absolvere, absolve, acquit.
absumere, consume.
accidere, happen, befall (of unfortunate events).
accipere, accept, receive.
acutere, sharpen.
addere, add.
adjuvare, to be present.
afferre (adferre), bring.
afficere (adficere), afflict.
affigere (adfigere), affix.
agere, act, do, lead, drive.
alere, nourish.
allicere, allure.
amittere, lose.
antepondere, prefer.
arcessere, summon, fetch.
arguere, accuse.
arripere, seize [of persons and movables].
ascendere [adscendere], ascend, mount, scale.
ascribere (adscribere), ascribe, attribute.
aspergere (adspergere), stain, asperse.
assurgere, [adsurgere], rise up, stand up.
attribuere, [adtribuere], ascribe, attribute.
bibere, drink.
cadere, fall.
cadere, cause to fall, strike.
calefacere, heat, warm.
canere, sing.
capere, take, capture.
cedere, yield.
cernere, see.
claudere, close.
cingere, surround, inclose.
cogere, compel.
colere, cultivate, honor.
committere, commit.
concedere, concede, grant.
concupere, conceive.
concutere, shake.
conducere, lead.
conferre, confer.
conficere, perfect, wear out, finish.
confidere, confide.
conjungere, unite.
conspicere, behold, perceive.
constituere, resolve.
consumere, consume.
contingere, happen [of fortunate events].
contemnere, despise.
contradicere, contradict.
convincere, convince, convict.
coquere, cook.
corrigere, correct.
corrumpere, corrupt, bribe.
credere, believe.
eupere, wish.
decedere, go off, leave, die.
decernere, resolve, decree.
decipere, deceive.
desse, to be wanting.
defendere, defend, protect.
deferre, transfer, report.
deficere, desert, fall off.
deicere, throw down.
dereelinquere, abandon.
descendere, descend.
describere, describe.
deserere, desert [a place].
desinere, cease.
desipere, be silly, foolish.
devincere, conquer.
dicere, say, tell.
difficere, delay, postpone.
diffidere, mistrust.
diligere, love, esteem.
diminuere, diminish.
dimittere, dismiss.
dirigere, direct.
diripere, plunder.
diruere, destroy.
dispellere, dispel.
distingnere, distinguish.
dividere, divide.
edere, eat.
edere, bring forth, publish.
efficere, effect, produce.
effugere, escape.
emere, buy.
erigere, erect, elevate.
excellere, excel.
excipere, receive.
excludere, exclude.
expellere, expel.
extinguere, extinguish.
extollere, exalt.
evadere, escape.
evertere, destroy.
fallere, deceive.
ferre, carry, bear.
fodere, dig.
frangere, break.
fugere, flee, shun.
gerere, carry, carry on.
incipere, commence.
indicere, announce.
inspicere, inspect.
instituere, commence.
intelligere, understand.
interficere, kill.
jungere, connect, join.
laccessere, harass.
ludere, hurt, injure.
legere, read.
ludere, play.
metere, reap.
metuere, fear.
mittere, send.
negligere, neglect.
nubere, marry.
objicere, object.
obruere, overwhelm.

INDEX TO PART I.

The first figure of the references denotes the pages of the First Part. The figures added after a comma refer either to the §, or the Rem., or to other divisions of paragraphs. When the same number is more than once on a page, the designation R. (Remark), or n. (foot-note), or no. (mere division of a paragraph), is added.

The following abbreviations are used:

|         |                                 |         |                          |         |                               |
|---------|---------------------------------|---------|--------------------------|---------|-------------------------------|
| Abl.    | ablative.                       | Engl.   | English.                 | perf.   | perfect.                      |
| abs.    | absolute.                       | expr.   | expressed.               | pers.   | person.                       |
| acc.    | accusative.                     | fem.    | feminine.                | phr.    | phrase.                       |
| act.    | active.                         | format. | formation.               | pl.     | plural.                       |
| adj.    | adjective.                      | fut.    | future.                  | plup.   | pluperfect.                   |
| adv.    | adverb.                         | gen.    | genitive.                | poss.   | possessive.                   |
| attr.   | attribute, orattributive.   | impers. | impersonal.              | pred.   | predicate, orpredicative. |
| cl.     | clause.                         | ind.    | indicative.              | pres.   | present.                      |
| comp.   | comparative.                    | indef.  | indefinite.              | pron.   | pronoun.                      |
| conj.   | conjunction.                    | inf.    | infinitive.              | quant.  | quantity.                     |
| conjug. | conjugation.                    | irr.    | irregular.               | sent.   | sentence.                     |
| constr. | constructed.                    | inst.   | instead.                 | sing.   | singular.                     |
| coörd.  | coördinate, orcoördinating. | interr. | interrogative.           | subj.   | subject.                      |
| dat.    | dative.                         | Lat.    | Latin.                   | subjc.  | subjunctive.                  |
| def.    | definite.                       | masc.   | masculine.               | superl. | superlative.                  |
| decl.   | declension.                     | nom.    | nominative.              | term.   | termination.                  |
| determ. | determinative.                  | obj.    | object, orobjective. | transl. | translated.                   |
| diff.   | difference.                     | part.   | particle.                | voc.    | vocative.                     |
|         |                                 | pass.   | passive.                 | w.      | with.                         |

A (ab), preposition, denotes the pass. agent 107, R. 2. For the use of ab in general, see P. II.

Ablative, sing., rule of formation for all decls. 322, f; of abl. plur. 333, i.—Abl. transl. by Engl. preposition by 18, 3.—Abl. of nouns of 3. decl. in i 136, 180. Abl. in i of adjs. of 3. decl. 148, R. 1; abl. in e 151, 216. Abl. of pres. participles in i, except when used as pred. abls. 293, 36.

ABLATIVES ABSOLUTE, definition and format. 292, 395 foll. Form of pred. abl. 292, 396; when pred. abl. is an adj. or noun 293, 397. Abl. abs. w. deponent participle 293, 34. Pred. abl. in pl. or sing. when two subj. are coördinate. 293, 35.

COMPARATIVE ABLATIVE inst. of quam 217, 310. Idiomatic comp. abls. 218, R. 7.

ABLATIVE OF DIFFERENCE referring to comp. 218, 311; before praestat, post, antea, and other words involving a comp. 219, 10.

Absolute adjectives, see Adjectives.

Absolute degree of intensity, its different forms in Lat. 220, 313 foll.

Ac, coörd. conj., use of 97, 115; 277, 380.

Accent of Latin words 10, 5.

Accidents of Lat. verbs 14, 7; of nouns, pron., and adjs. 15, 8.

accusare, constr. w. quod 291, 28.

Accusative sing., rule of its format. for all decls. 332, d; of acc. pl. 333, k. All neuter nouns have acc. and nom. alike 34, 2. Nouns of 3. decl. w. acc. sing. in im 136, 179. Nouns and adjs. w. vowel-stems of 3. decl. have acc. pl. in is 133, R. 2. Acc. of nouns taken from the Greek, see Greek nouns.—Acc. transl. by Engl. objective 18, 13.—Accus. w. inf. 286, 388; see Infinitive clauses.

adducere, constr. w. ut 291, 27.

Adjectives, accidents of 15, 8. Are either movable or of common gender 40, 45. Decl. of movable adjs. (II. decl.) 41; 44 foll. Adjs. of common gender (III. decl.), their inflection 147, 206 foll.: 1) adjs. in is 149, 209; 2) R. stems of 3. decl. 149, 210; 3) Liquid-mutes 149, 211; 4) adjs. in ax, ox, ix, as 150, 212; 5) Adj. w. consonant-stems 150, 214 foll. They generally lack neuter gender 151, 217. Indeclinable adjs. 151, 218.

ATTRIBUTIVE ADJECTIVES 41, 47; their agreement w. the governing noun 1b.; in coördinate phrases 98, 119; their place 41, 47; their combination w. attributive genitives 70, 92. Attributive form-adjs. 169, 240. Attributive adjs. w. their governing nouns understood 256, 353.

PREDICATIVE ADJECTIVES 54, 61 foll. Agreement w. the subj. 54, 63. May take objects 55, 65. (For the case of these obj., see P. II). Impersonal pred. adjs. 60, 75; 61, 77. Pred. adjs. forming subj. infs. w.

the copula, are placed in masc. acc. sing. 61, 78; agreeing w. the object of impers. preds. 74, 3; when they form obj. ints. they agree w. the grammatical subj. nom. 64, 81, and in inf. cl. w. the subj. acc. 286, 388; or they agree w. the agent of the obj. inf. in acc. 79, 102. Summary of rules on the grammatical form of pred. adjs. 80. Pred. adjs. connected w. feri & videri 107, 132. For adjs. as accessory predicates, see P. II.

DESCRIPTIVE AND FORM-ADJECTIVES 168, 239. See Form-adj-ctives and the articles Determinative, quantitative, numeral, possessive, interrogative Form-adjectives.

ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES 256 foll. Definition and diff. from disjunct adjs. 256, 353. Absolute descriptive adjs. denoting persons (masc. gender) 256, 355; absolute participles denoting persons 257, 356; form-adjs. referring to persons 257, 357 foll.—Absolute adjs. denoting things (neuter gender) 260, 353 foll. Generally in neuter plur. 260, 358; when used in neuter sing. 260, R. 9. Peculiar decl. of absolute neuter adjs. 262, 38. Combination of abs. adjs. 262, 361 foll. Absolute movable adjs., but not those of common gender, take the form of partitive gen. when conn-ct'd w. quantitative form-adjs. (nihil boni) 268, 373. Nihil reliqui est 269, R. 32. Nihil pensi habeo lb.

DISJUNCT ADJECTIVES 264 foll.; their agreement 264, 365; when used as subjects, they agree with their predicate-nouns 265, 366.

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES, see Comparative and Superlative. Adjs. which do not form inflectional degrees 204, 292, foll.

DERIVATION OF ADJECTIVES from common nouns 349, 3 foll.; from proper nouns 350, 6 foll.; from verbs 351, 8 foll.

admirari, constr. w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.

admodum, quantitative adv. = very much 220, 2; = very 221, 5.

Adverbs, definition and classes of 57, 66; of manner, format. of 57, 68; in o 58, 69; of time 58, 70. Position of 58, 71. Advs. of manner formed from adjs. of 3. decl. 151, 219 foll.; irr. format. 152 R. 6 & 7. Numerical advs. 180, 258. Quantitative advs. (of intensity) 188, 269; may be dependent on adjs. 188, 11. Advs. of comparatives & superlatives 202, 287; 203, 10.

adversarius, diff. from hostis & inimicus 134, n. 1.

aegre ferre, to be vexed, constr. w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.

Aegyptus, fem. name of country 40, d.

aquo, impers. comp. abl. = than it is fair 218, 7.

as, z. aris, noun of S-class of 3. decl. 122, 158; of neuter gender 147, 205.

affirmare, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

after, Engl. conj., rendered by postquam 234, 328; by abl. abs. 292, 396.

agnatus and cognatus, meaning and diff. of these terms 325, n. 6.

Agreement of finite predicates w. their grammatical subjects in number and person 22, 20; of attrib. adjs. w. their governing nouns 41, 47; of pred. adjs. w. their logical subs.; see Adjectives; of pred. nouns w. their subs. 55, 2; of nouns in apposition w. their governing nouns 91, 107; agreement in number, of preds. w. coörd. subs. 97, 117; 98, R. 2; 98, 118, of finite verbs w. coörd. pronouns of different persons 163, 236; of attr. adjs. w. two governing nouns 98, 119; of a noun w. two attr. adjs. 99, R. 5; of participles w. their governing nouns 291, 394; of disjunct adjs. w. those nouns which must be supplied as their governing nouns 264, 365; of relative adjs. w. their antecedents 265, 367; 266, 368 foll.; 267, R. 29; of disjunct adjs. w. their predicate-nouns 265, 366; of disjunct adjs. w. their partitive genitives in gender 269, 374. Agreement of ipse, solus, unus, totus, omnis w. their governing pronouns 194, 277 foll. Non-agreement of the poss. suus (his, her, their) w. its antecedent 188, 9.

ajo, conjugated 242, 11.

al, Lat. nouns in al generally belong to the vowel-class of 3. decl., being neuter 135, 177. Those belonging to the L-class 117, 147.

alienus, used w. the force of gen. pl. aliorum 259, R. 6.

aliquantus, indef. quantitative form-adj. 185, 205. Use of aliquantus as abs. adj. 262, 17; aliquanto before comps. as abl. of diff. 218, 3 1.

aliquis, some, indef. determ. form-adj. 172, 246. Its decl. 172, 247; 173. Use of aliquis, and diff. from quidam 174, 250. Aliquid = somebody, as abs. adj. 258, 4. Aliquid = something, abs. neuter form of aliquis 260, 359; w. partitive quantitative gen. sing. 267, 371 foll.

aliquot, indef. numeral 179, 257.

aliquoties, numeral adv. 180, 258.

alius, another, indef. determ. form-adj. 172, 246. Decl. of 173, 248. Diff. from alter and ceteri 175, 7.—Alii, others, as abs. adj., and diff. from ceteri and reliqui 259, no. 4.—Alius...alius, use of 259, 5 & R. 7. Alii...alii take appositions inst. of partitive gen. (some of the soldiers...others, = militēs a'li...alii) 270, R. 35.

all, Engl. indef. adj. = omnis or omnes 179, 257; 180, R. 12. All of us etc. = nos omnes 194, 278. All (of) these = hi omnes 263, 363; all (of) these things = omnia haec lb.; all my property = omnia mea lb.; all other things = alia omnia lb.

almost, how transl. 295, 401; 299, 406. Almost not = fere non 300, 52.

alone, transl. by the adjs. solus and unus 194, 244 foll.

alter, the other, indef. determ. form-adj. 172, 246. Decl. of 173, 248. Diff. from alius 175, 5. Alter in the meaning of secundus 182, 261. Alter...alter, use of 259, 5; w. apposition inst. of w. partitive gen. 270, R. 35.

alteruter, indef. determ. form-adj. 172, 246, 2; decl. of 173, R. 11.

amb, inseparable preposition 358, 3.

ambo, both, decl. of 178, R. 2. Diff. from uterque lb.

amplius, with or without quam = 'more than' before numerals 219, 312; 220, R. 13 foll.

an, or, disjunctive interr. particle 308, 419; annon, or not, lb.; annon not used in indirect questions 311, 423.

an, nom. terminat. of Greek nouns, how treated in Lat. 241, 30.

and, Engl. conj., how expr. in Lat. 97, 115. And not, how transl. 301, 53.

angi, constr. w. quod 291, 28.

animadvertere, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

Anomalous nouns 347, R. 1.

Answers to questions, how expr. in Lat. 308, 320.

antea, before, adv. of time 58, 70; followed by quam 207, R. 7.

Antecedents of prons. of 3. pers. 161, 232; of relatives 266, 368. Syndetic antecedents 266, 369.

Ante-classical period of the Lat. language 5.

any, Engl. indef. determ. form-adj., = quisquam or ultrius 174, 250, 2; = quis after num, si, ne, etc. 307, 67; see quis.

anybody (anyone) = quisquam 258, 4.

anything = quicquam (quidquam) 260, 359.

When expr. by quid 260, R. 11.

Apposition, 91, 106 foll. Agreement of nouns in apposition 91, 107; 92, 110. Sometimes Engl. attr. w. of etc. expr. by Lat. appositions, and sometimes Engl. appositions expr. by Lat. attr. gen. 92, 112.

ar, nom. term. of Lat. nouns of vowel-cl. of III. decl. 135, 177; their gender 137, 181. Nouns in ar belonging to R-class 121, 157. Nouns in ar taken from the Greek, how treated in Lat. 342, 4.

arbitrari, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

Archaic period of the Lat. language 5.

Argos, name of city, how declined 340, 26.

as, nom. term. of Lat. nouns. They generally belong to T-class; their decl. and gender 128, 167; belonging to S-class 123, 161. Civic nouns in as belong to vowel-class 139, 187, 4. Gender of nouns in as 147, 203. Nouns in as taken from the Greek generally belong to first decl. 334, 6; 336, 9. Greek nouns in as that assume the term. a in Lat. 336, 9, R. Greek nouns in as belonging to T-class 343, R. 2.

as, nom. term. of Lat. adjs., how declined 150, 212.

as, Engl. comparative conj., different ways of rendering it (quā, qualis, etc.) 267, R. 29; transl. by quam after tam 210, 304; by quod quantum after tot tantumque 209, R. 11; by quantum after tamdiu (as long as) 211, 17.—'As...so', how rendered 278, 3.—'As little as' = non magis quam 303, 412. As many as, how rendered 208, 298; as much as 209, 301. 'As much as possible' = quam w. superl. 221, R. 17. 'As soon as possible' = quam primum 222, 18. 'As much again' referring to multiples = altero tanto 219, R. 9.

assuefacere, constr. w. obj. inf. 79, 101.

Asyndetic coordination 99, 120; of adversative propositions 280, R. 9.

at, but, Lat. adversative coörd. conj., used to correct mistakes 279, 4; at = at least 297, 43; at certe, at tamen lb.

at all, Engl. emphatic expression, how rendered 296, 42. 'Not at all' = ominino non, nequāquam, nullo modo, nullo pacto 300, 52.—'At least', how rendered 296, 403. 'But at least' = at, at certe, at tamen 297, 43.

Athos, how declined 340, 24.

atque, and, coörd. conj., use of 97, 115; 277, 380.

attamen, adversative conj., its use 280, 5.

Attraction in comparative periods 217, 309.

Attraction of the negation 300, 408.

Attributes, definition 28, 26. Attributive genitive 29, 27; attributive adjs. see Adjectives. Participles as attributes 291, 394 foll. Nouns in apposition as attributes 91 foll. Coordination of attr. 100, R. 8. Form-adjs. as attributes 169, 240. Pronouns as attributes 196, 283 foll.

Attributive phrases, see Phrases.

audere, ausus sum, semi-deponent 249, 344; w. obj. inf. 63, 80.

audire, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

aus, nom. term. of Lat. nouns; gender & decl. 147, 203.

aut, coörd. conj. = or 100, 122. When used without repetition 283, R. 15. Aut...aut = either...or 100, 122. Diff. from sive...sive, vel...vel 280, 383. Aut...aut = partly...partly 283, R. 12. After negations inst. of neque...neque 282, R. 13.

autem, but, adversative conj. 99, 121. Use of, and diff. from sed and verum 279, 4.

auxilia, auxiliary troops, used in neuter gender 40, R. 4.

ax, nom. term. of Lat. nouns of R-class 129, 168; of nouns belonging to Greek K-class 344, R. 9.—Adjs. terminating in ax, how declined 150, 212; their meaning 352, R. 5.

Before, Engl. adv. of time, transl. by antea 58, 70; as conjunct. by priusquam or antequam 234, 328. For 'before' as preposition see P. II.

bene, irr. adv. of bonus (= well) 58, 1.

bonus, forms irregular degrees of comparison 203, 290.

bos, irr. noun, decl. and gender 140, 188.

both, Engl. numeral, now transl. 174, 4.

Brazen age of Lat. language 6.

bundus, verbal adjs. terminating in 352, R. 7.

but, Engl. coörd. conj., its different Lat. equivalents 99, 121; 179, 381; 279, 3 & 4. But not = neque vero 301, 3.

by, Engl. preposition, regular case-equivalent of Lat. abl. 18, 13. As pass. agent = ab 107, 131. For other translations see P. II.

Cæsar, 5.

Capital letters, when used in Lat. 7, 4.

caput, irr. noun, decl. and gender 139, 187.
Case-endings, systems and treatment of in Lat. 331, 2 to 4.
Case-terminations, definition, and diff. from 'case-endings' 332, 17, 11. Of first decl. 17, 12; of second decl. 31, 33; of consonant stems of 3. decl. 117; of vowel-stems of 3. decl. 133. Synopsis and discussion 332. Quantity of case-terminations 334, 5. Use of Greek case-form in Latin nouns taken from Greek, 1) in 1. decl. 331, 6; 2) in 2. decl. 339, 19; 3) in 3. decl. 345, 33.
Cato, M. Porcius 5.
Catullus 5.
cavere, constr. w. ut. Cave w. pres. subjunc. as circumlocution of negative imperative 306, 415.
cedo, irr. imperative, use of 304, 2.
celer, adj. of 3. decl., inflection of 119, R. 2.
censere, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26; its derivation 373, R. 6.
a certain, trans-l. by quidam 174, R. 12.
certainly, Engl. emphatic part., how trans-l. 295, 402.
certe, affirmative and restricting part. 295, 401; 296, 402. Diff. from the adv. certe 1b. Certe in the meaning 'at least' 297, 403; diff. from saltem 1b. At certe, but at least 297, 43. — Certissime 296, 402.
certo, adv. of manner 58, 69. Diff. from certe 296, 402.
ceteri, meaning, and diff. from ceteri 175, 5; 259, no. 4. Ceteri 261, 13.
Characteristic, definition 13, 2; of verbs, determine their conjug. 16, 4; 32, 30; 47, 52; 49, 55; 228, 320; of nouns 331, 1; 336, 12; 115, 139 foll.
Chersonesus, name of country, gender 40, c.
ci, enclitic suffix to hic and ecce in questions before suffix ne (hiccine, siccine) 368, 67.
Cicero 5.
cire ter, limiting part. 295, 401; 299, 406.
Cities in us FEM. 40, b; 338, 17.
city of, rendered by an apposition to urbs or oppidum 93, A. City of Rome, how rendered 142, n. 31.
Classical period of Lat. language 5.
Clauses, i.e. dependent sentences, definition 233, 321.
coepisse, perf. verb, conjug. of 248, 342. Used inst. o. incipere in perf. system 248, 1; w. obj. inf. 1b.
cogere, constr. w. obj. inf. 79, 101; w. ut 291, 27.
cogitare, constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 80.
colas, decl. of 155, 2.
Common gender, definition and use 146, 142; 144, 193; 145, 197.
Comparison, definition 14, d; 201, 295. Comparison of parts by comparison 206, 294 foll. — Comparison of equality, and of difference 206, 295. Numeral comparison 203, 247 foll. Quantitative comp. 209, 300 foll. Comp. of limitation (i.e. denoting numeral excess; 'more than six' etc.) 219, 312.

Comparative degree 201, 285 foll. How the comparative of adjs. is formed and declined 201, 286 foll.; comp. of adjs. in et 202, 289; in ut 202, b; R. 1, in deus, hominis, volus 202, c. Irr. comparatives 293, 290 foll. Comp. formed by magis 204, 293. Comps. without superlatives 24, 13; without positives 203, R. 5; 203, 291. Comparatives of adverbs 202, 287; 203, 10. — Comps. w. the meaning rather, somewhat, too 221, 315. — Two adjs. compared w. each other, placed in the comp. degree 216, 308.
Comparative periods, their formation 206, 294 foll. Analysis 207, 296. In numeral comparison 208, 297; in quantitative comparison 209, 300. Attraction of the second member 217, R. 3. Idioms in comp. periods 215 foll.
Comperire, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
complures, several, indef. numeral 179, 257.
Compound nouns, treatment of 156, 227. How to render Engl. compound nouns into Lat. 157, 229.
Compound verbs 357, App V. Change of their stem-vowels 50, 3; 357, 1; 357, R. 1—3. Changes in the prepositions w. which verbs are compounded 357, 2; 358, R. 4. — Facere compounded w. other verbs 358, 4.
conari, constr. w. obj. inf. 114, 138.
concedere, constr. w. ut 291, 27.
concludere, to infer, w. Inf. cl. 290, 26; concludere, to determine, w. ut 291, 27.
condemnare, constr. w. quod 291, 28.
Conditional clauses, w. indicative 252, 350. Mood and tense in cond. cl. of non-reality 1b.
Conjugation, definition 13, 4. Elementary lessons on conjugation, first 15; second 31; third 40; fourth 115. — Formation of the pres. system of regular verbs 247 foll.; of the moods 247, 347, 348, 349; of the tenses 247, 318; 251, 322. Diff. of the 4 conjugations in the pres. system 228, 320. Paradigms 228 foll. Conj. of irr. verbs 238 foll. Conj. of perf. system 245 foll. Its moods and tenses 247, 349 foll.; of pres. and denominatives 248 foll. Contraction of the endings with the syllables zz and zzz 249, 345. Dropping of the tense-suffix z 261, n. 5. — Relation of the 4 conjugations in perf. system 247; 369, 2. Formation of perfects and superlatives 329 foll.
Conjunctions, definition 96, R. 1. Subordinating conj. 234, 328 foll. Coord. conj. 277, 366 foll.
Consecution of Tenses. Law of consecution for the tenses of pres. system 235, 331; for both systems 251, 349. Consecution of the governing word of the clause 14 a participle of indicative 255, R. 6; 281, 301.
Consequently, how expr. in Lat. 284, 385.
Consonants, pronunciation 12, 3. Nouns w. consonant-stems 143, 101; w. Greek consonant-stems 341 foll. Adjs. w. cons. stems 150 foll. Verbs w. cons. stems 49, 55; 360, 2; 363, 101.
consuevisse, perf. verb, constr. like solvere, w. obj. inf. 248, R. 4.

consulere, w. ut 291, 27.
Coordination 96, 113 foll; 276 foll. Copulative coord. 97, 115 foll.; 277 foll.; of two attr. adjs. 98, 119. Asyndetic coord. 99, 120; 280, 9. Adversative coord. 99, 121; 279 foll. Disjunctive coord. 99, 122; 280 foll. Causal coord. 284, 385 & 386. — Coord. w. double conj. 278; 280 foll.; by quum...tum; pars...pars; qua...qua; simul...simul; que...que 278, 3 foll. — Analysis of coord. phrases 100, 123; 277.
Copula, 54, 61.
copiae, troops, used in fem. gender 40, R. 4. cor, decl. and gender 140, 189.
Cos, island, how declined 340, 24.
Cosa, abbreviation for consulibus 294, 397.
Countries, names of, their gender 40, d; 338, 17.
country, Engl. noun, how to be rendered into Lat. 122, n.
countrymen, transl. by mei (tui, sui, etc.) homines, or by nostrates, vestrates 260, R. 8. What countryman? = cujas? 260, R. 8.
credere, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
cujas, G. atis, meaning and decl. 260, R. 8.
cujus, a, um, interr. poss. form-adj. 188, 268.
culus, cula, culum, diminutive term. To what nouns they are applied 337, R. 1 & 2.
cum, conj. see quum. Cum, preposition, see 1, 11.
cunctari, w. obj. inf. 63, 80.
cur, why, interr. adv., 309, 421. Cur non, why not 1b.
curare, w. ut 291, 27. Cura ut, as circumlocution of affirmative imperative 305, 62.
Curtius, writer of the silver age 6.
custodiae, guards, of fem. gender 40, R. 4.
Dative, corresponding to Engl. preposition to 18, 13. DAT. SING., rules for its formation in all the declensions 332, c; of DAT. PLUR. 333, i. Dat. pl. in is in 3 decl. 333, 2. Dat. pl. in ibus in 1. decl. 18, R. 3; 333, 2, d.
dapis, defective noun without nominative 347, R. 1.
debere, w. obj. inf. 63, 80. Used impersonally 64, 81.
decernere, w. obj. inf. 63, 80; w. ut 291, 27.
Declension, definition 13, 4. Theory of Lat. decl. 331, 1, foll. FIRST DECL. 17 foll. Formation of its cases 332, R. 1. Archaic gen. in as and ai 333, R. 2, a; term. um inst. of arum in gen. pl. 333, c; term. ibus in dat. & abl. pl. 333, R. 2, d. — SECOND DECL. 34 foll.; its stems terminate in o 336, 12. Archaic nom. in os and acc. in om after v. 1b. Gen. of nouns in us take a single i in classical period 336, 13. Vocative in i inst. of in e 35, 5; 337, 14. Irr. plurals in i and a 35, 37. Pluralia tantum 35, R. 3. R stems of 2. decl. 43. — THIRD DECL.: its diff. from the other declensions 115, 139. Characteristics 115, 140. Form. of the cases 115, 141; Gender 116, 142. Case-terminations 116, 145; 133. Decl. of liquid stems 117, 146 foll. (L-class 117, 147; N-class 118, 149; R-class 120, 154; S-class 122, 158; Irregular consonant stems 140, 158). Decl. of mute stems 127, 162, foll. (P-class 127, 164; T-class 127, 165; K-class 129, 168). — Decl. of vowel-stems 132, 172 foll. (Regular vowel-class 133, 175; liquid-mutes 137, 182; irregular vowel-stems 139, 187). Diff. between declension-stem and true stem 133, R. 3. — FOURTH DECL. 154, 221; List of nouns belonging to it 407, 4. To recognize nouns of fourth and second declensions in nom. 155, R. 4. Dative pl. in ibus 155, R. 3. — FIFTH DECL. 155, 223. Most of its nouns lack the plur. 156, R. 2. DECL. OF ADJECTIVES, see Adjectivus; of PRONOUNS, see these. — DECL. OF GREEK NOUNS, see Greek Nouns.

Defective nouns 346 foll.
demonstrare, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
Demonstrative Form-adjectives 170, 244 foll. Demonstratives used as antecedents of relative clauses 260, 10. Demonstrative numerals 179, 257.
demum, only (not before), limiting part. 295, 101; 297, 403 a.
Deponent verbs, 112, 134 foll. Formation of their tenses in pres. system 232, 325; in perf. system 249, 343. Deponent perf. participle as pred. abl. 293, 34.
desinere, impersonally used 64, 82; w. obj. inf. 63, 80.
desistere, w. obj. inf. 63, 80.
deterior and deterrimus, diff. from pior and peior 203, 9.
Determinative form-adjectives 169, 242 foll. Peculiarities in their inflection 169, R. 3. Interr. form 170, 243. Definite form 170, 244 foll. Indef. form 172, 246 foll. — Determinatives constr. w. partitive gen. (quidam eorum, etc.) 269, 375.
to be determined = velle 63, 1.
deus, declined 35, 36.
dicere, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
dieis (causa), defective noun without nom. 347, R. 2.
Diminutives, meaning and formation of 337, 15. Serve as test for the gender of their stem-nouns 1b. Diminutive adjectives 338, R. 3.
Diphthongs in Lat. 6, 3; pronunciation of 10, 6.
dis, inseparable preposition 358, 3.
discere, constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 80; w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
Disjunctive questions, how formed 308, 419.
ditionis, defective noun without nom. 347, R. 1.
diu, long, adv. of time 58, 70. How compared 203, 10.
dives, adj., declined 151; how compared 204, 11.
do, Engl. auxiliary, not transl. in Latin 236, 333; 300, R. 50.
docere, w. obj. inf. 79, 101; w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
dolere, constr. w. quod, or Inf. cl. 291, 28.
domus, gender 40, e; decl. of 155, R. 2.
dubitare (non), w. quoniam 291, 30. Dubito an, idiomatic use of 312, 78.
ducenti, etc. declined 178, R. 3.

dum, conj., = while 234, 328; constr. w. pres. ind. 234, 330. Dum as enclitic suffix to negative words = yet 300, 408.
dumtaxat, only (no farther than), limiting part. 295, 401; 297, 403 a.
duo, decl. of 178, R. 2.

E. Most nouns in ae are neuter of the vowel class of 3. decl. 135, 177; 137, 181; 147, 205. Nouns in ae taken from the Greek, belong to 1. decl. 331, 6; 335, 7 & R. 2. What Greek nouns in ae assume the ending a in Lat. 331, 6, R.

each, Engl. form-adj., how to be transl. 172, 296, 3; rendered by distributive numerals 181, 259.

Ecclesiastical writers, 6

ed, pron. declined 160, 221.

either, Engl. form-adj., rendered by ut or alteruter 172, 246, 2. Engl. conj. (either... or), how expr. in Lat. 100, 122; 280, 383; by ut... aut after negations 283, R. 13.

ejus, eorum, earum. When these genitives must be used inst. of the poss. suis 197.
ellus, a, um, diminutive terminat. To what nouns they are applied 337, R. 1.

else, Engl. adv., expr. by the different forms of alius 263, R. 21. 'Who else' = quis alius? 'What else' = quid aliud? 'Something else' = aliud quid. Ib.

en, nom. termination of Lat. nouns belonging to the N-class; their decl. and gender 149, 153. Greek nouns in en, how treated in Lat. 341, 30.

Endings of nouns, see Terminations. Personal endings of the verb 15, 3; 231, 322; 247, 341. — The endings of the 2. pers. pres. sing. dropped in questions before the interr. suffix ne (vin' tu = vino tu etc.) 138, 67.

enim, causal coörd. conj.; its use 284, 384.
entirely, how rendered 296, 402.

epicene nouns of beasts 145, 195.

Epirus, fem. noun of country 40, d.

equidem, = I on my part 296, 402.

er, nom. term. of Latin nouns & adjectives. Nouns in er generally belong to R-class of 3. decl.; their inflection and gender 121, 157; those belong. to the Vowel-class of 3. decl. 131, 1; to the R-stems of 2. decl. 13 foll. Greek nouns in er, how treated in Lat. 342, 1. Adjs. in er of 2. decl. 44 foll.; w. vowel-stems of 3. decl. 149, 210; w. consonant stems of 3. decl. (degener, pauper, uber) 150, 214.

ergo, coörd. conclusive conj. Diff. from igitur and itaque 284, 385.

es, nom. term. of Lat. nouns and adjs. Nouns in es generally belong to vowel-cl. of 3. decl.; their gender and inflection 135, 177; 137, 181. Those belonging to T-class 128, 167; to S-class 123, 161; to fifth decl. 127 foll.; 156, R. 3. Collateral forms in a of the latter 343, R. 4. Gender of nouns in es 146, 202; 147, 203. Nouns in es taken from Greek 1. decl. 334, 6; 335, 8; they are often declined after 3. decl. 335, R. 1. Greek nouns in es assuming the term. a in Lat.

234, 6, R. Greek nouns of the S-cl. in es 342, 1 & 2; of Greek T-class 343, R. 3 — Adjts. in es belonging to S and T-classes 150, 214.

especially, Engl. emphatic part., how transl. 295, 401; 298, 405; 298, 404-48.

esse, irr. verb of III conj. 51, 59; conj. of its pres. system 238, 355; of its part. system 247. Esse as copula 54, 61. — Esse, 2. pers. of II. form of imperative, use of 304, 2. In 3. pers. — Esse 20, 60.

et, and, coörd. conj.; use of 97, 115; 277, 380. Et... et, both... and 97, 116; 278, 380. Et is (id), idiomatic use of 278, 8. Et non, diff. from neque 301, 53. Et = also 235, 401; 297, 404; = even 298, 404.

etenim, causal coörd. conj., use of 284, 386.
etiam, also 295, 401; = even 297, 404. Sed etiam 278, 2.

etiam, although, preliminary remarks concerning its use 234, 330.

eus, nom. term. of Greek nouns; how treated in Lat. 340, 25; 341, 3.

even, Engl. emphatic particle, how transl. 295, 401; 297, 404; rendered by ipse 194, 279 foll.; 171, R. 9. Not even = ne... quidem 300, 52.

every, how expr. 172, 246; 263, 20; 1b., ORS. Everything = omnia 261, R. 9; = quidvis 260, 359. Quidvis used only in certain connections 263, R. 20.

ex, nom. term. of Lat. nouns of K-class 129, 170. Greek nouns of K-class in ex, how treated in Lat. 341, R. 10.

exclamations, 295, 41. Exclamatory clauses in the form of interrog. clauses 311, 75.

existimare, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

exordiri, w. obj. Inf. 114, 138.

experiri, to try; diff. from exprobari 126, n. 4.

extollere, constr. w. quod 291, 28.

extremely, quantitative adv.; transl. vehementer 220, 2; by superlatives 222, 315.

extremus, indef. ordinal numeral 182, 261; irr. superl. of exterus 203, 290.

Facere, I-verb of 3. conj. 50, 58. Its compounds w. prepositions change a into i 59, R. 3. Facere compounded w. other verbs without change of vowel (assuefacere etc.) 358, 4. Format. of its pass. voice 106, 28; 106, R. 4. Fac w. ut and ne, as circumlocution of imperative 305, 62; 306, 415.

familias, ancient gen. of familia; nouns compounded w. it 157, R. 10.

far, Engl. adv., before superl. rendered longe or multo 219, R. 10.

fas, indeclinable noun, use of 140, 190.

fateri, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

fauces, pl. tantum; gender and decl. 139, 5.

fellow-citizens, transl. by mei (tui, sui etc.) cives 260, R. 8.

fere (ferme) almost, limiting part. 295, 401. Diff. from plane and prope 299, 406. Satis fere = quite enough 299, 8; fere non = almost (generally) not 300, 52.

ferre, irr. verb, conj. of 51, 59; 210, 6. In pass. 106, 127.

few, indef. numeral, = pauci; few things = pauca 261, R. 14.

fidere, fides sum, semi-deponent 249, 344.

feri, as pass. of facere, its conj. 106, 128; 241, 10; as copula (= to become) w. pred. adjs. 107, 132. Quantity of the i, in the different forms of feri 338, 1, 6.

filius, forms its voc. in i 35, R. 5.

Finite verb, definition 14, R. 3; 227, R. 1.

for, Engl. preposition (see P. II); before verbal adjs. in ing rendered by quod 234, 329; 291, 29. For, Engl. causal conj., how expr. 284, 386. For not = neque (non enim) 311, 3.

Form-adjes ives, classification and inflection 168, 239 foll. Combination of 190, 270 foll. See the articles Determinative, Numeral, Quantitative, Possessive, Qualitative Form adjectives.

fortasse, perhaps, limiting part. 295, 401.

Fractions, how expr. 179, 256.

fraus, gender and decl. of 139, R. 10; 128.

Fræuntative verbs 336, R. 4.

from, Engl. preposition (see P. II); before participials in ing, rendered by Lat. obj. Inf. 64, 4; 79, R. 5.

frugi, indeclinable adj. 151, 218; its comp. and superl. 204, 11.

frugis, defective noun without nom. 347, 1.

fully, Engl. emphatic part., how rendered 296, 402.

Future tense of the present system (future-present), format. of 231, 322, 3. Future-perf., its signification 250, 347.

Gajus, Roman Jurist 6.

gaudere, gaudium sum, semi-deponent 249, 344. Constr. w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.

Gender of nouns 38, 39. Nouns in pl., comprising individuals of both sexes (and hence national nouns) are masc. 39, R. 2.

Gender of pers. nouns of 1. decl. 39, 42; of nouns denoting things in 1. & 2. decl. 40, 43 foll.; fem. in us 40, b-f; of cities and countries in us 338, 17, 2. — Gender of nouns of 3. decl.; of nouns of N-class 119, 151 foll.; R-class 121, 156 foll.; S-class 123, 161; T-class 124, 167; K-class 130, 171. Gender of the vowel-stems 137, 181; 139, 186; of the irr. vowel-stems 139, 187 foll.; of the irr. consonant-stems 139, 188.

Gender of nouns of 4. and 5. declensions 155, R. 1; 156, 225. Synop-sis of the gender rules 144, 191 foll. Gender of nouns denoting persons 144, 192 foll. COMMON GENDER of personal nouns 144, 193. Gender of BEASTS 145, 194; epicene gender 145, 195; common gender of beasts 144, 193; 145, 197. Gender of nouns denoting things according to the terminations 146, 198 foll. Gender of Greek nouns, see Greek nouns.

Generally, Engl. adv., transl. by the verb solere 64, R. 1; by plerumque 180, 253.

Genitive case, corresponding to Engl. preposition of, or to possessive case 18, 13.

Corresponding to Engl. appositions 93, C; 94, D & E. GEN. SING., law of its formation in all declensions 332, b; of nouns in ius and ium formed w. a single i 338, 16. — GEN. PLUR., its formation in all declensions 333, h. Interchanging of the two systems of case-endings in gen. sing. and plur. 333, R. 2. Gen. pl. in ium of vowel-stems in 3. decl. 133, R. 1. PARTITIVE GEN., see this article.

glis, irr. noun, its decl. and gender 139, 187.

gloriari, constr. w. quod 291, 28.

gratias agere, to thank, w. quod (not w. Inf. cl.) 291, 28.

gratulari, w. quod 291, 28.

gratum facere, to oblige, w. quod (not w. Inf. cl.) 291, 28.

greatly, Engl. adv., = magnopere 220, 2.

Greek nouns. General principle concerning their use in Lat. 333, 4. FIRST GREEK DECLENSION 334, 6. Regular case-terminations 334, 6; exceptional case-terminations 336, 11. Gender 336, 10. SECOND GREEK DECLENSION 339 foll. Terminat. of nom. sing. 339, 19 foll. What nouns take acc. sing. in on 339, 22. In what instances Greek case-terminations of 2. decl. are used in Lat. 339, 23. Decl. of proper names of Attic. 2. decl. 340, 24. Gender 340, 27. — THIRD GREEK DECLENSION 340, 28 foll. Nouns of 3. Greek decl. have the same classes as the Lat. 340, 28. Greek nouns w. liquid stems 342, 30; w. mute-stems 342, 36 (P-class 343, R.; T-class 343, R. 2 foll.; K-class 344, R. 9 foll.); w. vowel-stems 341, 29. — Greek case-terminations of 3. decl. used in Lat. 345, 33.

grus, irr. noun of 3. (4?) decl.; inflection and gender 140, 183.

Habere = know, II. form of imperative, idiomatically used 304, 2.

haud, negative part., 295, 401; diff. from non 299, 407.

he (him, her, them), Engl. pron., when rendered by is, ea, id, and when by sui, stibi, se 161, 232 foll.; 163, 238. In Inf. clauses 287, 389; in interrog. clauses 312, R. 76.

help, I cannot help doing something = non possum non 300, 51.

hence, as Engl. adv. of conclusion, how expr. in Latin 284, 385. For hence as locative adverb see P. II.

Heteroclit nouns 347, 37.

Heterogeneous nouns 318, 38.

Heterological nouns 19, 5; of 1. decl. 409, 1; of 2. decl. 409, 2; of 3. decl. 409, 3.

Heteroplastic nouns 347, R. 3.

hic, hæc, hoc, demonstrative form-adj., decl. and use 171, 245 foll. Translation of hic as disjunct form-adj. 264, R. 23. Hoc absolutely used 261, R. 13; w. partitive quantitative gen. sing. 267, 371 foll.

to hinder (somebody from doing) = impedire w. obj. Inf. 79, R. 5.

hir, indeclinable noun; doubtful meaning of this word 338, 18.

his, her, its, their, Engl. possess., when rendered by ejus, eorum, eorum, and when by suus 187, 268; 197. In inf. cl. 287, 20 foll.
 Historical Infinitive, see Infinitive.
 homo, diff. from vir 118, n. 1.
 Horace, Lat. poet. 5.
 hortari, constr. w. ut 291, R. 27.
 hostis, diff. from adversarius and inimicus 134, n. 1.
 how, as interr. adv. of intensiv., rendered quam 189, 11; as mod. interr. adv. = quomodo, quomodo, quomodo, 189, 10. How much, adv. = quantum, quantum 189, 267; as adv. = quantum or quantum 189, 269; before comp. = quodammodo 177, 254; 257, 357, 1.
 How few = quotusquisque 182, R. 16. How little, quantulus, 187, 5; as adv. = quam nihil (see P. II); as adj. = quam exiguus 186, R. 1.—I know how to (do a thing) = scio w. obj. inf. 61, 5. humus, ground, fem. noun of 2. decl. 40, e.

I. Greek neuters in i of the T-class, how treated in Lat. 341, R. 6, 2.

idem, the same, demonstrative form-adj.; decl. and use 171, 245. Idem qui=the same as 267, R. 29.

if, Engl. conditional conj.=si 234, 328; 252, 350. If not=nisi, or si non 302, No. 4. If, introducing interr. clauses, transl. by Lat. interrog. particles 311, 423.

igitur, coord. conclusive conj. Diff. from ergo and itaque 284, 385.

ille, that, demonstrative form-adj.; its decl. and use 171, 245. Cannot be transl. literally when used as disjunct. adj. 265, R. 23.

illus, a, um, diminutive term. Nouns to which it is applied 337, R. 1.

imber, irreg. noun w. vowel-stem of 3. decl.; its inflection and gender 139, 187.

immo, how used in answers 309, 420.

impedire, w. obj. inf. 79, 101.

impellere, constr. w. ut, 291, 27.

imperare, w. ut 291, 27.

Imperative mood, format. of First form 232, 6; of Second form 232, 7. Use of the imperative of both forms 303 foll.

Imperative sentences, the different grammatical forms of their predicates 304 foll. Use of the II. form of imperative, and diff. from the I. form 344, 2 foll. Use of II. form in the 3. pers. and diff. from the pres. and perf. subjunc. 306, 63. Use of circumlocutions (cura, fac, beam) 305, 62. Different forms of negative imperative sentences 306, 415.

Imperative clauses 306, 65.

Imperfect indicative, format. of 231, 2. Signification of this tense 250, 346; 250, 6.

Imperfect subjunctive, format. of 231, 322, 5. Use in conditional clauses of non-reality 252, 350. When used in clauses according to law of consecution 251, 349.

Impersonal verbs, see Verbs. Impersonal predicates, see Predicate.

it is impossible not to do,=non possum non w. obj. inf. 300, 61.

imprimis (inprimis), especially, emphatic part. 295, 401; 298, 47.

in, nom. terminat. of Greek nouns of the N-class: how treated in Lat. 341, 30.

Inceptive (inchoative) verbs 52, 60. Format. of their perf. system 360, R. 3 foll.

incertum est an, idiomatic use of 312, 78.

incipere, w. obj. inf. 63, 80; used impersonally 64, 81; not used in perf. system 248, 1.

incitare, constr. w. ut 291, 27.

Indeclinable nouns 246, 25; 140, 190; their gender 146, 199. Indef. Adj. 151, 218.

indeed, Engl. emphatic or limiting part., how rendered 290, 402.

Indicative after subordinating conjunctions 234, 330; in conditional cl. 252, 350.

indignari, w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.

Indirect questions, see Interrogative clauses.

infimus, lowest, as indef. ordinal numeral 182, 261. Infimus or imus, irr. superlative of inferus 203, 290.

Infinitive, Lat., is of three kinds 59, 72: 1) SUBJECT-INFINITIVE 60, 74, d. Form of subj. inf. when it consists of the copula and pred. adjs. or nouns 61, 78, 2) OBJECT-INFINITIVE 62, 79. Verbs governing obj. inf. 63, 80; deponents w. obj. inf. 114, 138; obj. inf. dependent on videri 108, 133; on cepi 248, 1. Memnisse w. obj. inf. 248, 2. cepi w. obj. inf. 248, R. 4. Verbs governing an obj. inf. along w. a substantive obj. 79, 109, 35. PR. INFINITIVE, 63 in independent sentences as historical use 255, 271; 26 in Latin clauses 255, 318; 256, R. 18. Diff. from obj. inf. 286, 19. Tense of pred. inf. 288, 300.

Infinitive (Engl.). Obj. inf. rendered by ut 234, R. 4; by various Lat. That-clauses, 291, 29.

Infinitive clauses 285 foll. Their formation 285, 348 foll. Inf. clauses introduced by quam 289, 23. When Engl. That-clauses are expr. by Lat. Inf. cl. 290, 1.—Inf. cl. form of quod after verbs of praising, censuring, and verbs of emotion 291, 28.

infatias (ire), defective noun 347, R. 2.

Inflection, definition of 13, 1: kinds of 13, 4.

inimicus, diff. from hostis and adversarius 134, n. 1.

injussu, defective noun, in abl. only 347, R. 2.

inquam, conj. of 242, 12.

instar, indeclinable noun, use of 140, 11.

instead of w. a participial in ing, rendered by et non 301, 53. For 'instead of'=pro, see P. II.

intelligere, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

to intend = velle 63, 1.

Intensive verbs 354, R. 1.

interest, inter and est, it is of importance, constr. w. interr. clause 312, 77.

Interjections 295, 42.

internecionem, defect. noun, used in acc. and ab. only, 247, R. 1.

interrogare, to ask; diff. from rogare, to ask 330, n. 16.

Interrogative Form-adjectives, belong to each of the five classes of form-adjs. 170; 177; 181; 185; 187; 188. Use of interrogative form-adjs. and advs. in relative interrog. sentences 309, 421.

Interrogative sentences, 307 foll. Are either absolute or relative 307, 416. Disjunctive interr. sentences 308, 419. Two interr. adjs. or advs. in the same sentence 310, 73.

Involvement of interr. sent. 310, 74. INTERROGATIVE CLAUSES 310, 422.

Involvement of interr. sent. 310, 74.

ipse, demonstrative form-adj.; decl. and use 171, 245; 171, R. 9; as attr. of pronouns of 1. & 2. persons, how rendered 191, 279; as attr. of pron. of 3. pers. (he himself, etc.) 195, 280. Not agreeing in case w. the reflexive sui, sibi, se, but with the antecedent of sui etc. (see ipse interfecit) 196, 281. Its gen. ipsius logically agreeing w. poss. adjs. (sua ipsius virtus) 198, 9. Ipse = even 171, R. 9; 298, 45.

ire, (eo), irr. verb of 4. conj. 47, 54. Pass. of ire 106, 129. Conjug. 241, 7. Remarks on it-tenes 243, 4-6. Compounds of ire 48.

Irregular Lat. nouns 346, 34 foll. Irr. verbs 238 foll. Irr. adverbs 152, R. 6 & 7. Irr. comparison 203 foll.

is, nom. term. of Lat. nouns and adjs. of 3. decl. They generally are vowel-stems; their gender and decl. 135, 177; 137, 181.

Nouns in is that take in in acc. sing. 136, 179; w. i in abl. sing. 137, 2-4. Nouns in is belonging to S-class 123, 161; to T-class 129, 167. Irreg. nouns in is (sanguis, pollis) 140, 189. Synopsis of gender of all the nouns in is 147, 204. Nouns in is taken from the Greek 341, R. 1; 343, R. 4.—ADJECTIVES in is 149, 209.

is, ea, id, pron. of 3. pers., and demonstrative form-adj.; decl. of 160, 231. Is qui, he who; ei qui, those who 258, 3; is and ei omitted lb. Et (atque) is, idiomatically used 278, 8. Id as determinative abs. adj.; form of its cases (ejus rei, ei rei, eo) 262, 16.

Id w. partitive gen. sing. 263, 372. Id temporis, id aetatis 268, R. 30.

ista, demonstrative form-adj. 171, 245.

ita, adv. of manner (P. II); ita (ita vero) used as answering part. = yes 308, 420.

itaque, coord. conclusive conj. Diff. from ergo and igitur 284, 3-5.

ius, nom. term. of nouns and adjs. of 2. decl. 35, 38; 326, 13. Used to designate the Roman gens 337, 13.

I-verbs of third conj. 50, 58. Format. of their tenses 233, 326; in pass. voice 105, R. 3. Deponent I-verbs 113, 136.

ix, nom. term. of nouns and adjs. of K-class 129, 168; 150, 212; as fem. term. of movable nouns in or 144, 3; 352, App. III. R. 3.

Jubere, w. obj. inf. 79, 101; w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

Diff. of these two constructions 290, n. 1.

judicare, w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.

junior, younger; use of, and diff. from minor 204, 11.

Juppiter (Jupiter), decl. of 140, 188.

Jurists, Roman 6.

jus, right, law, gender and decl. of 139, R. 10. Diff. from lex, law 129, n. 12.

jurandum, decl. of 157, R. 4.

jussu, defective noun, in abl. only 347, R. 2.

just, Engl. emphatic part., how transl. 298, 405.

Justinian, 6.

justo, as comp. abl.= 'than it is just' 218, 7.

Juvenal, 6.

K, when this letter is used in the Lat. alphabet 6, 1. K-class of Lat. nouns 129; of Greek nouns used in Lat. 344 foll.—K-mutes (gutturals) 7, 5.

to know how, rendered by scire w. obj. inf. 64, 5. To know = novisse 248, 4.

Lao, irr. neuter noun 140, 189; 147, 205.

Lactantius, 6.

lactari, constr. w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.

Latin language, its origin and brief history 5.

laudare, w. quod 291, 28.

least = minimus (minime) 185, 2; 230, 290.

'At least,' w. the force of a restricting part., how transl. 296, 403. 'But at least' = at. at certe, at tamen 297, 43.

less, Engl. quantitative adj. and adv.=minus (minor, minores, pauciores) 185, 2; 186, R. 2; 210, 302; 210, R. 12; 214, R. 14; 211, 305.

Less... than=non tam...quam 363, 58. Less than (before numerals), how to expr. 219, 312; 220, R. 13 foll.

lest, Engl. conj. = ne 301, 4; after verbs of fearing 302, 55.

let, as auxiliary of the imperative in 3. pers., how transl. 306, 63.

levir, derivation, and decl. 338, 18.

lex, law, diff. from jus 129, n. 12.

licet, it is allowed, impers. verb 61, 76. Its construction w. logical subj. in dat., along w. pred. dative 74, R. 3.

linter, irr. noun of 3. decl., inflection and gender 139, 187.

Liquid consonants 7, 5. Liquid stems of nouns 117, 146 foll.

little, as quantitative form-adj., how transl. 186, R. 1; generally expr. by non multum; a little = paullum 299, 50; not a little = aliquantus (um) 185, 3; too little = parum lb.; so little, tantulus; how little, quantulus 187, 5.

Livy, 5.

locuples, adj., decl. of 150, 212.

locus, noun of 2. decl., w. plur. in i or a, of different significations 35, 37.

longe, longius, longissime, adverbial degrees, generally used in the meaning far, farther, farthest 203, 10. Longe before superl.=by far 219, R. 10.

Lucretius, 5.

Ma, nom. termination of neuter nouns of T-class, taken from the Greek 344, R. 6; 147, 205. Nouns in ma sometimes take gen. pl. in torum, dat. pl. in tis 344, R. 7.

302. (c) after inflectional comparatives 211, 344.
quamdiu, how long, interr. adv. 309, 421.
Quamdiu = 'as' after tandiu 211, R. 17.
quamquam, although, subordinating conj., preliminary remarks about its use 234, 330.
quando, when, as interr. adv. 309, 421. Diff. from the temporal conj. quum, when 310, 70. For quando as temporal and causal conj. see P. II.
Quantitative Form-adjectives, their enumeration 185, 263 foll.; their use in the partitive and attributive constructions 185, 264. Their inflection 186, 265.
Quantity of vowels and syllables, notation of 9, R. 2. Rules on quantity 388 foll.
quantopere, quantitative adv. 188, 269.
quantus, how much, interr. quantitative form-adj. 185, 263. Used as descriptive adj. (= how great) 187, 3. Quantæ copiae, how many troops; quanta pecunia, how much money 187, 4. Quantulus, how little 187, 5.—Quantum, as abs. form-adj. 262, 17; w. partitive quantitative gen. 186, 266; 267, 371. Quanto, how much, as abl. of diff. before comparatives 218, 311.—Quantus as relative = as 267, 29.
quatenus, how far, interr. adv. 309, 421.
que, enclitic copulative conj. 97, 115; 277, 380. Que...que, both...and, 278, 5.
quemadmodum, how, interr. adv. 309, 421. Diff. from quam, how 310, 70.
queri, constr. w. quod or Inf. cl. 291, 28.
Questions, see Interrogative clauses and sentences.
qui, determinative relative form-adj. 258, 2. Declined like the interr. quis 169, R. 2. Always has quod, and never quid in the neuter 264, 364. See Relative adjectives.
qui, how, interr. adv. 309, 42. Its diff. from quam, how 310, 70.
quia, because, subordinating causal conj., preliminary remarks concerning its use 234, 330.
quid, neuter of the interr. form-adj. quis, used as interr. adv. = why 309, 421.
quidam, some, a certain one, indef. determinative form-adj. Decl., use, and diff. from aliquis 172, 246; 172, 247; 173; 174, 250.
quidem, indeed, affirmative and restrictive particle 295, 401; 296, 402. Ne quidem = not even 300, 52.
quidni, why not, interrog. adv. 309, 421. Diff. from cur non 310, 70. Not used in indirect questions 311, 423.
quin, why not, interrog. adv. 309, 421. Quin conj. = 'that' dependent on non dubitare 291, 30. For the other uses of quin, see P. II.
quilibet, see quivis.
Quintilian, 5.
quire (queo), compound of ire, conjug. of 241, 8.
Quirites, declens. of 139, 187, 4.
quis and qui, fem. quæ, neuter quod, which, what, who, interr. form-adj. of the determinative class, decl. and use of 170, 243. Masc. quis as abs. interr. 258, 2. Quid, absolute neuter form 260, 359. Quid w. partitive gen. (quid novi etc.) 267, 371 foll.

quis, some, any, indef. form-adj. inst. of aliquis or quisquam 259, R. 4; 307, 65; 301, 4. Diff. in decl. from the interr. quis 259, R. 4. Neuter quod (abs. quid) in place of aliquid, aliquid, and quicquam 260, R. 11.
quispiam, somebody, anyone, indef. form-adj., use of 259, 4, obs.
quisquam, any, indef. determinative form-adj.; decl. and use 172, 246 & 247. Diff. from ullus 174, 250. Used absolutely (= anybody) 258, 4. Its plur. and abl. sing. made from ullus Ib.—Abs. neuter form quicquam (quidquam) 260, 359; without plur. 261, R. 13. W. partitive quantitative gen. 268, 372. Quisquam and quicquam changed into quis and quid 260, R. 11.
quisque, every, indef. determinative form-adj.; decl. of 172, 246 & 247. Limitations of its use 263, 20.
quivis and quilibet, 172, 246; decl. of 172, 247.
Quivis = every one 263, 20.
quo, whither, interr. and relative adv. 309, 421.
quod, subordinating conj., 1) = that; preliminary remarks about its use 234, 329. Verbs. constr. w. quod = that 290, 3.—2) = because 234, 328.
quod, neuter of interr., relative, and indef. form-adj. quis and qui 170, 243; w. partitive quantitative gen. sing. 268, 372.
quomodo, how, interr. adv. 309, 421. Diff. from quam, how 310, 70.
quoque, also or even, particle, 295, 401; 297, 404.
quot, how many, interr. numeral form-adj. 177, 254; not used absolutely 257, 357. Quot, as relative = as 267, R. 29.
quoteni, how many, distributive interr. adj. 181, 260.
quoties, how often, interr. numeral adv. 180, 258. Toties...quoties, as often as, 208, 298.
quotus, interr. ordinal numeral adj. 182, 16. Quotusquisque = how few Ib.
quousque, how far, interr. adv. 309, 421.
quum (cum), when, temporal conj. w. ind. or subjunc. 234, 330; in the causal meaning 'since' always, with subjunc. 234, 329.—Quum...tum, used as coord. conj. 278, 3.
Rather, Engl. particle, = potius 298, 405; 298, 48. Rendered by comp. degree of descriptive adjs. 221, 315.
re, inseparable preposition 358, 3.
recusare, constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 80.
Redundant nouns 348, R. 4.
Reduplicating verbs, see Perf. system.
refert, it is of importance, imper. verb, constr. w. interr. cl. 312, 77 (see P. II.).
Reflexive pronouns, see Pronouns; reflexive verbs 161, 233 foll.; 162, R. 2.
Relative adjectives, their general character and formation 169, R. 2; 265, 367 foll. Agreement with, and repetition of, the antecedent 266, R. 26; 266, 368. What classes of form-adjs. have a relative form, 266, R. 28. Demonstratives used as antecedents of relative clauses 260, 10. Omission of relatives inadmissible in Latin, 266, 28.

reliquus, meaning and use of 175, 5; 259, no. 4; 261, R. 13. Nihil reliquum est 269, R. 32.
reprehendere, constr. w. quod 291, 28.
respublica, decl. of 157, R. 4.
the rest, = reliquum, reliqua, or cetera 261, R. 13.
reverti, semi-deponent 249, 344.
rogare, to ask; diff. from interrogare, to ask 330, n. 16; constr. w. ut 291, 27. Rogo, parenthetically inserted in imperative sentences 305, 62.
rogatu, defective noun, used in abl. only 347, R. 2.
R, nom. ending of masc. and fem. nouns 332, R. 1, a. Nouns ending in s after a liquid (liquid-mutes) belong to the vowel-class of 3. decl. (except hiems and Tyrys). What masc. and fem. nouns do not take the ending s in the nom. 332, R. 1, a. Nouns in s preceded by a consonant are fem., w. several exceptions 147, 203.
saltem, at least, restrictive part., 295, 401. Diff. from certe 297, 403.
sane, Engl. form-adj., transl. by idem 171, 244; the same as = idem qui 258, 3; 261, R. 13.
Samnis, a Samnite, decl. of 139, 187.
sane, emphatic part., 295, 401; 296, 402.
Sane quidem, as affirmative answer 308, 420. Non sane, indeed not 300, 52.
sanguis, decl. and gender of 140, 189.
satis, enough, indeclinable adj. 151, R. 4. Indef. quantitative form-adj. 185, 263; always requires partitive construction in connection w. a noun 185, 263. Used as adv. (sufficiently) 188, 269; 221, 3. Satis fere = quite enough 299, 3. Satis est as imper. pred. 61, 77. Satis est = melius est 203, 6.
scilicet, affirmative particle 295, 401.
scire, to know, constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 80; 64, 5; w. Inf. cl. 290, 26. Diff. from novisse 248, 4. Use of scito as imperative 304, 2.
scribere, w. Inf. cl. 290, 26; w. ut, Ib.
se (sē) reflex. pron. in acc. or abl. 161. se, as inseparable preposition in compound verbs 358, 3.
sed, but, adversative conj. 99, 121. Diff. from autem and vero 279, 1 foll.
self (myself, himself etc.), rendered by ipse 171, R. 9; 194, 279 foll.; rendered by sui, sibi, see 195, R. 4. How to render self in composition w. nouns (self-love etc.) 198, 284.
Semi-deponent verbs 249, 344.
Semi-vowels 7, 5.
senex, decl. and gender 140, 189; its comparative senior, older; diff. from major 294, 11.
Sentences, division of 276, 52. Dependent sentences 233, 327. Affirmative and negative sent. 294, 398; exclamatory 295, 41. See the articles Interrogative, Imperative, Infinitive, Participial Sentences.

sentire, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
Sequana, masc. river in Gaul 40, a.
servitium, slave, used in neuter gender 40, R. 4.
shall, in 1. pers., expr. by future tense 228, 321. When 'shall' is rendered by II. form of imperative 303 foll.
si, conj., = if 234, 328. W. indicative 252, 350; w. imperf. and plup. subjunc. in conditional clauses of non-reality Ib.
significare, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
Silver age of Lat. language 6.
simul, adv. of time, 58, 70. Simul...simul used as coord. conj. 278, 5.
simulare, w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
sinere, w. obj. Inf. 79, 101.
Singularia tantum 347, R. 3.
singuli, different uses of 181, 14.
siser, neuter in sing.; masc. in plur. 143, n. 73.
sive (sen), or, disjunctive conj. 283, 384; Ib. R. 15. Sive...sive = either...or; diff. from aut...aut 280, 382; = whether...or 281, b; 283, 14. W. indic. Ib.
so, Engl. adv., rendered by tam 189, 11. So much, as adv., = tantum (tantopere) 188, 269; before comp. = tanto 218, 311. So much, as adj., = tantus 185, 263. About the translation of so by ita, sic etc. see P. II.
solere, semi-deponent 249, 344. How transl. 63, 3. Constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 80. Used impersonally 64, 82. Solito, as comp. abl. = (than usually) 218, R. 7.
solus, alone, only, indef. numeral, use and decl. 179, 257; 180. In connection w. pronouns 194, 277 foll. Gen. solus logically agreeing w. poss. adjs. 198, 9. Solum, only, limiting part., 295, 401; 297, 403 a. Non solum...sed etiam 278, 2; non solum non...sed ne quidem 302, 410.
some, Engl. indef. form-adj., transl. by aliquis or quidam 172, 246; 174, 250. Some other things = alia quædam 263, 363. Some others = alii quidam Ib. Some few things = pauca quædam Ib. Some such thing = ejusmodi quid, or tale quid Ib. Some...others = alii...alii 259, 5. Somebody = aliquis 258, 4; when expr. by quis 259, R. 4; 307, 67. Something = aliquid or quiddam 260, 359. When it is used w. partitive gen. (aliquid novi) 268, 373. When expr. by quid 260, R. 11; when by neuter plur. quædam 261, R. 13.—Somewhat, as quantitative adv. = satis 221, 3; by comparative degree of descriptive adjs. 221, 315.
spe, comp. abl. = than it can be expected (hoped) 218, 7.
sperare, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
sponte, defective noun, used in abl. only 347, R. 2. statuere, constr. w. obj. inf. 63, 84; w. ut 291, 27.
Stem, definition 13, 2. Diff. between declension-stem and true stem of a noun 332.
still, as adv. of time = adhuc 58, 70; as adversative conj. = tamen etc. 99, 121; 234, 330; 280, 5.

- studere*, w. obj. inf. 63, 80. Diff. from ex- periri 126, n. 1.
suadere, w. ut 291, 27.
Subject, i. e. governing word in pred. phrases 21, 19. Must be in nom. if the pred. is finite 22, 20. Diff. of grammatical and logical subj. 22, 2; 14, 5. (For logical subjects, comp. 78, 100; 79, R. 2; 80, in Summary; and P. II). Pronominal subjs. generally not expr. in Latin, except as subj. acc.
22, 3; 287, 389. Impers. predicates without subjs. 60, 74, a. Subject-accusative 286, 384. Diff. from obj. acc. 286, R. 19.—
Subject-ablative 292, 396. Subj. inf., see
Infinitive. For subj. clauses see P. II.
Subjunctive in principal sentences, preliminary remarks 335, 333. In imperative sentences 303 foll. In clauses introduced by ut, that 234, 329; by quam, since Id.; by quum, when (subjunc. or ind.) Id.; by ne, that not, 301, 4. In clauses dependent on
Inf. clauses 288, 391; in interr. clauses 311,
423; in conditional clauses of non-reality
252, 350. For tenses of the subjunc., see Consecution of Tenses.
Suetonius, 6.
sui, sibi, se, reflexive and personal pron. of
3. pers. 161, 233. Use of this pronoun 163, 238; 164, R. 6 & 7. When it must be used in Inf. clauses 287, 389; when in interr.
clauses 312, 416.
summus, the highest, the greatest, as indef. ordinal numeral 182, 261; irr. superl. of superus (superior) 203, 290. Used w. force of maximus and altissimus 203, R. 7. Sum- mus mons = the highest part of the mountain 265, R. 31.
supellex, irr. noun, decl. & gender 140, 180.
Superlative degree of adjectives 202, 288 foll.
irr. superlatives 203, 290 foll.; of advs. 203,
10. Superl. formed by maximus 201, 293.
Superl. w. comparatives 201, 13. Comparat-ives without superlatives Id.—Superl. in the meaning 'very', 'extremely', 'exceedingly' 221, 315. Superl. after quam = as much as possible 221, R. 17.
Supine, use of 252, 351 foll. Formation of supine, as second cardinal form of verbs, see Perfect system.
suppetias (ferre), defective noun 347, R. 2.
to be sure, how transl. 296, 402.
sua, irr. noun, how decl. 140, 188; of common gender 145, 197.
suspiciari, constr. w. Inf. cl. 290, 26.
sous, poss. form-adj., corresponding to Engl. his, her, its, their 183, 268; agreeing
w. governing noun, but not w. antecedent 188, 9. When quis est quis (est quis) must be used in its place 197; in Inf. cl. 287, R. 20 foll. Masc. pl. sui without a noun = his (their etc.) friends etc. 259, 6. Sua, neuter pl., without a noun = his (their etc.) property or affairs 261, R. 15.
Syllables, division of 7, 6; open and close 8, 7; long by nature or position 9, 3. Special rules on quantity of syllables 388 foll.
Syndetic antecedents 266, 369.
T-mutes (linguals, or dentals) 7, 5. T-class of nouns 127, 165 foll.
Tacitus, 6.
talis, such, qualitative form-adj. 197, 267.
Talis quidam, such as 267, 29.
tam, so, as quantitative adv. 189, 11. Tam
quam used for copulative coordination
278, R. 7.
tamen, as adversative conj. 280, 5; as particle inst. of salletem and modo 297, 403; = nevertheless, introducing the principal sent. after quamquam and etsi 234, 330.
tandem, as emphatic part., 310, 71. For tandem as temporal adv. see P. II.
tantopere, so much, quantitative adv. 188, 269; in quantitative comparative periods, 209, 301.
tantum, only, limiting particle 295, 401.
Non tantum followed by sed 278, 2. Tan- tummodo Id. tantus and tantusdem, so much, just so much,
def. quantitative form-adjs. 185, 263.
Used as descriptive adj. (so great) 187, 3.
Tantulus, so little 187, 5. Tantum as abs.
adj. and adverbial use of its cases 262, 17.
Tanto before comparatives as abl. of diff. 218, 311.
Tenses of verbs, definition 14, 6. Format. of in pres. system 231, 322. In perf. system 247, 340 foll. Tenses of subjunct., see Consecution of Tenses.
Terence, 5.
than, transl. by quam, see Quam; by comparative abl. 217, 310.
that, Engl. demonstrative form-adj., how transl. 171, R. 9; 170, 244; as antecedent of relatives 236, R. 28. That and that, followed by of, not expr. in Lat. 215, 307.
That, relative adj. ut, ut, or ut transl.
by the ordinary relative quod 200, R. 21.
that, Engl. conj., transl. by ut clauses, by ut or quod 241, 321; 281, 388 foll.; 290, 1-3.
their, Engl. poss. adj., how rendered 188, 9.
Therefore, how expr. in Lat. 281, 385. 'And therefore' = ergo, not itaque 281, 24. 'Therefore not' = non ergo, neque
(non) igitur 301, 3.
this, Engl. demonstrative adj., transl. by hic 171, 244. 'This' without a noun (of things) = hoc or haec (neuter pl.) 261, R.
13. 'This' referring to a whole sentence,
= hoc 265, R. 24.
Tibullus, 5.
timere, w. obj. inf. 63, 80; w. ut, ne, or ne non 302, 55.
times, Engl. adverbial plural, applied to numerals, expr. by Latin cardinal numeral advs. 180, 258. 'Three (four etc.) times as much' = tribus etc. partibus w. comp.
219, 9. 'Times' in multiplication expr.
by the distributive form of the numeral following it 181, EXPLAN.
Tiryns, G. Tirynthis, 344, R. 6, 5.
to, Engl. preposition, regular case-equivalent of Lat. dat. 18, 13. For translation of 'to' by Lat. prepositions, see P. II.

- too*, Engl. quantitative adv., = nimis 221,
3; 'too much,' as adj. = nimius 185, 263, 187, 266. 'Too' rendered by comparative degree of descriptive adjs. 221, 315.
tot and totidem, so many, just so many, demonstrative numeral form-adjs. 177, 255.
Tot, not used absolutely 257, 357. Tot
quot, as many as 208, 298.
toties, numeral adjs. 180, 258. Toties...quo- ties, in numeral comparisons, = as often as 208, 298.
totus, the whole (of), indef. numeral adj.
179, 275; its decl. and use 180, 12; 194, 277 foll.
tres, three, def. cardinal numeral, decl. of 178, R. 2.
trini, distributive numeral, when used inst.
of terni 181, R. 15.
Trees, names of in us, are fem. 40, c.
truly, Engl. emphatic part., how transl.
296, 402.
to try, transl. by studere or experiri; diff.
between these terms 126, n. 1.
tu, pers. pron. of 2. pers., decl. 160, 231.
May be omitted as subj. 15, 1; but rarely after the interr. enclitic ne 307, 67.
tum, then, adv. of time 58, 70. Tum demum, then only 297, 403 a. Tum...tum used for copulative coordination 278, R. 7.
tuns, poss. form-adj., of 2. pers. 187, 268.
Masc. pl. tui, without a noun, = thy friends, thy family 259, 6.
twice as, before adjs. = ultero tanto w. compar. 219, R. 9.
Ubi, where, interr. adv. 309, 421. For ubi as relative adv. and as temporal conj. see P. II.
ullus, indef. determinative form-adj., decl. and use 172, 246 foll.; 173, 248. Diff. from quisquam 174, 250. Which cases of quis- quam are supplied by ullus 258, 4.
Ulpian, Roman Jurist 6.
ultimus, the last, indef. ordinal numeral 182, 261; irr. superl. of ulterior 203, 291.
ulus, a, um, diminutive terminations; to what words they are applied 337, 1.
unde, whence, interr. adv. 309, 421. For un- de as relative adv. see P. II.
undoubtedly, Engl. emphatic part., how transl. 296, 402.
unus, def. cardinal, decl. of 177, R. 2. When used in plur. 181, R. 15. Unus = alone and only 194, 277 foll. Its gen. unius logically agreeing w. poss. adjs. (meum unus salute) 108, 9.
unusquisque, = every one 263, 20.
ur, nom. term. of Lat. nouns of R-class;
their decl. and gender 121, 157. The adj.
satur the only Lat. word in ur declined after 2. decl. 44, 5.
us, nom. term. of Lat. nouns, 1) of masc. of 2. decl. 34, 32; 2) of masc. and fem. of 4th decl. 407; 155, R. 4. Some of the nouns of 4. decl. in us have collateral forms in um 348, R. 4. 3) Of S-class of
3. decl.; their gender and inflection 123, 161. 4) Of T-class 129, 167; Id. R. 2. 5) Of Greek nouns of 2. decl.; their gender and inflection 339, 19 foll.; 340, 27. 6) Of Greek nouns of T-class 344, R. 5.
ut (uti), that, conj., preliminary remarks on its use 234, 329. When 'that' is transl. by ut 290, 2. Use of ut dependent on verbs of fearing 302, 55. In imperative clauses 306, 65. For ut as comparative and temporal conj., see P. II.
uter, irr. noun of vowel-class of 3. decl.;
inflection and gender 139, 187.
uter, interr. and indef. form-adj. of the determinative class; its decl. and use 170, 243; 170, R. 5; 172, 246 foll.
uterque, both, indef. form-adj. 172, 246; 173;
174, 4. Uterque takes abs. adjs. as partitive genitives in plur., but not nouns 269, 375;
270, R. 34.
utervis, uterlibet, 172, 246; 172, 247.
utrum, disjunctive interrog. part. 308, 419; in interr. clauses 311, 423. Not used after uter 310, 72.
Valde, quantitative adv. = very much 220,
2; = very 221, 3.
ve, or, enclitic adversative conj., when used 280, 283.
vehementer, as quantitative adv. = exceed- ingly 220, 2.
vel, or, adversative conj.; when used without being repeated 283, 384; Id. R. 15.
Vel...vel = either...or; diff. from aut... aut, and sive...sive 280, 380. Vel...vel = partly...partly 282, R. 12; inst. of neque
...neque after negations 282, R. 13.—Vel as emphatic part. = even 295, 401.
velle, irr. verb, conjug. of 51, 59; 239, 3.
Translation of 63, R. 1; 242, 3. W. obj.
inf. 63, 80. Vellem, I should wish, when used 243, 3. Velim, w. subjunc. as cir-cumlocution of imperatives 305, 62.
Vellejus Paternulus 6.
venter, irr. noun of vowel-class of 3. decl.,
inflection and gender 139, 187.
venum, defective noun in acc. only (venum dare etc.) 347, R. 2.
Verbal adjectives in dus and urus, how formed 232, 323 foll.; in bundus 352, R. 7.
Verb adjs. w. derivative endings idus,
ius, ilis, ilis etc. 351, 8.
Verbs, accidents of 14, 7. Partial conjugation 15; 31; 47; 49; 104; 112. Verb-stem 227, 319. Formation of tenses, and paradigm of pres. system 227 foll.; 235, 334 foll.; of perf. system 246, 336. Perfect or preterite verbs 248, 342. Preliminary remarks on the use of the tenses and moods 233 foll.; 250, 346 foll. Derivation of verbs
255 foll. Composition of verbs 357 foll.
Impersonal verbs 60, 75; 61, 76. Verbs constr. w. Inf. clauses (verba sentiendi and dicendi) 290, 26. Verbs constr. w. ut (of asking, praying, exhorting, commanding etc.) 290, 27. Verbs constr. w. quod (verbs

- of emotion, of praising, censuring, accusing etc.) 291, 28.
verily, Engl. affirmative particle, how transl. 296, 402.
vero, as coord. conj. = but 99, 121. Diff. from sed 249, 4. As affirmative particle indeed 295, 401; 296, n. 2; as answering part. = yes 308, 420.
verum, but, coord. conj. 99, 121; use of and diff. from vero and autem 279, 1 foll. Verumtamen 280, 5.
very, Engl. quantitative adv., = admodum or valde 221, 3. Expr. by the prefix per 221, 314; by superlative form of adjs. or advs. 221, 315. Very after the article 'the,' rendered ipse 171, R. 9. Very much, as adv., = magnopere, admodum, valde 220, 2.
vesper, declens. of 120, n. 7.
vester, your, poss. form adj. 187, 268.
vetare, w. obj. inf. 79, 101.
vetus, adj., decl. of 150, 215.
viciis, det. noun without nom. 347, R. 1.
videlicet, affirmative particle 295, 401.
videre, constr. w. Inf. cl.; when it is constr. w. ut 291, 27. Videtur, to seem, grammatically treated as copula w. pred. adjs. or nouns, 107, 132; w. obj. inf. 108, 133.
vigiliis, watchmen, used in fem. gender 40, R. 4.
vir, decl. of 43, 49. Meaning and use of its compounds 44, R. 2. Its diff. from homo 118, n. 1.
Virgil, 5.
virus, neuter noun of 2. decl., without plur. 40, f.
vis, irr. noun of 3. decl. 136, R. 7.
vituperare, w. quod 297, 28.
vix, scarcely, negative particle 295, 401.
Vocative, sing., rule of its format. in all decl. 332, e. Voc. of proper nouns in ius and of filius formed in i 35, R. 5; 337, 14. Whether genius makes the voc. geni? Ib.
Voice of verbs, definition 14, 6.
vos, pers. pron., 160. Diff. between gen. plur. vestri and vestrum 161, R. 1; 270, 376.
Vowels, pronunciation of 10, 6. Close, open, and obscure vowel-sounds 11, 7. Vowel-stems of nouns of 3. decl. 132 foll. Greek vowel-stems of 3. decl., how treated in Lat. 341. Vowel-stems of verbs 361 foll.— Change of Greek vowels in words received in Latin 341, 3, Rem.
vulgus, neuter noun of 2. decl. without plur. 40, f.
W, not a Lat. letter 6, 1.
What, Engl. interr. adj., when dependent on nouns rendered by quis (qui), quæ, quod 170, 243. When rendered by quotus 182, 16. What o'clock? = Quota hora? Ib. What, referring to quantity, rendered by quantus 187, 4. What, as abs. interrog. (= what things) expr. by quæ (neuter pl.) 260, R. 9; by quid 260, 359; 265, R. 25. The relative 'what' (= that which) expr. by id quod, or quod, also by ea quæ 260, R. 10; 266, R. 28.
when, interr. adv., rendered quando 309, 421; as temporal conj. by quum 310, 70; also by abl. abs. 292, 396. For the use of ubi, ut etc. = when, see P. II.
whether, Engl. interr. part., how expr. 311, 423. Whether not = nonne Ib. Whether ... or = utrum...an (negatively neque) 311, 423. When 'whether...or' must be transl. by sive...sive 283, 14.
while, Engl. conj., rendered by dum w. pres. ind. 234, 328 foll.; or by abl. abs. 292, 396.
who, Engl. interr. adj., = quis 258, 2. If 'who' has the meaning 'which' of the two, see P. II. The relative who always qui, not quis Ib. 'He who' = is qui or qui without is; those who = ei qui, 258, 3.
the whole = totus 179, 257; or absol. by the neuter totum 261, R. 14. Not followed by a partitive attribute, as in Engl. 190, R. 12.
wholly, adv., rendered by the adj. totus 194, 278; also by the adv. penitus, funditus etc. (see P. II.)
will, Engl. auxiliary, transl. by the fut. tense of the verb 228, 321. When rendered by velle 63, 1. 'Will not' = nolle 63, 2; 'will rather' = mallo Ib.
to be willing = velle 63, 1.
X, nom. term. of nouns of the K-class: their gender and decl. 129, 169 foll.; 147, 203. Greek nouns in x 344, R. 10 foll.
Y, vowel, when used in Lat. 6, 2.
yes, affirmative Engl. part., how expr. 308, 420.
yet, Engl. temporal adv., = adhuc 58, 70. Rendered by affixing dum to negative words (nondum = not yet etc.) 300, 408. Yet, as adversative conj. rendered tamen, attamen etc. 234, 330; 280, 5.
ys, nom. term. of Lat. nouns taken from the Greek 341, 2; 344, R. 6, 4.
Z, when used in Lat. 6, 2.

This book is due two weeks from the last date stamped below, and if not returned at or before that time a fine of five cents a day will be incurred.

|  |  |       |
|--|--|-------|
|  |  |       |
|  |  |       |
|  |  |       |
|  |  | ON.   |
|  |  |       |
|  |  |       |
|  |  |       |
|  |  |       |
|  |  | her's |
|  |  |       |
|  |  | fs of |
|  |  | the   |
|  |  | ' It  |
|  |  | hing  |
|  |  | btful |
|  |  | . It  |
|  |  | any   |
|  |  | more  |
|  |  | d yet |

it retains the brevity and conciseness of a grammar.

The second part of Roby's Latin Grammar has deservedly attracted the attention of Latin scholars on account of its rich collection of classical passages. But their uncritical selection and lack of arrangement have met with decided disapproval. Instead of giving an accurate statement of the laws governing the language, Mr. Roby merely reproduces the passages from which these laws might be constructed, them himself. His collection of examples hence he fails to illustrate many important

An examination of Dr. Fischer's work will show that none of these faults can be imputed to him. For Rules universally acknowledged only the most necessary vouchers are given. But for such points as are not generally acknowledged attention of Gram

Whenever he u arguments can refuted by Dr.

stereotyped w

We invite Composition.

Part I is student to the important prin

Part II d

adapted to the

Part I, 440

Part II, 81

Parts I and

Specimen

877.5

F523

JUL 6 1938

PART 2

CHARLES KNAPP
LIBRARY
1937

A NEW LATIN GRAMMAR AND READER ON A NEW PLAN.

THE GRAMMAR,

Columbia University
in the City of New York

LIBRARY

ED TO EACH SECTION OF

ER, LL.D.

dapted to first beginners.
nted in lucid and concise foundation for the later he capacity of average may be studied before the whatever. It consists of a he battle of Zama. Every Grammar, which is to be olves THE PROBLEM

entary Grammar, reconns that "Grammar cannot nowledge of the language," s grammatical knowledge."
leader, in connection with studied with each chapter of the Reader, will enable the student to translate every sentence correctly. The first or special, of the two vocabularies, contains all those words and phrases whose grammatical forms the student is not yet acquainted with at that place of the Reader where they first occur. But it does not suggest any of those grammatical forms which the student should know, from his previous studies, according to the directions given in each chapter of the Reader. Thus, in every succeeding section the number of phrases, etc., suggested diminishes, till, towards the end of the Reader, the student must almost entirely rely upon the second (or general) vocabulary, which contains all the words of the Reader as they are usually placed in vocabularies.

To illustrate the method, we reprint the first chapter:

ROMAN HISTORY.

FIRST BOOK.

I. FIRST DECLENSION. STUDY § 32 OF THE GRAMMAR.

Media pars Italiae, infra fluvium Tiberim, antiquitus incolebatur ab Latinis. Haec pars Italiae, ex nomine incolarum, appellabatur Latium, et caput habebat Albam Longam. Octavo saeculo ante Christum, Numitor rex Albæ Longæ fuit. Is expulsus est a fratre suo Amulio, qui filios Numitoris necavit. Quum Rhea Sylvia, filia Numitoris, geminos filios peperisset, Amulius jussit eos in Tiberim demergi. At servi regis satis habebant, exponere pueros in loco proximo aquæ. Ibi, ut fabula tradit, duo filii Rheæ Sylvie nutriti sunt lupâ, quæ eis mammas præbuit.

In the first (special) vocabulary the student will find the following words for the first sentence:

ab, by; ab Latinis, by the Latins.
antiquitus, in ancient times.
fluvium, the river.
incolebatur, was inhabited.

infra, below.
Latinis, the Latins.
media pars, the middle part.
Tiberim, Tiber.

All the words belonging to the first declension, for instance: Italiae, incolarum, Albam Longam, Albæ Longæ, aquæ, Rheæ, Sylvie, lupâ, mammas, are only found in the second (general) vocabulary, in the nominative singular, because the student is expected to translate them correctly, according to the lesson just learned.

Since every chapter of the Reader is a drill for some section of the Grammar, the student upon finishing the Reader will have been over the whole of the Grammar in an easy and pleasant manner, while, at the same time, he has acquired that practical routine in the language which alone enables him to study the details of grammar with success.

To write such a Reader is a matter of great difficulty, since it is necessary to employ only such Latin constructions as may be literally rendered into good English, and still be good and genuine Latin. And the thread of the history must be so arranged and devised that in each chapter certain grammatical forms occur in sufficient number to drill the student in that part of the Grammar which must be studied according to the order of the system. Dr. Fischer has met these difficulties. We are satisfied that there is not one sentence in the Reader which might not have been written by a classical Latin author, and not one which will offer any difficulty to the very first beginners.

Fischer's Elements of Latin Grammar, with Reader, 220 pages, cloth, - - - - - Price, $1.25

Specimen copy mailed on receipt of the price.

J. W. Schermerhorn & Co., Publishers,
14 Bond Street, New York.

LATIN GRAMMAR.

TOGETHER WITH

A SYSTEMATIC TREATMENT OF LATIN COMPOSITION.

BY

GUSTAVUS FISCHER, LL.D.

---

PART SECOND,

CONTAINING THE DETAILS OF SYNTAX.

---

NEW YORK:

J. W. Schermerhorn & Co., Publishers,

No. 14 BOND STREET.

1876.

A. B. L. I. C.
V. I. B. I. N. I.
V. A. N. I.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875, by
J. W. SCHERMERHORN & CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

877.5
F523
v. 2
Lange, Little & Co.,
Printers, Electrotypers and Bookbinders,
Nos. 10 to 20 Astor Place,
New York.

PREFACE TO PART II.

The second part of this grammar contains the details of Latin syntax.

It has been our object to present a more complete statement of the laws of the Latin language than has been given heretofore. Our constant study of the Latin authors for many years has been directed, solely for this purpose, to the minute examination of EVERY grammatical form, and by this means we have collected vast materials, with the help of which we have attempted to 'reconstruct' the syntactical laws of the Latin language. We have not indulged in philosophical and theoretical speculations. Perhaps the reader will find rather 'too little' than 'too much' of these. Nor did we merely amass the 'material as such', leaving it to the reader to make the best of it. Indeed it was our chief aim to discover new principles, hidden, or not sufficiently noticed before, to use these principles as the key for the language, and the language as the proof and test for the principles.

It is impossible to treat all parts of Latin grammar with equal minuteness. A work of this kind would have been too voluminous, and its end would have been doubtful. Hence we have treated the easier parts of Latin grammar more briefly than the difficult and more important subjects. By discussing the Case-theory, the Agreement, and other elementary parts, with no greater explicitness than is customary in our grammars, we were enabled to devote a more exhausting treatment to the Gerundials and Participials, to the Adverbial relations, to Tenses, Moods, and especially to Dependent Sentences.

We have treated the different 'grammatical relations' according to logical categories, i. e., according to the ideas of place, time, manner, quantity, cause, etc., whereas it is customary to consider these relations under the single cases (genitive, etc.), each of which is treated in a separate chapter in all its grammatical bearings. A good index, however, will easily supply the reader, who is curious to pursue each single case in all its applications, with the necessary references. But even the best index cannot supply us with all the different forms under which a given grammatical idea appears in Latin, unless the grammarian treats them side by side, and compares them with each other. So, for instance, our grammars cannot, and do not answer the question, in what different forms the idea represented by the English adverb ago may be expressed in Latin; since in their arrangement there is no proper place to discuss the question, which comprises several cases, several prepositions, adverbs, and clauses. Hence what we find in the grammars about this question is either insufficient, or erroneous (Comp. p. 230 and 231). So the rules, which the grammars give on Value and Price, are more or less deficient from the fact that neither the 'genitive,' nor the 'dative' is the proper chapter under which to discuss all the forms in which the Latin expresses these ideas. A grammarian who follows the division according to logical categories, is of necessity compelled to state all the possible forms at the disposal of the Latin language to express a given idea, while under the traditional treatment of genitive, dative, etc., such questions will either not present themselves, or, if they do, will be very easily evaded. If we ask why this only proper method has not been pursued heretofore, we know of no other answer but that the existing grammatical 'material' which has been handed down from generation to generation, has been utterly insufficient for that purpose, and will but rarely suggest an accurate answer to many questions considered as doubtful.

Many important points referring to the use of the Tenses have never yet been considered. The results at which we have arrived from the large number of passages collected by us, have established a theory of tenses essentially different from the traditional rules usually met with. We have especially tried to establish the use of tenses in dependent sentences, a point almost entirely neglected heretofore. In regard to the use of the subjunctive and the consecution of tenses, we have likewise established a new and comprehensive theory, founded on a careful investigation of the classical authors. The largest space has been devoted to the discussion of dependent sentences, which, we believe, has not found in our grammars a treatment commensurate with its importance. Here we have generally resorted to the historical treatment, so as to give a complete history of the different forms from their first appearance in the authors (or on ancient monuments) down to the silver age. We believe that this method has in several instances enabled us to settle questions belonging to the most doubtful and difficult points in Latin grammar.

It is proper to remark that, aside from the original sources, we have read none of the many valuable treatises on grammatical subjects in the German philological journals, and none of the many excellent monographs, a very few excepted. We thought that we owed the immense time, which an examination of these treatises would have taken, rather to the Latin authors. Although many a valuable suggestion may have been lost, and although, perhaps, our own views might sometimes have been modified, it yet seemed that every hour devoted to the Latin authors was infinitely more fruitful for our purpose than the same time applied to the study of monographs. In writing this grammar, we had before us the grammatical treatises of Ruddiman, Zumpt, Madvig, Kühner, Meiring, Reisig, the 'Public School Latin Grammar,' and some others. We have duly considered their theories, and when we found their teachings in conflict with the authority of the classics, we have tried to refute the error from the sources. Roby's Syntax was not published till our plates were cast. Hence we could not refer to the views of this grammarian. His collection of valuable material regarding the cases of Latin Nouns might have been a very acceptable assistance.

In respect to the continuance of the 'English Exercises' in this Second Part, we refer to our remarks in the Preface to the First Part.

NEW BRUNSWICK, June, 1875.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

For a more accurate analysis of the single articles, see the Index.

BOOK FOURTH.

- Chapter First. Prepositions § 424, 425; p. 7-11. Definition and function in the sentence § 426. List of prepositions p. 12.— Ad § 427, p. 12-14. Adversus p. 428, p. 15. Ante § 429, p. 15. Apud § 430, p. 16, 17. Circa and circum § 431, p. 18. Inter § 432, p. 18, 19. Ob § 433, p. 20. Per § 434, p. 20, 21. Post, secundum, pone § 435, p. 22. Præter § 436, p. 23. Propter, prope, juxta § 437, p. 23, 24. Cis, extra, intra, infra, penes, supra, trans, ultra, versus § 438, p. 24. Erga and contra Ib. p. 25. Ab, ex, de § 439—§ 444, p. 25-32. Cum § 446, p. 33. Præ § 447, p. 33. Pro § 448, p. 34, 35. Coram, sine, tenus § 449, p. 35, 36. In w. accus. § 450-452, p. 37-42. In with ablative § 453, p. 42-45. Sub § 454, p. 45, 46. Super p. 68.— Names of Cities § 455, p. 46-48.— Exercises p. 48-68.
- Chapter Second. Construction of the Verb. I. Construction in general, in active and passive § 456-460; p. 69 foll.— II. With completing Predicates, Predicate-Nominative § 461-463, p. 73 foll. Predicate-Genitive § 464-467, p. 76 foll. Predicate-Dative § 468-470, p. 81 foll.— III. Verbs with simple objects in Accusative § 471-473, p. 84 foll.— IV. Verbs with simple objects in Dative § 474-477, p. 81 foll.— V. Verbs with simple objects in Genitive and Ablative § 478-479, p. 92 foll.— VI. Verbs with compound objects in oblique cases § 480-487, p. 96 foll.— VII. Verbs construed with Infinitive § 488-495, p. 102 foll.— Exercises p. 109-113.
- Chapter Third. Construction of Adjectives § 496-503, p. 113 foll.— Exercises p. 223, 224.
- Chapter Fourth. Verbal adjectives and Periphrastic Conjugation p. 124 foll. I. Formation of Verbal Adjectives in dus and urus § 504, 505, p. 124 foll.— II. Periphrastic conjugation p. 126 foll. A. In General § 505. B. Periphrastic Participle § 506, p. 127-129. C. Periphrastic Future § 507-510, p. 129 foll. D. Periphrastic Gerund and Gerundive § 511-516, p. 140 foll.— III. Reversed Phrases and Gerundials p. 150 foll. A. In general § 517-523. B. As subjects and transitive objects § 524, 525, p. 156, 157. C. In the genitive § 526, 527, p. 157 foll. D. In the dative § 528, p. 163 foll. E. In the ablative p. 169 foll. 1. Gerundial ablative § 529, p. 169 foll.; 2. Ablative absolute § 530-536, p. 178 foll. F. After prepositions 187 foll. 1. Prepositional Gerundials § 537-544. 2) Prepositions w. participial phrases § 545, p. 198 foll.— Exercises p. 200-213.

BOOK FIFTH.

- Chapter First. Adverbial Relations p. 214 foll. I. Adverbial relations in general § 546, 547, p. 214 foll. II. Place § 548, p. 214—p. 222. III. Time § 549, 550, p. 222-238. IV. Relations of Modality p. 238 foll. A. Manner § 551-553, p. 238-245. B. Coincident action § 554-556, p. 245-260. C. Quantity p. 260 foll. 1) Intensity § 557, 558, p. 260-266. 2) Value and Price § 559-561, p. 266-275. 3) Weight § 562, p. 275-277.— D. Cause § 563-566, p. 277-284.— Exercises p. 284-298.
- Chapter Second. Use of Tenses p. 298 foll. I. Present tense § 567, p. 298-301.— II. Perfect § 568-572, p. 302-305.— III. Imperfect 305 foll. A. General requirements § 573-578, p. 305-328. B. Particular imperfections. 1) Imperfect of contingent action § 579, p. 328-332. 2) Describing Imperfect § 580, p. 332, 333. 3) Historical imperfect § 581, p. 333-336. 4) Imperfect of inner action. A. Direct predicates of inner action § 582, p. 336-338. B. Indirect predicates of inner action § 583, p. 338. a) Imperfect of reference § 584, p. 339-342. b) Imperf. of rule and habit § 585, p. 342-346.— IV. Pluperfect § 586, p. 346, 347.— Future tenses § 587, 588, p. 347-356.— VI. Epistolary tenses § 589, p. 356-360.— Exercises p. 360-377.
- Chapter Third. Use of the Subjunctive 377 foll. I. Potential subjunctive § 591, p. 378. A. Declarative subjunctive § 592, p. 378-381. B. Interrogative subjunctive § 593, p. 381, 382. C. Subjunctive in imperative sentences § 594, p. 382-385.— II. Dependent subjunctive § 595, p. 385. A. Subjunctive of indirect discourse. 1) Direct and indirect statement § 596, 597, p. 385-387. 2) Oblique clauses § 598, p. 387-398. 3) Suboblique clauses § 599, p. 398-404. 4) Quasi-oblique clauses § 600, p. 404-408.— B. Subjunctive by Attraction § 601, p. 408-413.— C. Tenses of the dependent subjunctive § 602, p. 414. 1) Law of consecution § 603, 604, p. 414-422. 2) Logical tenses § 605, 606, p. 422-447. 3) Conversion of tenses § 607, p. 447-455.— Exercises p. 455-471.

BOOK SIXTH.

COMBINATION OF SENTENCES.

- Chapter First. Theory of Sentence-combination § 608, p. 472-479.—Division of clauses § 610, p. 480-494.
- Chapter Second. Relative Clauses p. 494 foll. I. Classification § 611, p. 494-504. II. Antecedents § 612, p. 504-523. III. Construction and signification § 613, p. 523-542. Moods in relative clauses § 614, 615, p. 542-574. IV. Locative clauses § 616, p. 574-576.—Exercises p. 576-587.
- Chapter Third. That-clauses p. 588 foll. I. Completing That-clauses § 617, p. 588. A. Object That-clauses. 1) Verba sentiendi R. 23, p. 588-594. 2) Verba declarandi R. 24, p. 594-599. 3) Verba faciendi R. 25, p. 599-605. 4) Fact-clauses R. 26, p. 605-608.—B. Subject That-clauses R. 27, p. 608 foll. 1) That-clauses as subjects of passive verbs obs. 1, p. 608, 609. 2) That-cl. as subjects of predicate-adjectives obs. 2-7, p. 609-613. 3) That-cl. as subjects of predicate-nouns obs. 8-12, p. 613-615. 4) That-cl. as subjects of impersonal verbs R. 28, p. 615-623. 5) That-cl. as subjects of ordinary active verbs obs. 5-8 p. 623.—C. Attributive That-clauses R. 29, p. 623-628.—D. Predicate That-clauses R. 30, p. 628. E. Inner form of That-clauses R. 31, p. 629-634.—II. Modal That-clauses § 618, p. 635-638.—Exercises p. 639-644.
- Chapter Fourth. Temporal clauses 644 foll. I. Quum-clauses § 619, p. 644. A. Pure temporal Quum-clauses. 1. Adverbial Quum-clauses R. 34, 35, p. 645-653. 2. Attributive Quum-clauses R. 36, p. 653-654.—B. Affected Quum-clauses R. 37-41, p. 654-659.—II. Clauses with postquam, ubi, ut, simulac, quando § 620, p. 659-666.—Clauses with antequam and priusquam § 621, p. 666-671.—IV. Clauses with dum, donec, quoad, quamdiu § 622, p. 671-682.
- Chapter Fifth. Causal clauses. I. Direct cause § 623, p. 682-692. II. Adversative (concessive) cause § 624, p. 692-700.
- Chapter Sixth. Conditional clauses § 625 foll. I. Conditional clauses of doubtful reality R. 44, p. 701 foll. A. Tenses of the indicative in clauses of doubtful reality obs. 1-3, p. 702-704. B. Negative Si-clauses of doubtful reality obs. 4-9, p. 704-709.—C. Tenses of the subjunctive in conditional clauses of doubtful reality obs. 10-20, p. 709-715.—II. Conditional clauses of doubtless reality R. 45, p. 715-717.—III. Conditional periods of non-reality R. 46, p. 717-730.—IV. Improper conditional periods R. 47, p. 731-733.—V. Equivalents and Ellipsis of Si-clauses R. 48, p. 733-735.—VI. Co-ordination of conditional clauses R. 49, p. 736-738.—VII. Particular usage of conditional conjunctions R. 50, p. 738-743.
- Chapter Seventh. Comparative clauses § 626, p. 743 foll. I. Qualitative comparison R. 51, p. 744-749. II. Quantitative comparison 1) of like quantity R. 52, p. 750, 751; 2) of unlike quantity R. 53, p. 752-768.
- Chapter Eighth. Oblique discourse § 627, p. 768-771. Index 773-817.

PART SECOND.

BOOK FOURTH.

PREPOSITIONS.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE VERBS AND ADJECTIVES.
PERIPHRASTICS. GERUNDIALS. PARTICIPIALS.

CHAPTER FIRST.

PREPOSITIONS.

§ 421. PREPOSITIONS are words indicating the different relations of a DEPENDENT SUBSTANTIVE to its governing word. They have the same function as the CASE-ENDINGS, and hence both frequently interchange. But the Case-endings indicate the most general of these relations, while the PREPOSITIONS indicate those special relations which are designated by the term "GRAMMATICAL CIRCUMSTANCES;" that is, the relations of PLACE, TIME, MANNER, INTENSITY, CAUSE (p. 314 foll.).

Rem. 1. The English language expresses the general Case-relations, except that of the Accusative, by Prepositions. We may understand both, the CASE-RELATIONS and the GRAMMATICAL CIRCUMSTANCES best, by representing them in the form of QUESTIONS. Thus we say, that the Genitive answers to the question "Of whom?" or "Of which?" the Dative to the question "To whom?" or "To which?" etc. In the same way we say, that the relation of SPACE or PLACE answers to one of the questions "where?" "whither?" or "whence?" that of TIME to one of the questions "when?" "since when?" "till when?" "how long?" etc.—The DERIVATION of several prepositions is doubtless, for instance that of extra, contra, præter, ultra, etc. In regard to other prepositions, there is a controversy, still undecided, whether they contain original roots, or whether they are derived from verbal or other roots (for inst. in, ab, ex, de, ad).—Some linguists, without adducing any proper proof, are of the opinion that all prepositions, originally, were ADVERBS, and became prepositions when they began to be construed with objects. They overlook the fact that adverbs do not, necessarily, lose their quality as adverbs by being construed with case-objects. See p. 114, R. 98.

Rem. 2. In our rules on the use of Prepositions we generally distinguish three relations: 1) that of PLACE, 2) of TIME, and 3) the INNER RELATIONS, that is, the relations of either Manner, Intensity, or Cause. By far the most of the Prepositions primarily indicate a relation of PLACE or SPACE (Local Relation), and of TIME (Temporal Relation). But nearly all Prepositions have, besides these primary significations, a FIGURATIVE or TROPICAL meaning, when they represent objects of the Mind, as if they were objects of Place. Thus the English preposition "in" originally has a LOCAL meaning, answering to the question "where," as: "I live in the city." But the same preposition is also used FIGURATIVELY or TROPICALLY, as: "I am in danger" or "I am in distress." Here an INTERNAL situation, that is, an object which can only be conceived by the mind, is represented as if it was an EXTERNAL situation of PLACE; that is: The ideas "Danger" and "Distress" are treated as LOCALITIES.

§ 425. The Prepositions are not considered as members of the sentence, since they can neither be the governing, nor the dependent words of Phrases. But they connect words to Phrases, and, like the Case-endings, are the marks of Dependence. They occur either in the OBJECTIVE or in the ATTRIBUTIVE phrase, and the Substantives before which they stand are accordingly divided into PREPOSITIONAL OBJECTS and PREPOSITIONAL ATTRIBUTES.

Rem. 3. The Latin language does not use Prepositional Attributes as frequently and freely as the English language, and English Prepositional Attributes generally are expressed either by LATIN GENITIVES, or by the insertion of PARTICIPLES, as: Bellum Helveticum, a war with the Helvetians; Stadium modestiae, a zeal for modesty; Desiderium tui, a longing for thee; Victoria belli civilis, a victory in a civil war; Consuetudo hominum, the intercourse with men; Gloria belli, the renown in war; Bellum cum Carthaginiensibus gestum, the war with the Carthaginians; Mons prope urbem situs, a mountain near the city; Libri de philosophia scripti, books on philosophy.

Only some relations are expressed by Latin Prepositional Attributes, and these must be chiefly learned by the usage of the Latin authors, as: Aditus ad castra, the access to the camp; Iter ad Helvetios, the road (journey) to the country of the Helvetians; Insula in lacu Praetio, an island in the Praetian lake; Homo de plebe (not plebis), a man of the plebs; Poculum ex auro, a gold goblet; Tua in me amicitia, thy friendship for me.

Rem. 4. Prepositional OBJECTS, like the Case-objects, generally stand before their governing verbs. In the compound objective phrase they generally follow the case-object, except for reasons of emphasis. Prepositional ATTRIBUTES generally follow their governing nouns. In the compound attributive phrase they stand after the adjective or attributive genitive, and before the governing noun, as: Ciceronis de philosophia libri, Cicero's books on philosophy; Magna in castris trepidatio, a great excitement in the camp; Optima tua de me opinio, thy highly favorable opinion about me.

Rem. 5. When the Prepositional Object is the governing noun of an Attribute, the Preposition stands before the whole phrase, as: Per manum dextram, through the right hand; Præter Ciceronis filium, besides Cicero's son. But often monosyllabic prepositions, especially in, de, cum, ex, ab, sometimes also dissyllabic, especially propter and inter, are placed between a preceding adjective and following noun, as: Eodem in loco, in the same place; hoc de viro, on this man; magnâ cum diligentia, with great diligence; maximâ ex parte, for the greatest part.

Rem. 6. Prepositions always precede those nouns whose cases they govern, and whose dependence they mark, except versus and tenus, as: Tauro tenus, up to the Taurus; Hispaniam versus, in the direction of Spain. The preposition cum, belonging to the pronouns me, te, se, nobis, vobis, is affixed to these words as an enclitic. The same is often the case with the disjunct Form-adjectives quo, quibus, and qua, as: Mecum, with me; tecum, with thee; secum, with him; nobiscum, vobiscum, quocum, quibuscum (or cum quo, cum quibus; but not cum me, cum te, etc.).—Sometimes (rarely) inter is placed after the object (quos inter, among whom, Cæs. B. C. 7, 33).

Rem. 7. Prepositional Objects are called REFLEXIVE, when their antecedent is the logical subject of their governing word (§ 233). The English language frequently employs the SIMPLE personal pronouns instead of the reflexives, in Prepositional objects. This never is the case in Latin, as: Diogenes carried all his property with him, Diogenes omnia sua secum portavit. In these instances we always must use the reflexive pronoun in Latin.

But even a non-reflexive pronoun of the third person must take a REFLEXIVE FORM (sui, sibi, se) in Latin in the cases specified §§ 238, 389, and § 423, R. 76, and it makes here no difference, whether the pronominal object is prepositional or only a case-object. The same rules apply to the Possessive suus.

Rem. 8. Since the question, whether the simple or the reflexive Pronouns must be used in a given case, belongs to the more difficult parts of Grammar, we give here these rules in their connection. We call here the forms sui, sibi, se and the Possessive suus REFLEXIVE FORMS, whether they are strictly reflexive or not. The forms, derived from is, ea, id (as eum, him; ejus, his; eorum, their), are here called DEMONSTRATIVE FORMS.

SUMMARY OF THE RULES ON THE USE OF THE REFLEXIVE AND DEMONSTRATIVE FORMS.

1. The use of the REFLEXIVE or DEMONSTRATIVE forms chiefly depends on the PLACE of the ANTECEDENT. The general rule is this: When both Pronoun and Antecedent stand in the same sentence, the REFLEXIVE forms must be used; but, when they stand in different sentences, the DEMONSTRATIVES must be employed.

We consider here all coördinations, even the coördinations of single words as constituting different sentences. Thus the sentence "The queen and her children were killed" consists of two coördinate propositions, which we thus complete: a) The queen was killed; b) her children were killed. Hence the Possessive her and its antecedent queen stand in different sentences, and the possessive assumes the DEMONSTRATIVE form (Regina ejusque liberi occisi sunt).

On the other hand, PARTICIPIAL and INFINITIVE Clauses are here considered as members and phrases of their principal sentence, as: Germanicus legiones universas, sibi summam reipublicæ deferentis, compescuit, Suet. Cal. 1, Germanicus restrained the whole of the legions, offering to him the government of the State. Here the Participial Clause: Sibi summam reipublicæ deferentis is considered as a combination of attributive phrases, dependent on legiones. Hence the pronoun to him stands in the same sentence with its antecedent Germanicus, and must assume the REFLEXIVE FORM (sibi; not ei) in Latin.—Camillus mihi scripsit, te secum locutum esse, Cic. Att. 11, 23, 1. Camillus wrote to me, that thou hadst spoken with him. Here the Pronoun him, dependent on the Predicate-Infinitive locutum esse is considered to be in the same sentence with its antecedent Camillus, and therefore must be expressed by the Reflexive secum (not cum eo).

2. Rule No. 1 unconditionally applies only to the case, when the Antecedent is at the same time the Subject of the sentence, which most generally is the case in sentences of this kind. But when the Antecedent is an Object, which rarely is the case, the usage of the Latin authors is not so clear and certain, as in the first case, although the use of the REFLEXIVE form is even here the RULE; as: Cæsar Fabium cum legione in sua remittit hiberna, Cæs. B. G. 5, 53, Cæsar sends Fabius with the legion to his winter-quarters. — Hammonium suo nomine diligit, Cic. Fam. 13, 21, Love Hammonius for his sake. — Tu autem vicinis Massiliensibus sua reddis, Cic. Att. 14, 14, but thou renderest to the Massilians their own. — Ratio et oratio homines inter se conciliat, Cic. Off. 1, 16, Reason and language bind men to each other (literally among them).

The DEMONSTRATIVE FORM is chiefly employed, when a prepositional Pronoun or Possessive, having an OBJECT as antecedent, may be resolved into a separate clause, or when such a Pronoun or Possessive actually stands in an Infinitive or Participial clause, or when the use of the Reflexive would cause ambiguity; as: Attico nostro litteræ tuæ, suavissime ad eum scriptæ, non jucundiôres fuêrunt, quam mihi, Cic. Fam. 13, 18, 1, To our Atticus thy letter, most pleasantly written to him, was not more agreeable than to me. Here the Pronoun ad eum and its governing participle scriptæ form a participial clause, and hence the antecedent Attico really stands in another clause, although in the case No. 1, that is, when the antecedent is the subject of the sentence, Participial Clauses are considered as members of the principal sentence. — Semper amavi Brutum propter ejus summum ingenium, Cic. Fam. 9, 14, 5, I always loved Brutus on account of his great genius (that is: Because he is a man of great genius). Fit obviam Clodio ante fundum ejus, Cic. Mil., He meets Clodius before his place (better: before the place of the latter). Here ejus shows, that the subject (Milo) is not meant, which when suius were used, would remain undecided. Aranti Cincinnato nuntiatum est, eum dictatorem esse factum, Cic. Sen. 16, 56, To Cincinnatus while ploughing, it was announced, that he was made a dictator. Here the Pronoun eum in the Infinitive-clause has the DEMONSTRATIVE form, because its antecedent is an object. But when the antecedent is the logical subject (although it has the form of an object), we must even in this case employ the REFLEXIVE form, as: Faustulo spes fuerat, regium stirpem apud se educari, Liv. 1, 5, Faustulus had entertained the hope (literally: to Faustulus had been the hope) that the royal offspring would be brought up in his house.

When the Antecedent is an ATTRIBUTE, the pronoun always assumes the DEMONSTRATIVE form. This case is extremely rare. See § 238.

3. When the Pronoun or Possessive stands in a FINITE CLAUSE, and the antecedent is in the Principal sentence, we must use the DEMONSTRATIVE FORM. This follows from Rule No. 1; as: Hoc ipsis Siculis ita persuasum est, ut in animis eorum insitum atque innatum esse videatur, Cic. Verr. 4, 48, The Sicilians themselves are so satisfied of this fact, that it seems to have grown and to be born in their minds.

But when a PERSONAL ANTECEDENT is the LOGICAL SUBJECT of the principal sentence, and the clause is represented as being conceived by this subject, so that he (the subject) means himself by the Pronoun, or his things by the Possessive, we must use the REFLEXIVE, not the DEMONSTRATIVE

FORMS. This refers to all kinds of clauses, whether they are introduced by ut, si, quod, quia, or any other conjunction, and to Relative Clauses and indirect Questions; as: Datames locum delegit talem, ut non multum obsessa multitudo hostium suæ paucitati posset, Datames selected a place of this kind, lest the great number of the enemies could do much damage to his small force. Nep. Dat. 7, 3. This clause contains a purpose of Datames, and he means by the Possessive his own things. — Cassius constituit ut ludi absente te fierent suo nomine, Cassius has resolved, that the games in thy absence should be given in his name. Cic. Att. 15, 11, 2. This clause contains a resolution of Cassius, and he means by his himself. — A Cæsare valde liberaliter invitator sibi ut sim legatus, Cic. Att. 2, 183, I am very liberally invited by Cæsar, to be his delegate. This clause contains an invitation of Cæsar, the logical Subject, and he means himself by sibi. — Africanus si sua res ageretur, testimonium non diceret, Africanus, if his cause was tried, would not be a witness. Cic. Rosc. Am. 36, 3. Here the clause si sua res ageretur is represented as conceived by Africanus, as if it was said, that he would refuse testimony if his case were tried. — Decima legio Cæsari gratias egit, quod de se optimum judicium fecisset, Cæs. B. G. 1, 41, The tenth legion thanked Cæsar for having passed the best judgment on them (that is: for having declared them the best legion). — Pætus omnes libros, quos frater suus reliquisset, mihi donavit, Cic. Att. 2, 1, Pætus gave me all books, which his brother had left to him.<sup>2</sup>

When finite Clauses are thus represented as being conceived by the Subject of the principal sentence, the mood of the clause always is the SUBJUNCTIVE, subject to the law of consecution. For a peculiar exception see p. 401, n. 4.

Rem. 9. The verb esse frequently is used as the governing word of prepositional and other classes of objects without being connected with a predicative adjective or noun. This verb must then not be considered as a copula. Esse in connection with objects has the signification of a real verb. We generally, but not always, use in English the verb “to be” in a similar sense. Thus, in connection with the preposition in, the verb esse has the meaning “to stay,” “to sojourn,” as: In Megarâ fui, I was (stayed) in Megara. With ex it means the source from which something is derived, as in the idiom “e republica esse,” to be of advantage for the republic, which properly means: “to come from the republic.” With a dative object esse has the meaning “to belong;” and with the prepositions ante, post, pro, contra the meaning of esse again is different.

§ 426. Prepositional Objects or Attributes stand either in the ACCUSATIVE or in the ABLATIVE. Each preposition governs<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Sentences like this may be represented as not conceived by the subject, but as conceived by the author. In this case the DEMONSTRATIVE Form is used. Thus it would by no means be faulty, to use in the above sentence ejus instead of sua. In sentences, whose principal predicates do not distinctly show, that the clause is meant to be a conception of the SUBJECT, both, the DEMONSTRATIVE and the REFLEXIVE forms are used at the choice of the author, and according as he means the clause to be understood. From this we ought not to infer, that every possible clause may be conceived in both ways, and that consequently the use of either form always may be defended. This is by no means the case. On the contrary, such sentences, where indeed both forms may be used with equal propriety, are but very few, and in by far the greatest number of sentences only one of the two forms must be considered as the proper one.

<sup>2</sup> Here by the Reflexive form suius the author indicates, that the clause quos frater suus reliquisset was said by Pætus himself, when he made the donation. The Principal Predicate donavit has thus the force of dixit se donare.

<sup>3</sup> The Preposition is said to govern the CASE of the object, not the object as such, the preposition being itself part of the object.

either the one or the other of these cases. Only four prepositions may be construed as well with the Accusative as with the Ablative.

The following Prepositions govern the ACCUSATIVE :

|                                       |                                  |
|---------------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Ad, to (direction to).                | ob, on account of.               |
| adversus, against.                    | penes, in the power of.          |
| ante, before.                         | per, through, by.                |
| apud, at.                             | pone (rare), behind.             |
| circa, about.                         | post, after.                     |
| circum, around.                       | præter, except, besides.         |
| cis (citra), on this side.            | prope, near.                     |
| contra, against (hostile).            | propter, on account of.          |
| erga, toward (direction of the mind). | secundum, along.                 |
| extra, outside.                       | supra, over.                     |
| infra, below.                         | trans, across.                   |
| inter, between, among.                | ultra, beyond.                   |
| intra, within.                        | versus (versum), toward (local). |
| juxta, next to.                       |                                  |

The following Prepositions govern the ABLATIVE :

|   |                        |
|---|------------------------|
| A (ab, abs), from.                        | e (ex), from (out of). |
| absque (rare and anteclassical), without. | præ, before (rare).    |
| coram, in the presence of.                | pro, for.              |
| cum, with.                                | sine, without.         |
| de, from (away from).                     | tenus, up to.          |

The following Prepositions take either the ABLATIVE or ACCUSATIVE :

|                              |                       |                                     |
|------------------------------|-----------------------|-------------------------------------|
| in, in (abl.); into (accus.) | subter (rare), under. | } Nearly alwayswith Accusative. |
| sub, under.                  | super, over.          |                                     |

§ 427. Ad has the primary meaning "near to." 1) In LOCAL relations it answers to both questions, "where?" and "whither?", and is translated by to in answer to the question "whither" (denoting direction to), and by at (by or near) in answer to the question "where;" as ad urbem ire, to go to (near to) the city; ad Cæsarem proficisci, to go to Cæsar; ad tumultum pugnare, to fight at (by, near) a hill; ad fluvium advenire or pervenire, to arrive at the river; pugna ad Cannas, the battle at (of) Cannæ (not Cannarum).

2) FIGURATIVELY (tropically, see Rem. 2) ad expresses a TENDENCY OR AIM toward a point, or a PURPOSE for or toward some end, and is translated by to or for, as: Ad prudentiam revocare, to recall to prudence; ad bellum paratum esse, to be prepared (ready) for war; aptus ad hanc artem, fit, adapted to this art; ad summa omnia natus, born for the highest ends.

3) In relations of TIME it answers to the question: "Till what time?" and is translated by to or till, as: Ad tricesimum annum vixit, he lived to his thirtieth year; ad vesperum dimicare, to fight till evening.

Rem. 10. Ad is frequently strengthened by the adverb usque (p. 216, 7), which in this connection generally is translated by up to or as far as, and is placed either before ad, or after the OBJECT, as: Usque ad Rhenum, or ad Rhenum usque venire, to come up to (as far as) the Rhine; usque ad senectutem, or ad senectutem usque, up to old age. In internal relations usque expresses intensity and degree (Rem. 13), as: ad furorē usque excitare, to excite up to fury, to a degree of fury.

Rem. 11. The first difficulty, which the student meets in the use of this preposition, is to distinguish it from the relation of the DATIVE CASE. In purely LOCAL relations, that is, when the object is a REAL PLACE, this distinction is very clear. In such relations the English preposition to, answering to the question "whither" or "where" can never be translated by the Dative, as: I come to the shore, ad oram venio (not oræ venio). But the object of a local relation is not always an expressed place, but may be a PERSON or other THING, represented as occupying a place. Thus the sentence "I come to Cæsar" contains a LOCAL relation, since it refers to the place, where Cæsar is. Local relations of this kind generally are clearly indicated by the PREDICATE, and when the Predicate is a verb of MOTION, we must translate the English "to" by a Latin Preposition, and not by the Dative, as: I flee to Cæsar, ad Cæsarem (not Cæsari) fugio; he hastens to battle, ad pugnam properat (not pugnæ); he rides to the general, ad ducem adequitat (not duci).

There are however verbs, which only presuppose a motion, but do not express it clearly, as: to send, to call, to bring. The rule is here, to use ad, not the dative, as: I send ambassadors to Cæsar, Legatos ad Cæsarem mitto; I call Sejus to me, Sejum ad me voco (not mihi); He brings the book to his brother, Librum ad fratrem affert (but see p. 90, R. 45. 46). But some verbs (to restore, to write, to hand, to deliver, etc.) might appear of a doubtful nature, and indeed we find several verbs construed either with a Dative, or with ad. In cases of this kind we must refer principally to the usage of the Latin authors. These construe certain verbs always with a Dative, others always with ad, and others sometimes with a Dative, sometimes with ad, often according to different meanings of the same verb. Thus all verbs, which contain or imply the idea of giving are construed with the Dative of the receiver. The verb to return for instance, when it is a verb of MOTION is translated by redire, reverti, regredi, etc., and construed with ad or in (ad patrem redire); but when it implies the idea of GIVING, it is translated by reddere (re-dare) and construed with the Dative (librum amico reddere). The sentence "He returned the hostages to the king" may be expressed by a verb of GIVING (reddere), and then we must use the Dative (obsides regi reddidit), or by a verb, expressing a motion (as reducere, to return, in the meaning to bring back or lead back), and then the preposition ad must be used (obsides ad regem reduxit).

The verb mittere usually is construed with ad, but it is found also with the Dative, when the PERSON, to whom something is sent, is conceived as the RECEIVER, as: to send ambassadors to the king, legatos ad regem mittere; but: to send a letter to the king, litteras regi or ad regem mittere. The verb scribere may be construed with ad or the Dative, as: epistolam ad fratrem or fratri scribere.<sup>1</sup> But here the Dative is more usual. The verb restituere (to restore) is construed with ad or the Dative. "To restore a thing to a person" is expressed by restituere with the DATIVE of the receiver (as: librum fratri restituere); but "to restore something to a former state" is expressed by restituere with the preposition in, or by redigere with the preposition ad (in honorem restituere, in patriam restituere, disciplinam ad pristinos mores redigere).

The verbs preferre and anteponere (to prefer), although ferre and ponere originally denote LOCAL relations, nevertheless are construed with the Dative only, since the one that prefers something to another thing is not conceived as bringing it to, but before the preferred thing.

Verbs, which originally denote or imply a local direction, generally are construed with ad, and not with the Dative, even when the relation is FIGURATIVE. Thus the verbs vocare, revocare, reducere, adducere, referre, redigere, conferre, deferre, accedere, pertinere, attinere must be construed with ad, as: Aliquem ad sanitatem revocare, to recall somebody to reason; aliquem ad bellum inducere, to induce somebody to a war; ad senatum referre, to report to the Senate; hoc ad me pertinet or attinet, this concerns me (literally: it pertains to me). Accedere ad aliquid properly means "to go near to something," and tropically: to be added to something, as: Accedit ad hoc, It is added to this<sup>2</sup> (it must be added to this, that, etc.) Hoc multum ad dignitatem confert, this contributes much to dignity. We sometimes express ad in such relations by other prepositions than to, as; Summum imperium ad aliquem deferre or transferre, to confer or transfer the command on somebody (but deferre is also construed with the dative).

Rem. 12. The preposition to before names of COUNTRIES is translated by in, not by ad. Before PLACES in general, ad expresses, that the aim of a motion rather is to a point near a place, than to the place itself; as ad fluvium, ad littus ire, to go to a river, to the sea-shore; ad urbem, to a place before a city, but in urbem to the city itself. For this nice distinction of the Latin language, which generally is disregarded in English, see § 450 and Rem. 70.

Rem. 13. The preposition ad frequently is used, to express 1) the idea according to (see the prepositions secundum, ex, pro), 2) the idea up to, even to. In both instances ad corresponds to its original meaning near to, approaching to, as: Ad voluntatem (nutum) alicujus loqui, to speak according to somebody's will (hint); ad hunc modum, in this way, after this manner (according to this fashion); quem ad modum (quemadmodum), how, according to what manner. Ad necem aliquem cadere, to strike some one to death (even to death, up to death); ad mille homines, about 1000 men, as many as 1000 men (a synonym of circiter, § 406).

<sup>1</sup> Librum ad aliquem scribere means: To dedicate a book to somebody. Librum alicui scribere would mean: To write a book for somebody.—Epistolam ad aliquem dare,= to send a letter to somebody; ep. alicui dare,=to give somebody a letter.

<sup>2</sup> Generally translated by the imperative sentence: Add to this, that, etc. See p. 622, 1.

Rem. 14. IDIOMS.—Ad tempus has three meanings: 1) in time (at the right time); 2) for a time; 3) according to time (and circumstances). Ad verbum, verbatim, word for word. —Ad annum, next year.—Ad extremum, at last.—Ad diem, ad horam, at the (appointed) day or hour.—Ad unum omnes, all without exception.—Ad summam, on the whole.—Hoc nihil ad me, this does not concern me.—Nihil ad Ciceronem est, he is nothing in comparison with Cicero.

§ 428. Adversus (adversum) means 1) opposite to (over against); 2) toward or against in local and internal relations, in a hostile, indifferent, or even friendly sense.

Rem. 15. Adversus in a local sense answers either to the question "where" or to "whither." When it answers to the question "where" it means opposite, over against, indicating a situation, as compared with another situation. In this sense it is a synonym of the preposition contra and of the expression e regione with a genitive, as: Mons adversus Tarentum (or contra Tarentum, or e regione Tarenti), a mountain opposite (over against) Tarent. When it answers to the question "whither" in a local sense, it expresses direction toward and is then a synonym of versus, or in connection with the idea of HOSTILITY, and is then a synonym of contra; as hostes adversus fluvium (or ad fluvium versus, or fluvium versus) iter faciunt, the enemies march toward the river. Quinctius dictator adversus Galliam (contra Galliam) missus est, the dictator Quinctius was sent against Gaul.

Rem. 16. ADVERSUS in INTERNAL relations is either translated by against or toward. It is employed 1) in hostile directions, and is then equivalent to contra and in, as: bellum adversus (or contra, or in) Jugurtham gessit, he waged a war against Jugurtha. 2) In indifferent or friendly relations it is a synonym of erga or in, as: Quonam modo me gererem adversus (in or erga) Cæsarem, usus tuo consilio sum, I have made use of thy advice, how I should behave toward Cæsar. Ob egregium fidem adversus (erga or in) populum Romanum, for his excellent faith toward the Roman people.

We generally employ contra, to express hostile relations, erga to express friendly relations, and adversus to express indifferent relations. For the difference from in, see Rem. 72.

§ 429. Ante (before) is used 1) in LOCAL relations, answering to both questions "where" and "whither," as: Castra ante oppidum posita, the camp, placed before the town; ante signa progressus, having proceeded before the standards. 2) In relations of TIME (question "when"), as: ante lucem, before day-break; ante Socratem, before (the time of) Socrates. 3) In COMPARISON (more than), as: quem ante me diligo, whom I love before myself (more than myself).

Rem. 17. The TEMPORAL preposition ante always implies a comparison (§ 311, Rem. 10). Therefore it is construed with an ablative of difference, but it has then the force of an ADVERB. Paucis diebus ante, or paucis ante diebus means: "a few days before". In this connection ante is chiefly used with expressions denoting the division of time (day, year, etc.), qualified by numerals, as: Voverat eam statuam annis undecim ante L. Æmilius. Liv. 40, 52; Æmilius had vowed this statue eleven years before (i. e.

to return, in the meaning to bring back or lead back), and then the preposition ad must be used (obsides ad regem reduxit).

The verb mittere usually is construed with ad, but it is found also with the Dative, when the PERSON, to whom something is sent, is conceived as the RECEIVER, as: to send ambassadors to the king, legatos ad regem mittere; but: to send a letter to the king, litteras regi or ad regem mittere. The verb scribere may be construed with ad or the Dative, as: epistolam ad fratrem or fratri scribere.<sup>1</sup> But here the Dative is more usual. The verb restituere (to restore) is construed with ad or the Dative. "To restore a thing to a person" is expressed by restituere with the DATIVE of the receiver (as: librum fratri restituere); but "to restore something to a former state" is expressed by restituere with the preposition in, or by redigere with the preposition ad (in honorem restituere, in patriam restituere, disciplinam ad pristinos mores redigere).

The verbs preferre and anteponere (to prefer), although ferre and ponere originally denote LOCAL relations, nevertheless are construed with the Dative only, since the one that prefers something to another thing is not conceived as bringing it to, but before the preferred thing.

Verbs, which originally denote or imply a local direction, generally are construed with ad, and not with the Dative, even when the relation is FIGURATIVE. Thus the verbs vocare, revocare, reducere, adducere, referre, redigere, conferre, deferre, accedere, pertinere, attinere must be construed with ad, as: Aliquem ad sanitatem revocare, to recall somebody to reason; aliquem ad bellum inducere, to induce somebody to a war; ad senatum referre, to report to the Senate; hoc ad me pertinet or attinet, this concerns me (literally: it pertains to me). Accedere ad aliquid properly means "to go near to something," and tropically: to be added to something, as: Accedit ad hoc, It is added to this<sup>2</sup> (it must be added to this, that, etc.) Hoc multum ad dignitatem confert, this contributes much to dignity. We sometimes express ad in such relations by other prepositions than to, as; Summum imperium ad aliquem deferre or transferre, to confer or transfer the command on somebody (but deferre is also construed with the dative).

Rem. 12. The preposition to before names of COUNTRIES is translated by in, not by ad. Before PLACES in general, ad expresses, that the aim of a motion rather is to a point near a place, than to the place itself; as ad fluvium, ad littus ire, to go to a river, to the sea-shore; ad urbem, to a place before a city, but in urbem to the city itself. For this nice distinction of the Latin language, which generally is disregarded in English, see § 450 and Rem. 70.

Rem. 13. The preposition ad frequently is used, to express 1) the idea according to (see the prepositions secundum, ex, pro), 2) the idea up to, even to. In both instances ad corresponds to its original meaning near to, approaching to, as: Ad voluntatem (nutum) alienus loqui, to speak according to somebody's will (hint); ad hunc modum, in this way, after this manner (according to this fashion); quem ad modum (quemadmodum), how, according to what manner. Ad necem aliquem cadere, to strike some one to death (even to death, up to death); ad mille homines, about 1000 men, as many as 1000 men (a synonym of circiter, § 406).

<sup>1</sup> Librum ad aliquem scribere means: To dedicate a book to somebody. Librum alicui scribere would mean: To write a book for somebody.—Epistolam ad aliquem dare,=to send a letter to somebody; ep. alicui dare,=to give somebody a letter.

<sup>2</sup> Generally translated by the imperative sentence: Add to this, that, etc. See p. 622, 1.

Rem. 14. Idioms.—Ad tempus has three meanings: 1) in time (at the right time); 2) for a time; 3) according to time (and circumstances). Ad verbum, verbatim, word for word.—Ad annum, next year.—Ad extremum, at last.—Ad diem, ad horam, at the (appointed) day or hour.—Ad unum omnes, all without exception.—Ad summam, on the whole.—Hoc nihil ad me, this does not concern me.—Nihil ad Ciceronem est, he is nothing in comparison with Cicero.

§ 428. Adversus (adversum) means 1) opposite to (over against); 2) toward or against in local and internal relations, in a hostile, indifferent, or even friendly sense.

Rem. 15. Adversus in a local sense answers either to the question "where" or to "whither." When it answers to the question "where" it means opposite, over against, indicating a situation, as compared with another situation. In this sense it is a synonym of the preposition contra and of the expression e regione with a genitive, as: Mons adversus Tarentum (or contra Tarentum, or e regione Tarenti), a mountain opposite (over against) Tarent. When it answers to the question "whither" in a local sense, it expresses direction toward and is then a synonym of versus, or in connection with the idea of HOSTILITY, and is then a synonym of contra; as hostes adversus fluvium (or ad fluvium versus, or fluvium versus) iter faciunt, the enemies march toward the river. Quinctius dictator adversus Galliam (contra Galliam) missus est, the dictator Quinctius was sent against Gaul.

Rem. 16. ADVERSUS in INTERNAL relations is either translated by against or toward. It is employed 1) in hostile directions, and is then equivalent to contra and in, as: bellum adversus (or contra, or in) Jugurtham gessit, he waged a war against Jugurtha. 2) In indifferent or friendly relations it is a synonym of erga or in, as: Quonam modo me gererem adversus (in or erga) Cesarem, usus tuo consilio sum, I have made use of thy advice, how I should behave toward Caesar. Ob egregium fidem adversus (erga or in) populum Romanum, for his excellent faith toward the Roman people.

We generally employ contra, to express hostile relations, erga to express friendly relations, and adversus to express indifferent relations. For the difference from in, see Rem. 72.

§ 429. Ante (before) is used 1) in LOCAL relations, answering to both questions "where" and "whither," as: Castra ante oppidum posita, the camp, placed before the town; ante signa progressus, having proceeded before the standards. 2) In relations of TIME (question "when"), as: ante lucem, before day-break; ante Socratem, before (the time of) Socrates. 3) In COMPARISON (more than), as: quem ante me diligo, whom I love before myself (more than myself).

Rem. 17. The TEMPORAL preposition ante always implies a comparison (§ 311, Rem. 10). Therefore it is construed with an ablative of difference, but it has then the force of an ADVERB. Paucis diebus ante, or paucis ante diebus means: "a few days before". In this connection ante is chiefly used with expressions denoting the division of time (day, year, etc.), qualified by numerals, as: Voverat eam statuam annis undecim ante L. Aemilium. Liv. 40, 52; Aemilius had vowed this statue eleven years before (i. e.

before the time spoken of, = ante id tempus). In such constructions, the accusative belonging to ante is UNDERSTOOD, and ante passes over into an ADVERB. More rarely ante takes such numeral expressions in the accusative, having the force of a preposition proper. For the use of ante in relations of time see p. 224, 10; p. 230, 3; p. 231, 2; p. 198.

"A few days earlier than, etc.," is translated either by paucis ante diebus quam, or by paucis diebus prius quam. The preposition before with a verbal noun in ing, and the conjunction "before" are translated by the Latin conjunctions antequam (antequam) or priusquam, which consist of the adverbs ante and prius, combined into one word with the comparative conjunction quam. The English verbal noun in ing must then be resolved into a finite clause, as: Cato, before leaving the city, wrote to Cicero, etc., Cato priusquam urbem relinqueret (or reliquit), scripsit ad Ciceronem, etc.

Rem. 18. "Before to-day" is not expressed by ante hunc diem, but by prius quam hodie. Before day is not expressed by ante diem, but by: ante lucem. Ante diem means, "before the proper time," "prematurely." The expressions before all things, before all men, before the rest, meaning preference, may be either rendered by ante omnia, (ante omnes, ante ceteros), or by primum omnium, imprimis, or præcipue, or by præter omnes, præter ceteros (see § 436).

§ 430. Apud in LOCAL relations denotes at (near by), but it is chiefly employed as the exponent of a relation, for which the English language has no adequate expression, and which may be designated as the RELATION OF PERSONS IN A LOCAL SENSE. In this sense apud stands always before an object denoting PERSONS, but indicates at the same time, that the action happens at a PLACE, to which the mentioned persons stand in a certain relation. In order to render this preposition into English, we either use local expressions (in the house of, in the country of, etc.), or we employ the prepositions among, with, by, before, in, according to the connection between the Persons and the indicated Place, as: Apud patrem fui, I have been in the house of (with) my father. Apud Gallos mos est, it is customary with the Gauls (or among the Gauls, in the country of the Gauls, in Gaul). Manlium apud populum accusavit, he accused Manlius before the people (at the place, where the people assembles).

Rem. 19. Apud before the name of a PLACE is translated by near, at, by, and is then a synonym of ad in its second local signification, as: Apud Caudium pugnaverunt, they fought at (near) Caudium. Apud in this sense chiefly is used before NAMES of cities (villages) and islands, while the preposition ad has a general application. Expressions as: apud fluvium, apud mare, apud hortum in correct language are unusual, while such expressions as apud Cannas, apud Actium, apud Leucades insulas are frequently met with. For the distinction from prope, propter, juxta and circa see § 437, R. 42. For the translation of the English preposition at, denoting in, see § 453, R. 75.

Rem. 20. The translation of apud before Persons often is difficult and awkward, since we generally cannot reach the full meaning, which the Latin connects with this preposition. We must distinguish here the different relations of the mentioned Persons to the implied place.

1) When the OWNER of the place is meant, we use the preposition with, or at with a Possessive Case, or the expressions "in the house of," "in the place of," as: Achilles apud Chironem educatus est, Achilles was brought up in the house of Chiron. Heri apud patrem cœnavi, Yesterday I dined at my father's, with my father (merely in the company of my father would be: cum patre meo, see § 446). Apud me commoratur, he stays with me, in my house, in my place, in my room.

2) When the INHABITANTS of a country or city are meant, we sometimes employ the preposition among (but see § 432, R. 25), sometimes with, or the expressions in the country of, in the city of, or we substitute the name of the country, district or city with the preposition in, as: Hoc apud Germanos minus tolerabatur, this was less tolerated among the Germans, with the Germans or in Germany.<sup>1</sup> Prior horum apud Massagètes in prælio cecidit, Nep. Reg. 1, the former of these fell in battle in the country of the Massagetes. Apud Massilienses respublica a delectis administratur, With the Massilians (or in the city of the Massilians, in Massilia) the government is administered by selectmen. Sometimes apud before names of nations has the meaning of a Passive Agent, when an action is represented as being done by a whole nation, especially in regular periods, as: Apud Egyptios falcibus metitur, By the Egyptians harvesting is done by means of sickles. For the distinction of apud with inter and in see Rem. 76. 77.

3) Sometimes by apud the regular incumbents or occupants of certain public places are indicated, for instance the WHOLE PEOPLE in regard to the regular places of their assemblies, the JUDGES in regard to the forum or the court-house, the Senate in regard to the Senate-hall, the soldiers in regard to their places of assembly in the camp. Here we use the preposition "before" (where ante, § 429, would not be at its place), as: Apud plebem verba facere, to speak before the people (in a public place, where they assemble for this purpose); apud iudices (senatum) causam dicere, to plead one's cause before the judges (the Senate); apud milites concionari, to deliver a speech before the soldiers (to harangue the soldiers).

4) Often by apud the AUTHOR in regard to his work (a passage in an author) is indicated. Here we use the preposition in, as: hoc apud Ciceronem legi, I have read this in Cicero (in Cicerone would be a barbarous Latin).

Rem. 21. This relation is figuratively transferred from a REAL to an IDEAL place. We use then the prepositions with, among, or by. Thus apud is frequently connected with maiores, as: Hoc nunquam apud maiores nostros factum est, This never happened with our forefathers, or this was never done by our forefathers. Apud viros bonos gratiam consecuti sumus, We have found favor with good men. Here all good men are conceived as belonging to one common, ideal place (the abode of the good). Thus must be explained the expression apud exercitum esse, to be in the army, which is used of soldiers, belonging to the army.

Rem. 22. Apud in this sense also is used in connection with verbs of MOTION, and must then be translated by to and a possessive case, as: apud

<sup>1</sup> The Latin would not use in this connection the expression in Germania, by which the country as such, the land is designated.

patrem me contuli, I went to my father's (to the house of my father); but ad patrem me contuli, I went to my father.

§ 431. Circum or circa, both meaning around or about, are used in references to PLACES, as: urbes circa (circum) Capuam, the cities around (about) Capua. Circa (not circum) is used of uncertain TIME, as: circa eandem horam, about the same hour.

Rem. 23. Both circum and circa mean 1) being or going around something (wholly or partially) as: Plenum est forum, plena templa circa forum, Cic. Cat. 4, 7, 14, The forum is full, full are the temples around (surrounding) the forum. Terra circum axem se summā celeritate convertit, The earth turns upon its axis with the greatest rapidity.—2) Both prepositions are used of PERSONS, that surround somebody as attendants or friends, as: Ex eis trecentos juvenes inermis circa se habebat, Liv. 29, 1, 2, Of these he had 300 unarmed young men about him (around his person).—3) Both prepositions are used of an uncertain place in the neighborhood of some locality (somewhere about), as: Ceterum ego aut ad te conferam me, aut etiam nunc circum hæc loca commorabor, For the rest I shall either come to thee, or shall still longer stay somewhere about this neighborhood.

Rem. 24. In regard to TIME, circa (not circum) is used (first by Livy) to designate a point of time at which an action happens, without vouching for exactness (= about): Circa eandem horam rex copias admovit; About the same hour the king brought his troops along. Liv. 42, 57.—In the same sense circiter occurs as semi-preposition with the designation of time in the ACCUSATIVE: Circiter meridiem exercitum in castra reduxit; About noon he took the army back to the camp. Cæs. B. G. 1, 49. In Cicero it thus occurs only in epistolary style: Scriptum erat, te in Epirum idrum circiter Kalendas Sextiles; That you would go to Epirus about the first of July. Cic. Att. 5, 18, 1 (Comp. Cic. Fam. 14, 5, 2; Ib. 15, 3, 2).—Circiter is also used as PARTICLE in regard to 'NUMBER' (P. I. p. 299, § 406): Circiter parte tertiā in oppido retenti; About the third part being retained in the town. Cæs. B. G. 2, 32. When thus referring to numerical relations of TIME, the designation of time retains the same case it would have without circiter: Dies circiter quindecim iter fecerunt; They marched about fifteen days. Cæs. B. G. 1, 5. Redito huc circiter meridiē; Return here about noon. Plaut. Most. 3, 1, 52. For circa, circum, and circiter as local adverbs, see p. 219.

Later writers use the preposition circa of internal relations, with the meaning concerning, as publica circa bonas artis socordia, the public indifference about (concerning) the liberal arts. Tac. Ann. 11, 15. This use commences with Quintilian.

§ 432. Inter 1) in LOCAL RELATION means in the midst of, between or among places, things or persons, as: inter Pelium et Ossam, between Pelion and Ossa; inter saucios relictus, left behind among the wounded. 2) In relations of TIME it means during, within, in the course of, as: inter duos annos, during (within, in the course of) two years. 3) It expresses DIFFERENCE between two or more persons or things, as: Diserimen inter fortis et temerarios, the difference between brave and fool-hardy men. Nihil interest inter vos et me, there is no difference between you and me. 4) It is used in connection with the plural of a reflexive pronoun as the exponent of the RECIPROCAL RELATION, meaning each other, one another, as: Inter nos differimus, we differ one from another; inter se pugnant, they fight with each other; inter se amant, they love each other.

Rem. 25. The Latin has for both of our prepositions between and among only one word, inter. When inter stands before Personal nouns in the plural, and is translated by among, it is a synonym of apud (Rem. 20). Thus instead of apud Gallos mos erat, we may also say inter Gallos mos erat. But by apud we designate the Gauls in their own country, which relation is disregarded with inter, although both expressions may actually mean the same thing. When I say, Inter Gallos eram, I mean, that I was among Gauls, perhaps in Rome or at any place within or without Gaul. But apud Gallos eram means, that I was in Gaul itself. Thus inter hostis means "among the enemy, among foes in general" (at whatever place), but "apud hostis" means, among the enemy at their regular station.

A peculiar idiom is "inter falearios" (among the scythe-makers); "inter lignarios" (among the carpenters), meaning the quarter of the city, where the persons, belonging to this trade, lived.<sup>1</sup> Apud lignarios, etc., would mean in the houses of the carpenters, etc.

Rem. 26. The preposition inter in the TEMPORAL relation, denotes either a PERIOD of time, within which an action happens, or accompanying circumstances, which happened at the same time with the action. We express the latter relation sometimes by amid; as: Omnia quæ inter decem annos nefarie flagitiosèque facta sunt, Everything, that has been done criminally and disgracefully within (during, in the course of) ten years. Cic. Verr. 1, 13. Hæc inter cenam Tironi dictavi, I have dictated this to Tiro during dinner. Cic. Qu. frat. 3, 1, 6. For the difference of inter tempus, per tempus, and in tempore, see Rem. 33 and Rem. 79. Here belongs the adverb interea (formed from inter and the adverb eō), which is used to connect sentences, and translated by: "In the mean while."

Rem. 27. To the idea of DIFFERENCE, belongs also the idea of DISTINCTION and PREFERENCE, which is expressed by inter in a meaning similar to that of the Partitive Genitive after Superlatives (§ 375), as: In oratoribus vero admirabile est, quantum inter omnes unus excellat, But in regard to the orators, it is remarkable, how much one is distinguished among (before) all. Cic. Orat. 2, 6.

Rem. 28. The reciprocal relation<sup>2</sup> in Latin is generally expressed by the preposition inter before a PLURAL REFLEXIVE PRONOUN (of any person), whatever may be the English preposition by which the reciprocal pronoun each other is introduced, as: Inter nos pugnamus, we fight against each other; inter vos diffiditis, you distrust each other; inter se distant, they are distant from each other; inter se connubium habent, they (for inst. races or nations) have intermarriage with each other; inter se obtrectant, they slan-

<sup>1</sup> According to this analogy we might call the so-called Swamp in the City of New York, "inter coriarios," among the leather-dealers, and Wall-street or Exchange Place inter argentarios.

<sup>2</sup> Grammatically considered the RECIPROCAL relation is a REFLEXIVE relation with more than one subject. In both relations the objects and subjects are identical, and each subject is the performer and sufferer of the action, expressed by the predicate. But this identity refers in the RECIPROCAL relation only to the AGGREGATE of the subjects, while in the REFLEXIVE relation the identity of performing and suffering is individual.

der each other; inter se conciliantur, they are reconciled to each other; inter se timent, they are afraid of each other; colles propinqui inter se, hills, near to each other; haec inter se continentur, these things are dependent on each other.

Rem. 29. The preposition inter in the reciprocal relation sometimes is omitted, when no ambiguity arises, as: They love each other, se se amant (inst. of inter se amant). The reciprocal relation may also be expressed by mere nouns, as: The mutual trial of strength between Gaius and Sejus, (mutuum) inter Gaium et Sejum certamen. Later writers often express the reciprocal relation by the adverb invicem, which in classical language usually means 'in turn,' as: Quintil. S. 5, 27: Cum illa insistere invicem nequeant (instead of inter se insistere), since these things are not consistent with each other.

Rem. 30. Idioms. — Inter peregrinos (Latinos, etc.) ius dicere, to be a judge for foreign born (Latin, etc.) inhabitants. Quaestio inter sicarios, "a trial for a-sassination," an expression which has not yet been sufficiently explained. (Inter sicarios most probably are the first two words of an ancient law, probably the lex Cornelia de sicariis.)

§ 433. Ob, as to its local meaning, is in classical prose confined to 'ob oculos' (before one's eyes), and 'ob viam' (on the way). It generally denotes CAUSE, as a synonym of propter (for).

Rem. 31. Aliquid ob oculos habere, = to have something before one's eyes; aliquid ob oculos versatur, something is before one's eyes. Ob viam (or obviam), in connection with verbs of motion, is rendered 'to meet', and construed with a DATIVE: Obviam aliqui ire (venire, proficisci, flecti) = 'to go to meet', or 'to meet' somebody. — Ob in the relation of CAUSE is chiefly used with rem or causam, preceded by a form-adjective: Ob eam (hanc) rem or causam (also ob id) = therefore (from that reason); quam ob causam = for which reason, wherefor, why. Quam ob rem (often written in one word) is frequently used for connecting periods, with the force of itaque (p. 180, R. 40; Obs. 4; p. 521, Obs. 2). — Ob is also used: 1) of PURPOSE with a meaning similar to ad, denoting a future consideration for which, or in view of which, something is done or given. It is thus chiefly used with gerundials (p. 295, § 543), but also with mere nouns: Pecuniam illam ob censuram (as a bribe for obtaining the censorship) contra leges dederunt. Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 55. — Quum ob tua decricta, ob iudicia pecuniae maxime dabatur (the greatest bribes were given for obtaining your decrees etc.). Ib. 2, 2, 19. [Compare: Praedictum ab salute made accipere pecuniam. Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 28; where perhaps the conjecture 'ob salutem' is the correct reading]. — 2) Similarly ob is technically used of the value for which a mortgage or other security is given (as a synonym of pro), with reference to the future repayment: non tantum ob pecuniam, sed et ob aliam causam pignus dari potest. Ulp. Dig. 13, 7, 9. — Ager oppositu' st pignori decem ob minas. Ter. Phorm. 4, 3, 66. — 3) Hence ob is used figuratively of requirements for former actions (as synonym of pro); Ea quae ob amorem in rempublicam pertulimus; what we have suffered for our love to the republic. Cic. Or. 3, 4. — Capite anquistum ob rem male gestam (for an unsuccessful war). Liv. 8, 32. — Ergo pretium ob stultitiam fero. Ter. Andr. 3, 5, 4. — 4) Less often in classical prose, but frequently in postclassical language, ob is used of MOTIVES, or of cause producing another action: Romulus ab Amulio ob labefactandi regni timorem (from fear of losing his throne) ad Tiberim expōni iussus est. Cic. Rep. 2, 2. — Nec meliores ob eam scientiam, nec beatiores esse possumus. Ib. 1, 19.

§ 434. Per denotes 1) in LOCAL RELATIONS a motion through space (through, throughout, over, by), or through things (through), as: per provinciam ire, to go through the province; per agros vagari, to roam over the fields; per hanc viam, by this way; per corpus penetrare, to penetrate through (pierce) the body; per totum orbem, throughout the whole earth. 2) Referring to TIME it denotes during, throughout, as: per eos dies, during (throughout) these days. 3) In internal relations it denotes INSTRUMENTALITY and MEANS (through, by, by means of),

as: per procuratores agere, to act by agents; per manus se demittere, to let one's self down by (by means of) his hands.

Rem. 32. The Latin preposition per, in a LOCAL signification, is either translated by "through" or by "over," as in Caes. B. G. 1, 16: Erant omnino itinera duo, unum per Sequanos, alterum per provinciam nostram, There were on the whole two roads, one through the country of the Sequani, the other through our province. But: per agros, per montes vagari or errare, to roam or wander over fields, over mountains. Hostes se per munitiones dejicere intendunt, The enemies intended to throw themselves over the fortifications. Caes. B. G. 3, 26. The English preposition over, if it is used in this sense, must not be rendered by its regular equivalent supra, which always implies the idea "higher than."

Rem. 33. The preposition during (in relations of TIME) is expressed either by per or by inter (Rem. 26), or by in (Rem. 79). When an action occupies a whole period, we use not inter, but per or in. Per noctem ambulare means "to walk during the whole night;" but inter noctem ambulare indicates, that the walking was done during some part of the night. Rege per dies festos licentius quam inter belli tempora remittente animum. Liv. 27, 31. — In negative sentences this distinction is not observed, since a denial that an action happened during any part of a period refers to the whole of the period, as: Nulla res per triennium nisi ad nutum ejus judicata est; no case was decided during three years, except by her direction. Cic. Verr. 1, 5. — Compare: Germāni qui inter annos XIV. tectum non subissent; the Germans who had not been under roof during 14 years. Caes. B. G. 1, 36. — If the period is indefinite, per is frequently used with the meaning of inter, as: Per eos dies consul in Siciliam trajecit; During these days (i. e. during some time of the period spoken of) the consul crossed over to Sicily. Liv. 30, 24. — PER INDUTIARUM TEMPUS ex Sardinia centum naves in Africam transmisērunt (= at some time during the armistice). Liv. ib.

Rem. 34. When per denotes INSTRUMENTALITY and MEANS, it is a synonym of the ablative of means and the PASSIVE AGENT (§ 131). In the active construction the ablative of means, when it denotes THINGS, is used with about the same force as the preposition per. Thus rem armis obtinere and rem per arma obtinere have the same meaning. But when something is done by a PERSON, the Ablative (with ab in the passive, and without ab in the active construction) is different in its meaning from the preposition per. The ablative with ab is the logical subject, who does the action in his own name, while per designates the doer as the agent of another. Thus: Carthago a Scipione (not per Scipionem) delata est; but Littera per tabellarios (not a tabellarius) mittuntur or afferuntur, The letter is sent through or brought by a letter-carrier. Both prepositions are used in the same sentence in Cic. Cluent. 23, 62: Ille insidias ab Oppianico per Fabricios facit, These snares, laid by Oppianicus (their author) by (through) the Fabricii.

Rem. 35. Generally the distinction, stated in Rem. 34, is very clear. But often doubts may arise, as Cic. Verr. 4, 45: Ille sacra per mulieres et virgines confici solent, These sacred rites generally are performed by (through) women and maidens. Here per is used, because the women perform the rites, charged by, and in the name of the priests and the religious community. The ablative in the ACTIVE construction, when it denotes a PERSON, is employed when there is no relation of principal and agent, as Caes. B. G. 1, 8: Interea (Caesar) ab legionem quam secum habuit, militibusque, qui ex provincia convenerant, murum fossamque perdidit, In the meanwhile Caesar constructed by that legion, which he had with him, and by the soldiers, who had come from the province, a wall and canal.

Here the Ablative, and not p. r. is used, because Caesar himself took part in the work, and because the relation between him and the soldiers was not that of a principal to his agent.

Rem. 36. Idioms.—Per me licet, I have no objection (It is allowed through me); per Jovem, per deos, by Jove, by the gods (a formula of swearing); per litteras, by writing; per colloquium, by word of mouth; per te lege, read for thyself; voluptatem per se petere, to seek pleasure for its own sake; per vim (vi), by force, by main force; per otium, leisurely; per speciem, per causam (with a GENITIVE), under the name, under the pretext; per me stat, I am the cause (p. 619, 9, B).

§ 435. Post. Secundum. Pone. 1) In LOCAL relations post means behind, in answer to the question "where" or "whither," and secundum means along, alongside, as: Quum Mamertini crucem fixissent post urbem in via Pompēja.<sup>1</sup> Cic. Verr. 5, 66, 169. Secundum mare iter fecerunt, they marched along (alongside) the sea. 2) Both, post and secundum are used with reference to local ORDER and to RANK, and are then translated by after or next to, as: Quando post vocalem longam una sequitur consonans, when one consonant follows after a long vowel. Prisc. 2, 2, 13. Secundum consules auctoritate plurimum prætores valēbant, After (next to) the Consuls, the Prætors had the highest authority. 3) In relations of TIME both post and secundum mean after, but with the difference, that secundum indicates an immediate succession (next to, directly after, upon), as: Secundum comitia, directly after the elections; secundum Alexandri mortem, upon Alexander's death. Janus bis post (not secundum) Numæ regnum clausus fuit.<sup>2</sup> Liv. i. 19. 4) Figuratively secundum is used in the meaning "in accordance with," opposed to contra, as: secundum naturam or secundum leges vivere, to live in accordance with nature, with the laws.

Rem. 37. Pone is used in the meaning behind as synonym of post in the first local meaning, but it occurs very seldom in classical language. Secundum in this meaning occurs in anteclassical language only.

Rem. 38. Post, like ante, is used with comparative force with an ablative of difference (§ 311, R. 10), and must then be considered as an ADVERB, as: Paucis (tribus, multis, etc.) diebus post, a few (three, many, etc.) days after. See § 429, R. 17. The same meaning is expressed by post paucos (trīs, multos, etc.) dies, but with this difference, that paucis diebus post refers to the time spoken of, not to the time of the speaker; while post paucos dies may denote either the one or the other time. In this sense the ORD-

<sup>1</sup> When the Mamertinians had erected a cross behind the city on the Pompeian road.
<sup>2</sup> The temple of Janus was twice closed after the reign of Numa.

NALS frequently are used with the force of the Cardinals, as post tertium diem or tertio die post (three days after, or after three days). When these phrases are followed by quam, post has the meaning of "later,"<sup>1</sup> or post quam may be translated by the English conjunction after. Post and quam are also written in one word, and must then be considered as a real conjunction.

§ 436. Præter 1) in its LOCAL signification denotes a motion past or by some place (past, by, along), as: præter castra Cæsaris copias transduxit, he led his troops past (by) Cæsar's camp. Cæs. B. G. 1, 48. 2) Figuratively it denotes except or besides, as: Vellem aliquid Antonio præter illum, exilem sane, libellum libuisset scribere, Cic. Brut. 44, 163.<sup>2</sup> Amicum ex consularibus neminem tibi esse video, præter Hortensium et Lucullum, Cic. Fam. 1, 5, 15.<sup>3</sup> 3) It is also used to express DISTINCTION with comparative force (like inter), especially in the connections præter ceteros, præter alios. It is then translated by "before" or "above," as: Testis est Phalaris, cujus est, præter ceteros nobilitata crudelitas, Cic. Off. 2, 7, 27.<sup>4</sup>

Rem. 39. The English adverb except is used also before prepositions, as: except to me, except with an enemy. To translate expressions of this kind, the Latin employs the adverb præterquam, as: I have handed to them no letters, except to thee and Brutus, Nullas eis, præterquam ad te et ad Brutum dedi litteras, Cic. Fam. 3, 7, 1. The same adverb is used, when except introduces a CLAUSE, as: præterquam quod, præterquam si, except that, except if. (p. 607, 2; p. 739, 3). The preposition præter also unites with the adverb eā, and forms the adverb præterea, which serves to connect phrases and sentences, and means: "besides this" or "besides" (placed before or after the noun). Tres sunt præterea ejusdem generis (reges), Xerxes et duo Artaxerxes, There are besides (this) three kings of the same race, Xerxes and the two Artaxerxes. Nep. Reg. 1, 3.

Idioms: Præter spem, against my hope; præter morem, against usage or custom; præter modum, beyond measure.

§ 437. Propter, prope, juxta. 1) In regard to LOCAL relations these three prepositions express nearness to a place. Prope generally is translated by near, near by; propter by beside, by or on, and juxta by beside or next to; as: propter me, beside, by me; prope montem, near the mountain; juxta muros, beside or next to the walls. 2) In a FIGURATIVE sense propter (not prope or juxta) expresses a MOTIVE or REASON (for the sake of, on account of, for), as: Quod legionem propter paucitatem <sup>1</sup> As: post tertium diem (or die tertio post quam advenerat, three days later than he had arrived (three days after he had arrived).

<sup>2</sup> I wished, that it had pleased Antonius to write something besides that really poor book.

<sup>3</sup> I see that none of the exconsuls is thy friend, except Hortensius and Lucullus.

<sup>4</sup> An evidence is Phalaris, whose cruelty is notorious above (that of) the others.

despiciēbant, because they despised the legion on account of (for) its small number. Cæs. B. G. 3, 2.

Rem. 40. Prope is used as a Particle (§ 400), as an Adverb, and as a Preposition. It is doubtful, whether prope, even then, when it governs an Accusative, should not be considered as an Adverb, since Adverbs as well as Adjectives may govern Objects (§ 65), and especially because the comparative and superlative of prope (propius, proxime, § 291) are, like prope, construed with the Accusative, as: proxime vallum, next to the rampart; propius castra, nearer to the camp. Prope is also construed with ad, as: Prope ad castra, near to the camp; and with ab, meaning not far, as: prope a castris, not far from the camp.

Rem. 41. Local nearness is expressed: 1) by ad and apud, 2) by circa, 3) by propter, prope, juxta. Ad and apud are then generally translated by at, and answer to the question where (whithere), while prope, propter and juxta give a general answer to the question how distant from?, as: Caedis ad sextum lapidem prope villam meam perpetrata est; the murder was committed at the sixth milestone near my villa. Circa is distinguished from all these prepositions, by denoting an uncertain place. Prope, propter, juxta are distinguished from each other in DEGREE. The closest proximity and even local CONNECTION is indicated by juxta (derived from ungere, to join), as: Caesar juxta nostrum castra posuit, Caesar erected a camp close to the wall. Cæs. B. G. 1, 16. Propter (beside) also expresses immediate proximity, but without connection, as: Templum ejus est in agro propter ipsam viam qua iter Henna, his temple is on (by) the very road, which leads to Henna. Propter Platonis statuem consedimus, we took our seats beside the statue of Plato. Prope expresses the idea of nearness in general (near, in the neighborhood of), as: Ut non modo prope me, sed plane mecum vivere posses, that thou mayest live not only near me, but altogether with me.

Rem. 42. Propter is blended into one word with the adverb ad, and is used as an antecedent of the conjunction quod and other causal conjunctions: propterea quod, for the reason that, because, as: Consolatus ipse sum propterea quod nullam rem gravius tuli quam incommodum tuum, I need consolation myself, because (for the reason that) I was afflicted by nothing so much as by thy loss.

Rem. 43. The relation of cause most frequently is expressed by the ablatives causā or gratiā, preceded by an attributive genitive or a possessive adjective agreeing with the mentioned nouns, as: amicitiæ causā (or gratiā), for the sake of friendship; meā causā, for my sake; vestrā causā, for your sake; sua causā, for his (her, their) sake.

§ 438. Cis (citra), extra, infra, penes, supra, trans, ultra, versus exactly correspond to their English equivalents (§ 427), as: Belgæ cis (citra) Rhenum incolunt, the Belgians live this side the Rhine. Cæsar exercitum trans Garumnā duxit, Cæsar led his army across (over) the Garumna. Ili sunt extra provinciam trans Rhodanum primi, These are the first outside (without) the province across the Rhodanus. Intra fines provincie, within the boundaries of the province. Intra parietes, within the walls of (my, thy, etc.) house. Fluvius infra urbem fluit, the river runs below the city. Ultra annos virilis, beyond the years of manhood. Ultra viris, beyond (my, thy, etc.) strength. Supra vallem, above (higher than) the valley.

Rem. 44. Penes means in the power of, in the discretion of, in the possession of, at the disposition of, as: Edicunt, penes quem quisque sit Cæsaris miles, ut producatur, They order, that every soldier of Cæsar, in whosoever power he might be, should be brought forward. Cæs. B. C. 1, 76. When the subject of the sentence is a word denoting power (as imperium, potestas), penes is translated by with, as: The highest power was with consuls, Summum imperium penes consules fuit.

For erga and contra, see Rem. 15 and 16. Erga generally occurs as prepositional attribute, placed between an adjective or genitive and its governing noun or pronoun, as: Ut nostra in amicos benevolentia illorum erga nos benevolentia respondeat (Cic. Am. 16, 56), That our benevolence toward our friends may correspond to their benevolence toward us.

Idioms.—Extra jocos (not sine joco), without jest; extra periculum (not ex periculo), out of danger; extra modum, out of proportion, beyond measure; extra ordinem, by way of exception, extraordinary (not extraordinarius), as judicium extra ordinem, an extraordinary trial (trial before an exceptional court).

§ 439. <sup>1</sup> ab, abs, ex (or e),<sup>2</sup> and de are the equivalents of the English preposition from, as: a Cæsare reverti, to return from Cæsar; rem ab aliquo accipere, to receive a thing from somebody; castra procul ab urbe absunt, the camp is far distant from the city; ab adolescentiâ, from youth. Ex urbe, ex provinciâ proficisci, to depart from the city, from the province; aliquid ex prædâ sumere, to take something from (out of) the booty. Aliquem de fundo pellere, to drive somebody from his property; de equo desilire, to spring from one's (own) horse.

§ 440. DIFFERENCE of ab, ex, and de in LOCAL RELATIONS. Ab is employed, to express MOTION: 1) from a PERSON, 2) from without a PLACE, 3) from THINGS other than places; and to express 4) DISTANCE and SEPARATION.

Ex is employed to express a MOTION from within (out of) a PLACE; and De is used, to denote a MOTION either from without, or from within a place, but so, that the thing or person moved is conceived to be moved from his own, or from his or its proper place, or from a higher place to a lower.

Both de and ex express the idea of SELECTION or TAKING AWAY from among several objects, or from a PLACE.

Rem. 45. We must conceive the English preposition FROM as indicating the starting-point of a LINE, representing either a MOTION (to go, come, that the troops of Ariovistus were 24,000 paces distant from our troops. 2) By the ACCUSATIVE OF PLACE (see p. 220, 2), as: Ab his castris Bibrax oppidum aberat millia passuum octo, Cæs. B. G. 2, 63, The town Bibrax was 8,000 paces distant from this camp. 3) By Adverbs, as: procul, longe, multum or multo, prope. (See p. 220, 7.)

<sup>1</sup> Egregius means extraordinary, as synonym of excellent.—<sup>2</sup> When the word, following this preposition, begins with a vowel or h, we always use ab. Before words beginning with a consonant, a generally is employed; but ab often is used before the Liquids and some of the Mutes. Before qu and t, abs very frequently is used, although Cicero never writes abs tum.—<sup>3</sup> Before vowels or h, ex must be used; before consonants, e and ex are used indiscriminately.

Rem. 47. When the relation of distance is not expressed by the verbs distāre or abesse, the amount of distance may be expressed by the preposition ab with the ablative, which preposition must then be translated by "at the distance of," as: Ubi quum a quingentis fere passibus castra posuisset, Liv. 24, 16, When he had erected there a camp at a distance of about 500 paces.

§ 411. Difference of ab, ex and de in FIGURATIVE meanings. Ab is employed tropically to denote 1) the idea of ORIGIN and SOURCE from PERSONS; 2) the idea of DIFFERENCE; 3) the idea of SEPARATION and KEEPING OFF.—Ex expresses the idea of SOURCE and DERIVATION from THINGS; and both ex and de express the idea of SELECTION and TAKING AWAY.

Rem. 48. When the ORIGIN, from which something is derived, is a person, from is expressed by ab; when it is a THING or a PLACE, by ex, as: Originem a dis ducere or trahere, to derive one's origin from the gods; a te nulla injuria orta est, from thee no injury has come. But: nomen ex aliquā re ducere or trahere, to derive one's name from something; nomen ex loco aliquo vel re capere, to receive (get) one's name from a place or thing. Here belong the verbs of BEGINNING (starting from some point), which are construed with ab<sup>1</sup> (in English with from or which), as incipere, ordiri, initium or principium ducere, initium repetere, as: A principio incipere or rem a principio repetere, to commence from the beginning; a qua re potissimum ordiar? from (with) which matter shall I chiefly begin? Aliquid ab ultimā antiquitate repetere, to derive something from the earliest antiquity (meaning: to begin in some subject from the earliest antiquity).—Verbs denoting a RECEIVING from or of somebody (accipere), an OBTAINING (impetrare, consequi), or BUYING (emere, mercari) are likewise construed with ab<sup>2</sup> as: pecuniam ab aliquo accipere, to receive money from (of) somebody; aliquid a Casare impetrare, to obtain something from (of) Cæsar; aliquid a possessore emere, to buy something from (of) the owner. The source, from which something is derived is also designated by the verbs of demanding (asking of or from), poscere, postulare, petere, as: aliquid ab amico poscere, postulare or petere, to demand, ask something from (of) a friend. All these verbs are construed with ab. Verbs, which express a LEARNING and ASCERTAINING from somebody or something (cognoscere, audire and accipere) are construed with ab or ex<sup>3</sup> and verbs of ASKING QUESTIONS (querere

<sup>1</sup> Because the line of motion is conceived here as starting from a mere point, and therefore cannot be indicated by an equivalent of "out of."

<sup>2</sup> Emere and mercari are construed with ab and de. But emere de generally means: to buy from a person, who is not the owner, but either the agent of the owner, or else a person, not entitled to sell, as for instance a person under age. The Roman jurists invariably say emere ab, when the bargain is made between the parties themselves.

<sup>3</sup> Cognoscere and discere are construed with ab when they refer to PERSONS (cognoscere ab homine), but with ex when they refer to THINGS (cognoscere ex litteris). Au- and percontari) with ab, ex, or de.<sup>1</sup> Verbs of JUDGING, INFERRING, CONCLUDING (judicare, concludere, colligere) stand with ex only; as: Ex his rebus judicari potest (colligitur, concludi potest), from these things it may be inferred (judged, concluded) that, etc.—Pendere (to depend on, or 'to be suspended from') is construed with ex.

Verbs, expressing a DIFFERENCE, as: differre, distāre, discrepare, dissentire,<sup>2</sup> abhorre are construed with ab, as: Quid tam distat, quam a severitate comitas? What is so different, than affability from (we say: and) harshness? Facta a dictis discrepant or abhorrent, the facts differ from the words. The same construction is applied to verbs, denoting a WARDING OR KEEPING OFF (arcere, prohibere), a DEFENDING, PROTECTING OR BEING SAFE (defendere, tuere, tutum esse), a FREEING, RELEASING AND BEING FREE (liberare, vindicare, liberum, vacuum, immunem esse), a SEPARATING (separare, sejungere, deficere) and DESISTING (desistere), as: Homines ab improbitate arcere or prohibere, to keep men from dishonesty; se ab injuriis defendere, to defend or protect one's self against injuries; amicos a vi, ab hostibus defendere or tuere, to protect one's friends from violence, from the enemy; aliquem a metu liberare, to free or release somebody from fear; Mamertini ab omni sumtu et molestia liberi fuerunt, the Mamertini were free from all expenses and trouble. Ab omni animi perturbatione vacuus, free from all disturbance of the mind. Tutus a periculo, safe from danger. Ab hostibus deficere, to secede, separate, withdraw from the enemy. Ab oppugnatione desistere, to desist from a siege. The verbs of WARDING OFF, FREEING, BEING FREE, and DESISTING are often construed with a mere ablative, but never, when they refer to PERSONS.

The ideas of SELECTION and of taking (internally) away from THINGS and PLACES are expressed by ex and de, while verbs denoting a taking away from PERSONS generally are construed with the DATIVE of the Person, from whom something is taken (§ 482, 68), but sometimes also with ab, as: Juris utilitas vel a peritis vel de libris deprōmi potest, Cic. de Or. 1, 59, Legal points may be either taken (suggested by) from lawyers or from books.—Solem e mundo tollere videntur, qui amicitiam e vita tollunt, Those who take friendship from life, seem to take the sun from the world.<sup>3</sup>

§ 412. In relations of TIME both ab and ex (not de) denote from or since. Both are used to express the beginning of a period. But ab alone is used to denote the distance from one point of time to another, analogous to the relation of space. Ab dicere and accipere in this sense are more frequently construed with ex (audio ex eo, I hear from him—as from a source). Although these words in this sense always refer to PERSONS, they are construed with ab, since what we hear from somebody is conceived to come from his interior.—<sup>1</sup> In English no preposition is used after "to ask" in this sense, as: ex homine querere or percontari, to ask a man literally: to ask from a man). Interrogare is always construed with the Accusative of the Person asked, not with ex.—<sup>2</sup> Dissentire means "to differ in opinion," to dissent.—<sup>3</sup> The verb servare, to preserve, refers to THINGS only and is construed with ex, as: aliquem ex caute servare, to preserve somebody from slaughter (the idea is not, "to protect," but to preserve out of slaughter, by selecting, singling out).—<sup>4</sup> Deficere ab aliquo (to fall off from somebody), denotes: to break off a relation of allegiance, to secede, to withdraw one's allegiance from somebody. It is a term very frequently used in military language.—<sup>5</sup> Many verbs are construed with ab, de, and ex, according as the idea of separation and release, or the idea of taking away and selection prevails; or according as the object is conceived as a place out of which, or as a person or thing from which something comes. These constructions must be learned by reading the Latin authors.

is often strengthened by the adverb inde or jam inde (ever since), as:

Jam inde ab infelici pugna ceciderant animi, Liv. 2, 65, 7, Ever since the unfortunate battle their courage had sunk.—M. Æmilius ab ineunte adolescentiâ me dilexit, M. Æmilius has loved me from his first youth (since he was a young man). Cic. Fam. 13, 21.—Ex eo tempore omnia in republicâ ad arbitrium administravit, Since that time he administered everything in the republic according to his pleasure. Suet. Cæs. 20.—Nec vero discedebam ex eo die, quo in aedem Telluris convocati sumus, But I did not go (from the place) since the day we were called into the temple of Tellus. Cic. Phil. 1, 1, 1.—Ab horâ septimâ ad vesperum pugnatum est, The battle lasted from the seventh hour till evening. Cæs. B. G. 1, 26.

Rem. 49. Ex especially is used with expressions denoting TIME itself or its divisions (tempus, annus, dies, etc.) in the meaning ever since, so that a larger, indefinite period is meant, as: ex hoc tempore, ever since that time; ex hoc die, ever since that day. Ab is used either of definite periods, limited by the points of beginning and ending (a septimo ad undecimum annum, diem, etc.), or when Time is reckoned not by a point of Time itself or its divisions, but from events transpiring in Time, as a juventute, a pugna. Here generally inde ab is used, to express the idea "ever since."

Rem. 50. The English conjunction since, introducing TIME CLAUSES, meaning "since the time when," is expressed by ex quo tempore or ex quo (instead of ex eo tempore quo), as: P. et Cn. Cornelii ex quo in provinciam venerunt, nullo tempore destiterunt, quæ adversa hostibus essent facere, Liv. 28, 39, P. and Cn. Cornelius, (ever) since they came into the province, never ceased doing what was hurtful to the enemy.

§ 443. Both ex and de (especially ex, but never ab) are used in the meaning of the English preposition of (out of),

1) as equivalents of the PARTITIVE GENITIVE, and especially in those instances where the partitive genitive is either inadmissible or unusual (§ 375, Rem. 34). Thus ex (sometimes de) is always used after unus with the force of a partitive genitive, and mostly after definite numerals, after the indefinites nullus, multi, nonnulli, aliquot, pauci, complures, and after superlatives (§ 375). In all these cases it is used both before FORM-ADJECTIVES and before NOUNS (§ 375, Rem. 34), as: Unus ex (de) amicis meis, one of my friends. Ex his duo morbo mortui sunt, two of these died by a disease. Multi ex militibus, many of the soldiers. Ex his Hannibal prudentissimus fuit, of these Hannibal was the shrewdest.

2) Both Prepositions (ex and de, but especially the former, and never ab) express the MATERIAL, out of which something is made, or the CONSTITUENTS, of which something consists, as: Statua ex ære facta, a statue made (out) of bronze. Homo ex animo constat et corpore, Man consists of a soul and a body.

3) Both Prepositions (but again especially ex) are exponents of the Preposition on, when an action is represented as happening on a place with an outward tendency or direction, as: Ex (de) equo pugnare, ex arido, ex muris dimicare, to fight on horseback, on dry ground, on the walls; ex equis colloqui, to have a conference on horseback; ex vinculis causam dicere, to be tried under arrest (literally: to defend a cause from chains); Litteras ex itinere scribere, to write a letter on a journey.

Rem. 51. The partitive signification of ex must be explained from the relation of "SELECTION" (§ 441), while ex, denoting a MATERIAL, is connected with the idea of CHANGE (§ 444), both referring to the ORIGIN and SOURCE (§ 441), of which a manufactured, changed, or selected thing arises. The partitive relation always appears in the form of a prepositional phrase. Thus in long expressions like homo de plebe (a man of the plebs), homo de via Latina (a man of the Latin road), denoting relations of social position, where "de plebe," "de viâ Latinâ" indicate the spheres to which somebody belongs, and from which he comes.

§ 444. Ex alone is used: 1) to denote a CHANGE from one condition to another, as: Di ex hominibus facti, Cic. Rep. 2, 10, Gods made out of (changed from) men. Annona ex ante convectâ copiâ nihil mutavit, The corn did not vary from (in regard to) the quantity brought there before. Liv. 5, 13.

2) To express the English "according to," "on the ground of," "after," with a similar (Rem. 53) force, as secundum (§ 435, 4), especially with verbs of judging, estimating, determining, suing, as: ex eventu aliquem judicare, to judge somebody according to (after) the event; rem ex æquo et bono disceptare, to determine (settle) a matter according to equity; ex senatus consultu agere, to sue on the ground of a Senate decree.

Rem. 52. The relation of CHANGE is closely connected with that of TIME, since every situation, changed from one to another state, implies two points of time, immediately following each other. Thus ex (without a verb, denoting a change) sometimes expresses a TIME immediately following another Time, and must then be translated by "after" or "upon," as: ex eo die, after that day. The Germans bathe immediately after (upon) their sleep. Cic. Term. 22. Ex eo die despectus in salutem politus, Restored to happiness and out of a great despair. — Ex eo die in rem publicam se dedit, Immediately after his youth he has given himself to the republic.

The English preposition "after" can only then be rendered by ex, when 1) there is a CHANGE of situation, and when 2) both are situations of the same person. To this relation belong those peculiar Latin idioms, denoting actions, which are performed immediately after (ex) the expiration of an official term (ex consulatu, ex praetoriâ, ex dictatura, ex imperio, etc.). Ex in this connection must be translated by "immediately after the expiration of,"<sup>1</sup> as: Pompejus ex consulatu in Hispaniam profectus est, Pompey immediately after the expiration of his term as consul went to Spain.—Qui cum jurasset, se in nullam provinciam ex eo magistratu iturum, When he had sworn, that he would go into no province (would take the government of no province) after the expiration of the term of his office.

Rem. 53. "According to" is translated by ad, secundum, ex, pro. Ad expresses ACCOMMODATION to something (approaching to—ad nutum, ad voluntatem). Secundum (from sequi, to follow) means "following," "in accordance with," as: Secundum naturam hominis vivere. Ex, properly meaning "coming out of," denotes "being a consequence of something, basing upon something." Thus aliquem ex eventu judicare properly means: "to consider somebody as having some quality in consequence of an event." For pro, see § 448.

§ 445. De alone (not ex or ab) is used, to denote the SUBJECT-MATTER of acts of the mind, corresponding to "about," "on," "of," "concerning."

Rem. 54. The use of de in this meaning is very extended. It is employed thus principally to indicate the object of verbs of THINKING, SAYING, WRITING; but it may be connected with any verb, conceived as producing a contemplated result. We may generally translate it by "concerning," but there are many, more special prepositions, which more closely are adapted to the meaning of the given verb (of, on, for); as: De hominibus aut rebus judicare, existimare, sentire, to think (judge) of, to have an opinion on (concerning) men or things. De philosophia scribere, to write on philosophy. De republica (de rebus publicis) disputare or disserere, to speak, debate on the republic (on political matters). De amico loqui, to speak of a friend. De amico audire, to hear of a friend. Opinionem de aliquā re habere, to have, hold an opinion on or about something. De aliquo queri, to complain of somebody. De aliquā re certiores fieri, to be informed on or of something (literally: to be made more certain of or on a thing). De principatu contendere, to struggle, to contend for the highest power. De pace agere, to treat for peace. Bene de aliquo mereri, to deserve well of somebody. De aliquā re gaudere, dolere, flere, to be glad of a thing, to be sorry, to weep for a thing. De aliquā re desperare, to despair of a thing. De eā re nihil scio, I do not know anything about it.

Beginners ought to be careful, not to translate the preposition "of" denoting the subject-matter of a verb, by the Latin genitive, unless the verb is construed with a genitive. (p. 92, and 99, § 484).

Rem. 55. Idioms with ab, de, and ex. Aliquem a fronte, a tergo, a latere aggredi, to make an attack on somebody in front, by the rear, by (on) the flank. A scripto dicere, to read a speech. A parte alicujus esse, to be on somebody's side. Quid faciam de eā re, what shall I do with it? De tertiā vigiliā, during the third night-watch. De mediā nocte, about midnight. Hac de causā, qua de causā, from this, which reason. De industriā, on purpose. De improvviso, unexpectedly. De integro, anew. De cetero, de reliquo, for the rest. Victoria de Gallis, a victory over the Gauls. De qua re agitur, what is the matter? Ex pugnā, ex periculo superesse, to survive a battle or danger. Ex republica, for the best of the republic. Ex quo efficitur (with an infinitive clause), hence it follows (may be inferred), that, etc. Ex eo quod, from the fact, that. Ex tempore et re, according to time and circumstances. Ex sententiā, according to one's own, or according to another's wish. Hoc pendet ex te, that depends on thee. Ex eā causā, ex hac causā, from this reason. Magnā ex parte, in a great measure. Maximā ex parte, for the greatest part. Ex capite (dentibus) laborare, to have head- (tooth-) ache. Ex morbo convalescere, to recover from a disease. Ex itinere redire, to return from a journey.

§ 446. Cum is almost always rendered with.<sup>2</sup> It denotes 1) CONNECTION and COMPANY in regard to place and to internal relations, as: cum amico proficisci, to travel with a friend; cum hostibus pugnare, to fight with the enemy; mecum loquitur, he speaks with me. 2) MANNER, in answer to the question "how?" and ACCOMPANYING CIRCUMSTANCES, as: Magna cum celeritate ad exercitum rediit, he returned to the army with great quickness.

<sup>1</sup> From these Idioms the modern expressions, ex-consul, ex-president, ex-minister, etc., must be explained. They correspond to the analogous terms: pro-consul, proprietor, etc. (§ 448), but while these latter have classical authority, the former have not. It is even doubtful whether they were technically used by any Latin author.

<sup>2</sup> But with not always by cum. For the distinction from apud see Rem. 20.

The preposition cum may be omitted, and the mere ablative may be used, when it denotes MANNER, and the noun is accompanied by an Adjective.

Rem. 56. Thus in the above example we may say: magnā celeritate rediit, but not celeritate rediit, he returned with quickness. Miltiades summā æquitate res constituit, Nep. 1, 2, 2, Miltiades established the government with the greatest fairness. Stellæ orbis suos celeritate mirabili conficiunt, Cic. Rep. 6, 15, The stars make their revolutions with a wonderful rapidity. When cum denotes connection or company, it can not be omitted.

Rem. 57. The preposition "with" denoting MEANS and INSTRUMENTALITY, is translated by the mere Ablative, the same as the preposition by, as: They devastated the land with fire and sword, agrum ferro ignique vastarunt; a house provided with everything, domus omnibus rebus instructa (not cum omnibus rebus). See p. 258, OBS. 1-4.

Rem. 58. Cum, denoting COMPANY, often is strengthened by the adverbs simul or unā, both denoting "together," as: Cum corporibus simul animos interire, Cic. Lael. 4, that the souls perish together with the bodies. Voluntatem simul cum spe abiecerimus, Cic. de Or. 2, 3, 142, we have lost our wish together with our hope. Hic quum unā cum Lælio considerem, when I was sitting here together with Lælius.

Idioms: Secum cogitare, secum reputare, to consider in one's mind. Secum dubitare, to doubt in one's mind. Cum octavo, cum decimo, eightfold, tenfold. Cum pace, cum bonā pace, in peace. Cum aliquo in gratiam redire, to be reconciled to somebody.

§ 447. Præ (before) implies the idea of CONSPICUOUSNESS in LOCAL, and of PREFERENCE in INTERNAL relations. It is used only in certain connections: 1) In phrases with præ se (præ me, te, etc.), and a verb of motion, as: præ se ferre,<sup>1</sup> to carry something so, that it is seen (and with a figurative meaning: to display, to make a show); 2) in the meaning "in comparison with," as: præ nobis, in comparison with us;<sup>2</sup> 3) in the meaning "for" or "on account of," especially in negative sentences, expressing, that certain acts cannot be done on account of (præ) something hindering them, as: Solem præ multitudine jaculorum non videbitis, You will not see the sun for the quantity of our darts.

<sup>1</sup> As: Signum præ se tulit, he carried the flag (before him); talis virtutes præ se tulit, he displayed, made a show of such qualities.

<sup>2</sup> Gallus præ magnitudine corporum brevis nostra contemptui est, Cæs. B. G. 2, 30, Our small figures are a matter of contempt to the Gauls, in comparison to the size of their bodies.

Rem. 59. Præ in the third meaning is sometimes used in affirmative sentences, as: Præ lætitiâ lacrimæ profluunt mihi, Plant. Stich. 3. 2. 13, The tears come from my eyes for joy. The preposition præ in this connection expresses the necessity of the effect.

§ 418. Pro in LOCAL relations is confined to some phrases, in which it is translated by "before," with the force of either apud or ante (as: pro iudicibus loqui, instead of apud iudices loqui, to speak before the judges)<sup>1</sup> or of ante, when it depends on verbs, implying a local relation, as copias pro castris producere, to lead the troops before the camp.<sup>2</sup>

In INTERNAL relations pro is translated 1) by for, and then denotes: a) IN DEFENCE OF, as: pro patriâ pugnare, to fight for (in defence) of one's country;<sup>3</sup> b) IN BEHALF OF. Here it is either expressly or impliedly opposed to contra, as: Hoc non modo non pro me sed contra me est, Cic. Orat. 3, 20, 75, This not only is not for me, but against me. Loca sua et genus pugnae pro hoste fuere, Liv. 39, 30, His position and manner of fighting were for, in favor of, the enemy (pro hoste et contra nos); c) IN PLACE OF, INSTEAD OF (as a substitute of), either in regard to Persons (as: Pro consule in Hispaniam profectus est, he went for the Consul, or with the power of a Consul, to Spain), or in regard to Things (exchange, price), as: aurum pro argento mutuâri, to exchange gold for silver; pecuniam pro carmine dare, to give money for (in exchange for, as the price of) a poem.

Or it is 2) translated by in PROPORTION TO, expressing Proportion in number, quantity, or degree, as: Major Românis

<sup>1</sup> Such phrases are: Pro concione loqui, to speak before an assembly of the people; pro suffragio, at the polls; pro tribunali, before the tribunal (in court); pro rostris, on the stage. The latter phrase is used only after the classical period. Cicero always says in rostris.

<sup>2</sup> Thus pro æde sedere, to sit before a temple; pro portis, pro muro, pro curiâ.

<sup>3</sup> Thus Liv. 21, 41: Non de possessione Siciliae aut Sardiniae, sed pro Italiâ voluisti pugnandum, You have to fight not for (Rem. 55) the possession of Sicily or Sardinia, but for (in defence of) Italy. Cic. Mil. 2, 3: Scilicet sentio in disceptatione officii pro statu civitatis et pro communi civitate, to expose one's existence causa to danger for (in defence of) the independence (status) of the city, and for the commonwealth. So oratio pro Roscio, the oration for (in defence of) Roscius.

<sup>4</sup> So: pro prætore, pro quaestore, for or with the power of a prætor or quaestor. From these expressions the nouns Prætor, Propraetor, etc., designating the office of a Proconsul or Proprætor, or what we call a Consul or Prætor pro tempore, are derived. The expressions pro prætore, pro consule, often are nothing but designations of these offices, as: Senatus cum pro consule in Hispaniam misit, the Senate sent him as a Proconsul (or with the power of a Proconsul) to Spain. Our modern expressions: "President, etc., pro temp." or "acting President" might be rendered by these forms (pro præside).

quam pro numero jactura fuit, Liv. 21, 54, the loss of the Romans was greater than in proportion to their number. Pro multitudine hominum et pro gloriâ belli angustos se finis habere arbitrabantur, Cæs. B. G. 1, 2, they believed that they had a small extent of territory in proportion to the number of inhabitants and to their renown in war. Pro merito, in proportion to one's merit.<sup>1</sup>

Rem. 60. The English preposition for, denoting PURPOSE, is rendered by ad (§ 427, 2), in (R. 72), or de (R. 55); for, denoting TIME, is translated by in (§ 452); for, denoting CAUSE, by propter or ob (§ 433, 437); and sometimes by præ (§ 447). For is translated by pro, when it denotes: "IN DEFENCE, IN BEHALF, OR IN PLACE OF." For, denoting "IN THE INTEREST OF," is also translated by the Dative case (dativus commodi). The dative, meaning for, is distinguished from pro, by the opposition of the latter to contra. See p. 90, R. 47.

Rem. 61. Pro has also the signification "as," "as if," which is closely related to the meaning "in place of," as: Britanni taleis ferreis pro nummo utuntur, the Britains use iron rods as (for) money. Cæs. B. G. 5, 12. Se pro cive gerere, to act as a citizen, Cic. Arch. 5, 11. Considium timore perterritum quod non vidisset pro viso renuntiasse, that Considius, frightened, had reported as seen (by him) what he had not seen, Cæs. B. G. 1, 22. Alienam vicem pro nostrâ dolere, to be sorry for the misfortune of another, as if it were our own. Cic. Verr. 1, 44, 113.

Rem. 62. Since PROPORTION is nothing but equality of ratios, the preposition pro is employed to express the conformity of two situations, when the one situation either is made necessary, or authorized by the other. Pro is then translated by "in conformity with," "in accordance with," "according to," as: Exercitum pro loco et copiis instruit, he arranges the army according to (in accordance with) the locality and number of his forces. Sall. Cat. 59, 1. Eam Pontifex Maximus pro collegii sententiâ—abstinere jussit, The High-priest, in conformity with (according to) the sentence of the Court, directed her—to abstain, etc. Liv. 4, 44, 12. Vos pro meâ summâ in rempublicam diligentiam moneo, pro auctoritate consulâri hortor, pro magnitudine periculi obtestor, etc., I admonish you in accordance with my great care for the republic, I exhort you in accordance with my consular authority, I adjure you in accordance with the importance of the danger, that etc., Cic. Mur. 40, 86. Pro in the meaning "according to" is hereby clearly distinguished from "according to" as equivalent of ad, ex and secundum (Rem. 53).

§ 419. The prepositions coram (in the presence of, in the face of), sine (without) and tenus (as far as, up to), always correspond to the mentioned English meanings, as: Bella sine labore et periculo conficere, to wage wars without labor and danger; Coram legationum conventu, in presence of the assembled embassies; coram me, in my face; Ostiā tenus, as far as Ostia.

<sup>1</sup> Pro portione, or pro ratâ means: in proportion to one's share. Pro parte virili means, that each has an equal share (by equal shares).

Obs. Tenus is originally the adverbial accusative of a neuter noun, = 'extending to' being construed with a locative case (p. 47, R. 81; 217, 8). When the locative case became obsolete, the genitive or ablative took its place. So 'Corcyra tenus', up to Corcyra, in an old treaty quoted in Liv. 26. 24. The genitive is chiefly confined to the poets, the ablative being almost exclusively used in prose. In Liv. 44. 40, the vulgate 'genu tenus' (knee-deep) is unquestionably the correct reading, instead of 'genus tenus'.

Rem. 63. Sine and extra both mean "without;" but sine is opposed to cum, and extra (outside) is opposed to intra. Sine very frequently occurs in negative sentences, and then the negation stands before sine, as: He said, that he had not left his home without great hopes, Dixit, se non sine magna spe domum reliquisse, Cæs. B. G. 1. 44.—The expressions sine ulla dubitatione and sine dubio either have the force of PARTICLES (referring to the SPEAKER, with the force of certe, profecto, § 401), and are then translated by undoubtedly, without (any) doubt; or they are OBJECTS, referring to the subject of the governing verb, and have then the meaning "without hesitation," as: Etenim sine dubio, iudices, in hac causā ea res in discrimen adducitur, Cic. Verr. 2. 1. 2, For undoubtedly, O judges, this matter is brought to a decision in this trial. Si illi nunc iudices essent, istum sine dubio condemnarent, Cic. Verr. 2. 2. 73, If those were now the judges, they would undoubtedly condemn him. Illud vero sine ulla dubitatione maxime fundavit imperium nostrum, Cic. Balb. 13. 31, But this without any doubt especially founded our power.—Quid tam temerarium est, quam quod non satis cognitum sit, sine ulla dubitatione defendere? What is so rash, as to defend without any hesitation what is not sufficiently known? Cic. Nat. Deor. 1. 1. Atque illi omnes sine ulla dubitatione condemnant, And all those condemn him without any hesitation, Cic. Clu. 28. 75.

Rem. 64. The English preposition without, when followed by a verbal noun in ing, is translated 1) either by sine with an abstract noun, corresponding to the English verb, as: Ut sine offensione animi ejus vel ipse statuat, etc., That he would either decide himself, without giving offence to (hurting) his feelings, Cæs. B. G. 1. 19. Ut sine maleficio et injuria transcant, that they would pass (the country) without doing any mischief and wrong, Cæs. B. G. 1. 9. Or 2) by NEGATIVE PROPOSITIONS and CLAUSES in different forms. The most usual forms are the following: a) a simple change of the sentence into a negative proposition, interchanging the predicate and the object, as: Cum iter non intermitteret, Cæs. B. G. 1. 41, since he marched without stopping (literally: since he did not stop the march); b) a negative coördinate proposition with neque, as: Quum ab his sapius quaereret, neque ullam omnino rem exprimere posset, Cæs. B. G. 1. 32, When he asked them oftener, without being able, to elicit anything at all. Quibus populus Romanus ignorasset, neque in provinciam redeisset, neque stipendia imposuisset, Cæs. B. G. 1. 45, Whom the Roman people had forgiven, without reducing them to a province, and without laying a tribute on them. Quum multos mensis castris se ac paludibus tenuisset, neque sui potestatem fecisset, Cæs. B. G. 1. 40, When he had kept himself for many months within his camp and the marshes, without showing himself; c) a negative participial clause (either absolute, or attributive), as: Nullam partem noctis itinere intermisso, Cæs. B. G. 1. 26, Without stopping his march during any part of the night. Quod, nisi rogatus, non venerit, Cæs. B. G. 1. 44, That he had not come without being asked. Nullo militiam detrectante, Liv. 7. 11, without any one refusing to serve. Constat, Numam non petentem in regnum accitum esse, Liv. 1. 35, It is known, that Numa was elevated to the throne without his asking (for it).—See p. 188, R. 236, Obs.

To express "without" with a verbal noun in ing, we also make use of a negative clause with ut or quin. For this form see p. 547, C. D.

Rem. 65. Some consider the adverb palam (publicly, openly) as a preposition, since it sometimes (in poetical and post-classical language) governs an object in the Ablative case.

<sup>1</sup>Sui potestatem facere literally means: To give to somebody an opportunity (potestatem) of one's self (sui, see § 281).

§ 450. In WITH THE ACCUSATIVE.—Prepositions that govern both cases stand in LOCAL RELATIONS with the ABLATIVE in answer to the question "where?", and with the ACCUSATIVE in answer to the question "whither?" But this rule, which even for LOCAL relations is not always easy to apply, contains in regard to INTERNAL relations only the Principle, according to which the special meanings of the Preposition may be explained.

In with the Accusative in LOCAL Relations generally means into or to. It is opposed to ex, while ad is opposed to ab, and hence in stands to ad in the same relation as ex to ab. As ex means "to come from the interior of a place or thing," so in with the Accusative means "to go to the interior of a place or thing," while ad means: "to go to the outside of a place or thing" (see Rem. 12 and Rem. 6), as: In provinciam, in Hispaniam proficisci, to go to (into) the province, to (into) Spain; in castra venire, to come to (into) the camp; aliquem in urbem mittere, to send somebody to (into) the city.

Rem. 66. DISTINCTION BETWEEN in WITH THE ACCUSATIVE, AND in WITH THE ABLATIVE. In with the ablative corresponds to the English in, answering to the question "where?", while in with the Accusative answers to the question "whither?", and is dependent on the same verbs of MOTION as are construed with the preposition ex (Rem. 46), to which it often is expressly opposed. Thus we say: Scipio in Italiam rediit, Scipio returned to (into) Italy, because we ask: "Whither did Scipio return?"; but we must say Saturnus in Italiā regnasse fertur, Saturn is said to have reigned in Italy, because we ask "Where did Saturn reign?" Thus: Cæsar exercitum ex Sueconibus in hiberna deduxit, Cæsar led his army from the country of the Suecones to (into) their winter-quarters. Carthaginienses Hannibalem (ex Italiā) in Africam revocaverunt, the Carthaginians recalled Hannibal (from Italy) to (into) Africa.

Rem. 67. The Latin construes several verbs with in and the Accusative, where we, according to our conception, should expect in with the Ablative, as verbs of ARRIVING (advenire, pervenire). The Latin language construes these verbs, as verbs of MOTION, like the verbs of COMING, and construes them either with ad or in with the Accusative, while we consider the verbs of arriving, as expressing the RESULT of the coming, and connect them with at or in, not with to or into, as: Helvetii jam in Eduorum finis pervenerant, The Helvetians had already arrived in the territory (at the

<sup>1</sup> The ancient grammarians thus explain the distinction between ad and in: In forum est, in ipsum forum ire, ad forum autem ire, in locum foro proximum, ut "in tribunal" et "ad tribunal" venire non unum est, quia ad tribunal venit litigator, in tribunal vero prætor aut iudex. In go in forum means: to enter the forum itself, but to go ad forum means to go into a place next to the forum, as it is not the same to come in tribunal at and ad tribunal, because the party to a lawsuit comes ad tribunal, but the judge or the prætor in tribunal.

But relations of this kind are very frequently expressed by the English preposition "to." Here we use 1) in (with the accusative), when the end of the motion is conceived as a SITUATION or a STATE, in which the subject of the motion is represented to dwell, as in a PLACE. 2) We use ad, when the end of the motion is conceived as a mere POINT, ACTION, or TOPIC, or when the idea of the motion is conceived as merely contemplated. Figurative motions of this kind generally are expressed by the same verbs, by which real motions are indicated, as: venire, redire, reverti, ducere (adducere, inducere, perducere), trahere, agere (redigere), restituere, recipere, as:

Venire in calamitatem (Cic. Rosc. Am. 17, 49), to come to harm (into a disaster).—Venit mihi in mentem, it comes to (into) my mind, it enters my mind.—Non hoc inquisitionem venit, this is not the point in question. Liv. 36, 31.

Redire in pristinum statum, to return to (into) the former state; in ditionem, to obedience (literally "to subjection"); in gratiam cum aliquo redire,<sup>2</sup> to be reconciled with somebody (literally: to return into grace with somebody; as if grace was a PLACE).

Adducere aliquem in metum (Cic. Mur. 24), to bring somebody into a state of fear, to make some one afraid; aliquem in spem, in opinionem adducere, to lead somebody to (into) a hope, to an opinion (to make somebody hope, believe).<sup>4</sup>

Trahere aliquem in opinionem, to draw somebody to (into) an opinion; trahere in aliam partem, to draw somebody to another measure.

Redigere Aduos in servitatem, to reduce the Adui to slavery (to bring them back into slavery); restituere aliquem in antiquum locum gratiae (Cæs. B. G. 1, 18), to restore somebody to his old place of influence; aliquid in integrum restituere, to restore something to its former state.

Many verbs, which in figurative relations are construed with the preposition in and the Accusative, cannot be translated literally into English, because we do not make use of the same metaphor as the Latins. Here belong the phrases: in matrimonium ducere and in matrimonium dare. The former phrase (literally: to lead into marriage) means "to marry";<sup>6</sup> the latter means "to give in marriage." Thus the verb recipere with in and the accusative, which in local relations means: to receive somebody in a place, in figurative relations generally is translated by "to admit to," as: aliquem in amicitiam, <sup>1</sup> Venire with in, to come into something, generally cannot be translated literally, as: in spem venire, to conceive a hope; in delatam vent, it becomes doubtful; in amicitiam alicui venire, to become somebody's friend; in summam cruciatum venimus (Cæs. B. G. 1, 31), the greatest torture will await us, will be in store for us; in contentiōnem venire, to be thrown into quarrels.—<sup>2</sup> Redire with in, often cannot be translated literally, as: in memoriam alicuius rei redire, to return into the memory of a thing, that is: to recollect it.—<sup>3</sup> Ad sanitatem redire or reverti (Cæs. B. G. 1, 42; Cic. Fam. 12, 10, 1) is said of a person, who for a time has not listened to reason. In sanitatem would refer to sound reason as a perpetual state.—<sup>4</sup> Perducere, to lead somebody over to something, is generally construed with ad, because the stress lies here on the preposition over, which is implied in this verb, so that the end of the motion is considered as a mere point, as: perducere aliquem ad sententiam suam, to bring somebody over to one's opinion.—<sup>5</sup> Here the "habits" (mores) are not considered as a PLACE, in which discipline dwells, but as a THING, or STANDARD, to which it is brought up. We could therefore translate: "to restore discipline to the former standard of habits." Redire, which in this sense always is used of a STATE, is construed with in; redigere is construed both with in and ad.—<sup>6</sup> In matrimonium ducere means "to marry," when the husband is the subject. Of the bride as subject the verb nubere is used. The object "in matrimonium" often is understood, as: Lucius Semproniam duxit, Lucius married Sempronla.

Venio nunc ad fortissimum virum, etc. (Nep. Dat. 1, 1). I now come (in my discourse) to the bravest man, etc. Venio nunc ad voluptates agriculturum, I come now (in discourse) to the pleasures of the rural population. Cic. Sen. 15, 51.

Redire or reverti ad mores suos, to return to one's habits (as if to one's friends); ad se, to one's self (that is: to one's proper state of mind); ad sanitatem,<sup>3</sup> to reason; ad propositum, to the purpose; ad rem, to recur to the subject.

Adducere aliquem ad fletum (Cic. Brut. 93), to bring somebody to a weeping, to make him weep (to an ACTION); aliquem ad facinus adducere, to lead some one to (into) a crime (an ACTION).

Trahere aliquem ad defectionem, to draw somebody to a falling off (into secession)—an action, not a state; ad mortem trahere, to draw to death (make that some one suffers death).

Redigere disciplinam ad priscos mores, Liv. 8, 6, to restore discipline to the former habits;<sup>5</sup> redigere rem ad pristinam belli rationem, Cæs. B. C. 1, 70, to reduce (restore) everything to the former method of the war; omnia ad praecepta et artem revocare, to reduce everything to art and to rules.

in fidem, in civitatem recipere, to admit somebody to friendship, to allegiance (alliance), to citizenship (as a citizen); aliquem in ditionem recipere, to admit one's submission, surrender, or capitulation.<sup>1</sup>

We always use ad, when the idea of motion is conceived as contemplated, and when it is left doubtful, whether the end of the motion is reached or not. Here belong the verbs of DESIGNATING, EXHORTING, INVITING, EXCITING, as designare, destinare, hortari, excitare, incitare, lacessere, vocare, invitare, as: Cives ad eadem designare, to designate the citizens to slaughter; ad diligentiam hortari,<sup>2</sup> to exhort to diligence; ad letitiam excitare, to arouse to joy; ad bellum incitare, to incite to a war; ad iram lacessere, to provoke to anger; ad cenam invitare,<sup>3</sup> to invite to a dinner; ad arma, ad studium vocare, to call to arms, to study; but: in incidiam, in luctum, in dubium vocare, to bring to (into) envy, to mourning; to call something into doubt (that is: to make it doubtful).

Item. 71. The use of in, to denote PURPOSE, was very limited in classical language. Plautus and Cicero use in in this sense only of money and other things, to be spent or employed for some stated occasion, as: Aliquid in nuptias dare (Plaut. Aul. 2, 6, 2), to give something for a wedding (to be employed at a wedding); pecuniam in statum conferre (Cic. Verr. 2, 55, 137), to contribute money for a statue (to erect it). Thus Livy 1, 53, 3: Pecuniam in aedificationem templi seponere, to deposit money for the building of a temple.<sup>4</sup> The freer use of in, to express PURPOSE, begins with Livy and the poets of the Augustan age. Thus Livy says (21, 42, 2): Quem fortuna in id certamen legeret, whom fortune would choose for this combat; aliquid in gratiam alicujus facere (28, 21, 4; 35, 2, 6), to do something in somebody's favor (for showing favor to some one); fidem in aliquid dare (32, 24, 7), to pledge one's word for something. Later writers use in in this sense, when the ancients would use ad or causa with a genitive, as: in honorem meum, in (for) my honor, Plin. Ep. 7, 24; multis fortuna parcat in poenam, Fortune spares many for their punishment.

Item. 72. In in the third signification takes the place of adversus, erga, and contra. It is in this sense especially used of feelings and actions whose nature (whether friendly or hostile) is left uncertain, as: Carmen in aliquem scriptum (Cic. Orat. 2, 86, 352), a poem, written upon somebody.<sup>5</sup> Thus it is used of DISPOSITION in general, as: Hoc animo in nos esse debetis (Cic. Fam. 2, 1, fin.). You must be of that disposition toward us. Quod nondum bono animo in populum Romanum viderentur (Cæs. B. G. 1, 6), Because they did not seem yet well disposed toward the Roman people. In such relations adversus (Rem. 16) might have been used; but in is by far more frequent. In is also used both in a friendly or hostile sense, as synonym of erga or contra. But erga generally is used of feelings and emotions toward persons, while in is used of all possible relations, as: merita in (not erga) republicam (Cic. Orat. 38, 133), the merits for the republic; but tua erga me merita (Cic. Fam. 1, 1). In regard to inimical relations, in (not contra) is used, if the relation is purely internal, and is indicated by the governing word, as: invidia in hominem (not contra), envy against a man. In also must be used in place of contra, when it is not opposed to pro. Thus: invidia in (not contra), because I cannot be envious for (pro) somebody; injuria and impietas in (not contra), because there can be no injury or impiety for (pro) somebody. Savere in aliquem, to be cruel against somebody; because there can be no cruelty for somebody. But: armis contendere contra (or in); because we may fight pro aliquo; conjurare contra (or in) aliquem, for we may conspire for, or against somebody; bellum contra (or in) Jugurtham; oratio contra aliquem (Cic. Brut. 41, 164), or in. But the latter is more usual.

From this meaning of in several phrases must be explained, with which a governing word, meaning "direction," is understood, as: hunc in modum, in this manner (that is: directed toward this manner); in hanc partem, in this direction; in hanc sententiam, regarding this opinion, in conformity with this view; mirum in modum, in a wonderful manner; in utramque partem disputare, to speak for and against an opinion (what we call pro and con); magnum in partem (the same as magna ex parte), in a great measure.

<sup>1</sup> In ditionem recipere is a military phrase, denoting an agreement, by which to those, who surrendered themselves to a conqueror, life and liberty was secured.—<sup>2</sup> Hortari in amicitiam (Liv. 43, 19) means: to persuade so to friendship, that a treaty of friendship really is concluded: to persuade into friendship.—<sup>3</sup> A Cesare in legatiōnem invitōr (Cic. Att. 2, 18, 3). "I am invited to (accept) a lieutenancy", seems to contradict this rule. But ad legatiōnem invitōr, would have meant, that Cicero had been invited by Caesar to an embassy, that is: to a conference with ambassadors. Here the preposition in has the force of "to enter into the office of" a lieutenant, i. e. general in Caesar's army.—<sup>4</sup> The phrase, Cic. pro Cluent. 66, 188: Denique in familia luctum atque in privignorum funus nupsit (she married for the mourning of her family, and the funeral of her stepson) is nothing but a poetical and rhetorical application of a local relation (her marriage was the way into mourning).—<sup>5</sup> Carmen de aliquo scriptum would be a poem, written on somebody, as its main subject; but carmen in aliquem scriptum is a poem, containing allusions on somebody's person. Thus epigramma in Cleombrotum, Cic. Quint. fr. 2, 6.

§ 452. In relations of TIME, in with the accusative is used, when the time is conceived as contemplated ("for a time," "to a time"), as: Indutias in triginta annos impetraverunt, they obtained an armistice for thirty years, Liv. 9, 37, 12; in omne tempus, for all time (Cic. Fam. 5, 15, 1); in posterum diem distulit, he postponed it to the next day (Cic. Deiot. 7, 21); utrum igni statim necaretur, an in aliud tempus reservaretur, whether he should be killed immediately by fire, or should be reserved for another time (Cæs. B. G. 153); in reliquum tempus (in futurum), for the future; in perpetuum, forever; in præsens, for the present.

Rem. 73. IDIOMS.—In dies or in singulos dies, daily (not quite the same as quotidie. See Cic. ad Att. 5, 7); in multam noctem, till late in the night; in vulgus, universally; in altitudinem (longitudinem, etc.) or in altitudine, in height; in capita, by the head (that is: equally distributed); in speciem, under the pretext; in orbem, in turn (one after the other, in regular order); in carcerem conjecit, to throw into prison.

§ 453. In WITH THE ABLATIVE.—In with the ABLATIVE denotes 1) the PLACE, or the internal STATE or CONDITION, in or on which something is, or in or on which some action happens. It answers to the question "where?" 2) the TIME, in which something happens, answering to the question "when?" but only in certain connections (see Rem. 79).

In castris esse, to be in camp; in Pompēji hortis disputare, to debate in the park of Pompey; in errore esse or versari,<sup>1</sup> to be in an error; fides in alicujus justitiā, confidence in somebody's justice; aliquid in capite habere, to have something on one's head; in sella sedere, to sit on a chair; in conjecturā positum esse, to rest on conjecture.

Rem. 74. The LOCAL and INTERNAL relations, which the Latin language expresses by the preposition in, are not always expressed by in in English. Actions that happen on the surface of a thing are always expressed by in with the Ablative, as: in equo sedere, to sit on a horse; caedes in Viā Appiā facta, a murder, committed on the Appian road. Sometimes we use the preposition at, to designate actions happening in a place; then we transposition at by in with the ablative,<sup>2</sup> as: to learn something at school, aliquid in scholā discere, Quint. 1, 2, 21. Sometimes we use the preposition over, to express the same relation, as: pons, quem ille in Hellesponto fecerat (Nep. Them. 5), the bridge which the latter had built over the Hellespont. Often relations of PLACE and TIME are represented as identical, as in regard to actions, happening at a place, where something else happens at the same time. In order to designate such relations, the Latin language generally employs the preposition in with the ablative (more frequently than inter or per), while we more frequently use the preposition "during," as: in eo convivio, during this repast; in hoc prælio, in (during) this battle; in ludis, during the games; in colloquio, during the conference.

<sup>1</sup> The Passive versari (literally: to be turned round) often is used with the force of esse, and is especially construed with in and the Ablative, but also with other prepositions, answering to the question "where?" (apud, inter, cum). It properly means "to frequent a place," as: non in campis, non in convitiis versatus est (Cic. Quinet. 18, 59), he did not frequent public places or revels.—<sup>2</sup> But, to fight on horseback is: ex (de) equo pugnare. See Rem. 51, No. 3.—<sup>3</sup> When at means near a place, it is translated by apud or ad. See Rem. 19.

In internal relations the Latin language often makes use of the same metaphor as the English, as: in periculo, in timore, in angustiis esse, to be in danger, in fear, in a strait; in sermone quotidiano, in daily conversation; hac in re erras, in this (herein) thou art mistaken; in conspectu, in sight. But often the metaphors are different, as: in oculis, before one's eyes; positum esse in aliquā re, to rest, to be based, to depend on something.<sup>1</sup> The Latin language often expresses by in with the ablative, what we sometimes express by CLAUSES, and sometimes by adverbial expressions which have the force of a clause, as: Dignitatem nostram, ut potest in tantā hominum perfidiā et iniquitate retinebimus, Cic. Fam. 1, 2, We shall maintain our dignity [as well] as it is possible, when men are so perfidious and unfair (in the midst of such a perfidy, etc.). In ejusmodi rerum perturbatione omnia metuenda sunt, Cic. Fam. 1, 5, Everything is to be feared, while matters are thus confused (in the midst of such a confusion). Quod in tanto imperio populi Romāni turpissimum arbitrabatur, Cæs. B. G. 1, 33, which he thought to be most disgraceful, the power of the Roman people being so great. In variis voluntatibus regnari tamen omnes volebant, Liv. 1, 17, 3, Although the opinions were different (with all their difference in opinion), they yet wished, that there should be a king.

Rem. 75. The preposition in with the Ablative is used with reference to a NUMBER OF PERSONS (sometimes of THINGS), so as to confine the predicate to one or some of them (especially with demonstratives: in his, in cis). We express this relation by the preposition among, as: Quem tamen illi esse in principibus facile sunt passi, Cic. Fam. 1, 7, They however suffered without difficulty (facile) that he (quem) was among (in) the highest. Thales, qui sapientissimus in septem fuit, Cic. Leg. 2, 11, 26, Thales, who was an extremely wise man among the seven.<sup>2</sup> In quibus (legatis) fuit M. Scaurus, Sall. Jug. 25, 4, among whom was M. Scaurus. Cecidere in pugna duo millia septingenti civium, in his quatuor Romāni centuriones, Liv. 27, 12, Two thousand seven hundred citizens fell in the battle, among these four Roman centurions. In his (fuit) Antigonus, Nep. Reg. 3, among these Antigonus. The same relation frequently is expressed by "in numero," as: in hoc numero Miltiades fuit, Nep. Milt. 3, among these was Miltiades.

Rem. 76. The Latin authors frequently use the name of a NATION or INHABITANTS of a district, in place of the name of the COUNTRY or DISTRICT, which they inhabit. When names of nations are used in this sense, local prepositions, and especially in, are frequently connected with them. We supply then in English the words "country of" or "district of," as: Dum hæc in Volscis geruntur, while this was going on in the country of the Volsci. Thus: in Sabinis, in Aquis, in Persis (but never in Græcis, nor in <sup>1</sup> As: Oratio in Planci tui disputatio posita pulchra. We believe that everything depends on the generality of thy Platonic. Cic. Att. 16, 16 F. fin. Dignitas tua in rebus gestis tuis posita est. Thy dignity is based on thy deeds. Cic. Fam. 1, 5.

<sup>2</sup> Sapientissimus in septem is not equivalent to "sapientissimus ex septem," or to a partitive genitive. Cicero did not mean to declare, that Thales was the wisest of the seven. This would have been "ex septem." He only meant to say, that Thales obtained a high rank among the seven, that he was one of the wisest.

Romānis), in the country or district of the Sabīni, Æquī, Persians. In a similar way Cicero (Leg. 2, 18, 40) says in patribus instead of in senatū, and Cæsar (B. C. 1, 61): Cæsar in barbaris nomen erat obscurius, Cæsar's name was less known among the barbarians.<sup>1</sup>

Rem. 77. The preposition in frequently is omitted, and the mere ablative case used, in order to denote relations, which otherwise are expressed by in with the ablative. The connections, where such omission is admissible or preferable, must be learned by practice. Thus "terrā marique" (by or on sea and land) in coördination, is used without preposition; but, when used singly, the same nouns generally take the preposition in (in terrā, in mari). Horace says: Ibam forte viā Sacra (I once walked on the Sacred road), but Cicero: in Appiā viā, and Livy: viā Lavicanā. Cæsar (B. G. 7, 69) says: Castra opportunis locis erant posita (the camp was placed on a favorable ground), but B. C. 1, 43: Acie in locis idoneis instructa (after the battle-line had been formed on suitable spots). Cicero says both: totā Siciliā and totā in Siciliā; totā in Graciā and totā Asiā. But it has been remarked, that "on the whole earth" and "on the whole sky" are always expressed without a preposition (totā terrā, toto cælo). Thus Cicero has both, in primo libro and primo libro (in the first book), and so in innumerable cases. Where the preposition is left out, it generally is done in cases when the noun is connected with an attribute adjective, or when the relation may be conceived as a mere ablative-relation (expressed by the preposition by). Thus the phrase memoriā tenere, to keep in memory, must be conceived as "to keep by memory." For the omission of the preposition before names of cities, see § 455.

Rem. 78. Regarding the use of the preposition in with the Ablative in relations of TIME, we must distinguish, whether the time of an action is determined by nouns, denoting TIME ITSELF and its divisions or points (as: tempus, spatium, ætas, sæculum, annus, mensis, Januarius, and the other names of the months, dies, hora),<sup>2</sup> or by nouns, denoting EVENTS which happen in time, as: vita, juventus, senectus, bellum, pugna, pax, consulatus, regnum, iter, etc. In the former case we use the mere ablative of time, without a preposition, in order to denote the time at or in which an action takes place (English: at, on, in). The expression of Time must then always be qualified by an Attribute,<sup>3</sup> as: hoc tempore, at this time; anno secundo, in the second year; Calendis Januariis, on the first of January (on the January-Calends, see § 112, C.); tertio die ante Idus, on the third day before the Ides (the middle of the month); hoc die, on this day.

When before expressions of this kind the preposition in (with the Ablative) is used, it has either the meaning "during," and denotes, like per, that the action occupies the WHOLE time; or it denotes, that the action happens every year, month, day, etc. But even in these connections the preposition in sometimes is omitted.

The distinction of in Volscis and apud Volscos (Rem. 20, 2) is this, that apud always has a reference to the inhabitants of the country, while in simply means "in the country of," without any reference to the inhabitants. Thus we must say: hoc apud me in Volscis mos fuit; but we say, in Volscis bellum gerere, whether the war is waged against the Volsci or against another people in their country, not: apud Volscos; while in Volscos bellum gerere would mean a war against the Volsci.<sup>4</sup> Here belong also the nouns initium and principium, which denote the first part of a period.<sup>5</sup> Expressions of Time, not qualified by an attribute, have an adverbial meaning. They either stand in the ablative, or have peculiar forms, as: Initio, in the beginning (first); noctu (not nocte), by night; die (not die), by day; tempore or in tempore, in time, at the proper time.

In hoc tempore,<sup>1</sup> during this (whole) time; in hoc anno, during this (whole) year. Qua nihil erat in eo anno natum pulchrius, Cic. Off. 3, 25, 95, the most beautiful, that was born in that (whole) year (literally: than who in that year nothing was born more beautiful). Artes, quæ in omni ætate cultæ, mirificos efferunt fructus, Cic. Sen. 3, 9, The arts, which cultivated in every age produce the most wonderful fruits. Neque in tam multis annis cujusquam ex sua stirpe funus vidit, Nep. Reg. 2, 3, And he saw, during (the whole space of) so many years, the funeral of none of his offspring. Bis in die saturum fieri, to become sated twice a day (every day), Cic. Tusc. 5, 35, 100. Ter in anno, three times a year. In expressions of this kind the English language uses the indefinite article, without any preposition.

When the time of an action is determined by events, we supply the general idea "at the time of:" and thus expressions of this kind must be considered as ATTRIBUTIVE PHRASES with the governing noun TIME understood. Thus "in war" means: "in the time of war;" "in youth" means: "in the time of youth." The rule is here, to use the preposition in as a substitute for the noun tempus understood. So we say in juventute, in youth; in senectute, in old age; in bello, in (the time of) war; in pace, in (during) peace; in itinere, in (during, on) a journey, during a march; in vitâ, in life; in fugâ, on (during) the flight. But the preposition generally is omitted, when REGULAR, NOTORIOUS, or HISTORICAL events are applied to determine time, as: Bello Punico secundo, in (during) the second Punic war; comitiis, at the time of the elections; ludiis, at the time of the public games; feriis Latinis, at the time of the Latin festival. The preposition in may also be omitted, when the word by which the time is determined, has an attribute, determining time still closer, as: extrēmâ senectute, in the highest old age; hoc bello, in this war.<sup>2</sup>

Rem. 79. Idioms.—In præsentia or in præsentia, at present. In eo esse, ut, to be in such a state or condition, as to... Res in integro est, the thing (the matter) is in its former state, the affairs are in their former condition. Mihi in animo est with a Subject-infinitive, or in animo habeo with an Object-infinitive, I intend to, as: In animo nobis erat, Ciceronem ad Cæsarem mittere, Cic. Fam. 14, 11, We intended, to send Cicero to Cæsar. Istum exheredare in animo habebat, Cic. Rosc. Am. 18, 52, He intended to disinherit that man.

§ 454. Sub (under), referring to PLACE, governs the Accusative in answer to the question "whither?" or "in which direction?" as: Exercitum sub jugum mittere, to send an army under the yoke. Often it denotes motion to more elevated objects, if the motion ends before them, in which case the English preposition "under" cannot be used, as: Hostes sub muros (sub montem) processerunt, the enemy went as far as (up to) the walls (to the mountain).

<sup>1</sup> Thus hoc in tempore frequently is used in the meaning "in this bad (period of) time, as: Hoc in tempore nulla civitas Atheniensibus auxilio fuit, Nep. Milt. 5, 1, In this (trying) time no state sent help to the Athenians. Livy 22, 61: quo in tempore, in this time (after the battle of Cannæ).—In, when used, may be replaced by the preposition per. But we can not always replace per by in. In can only be used in place of per, if the preposition refers either to WHOLE PERIODS of time (as ætas, vita), or to events previously mentioned. Thus when during or in stands before cardinal NUMERALS, it is translated by per or inter, but never by in, as: I did not see him in (during) three years, Inter (per) tris annos eum non vidi (not: in tribus annis).—<sup>2</sup> Except in the mentioned cases, the preposition in, denoting TIME, cannot be omitted. Thus we could not say: Famē, at the time of a famine; vitâ, in life; morte, in death.

Sub governs the Ablative in answer to the question "where?" as: Sub pellibus hiemāre, to winter under hides;<sup>1</sup> sub armis, sub sarcinis dormire, to sleep under arms, under the baggage. Exercitus sub monte consēdit, the army took its place under (at the foot of) a mountain.

In relations of TIME, sub with the Accusative denotes APPROXIMATIVE time (either at, or a little before, or after), as: Sub lucem, about daybreak; sub hoc tempus, about this time; sub noctem, about nightfall. Sub with the Ablative denotes, that one event happens just at the moment of another, as: Sub ipsā profectione, just at the very moment of his departure.

In internal relations, sub represents actions or conditions, as if being or coming locally under another thing. The use of the ablative or accusative is determined by the analogy of the local relation, as: Sub rege esse, to be under a king; sub imperio alicujus esse, to be under somebody's rule or power; Galliam sub populi Romāni imperium redigere, to bring Gaul under the power or rule of the Roman people.

Rem. 80. In relations of TIME poets and later authors use both cases promiscuously, in order to denote either approximative or exact time. The expression sub luce in classical language does not refer to time at all, but means "in daylight." Hor. Art. poet. 363. In internal relations sub sometimes cannot be translated by under, as "sub oculis," before one's eyes. The idiom sub iudice lis est (literally: the lawsuit is still under the judge) means: The matter is under consideration, the question is not yet decided.

<sup>1</sup> For the use of super, see p. 68.

CONSTRUCTION OF NAMES OF CITIES.

§ 455. When the place in which something is done, or the place to which or from which a motion takes place, is the name of a city, town, village, or small island,<sup>2</sup> the Latin language generally does not employ Prepositions, to designate these local relations, but places the name of the city either in the Genitive, or in the Accusative or in the Ablative.

1. Instead of in with the Ablative the name of the city is placed a) in the mere ABLATIVE CASE, when it is a plurale tantum or is declined after the third declension; b) in the GENITIVE CASE, when the name of the city is a singular noun of the first or second declension.

<sup>1</sup> That is: in tents, made out of hides.—<sup>2</sup> By small islands, those are understood whose capital cities bear the name of the island, as Rhodus, Ægina, Corcyra, etc. Sicilia, Sardinia, Corsica, Eubœa, Hibernia, do not belong to the small islands in this sense, but are considered as names of COUNTRIES.

2. Instead of the preposition in with the accusative, or ad, denoting MOTION to a place, all names of cities are placed in the mere Accusative case.

3. Instead of the preposition ex with the Ablative, denoting MOTION from a place, names of cities generally are placed in the mere Ablative case.

4. The words domus and rus<sup>1</sup> are construed as if they were names of cities. They assume the ending i instead of in with the Ablative (domi, at home; ruri, in the country). They are placed in the ABLATIVE, instead of the preposition ex (domo, from home; rure, from the country). They are put in the ACCUSATIVE instead of ad or in with the Accusative (domum mittere, to send home; rus ire, to go to the country).

EXAMPLES: Zenonem Athēnis audiēbam, I heard Zeno at Athens. C. Marcius Coriolis vivit, C. Marcius lived in Corioli. Summa trepidatio fuit Carthagine, the greatest excitement prevailed in Carthage. Romæ fui, I was in Rome. Duo dies Thurii versatus est, he stayed for two days in Thurium. Rhodi in morbum incidit, at (in) Rhodes he fell into a sickness. Athēnas redire, to return to Athens. Præsidium Vejos mittere, to send a garrison to Veji. Romam properare, to hasten to Rome. Carthaginem navigare, to sail for Carthage. Ephesum proficisci, to depart for Ephesus. Se Corinthum conferre, to proceed to Corinth. Romā venit, he comes from Rome. Athēnis discessit, he left Athens (went from Athens). Brundisio profectus est, he departed from Brundisium. Tris dies domi commoratus sum, I staid home for three days. Domum advenit,<sup>2</sup> he arrived home. Rus eamus, let us go to the country. Athēnas advenire,<sup>2</sup> to arrive at Athens. Rure discedere, to leave the country (go from the country).

Rem. 81. In the most ancient language names of cities in answer to the question "where" were placed in the FIRST LOCATIVE CASE, which terminated in i (p. 215, R. 4). This ending, which in the first declension was contracted with the characteristic a into æ, remained in the names of the second and third declensions unchanged; but in the third declension at some later time assumed the form of the Ablative. In many instances this ending i appears even in the language of the classical period. Thus, Livy almost always writes Carthagini (in Carthage). The forms domi (which must not be taken for a Genitive) and ruri have preserved the form of the old locative case, which likewise appears in many adverbial forms, especially in humī (on the ground), ubi, where, ubique, etc. The form domi may take a possessive attribute, which must then be placed in the Genitive<sup>1</sup> (domi mee, in my; domi sue, in his house or home). Here belong the co-ordinates domi militiæque, at home and in the army (in peace and war).

<sup>1</sup> Rus, gen. ruris, does not mean a country, in the sense of a land (terra); but expresses what is opposed to city. Besides this it means "a country-seat."—<sup>2</sup> Since verbs of ARRIVING are construed with ad or in with the accusative, it follows, that names of cities and the words domus and rus must be placed in the ACCUSATIVE (not in the ablative) after words of arriving, although in English the preposition at is used. See Rem. 68.

Rem. 82. The preposition from before names of cities generally is not omitted, when from must be translated by ab (Rem. 46, No. 2 and No. 4); as: a Gergovia discedere, to retreat from the (besieged) city of Gergovia; or when the idea of distance is expressed: Tria millia passuum a Româ abierat, he (it) was 3000 paces distant from Rome. Thus Livy always uses a before names of cities, when he speaks of military movements, where cities are considered as mere points, without regard to their interior (Rem. 46, No. 2). The use of the preposition ab before names of cities is only then improper, when with other localities the prepositions ex or de would be required. Thus we must say: aliquem Carthagine (not a Carthagine) expellere, to expel somebody from Carthage. Senatus legatos intra dies decem Româ (not ab Româ) discedere iussit, The Senate commanded the ambassadors to leave Rome within 10 days.

Rem. 83. It is a rule in Latin, that, when the name of a city is the object of a motion, all other local relations which are objects of the same motion must be preceded by the preposition ad or in. Connections of this kind are repugnant to the English idiom, and are changed into other grammatical forms. Thus the Latin says: Litteras ad Cæsarem Romam (or Romam ad Cæsarem) tulit, He carried a letter to Cæsar to Rome. (Here we would say: to Cæsar in Rome, which is inadmissible in Latin.) Tarentum, in Italiam inferiorem proficisci, to travel to Tarent in lower Italy (literally, into lower Italy). Sic conservatis suis rebus Hannibal ad Prusiam in Pontum pervenit, Nep. Hann. 10. After Hannibal had thus saved his property, he came to Prusias in Pontus (literally, into Pontus).

Rem. 84. When names of cities have the apposition urbs or oppidum, the regular prepositions must be used before the whole phrase, as: ad urbem Romam, in Athens urbs (to the city of Rome, in the city of Athens). But when the apposition urbs or oppidum is connected with an attributive adjective or genitive, the preposition is used only before the apposition, not before the name of the city, as: Demaratus se contulit Tarquinios, in urbem Etruriæ florentissimam, Cic. Rep. 2, 19. Demaratus proceeded to Tarquinii, a most flourishing city of Etruria. Alba constitit, in urbe opportuna, They stopped at Alba, a city conveniently situated. Cic. Fam.

EXERCISES ON PREPOSITIONS.

AD. ADVERSUS. APUD. ANTE.

1. Hannibal quum a Carthaginensibus expulsus esset, ad Antiochum regem se contulit.<sup>1</sup>—2. Cæsar Divitiacum ad se vocari jubet.—3. Multæ Italiæ civitates ad Hannibalem desciverunt.<sup>2</sup>—4. Omnes ad urbem aditus<sup>3</sup> ab hostibus defendebantur.—5. Omnes hostes terga verterunt,<sup>4</sup> neque prius fugere destiterunt, quam ad Rhenum flumen pervenerunt (la come).—6. Cæsar, triplici acie instructus,<sup>5</sup> usque ad castra hostium accessit.<sup>6</sup>—7. Romani tan-tam ad Cannas cladem accepērunt,<sup>7</sup> ut totum pæne exercitum amitterent.—8. Carthaginenses, quum prope jam ad desperatiōnem<sup>8</sup> pervenissent,<sup>9</sup> Hamilcari belli imperium mandavērunt.—9. Exercitus, Hasdrubale intercepto, summum imperium ad Hannibalem detulit.—10. Hieronis morte regnum<sup>10</sup> Syracusanum (of Syracuse) ad Hieronymum, nepotem ejus, transmissum est.<sup>11</sup>—11. Militum ignavorum nomina ad imperatorem relata sunt.—12. Nihil ad sapientis felicitatem accedere potest.—13. Ariovistus legatos ad Cæsarem misit, qui eum ad colloquium<sup>12</sup> invitarent (should invite).—14. Pauci eorum ad colloquium congressi sunt.<sup>13</sup>—15. Hoc non tam ad Appii honorem, quam ad consulum ignominiam factum est.—16. Hæc minus ad me quam ad te pertinere censeo.<sup>14</sup>—17. At Philippus nondum ad bellum paratus erat.—18. Mare ad arbitrium lunæ, modo (§ 379, Rem. 7) exæstuat (to swell up), modo contrahit<sup>15</sup> undas.—19. Sociorum fides (fidelity), quæ ad eum diem firma fuerat, tum labare<sup>16</sup> cepit.—20. Prætor totam rem ad diem sequentem differre<sup>17</sup> constituit.—21. Hac controversiâ usque ad noctem ductâ,<sup>18</sup> senatus dimissus est.—22. Quæritur, cur non hoc frumentum ad diem datum sit (to deliver)?—23. Deus patrum adversus bonos viros animum habet.—24. Consul Spurius Cassium, legatum suum, adversus hostis misit, ut eorum impetum, quamdiu (as long as) posset, sustineret.—25. Cicero in dubio (in doubt) fuit, quomodo se adversus Cæsarem gereret.<sup>19</sup>—26. Ante Hamilcaris adventum Carthaginensium res male gerebantur.<sup>20</sup>—27. Dictator Manlius ante se Romam (to Rome) proficisci vetuit.—28. Ante oppidum tumulus<sup>21</sup> erat, quem hostes magnis<sup>22</sup> (with) copiis occupaverant.—29. Summus mons a duabus legionibus occupabatur, quas Labienus paucis ante diebus ad Cæsarem perduxerat (to bring).—30. Litteræ tuæ, quas paucis ante diebus acceperam, gratissimæ mihi fuerunt.—31. Carthaginenses, classe apud insulas Ægæis (Egæian) a Gajo Lutatio superata (to defeat), bellum finire statuērunt.—32. Hannibal P. Cornelium Scipionem ter vicit, primo apud Rhodanum fluvium, deinde apud Padum, tertio apud Trebiam.—33. Dum hæc in Asiâ geruntur, casu accidit, ut Prusiæ<sup>23</sup> regis legati apud Quinctium Flaminium cōnarent.—34. Virgines Vestales apud Trojānos, Albanos, Romānos ignis perpetui custodes fuerunt.—35. Dionysius, Syracusanus tyrannus, a civibus suis expulsus, apud Corinthios vixit.—36. Hoc dictum (remark) apud Xenophontem<sup>24</sup> reperi.—37. Sempronius apud prætorem verba fecit,<sup>25</sup> ut fundum suum, a Gajo injuriâ (against the laws) retentum,<sup>26</sup> recuperaret.

<sup>1</sup> The Romans themselves mistook domi for a genitive, because they had forgotten their ancient locative forms.

<sup>2</sup> Se conferre, to proceed.—<sup>3</sup> Aditus, an approach.—<sup>4</sup> Terga vertere, to turn to flight (literally, to turn the backs).—<sup>5</sup> Instruere, to form.—<sup>6</sup> To advance.

1. The Æduans, since they could not defend themselves, sent ambassadors to Cæsar, in order to ask<sup>27</sup> (sup.) [for] help.—2. The consul directed the lictor, to bring (arcessere) both messengers to him.—3. The enemies proceeded (se conferre) with (by) great quickness to the ships.—4. The emissaries<sup>28</sup> of Hannibal found access (aditus) to the Ferentian<sup>29</sup> hostages.—5. This equestrian combat (certamen) opened to the legions the way to the camp of the enemies.—6. The horsemen of the enemies came as far as the river Tiber.—7. The fame of thy bravery and genius has come (pervenire) (up) to the farthest (extrēmus) regions of the earth.—8. The censors directed [their] attention<sup>30</sup> to the morals<sup>31</sup> of the citizens.—9. I wish indeed, my very words had been reported (referre) to Cæsar.—10. You have called (vocare) my attention<sup>32</sup> to a very (per) difficult subject (locus) indeed.<sup>33</sup>—11. When Metellus had come to the army, he especially tried, to restore<sup>34</sup> the discipline of the soldiers to the former (pristinus) standard.<sup>35</sup>—12. Since to these virtues of the general a great vigilance and the highest prudence were added,<sup>36</sup> the soldiers felt (imperf.), that victory was certain.—13. Our soldiers fought up to the third hour of the day most bravely, but it was doubtful, whether they could sustain [any] longer the attack of the enemy.—14. Till about midnight<sup>37</sup> the wind was favorable (secundus) to the ships, but then so violent (vehemens) a storm<sup>38</sup> arose (oriri), that the ships were thrown back<sup>39</sup> to the shore (littus).—15. I have kept<sup>40</sup> this oath (§ 227) to my old age.—16. Nothing is more important<sup>41</sup> to the welfare of the state, than a conscientious<sup>42</sup> observation<sup>43</sup> of the laws.—17. Has not he, who gave wholesome (salutaris) laws to the citizens, contributed<sup>44</sup> more to their welfare, than [he] who waged (gerere) successful<sup>45</sup> wars?—18. Were you not destined<sup>46</sup> for some other vocation?<sup>47</sup>—19. Epaminondas never left,<sup>48</sup> before the debate (sermo) had not been brought<sup>49</sup> (subj.) to an end.—20. The judge asked (interrogare) the accused, what motive (causa) had induced (adducere) him to this crime?—21. Sempronius asked me, for what purpose (finis) I had reported (referre) his name to the authorities (magistratus)?—22. I doubt whether (nescio an, § 423, R. 78) it is important (§ 423, R. 77) for the welfare of the citizens, which of the two parties (pars) is in power.<sup>50</sup>—23. Verres demanded that everything should be carried out (perficere) according to his hint.—24. The enemy lost in (by) this battle as many as (up to) 2000 men.—25. I wish (velim) you would send to me a correct copy of this letter.<sup>51</sup>—26. The island of Eubœa is situated (situs) opposite to Athens.—27. The general was afraid, that some one of those, who were present,<sup>52</sup> might meditate (moliri) some crime against him or his family (§ 357, 6).—28. It is absurd (ineptus) to rage<sup>53</sup> against one's self.—29. Is not the enmity of Lænas against the chief-commander known to almost all soldiers?—30. Be just toward others, but also against your-selves!—31. The battle (prælium), fought at Chæronœa by Philip, king of the Macedons, against the Greeks, was the grave (sepulcrum) of Grecian liberty.—32. By the naval battle of (at) Actium, Octavianus defeated Antony.—33. Mago suffered (facere) shipwreck<sup>54</sup> at (near) the island of Sardinia.—34. The councils of the Latin nations were held<sup>55</sup> at the Ferentian grove.—35. With whom will you dine to-day? At my father's.—36. This was disgraceful with our ancestors.—37. The ambassadors declared, that such custom was not found in their country (with them).—38. I find many arguments for (of) this opinion in the old (vetus) [writers], but in some historical works<sup>56</sup> the whole matter is omitted.—39. We have read this in Plutarchus, but cannot find anything referring (pertinere) to the subject (res) in Thucydides.—40. The general placed his body-guard<sup>57</sup> before him.

<sup>7</sup> To suffer.—<sup>8</sup> Despair.—<sup>9</sup> Pervenire, to be driven.—<sup>10</sup> Throne.—<sup>11</sup> Transmittere, to transfer.—<sup>12</sup> Conference.—<sup>13</sup> Congredi, to meet.—<sup>14</sup> To be of opinion.—<sup>15</sup> To contract.—<sup>16</sup> To waver.—<sup>17</sup> To postpone.—<sup>18</sup> Ducere, to prolong.—<sup>19</sup> Se gerere, to behave.—<sup>20</sup> Res alienus male geruntur, somebody is unsuccessful.—<sup>21</sup> Tumulus, a hill.—<sup>22</sup> Compare § 305, 3.—<sup>23</sup> Nom. Prusias.—<sup>24</sup> Xenophon, Gen. Xenophontis.—<sup>25</sup> Verba facere, to speak, to plead.—<sup>26</sup> Retinere, to withhold.—<sup>27</sup> Rogare.—<sup>28</sup> Emissarius.—<sup>29</sup> Ferentinus.—<sup>30</sup> To direct one's attention, animum attendere.—<sup>31</sup> Pair. of mos.

<sup>32</sup> Transl.: You have called me. <sup>33</sup> Transl.: To a very difficult indeed subject. When the emphatic word is an adjective, the adjective precedes and the emphatic particle stands between adjective and noun. <sup>34</sup> Redigere litteras: to bring back. <sup>35</sup> Plur. of restaurare. <sup>36</sup> To be added, accedere. <sup>37</sup> Media nox. <sup>38</sup> Tempestas. <sup>39</sup> To throw back, rejicere. <sup>40</sup> Conseruare. <sup>41</sup> To be important, valere. <sup>42</sup> Religiosus. <sup>43</sup> Observantia. <sup>44</sup> Conferre. <sup>45</sup> Transl.: waged wars successfully (gerere). <sup>46</sup> To be destined, destinare. <sup>47</sup> Vocation, vocatio. <sup>48</sup> Discedere. <sup>49</sup> Perducere. <sup>50</sup> Transl.: which of the parties has the sum of power (imperium). <sup>51</sup> Transl.: this letter, copied (transscribere) word for word. <sup>52</sup> To be present, adesse. <sup>53</sup> To rage, rabiare. <sup>54</sup> Shipwreck, naufragium. <sup>55</sup> To hold, habere. <sup>56</sup> Historical works, annales. Transl.: with some authors of historical works. In annales quibusdam would mean: in some copies of historical works. <sup>57</sup> Transl.: guards (custos) of his body.

—41. Cæsar marched<sup>58</sup> by the shortest roads (iter) toward the enemies, and sent the whole of the cavalry before him.—42. Before the second Punic war, Grecian art had not yet reached<sup>59</sup> the Romans.—43. Æmilius's older brother had died five months before.—44. The king had sent a messenger to Datames a few days before.—45. I sent Gajus three days earlier than Sejus.—46. Sempronius understood, that he (Sempronius) had come before the proper time.

CIRCA. CIRCUM. INTER. OB. PER. POST. SECUNDUM.

1. Homines qui circum aram stabant summâ expectatione<sup>1</sup> cælum observabant.—2. Veteres<sup>2</sup> plerumque (usually) arbitrabantur, totum mundum circum terram movēri.<sup>3</sup>—3. Labiēnus legiōnes duas, quæ circum Aquilejam hiemabant,<sup>4</sup> ad Cæsarem perduxit.—4. Dumnorix magnum numerum equitātus suo sumptu<sup>5</sup> semper alēbat (to support) et circum se habēbat.—5. Regis emissarii, quum Alcibiadem ferro<sup>6</sup> aggredi non auderent, noctu ligna<sup>7</sup> circa casam<sup>8</sup> ejus contulerunt,<sup>9</sup> eamque succenderunt,<sup>10</sup> ut eum incendio conficerent.<sup>11</sup>—6. Audivi, fratrem tuum circa Casilinum oppidum Pompējum offendisse.<sup>12</sup>—7. Postridie circa eandem horam rex ad Proconsulis castra profectus est.—8. Unum iter, inter Juram montem et Rhodanum flumen, perancatoribus<sup>14</sup> aditur.—9. Hoc oppidum, inter Apuliæ montis situm,<sup>13</sup> raro a mercibus<sup>15</sup> et inquieti<sup>16</sup> inter socios, ignāvi et imbelles<sup>17</sup> inter hostis essent.—10. Cato inter tot annos non modo amicos sed ne inimicos quidem decēpit.—11. Iter nostrum inter fulgura ac tonitrua<sup>18</sup> confecimus (to accomplish).—12. At inter ipsum pugnæ tempus decem naves regiæ advenērunt, qua re ordo inter acies nostras restitutus est.—13. Discrimen inter fortitudinem et virtutem<sup>19</sup> hoc est, ut illam bestia quoque habere possint, hanc autem homines dumtaxat.—14. Lysimachus et Seleucus, dissoluta<sup>20</sup> societate (alliance), bellum inter se gesserunt.—15. Omnes illi populi linguā, institutis,<sup>21</sup> legibus inter se differunt.—16. Rex, cum vidēret, Sempronium et Æbutium inter se conciliari non posse, utrumque dimittere constituit.—17. Amicos illos fidem inter se servasse<sup>22</sup> intelligo.—18. Duo illi homines sese potius, quam inter se laudare videntur.—19. Dionysius perpetui (continuous) imperii cupidus ob eamque rem crudelis erat.—20. Noli nos ob eam rem despiciere.—21. A multis interrogatus sum, quam ob rem non meliōre adversus regem animo<sup>23</sup> essem.—22. Curtius certæ morti obviam ivit.—23. Dux, cum exercitum hostibus tradidit,<sup>24</sup> non ignominiam, sed vitæ suæ periculum, non patriam, sed se ipsum ob oculos habuit.—24. Cæsar permittere noluit, ut Helvetii per Allobrogum finis iter facerent.<sup>25</sup>—25. Dubium fuit, nuntine per hostium agmina (lines) ad urbem pervenire possent.—26. Cæsari nuntiatum est, per totam Italiam delectus militum fieri.<sup>26</sup>—27. Captivi per saltus<sup>27</sup> et palūdes ad castra pervenērunt.—28. Decemviri per trīs fere annos summum imperium Romæ (at Rome) habuerunt (to hold).—29. Per omne hoc tempus civi-bus ne mœrere<sup>28</sup> quidem licuit.—31. Cæsar per Cicerōnis nuntios certior factus est,<sup>29</sup> castra nostra ab hostibus obsideri.—32. Cives Cæsari per principes civitatis gratias egērunt, quod res<sup>30</sup> suas tantā aequitate (fairness) constituisset.<sup>31</sup>—33. Clodius iudicium pœnamque ita contempsit, ut nihil eum delectaret (to please), quod aut per naturam fas (§ 190, R. 10) esset, aut per leges liceret.—34. Legam has litteras, Semprōni, si per te licet.—35. Equidem, si per vos licuisset, regi ne vitam quidem concessissem.—36. Nonnulli per speciem valetudinis (ill health) ducem sequi recusabant.—37. Interim (meanwhile) video me esse inter hostis, ducemque eōrum post me esse aliquanto (§ 311, Rem. 10).—38. Cæsar totius exercitus impedimenta post legiōnes collocarat (to place).—39. Vocālis<sup>32</sup> e, post vocālis a vel o posita,<sup>33</sup> legiōnes collocarat (to place).—40. Cæsar sex legiōnes ad oppidum Gergodiptongum<sup>34</sup> efficit (to make).—41. Cæsar sex legiōnes ad oppidum Gergodiptongum<sup>34</sup> efficit (to make).—42. Cæsar sex legiōnes ad oppidum Gergodiptongum<sup>34</sup> efficit (to make).—43. Cæsar sex legiōnes ad oppidum Gergodiptongum<sup>34</sup> efficit (to make).—44. Sulpicius, quum tertium post diem rediret, certior factus est, Pompējum iam ad castra profectum esse.—45. Labiēnus, cum hostis nusquam<sup>35</sup> invenire potuisset, paucis post diebus ad exercitum rediit.—46. Aristides mortuus est fere post annum quantum quam Themistocles expulsus erat.—47. Samnitium castra secundum prelium capta sunt.—48. Haud difficilior est secundum leges quam secundum naturam vivere.

<sup>58</sup> Proficisci.—<sup>59</sup> Transl.: had come (pervenire) to.—1 With the greatest curiosity.—2 The ancients.—3 Our neuter verb to move must generally be translated by the passive of movere.—4 To winter.—5 At his expense.—6 Sword.—7 The plural of lignum means: pieces of wood.—8 Hut.—9 Conferre, to collect.—10 To kindle.—11 To kill.—12 To meet.—13 Situs, situated.—14 Merchant.—15 Fierce.—16 Warlike.—17 Peaceful.—18 The plural of tonitruum means: thunder-peals.—19 Translate: The words fortitudo and virtus.—20 To dissolve.—21 Institution.—22 Fidem servare, to keep faith, to be faithful.—23 Bono animo esse, to be of good disposition.—24 For this indicative see p. 654, Obs. 2.—25 Iter facere, to march.—26 Delectus facere, to make levies.—27 Woodlands.

1. The soldiers had filled up<sup>40</sup> the canal (fossa) which was around the town.—2. Look at<sup>41</sup> the Germans and those tribes (gens), which lead a nomadic life<sup>42</sup> around the river Ister!—3. Already Hipparchus, who lived three centuries (saeculum) before Christ (Christus), thought<sup>43</sup> that not the sun moved<sup>44</sup> around the earth, but that the earth [moved] around the sun.—4. Not only the forum, but all the temples, which lie (esse) around the forum, were guarded (custodire) by soldiers.—5. Cato dismissed all those whom he had about him.—6. I have heard (accipere), that a naval battle has taken place (esse) somewhere about the island of Corcyra.—7. The messenger returned about the seventh hour to Cæsar.—8. The Rhone runs (fluere) between the territories (jines) of the Helvetii and Allobroges.—9. A swamp of no great size<sup>45</sup> was between our army and that of the enemy.<sup>46</sup>—10. Those who survived (superesse) wandered<sup>47</sup> during many days among<sup>48</sup> the neighboring tribes.<sup>49</sup>—11. Cæsar lived till the month of January among (in the abode of) the robbers by whom he had been captured.—12. Cato was affable<sup>50</sup> and courteous<sup>51</sup> among his [friends], [but] among strangers (alienis) cold and taciturn.<sup>52</sup>—13. Themistocles, expelled by his fellow-citizens, lived among (in the country of) the barbarians.<sup>53</sup>—14.<sup>54</sup> During all this time, I was twice in the house of Cæsar.—15. During this whole year he staid (commorari) in the house of Atticus.—16. The speaker went away amid the reproaches (opprobrium) and hissings (sibilatus) of the multitude.—17. During the games the Roman young men seized<sup>55</sup> the Sabinian (Sabinus) virgins at a given signal.<sup>56</sup>—18. What difference is [there]<sup>57</sup> between a bad citizen and a man (is), that hates (subjunctive) his parent?<sup>58</sup>—19. This is the difference (discrimen) between a wise and an unwise<sup>59</sup> [man], that (ut) the former knows (scire) that he knows nothing, [but that] the latter does not even know this.—20. Only then the right of intermarriage<sup>60</sup> between the Patricians and the Plebs was established (sanctum) by the Canulejan<sup>61</sup> law.—21. Cæsar did not wish (nolle), that (inf. clause) these tribes, since they perpetually (continenter) waged<sup>62</sup> wars with each other, should be neighbors<sup>63</sup> of (to) our province.—22. The Greeks and Persians differ from each other by their tastes (studium), habits (mos) and laws.—23. I, on my part, am of opinion<sup>64</sup> that these questions are altogether independent of each other.<sup>65</sup>—24. For that reason the worship (cultus) of Ceres was spread (diffusus) almost throughout the whole earth (orbis).—25. I do not know, for what reason you do not do (perficere) this business yourself, but by agents (procuratores).—26. Thou shalt have before [thy] eyes, not thy own interest (utilitas), but [that] of [thy] country.—27. The city<sup>66</sup> sent ambassadors to meet Sulpicius, who should invite (subj.) him, to (ut) pass<sup>67</sup> over their territory (jines).—28. Through labors (opus) and hardships (labor), we have come (percurrere) to leisure.—29. Our cavalry came over the corpses (cadaver) of the slain<sup>68</sup> as far as the camp.—30. Cæsar said (§ 411), that he could allow (to) nobody the passage (iter) through the province.—31. This was announced to Cæsar by the ambassadors whom L. Æmilius had sent to him.—32. This was the year in (by) which it was allowed to him by the law, to become a consul.—33. Pompey obtained (adipisci) all these honors through himself, without<sup>69</sup> being assisted (adjuvare) by any recommendation (commendatio) of ancestors (maiores).—34. Some (pars) of the robbers spread<sup>70</sup> over the city, others over the neighboring fields.—35. During all this time the fleet of the enemies blockaded (custodire) the shores (littus) and the harbor (portus).—36. During the whole war this legion had not even seen an enemy.—37. During these three years nothing was done, but (nisi) according to the will and hint of the decemvirs.—38. During the whole Punic war this state kept (servare) most strictly<sup>71</sup> [their] faith toward the Roman people.—39. All these things have been done (perficere) by me most strictly according to thy directions.<sup>72</sup>—40. I sent a few days ago a letter to thee by the letter-carrier (tabellarius).—41. When the general arrived, the city complimented<sup>73</sup> (to) him by two spokesmen<sup>74</sup> for (§ 393, R. 29) having finished the war so<sup>75</sup> successfully (felix).—

<sup>28</sup> To mourn.—<sup>29</sup> Certior fieri, to inform.—<sup>30</sup> Relations.—<sup>31</sup> To establish.—<sup>32</sup> A vowel.—<sup>33</sup> Pompe, to place.—<sup>34</sup> A diphthong.—<sup>35</sup> The Roman republic.—<sup>36</sup> A revolt.—<sup>37</sup> To disturb.—<sup>38</sup> Castra ponere, to erect a camp.—<sup>39</sup> Nowhere, not anywhere.—<sup>40</sup> To fill up, complete.—<sup>41</sup> To look at, consider.—<sup>42</sup> To lead a nomadic life, vagari.—<sup>43</sup> Exist, survive.—<sup>44</sup> The neuter verb to move is translated either by moviri or by ferri.—<sup>45</sup> Of great size, magnus.—<sup>46</sup> The English collective noun "the enemy" generally is translated by the plural of hostis.—<sup>47</sup> Vagari.—<sup>48</sup> The preposition among in several of these sentences must be translated by apud, and in others by inter.—<sup>49</sup> The word tribe is translated by tribus, when it denotes a division of the Roman people; but by gens, when it means a savage nation.—<sup>50</sup> Comis.—<sup>51</sup> Urbanus.—<sup>52</sup> Taciturnus.—<sup>53</sup> The word barbarus occurs in three different meanings: 1) it denotes the Persians, as here; 2) it denotes any nation neither Greek nor Roman; 3) it means barbarous or uncultivated.—<sup>54</sup> In the following sentences, No. 14, 15, 17, 35, 36, 37, 38, the student must carefully consider the rules on the difference

of per and inter.—<sup>55</sup> Corripere.—<sup>56</sup> Translate: after a signal (signum) had been given (partic. clause).—<sup>57</sup> There is a difference, interest.—<sup>58</sup> Genitor.—<sup>59</sup> Insipiens.—<sup>60</sup> The right of intermarriage, connubium.—<sup>61</sup> Canulejan.—<sup>62</sup> Gerere.—<sup>63</sup> Finitimus.—<sup>64</sup> To be of opinion, censere.—<sup>65</sup> Translate: are contained (contineri) by no bond (vinculum) at all with each other.—<sup>66</sup> The word city is translated either by civitas, urbs or oppidum. Civitas denotes the aggregate of the citizens, the community or the corporation. Urbs and oppidum denote the place as such. Thus it is improper to say: Urbs in societatem veniit. Urbs is one of the more important cities, and is especially applied to the city of Rome, without any other addition. The word oppidum may be applied to every city except Rome.—<sup>67</sup> Iter facere.—<sup>68</sup> To slay, occidere.—<sup>69</sup> Translate: having been assisted by no recommendation of ancestors. See Remark 65.—<sup>70</sup> Dissipare. In order to express the middle verb "to spread," we must use the Passive Voice.—<sup>71</sup> Strict, diligens.—<sup>72</sup> Directions, voluntas.—<sup>73</sup> To compliment somebody, gratulari alicui.—<sup>74</sup> A spokesman, orator.—<sup>75</sup> Translate "most."

42. How many, under the plea of necessity, try to excuse either their cowardice, or their negligence.—43. I shall dismiss (mittere) thy slave (puer) Lucius, if thou hast no objections.—44. Behind these houses was a river, which at (by) several places could be crossed by a ford.—45. The general gave orders (jubere), that the whole cavalry should be placed (collocare) behind him.—46. I believe, that after Demosthenes, Isocrates has been the most eloquent [man] among the Greeks.—47. While the enemy was marching (iter facere) along the river, our troops followed<sup>76</sup> so (ita), that no more than 6000<sup>77</sup> paces were [left] between.—48. It is uncertain, whether Themistocles lived among the Persians while (partic. clause) Xerxes was reigning,<sup>78</sup> or after his death.—49. After a hundred years none of us will be alive (vivus).—50. After<sup>79</sup> three months I shall return to thee the books, which thou hast lent<sup>80</sup> to me.—51. After five days Cæsar returned to the city of Gergovia.—52. Hamilcar died nine years after he had come to Spain (in Hispaniam).—53. Dion destroyed (tollere) the power of Dionysius so easily, that he entered (introire) Syracuse four (ordinal) days after he had reached<sup>81</sup> Sicily.—54. Nero was born (nasci) nine (cardinal) months after Tiberius died.—55. The ancients used to cut<sup>82</sup> their hair<sup>83</sup> immediately after the new moon.<sup>84</sup>—56. Raspberries<sup>85</sup> become ripe<sup>86</sup> about the summer solstice,<sup>87</sup> next to the strawberries.<sup>88</sup>—57. [Those] who fear (vereri) God, live according to his commands (præceptum).

PROPTER. PROPE. JUXTA. PRÆTER. CIS. CITRA. CONTRA.
ERGA. EXTRA. INTRA. INFRA. PENES. SUPRA.
TRANS. ULTRA. VERSUS.

1. Plebs Romāna, cum a Patriciis opprimeretur, reliquit urbem, et prope ripam Anienis ad tertium miliarium<sup>1</sup> consedit.<sup>2</sup>—2. Hannibal propter Junonis Laciniae templum aestatem (summer) egit.<sup>3</sup>—3. Baculum<sup>4</sup> propter me ponite,<sup>5</sup> quo feras<sup>6</sup> abigam!<sup>7</sup>—4. Atticus juxta viam Appiam<sup>8</sup> ad quantum lapidem<sup>9</sup> sepultus est.—5. Nam propter frigora non modo frumenta<sup>10</sup> matura (ripe) non erant, sed ne pabuli (fodder) quidem satis magna copia<sup>11</sup> suppetebat.<sup>12</sup>—6. Amici sæpe utilitatis causa<sup>13</sup> expetuntur;<sup>14</sup> quum autem usus<sup>15</sup> accessit,<sup>16</sup> amantur propter se.—7. Ariovistus Sequanos partem agrorum suorum derelinquere jussit, propterea quod paucis mensibus ante viginti tria millia Germanorum ad se venissent, quibus hanc agrorum partem dare vellet.—8. Facile erat milites, prædæ causâ per omnis agros dissipatos, singillatim (singly) aggredi et opprimere (to kill).—9. Quam multa, quæ nostrâ causâ nunquam faceremus (could do), facimus causâ amicorum!<sup>17</sup>—10. Hoc magis tuâ quam meâ causâ faciam.—11. Jugurtha, qui nullo loco (in no place) amplius unâ nocte aut uno die morabatur, simulabat<sup>18</sup> se negotii gratiâ properare.—12. Nabis cum exercitum raptim (in haste) præter Spartam duxisset, Pyrrhi, quæ vocantur,<sup>18</sup> castra occupavit.—13. Servus ille omnibus sententiis<sup>19</sup> præter unam condemnatus est.—14. Suevi vestimenta (clothing) nulla habent præter pellis,<sup>20</sup> quarum propter exiguitatem<sup>21</sup> magna corporis pars aperta est.—15. Sabini quoque præter Volscos et Æquos partem prædæ postulabant.—16. Loquebantur etiam Sempronius et Cethegus, et præter ceteros Lentulus, qui summam<sup>22</sup> imperii acerrime<sup>23</sup> efflagitabat (demand).—17. Tantum temporis nemini unquam tribui (to devote) antea, præterquam amicissimis aut reipublicæ causâ.—18. Cæsar omnem Galliam cis Rhenum atque inter mare Mediterraneum (Mediterranean) atque Oceanum perdomuit (to subject).—19. Cæsar per exploratores<sup>24</sup> certior factus est, tris jam partis Helvetiorum Ararim (the Arar) transisse, et quartam fere partem citra flumen reliquam<sup>25</sup> esse.—20. Britanniae unum latum (side) est contra Galliam.—21. Labienus, cum omnem fere hostium exercitum contra se pugnare intelligeret, Cæsarem per litteras oravit, ut quam celerrime sibi auxilium mitteret.—22. Apud Germanos veteres latrocinia,<sup>26</sup> quæ extra finis cujusque civitatis fiebant,<sup>27</sup> nullam habebant (to cause) infamiam (infamy).—23. Nonne novisti meam et ceterorum erga te fidem (good faith) et benevolentiam (good disposition)?—24. Boji Lingonesque Etruscos et Umbros agro (from their territory) pepulerant (to drive); hi tamen intra Apenninum<sup>28</sup> se tenuere.—25. Postulavit Cæsar, ut responsum (an answer) sibi ad has litteras intra viginti dies daretur.—26. Oppidum, infra arcem situm, missilibus<sup>29</sup> telisque præsidii peti<sup>30</sup> potuit.—27. Per ducentos quadraginta tris annos imperium (the government) penes reges erat.—28. Supra fluvium oppidum est, et supra oppidum colles vitibus<sup>31</sup> obsiti<sup>32</sup> per magnum spatium patent (to extend).—29. Supra hunc locum rupes propendentes<sup>33</sup> tectum efficiunt (to form).—30. Senatus Veliternos trans Tiberim habitare jussit.—31. Cæsar speculatores (scout) ad fluvium versus misit.—32. Ultra finis Nerviorum Remi incolunt (to live), qui omnium Belgarum sunt extremi.—33. Dux Sempronium hortatus est, ne quid ultra viris experiretur.

<sup>76</sup> Insequi.—<sup>77</sup> Use the distributive numeral, since the mentioned maximum-distance took place in every moment of the march.—<sup>78</sup> Regnare means to reign, when it is equivalent with "to be a king." Regere is only used with transitive objects, and generally is translated by "to rule, to govern."—<sup>79</sup> Translate the preposition after in No. 50, 51, 52 in all admissible ways.—<sup>80</sup> Commodare.—<sup>81</sup> Attingere.—<sup>82</sup> Tondere.—<sup>83</sup> The plural of capillus.—<sup>84</sup> The new moon, novilunium.—<sup>85</sup> Rubus.—<sup>86</sup> To become ripe, maturescere.—<sup>87</sup> Summer solstice, solstitium æstivum.—<sup>88</sup> Strawberries, fraga G. Germ.
<sup>1</sup> Milestone.—<sup>2</sup> Considerare, to establish one's self.—<sup>3</sup> To spend.—<sup>4</sup> A stick.—<sup>5</sup> To place.—<sup>6</sup> A wild beast.—<sup>7</sup> To drive away.—<sup>8</sup> Appian.—<sup>9</sup> Milestone.—<sup>10</sup> The grain.—<sup>11</sup> Satis magna copia, a sufficient quantity.—<sup>12</sup> Suppetere, to be on hand.—<sup>13</sup> Utilitatis causa, literally: for the sake of utility; transl.: for selfish interests.—<sup>14</sup> Expetere, to seek.—<sup>15</sup> Intimacy.—<sup>16</sup> Accedere, to be added, to follow.—<sup>17</sup> To pretend.

1. The enemy placed (ponere) their camp in the neighborhood of a river, to which our soldiers used<sup>34</sup> to go, in order (Supine) to get water.<sup>35</sup>—2. Roscius owned (possidere) a little property (fundus) near the sea.—3. The same has been told me by [that] most renowned man, who is sitting beside thee.—4. He held (habere) that part of Cilicia, next to Cappadocia, which the Leuco-Syri inhabit.<sup>36</sup>—5. You do not understand these things so well<sup>37</sup> on account of [your] youth.—6. I wish (velle with infin. clause), that Sulpicius may be safe (salvus), not so much (§ 412, R. 58) on account of my friendship, as on account of the republic's welfare.—7. Cæsar concluded (statuere) to send Valerius to Ariovistus, both on account of his fidelity<sup>38</sup> and on account of his knowledge<sup>39</sup> of the Gallic language.—8. The Sequani are worse off<sup>40</sup> than the Ædui, for the reason that Ariovistus has occupied the third part of the Sequanian (Sequanus) territory (ager), which is the best in (of) the whole of Gaul.—9. It is doubtful, whether Sulpicius has done this for the sake of (causā) friendship, or [for the sake] of his own interest (utilitas).—10. Thou suspectest, perhaps, that I have done this rather on my [own] account, than [on account] of the republic.—11. Scipio led the fleet past the coast of Italy and Gaul as far as Spain.—12. The soldiers had no arms, except [their] swords.—13. They uttered<sup>41</sup> nothing but (except) complaints<sup>42</sup> about (GENITIVE) the [bad] times.—14. The Allobroges retreated (se recipere) to Cæsar, and proved<sup>43</sup> that nothing was left (§ 373, R. 32) to them, except the bare<sup>44</sup> ground (solum).—15. Ariovistus demanded that they (each of them) should bring (ducere) ten men besides themselves to the conference (colloquium).—16. Antonius demanded the heads of seventeen senators, the noblest men, and before the others [that] of Cicero.—17. I am owing (debere) almost nothing, except to Atticus.—18. He declared (§ 411), that he could not allow this passage<sup>45</sup> to them, except, if they were willing to give hostages.—19. I shall never be quiet<sup>46</sup> so long as (quandiu) an enemy will be this side of the Euphrātes.—20. The Senate forbade the Veliterni to dwell (habitare) this side the Tiber.—21. The city of Ciria is opposite (over against) Spain.—22. Among the kings, who bore (ferre) arms against the Roman people, the most renowned (nobilis) were Philip, his son Perseus, Mithridates, and before the others Hannibal.—23. The Romans demanded, that the Carthaginians should have no possessions (possessio) without Africa.—24. I always have acknowledged (agnoscere) thy friendship and kindness (benevolentia) toward me.—25. Demosthenes prepared within his house<sup>47</sup> that glory, which nobody but (except) he, has reached (consequi) afterward.—26. The ambassadors of Philip were directed to leave within ten days the city of Rome.—27. Below the star Saturn (§ 112, D) is [the star] Jupiter, which is much (§ 311) nearer to the earth, than the former.—28. Perhaps he, who holds<sup>48</sup> the highest power, will gratify thy wishes.<sup>49</sup>—29. The form of [this] Gallic soldier towered (eminere) over the heads of the others.—30. Above the road a very high mountain was towering (impendere), so that a very few easily could prevent [the passage].—31. Cæsar demanded, that Ariovistus should no more<sup>50</sup> lead any multitude of men across the Rhine.—32. Thou knowest that I have a small property (fundus) across the Anio (§ 149).—33. Cæsar directed Salustius Crispus, to sail in the direction of the island of Cercina.—34. Thou shalt not work (laborare) beyond [thy] strength, nor be liberal<sup>51</sup> beyond [thy] means (opes pl.).—35. It is uncertain, of what kind the nature of those regions is, which lie (esse) beyond the boundaries (finis) of the Suevi.

<sup>18</sup> Quæ vocantur, so called.—<sup>19</sup> Sententia, a vote. Suffragium is a vote at the polls, a ballot. Sententia is a vote, based on reasons, or after debate, equivalent to: opinion.—<sup>20</sup> Pellis, a hide.—<sup>21</sup> Small size.—<sup>22</sup> Summa imperii, the highest command.—<sup>23</sup> Acer, violent.—<sup>24</sup> Scout.—<sup>25</sup> Reliquum esse, to be left, to remain.—<sup>26</sup> Latrocinium, a robbery.—<sup>27</sup> Facere, to commit.—<sup>28</sup> Supply: Montem, the Apennine mountains, the Apennines.—<sup>29</sup> Missile, a missile.—<sup>30</sup> Petere, to reach.—<sup>31</sup> Vites, a grape-vine.—<sup>32</sup> Obsitus, planted (with).—<sup>33</sup> Propendere, to overhang.—<sup>34</sup> By consuescere. See § 342, R. 4.—<sup>35</sup> To get water, aquari.—<sup>36</sup> Incolere.—<sup>37</sup> Translate: You see these things less.—<sup>38</sup> Fides.—<sup>39</sup> Scientia.—<sup>40</sup> Translate: It happens (accidere) worse to the Sequani than to the Ædui.

AB. DE. EX.

1. Hamilcar hostis a muris Carthaginiis remōvit, eosque pacem petere<sup>1</sup> cōgit.—2. Hostibus telōrum multitudine a fluvio pulsus, nostri nonnullis (ut) locis vado transierunt, atque ad alteram ripam pervenerunt.—3. Helvetii, a quibus Cæsar discedere<sup>2</sup> nolēbat, iter ab Arare flumine averterant.—4. Sidera<sup>3</sup> ab oriente (east) ad occidentem (west) ferri (to move) videntur.—5. Hadrumētum oppidum a Zama circiter trecentis millibus passuum abest.—6. Socrates philosophiam a rebus occultis avocavit<sup>4</sup> et ad vitam commū-

<sup>41</sup> Proferre. —<sup>42</sup> Querēla. —<sup>43</sup> Demonstrāre. —<sup>44</sup> Translate: Except the ground of the field. —<sup>45</sup> Iter. —<sup>46</sup> To be quiet, quiescere. —<sup>47</sup> Translate: within his walls (paries). —<sup>48</sup> Translate: with whom is the highest power. —<sup>49</sup> Morari, morere. —<sup>50</sup> Amplius. —<sup>51</sup> Munificus. —<sup>1</sup> Pacem petere, to sue for peace. —<sup>2</sup> To withdraw. —<sup>3</sup> Aster, to turn. —<sup>4</sup> Sidera a star. —<sup>5</sup> Accehere, to coil off.

nem<sup>6</sup> adduxit.<sup>7</sup>—7. Hannibal postquam ad Alpīs (the Alps) venit, quæ Italiā ab Galliā scjungunt, nationes Alpicas (Alpine) vicit et fudit.<sup>8</sup>—8. Dux mercenarios<sup>9</sup> Germānos a reliquo exercitu separare constituit.—9. Pompejus quinquaginta diebus postquam ab urbe profectus est, omnia maria totamque Asiā a prædonibus liberaverat.—10. Hæc philosophiæ ratio,<sup>10</sup> quæ a Socrate profecta est,<sup>11</sup> usque ad nostram ætatem viguit.—11. Hoc genus oratorum ab Isocrate originem ducit.—12. Quæritur, a quo initio omnis philosophia ducatur?<sup>12</sup>—13. Si quid ab amico postulas, considera,<sup>13</sup> impetrare id possit ab eo.—14. Legati non modo pacem sed ne indutiam quidem ab rege impetrare potuerunt.—15. Cato veniam atque impunitatem (amnesty) a Cæsare nec petere nec accipere voluit.—16. Hamilcar arma, a patriā accepta, hostibus tradere noluit.—17. Trevirorum legati confirmarunt, se nunquam ab amicitia populi Romani defecisse.—18. Hæc est Stoicorum sententia, a qua ei, qui ad voluptatem omnia referunt, longe (widely) dissentiunt.—19. Cæsar litterarum animus meum a curis minoribus ad summum timorem traduxerunt (to turn over).—20. Si laus te ad virtutem allicere (to attract) non potest, ne metus quidem a fœdissimis factis (deed) potest avocare.—21. Ædui, cum se suaque ab Helvetiis defendere non possent, legatos ad Cæsarem mittunt, rogatum auxilium.—22. Gratissimum profecto non solum mihi feceris,<sup>22</sup> sed omnibus qui adsunt, si rem a principio repetere volueris.—23. Ab eā potissimum parte ordiamur, quæ omnibus maxime liquere (to be clear) videtur.—24. A primā ætate me omnis ars et doctrina (knowledge) liberalis, inprimis autem philosophia delectavit.—25. Hic primā ab ætate instituta (habits) et cultum<sup>24</sup> Armeniorum<sup>25</sup> imitatus est.—26. Arbores ab æquinocio autumnii<sup>26</sup> ad Vergiliarum<sup>27</sup> ortum serere licet.—27. Nos ita a pueris instituti<sup>28</sup> sumus, ut senes summā reverentiā (with reverence) prosequeremur.<sup>29</sup>—28. Di prohibebunt hæc, sed nunquam propter me de cælo descendent.—29. Obsides Tarentini (§ 112, B) comprehensi,<sup>30</sup> virgis<sup>31</sup> cæsi,<sup>32</sup> et de saxo Tarpejo<sup>33</sup> dejecti sunt.—30. Deflexit<sup>34</sup> jam aliquantum de hac viā consuetudo majorum.—31. Cæsar proposuit (to disclose), quæ quisque de Divitiaco apud se dixisset.—32. Vos vero voluntatem a facto distinguatis, neve de hominis fide (good faith) ex fortunæ invidia (ill-will) judicetis.—33. De hac re plura ad te scriberem, si otium habērem.—34. Apud Fabium multa de republica et de legibus disputavi.—35. Cicero de republica libri nuper ab Angelo Majo reperti (discover) et editi<sup>36</sup> sunt.—36. His quidem exemplis alia multa adjicere possem, si de hujus hominis injuriis queri vellem.—37. De omnibus his rebus melius postea judicabitis.—38. Nolite nunc querere, quid ego de republica sentiam (to think).—39. Hac de causa Cæsar magnis itineribus ad exercitum ire contendit (to hasten).—40. Flebat uterque, non de suo supplicio (death), sed pater de filii morte, de patris filius.—41. Telis e loco superiore a militibus missis (to throw), hostium acies facile perfracta<sup>41</sup> est.—42. Hannibal, ex Italiā regressus, pugna (in) apud Zamam a Scipione victus est.—43. Cicero ita ex Sicilia decessit, ut Siculis omnibus jucundam diuturnamque (lasting) memoriam nominis sui relinqueret.—44. Ex eo tempore leges et consuetudines veteres, paulatim (gradually) labefactari (to totter) coeptae sunt.—45. Ex illo die Tarentini defectionem (secession) ad hostis meditari coeperunt.—46. Tum ex summa annonae caritate<sup>27</sup> et inopia<sup>28</sup> incredibilis subito vilitas<sup>29</sup> rei frumentariae<sup>30</sup> consecuta est.<sup>31</sup>—47. Africanus cognomen (his surname) ex virtute duxit.—48. Tales fructus ex diligentia et probitate<sup>32</sup> percipi possunt.—49. Ex hac re colligi potest, quantum detrimenti ex hominis illius fraudibus ceperim.—50. Quaesivit ex me Curio, qua de causa se ad Pompejum sequi noluissem.—51. Lucretius docuit, nihil posse ex nihilo (§ 360, R. 17) creari.—52. Nero ex compluribus templis statuas ex auro argentove fabricatas<sup>33</sup> detraxit<sup>34</sup> et conflavit.<sup>35</sup>—53. Duo e Macedonum gente reges multo ceteros rerum gestarum<sup>36</sup> gloria superabant, Philippus, Amyntae<sup>37</sup> filius et Alexander Magnus.—54. Hoc ex omnibus, quae proposui, difficillimum esse videtur.—55. Cives de quibus multi ex muris pugnabant, orabant ducem, ne urbem hostibus traderet.

<sup>6</sup> Vita communis, every-day life. —<sup>7</sup> To lead to, to approach. —<sup>8</sup> To rout. —<sup>9</sup> Mercenarii, mercenary troops; mercenarii. —<sup>10</sup> Philosophic ratio, philosophical method. —<sup>11</sup> To issue, to be derived. —<sup>12</sup> Considerare, to consider. —<sup>13</sup> Gratum alicui facere, to do somebody a favor, to oblige somebody. —<sup>14</sup> Gratissimum alicui facere, to do somebody a great favor, to oblige him greatly. —<sup>15</sup> The bearing, the way. —<sup>16</sup> Armenii, an Armenian. —<sup>17</sup> Æquinocium, the autumnal equinox. —<sup>18</sup> Vergiliæ, the Picades. —<sup>19</sup> Institui, to bring up, to rear. —<sup>20</sup> Comprehendere, to seize. —<sup>21</sup> Virga, a rod. —<sup>22</sup> Cedere, to strike. —<sup>23</sup> Tarpejus, Tarpejan. —<sup>24</sup> Deflectere, to turn off. —<sup>25</sup> Edere, to publish. —<sup>26</sup> Perfringere, to break.

1. When I had left (discedere) Caesar, I saw that I had been more than one hour with him.—2. I have been informed by letter, that our army has departed (proficisci) from the boundaries of the Parthi, and is marching (iter facere) toward Cilicia.—3. After<sup>38</sup> the army of the enemy had been driven (pellere) from the city,<sup>39</sup> Eumenes betook<sup>40</sup> himself to the king.—4. The territory (finis) of the Santones is not far distant from the territory of the Tolosians.<sup>41</sup>—5. Caesar was<sup>42</sup> no farther than 1500 paces from the enemy.—6. The star Mercury moves (ferri) below [the star] Venus with (by) incredible swiftness around the sun, from which it never is farther distant than the space (intervallum) of one sign [of the Zodiac].—7. The Hellespont separates Asia from Europe.—8. Separate (sejungere) thyself from friends to whom the necessity of the times has led (perducere) thee for a while (aliquamdiu).—9. The Helvetians, when they understood that they could not keep (arcere) our troops from the river, suddenly changed their plan and attacked our columns by the rear.<sup>43</sup>—10. Let us see, whether we cannot free the city from the tyrant.—11. The Massilians,<sup>44</sup> who derive [their] origin from the Phoceans,<sup>45</sup> always have preserved (servare) Greek arts and literature.—12. We must neither ask nor accept favors of such kind, even from our best friends.<sup>46</sup>—13. I should think (nescio) that you may obtain (impetrare) this from the king.—14. The Carthaginians were so terrified by these evils, that they even asked auxiliary troops from the Romans, and obtained them.—15. During all this time I have received one letter of thee.—16. The delegates prayed (orare) Caesar, not to suffer (pati), that (inf. clause) the state, by the bad (pravus) councils of young men, should secede from the allegiance (amicitia) of the Roman people.—17. The Stoics differ from the Peripatetics (Peripateticus) not in (by) words, but in (by) the whole matter (res).—18. By these proceedings (res) it was brought about,<sup>47</sup> that the minds of almost all citizens were turned (avertere) from [their] chief.—19. My pleasure has never called me away (avocare) from any one's interest (commodum).—20. Divitiacus was of opinion (censere), that Caesar was able to protect the whole of Gaul from the aggressions (injuria) of Ariovistus.—21. Since we cannot protect ourselves against the aggressions of the Germans, we shall be obliged (debere) to ask the help of others.—22. All places that were behind Caesar were safe from the enemy.—23. Let us examine (repetere) the whole matter from the very beginning.<sup>48</sup>—24. I should wish, that thou wouldst just begin with that point (locus), which it is necessary to understand before the others.—25. From my first boyhood (pueritia) I was taught rather to shun (fugere) than to seek (expetere) the company<sup>49</sup> of those of my age.<sup>50</sup>—26. Diodotus was my teacher<sup>51</sup> from my earliest boyhood till about my twentieth year.—27. Cato, from his youth up to his greatest (extremus) age, did not cease contracting<sup>52</sup> enmities for the sake of the republic.—28. With the Romans the age of childhood (infantia) was reckoned<sup>53</sup> from the first to the seventh year.—29. Winter and storms (tempestas) usually begin with the rising of the Pleiades.

<sup>27</sup> Summa caritas, the highest prices (literally: greatest dearness).—<sup>28</sup> Scarcity.—<sup>29</sup> Cheapness.—<sup>30</sup> Res frumentaria, provisions.—<sup>31</sup> Consequi, to follow.—<sup>32</sup> Honesty.—<sup>33</sup> Fabricare, to manufacture, form.—<sup>34</sup> Detrahere, to rob.—<sup>35</sup> Conflare, to melt up.—<sup>36</sup> Res gestae, deeds.—<sup>37</sup> Nom. Amyntas.—<sup>38</sup> Part. clause.—<sup>39</sup> The army had besieged the city.—<sup>40</sup> Conferre.—<sup>41</sup> A Tolosian (inhabitant of the modern Toulouse), Tolosus, Gen. atis.—<sup>42</sup> Abesse.—<sup>43</sup> Translate: and, after their plan had been changed (part. clause) suddenly, attacked our column (agmen) by the rear.—<sup>44</sup> Massiliensis.—<sup>45</sup> Phocensis.—<sup>46</sup> Translate: Favors of such kind we must not even from our best friends either ask (petere) or accept.—<sup>47</sup> To bring about, facere.

30. So great was the bravery of the soldiers, that, although they were pressed by the greatest quantity (multitudo) of darts (telum), still nobody went (decedere) from the rampart.—31. The citizens themselves defended the walls, from which they had driven (pellere) the enemy.—32. I do not know, whether not perhaps some also of you have deviated (deflectere) a little from the right (rectus) path.<sup>54</sup>—33. I shall neither write of my labors nor of thy expectations.—34. Thou wilt do (fut. perf.) me a great favor indeed, if thou wilt indicate (fut. perf.) to me, what Sulpicius has said of me in thy house.—35. These matters, concerning which we lately had a conversation<sup>55</sup> with each other, are as little important (§ 412) as I expected.—36. The leaders quarrelled (contendere) with each other for the highest command.—37. The question concerning taxes<sup>56</sup> and duties<sup>57</sup> has not been settled<sup>58</sup> yet.—38. I see no reason, why you should despair of your welfare.—39. The law on the rights of foreign-born citizens<sup>59</sup> has been carried by all votes except three.—40. I have sent you by the letter-carrier the books which I have written on philosophy. See what you can do with them.

41. I sailed from the Piræus three days after I had seen thee in the house of Sulpicius.—42. Caesar took (deducere) three legions, which were wintering (hiemare) about Aquilæja, from their winterquarters (hiberna).—43. When Verres had returned from Sicily, he was accused by the Sicilians of malversation<sup>60</sup> and other crimes.—44. Ariovistus demanded, that Caesar and his army should leave (decedere) Gaul.—45. The citizens saw from the walls, that the enemy was retreating.—46. Both centurions during the whole battle fought on horseback.—47. Since this time Jugurtha began more and more<sup>61</sup> to deviate from the right path, and to throw off (abjicere) all shame<sup>62</sup> and restraint.<sup>63</sup>—48. Since this day the Greeks began to despair of [their] liberty, and gradually<sup>64</sup> to submit<sup>65</sup> to foreign (alienus) rule.<sup>66</sup>—49. Since that day I have received no letter of thee.—50. When<sup>67</sup> the pirates had been destroyed (tollere) by Pompey, the highest security (securitas) followed<sup>68</sup>

<sup>48</sup> Principium, caput.—<sup>49</sup> Societas.—<sup>50</sup> Those of my, thy, his, etc., age, æquales.—<sup>51</sup> Translate: "I have heard Diodotus," that is: his teaching. Præceptor meus fuit would mean: He held the office as my teacher.—<sup>52</sup> Suscipere.—<sup>53</sup> To reckon, habere.—<sup>54</sup> Via.—<sup>55</sup> To have a conversation, disserere.—<sup>56</sup> A tax, vectigal.—<sup>57</sup> A duty (as impost) portorium.—<sup>58</sup> To settle, constituere.—<sup>59</sup> A foreign-born citizen, peregrinus.—<sup>60</sup> Malversation, repetundæ (supply; pecuniæ), meaning properly: money to be asked back.—<sup>61</sup> More and more, magis in dies.—<sup>62</sup> Verecundia.—<sup>63</sup> Modus.—<sup>64</sup> Paulatim.—<sup>65</sup> Se submittere.—<sup>66</sup> Dominatio.—<sup>67</sup> Partic. clause.—<sup>68</sup> Consequi.

suddenly upon the greatest excitement<sup>69</sup> and dangers of men.—51. I have derived (ducere) this opinion from several facts (causa).—52. Do not permit (committre), that this place derives (capere) [its] name from a disaster of the Roman people.—53. How great an advantage the republic derived from this victory, can be seen (deprehendere) chiefly from the fact, that since this time the Latin nations (latini) never again attempted (conari) to throw off the Roman rule (imperium).—54. You will derive (parcere) the best fruits from rectitude,<sup>71</sup> and next to it from industry and economy.<sup>72</sup>—55. The prætor asked (quaerere) Ebutius, when he had returned from his journey, since what time he had dwelled with his father, and where he had been during the games.—56. The old Romans ordained<sup>73</sup> by law, that the citizens should not own (habere) anything made out of gold and silver.—57. Many of the friends of Alexander became kings, and (transl. who) acquired crowns (regnum) after his death. [One]<sup>74</sup> of them, Antigonus, was killed, when he was fighting<sup>75</sup> against Seleucus.—58. Themistocles sent one of his slaves to Xerxes, who should induce (seducere) him, to fight on the next day.—59. The general said (§ 411), that according to the laws and customs (mos) of the Roman people, he could not accept conditions of peace from an armed enemy.—60. From the letter, which yesterday was brought to me by the letter-carrier, I learned (deprehendere) that thou art already recovering from [thy] disease. I expect thee therefore as soon as possible. Take<sup>76</sup> (capere) however, [thy] resolution<sup>77</sup> according to time and circumstances. Farewell.

CUM. PRÆ. PRO. SINE. CORAM. TENUS.

1. Pater meus quesivit ex me, vellemne secum urbe decedere.—2. Romanorum legati quesiti sunt, quod Carthaginienses Hannibalem cum imperio apud exercitum haberent. 3. Nam interfixit tibi Fabricius propterea quod bellum tam cum Pyrrho quam cum divitiis gessit?—4. Belzæ proximi sunt Germanis, qui trans Rhenum incolunt, (et) quibuscum continenter bellum gerunt.—5. Antisthenes, interrogatus, quid emolumentum<sup>2</sup> ceperit ex philosophia, Ut mecum, inquit, loqui possem.—6. Divitiacus, multis cum lacrimis Cæsarem complexus, obsecravit (deprecari) eum, ne quid durius adversus fratrem statueret.—7. Virtus se ipsa contenta est.—8. Lucili domus omnibus luxuriis et cupidis instructa fuit.—9. Narratur Herculem ex his locis boves formosissimas abegisse, et Tiberim, armentum<sup>3</sup> præ se agens, trajecisse.—10. Accusatorem meum tam esse arrogantem videtis, iudices, ut omnis præ se despiciat, et hominem præ se neminem esse putet.—11. Matres ac conjuges pavidae præ gaudio vel doctis<sup>4</sup> oculi (forget) erant.—12. Præ invidiâ ne summas quidem hominum vides virtutes.—13. M. Livius ignominie acceptæ<sup>10</sup> memoriam (remembrance) vultu atque habitu<sup>11</sup> semper præ se tulit.—14. Cæsar pro castris copias suas produxit.—15. Pro patria, pro domibus, pro liberis vestris pugnat!—16. Ciceronis pro

<sup>69</sup> Trepidatio.—<sup>70</sup> Amplius.—<sup>71</sup> Probitas.—<sup>72</sup> Parsimonia.—<sup>73</sup> Statui.—<sup>74</sup> When the expression "one of them" is an apposition to a noun, or if it is used as a qualitative adjective, the numeral "one" must be omitted.—<sup>75</sup> Dimicare.—<sup>76</sup> By fac.—<sup>77</sup> Consilium.

<sup>1</sup> Relative clauses may or may not be coordinated by copulative or adversative conjunctions in Latin (See p. 474, 7).—<sup>2</sup> Emolumentum capere, to gain.—<sup>3</sup> To embrace.—<sup>4</sup> Aliquid duri adversus aliquem statuere (literally: to decide something hard against somebody) means: to employ a hard punishment against some one. For the comparative see § 315.—<sup>5</sup> It is stated.—<sup>6</sup> To drive away.—<sup>7</sup> Flock.—<sup>8</sup> Trembling.—<sup>9</sup> Decency.—<sup>10</sup> Which he had suffered.—<sup>11</sup> In his face and bearing.

Ligario, pro Marcello, pro rege Dejotaro orationes apud Cæsarem habitæ<sup>12</sup> sunt.—17. Quæsieram ex Sempronio, utrum ipse pro iudicibus locutus esset, an alius quidam causam pro eo egisset.<sup>13</sup>—18. Quædam incommoda pro eis sunt quibus acciderunt, et quædam quæ laudantur atque appetuntur (to covet) contra eos sunt quos delectaverunt.—19. Aliquamdiu (for some time) etiam militum nostrorum impetus impeditus est eo (by the fact) quod Germani pro vallo carros<sup>14</sup> suos aggredientibus objecerant.<sup>15</sup>—20. Senatus Lætorio præscripsit, ut solemnia<sup>16</sup> pro pontifice<sup>17</sup> susciperet.—21. Galba pro prætore ad exercitum missus est.—22. Peto nunc abs te mercēdem pro labore meo.—23. Equidem pro hac statuâ dimidium ejus quod petis tibi dabo.—24. Cæsar singulis civitatibus pro civium numero vectigalia imposuit.<sup>18</sup>—25. Quid aliud pro tuâ erga me amicitia facere potes?—26. Crustumini (the Crustumini) vero pro inopia (poverty) eorum<sup>19</sup> agrum (suum) restituit.—27. Cæsar Ciceronem pro ejus merito laudat.—28. Nonne hanc rem pro tuâ mihi vendidisti?—29. Supervacuum<sup>20</sup> est, ostendere, mundum non sine aliquo custode<sup>21</sup> stare (to last) posse.—30. Marcet<sup>22</sup> sine adversario virtus.—31. Scisne tu, eum sine gloria vinci, qui sine periculo vincitur?—32. Pompejus hoc sine ulla dubitatione faciet; sed nosti hominis tarditatem<sup>23</sup> et taciturnitatem.<sup>24</sup>—33. Quis unquam tot scelera ab uno homine sine ulla dubitatione commissa esse audivit?—34. Timoleon tantum habuit amorem omnium Siculorum, ut nullo recusante regnum obtineret.—35. Athenienses impetum, non expectato auxilio, fecerunt.—36. Romani non rogati Græcis auxilium obtulerunt.—37. Manlius quum<sup>25</sup> Sempronio hanc pecuniam credidisset<sup>26</sup> neque ullam ab eo satisfactionem<sup>27</sup> exegisset (to demand), tamen paucis mensibus post cepit diffidere (to lose confidence).—38. Tu vero repetas velim ea, quæ mihi coram genero meo dicere ausus es.—39. Quid cogitas de eis, qui aliena omnia<sup>28</sup> despicientes, suarum rerum (deeds) magnitudinem cælo tenus extollere solent?

1. Crassus left (exire) with two messengers the winterquarters.—2. Hannibal defeated Flaminius at the lake Trasimēnus, and a few days later C. Centenius, who was occupying the mountains with a select<sup>29</sup> force (manus).—3. God be with you, O children.—4. In the meanwhile (Rem. 26) we are amusing (delectare) ourselves quietly<sup>30</sup> with (in company of) the Muses.—5. Since the face<sup>31</sup> of Domitius did not agree (consentire) with his words,<sup>32</sup> and [since he] against<sup>33</sup> [his] custom spoke much with his [attendants], the matter could not be concealed<sup>34</sup> and denied<sup>35</sup> [any] longer.—6. The entertainment<sup>36</sup> was provided (instructus) with everything necessary.—7. It soon becomes evident,<sup>37</sup> whether one<sup>38</sup> has been educated in (by) a vulgar (vulgaris) manner (mos), or [whether] he is endowed (instructus) with those liberal<sup>39</sup> arts, which are in the gift<sup>40</sup> of the Muses.—8. When the Latins had come (accidere) to the very gates of the city, and had returned to their camp, loaded with<sup>41</sup> booty, the consul Quinctius called (vocare) the people to a meeting (concio).—9. Although thou art a consul, and he (that one) [is] a private [man], I yet believe, that thou in comparison with him, art not even a human being.<sup>42</sup>—10. I do not know for joy, where I am, nor what to do (what I should do) with (Rem. 56) myself.—11. See, how unfair thou art on account of [thy] anger.—12. The chief showed (displayed) in (by) his very face and gait (incessus) the brutality<sup>43</sup> of a<sup>44</sup> wild beast.<sup>45</sup>—13. Horace says, that it is sweet and honorable (decōrus) to die for [one's] country.—14. The judge directed Gajus to defend himself<sup>46</sup> before the prætor.—15. But now let (sine) me do some little thing<sup>47</sup> also for myself.—16. Demosthenes's oration for Ctesiphon (gen. Ctesiphontis) or<sup>48</sup> for the crown, was praised even by his adversary Æschines.—17. How much Atticus had done for his friends, could be seen (intelligere) from [their] mourning<sup>49</sup> at (genitive) his funeral (funus).—18. The elks (alces) have<sup>50</sup> trees as resting-places.<sup>51</sup>—19. Vale. Against (ad) these they lean<sup>52</sup> and thus take<sup>53</sup> [their] rest (quies).—20. Valerius besought (orāre) the general, to allow him, to go in his place to the conference (colloquium).—21. I asked my friend, to consider (habēre) my house as his [own].—22. The Senate sent Sempronius as a proconsul to the army.—23. Cæsar sent Æmilius with two legions against the enemy with the power of a lieutenant (legātus).—24. The prætor sent Septimius in his stead to the Insubrians.—25. If you, instead of a tower had erected (facere) a castle (castellum), you would have better protected the town from the enemy.—26. I have given 60,000 sesterces for that slave.—27. King Nico-medes was willing to pay (solvere) all the debts<sup>54</sup> of the Cnidians<sup>55</sup> for one statue of Praxiteles. But these, preferring (anteponere) art to riches, refused (notte).—28. Take (accipere) half of what<sup>56</sup> thou askest (petere) for that horse.—29. For your benefits to (toward) us, we return (agere) (to) you [our] best (highest) thanks.—30. The gods, if they wish to punish some one in proportion to his crime (scelus), often allow (concedere) to him a longer (diuturnus) impunity.<sup>57</sup>—31. Each may contribute<sup>58</sup> in proportion to his own (§ 362, R. 20, 3) ability.<sup>59</sup>—32. I have asked (rogavi) Cæsar, in accordance with my love toward thee, to remember<sup>60</sup> not thy former (præteritum) opinions, but thy present disposition (voluntas).—33. I love our [friend] Piso exceedingly according to his merit (meritum).—34. The king thought, that he could not come to the camp without great danger.—35. We can [do]<sup>61</sup> nothing without God's help.—36. What Sulpicius has told (narrāre) (to) us about the victories of the enemy is undoubtedly invented<sup>62</sup> and false.—37. Gajus has written to Sempronius that he, without any hesitation, was sharing (probare) his opinion about this book.—38. Cicero wrote to Oppius, what he had said of him in Cæsar's presence.—39. Thou canst say nothing at all without hurting<sup>63</sup> somebody's feelings.<sup>64</sup>—40. When he had told (edere) his name several times (§ 258), without being able to see any one, he left (excedere) the house.—41. He left the house, without being seen<sup>65</sup> by any one.—42. I departed, without taking (habēre) any regard (ratio) for (genitive) my health.<sup>66</sup>—43. Wilt thou dare to repeat<sup>67</sup> that in my face?—43. The army of Alexander marched (proficisci) as far as the Indus.

<sup>12</sup> Habere, to deliver.—<sup>13</sup> Causam agere, to conduct a case.—<sup>14</sup> Carrus, a cart.—<sup>15</sup> To oppose.—<sup>16</sup> Solemnia suscipere, to perform the religious ceremonies.—<sup>17</sup> The pontifex, high priest, a high sacerdotal office in Rome.—<sup>18</sup> Imponere with dative, to levy upon.—<sup>19</sup> Why not sua?—<sup>20</sup> Superfluous.—<sup>21</sup> Ruler, guardian.—<sup>22</sup> Marcere, to droop, to languish.—<sup>23</sup> Slowness.—<sup>24</sup> Taciturnity.—<sup>25</sup> Although.—<sup>26</sup> To lend.—<sup>27</sup> Security.—<sup>28</sup> Supply the noun "deeds."—<sup>29</sup> Delectus.—<sup>30</sup> Equo animo.—<sup>31</sup> Vultus.—<sup>32</sup> Transl.: speech (oratio).—<sup>33</sup> Rem. 40.—<sup>34</sup> Tegere.—<sup>35</sup> Dissimulare.—<sup>36</sup> Convivium.—<sup>37</sup> Transl.: It is easily declared.—<sup>38</sup> Transl.: "some one."—<sup>39</sup> Ingenuus.—<sup>40</sup> Transl.: which the Muses give (tribuere) to men.—<sup>41</sup> Transl.: "driving [their] booty before them."

<sup>42</sup> Human being, homo. <sup>43</sup> Inimicitia. <sup>44</sup> Translate: "some." <sup>45</sup> Wild beast, fera. <sup>46</sup> Transl.: To make words for himself. <sup>47</sup> Alcibiades, some little thing. <sup>48</sup> Both expressions were only different names for the same oration. <sup>49</sup> Major. <sup>50</sup> Translate: To the elks are. <sup>51</sup> A resting place, cubile. <sup>52</sup> To lean, se appellare. <sup>53</sup> Caper. <sup>54</sup> Debt, aes alienum. <sup>55</sup> Cnidius. <sup>56</sup> Or that, which thou askest. <sup>57</sup> Impunitas. <sup>58</sup> Contribute. <sup>59</sup> Facultas. <sup>60</sup> Remember, with genitive. <sup>61</sup> The object infinitives facere and habere dependent on the verbs posse and conscire, posse and conscire are frequently omitted in Latin as: Hoc non possumus (instead of: huc facere non possumus), we cannot do this; placuit (instead of: placuit fieri), it was decided. <sup>62</sup> invenire, to find. <sup>63</sup> offendere, to offend. <sup>64</sup> animus, feelings. <sup>65</sup> visus, to see. <sup>66</sup> Transl.: Without any regard for my health having been taken. <sup>67</sup> Transl.: "to repeat that" by: "to say those same things."

IV WITH THE ACCUSATIVE.

1. Hamilcar, his rebus ex sententiā peractis,<sup>1</sup> cum exercitu in Hispaniam missus est.—2. Arar flumen per finis Æduorum in Rhodanum influit incredibili<sup>2</sup> lenitate,<sup>3</sup> (ita) ut oculis, in utram partem fluat,<sup>4</sup> judicari non possit.—3. Id Helvetii, qui in montem sese receperant, conspicati,<sup>5</sup> prælium renovare cœperunt.—4. Cicero obsecravit Cæsarem, ut Marcello in patriam redire permitteret.—5. Aristides per civium suorum suffragia in exilium missus est.—6. Quamquam Demetrius filiam suam Seleuco in matrimonium dederat, fida inter eos amicitia manere non potuit.—7. Pompejus Juliam, Cæsaris filiam, in matrimonium duxerat, cujus morte ultimum quod inter eos fuit vinculum ruptum est.—8. Metellus, postquam in provinciam advenit, imprimis militum disciplinam ad pristinam conditionem redigere studuit.—9. Reliqui sese fugæ mandarunt (to betake), atque in proximas silvas abdidērunt.—10. Cæsar Divitiaci summum in populum Romanum studium (zeal) et summam in se voluntatem (attachment) cognoverat.<sup>7</sup>—11. Cæsar Labienum cum duabus legionibus impetum in munitiones facere jussit.—12. Metellus Marium ad se in tentorium<sup>8</sup> invitavit, oravitque ne ejusmodi expectationes conciperet, admonuit etiam, ut in futurum se pro loco<sup>9</sup> et conditione suā gereret.<sup>10</sup>—13. Sumptus, quos in hanc rem fecisti, haud facile recuperabis.—14. Lucullus amplius decies centena millia sesterium in unam cœnam impendit.<sup>11</sup>—15. Sempronius ex consulatu in Hispaniam profectus est.—16. Publicani<sup>12</sup> rogabant me, ut hæc vectigalia in se transferrem (to transfer).—17. Omnes magistratus supplicabant (to petition) me, ne nova onera in provinciam imponerem (to lay).—18. Omnia tibi libere (openly) scribam, quæ mihi eā de re in mentem venērunt.—19. Ex litteris tuis cognovi, te in Pompeji gratiam redisse.—20. Boji Cæsarem implorabant, ut se in fidem et amicitiam reciperet.—21. Cæsar hanc civitatem in deditionem accipere noluit, propterea quod fidem (their word) jure jurando confirmatam (to strengthen) non servassent.—22. Dumnorix vectigalia et portoria omnia in decem annos redemerat.<sup>13</sup>—23. Rex senatui scripsit, velle se in omne tempus amicitiam cum populo Romano habere (keep).—24. Fac ne ullum omnino negotium in posterum (next) diem differas (to postpone).—25. Apud Romanos censores in quinquennium<sup>14</sup> creabantur.—26. Utrique consuli<sup>15</sup> imperium in annum prorogatum est (to continue).

1. Hamilcar took his son Hannibal over<sup>16</sup> to Spain.—2. The Senate decreed, that Scipio should go as proconsul to the province.—3. I have learned (cognoscere) from thy letter, that Pompey has gone to Greece.—4. Cæsar sent his whole cavalry forward<sup>17</sup> in order to ascertain (cognoscere) in what direction the enemy were marching (iter facere).—5. Cæsar withdrew (subducere) his troops on the next hill, and sustained the attack of the enemy by [his] cavalry.—6. Cæsar did this chiefly for this reason (ratio), lest the Germans might pass (transire) from their [own] territory (finis) into the territory of the Helvetians.—7. Although Cæsar had married his daughter Julia to Pompey, the friendship between them was by no means increased (augere) by this connection.<sup>17</sup>—8. Dumnorix had married a wife from the [country of the] Helvetians.<sup>18</sup>—9. The Helvetians already had led (traducere) their troops through the passes (angustie), and had arrived in the territory of the Ædui.—10. Auxiliary troops of the neighboring nations arrived in the camp.—11. The soldiers of the tenth legion demanded with shouting (clamor) of Cæsar, to lead them directly against the enemy.—12. Dumnorix hated Cæsar and the Romans because (for the reason that) by their arrival (adventus) his power<sup>19</sup> was diminished, and [his] brother Divitiacus was restored to his former position (locus) of influence and honor.—13. The tribunes complained loudly,<sup>20</sup> that the war against Jugurtha was carried on (gerere) with the greatest negligence.—14. When Sulla arrived in the city with his army, the citizens, terrified, concealed themselves in their houses.—15. For I know thy great<sup>21</sup> zeal for my interest<sup>22</sup> and [thy] unalterable<sup>23</sup> friendship toward me and my family.—16. Cæsar called Dumnorix to him, and admonished him, to avoid for the future all suspicions.—17. Often very valuable<sup>24</sup> things are thrown (ejicere) from the sea on the shores.—18. The king spent an enormous sum of money (sumptus ingentis) for the wedding of his daughter.—19. Lepidus, immediately after the expiration of his term as prætor, went to Sicily.—20. Cicero was afraid lest after the expiration of his term as consul he might be thrown into prison.—21. Upon (right after) this attack all the ranks of the enemy turned (se convertere) into a most disgraceful flight.—22. Hamilcar exhorted his son Hannibal, never to give up<sup>25</sup> his hatred against the Roman people.—23. Do not change truth (true things) into falsehood (false things).—24. Ariovistus made with the cavalry an attack on the rear-guard.<sup>26</sup>—25. I wish (cupere with inf. clause), that you transfer your friendship toward me to my son.—26. I doubted, whether I should lay (imponere) so great taxes (contributio) on these poor (inops) cities.—27. Nothing of the kind* has ever entered my mind.—28. I am exceedingly glad (gaudere) that thou hast been reconciled (in gratiam redire) with Cæsar.—29. I admonish thee, not to admit this man either to thy friendship or to thy house.—30. When the inhabitants saw, that they could not defend themselves [any] longer, they sent ambassadors to Cæsar, who should implore (exorare) him, to [admit] the submission of the city.—31. Thou hast [here] the transactions* of one day. The other [matters] will be laid over* to the Ides of January.—32. The Senate granted to the city immunity* from all taxes and tributes for five years.—33. For how many years has this power* been intrusted* to thee?—34. By this speech of Cæsar the courage* of the soldiers was strengthened<sup>27</sup> in a wonderful manner.—35. The higher (major) magistrates of<sup>28</sup> the Romans were elected (creare) for one (§ 259) year.—36. Cæsar wrote a book in praise of Cato.

<sup>1</sup> Peragere, to accomplish.—<sup>2</sup> Incredible.—<sup>3</sup> Smoothness.—<sup>4</sup> To run.—<sup>5</sup> To decide.—<sup>6</sup> Conspicari, to perceive.—<sup>7</sup> The perfect of cognoscere frequently is used with the force of the perfect verb novisse.—<sup>8</sup> Tentorium, tent. The words ad se in tentorium are idiomatic Latin. We say "to his tent." But the Latin says: "To him into the tent," in order to express more clearly the purpose of a personal interview.—<sup>9</sup> Position.—<sup>10</sup> Se gerere, to comport one's self.—<sup>11</sup> To spend.—<sup>12</sup> Publicanus, a publican; that is: a farmer of the public revenue.—<sup>13</sup> Redimere, to buy.—<sup>14</sup> Quinquennium, a period of five years.—<sup>15</sup> The Latin says: to continue the command to the consul: we say: the command of the consul.—<sup>16</sup> To take over, transducere.—<sup>17</sup> To send forward, præmittere.

<sup>17</sup> Affinitas. — <sup>18</sup> Potentia. — <sup>19</sup> Libere. — <sup>20</sup> Superlative. — <sup>21</sup> Transl.: great. — <sup>22</sup> Latentia-bilis. — <sup>23</sup> Perseverans. — <sup>24</sup> Deponere. — <sup>25</sup> Agmen novissimum. — <sup>26</sup> Ad ducere, ad ducere, ad ducere. — <sup>27</sup> To lay over, reject. — <sup>28</sup> Immunitas. — <sup>29</sup> Potestas. — <sup>30</sup> Deponere. — <sup>31</sup> Anni. — <sup>32</sup> Confirmare. — <sup>33</sup> Transl.: among, with the Romans. — <sup>34</sup> Ad ducere, ad ducere.

IV WITH THE ABLATIVE. ABLATIVES OF PLACE AND TIME.

1. Optimates sese in arce tenuerunt.<sup>1</sup>—2. Marius in paludibus Minturnensibus<sup>2</sup> captus est.—3. Marcellus variâ cum fortuna in Sicilia pugnâvit.—4. Metellus apud populum accusatus est, quod bellum in Africâ parum diligenter<sup>3</sup> gereret.—5. Quamdiu (as long as) in Asiâ fui, nihil certi de eâ re cognoscere potui.—6. Hamilcarem et Hannibalem et animi magnitudine<sup>4</sup> et calliditate<sup>5</sup> omnis in Africâ natos præstitisse<sup>6</sup> constat.<sup>7</sup>—7. Cæsar, ponte in Arari<sup>8</sup> facto, exercitum in Sequanos traduxit (to lead over).—8. Cyrus, Persarum rex, apud Massagetas<sup>9</sup> in prælio cecidit.—9. In hac fugâ Numidæ, qui simul cum Hannibale ex acie<sup>10</sup> excesserant, ei insidiati sunt.<sup>11</sup>—10. Consolatur me recordatio (remembrance) meorum temporum, quorum imaginem video in rebus tuis.—11. Non in causâ vestrâ, sed in populi Romani clementiâ spes salutis (vestræ) posita est.—12. In hac re magnâ acerbitate objurgatus sum.—13. Euphranor Amorem<sup>12</sup> in leone sedentem pinxit.<sup>13</sup>—14. Xerxes maximis exercitibus terrâ marique bellum intulit Græciæ.—15. Equites, cupidius (too eagerly) novissimum agmen secuti, alieno<sup>14</sup> loco cum equitatu hostium prælium committunt (commence).—16. Mithridates civis Romanus omnis totâ Asiâ unâ nocte interfici jussit (gave orders).—17. Hoc enim tempore judices ex equitibus<sup>15</sup> deligebantur.<sup>16</sup>—18. Eodem die Labienus exercitum ex Aduaticis in Nervios transduxit.—19. Idibus Januariis in senatu nihil est confectum (accomplish), propterea quod dies magnâ ex parte consumptus est altercatione (quarrel) Lentuli consulis et Caninii, tribuni plebis.—20. Ex eo proelio circiter hominum millia XXV superfuērunt, eaque totâ nocte continenter (without interruption) ierunt (to march). Die quarto in finis Lingonum pervenerunt, cum nostri et propter militum vulnera et propter sepulturam<sup>17</sup> occisorum eos sequi non potuissent.—21. In his sex mensibus Casilinum ita est obsessum, ut nemo nec ex oppido egredi (excedere), nec in oppidum pervenire posset.—22. Comitia bis in anno habentur (to hold), tempore verno<sup>18</sup> et autumnali.<sup>19</sup>—23. Cluentius nihil in vitâ vidit calamitatis.—24. Constat Catonem linguam Græcam in senectute didicisse.—25. Hoc in bello exercitus nostri feliciôres fuere.—26. Bello Punico tertio Carthago a Scipione minore diruta est.

1. As long as Hannibal was in Italy, he was never defeated in a pitched battle* by the enemy.—2. Of these legions two were in the hither (citerior), and one in the farther (ulterior) province.—3. In the camp the greatest consternation (consternatio) had pervaded (pervadere) all ranks.—4. When Cicero was travelling in Sicily, frequent embassies (legatio) came to him, who thanked him (acted thanks to him), for (quod) having taken charge<sup>21</sup> of [this] case.<sup>22</sup>—5. Cæsar observed our laws in Gaul, but not in Italy.—6. In our latitudes<sup>23</sup> the dog-star (§ 229) rises a few days after the summer solstice<sup>24</sup> together with the sun.—7. In the Chersonese, which is opposite Abydos,<sup>25</sup> were many colonies of the Athenians.—8. Cæsar placed* (collocare)

<sup>1</sup> To keep. — <sup>2</sup> Minturnensis, belonging to Minturnæ, an Italian city. — <sup>3</sup> Parum diligenter, with negligence. — <sup>4</sup> Magnitudo. — <sup>5</sup> Calliditas. — <sup>6</sup> To exceed. — <sup>7</sup> It is known. — <sup>8</sup> Arari, Arar or Araris. — <sup>9</sup> The Massagete, a nation of Scythia. — <sup>10</sup> Battlefield. — <sup>11</sup> Insidiati, insidiati with Dative, to lie in ambush or in wait for somebody. — <sup>12</sup> Amor, a god. — <sup>13</sup> To paint. — <sup>14</sup> Alieno, alieno. — <sup>15</sup> Equites, knights, a division of the Roman citizens. — <sup>16</sup> To elect. — <sup>17</sup> Sepultura. — <sup>18</sup> Verno, belonging to Spring. — <sup>19</sup> Autumnalis, belonging to Autumn. — <sup>20</sup> A pitched battle, actio. — <sup>21</sup> To take charge of something, suscipere curam. — <sup>22</sup> Causa. — <sup>23</sup> Transl.: In the place, which are included latitudes. — <sup>24</sup> Solstitium æstivum. — <sup>25</sup> Abydos, Gen. Abydi (after the 2. declension). — <sup>26</sup> Collocare, requires in with ablative.

on the highest part (§ 372, R. 31) of the mountain the two legions, which he had just (proxime) drafted<sup>26</sup> in hither Gaul.—9. Hannibal had led (inducere) Ti. Sempronius Gracchus into an ambushade in the country of the Lucāni.—10. Let us deposit<sup>27</sup> these valuables (opes) in the temple of Diana.—11. Cæsar decreed to build a bridge over the river Rhine.—12. A. You are mistaken (to be in an error), O Sempronius. S. Yes, but who led me into this error?—13. Cæsar marched on the same road, as (on which) the enemy had gone before him.—14. Know (thou), that the confidence (fides) of men both in thy prudence and genius is unchanged.—15. But still we do not fear anything so much<sup>28</sup> as treachery in such a confusion<sup>29</sup> of things.—16. In your debates<sup>30</sup> both history and philosophy are mute.<sup>31</sup>—17. The names of these distinguished<sup>32</sup> men are in the mouth<sup>33</sup> of the whole people.—18. In thy urgent (summus) engagements<sup>34</sup> thou hast honored (illustrare) my private affairs with thy attention (cura).—19. We saw the king himself, having a crown on [his] head.—20. Cicero's head and hands were placed (collocare) on the rostra.—21. The ambassadors of the Ædui said, that they at all times had deserved so [well] of (Rem. 54) the Roman people, that their fields ought (debere) not to be laid waste (vastare) almost in sight (conspectus) of our army.—22. In this whole battle nobody could see the back<sup>35</sup> of an enemy.—23. Nothing handsomer can be seen on the whole earth.—24. Cicero died in the sixty-fourth year of [his] life.—25. At this time the field-fruits (frux) generally are harvested<sup>36</sup> by (in the country of) the Egyptians.—26. On this day the embassies of the Sicilians met<sup>37</sup> me in my Tusculan villa.<sup>38</sup>—27. In this whole month grain was so high,<sup>39</sup> that hardly any could be bought of the corn-dealers.<sup>40</sup>—28. Do not forget, that thou hast promised (to) me two letters a week (septimāna).—29. The town-council<sup>41</sup> generally meet three times a month.—30. Can anything more unfortunate (miser) happen in men's life?—31. Demosthenes is said to have been of (Ablative) the most delicate (tenuis) health in youth.—32. At the elections a riot (seditio) is said to have broken out (exoriri) among the citizens.—33. The noblest (princeps) of the citizens, among these Sempronius and his brother Marcus, were invited to the conference (colloquium).

SUB. NAMES OF CITIES.

1. Sape est etiam sub palliolo<sup>1</sup> sordido sapientia.—2. Cæsar castra ad Apsum flumen ponit in finibus Apolloniatiū, ibique (and there) reliquarum ex Italiā legionum adventum expectare et sub pellibus hiemare<sup>2</sup> constituit.—3. Eodem die Cæsar ab exploratoribus<sup>3</sup> certior factus est, hostis sub monte consedissee (encamp).—4. Hæc pars civitatis<sup>4</sup> L. Cassium consulem interfecerat et ejus exercitum sub jugum miserat.—5. Miltiades Cyclādes insulas sub Atheniensium potestatem redēgit (to bring).—6. Sub vespere Cæsar legiones ad hunc locum reduxit, atque ibi sub armis proximā nocte conquiescit.<sup>5</sup>—7. Alexandro Babylōne mortuo summa imperii Perdicæ<sup>6</sup> tradita est.—8. Hannibal Hadrūmētī<sup>7</sup> reliquos<sup>8</sup> ex fugā collēgit.<sup>9</sup>—9. Carthaginī quotannis bini reges creabantur.—10. Hæc scripsi subito (in haste), quum Bruti servi Laodiceæ me convenissent, et se Romam properare dixissent.—11. Senātus Latinōrum principes Romam vocavit.—12. Hostium equites Cære usque pervenerunt.—13. Senātus legatos Corinthum mittere decrevit.—14. Themistocles quum civium suorum suffragiis e civitate ejectus esset, Argos<sup>10</sup> se contulit.—15. Themistocles Lacedæmonem<sup>11</sup> profectus est, ut cum ephoris<sup>12</sup> de mœnium munitiōne<sup>13</sup> ageret (to confer).—16. Eodem tempore Attalus rex Thebis Pergamum advectus est.<sup>14</sup>—17. T. Quinctius, cum maturius<sup>15</sup> quam priores consules soliti erant, a Brundisio profectus esset, cum octo millibus peditum Corcyram advenit; ab Coreyra in proxima (§ 372, R. 30) Epīri trajecit.<sup>16</sup>—18. Tum Cæsari tristis Romā nuntius allatus est.—19. Oppidani liberos suos in Suessulam oppidum miserunt.—20. Cybèle<sup>17</sup> imāgo a decemviris ad urbem Romam arcessita est.—21. Hannibal per hiemem in Capua oppido commoratus est.—22. Publicāni me rogāunt, cum Samum ad me venissent, ut aliquid huic edicto<sup>18</sup> meo adderem.—23. Consul copias suas Casilinum, ad Campaniæ oppidum, direxit.—24. Consul classem Emporias, in urbem sociorum appulit (Rem. 68), exercitumque Tarracōnem ad socios et amicos populi Romāni duxit.—25. Hannibal anno tertio postquam domo profugerat, cum quinque navibus in Africam rediit, ut Carthaginiensis ad bellum contra Romānos induceret.—26. Num solus domum advenisti?—27. Nonne propinquis<sup>19</sup> tuis rus ire in animo est?—28. Diodotus per multos annos domi nostræ vixit.—29. Liscus dixit, Orgetorigem non solum domi, sed etiam apud finitimos plurimum posse (page 62).—30. Hic vir, cum domi militiæque clarissimus fuisset, apud barbaros in exilio diem suprēmum obiit.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>26</sup> Conscribere.—<sup>27</sup> Deponere.—<sup>28</sup> Translate: more than.—<sup>29</sup> Perturbatio.—<sup>30</sup> Disputatio.—<sup>31</sup> To be mute, obmutescere.—<sup>32</sup> Insignis.—<sup>33</sup> Os.—<sup>34</sup> Occupatio.—<sup>35</sup> Translate: see a turned (aversus) enemy.—<sup>36</sup> To harvest, metere.—<sup>37</sup> To meet, convenire.—<sup>38</sup> Tusculan villa, Tusculānum.—<sup>39</sup> Translate: the dearness (caritas) of grain was so great.—<sup>40</sup> Frumentarius.—<sup>41</sup> The town-council, decuriones (the decurions).
<sup>1</sup> Palliolum, a garment.—<sup>2</sup> To winter.—<sup>3</sup> Scout.—<sup>4</sup> Civitas, community, nation.—<sup>5</sup> Conquiescere, to sleep.

1. The citizens threw<sup>21</sup> darts<sup>22</sup> from the walls on the besiegers,<sup>23</sup> by which, however, since they fought under cover,<sup>24</sup> not much damage was done.—2. One of the besiegers exclaimed (conclamare) under the very walls of the town, that a dinner had been prepared in the camp, if by chance<sup>25</sup> the citizens (oppidani) wished to dine.—3. Afranius led (deducere) his troops from [his] camp, and placed<sup>26</sup> them on the middle [part] of the hill below [his] camp.—4. Toward morning (lux) the army arrived under the walls of the town.—5. The Corinthians thought, that it was safer for (to) them, to remain a little longer (paulisper) under the protection (tutela) of a Roman garrison, than to accept the rule<sup>27</sup> of Antiochus instead of that of Philip.—6. At this time the greatest part of Italy had come under the power (potes-tas) of Hannibal.—7. The Senate was more numerous (frequens) than we had believed that [it] could be in the month of December about the holidays (dies festus).—8. When I was in Laodicea, in Apamea, in Iconium, and in Synnada,<sup>28</sup> in all of which towns I stopped (commorari), the magistrates and delegations (legatio) of these towns (p. 53, n. 66) met<sup>29</sup> me.—9. I have done (perficere) with the greatest care<sup>30</sup> everything thou hast ordered<sup>31</sup> (to) me [to do] when I waited upon thee<sup>32</sup> in Puteoli.—10. Nicerātus, the leader of the Achæi, was at (in) Sicyon<sup>33</sup> with 2000 foot-soldiers.—11. At Leucas<sup>34</sup> a council was held<sup>35</sup> by the chiefs of the Achæi.—12. Q. Marcius Rex, in the year 636 (P. I., p. 182 OBSERV.), after the building of the city, * led (deduxit) a colony to Narbo.—13. The prisoners were placed (collocare) on ships and taken (abducere) to Cyprus.—14. When Alcibiades returned to Athens, he was received (recipere) by an immense (ingens) applause of his fellow-citizens.—15. Themistocles emigrated to Corcyra, because he saw, that he was not safe enough in Argos.—16. When Themistocles had arrived in Ephesus, he returned thanks for his services (agere) to the captain (dominus) of the ship, on which he had sailed.—17. After a few days ambassadors came from Rome, according to whose advice peace was granted (dare) to Philip.—18. Quinctius, having departed from Elatæa, crossed over (transire) to Anticyra and Corinth.—19. When I had arrived in Italy from Dyrrachium, the delegations of very many citizens came to me in order to (supine) salute (salutare) [me].—20. The armies of both devastated the territory of the Boji as far as the city (oppidum) of Telsina.—21. When I arrived in the city of Argos, I heard, that Sulpicius had already departed for Corinth.—22. I lived (commorari) in this [whole] year in the city of Rhodes.—23. On the same day ambassadors came to Cæsar in Alesia, to congratulate [him] concerning this victory.—24. The consul returned to [his] winterquarters in Antiochia.—25. The other consul went to Sapinia in [the country of] the Boji.—26. On the next day the army came to Mediolanum, the capital<sup>36</sup> of the Insubrians.—27. The army of Hannibal wintered (hiemare) in Capua, of the most flourishing (florens) town in (of) Campania.—28. After (absol. abl.) the most flourishing town had been destroyed, Scipio resolved to dismiss the auxiliary Numantia had been destroyed, Scipio resolved to dismiss the auxiliary troops, and to return home.—29. M. Livius felt this disgrace so keenly,<sup>37</sup> that he moved (migrare) to the country.—30. By this time the nobility (nobilitas) had returned from the country to the city.—31. When I was in the country in my place (prædium) near Tusculum, I frequently discussed this subject<sup>38</sup> with Cato.

<sup>6</sup> Nom. Perdiccas.—<sup>7</sup> Nom. Hadrūmētum.—<sup>8</sup> Instead of: eos, qui superfuērunt.—<sup>9</sup> Colligere, to collect.—<sup>10</sup> The city of Argos is treated as a Plurale tantum except in the Nominative, where it generally has the Greek form of the Nom. sing. Argos (Gen. Argōrum).—<sup>11</sup> Nom. Lacedæmon.—<sup>12</sup> Ephori, the ephori, the highest magistrates after the kings in Sparta.—<sup>13</sup> Fortification.—<sup>14</sup> Advehere, to transport.—<sup>15</sup> Maturus, early.—<sup>16</sup> To cross.—<sup>17</sup> Nom. Cybèle, the great goddess, whose worship at the time of the decemvirs was brought from Greece to Rome.—<sup>18</sup> Edict.—<sup>19</sup> Propinqui, relatives.—<sup>20</sup> Diem suprēmum obire, to die.—<sup>21</sup> Conjicere.—<sup>22</sup> Telum.—<sup>23</sup> Obsidens.—<sup>24</sup> Translate: under roofs (tectum).—<sup>25</sup> By chance, forte.—<sup>26</sup> Constituire.—<sup>27</sup> Dominatio.—<sup>28</sup> Synnada, Gen. ōrum.—<sup>29</sup> Convenire.—<sup>30</sup> With great care, diligenter.—<sup>31</sup> Mandare.

<sup>32</sup> To wait upon somebody, prosequi aliquem.—<sup>33</sup> Gen. Sicyōnis.—<sup>34</sup> Gen. Leucædis.—<sup>35</sup> To hold, habere.—<sup>36</sup> Præcipuum oppidum.—<sup>37</sup> To feel something keenly, aliquid ægre ferre.—<sup>38</sup> Translate: I disputed (disputare) concerning this thing with Cato.
* Ab urbe conditâ.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE RULES ON PREPOSITIONS.

(§ 454, b.). Super, with ABLATIVE, is extremely rare in the local meaning 'over' (Cæs. B. C. 3, 39). Figuratively, it has the meaning of de (=concerning, p. 32, § 445). In classical language it thus occurs two or three times in Cicero's letters (Alia super re scripsi tibi ad R. R. R. Cic. Att. 16, 6, 11), and several times in Livy (26, 15; 32, 11; 40, 46; 41, 18). Frequently it is so used in the writers of the silver age, also, sometimes uncorrected. (Plaut. Amph. Prolog. 58.)—Super with ACCUSATIVE occurs less frequently in classical prose than in the poets and later writers: 1) In the meaning of super with verbs of motion and direction, as: Quam illi super altissimam rupem perierat. Liv. 24, 39.—Super terna turris in directione, as: Quam illi super altissimam rupem perierat. Liv. 24, 39.—Super lateres coria inducantur. Cæs. B. C. 2, 10. Also noluit quid statui. Cic. Leg. 2, 26.—Super lateres coria inducantur. Cæs. B. C. 2, 10. Also before numerals: Super tres modios over three modii. Liv. 23, 12.—2) As a synonym of præter (besides, beyond, over and above): Exercitum super morbum jamque diu agra præter Liv. 28, 46.—Super omnia Romanorum nomina te verbum facit. Ib. 31, 18.—Super dolentem hunc Liv. 28, 46.—Super omnia Romanorum nomina te verbum facit. Ib. 31, 18.—3) In the meaning upon (=after), denoting succession: Vulnus super vulnus, wound upon wound. Liv. 22, 51.—Atque super alios trucidantur, one after the other was killed. Ib. 1, 50.—The use of super, denoting TIME (=during), both with accusative and ablative, is extremely rare, and only poetical, or postclassical.

CHAPTER SECOND.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE VERB.

I. CONSTRUCTION IN GENERAL, IN THE ACTIVE AND PASSIVE VOICES.

§ 456. OBJECTS are divided into COMPLETING and INCIDENTAL (or ADVERBIAL) Objects. They are COMPLETING, if their grammatical form is determined by the GOVERNING VERB, and INCIDENTAL, when their grammatical form is determined by the general ideas of Place, Time, Manner, Cause, or Degree. Thus the objects in the phrases hostem interficere, regi obedire, amicorum meminisse, ad pacem hortari, loqui coepit are COMPLETING, since the governing verbs require these objects to be respectively in the Accusative, Dative, Genitive, Accusative with ad, or Infinitive. But the objects in the phrase "Tris annos Romæ vivit" are INCIDENTAL (adverbial), since the accusative annos and the genitive Romæ are not required by the verb vivere, but by the incidental ideas of Time and Place with which this verb is connected.

Rem. 1. We say that verbs are CONSTRUED with, or that they GOVERN the case or other grammatical forms of their completing objects. Thus coepisse "governs" or "is construed" with an Object-infinitive (§ 80 c, § 342, 1); hortari with the preposition ad (p. 41); interficere with an Accusative; obedire with a Dative.

Rem. 2. Certain verbs (e. g. esse, fieri, videri), require the addition of adjectives or nouns to form complete PREDICATES. Such adjectives or nouns are called COMPLETING PREDICATES;<sup>1</sup> and the verbs, requiring them, are said to be "construed with" or "to govern" a PREDICATE NOMINATIVE.

Rem. 3. Many verbs require for their objects Infinitive or Finite CLAUSES. Hence verbs may be construed in six different ways:

- 1) With Completing Predicates; 2) with any of the Oblique Cases; 3) with Prepositional Objects; 4) with Object-Infinitives; 5) with Infinitive Clauses (Predicate-Infinitives); 6) with certain Finite Clauses, introduced by one of the conjunctions ut, ne, quod, quoniam, quominus.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> These are opposed to the Accessory Predicates. See § 461; p. 245, § 555.

<sup>2</sup> A complete treatise on the construction of the verb must enumerate all verbs requiring the one or other of these complements. But this would exceed the limits of a general grammar. While in the first chapter we have shown the most important constructions with Prepositions, and in § 393, Rem. 26 and 27, and Book VI. those with Clauses, we shall limit this chapter chiefly to the construction with CASES and INFINITIVES, referring the student for the rest partly to the Lexicons, partly to the chapters mentioned.

In some connections completing objects take the form of Adverbs or Adjectives, as: Latine loqui, disertum facere. See below, Nos. III. and IV.

§ 457. Many verbs require but ONE completing object (Rem. 3), and are then said to govern a SIMPLE OBJECT or complement. But other verbs require two different complements (a compound object), joined to each other. Thus the verbs cœpisse, interficere, obedire, vereri, dicere are construed with SIMPLE, but permittere, prohibere, dare, persuadere with COMPOUND objects.

Rem. 4. It is customary to indicate the construction of a given verb in an abridged form by means of the different cases of the indefinite aliquis. To denote that a verb governs the GENITIVE, DATIVE, ACCUSATIVE or ABLATIVE of the PERSON, we connect it with alicujus (acc.), alicui, aliquem, aliquo. The ACCUSATIVE of a THING is indicated by aliquid; the GENITIVE, DATIVE, or ABLATIVE of a THING by alicujus rei, alicui rei, aliquâ re. Thus condemnare aliquem alicujus rei means that condemnare is construed with the accusative of the Person, and the genitive of the Thing. Hortari aliquem ad aliquid indicates that hortari governs the accusative of the Person and the preposition ad with an accusative of the Thing. Eripere alicui aliquid means that eripere is construed with the dative of the Person and the accusative of the Thing.

§ 458. Verbs which are construed with a completing object in the Accusative are called TRANSITIVE; all other verbs requiring completing objects are called INTRANSITIVE. NEUTER verbs are those that require no object at all. The completing objects of transitive verbs are called TRANSITIVE OBJECTS.

Rem. 5. Thus interficere is a transitive, obedire an intransitive, and dormire a neuter verb. Many verbs, transitive in English, have intransitive equivalents in Latin, as: obedire, to obey; resistere, to resist; nocere, to hurt; parcere, to spare; invidere, to envy; favere, to favor; persuadere, to persuade, all of which govern the Dative in Latin, while their English equivalents govern the Objective.

§ 459. The construction of Latin verbs is often modified, when they are placed in the PASSIVE VOICE.<sup>1</sup> Only TRANSITIVE verbs form a complete Passive. Any Transitive (unless it be a Deponent) may be changed into a Passive form, without affecting the sense, by making the transitive object the Subject of the Passive voice, and changing the active subject, if the verb has any, into the passive agent (§ 131, 2), as:

ACTIVE: Miles laborem perfert.

PASSIVE: Labor a milite perfertur.

<sup>1</sup> Hence, to determine the construction of a verb, it must be always taken in its ACTIVE voice.

§ 460. IMPERSONAL Passives (in the 3d pers. sing.) are formed:

1) As in English, from verbs that are construed with CLAUSES. Such clauses must be considered as the SUBJECTS of the impersonal Passive (§ 74, c), as: Cæsari nuntiātum est, Helvetios per provinciam iter facere conari, It was announced to Cæsar, that the Helvetians were attempting to march through the province. Cæs. B. G. 1, 7.

2) Contrary to the English idiom, from INTRANSITIVE and NEUTER verbs, without any subject at all (§ 74, a), as: Pugnatur, a battle is fought, people fight (literally: it is fought). Mihi obeditur, I am obeyed (literally: It is obeyed to me).

Rem. 6. The Passive of transitive verbs (§ 459) which has the transitive object for its subject, is called PERSONAL PASSIVE. When transitive verbs are used without their objects, they are sometimes, but rarely, placed in the form of impersonal passives.

Rem. 7. In the impersonal passives the active subject takes the same form of the PASSIVE AGENT, as in the personal passive, as: Pugnatur a nobis, a battle is fought by us (literally: it is fought by us).

Rem. 8. All tenses and moods of the verb, except the Imperative, admit of an impersonal passive in the 3d pers. sing., as: Peccabitur in hoc judicio, Wrongs will be committed in this trial. Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 68.—Antea ratibus navigabatur, Formerly people sailed on rafts. Plin. 1, 7, 56.—Quum sedebatur aut ambulabatur, when one sits or walks. Gell. N. A. 2, 2. The compound tenses of the Passive must then always take their participles in the NEUTER GENDER, as: ventum est, people came.

Rem. 9. If the English equivalents of Latin intransitive verbs are transitive (Rem. 5), the English verb forms a personal, but the Latin an impersonal passive. In this case the English subject must be changed into the Latin intransitive object, as: The king is obeyed by the people, regi a populo obeditur (literally: It is obeyed to the king by the people). The Latin verb must here always be placed in the 3d pers. SINGULAR, although the English verb should be in the Plural, or in the first or second person, as: The captives are spared, captivis parcitur (it is spared to the captives). I was persuaded, mihi persuasum est (it was persuaded to me). You will be envied, vobis invidetur (it will be envied to you).

Rem. 10. If the impersonal passive has no intransitive object that may be made the subject in English, the translation is made in one of the following ways:

1. The Latin verb is translated by an English transitive objective phrase, in which case the object is made the passive personal subject, as: Pugnatur, a battle is fought (pugnare, to fight a battle).—Apud Metellum cœnatum est, dinner was taken with Metellus (cœnare, to take dinner).—Post cœnam ambulabitur, after dinner a walk will be taken.—Consurgitur ex consilio, the meeting is adjourned (it is risen from the meeting).

2. Sometimes an English noun with a personal or impersonal predicate ("there is") may be employed for the Latin impersonal passive, as: Pugnabatur, there was a fight.—Acriter dimicatum est, the struggle was hard.—Concurritur, there is a gathering.—Hic bene dormitur, here are good arrangements for sleeping.

3. Often the indefinite English subjects "people," "one," "they," "we" may be employed, as: Cum ad castra ventum esset, when they had come to the camp (literally: when it had been come to the camp).—Saepe sine causâ ridetur, People often laugh without cause.—Si hieme navigatur, if one sails in the winter.

Rem. 11. PASSIVE INFINITIVES are used impersonally, the same as active impersonals (§ 82, 4):

1. When they are OBJECT INFINITIVES, dependent on one of the verbs posse, negare, debere, solere, incipere (cœpisse), desinere. The first four of these verbs retain their active form, and are placed in the 3d pers. sing., while the object-infinitive, dependent on them, takes the form of an impersonal passive. But the verbs incipere (cœpisse) and desinere take the impersonal passive form in the 3d sing.; cœpisse forms then the perfect cœptum est, and desinere: desitum est; as: Hostibus resisti non potuit, the enemy could not be resisted (literally: it could not be resisted to the enemies).—Ambulâri debet, a walk must be taken.—Liberis et mulieribus parci solet, Generally children and women are spared.—Ut fieri solet, as it is usually the case (literally: as it is accustomed to be done). But: Pugnâri cœptum est (not capit), fighting commenced (it was commenced to be fought); obsidâri desitum est, the siege was discontinued (it was ceased to be besieged).

2. When they are PREDICATES of Infinitive-clauses. In clauses of this kind the subject-accusative is always understood; as: Duci nuntiatum est, totis castris trepidâri, it was announced to the general that consternation prevailed in the whole camp (literally: that it was trembled in the whole camp).—Intellexit, sibi his calumniis non admodum noceri, he saw that he was not much injured by these calumnies.

EXAMPLES.*

1. Acriter utrimque (on both sides) usque ad vesperum pugnatum est. Cæs. B. G. 1, 50.—2. Proelio equestri (§ 229) inter duas acies pugnatum est. Ib. 2, 9.—3. Celeriter ad castra concursus<sup>1</sup> est. Ib. 2, 33.—4. Quum de frumento satis esset provisum<sup>2</sup>. Ib. 3, 3.—5. Oppidum paucis diebus (§ 435, R. 38) quibus<sup>3</sup> eo (thither) ventum erat, expugnatum est. Ib. 3, 23.—6. Accessum est<sup>4</sup> ad Britanniam omnibus navibus. Ib. 5, 8.—7. Cum a Cottâ primisque ordinibus acriter resisteretur. Ib. 5, 30.—8. Non sine periculo in castris manetur. Ib. 5, 31.—9. Servitum est<sup>5</sup> in ceteros Trojânos. Liv. 1, 1.—10. Numquam sine aliqua lectione<sup>6</sup> apud eum cernatum est. Nep. Att. 14.—11. Via qua Henna<sup>7</sup> iur. Cic. Verr. 2, 48.—12. Cum satis erit ambulatum, requiescimus<sup>8</sup>. Cic. Leg. 1, 4.—13. Non modo non invidetur illi, sed etiam laetetur. Cic. Off. 2, 13.—14. Ut Græco more<sup>9</sup> liberetur. Cic. Verr.

* In place of the former exercises for translating from Latin into English, literal extracts taken from the Latin authors will now be given as examples, which the student should translate into English.

<sup>1</sup> To run.—<sup>2</sup> To make provision for something.—<sup>3</sup> Quibus instead of postquam.—<sup>4</sup> To make an approach.—<sup>5</sup> Servire, to commit cruelties; to kill cruelly.—<sup>6</sup> Reading.—<sup>7</sup> A town in Sicily.—<sup>8</sup> To repose, rest.—<sup>9</sup> After the Greek fashion.

3, 26.—15. His persuaderi non poterat, ut diutius morarentur. Cæs. B. G. 2, 10.—16. Quum subsidio<sup>10</sup> veniri non posset. Ib. 3, 3.—17. Ubi intellexit Cæsar, eis noceri non posse. Ib. 3, 14.—18. Ubi intellexit, ultro<sup>11</sup> ad se venire. Ib. 5, 56.—19. Per totam Italiam trepidâri cœptum est. Liv. 39, 17.—20. Populus Rômanus intelligit, secum actum esse<sup>12</sup> pessime. Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 50.—21. Dici<sup>13</sup> a defensore cœptum est. Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 89.—22. Dixit sibi non esse itum obviam (§ 433, R. 31), ne tum quidem cum iri maxime (just) debuit<sup>14</sup>. Cic. Att. 2, 1.—23. Dubium non est, debellâri<sup>15</sup> eo die cum Samnitibus potuisse. Liv. 7, 28.—24. Negat jucunde posse vivi, nisi cum virtute vivatur. Cic. Tusc. 3, 20.—25. Nec vero universo generi humano, sed etiam singulis a Deo consuli<sup>16</sup> solet. Cic. Nat. D. 2, 65.—26. Jam pridem<sup>17</sup> contra eos desitum est disputâri. Cic. Fin. 2, 13.—27. Habitâri ait Xenophanes in lunâ. Cic. Ac. 2, 39.—De provinciis decedatur, in urbemque redeatur. Ib. Leg. 3, 8.

II. CONSTRUCTION OF THE VERB WITH COMPLETING PREDICATES (PREDICATE-NOMINATIVE).

§ 461. The Predicates connected with VERBS are either COMPLETING or ACCESSORY. The form of the COMPLETING Predicate is that of an ADJECTIVE or NOUN; that of an ACCESSORY Predicate, a PARTICIPLE, expressed or understood.

Rem. 12. In the phrase Homêrus cæcus fuit, or Homêrus poëta fuit, the words cæcus and poëta are completing Predicates. In the phrase Epaminondas vincens mortuus est, the participle vincens is an ACCESSORY Predicate. Thus the adjective tristes in Sequani tristes terram intuentur, Cæs. B. G. 1, 32 (the Sequani look sad on the ground), and the noun prætor in Æbutius prætor in provinciam abiit (He went as prætor to the province), are ACCESSORY Predicates, the participle being of the copula being understood in both words. Completing Predicates form together with their governing verbs only one single Predicate, and only one phrase with the common subject; but ACCESSORY Predicates form a combined phrase together with the principal predicative phrase. Epaminondas vincens mortuus est may be resolved into the two predicative phrases: Epaminondas vicit and Epaminondas mortuus est. Æbutius prætor abiit consists of the two predicative phrases: Æbutius abiit, Æbutius prætor fuit.

Rem. 13. Accessory predicates must be distinguished from nouns in Apposition, with which they are very similar in form. The latter are ATTRIBUTES of their governing NOUNS, while the former are PREDICATES, logically united with the principal predicate.

§ 462. The verbs which (in certain significations) require the addition of COMPLETING Predicates, are: 1) the verb esse, as copula; 2) the verbs fieri and videri (§§ 132, 133); 3) the verbs evadere (in the meaning "to become," "to turn out"), manere and permanēre (to remain), existere (in the meaning "to come out," "to be"); 4) the Passives of those transitive verbs which in certain significations require a DOUBLE ACCUSATIVE, as creāri and eligi, to be elected; declarāri, to be declared; appellāri, vocāri, and dici, to be called; judicāri, habēri, and existimāri, to be held, considered, and several others. (See p. 101.)

<sup>10</sup> To assist, to help.—<sup>11</sup> Voluntarily.—<sup>12</sup> Agere cum aliquo, to treat somebody.—<sup>13</sup> Dicere, to plead.—<sup>14</sup> Inst. of debuisset, ought to have.—<sup>15</sup> Debellare, to finish a (the) war.—<sup>16</sup> Consulere alicui, to take care for somebody.—<sup>17</sup> Long since.

If these verbs are FINITE, their completing predicates must be in the NOMINATIVE CASE.

1. Hannibal prætor factus est, postquam rex fuerat. Nep. Hann. 7.—
2. Sullæ severitas acerba<sup>1</sup> videretur, nisi multis humanitatis condimentis<sup>2</sup> mitigaretur.<sup>3</sup> Cic. Qu. Fr. 1, 1, 7.—3. Fuerat Athēnis adolescens:<sup>4</sup> perfectus Epicurus<sup>5</sup> crascat. Cic. Brut. 35.—4. Fastidiosus<sup>6</sup> uoluptasque mentes evadunt civium. Cic. Rep. 1, 43.—5. Si quando<sup>7</sup> aliquod somnium erum crascat. Cic. Div. 2, 53.—6. Vereor ne hæc quoque lætitia vera eradat. Liv. 23, 12.—7. Exstitit Brutus vincit nostræ libertatis. Cic. ad Br. 8.—8. Omnes superioris anni munitiones<sup>8</sup> integra manebant. Cæs. B. G. 6, 31.—9. Antigonus ex Philippi amicis unus (alone) incorruptus<sup>9</sup> permanerat. Liv. 40, 54.—10. Consules creantur Cæsar et Servilius. Cæs. B. C. 3, 1.—11. Demosthenes a doctis oratorum princeps<sup>11</sup> est judicatus. Cic. Brut. 37.

Rem. 14. For the agreement of the Predicate Nominatives in number and gender, see § 63, 1, 2, and § 75. Poets sometimes place the predicative adjective in the neuter gender, even if the subject is a masculine or feminine noun, as: Varium et mutabile semper (est) femina, Virg. Æn. 4, 569. This anomaly is extremely rare in classical prose, and occurs with abstract nouns only, as: Omnium rerum mors est extremum. Cic. Fam. 6, 21, 1.

Rem. 15. For the agreement of the copula with the subject, see § 63, 2. When the subject and predicate-noun are of different numbers, the copula sometimes agrees with the number of the predicate-noun, instead of agreeing with that of the subject, as: Aude nunc de tuo consulatu dicere, cujus fuit initium ludi computatæ.<sup>12</sup> Cic. Pis. 4.—Genus universa Veneti appellati (sunt). Liv. 1, 1.

Rem. 16. The verb "to appear" in connection with a predicate-adjective or noun must not be translated by apparere, but by videri. Apparere has the signification "to seem" only in post-classical prose, as: Rhetorica apud Romanos utilis honestaque apparuit. Suet. Rhet. 1. In classical prose apparere is construed with an infinitive clause: Ut paratum indicem esse appareret. Liv. 40, 55.

Rem. 17. Strictly speaking, there is only one copula, and one verb, which can be said to require COMPLETING PREDICATES, namely the verb esse. All other verbs, mentioned § 462, in their original meanings, contain predicates, complete in themselves. Thus the verb feri properly means "to be made"; videri, to be seen; manere, to stay; existere, to step out; evadere, to walk out, to escape. Hence the predicates, connected with these verbs in their original significations can only be ACCESSORY. Thus crascat originally means,

<sup>1</sup> Painful.—<sup>2</sup> Flavoring, condiment.—<sup>3</sup> Mitigate.—<sup>4</sup> As a young man.—<sup>5</sup> An Epicurean.—<sup>6</sup> Fastidious.—<sup>7</sup> Inst. of aliquando, once.—<sup>8</sup> Defender.—<sup>9</sup> Fornication.—<sup>10</sup> Un-corrupted.—<sup>11</sup> The first.—<sup>12</sup> The games of the cross-roads, celebrated in honor of the Lares.
* This genitive is equivalent to an absolute neuter (§ 360), which explains in this passage the neuter gender of the predicative adjective.

It is seen (being) sad; Consul victor exstitit, the Consul came out as (being) a conqueror. Si equites incolumes evasisent, if the horsemen had escaped unharmed. Liv. 39, 50. In this sentence incolumes is evidently an ACCESSORY predicate of evadere. But the mentioned verbs, from being frequently connected with accessory predicates, have been gradually connected with the idea of the COPULA, contained in the accessory predicates, and thus assumed the new meanings "to become," "to seem," "to remain." Hence the question, whether a predicate-noun or adjective must be considered as a COMPLETING or as an ACCESSORY predicate, depends simply on the connection of the copula. If the idea of the copula is contained in the GOVERNING VERB (which is always the case with feri and videri), the predicative word must be considered as a COMPLETING predicate. But when the copula (as participle) must be understood with the accompanying adjective or noun, the latter must be considered as ACCESSORY predicates. Thus it is erroneous, to reckon the verbs mori and nasci, as some grammarians do, among those verbs that are construed with predicate-nominatives, as: Nemo nascitur dives, Sen. 20, Nobody is born (being) rich. Invictus morior, Nep. Ep. 9, I die (being) unconquered.

§ 463. Verbs generally can take completing predicates only when they are FINITE OR INFINITIVES.

1. SUBJECT-INFINITIVES and the Infinitives in INFINITIVE-CLAUSES take their completing Predicates in the ACCUSATIVE.

1. Consulem fieri valde utile Mario videbatur. Cic. Off. 3, 20.—2. Non esse cupidum,<sup>13</sup> pecunia est; non esse emicem,<sup>14</sup> vectigal<sup>15</sup> est; contentum vero suis rebus esse, maximæ sunt certissimæque divitiæ. Cic. Par. 6, 3.—3. Magnis in laudibus<sup>16</sup> tota fere fuit Græciæ, victorem Olympiæ<sup>17</sup> citari.<sup>18</sup> Nep. pref.—4. Id enim ipsum est summi oratoris,<sup>19</sup> summum oratorem populo videri. Cic. Brut. 50.—5. Traditum<sup>20</sup> est, Homærum cæcum fuisse. Cic. Tusc. 5, 39.—6. Non patiar flagitiis tuis me infamem<sup>21</sup> fieri. Terent. Heaut. 5, 4, 14.—7. Principem<sup>22</sup> se esse mavult quam videri. Cic. Off. 1, 19.—8. Judicabat, eos non posse oratores evadere. Cic. de Or. 1, 28.—9. (Romulus dixit) se deum esse et Quirinum vocari. Cic. Rep. 2, 10.—10. Scimus regem Persea<sup>23</sup> ab populo Romano appellatum (esse). Liv. 41, 24.

2. OBJECT-INFINITIVES take their completing Predicates in the NOMINATIVE, when their governing verbs are FINITE.

1. Cato esse quam videri bonus malebat. Sall. Cat. 54, 6.—2. Oracula evanuerunt<sup>24</sup> postquam homines minus creduli<sup>25</sup> esse cœperunt. Cic. Div. 2, 57.—3. Quæro ex te, cogitarisne augur fieri in Metelli locum. Ib. Vatin. 8.—4. Senilis<sup>26</sup> stultitia deliratio (silliness) appellari solet. Ib. Sen. 11.

Rem. 18. The ACCUSATIVE case of the completing Predicate in Subject-Infinitives must be explained from the construction of the Accusative with the Infinitive. Subject-Infinitives always have an UNCERTAIN PERSON for their logical subject. The sentence "It is preferable to be free," means "It is preferable that one is free" (præstat "aliquem" liberum esse). Hence the CASE of the completing Predicate in Subject-Infinitives must be an ACCUSATIVE, and its gender the MASCULINE. See § 78.

Rem. 19. It is different, when the impersonal Predicates are connected with PERSONAL OBJECTS. These objects are then at the same time the logical Subjects of the Subject-infinitive, and hence the completing Predicates of the latter must agree with the object of the impersonal Predicate in case, gender, and number (§ 94, Rem. 3). This case is the DATIVE, when the verbs licet and necesse est are connected with objects in the Dative, as: In republica mihi negligenti esse non licet. Cic. Att. 1, 17, 6. Sometimes, but rarely, even in this connection the completing Predicate is found in the accusative singular masculine according to the rule in Rem. 18. See for the particulars of this construction p. 617, 9.

<sup>13</sup> Greedy.—<sup>14</sup> Eager to buy.—<sup>15</sup> A rent.—<sup>16</sup> It was a great glory.—<sup>17</sup> In the Olympic games.—<sup>18</sup> Same as declarari.—<sup>19</sup> "That very circumstance is the mark of a great orator."
—<sup>20</sup> It has been reported.—<sup>21</sup> Infamous.—<sup>22</sup> The first, the foremost.—<sup>23</sup> Greek accusative of Perseus.—<sup>24</sup> Evanesce, to vanish.—<sup>25</sup> Credulous.—<sup>26</sup> Of old men.

Rem. 20. Participles are but rarely construed with completing Predicates. This rule has two exceptions:

1. The participle of the copula esse, which as such does not exist, may be understood in the construction of the Absolute Ablatives. The predicative adjective or noun is then placed in the Ablative, as: Cicerone vivo, while Cicero was living. See § 397.

2. The Participles of the Passive verbs, mentioned § 462, No. 4, are sometimes construed with completing Predicates, but only a) in the construction with Absolute Ablatives, b) in other Participial Clauses, if the participle is either in the Nominative or Accusative. The completing Predicates agree then always with the governing participles, and hence in the construction of the Absolute Ablatives are placed in the Ablative case.

1. Inprimis quod Ædno, fratres consanguineosque<sup>27</sup> saepenumero a senatu appellatos, in servitute videbat Germanorum teneri. Cæs. B. G. 1, 33.—2. Magistro equitum<sup>28</sup> credito juro. Liv. 4, 46.—3. Hasdrubale imperatore subiecto.<sup>29</sup> Nep. Hann. 3.—4. Consulibus certioribus factis.<sup>30</sup> Liv. 45, 21.—5. Consul, uno omnium (of all persons alone) certiore facto collegâ, in provinciam abiit. Liv. 41, 10.—6. Post declaratos consules Albinum et Pisonem, Liv. 40, 37.—7. Tribunis contibus<sup>31</sup> judicatis.<sup>32</sup> Liv. 29, 9.—8. Dolabena hoste decreto. Cic. Phil. 11, 7.

3. In poetry and postclassical prose Participles in the DATIVE are sometimes construed with completing Predicates in the same case. With ACCESSORY Predicates this construction occurs even in classical prose (p. 256, OBS. 3).

1. Remittit<sup>33</sup> tamen Octaviânus Antonio hosti judicâto amicos omnes. Suet. Oct. 17.
2. Maximo tibi civi evadere contigit.<sup>34</sup> Val. Max. 3, 6, 3.—3. Pro patriâ mori non licuit illi sapientissimo ab Appoline judicâto Socrati. Plin. H. N. 7, 31, 30.

4. Participles in the GENITIVE cannot take completing predicates, but they sometimes take ACCESSORY predicates, agreeing with them in the genitive; as: Species insontis interempti filii, the image of his innocently-killed son. Liv. 40, 56. See p. 256, OBS. 3.

§ 461. PREDICATIVE GENITIVE.—The Predicate-nominative, denoting the GENERAL idea of a Person or Thing, is often omitted and understood, when an ATTRIBUTIVE GENITIVE is dependent on it. The GENITIVE has then the office of a completing Predicate in the same manner as an absolute adjective performs the function of a substantive (§ 353); as: Hæc domus Sempronii est (instead of res Sempronii), this house is the property of Sempronius.—Condemnare judicis est (instead of res, officium judicis), to condemn is the duty (the affair, business) of the judge.—Gajus summæ audaciæ fuit (instead of homo summæ audaciæ), Gajus was a man of the greatest boldness.

<sup>27</sup> Consins.—<sup>28</sup> Master of the horse.—<sup>29</sup> Elected general.—<sup>30</sup> Certior fio, I am informed (literally, "I become more certain").—<sup>31</sup> Sons, guilty.—<sup>32</sup> To pronounce, declare.—<sup>33</sup> i. e. He allowed all of A.'s friends to join him.—<sup>34</sup> It fell to your lot.

Genitives of this kind are called PREDICATE-GENITIVES.

Rem. 21. This Genitive, which is conceived to depend on a noun of GENERAL import, must be distinguished from the Genitive referring to a noun, previously mentioned. The former is analogous to an ABSOLUTE, the latter to a DISJUNCT adjective (§ 353). The English language generally employs here the demonstrative that or the indefinite numeral one as governing word, while the Latin does not use any governing word at all, but supplies it from the text, as: Ut tuum factum alieni hominis, meum vero conjunctissimi et amicitissimi esse videatur, Cic. Fam. 1, 9; So that thy action seems that of a stranger, but mine that of a most intimate friend.

§ 465. The Predicate-Genitive is used 1) to express POSSESSION, or relations conceived as a Possession (Genitive of the possessor); 2) to denote those relations which an IMPERSONAL Predicate has to its subject-infinitive or to a subject-clause (IMPERSONAL PREDICATE-GENITIVE); 3) to denote QUALITIES or relations conceived as qualities of a PERSON or THING (QUALITATIVE GENITIVE).

Rem. 22. Predicate-Genitives are connected not only with esse, but with all verbs having the force of the copula (fiëri, vidëri, etc. Liv. 1, 39).*

§ 466. 1. The Genitive of the POSSESSOR, in connection with the copula, is generally rendered by "to belong to" or "to be the property of," as: *Omnia, quæ mulieris fuërun*t, viri fiunt, all that has belonged to the wife, becomes the property of the husband. Cic. Top. 4.—Ut disceptarent, quid cujusque esset, that they disputed what was the property of each. Liv. 42, 23. This genitive is changed into a POSSESSIVE ADJECTIVE, when the possessor is expressed by a personal pronoun: *Omnia, quæ mea fuërun*t, vestra facta sunt, all that belonged to me, has become your property (yours).

Rem. 23. Sometimes not the PERSON, but abstract ideas to which something is conceived to belong, especially the idea of TIME, are expressed by this Genitive, as: Non hujus temporis ista ratio est, that method belongs not to this time. Illius temporis (ætatis) fuit Anaxagoras, to that time (age) belonged Anaxagoras.

2. The IMPERSONAL Predicate-Genitive is differently translated according to the relation expressed. Such genitives must be conceived, as if the nouns res, officium, munus, indici-um (affair, matter, business, duty, province, sign, evidence) were the proper predicates. Often they are rendered by simple predicative adjectives, or other predicates, corresponding to the indicated relation, as: Cujusvis hominis est errare, Cic. Phil. 12, 2, it is in the nature of every man to err (every man is liable to error). Inimicis confidere summæ stultitiæ est, to trust enemies is a mark (evidence) of the greatest folly. Est boni principis legibus obtemperare, it is the duty of a good ruler to obey the laws. Hoc non est tuæ gravitatis atque auctoritatis, this is incompatible with thy dignity and position. Consulum est videre, ne quid respublica detrimenti capiat, it is the business (province) of the consuls to see, that the republic may not suffer.

* For their connection with the verbs, governing a double accusative, see p. 102, R. 76.

When this relation is expressed by a personal pronoun, the latter is changed into a possessive adjective in the neuter singular: Nostrum est, videre ne irrita lex sit, it is our duty to see that the law be not ineffectual.

3. The QUALITATIVE GENITIVE is either translated by the preposition of, in which case a governing noun of general import is often introduced, or by an ADJECTIVE, or by the verb to have (in connection with the copula), as: Gajus summæ fuit prudentiæ, G. was a man of the greatest prudence. Critognātus magnæ apud plebem auctoritatis fuit, Cr. was of great influence (very influential, had great influence on) with the people. — Hoc maximi momenti est, this is of the greatest importance (is very important).

This form of the Predicate-genitive is often used to introduce the relations of WEIGHT, MEASURE and NUMBER as predicates, as if these were qualities of the subject, as: Murus fuit pedum sedecim, the wall was of sixteen feet (was sixteen feet long). Legio trium millium peditum fuit, the legion was (consisted) of three thousand foot-soldiers.

I. 1. (Negavit Cæsar) Galliam potius esse Arioristæ quam populi Romani. Cæs. B. G. 1, 45.—2. Jam me Pompæi totum<sup>36</sup> esse scis. Cic. Fam. 2, 13, 2.—3. Hic versus Plauti non est. Cic. Fam. 9, 15.—4. Bello Gallice præter Capitolium atque arcem omnia hostium erant. Liv. 6, 40.—5. Nolæ (a city) senatus Romanorum, plebs Hannibalis erat. Liv. 23, 39.—6. Thebæ populi Romani jure belli factæ sunt. Liv. 33, 13.—7. Existimaverunt, de summâ<sup>36</sup> belli non suum judicium<sup>37</sup> sed imperatoris esse. Cæs. B. G. 1, 41.—8. Petulantia<sup>38</sup> et libido magis adolescentium est quam senum. Cic. Sen. 11.—9. Damnatio<sup>39</sup> est judicium, poena<sup>40</sup> legis.—10. Non recusamus quin<sup>41</sup> omnia, propter quæ bellum initum est, vestra sint. Liv. 30, 30.—11. Curio fuit igitur ejusdem ætatis fere. Cic. Brut. 32.—12. Ejusdem fere temporis fuit eques Romanus, C. Titius. Ib. 45.

<sup>36</sup> Wholly.

II. 1. Judicis est, semper in causis<sup>42</sup> verum sequi. Cic. Off. 2, 14.—2. Adolescentis est, majores natu vereri. Ib. 1, 34.—3. Non minus est imperatoris, consilio superare quam gladio. Cæs. B. C. 1, 72.—4. Fortis animi et constantis est, non perturbari in rebus asperis.<sup>43</sup> Cic. Off. 1, 23.—5. Nihil est tam angusti animi tamque parvi quam amare divitias. Ib. 1, 20.—6. Magni est ingenii, sevocare<sup>44</sup> mentem a sensibus. Cic. Tusc. 1, 16.—7. Est ejus qui dat, non ejus qui petit, conditiones dicere pacis. Liv. 30, 30.—8. Id enim ipsum est summi oratoris, summum oratorem populo videre. Cic. Br. 50.—9. Doctōris<sup>45</sup> intelligentis<sup>46</sup> est, videre quo ferat<sup>47</sup> naturā suā quemque. Cic. Br. 56.—10. Mentiri non est meum. Ter. Heaut. 3, 2, 38.—11. Si cujusquam, certe tuum est, nihil præter virtutem in bonis ducere.<sup>48</sup> Cic. Fin. 3, 3.—12. Nostrum est ferre modice<sup>49</sup> populi voluntates. Cic. Planc. 4.—13. Tempori cedere semper sapientis est habitum. Cic. Div. 4, 9.—14. Duri hominis, vel vix hominis videtur, periculum capitis<sup>50</sup> inferre multis.<sup>51</sup> Cic. Off. 2, 14.

III. 1. P. Muræna multæ industriæ et magni laboris fuit. Cic. Brut. 67.—2. Vir bonus summæ pietatis erga deum est. Sen. Ep. 76.—3. Magni judicii, summæ etiam facultatis<sup>52</sup> esse debet<sup>53</sup> orator. Cic. Or. 21.—4. Virtus tantarum virium est, ut se ipsa tueatur. Cic. Tusc. 5, 1, 2.—5. Hannibal tumultum<sup>54</sup> tutum, commodumque aliōqui<sup>55</sup> nisi quod<sup>56</sup> longinquæ aquationis<sup>57</sup> erat, cepit.<sup>58</sup> Liv. 30, 29.—6. Philocles animadvertēbat<sup>59</sup> se nullius momenti apud exercitum esse. Nep. Alc. 8.—7. Id est maximi momenti et ponderis. Cic. in Vat. 4.—8. Reliquum spatium quod est pedum sexcentorum. Cæs. B. G. 1, 38.—9. Fluminis altitudo<sup>60</sup> erat circiter pedum trium. Ib. 2, 18.—10. Xerxis classis mille et ducentarum navium fuit. Nep. Them. 2, 5.

Rem. 24. For the distinction between the Genitive and Dative of the Possessor see p. 82. A peculiar formula of the Genitive of the Possessor is the phrase ditionis alicujus esse or fieri, to be or become subject to somebody (literally to be of somebody's rule), as: Urbes, quæ Carthaginensium ditionis erant. Liv. 30, 9.—Albani ditionis aliēnæ (to foreign rule) facti erant. Liv. 1, 25.

Rem. 25. The IMPERSONAL PREDICATE-GENITIVE often consists of an absolute adjective in the Genitive Singular, denoting "persons in general," with the force of an impersonal predicative adjective (§ 77), as: Stulti est, rebus inanibus commovēri, it is foolish (literally: it is the mark of a foolish person) to be impressed by worthless matters (trifles). The Latin does not employ adjectives of one termination (§ 213), and especially not those with consonant-stems (§ 216) as impersonal predicates. Instead of these the form of an impersonal Predicate-Genitive is almost always used. Thus it would be unusual to say, Tacēre prudens est, it is prudent to be silent, instead of Tacēre prudentis est (it is the mark of a prudent man).

<sup>36</sup> On the administration of the war.—<sup>37</sup> Construe: Judicium de summâ belli non suum esse, sed imperatoris.—<sup>38</sup> Frivolity.—<sup>39</sup> Condemnation.—<sup>40</sup> The penal provisions.—<sup>41</sup> We do not object lest.—<sup>42</sup> Trials.—<sup>43</sup> Under difficulties.—<sup>44</sup> To sever.—<sup>45</sup> Teacher.—<sup>46</sup> Intelligent.—<sup>47</sup> Literally: whither his nature carries everybody. Translate: what are every one's natural tendencies, a sentence which, literally translated, would make very bad Latin.—<sup>48</sup> Literally: to reckon among (§ 453, R. 75) the goods. We say in English: among the blessings.—<sup>49</sup> With composure.—<sup>50</sup> Life.—<sup>51</sup> To bring on many.—<sup>52</sup> Talent.—<sup>53</sup> Will have to be.—<sup>54</sup> A hillock.—<sup>55</sup> In other respects.—<sup>56</sup> Except that.—<sup>57</sup> Too distant from the supply of water.—<sup>58</sup> To occupy.—<sup>59</sup> To perceive.—<sup>60</sup> Depth.

1. Est prudētis sustinēre (to resist) impetum benevolentiae. Cic. Am. 17.—2. Negligere quid de se quisque sentiat, non solum arrogantis est sed omnino dissoluti.<sup>61</sup> Cic. Off. 1, 28.—3. In tranquillo<sup>62</sup> tempestatem adversam<sup>63</sup> optare dementis est. Cic. Off. 1, 24.

Rem. 26. The Genitive of QUALITY must always be connected with an attributive adjective. Thus, instead of "He was a man of wealth," we must say in Latin "He was a man of great wealth," or "He was a wealthy (pecuniōsus) man."

Rem. 27. The Genitive of quality oftener occurs in the form of an ATTRIBUTIVE than in that of a PREDICATIVE phrase, as: Periclem, spectatē virtutis virum, Just., Pericles, a man of eminent qualities.—Aruntem mitis ingenii juvenem, Liv., Aruns, a youth of a sweet character.—Ager quatuor jugerum, Liv., a field of four acres (a four-acre lot). In predicative phrases the ABLATIVE of QUALITY, which has the same meaning as the qualitative genitive, is far more frequent than the latter. The Ablative of Quality is properly an OBJECT, which probably has been introduced in consequence of an omitted governing participle, such as "endowed," "provided" (præditus, ornatus), as: Gajus magno ingenio fuit (instead of Gajus m. i. præditus fuit), G. was a man of great genius.—Milites bono animo fuerunt, the soldiers were of good cheer.

1. (Comperit<sup>64</sup> Caesar) ipsum esse Dumnorigem<sup>65</sup> auctmā audaciā, magna apud plebem gratiā. Cæs. B. G. 1, 18.—2. Agesilāus staturā<sup>66</sup> fuit humili et corpore exiguo. Nep. Ages. 8.—3. Cato in omnibus rebus singulari fuit prudentiā et industriā. Nep. Cato 3.—4. Herodotus tantā est eloquentiā, ut me quidem magnopere delectet. Cic. de Or. 2, 13.—5. Summo iste quidem dicitur ingenio fuisse. Cic. Brut. 58.

Rem. 28. Regarding the difference between the GENITIVE and ABLATIVE of QUALITY, we remark: 1) that both forms are indiscriminately used in the delineation of character and special qualities, although the ablative is far more frequent. 2) We must use the ABLATIVE in describing external qualities (example No. 2) and momentary dispositions, as in the phrase: bono animo esse. 3) We must use the GENITIVE, when the predicate refers to number, weight, and measure (§ 466. Compare examples III. Nos. 8, 9, 10).

Rem. 29. The ABLATIVE of quality is, like the genitive, also used ATTRIBUTIVELY, especially as an apposition, in which relation the genitive is extremely rare.

1. Muræna, mediocri<sup>67</sup> ingenio, sed magno studio rerum veterum. Cic. Brut. 67.—2. Erat inter Labienum atque hostem difficili transitu<sup>68</sup> flumen ripisque præruptis.<sup>69</sup> Cæs. B. G. 6, 7.—3. Dionysius ad mensam eximiam formā pueros jussit consistere.<sup>70</sup> Cic. Tusc. 5, 21.—4. Caesar Valerium Procellum, summā virtute et humanitate adolescentem, ad Ariovistum misit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 47.

§ 467. The form of a PREDICATE-GENITIVE is frequently used with the force and instead of a Predicate-Nominative, in order to represent an abstract predicate-noun, which in English has the indefinite article. This is especially the case with the nouns mos, consuetudo, jus. Instead of Hic fuit mos (hoc fuit jus) apud Romanos, the Latin frequently says: Hoc fuit moris (juris) apud Romanos,* This was a custom with the Romans.

<sup>61</sup> Altogether perverse.—<sup>62</sup> While the sea is tranquil (§ 453. R. 74).—<sup>63</sup> Unfavorable weather.—<sup>64</sup> Ascertained.—<sup>65</sup> Nom. Dumnorige.—<sup>66</sup> Statuere.—<sup>67</sup> Indifferent.—<sup>68</sup> Crossing.—<sup>69</sup> Very steep.—<sup>70</sup> To wait at table (ad mensam).

1. Est enim hoc Gallicæ consuetudinis, ut viatores<sup>71</sup> etiam invitos<sup>72</sup> consistere<sup>73</sup> cogant. Cæs. B. G. 4, 5.—2. Negavit, moris esse Græcorum, ut in convivio virorum mulieres accumberent.<sup>74</sup> Cic. Verr. 1, 26.—3. Marcellus id nec juris nec potestatis<sup>75</sup> suæ esse dixit. Liv. 25, 7.—4. Quod Ætolis juris est, idem et nobis sit. Liv. 41, 24.

Rem. 30. In the same way the neuters of ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVES are frequently used as predicate-genitives, when they with the subject may form a partitive phrase (§§ 372, 373), as: Demonstrant, sibi præter agri solum nihil esse reliqui, they show that nothing was left to them but the mere ground of their fields. Cæs. B. G. 1, 11.—Caesar quid sui consilii sit ostendit, Caesar explains what his purpose was. Ib. 1, 21.

§ 468. PREDICATE-DATIVE.—The predicate-noun, connected with the copula, assumes the form of the DATIVE in two constructions: 1) that of the Dative of the Possessor; 2) that of the ABSTRACT PREDICATE-DATIVE, which is also called the Dative of PURPOSE or the construction of the DOUBLE DATIVE.

1. The Dative of the Possessor denotes the owner of the thing which is introduced as the grammatical SUBJECT. The verb esse in this connection is rendered by "to have," "to own," so that the Dative of the Possessor is turned into the English SUBJECT, and the Latin subject into the English OBJECT possessed, as: Domus ei fuit omni suppellectile instructa, he had (owned) a house, provided with all conveniences. This dative is also used to express relations similar to possession, as relationship, habits, opinions, and all that may be an object of "to have," as: Frater mihi est, I have a brother; nobis aliud est negotium, we have another business.

1. Homini cum deo similitudo<sup>76</sup> est. Cic. Leg. 1, 8.—2. Semper in civitate (ei) quibus opes<sup>77</sup> nullæ sunt, bonis<sup>78</sup> invident. Sall. Cat. 37.—3. Quot homines, tot sententiæ:<sup>79</sup> suus cuique mos est. Ter. Phorm. 2, 4, 14.—4. Dives est (is) cui tanta possessio<sup>80</sup> est, ut nihil optet amplius. Cic. Par. 6, 1.—5. Sibi mirum vidēri (dixit Ariovistus), quid in suā Galliā, quam bello vicisset, aut Cæsari aut omnino populo Romāno negotii esset. Cæs. B. G. 1, 34.

* This form must be considered as analogous to the PARTITIVE GENITIVE (hoc moris, instead of hic mos).

<sup>71</sup> Travellers.—<sup>72</sup> Against their inclination.—<sup>73</sup> To stop.—<sup>74</sup> Accumbere in convivio, literally: to lie down during a repast (§ 453. Rem. 78), since the Romans took their meals lying down. Translate: partook in a repast.—<sup>75</sup> Literally: "that this was neither a right nor a power of his." Translate: neither in his legal nor actual power.—<sup>76</sup> Likeness.—<sup>77</sup> Means.—<sup>78</sup> Those that are well off.

Rem. 31. Here belongs the personal dative in the phrase mihi (tibi, etc.) nomen or cognōmen est, I have the name, I am called. The name itself is placed either in the NOMINATIVE, or, by attraction, in the DATIVE (agreeing either with nomen or with the dative of the Possessor), or more rarely as attribute of nomen in the GENITIVE.

1. Syracūsīs est fons aquæ dulcis, cui nomen Arethūsa est. Cic. Verr. 4, 53.—2. Ei morbo nomen est avaricia. Cic. Tusc. 4, 11.—3. Attus Clausus, cui postea Appio Claudio nomen fuit, Romam transfūgit.<sup>81</sup> Liv. 2, 16.—4. Duo sunt Roscii, quorum alteri Capitoni cognōmen est. Cic. Rosc. Am. 6.

The same construction takes place, when verbs other than esse form the predicate, in which case the name either agrees with the case of the word nomen, or is placed in the Dative, as: His artificibus nomen histrionibus<sup>82</sup> inditum<sup>83</sup> (est). Liv. 7, 2.—Stirps,<sup>84</sup> cui Ascanium parentes dixere nomen. Liv. 1, 1.—Sometimes the name is placed in the nominative, although the word nomen stands in another case, as: Aristides adeo excellēbat, ut cognōmine iustus sit appellatus. Nep. Arist. 1, where evidently two different constructions are mixed.—Catūio cognōmen Chaucius usurpare concessit. Suet. Claud. 24.

Rem. 32. Between the DATIVE and the GENITIVE of the possessor there is the same difference as between the English verbs “to have” (to own) and “to belong to.” The GENITIVE of the possessor expressly or impliedly opposes one possessor to another, while in the DATIVE of the possessor a certain property is represented as a part of the whole property of one and the same individual. Thus Sempronio ager est, qui, etc., means: Sempronius owns (among his other property) a field which, etc. But Dubitatur hic ager sitne Sempronii means: It is doubted whether this field belongs to Sempronius (or another).

§ 469. 2. The ABSTRACT PREDICATE-DATIVE is employed, when the Predicate is an ABSTRACT noun (as honor, obstacle, advantage), and when the Person concerned in the matter (the interested Person) is either mentioned or understood. Both the interested Person and the abstract Predicate-noun are then placed in the DATIVE Case.* The Dative of the interested Person is generally rendered by the preposition to or for, and the Predicate-Dative either by a Predicate-noun in the Nominative, or by a predicative adjective, as: Hæc res mihi honōri (emolumento, auxilio, impedimento, etc.) est, This is an honor (an advantage, help, obstacle, etc.) to me, or “is honorable, advantageous, useful, awkward,” etc.—Cui bono est? to whom is it of advantage? Cic. Phil. 2, 14.

<sup>79</sup> Supply: sunt. The copula is frequently omitted in general assertions of this kind.

<sup>80</sup> Property.—<sup>81</sup> To flee.—<sup>82</sup> The name histrion (actor).—<sup>83</sup> Was given.—<sup>84</sup> Offspring.

* The Predicate-Dative is a species of Attraction, agreeing (against the general rules) with the Personal dative.

1. Virtutes hominibus decori gloriæque sunt. Sen. Clem. 1, 3.—2. Magno malo est hominibus avaricia. Auct. Her. 2, 24.—3. Pergite, adolescentes, atque in id studium incumbite,<sup>85</sup> ut et vobis honōri, et amicis utilitati, et reipublicæ emolumento esse possitis. Cic. Or. 1, 8.—4. (Hoc) Gallis magno ad pugnam erat impedimento. Cæs. B. G. 1, 25.—5. (Ariovistus dixit) amicitiam populi Romāni sibi ornamento<sup>86</sup> et præsidio,<sup>87</sup> non detrimento esse oportere (ought). Cæs. B. G. 1, 44.

Rem. 33. The dative of the interested person is often understood, especially when it refers to Persons in general, or when it is expressed in a following clause, as: Una res erat magno usui, One thing was very useful. Cæs. B. G. 3, 14.—Quod autem idem mæstiliam meam reprehendit, idem jocum, magno argumento est, me in utroque fuisse moderatum, but that the same man censures my sadness and my jesting, is a strong proof that I was moderate in both. Cic. Phil. 2, 16.

Rem. 34. The PREDICATE-DATIVE is also used with those verbs that have the force of the copula (§ 462), and as an ACCESSORY predicate, in which case it is generally translated by as; as: Paupertas probro haberi cæpta est, Sall. Cat. 12, Poverty began to be considered a disgrace.—Pericles agros suos dono reipublicæ dedit, P. gave his lands as a present to the republic. Just. 3, 7. See p. 256, OBS. 2.

§ 470. OTHER CONSTRUCTIONS OF THE VERB esse.—1. The Latin verb esse, as the English verb to be, is often not a mere copula, but has the meaning “to be in a certain state,” “to behave,” “to sojourn,” “to be situated.” It may then, like other verbs, be connected with PREPOSITIONAL OBJECTS (§ 425, R. 9), or with ADVERBS:

1. Quod Gallia sub septentrionibus est, because Gaul is (situated) toward the North. Cæs. B. G. 1, 16.—2. Quum ea ita sint, since this is so. Ib. 1, 14.—3. Rectissime apud te sunt omnia, all is right with you (is in a right state). Cic. Fam. 9, 9.—4. In convivio comiter et jucunde fuisti, you were (demeaned) courteous and pleasant during the repast. Cic. Dej. 7.—5. Cum sciret nihil roboris secum esse, since he knew, that no force was with him. Liv. 42, 66.

Thus the phrase bene est frequently occurs in epistolary style in the formula Si vales bene est, if your health is good, it is well.

2. Esse often stands without object or predicate in the meaning “to exist,” and is then generally translated by the English impersonal expression “there is,” “there are.”

1. Ne reditus spes esset, that there might be no hope of a return. Liv. 40, 38.—2. Ager publicus erat in Samnitibus, there were public lands in the country of the Samnites. Ib.—3. Erant itinera duo quibus domo exire possent, there were two roads by which they could depart from home. Cæs. B. G. 1, 6.

Here belongs the construction sunt or est with a following relative clause, the predicate of which is placed in the SUBJUNCTIVE. Sunt or est qui etc. (sunt multi, quidam qui), means “there are persons who” (there are many, some who); nemo est qui, there is nobody who, as: Sunt qui censeant, there are persons who think etc. Cic. Tusc. 1, 9. For this construction see p. 551, OBS. 4.

3. Sometimes the exclamatory particles ecce and en (lo, behold) are used with the force of “est,” “there is.” If used in this meaning, they are generally construed with a subject-nominative, as: Ecce ad doliviam equum vix ferendæ! Cic. Att. 1, 17, 9.—En crimen, en causa, our dominum servus accuset. Ib. Dej. 6. Colloquially (in the comics) ecce is often contracted with the demonstratives is and ille (verba, ecce illa—ecce ea, ecce illa). In this contraction often an accusative is used in place of a nominative (ecceos, eccum, eccillum). See Hand. Turs. 2, 348 foll.

<sup>85</sup> Apply to.—<sup>86</sup> Credit.—<sup>87</sup> Protection.

III. VERBS CONSTRUED WITH SIMPLE OBJECTS IN THE ACCUSATIVE.

§ 471. The different cases in which the completing objects are placed, indicate the different manner in which the objects participate in the action of the subject. Thus the verbs resistere and obedire are construed with the DATIVE, because the persons forming the objects of these verbs, respectively attack and command the subject. The verb meminisse governs the GENITIVE, because the remembering is conceived to come from the object. The ACCUSATIVE case denotes the ABSENCE of action on the part of the object; and while the starting-point of the action is represented by the NOMINATIVE, the ACCUSATIVE represents the object as that in which the action simply ends. Since the Passive Voice reverses the action of the verb, it follows that in this voice the object-accusative, or the end of the action, must become the subject-nominative, or its beginning. Hence the criterion of a transitive object is its convertibility into a passive subject.

Rem. 35. The cases with which the different verbs are construed, cannot be determined a priori. The original conception of a verb is often forgotten in the later periods of a language, and one language often conceives as transitive a verbal idea that in another language is considered as intransitive. To trace out the reasons why a certain verb is construed with a certain case, is not the province of the elementary grammarian. We confine ourselves here to the facts of construction, without entering into a discussion of its causes.

Rem. 36. It is evident that no intransitive object can become a passive subject,* since this would efface the difference of the cases. Hence the convertibility of an object into a passive subject furnishes a certain proof of its being TRANSITIVE; and the mere fact, that a passive verb is connected with a personal subject is alone a certain evidence of the verb being transitive, or governing the accusative case. Thus the mere existence of such constructions as, Hæc res cavetur (this thing is guarded against), is a proof that the verb cavere governs the accusative case.

§ 472. The construction of Latin verbs with the Accusative case, or the question whether a given verb is transitive or not, is determined by two rules:

1. Verbs which are transitive in English (and other languages) have generally Transitive equivalents in Latin.

Rem. 37. The numerous exceptions to this rule are of two kinds;

(a) Several verbs, transitive in English, correspond to INTRANSITIVE Latin verbs. These are enumerated among the single verbs governing the dative, ablative, and genitive cases.

(b) Several verbs, intransitive in English, are expressed by TRANSITIVE Latin verbs. For these, see § 473.

Rem. 38. The names of LANGUAGES, when they depend on verbs of speaking, writing, knowing, etc., are in Latin generally expressed by ADVERBS, formed from national adjectives, while the English language either employs TRANSITIVE or prepositional objects, as: to speak Latin, Latine loqui; to know Persian, Persice scire; to write a book in Greek, librum Græce scribere. Thus occur the adverbs Punice (Punic, Carthaginian), Gallice, Maurice, Tusce (in the Etrurian language) and others.

* That in the English language intransitive objects very frequently are made passive subjects, is owing to the aptitude of this language to transform intransitive verbs with prepositional objects into transitives, merely by uniting the preposition with the idea of the verb, without changing its position. If the English language had more than one objective case, its condition in this respect would be precisely the same as that of the Latin.

1. M. Aurelius Scaurus Latine imprimis est eleganter locutus. Cic. Brut. 36. 135.— 2. Non tam præclarum est scire Latine, quam turpe nescire. Ib. 37. 140.— 3. Jovem sic<sup>1</sup> ajunt philosophi, si Græce loquatur, loqui. Ib. 31. 121.— 4. Themistoclem unum intra annum optime locutum esse Persice constat.<sup>2</sup> Quint. 11. 2. 50.— 5. Diphilus hanc fabulam<sup>3</sup> Græce scripsit. Plaut. Casin. prol. 33.

2. *Verbs whose objects are convertible into Passive subjects, are Transitive, i. e., construed with the Accusative.**

This rule will not enable the student to ascertain the construction of a given verb, unless he knows, that it forms a personal passive voice. But it is a good test of construction, and the student should frequently apply it, by changing active constructions into passives, and vice versa, so as to become familiar with the construction of all classes of verbs in both voices.

The rule, generally given in the grammars, that all transitive verbs govern the Accusative, is a mere tautology.

Rem. 39. There are several exceptions to the rules in § 472.

1. Several NEUTER VERBS are sometimes connected with accusative objects which do not complete the action of the verb as such, but denote things or persons to which the action indirectly refers. Generally such objects are not convertible into passives, and hence cannot be considered as transitive accusatives. Here belong olere, redolere (to smell), sapere (to taste), ludere, maerere, dolere (to mourn), sitire (to thirst), horreere (to shudder), as: Ceram olere, to smell of wax. Cic. Or. 3. 25.— Interitum reipublicæ lugere, to mourn for the downfall of the republic. Ib. Pis. 8.— Sitio honores, I thirst for honors. Ib. Qu. Fr. 3. 5. 3. Only poets (rarely) convert some of these verbs into passives, as: Lugere nobis. Ov. Met. 10. 141; aque sitiuntur. Ib. Fast. 1. 216. So the neuter deponent verb loqui is construed with non-transitive accusatives, as: Lapides loqui (to talk stones). Plaut. Aul. 2. 1. 30.— Nihil nisi classes loquens et exercitus, talking nothing but fleets and armies. Cic. Att. 9. 23. 3.— Peculiar is the accusative dependent on deficere, in the meaning 'to fail', as: Te oratio deficeret, Words would fail (to) you. Cic. R. A. 32.— Many verbs similar to the above are construed with an accusative by the poets. These also use 'poetically' neuter verbs in place of ordinary transitive verbs, construing them, like the latter, with accusatives. Here belong the phrases ardere aliquem, in the meaning of amare aliquem; pallere aliquid, in the meaning of timere aliquid; plorare, flere, gemere aliquid, in the meaning of deplorare aliquid.

2. Some verbs may take the accusative of neuter form-adjectives in the singular, but not the accusatives of ordinary nouns, as posse, velle, valere, prodesse, proficere, nocere, as: Quid potes? or nihil potes (= quid facere potes)? What can you (do)? you cannot (do) anything.— Fit enim quodcumque volent. Cic. Fam. 9. 17. 2.— Ignari, quid gravitas valeret, ignorant of what value gravity had. Ib. Sest. 28.— Nihil tibi litteræ meæ proderunt. Ib. Fam. 2. 17.— Non quo proficiam quid, not that it is of any use to me. Ib. Att. 12. 24. 3. Here belong some transitive verbs which, along with their transitive objects, may take neuter form-adjectives but not ordinary nouns in the accusative, as adjuvare, impedire, morere, as: Nihil (te) impedio, I am not in your way. Cic. Off. 1. 1.— Nihilne te nocturnum præsidium movet? Does the nocturnal guard make no impression on you? Ib. Cat. 1. 1.— Solitudo aliquid (me) adjuvat, Solitude is of some benefit (to me). Ib. Att. 12. 14. 3.

Rem. 40. The poets sometimes construe the PASSIVES of some verbs with objects in the ACCUSATIVE, leaving both the active subject and object entirely unchanged, especially with verbs denoting a putting on or off of things (induere, exuere, cingere, accingere). These verbs have then, even in the passive Participle, the appearance and construction of transitive DEONENTS, being distinguished from the corresponding active forms by a kind of reflexive meaning, as:

Coræbus Androgel galeam induitur, Coræbus puts on (to himself) Androgeos' helmet. Virg. Æn. 2. 392.— Exuitur cornua, he puts off the (his) horns. Ov. Met. 7. 318.— Priamus inutile ferrum cingitur, Priamus girds himself with the useless sword. Virg. Æn. 2. 511.†— Indutus vestem, having put on the garment, also in prose (Liv. 27. 37).

§ 473. The Latin verbs which are construed with TRANSI-

<sup>1</sup> Thus (i. e. as Plato spoke).—<sup>2</sup> It is known.—* This rule applies even to DEONENT verbs, but only in the Periphrastic Conjugation (militēs hortandi sunt). See Ch. IV.—† Prose-writers construe all these verbs with compound objects, and, instead of the mentioned constructions, use active verbs with reflexive objects (Priamus se ferro cingit, Coræbus galeam sibi induit etc.) See below.

TIVE objects, while their English equivalents are INTRANSITIVE, are: 1) many verbs, originally neuter, and denoting a motion in space, which have become transitive by being compounded with certain prepositions, especially circum, per, præter, trans, as: circumstare aliquem, to stand around somebody; perfodere aliquid, to dig through something; præterire aliquid, to go past something. 2) The verbs appellare aliquem, in the meaning "to appeal to somebody;" cavere aliquid, to guard against, or to beware of something; sperare aliquid, to hope for something; queri aliquid, to complain of something. The transitive objects of all these verbs are regularly changed into passive subjects, as: homines circumstantur;* aliquid cavetur, something is guarded against.

1. Equites Romani ceterique cives, qui circumstant senatum. Cic. Cat. 1, 8.—2. Equites, circuitis<sup>1</sup> hostium castris, Crasso renuntiaverunt.<sup>2</sup> Cæs. B. G. 3, 25.—3. Quibus erat proclive<sup>3</sup> transire<sup>4</sup> flumen. Cæs. B. C. 1, 48.—4. Fama est, Remum novos transiluisse<sup>5</sup> muros. Liv. 1, 7.—5. Quintillius circumire<sup>6</sup> aciem Curiōnis et obsecrare<sup>7</sup> milites cepit. Cæs. B. C. 2, 28.—6. Telesinus, circumvolans<sup>8</sup> ordines exercitus sui. Vell. 2, 27.—7. Vos, qui multas perambulastis<sup>9</sup> terras, equam<sup>10</sup> cultiorem<sup>11</sup> Italiā vidistis? Varro R. R. 1, 2.—8. Milites navis solvunt<sup>12</sup> atque altero<sup>13</sup> die Apolloniū prætervehuntur.<sup>14</sup> Cæs. B. C. 3, 26.—9. Aquillii procurator<sup>15</sup> a<sup>16</sup> prætore tribunos appellare ausus est. Cic. Quinct. 20, 64.—10. Tribuni igitur appellabantur. Ib. 63.—11. Milites, moniti a Brundisinis,<sup>17</sup> ut vallum cæcum<sup>18</sup> fossasque caveant, subsistunt.<sup>19</sup> Cæs. B. C. 1, 28.—12. Non omnia quæ dolemus<sup>20</sup> jure<sup>21</sup> queri possumus. Cic. Flacc. 24.—13. Nunc spero meliora. Cic. Att. 15, 3.

Rem. 41. The prepositions, which make the verbs of motion transitive, are the same, which indicate the local objects of these verbs. Thus, instead of per agros curro, the Latin generally says, agros percurro, I run around the fields; muros circumquiritavit, instead of circum muros equitavit. Besides the mentioned prepositions, also ob, sub, in, and ad have the force to make some neuter verbs transitive, as subire muros, to go under the walls; but with these a few verbs only can be made transitive, while with circum, trans, per, and præter, almost† every verb of motion, and many other neuter verbs may be compounded and become transitive. The English language sometimes employs here transitive verbs, as: flumen transire, to cross the river; hostis circumire, to outflank the enemy. But generally objects of this kind must be rendered by means of English prepositions, corresponding to those with which the verb is compounded.

* To translate passive expressions of this kind into English, we must generally express the sentence actively.

<sup>1</sup> Circuire, to go around. Supply: ab eis, and change into an active construction.—<sup>2</sup> To announce.—<sup>3</sup> Feasible, easy.—<sup>4</sup> Inst. of transire, to swim over.—<sup>5</sup> Transilire, to spring over.—<sup>6</sup> To implore.—<sup>7</sup> To fly or to hasten around.—<sup>8</sup> To travel over.—<sup>9</sup> Equam instead of num quam.—<sup>10</sup> Cultivated.—<sup>11</sup> Naves solvere, to weigh anchor.—<sup>12</sup> Next.—<sup>13</sup> Prætervehi, to sail past.—<sup>14</sup> Counsel.—<sup>15</sup> From the decision of the prætor.—<sup>16</sup> Inhabitants of Brundisium.—<sup>17</sup> Masked palisades.—<sup>18</sup> To halt.—<sup>19</sup> To regret.—<sup>20</sup> Properly.

† Only a few verbs are exceptions from this rule. Thus transfugere, perfugere, and transcurrere do not become transitive by the composition with trans, but require a prepositional object (transfugere per silvas, etc.) Circumjacere, to lie around, is like adjacere construed with the DATIVE.

Rem. 42. When transitive verbs are compounded with prepositions of this kind, they do not change thereby their construction. Thus we say, transmittere navis in Hiberniam, the same as we say mittere in Hiberniam. But the verbs traducere (instead of transducere), trajicere and transportare are exceptions to this rule. These are construed with two accusatives, the one belonging to the simple verb, being transitive; the other belonging to the preposition, being local, as: copias flumen traducere, to lead the troops over the river. In the passive construction only the transitive accusative becomes then the passive subject, the other accusative remaining unchanged, as: Belgae Rhenum antiquitus transducti, the Belgians being led in old times over the Rhine. Cæs. B. G. 2, 4.

1. Cæsar certior factus est, tris jam partis copiarum Helvetios<sup>1</sup> id flumen traduxisse. Cæs. B. G. 1, 12.—2. Equitum magnam partem flumen transiecit.<sup>2</sup> Cæs. B. C. 1, 55.

Rem. 43. There are, besides the verbs mentioned § 473, No. 2, many English intransitives which, in translating from English into Latin, must be rendered by Latin transitives. Such verbs are: to look for something (querere aliquid), to alone for something (expiare aliquid), to ask for something (petere aliquid), to long for something (desiderare aliquid), to prepare for something (parare aliquid), to laugh at somebody (deridere aliquem), to wonder at something (mirari aliquid), to be acquainted with somebody (novisse aliquem), and a great many others. But most of these verbs have English transitive synonyms, so that, in translating from Latin into English, the construction of such Latin intransitives need generally not be changed. A full control over verbs of this kind can only be acquired by an attentive reading of the Latin authors, and a diligent use of the lexicon.

Rem. 44. Here must be mentioned the EXCLAMATORY ACCUSATIVE, generally used after the interjections Heu or O, which must be explained as the direct object of an affection or feeling: Eheu fugacis annos, O the fleeting years!—O miserum illum adolescentem, O that unfortunate youth!

IV. VERBS CONSTRUED WITH SIMPLE OBJECTS IN THE DATIVE CASE.

§ 474. The following CLASSES of verbs govern the dative case:

1. Verbs of HELPING and ASSISTING, as: subvenire, succurrere, auxiliari, suffragari (to support).<sup>3</sup> 2) Verbs of OBEYING, as: parere, obtemperare, obedire, obsequi.<sup>4</sup> 3) Verbs of COMMANDING: præsesse, to preside over, to command; imperāre, to command.<sup>1</sup> 4) Verbs of OPPOSING and RESISTING: repugnāre and resistere<sup>2</sup> (to resist, oppose, withstand), obesse (to be in one's way); obstāre, reniti, reluctāri (post-classical), adversāri, refragāri (to oppose, to thwart). 5) Verbs of TRUSTING, DISTRUSTING, and BELIEVING: fidere, confidere,<sup>3</sup> fidem habere (to trust, to confide in), diffidere (to distrust), credere, to believe.<sup>4</sup> 6) Verbs of PARDONING: ignoscere, condonāre, and the phrase veniam dare.<sup>5</sup> 7) Verbs of FLATTERING: adulāri,<sup>6</sup> blandīri, assen- mands). The phrase is distinguished from other verbs of obeying, by being used only of persons under discipline, as servants and soldiers, and only in regard to oral injunctions involving immediate and implicit obedience. It frequently occurs in Plautus, Cicero, Caesar, and Livy.

<sup>1</sup> Helvetios is the subject-accusative.—<sup>2</sup> transjicere (trajicere) to ship over.—<sup>3</sup> juvare and adjuvare, to help, to assist, govern the accusative.—<sup>4</sup> Here belongs the remarkable phrase dicto audientem esse alicui, to obey somebody at his command (dicto), where it is doubtful whether dicto is a dative, governed by audire, in the meaning 'to obey,' or an impersonal ablative absolute (like augurâto, auspicâto). This phrase never occurs otherwise than in the participial form (audiens with esse); never in the tenses of audire, and only in connection with the singular dicto (never dictis). The Latins considered and probably pronounced dicto and audiens as one single word, with the adjective meaning 'obedient,' and hence it may be explained that the expression not only occurs without any object, but even with another dative object: Nonnulli nuntiabant, non fore dicto audientes milites (that the soldiers would not obey commands). Cæs. B. G. 1, 39. Quod milites dicto audientes suis imperatoribus non erant (because the soldiers did not obey their superiors). Nep. Lys. 1. Sometimes it is construed with the dative jussis (jussis dicto audientem esse, to be obedient to com-

<sup>1</sup> Both verbs may be construed a) without any object, in the meaning 'to be a chief, to be a commander (their synonym in this meaning being regnāre); b) with the object over which a rule is exercised, which object is placed in the dative. The synonym regere, however, requires the accusative (republicam regere, oppido praeesse, omnibus gentibus exercitui imperāre); c) with an object, denoting the order to be executed, which is always placed in the accusative, praeesse never being used in this sense, but jubere, imperāre, praecepere, praescribere; d) with a compound object, expressing the person along with the thing commanded. In this connection imperāre, praecepere, praescribere, take the accusative of the THING and the dative of the PERSON. See § 482.—<sup>2</sup> To resist an attack is expressed by impetum sustinere, not by impetui resistere.—<sup>3</sup> Fidere and confidere are either construed with the dative or ablative, as: naturā loci confidere, to rely on the natural position of a place, Cæs. B. G. 3, 9; virtutē alicujus confidere, to trust in somebody's eminent qualities, Cic. Phil. 5, 1. The simple verb fidere is mostly poetical, except in the participles (fidens, fusus), which are not rarely used in classical prose. Diffidere is almost always construed with the dative, seldom with the ablative. The English 'to trust,' when meaning 'to give something into one's trust,' is rendered by committere aliquid alicui.—<sup>4</sup> If credere is construed with a simple object, it requires either a dative or an infinitive clause. It is construed with a simple object in the dative a) if it means 'to trust one as a debtor,' 'to give credit,' as Villicus injussu domini credat nemini (a farmer must not give credit to any one without the proprietor's order), Cato, R. R. 5, 4; b) if it means 'to have confidence in one's qualities, intentions, or assertions,' being rendered 'to believe, to confide in, to trust to, to rely on, as: fidet alicujus credere, to confide in somebody's word; alicui injuriam credere, to believe, to trust one without his oath; c) in the formula mihi crede (or crede mihi), which either belongs to No. c) or is idiomatically used to strengthen an imperative sentence, as: Muta jam istam mentem, mihi crede (please, do give up that idea of yours), Cic. Cat. 1, 3.—Mihi crede, advoca illum in consilium, Sen. Ep. 17. So Cic. Tusc. 1, 31, 75.—If credere means 'to be of opinion' (being a synonym of arbitrari, judicare, existimare), it is construed with an infinitive-clause: Credo ego vos, judices, mirari, etc. I believe you to be astonished, O judges, etc. Cic. Rosc. Am. 1, 1. In this signification credere is often construed with the accusative neuter of a personal pronoun or determinative adjective, in lieu of an infinitive-clause, as: Homines libenter id, quod volunt, credunt (instead of: id, quod volunt, verum esse). Men fain believe what they wish, Cæs. B. G. 3, 18. The English expression, 'to believe in something' (that something exists), must be rendered by credere (dicere) with an infinitive-clause: To believe in the gods, credere (dicere) deos esse (Cic. N. D. (not deos credere, as modern Latinists often say). With a compound object, credere takes the accusative of the THING and the dative of the PERSON. See § 482.—<sup>5</sup> Veniam dare alicui means either 'to grant somebody a favor,' or 'to pardon somebody for a crime' (to grant forgiveness). Ignoscere with a simple object always requires this object to be in the dative, whether it denotes the person pardoned, or the wrong which is forgiven: Ignosce eis qui, pardon those who; vitia alicujus ignoscere, to pardon somebody's faults. If both the person pardoned, and the wrong which is forgiven, are expressed, the former is placed in the dative, and the latter in the accusative: ignoscere rem alicui, to pardon somebody for something. The thing pardoned is also expressed by a clause with quod or si: Ignoscite mihi quod (si) hoc facio, pardon me for doing this.—Condonare generally requires a compound object, the person being in the dative, and the thing in the accusative. If this 'thing' denotes the penalty, condonare means 'to remit' (supplicium alicui condonare); if it denotes the crime, condonare has the meaning of ignoscere (alicui scelus condonare). Sometimes both, the accusative and the dative, denote PERSONS; then the dative is one of the 'interested person,' meaning 'in favor of' (tris fratres tot ac talibus viris condonare, Cic. Marc.).—<sup>6</sup> Adulāri more frequently stands with the accusative.

tūri. 8) Verbs of MEETING and ENCOUNTERING: occurrere and verbs of motion, in connection with the adverb obviam (as obviam ire, obviam venire, obviam procedere). 9) Verbs expressing ANGER: irasci, succensere (to have a grudge). 10) Verbs of SERVING: servire, famulāri, inseruire, ministrare. 11) The impersonal verbs of HAPPENING: evenire, accidere, contingere, obvenire (to be allotted). 12) Most of the COMPOUNDS of esse,<sup>2</sup> as: adesse, to be present; desse, to be wanting; inesse,<sup>3</sup> to be in; interesse, to be present; praeesse (see No. 3); obesse (see No. 4); prodesse, to be useful; superesse, to survive; also praesto esse, to attend.

To these must be added a great number of verbs which cannot be classified, as:

Appropinquare, to approach;<sup>4</sup> apparere, to appear; assentiri, to assent; constare, to be consistent with, to be known to;<sup>5</sup> displicere, to displease; favere, to favor; gratificari, to gratify; gratulari, to congratulate; indulgere, to indulge; invidere, to envy; licere (impers.), to be permitted; mederi,<sup>6</sup> to heal, to cure; minari, to threaten; morigerari, or morem gerere, to accommodate one's self; nocere,<sup>7</sup> to hurt; nubere, to marry;<sup>8</sup> obtrechere, to slander; parcere, to spare (somebody); persuadere, to convince; placere, to please; plaudere, to applaud; respondere, to answer;<sup>9</sup> satisfacere, to satisfy; studere, to be zealous, to take pains, devote care;<sup>10</sup> succedere to succeed;<sup>11</sup> suadere, to give advice; supplicare, to implore; videri, to seem (videtur mihi).

1. His cum persuadere non possent, legatos ad Dumnorigem mittunt. Cæs. B. G. 1, 9.— 2. Dumnorix, cupiditate regni adductus, novis rebus studebat. Ib. 1, 9.— 3. His Caesar ita respondit. Ib. 1, 14.— 4. Si Aeduis de injuriis satisfaciant. Ib. 1, 14.— 5. Liscus dixit, Divitiacum Helvetiis favere propter eam affinitatem. Ib. 1, 18.— 6. Equitatui, quem Aedui miserant, Dumnorix praeerat. Ib.— 7. Valerium, cui summam omnium rerum fidem habebat. Ib. 1, 19.— 8. Ad hanc Ariovistus respondit: Jus esse belli, ut qui vicissent, eis quos vicissent, quemadmodum vellent imperarent. Ib. 1, 36.— 9. Huic legioni Caesar indulserat praecipue (particularly) et propter virtutem confidebat maxime. Ib. 1, 40.— 10. Quam rem paucis contigisse docebat. Ib. 1, 43.— 11. Bello superatos esse Arvernos, quibus Populus Romanus ignovisset. Ib. 1, 45.— 12. Ut si vellet Ariovistus pro-

<sup>1</sup> Offendere (to hit, to light upon somebody) and convenire (to meet with somebody) require the accusative.—<sup>2</sup> Adesse is generally construed with ab.—<sup>3</sup> Inesse is more frequently (in Cicero always) construed with in and the ablative: In oratore inest philosophorum omniscientia. Cic. Or. 3, 35.—<sup>4</sup> Adire, to approach, requires the accusative, and accedere more frequently the preposition ad than the dative.—<sup>5</sup> In the meaning to be known, constat is an impersonal verb, but is then more frequently construed with inter.—<sup>6</sup> Suadere, to heal, and, in late Latin also mederi, are construed with the accusative.—<sup>7</sup> Ledere, to hurt, is construed with an accusative.—<sup>8</sup> Nubere, properly meaning 'to veil,' denotes 'to marry,' on the part of the woman, the veiling being part of the marriage ceremony; the dative after nubere is a dative of 'the interested person.' Nupta means 'the bride.' The marrying on the part of the man is expressed by in matrimonium ducere, or simply ducere.—<sup>9</sup> If the object is the matter to which an answer is given, respondere is construed with ad.—<sup>10</sup> Studere, in the meaning of the neuter verb 'to study,' instead of the classical laborare, or vacare litteris, is used only in post-classical language. Modern Latinists use studere also in the meaning 'to study for a profession,' instead of operam dare. Novis rebus studere means 'to be desirous of a new government.' Studere is also construed with an object-infinitive (see § 80), and rarely with an infinitive-clause.—<sup>11</sup> Succedere, in its literal meaning 'to proceed to a close proximity to a place,' is also construed with sub and an accusative. See Rem. 45.—<sup>12</sup> prompted by a desire of being a king.—<sup>13</sup> affinity.—<sup>14</sup> in respect to all things.—<sup>15</sup> supply ei before qui.—<sup>16</sup> as lio contendere, ei potestas non deesset. Ib. 1, 48.— 13. Neque enim Nervii equitatus student. Ib. 2, 17.— 14. Cæsar pugnantis<sup>1</sup> occurrit. Ib. 2, 21.— 15. Oppidani turrim moveri et appropinquari mœnibus viderunt. Ib. 2, 31.— 16. Dixerunt oppidani, omnis fere finitimos<sup>2</sup> suæ virtuti invidere. Ib.— 17. Ob eas res ex litteris Cæsaris dies quindecim supplicatio<sup>3</sup> decreta est, quod ante id tempus accidit nulli. Ib. 2, 35.— 18. Majori parti<sup>4</sup> placuit, rei eventum<sup>5</sup> experiri et castra defendere. Ib. 3, 3.— 19. Multa Cæsarem ad id bellum incitabant, inprimis ne reliquæ nationes sibi idem licere arbitrarentur. Ib. 3, 10.— 20. Quum intelligeret, omnis homines naturā libertati studere. Ib. 3, 10.— 21. Neque enim his navibus nostrae<sup>6</sup> rostro nocere poterant. Ib. 3, 13.— 22. Neque satis Bruto vel tribunis militum constabat, quid hostes agerent. Ib. 3, 14.— 23. Quo loco (ei) qui celeriter arma capere potuerant, paulisper<sup>7</sup> nostris restiterunt. Ib. 4, 14.

Rem. 45. Many verbs which, besides those already mentioned, are compounded with the prepositions ad, ante, con (cum), in, inter, ob, post, prae, sub, super, require an object in the dative case with the force of the same preposition which is prefixed to them, as inhærere alicui rei, to be inherent in a thing; adstare alicui, to stand by some one; consentire alicui, to agree with some one. But many of these, instead of with a dative, are construed with the same preposition they are compounded with, as inhærere in aliquā re, consentire cum aliquo. Sometimes they take different prepositions (in regnum succedere), and sometimes are connected with cases other than the dative (supersedere aliquā re, to dispense with a thing; præcedere aliquem, to precede some one). Most of these require a compound object. See Rem. 69.

Rem. 46. If neuter verbs, compounded with these prepositions, denote a motion to a place, they are rarely (mostly poetically, and in late Latin) construed with a dative, but either repeat their preposition, or become transitive; as: accurrere ad locum, to hasten to a place; congrredi cum, to enter into a fight with; incidere in, to fall into; succedere sub muros, to proceed (close up) to the walls. But: aggredi aliquem, to attack somebody; adire aliquem, to apply to some one; adire or inire magistratum, to enter upon an office; subire tectum, to get under a roof; subire labores, to undergo hardship. Those compounded with circum, per, præter, trans, are regularly transitive. See § 473.

Rem. 47. Most of the dative objects mentioned in § 474 may be conceived as datives 'of the interested person' (§ 469, and page 135, Rem. 60) indicating the one having an interest in the action. Such a dative is often added in a looser way to neuter or transitive verbs which admit the idea of another person being interested in the action expressed by them, whether to somebody's advantage or disadvantage. Thus cavere, metuere, timere, alicui mean 'to be solicitous' or 'alarmed' for somebody: vacare alicui rei, to have leisure for something; natum esse alicui rei, to be born for something; cupere alicui, to wish somebody well. Sometimes these loose datives are used pregnantly, so that the construction must be recast in English: Mihi quidem esurio, non tibi. Plaut. Capt. 4, 2, 86, I am hungry for myself, not for you (my being hungry is my concern, not yours).

<sup>1</sup> See § 356.— <sup>2</sup> neighbors.— <sup>3</sup> a thanksgiving of fifteen days. The accusative quindecim dies is an accusative of time, which is sometimes, but rarely, attached to nouns.— <sup>4</sup> the majority.— <sup>5</sup> the issue.— <sup>6</sup> supply naves.— <sup>7</sup> for a little while.

1. Non solum nobis divites esse volumus, sed liberis, propinquis, amicis, maximeque reipublicæ. Cic. Off. 3, 63.— 2. Multi, cum opes parant, nesciunt cui parent, nec cuius causa laborent. Cic. Am. 55.— 3. Cæsar Dumnorigi custodes ponit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 20.— 4. Sabini hostibus in contemptum<sup>1</sup> venit. Ib. 3, 17.— 5. Cæsar suis quoque rebus Germanos timere voluit. Ib. 4, 16.— 6. Dixerunt oppidani, sibi omnis fere finitimos esse inimicos. Ib. 2, 3.— 7. Non scholæ, sed vitæ discimus. Sen. Ep. 105.— 8. Nemo errat uni sibi, sed dementia spargit<sup>2</sup> in proximos.— 9. Domus dominis ædificata est, non muribus. Cic. Nat. D. 3, 26.— 10. Pisistratus sibi, not patriæ Megarenes vicit.

Rem. 48. The DATIVE OF THE INTERESTED PERSON or dativus commodi vel incommodi, in its original meaning, cannot be considered a completing object, but constitutes a peculiar adverbial relation, denoting the person or thing concerned in an action of which it is neither the subject nor object. From being frequently connected with certain verbs, it virtually became a completing object in regard to these. The following are particular applications of the dative of the interested person:

1. The POSSESSIVE DATIVE (distinguished from the dative of the possessor, § 468), being used in place of a POSSESSIVE ATTRIBUTE, as: Sese omnes Cæsari ad pedes projecērunt (i. e. ad Cæsaris pedes); They all threw themselves to Cæsar's feet. Cæs. B. G. 1, 31.— Pater nobis decessit a. d. III. Kal. Dec.; Our (my) father died on the 29th of November. Cic. Att. 1, 6, 2.

2. The ETHICAL DATIVE, of a pronoun of the first or second person, denotes either a moral interest taken in the action by the speaker, or an appeal to the person addressed to interest himself in the action. This dative generally appears redundant according to the English conception, but may be expressed by a paraphrase: Pulset tum mihi licτόrem! Let him, then, strike a licitor (i. e. I wish he would do it, to see him punished). Liv. 2, 29.— Quid mihi Celsus agit? Say, what is the matter with Celsus? (i. e. I have an interest in it). Hor. Ep. 1, 3, 13.— At tibi repente, quum minime expectārem, venit ad me Caninius; Think only, suddenly came Caninius to me. Cic. Fam. 9, 2, 1.— Quum togā signum dederō, tum mihi turbam invadite. Liv. 24, 33.— Often this dative is used with irony: Hic mihi etiam Q. Fulvius pacis commoda commemorat; Here, Q. F. lectures us on the advantages of peace (i. e. I think it superfluous). Cic. Phil. 8, 4.

3. The DATIVE AFTER INTERJECTIONS expresses the persons to whom something disastrous has happened or will happen: Vae victis, Woe to the conquered! Liv. 5, 48.— Heu, misero mihi, Woe to me, the poor wretch! Plaut. Aul. 2, 2, 23.

4. Often absolute present participles are placed in the dative referring to persons in regard to whom the principal action holds good when or since they perform the action expressed by the participle. Such participles are often rendered by clauses: Oppidum primum Thessaliæ venientibus ab Epiro, the first city of Thessalia for those coming from Epirus. Cæs. B. C. 3, 80.— Armati duo, nequiquam risu ac specie æstimantibus pures, two soldiers, by no means equals, when judged by their aspect and appearance (for those that judge them). Liv. 7, 10.— Annulorum tantus acervus fuit ut metientibus dimidium super tribus modios explese, sint auctores; the rings are said by some to have filled three modii and a half by actual measurement (for those that really measured them). Ib. 23, 12.

§ 475. Some verbs take either the ACCUSATIVE or the DATIVE: adulāri, flatter; comitari, accompany; desperāre,<sup>3</sup> despair of; præstolari, wait for; antecedere, anteire, go before; præcurrere, run ahead; illudere, mock; providere, provide for. These take either case with the same meaning. Others change their meanings according to the case: consulere aliquem, to consult one, but consulere alicui, to consult for one; prospicere aliquid, foresee, but alicui, provide for; cupere aliquid, wish for, but alicui, to wish one well; timere aliquem, to fear one, alicui, to fear for one.

1. Atticus potenti<sup>4</sup> Antonio non est adulatus. Nep. 25, 8.— 2. Mitiōres canes furem quoque adulantur. Colum. 7, 12, 5.— 3. Tardis mentibus virtus non comitatur. Cic. Tusc. 5, 24.— 4. Virgines cum parvo filio comitabantur patrem. Curt. I., 3, 19.— 5. Si quando<sup>5</sup> suis fortunis desperāre cœperant, se in proxima oppida recipiebant. Cæs. B. G. 3, 11.— 6. Simu-latque<sup>1</sup> candidatus accusationem meditari visus est, honorem desperasse videtur. Cic. Mur. 21, 43.— 7. Ut eodem tempore et hujus salutis et conditioni omnium civium providiase videamini. Cic. Cael. 9, 22.— 8. Itaque, re frumentaria<sup>2</sup> provisâ, in Sontiatium finis exercitum introduxit. Cæs. B. G. 3, 20.— 9. Deus consulit rebus humanis, nec solum universis, verum etiam singulis. Cic. Div. 1, 51.— 10. Athenienses consulebant Apollinem Pythium, quas potissimum religiones tenèrent. Cic. Leg. 2, 16.— 11. Consulite vobis, prospicite patriâ. Cic. Cat. 4, 3.— 12. Hoc est sapere, non quod ante pedes modo est videre, sed etiam illa quæ futura sunt prospicere. Ter. Adelph. 3, 3.

<sup>1</sup> contempt, scorn.— <sup>2</sup> to spread.— <sup>3</sup> desperāre is more frequently construed with de.— <sup>4</sup> powerful.— <sup>5</sup> whenever.

§ 476. Rare dative constructions are 1) the dative of the agent in passive constructions, as: Mihi consilium captum jam diu est. Cic. Div. 5, 19, a resolution has long been taken by me. 2) The redundant reflexive dative with velle, as Quid tibi vis? what do you want? 3) The dative with facere: Quid huic facies? what are you going to do with him?

Rem. 49. The dative, instead of the passive agent with ab, wherever it occurs in classical prose, may always be interpreted as a dative of the interested person. But poets and post-classical authors often make use of this dative when it can have no other meaning but that of a passive agent. For the use of the dative, as passive agent, with the periphrastic conjugation in dus, see § 513.

§ 477. When verbs having a simple object in the dative, are used passively, the passive voice is always impersonal (§ 460), the object remaining in the dative, and the verb being placed in the third person singular, without any subject: Nobis resistitur, we are resisted.

Rem. 50. Ablatives absolute cannot be formed of verbs which have a simple object in the dative. Infinitive clauses, in the passive construction, if the verb has a simple object in the dative, take an impersonal passive infinitive without a subject: He thought that he was envied, sibi invideri putavit (that is, was envied to him). See page 72, Rem. 11, No. 2.

V. VERBS, CONSTRUED WITH SIMPLE OBJECTS IN THE GENITIVE AND ABLATIVE CASES.

§ 478. Verbs with simple objects in the genitive are but few: 1) verbs of REMEMBERING (meminisse, reminisci, recordari); 2) of FORGETTING (oblivisci); 3) sometimes the verbs potiri, to take possession of, to seize; indigere and egere, to need to want; 4) the verb misereri, to pity.

Rem. 51. Verbs of remembering and forgetting may have the object remembered or forgotten in the accusative if it is a thing, and must have it in the accusative, if the thing remembered or forgotten is indicated by a neuter determinative, as hoc (id) meminî; quod fere oblitus sum. The verb recordari requires the PERSON remembered to be connected with the preposition de.

<sup>1</sup> as soon as.—<sup>2</sup> res frumentaria, the supplies.

Rem. 52. Meminisse may even take the person remembered in the accusative, if the mere fact of a person being in our memory is indicated without actually thinking of him: Cinnam meminî, Sullam vidi. Cic. Phil. 5, 6.

Rem. 53. According to the analogy of verbs of remembering, the impersonal expression Venit mihi in mentem (it comes to my mind) is construed with a genitive: Venit mihi Plutonis in mentem. Cic. Fin. 5, 1. But this phrase may also be used personally, with a nominative as subject.

Rem. 54. Indigere is also construed with an ablative. Potiri is more generally, and egere is always, in prose, construed with an ablative. See § 479.

Rem. 55. For the genitive after verbs completed by the idea of price, see p. 266 foll.

1. Animus meminit præteritorum (§ 358), præsentia cernit, futura prævidet.<sup>1</sup> Cic. Div. 1, 30.— 2. Homo improbus aliquando cum dolore flagitiorum suorum recordabitur. Cic. Pis. 12.— 3. Dux Helvetiorum hortabatur Cæsarem, ut reminisceretur et veteris incommodi populi Romani, et pristinae virtutis Helvetiorum. Cæs. B. G. 1, 13.— 4. Cohortatus est Cæsar Aduos, ut controversiarum ac dissensionum obliviscerentur. Cæs. B. G. 7, 34.— 5. Beneficia meminisse debet is in quem collata sunt, non commemorare<sup>4</sup> qui contulit. Cic. Amic. 20.— 6. Tu, si meliore memoria es, velim scire equid de te recordere. Cic. Tusc. 1, 6.— 7. Obliviscor injurias, depōno<sup>5</sup> memoriam doloris mei. Cic. Cael. 50.— 8. Quotiescunque gradum facies, toties tibi tuarum virtutum veniat in mentem. Cic. Or. 2, 61, 249.

§ 479. The Ablative is required by 1) Verbs denoting AFFECTIONS of the mind, in regard to the object and cause of the affections, as: gaudere, lætari, exultare, to rejoice, exult at; dolere, mærere, to mourn over; laborare, to suffer of, labor under; gloriari, to boast of.<sup>6</sup> 2) Verbs denoting PLENTY or WANT, in regard to the special properties or qualities of which there is a plenty or want, as abundare, redundare, to abound in; affluere, scatere, to overflow, teem with; valere, to be strong in; florere, to flourish in; carere and vacare, to be destitute of, to be without a thing; egere, indigere, to need a thing. 3) Verbs expressing RELIANCE upon: niti, to rest on; fidere, confidere, to rely on. 4) The DEONENTS uti, to use; abuti, to misuse; frui and perfrui, to enjoy; fungi and perfungi, to perform; potiri, to seize; vesci, to feed upon.<sup>7</sup> 5) Verbs expressing a PLACING ONE'S SELF at a DISTANCE from something, as: cedere, decedere, excedere, egredi, to leave a place; erumpere, to break from a place; se abdicare, to resign a place; abstinere, to abstain from; desistere, to desist from; supersedere, to dispense with. 6) Verbs which require the idea of PRICE as complement: stare, constare, to cost, to come at; emere, vendere, to buy, to sell at, for; venire (veneo), licere, to be sold at (to sell for, in a passive sense) 7) The IMPERSONAL EXPRESSION opus est, it is necessary (see Rem. 60).

<sup>1</sup> to foresee.—<sup>2</sup> once (referring to the future).—<sup>3</sup> former.—<sup>4</sup> to mention.—<sup>5</sup> whether anything.—<sup>6</sup> to depose.—<sup>7</sup> as often as.—<sup>8</sup> These verbs are also construed with prepositions (de), or they take clauses with quod, or infinitive-clauses. Mærere and dolere are also construed with the accusative.—<sup>9</sup> These deponents being ancient passives, the ablative object of which are originally their passive agents, or ablatives of instrument.

1. Addebantur et laudes quibus haud minus quam praemio gaudent militum, animi. Liv. 2, 60.— 2. Nulla re tam letari soleo quam meorum officiorum conscientia. Cic. Fam. 5, 7.— 3. Rex ille, victoriis divitiisque subnixus<sup>1</sup> exultabat<sup>2</sup> insolentia.— 4. Militares viri gloriantur vulneribus. Sen. Prov. 4.— 5. Proprium est animi bene constituti, et letari bonis rebus, et dolere contrariis, Cic. Am. 13, 47.— 6. Aliqui sermones hominum alienis bonis morientium etiam ad vestras aures permanarunt.<sup>3</sup> Cic. Balb. 35, 56.— 7. Duobus rebus diversis, avaritia et luxuria, civitas laborat. Liv. 34, 4.— 8. Constat, Germaniam Galliamque abundare ricis<sup>4</sup> et fluminibus. Sen. N. Q. 3, 6.— 9. Capua fortissimorum virorum multitudine redundat. Cic. Pis. 25.— 10. Miserum est carere consuetudine<sup>5</sup> amicorum. Cic. Tusc. 5, 22.— 11. Quotidie nos ipsa natura admonet, quam paucis rebus egeat. Cic. Tusc. 5, 35.— 12. Atticus familiaris suos, quibus rebus indigerunt, adjuvit. Nep. 25, 9.— 13. Est adolescentis majores natu<sup>6</sup> vereri, exque his deligere optimos et probatissimos, quorum consilio atque auctoritate nitatur. Cic. Off. 1, 34.— 14. Quis potest aut corporis firmitate,<sup>7</sup> aut fortunae stabilitate,<sup>8</sup> confidere?— 15. Multi beneficio Dei perverse<sup>9</sup> utuntur. Cic. N. D. 3, 28.— 16. Comoda quibus utimur, lucemque qua fruimur a Deo nobis dari videmus. Cic. Rosc. Am. 45, 131.— 17. Ei mihi videntur beate vixisse, quibus sapientiae laude perfrui licuit. Cic. Brut. 9.— 18. Fustuarium<sup>10</sup> meretur miles, qui signa relinquit, aut praesidio decedit. Liv. 5, 6.— 19. Augures poterant decernere, ut magistratu se abdicarent consules. Cic. Leg. 2, 12.— 20. Caesar legiones equitatumque revocari atque itinere desistere jubet. Cæs. B. G. 5, 11.— 21. Multo sanguine Poenis victoria stetit. Liv. 23, 30.— 22. Milites Caesar edocet,<sup>11</sup> quanto detrimento et quot virorum fortium morte necesse sit constare victoriam. Cæs. B. G. 7, 19.— 23. Purpurea<sup>12</sup> violacea<sup>13</sup> libra denariis<sup>14</sup> centum ventibat. Plin. N. H. 9, 39.— 24. Magistratibus opus est, sine quorum prudentia ac diligentia esse civitas non potest. Cic. Leg. 3, 2.

Rem. 56. The general idea of the ablative is that of CAUSE in its widest sense. This relation, particularly, appears as that of 'the INSTRUMENT' (of which the preposition 'by' is the exponent), of MANNER and MEANS (by, in), as that of ORIGIN (from), and, applied to space, as the STARTING-POINT (relation WHENCE). The construction of all the verbs, mentioned above, may be referred to one of these relations, emanating from the general idea of the ablative. But more frequently the ablative is used as an ADVERBIAL case (i. e. without completing the idea of a verb or adjective), in order to express a variety of adverbial ideas, properly represented by prepositions or adverbs (§ 424, § 453). Even in these relations the general idea of the ablative may always be traced, and it is idle to split (as most grammarians do) the ideas expressed by the ablative into a number of loose and unconnected categories, there being a number of ablative constructions which can properly be assigned to none of them.

<sup>1</sup> relying on.—<sup>2</sup> to revel in.—<sup>3</sup> came.—<sup>4</sup> streams.—<sup>5</sup> intercourse with.—<sup>6</sup> majores natu, older persons.—<sup>7</sup> firmness.—<sup>8</sup> stability.—<sup>9</sup> perversely.—<sup>10</sup> cudgeling to death.—<sup>11</sup> to explain.—<sup>12</sup> purple color.—<sup>13</sup> violet.—<sup>14</sup> a denarius, a Roman silver coin.

Rem. 57. The verbs enumerated No. 5, expressing DISTANCE, etc., are also construed with prepositions. See page 27.

Rem. 58. The verbs stare and constare, mentioned No. 6, are also construed with the ablative, in some meanings different from that of price. Stare aliquā re means 'to abide by something,' the opposite of those verbs of placing one's self at a distance, mentioned No. 5. Omnes cupiebant Caesarem stare conditionibus eis, quas tulisset. Cic. ad Att. 1, 7, 15. The same idea is expressed by constare, manere, permanere, perseverare, which, however, mostly are construed with the preposition in and the ablative (constare, permanere in sententia). Constare, in the meaning 'consist, be composed of,' is, also, construed with the ablative, but more frequently with the prepositions de, ex, in: quidquid auro argentove constaret. Suet. Aug. 25. Oratio actione constat, non imitatione. Quint. 11, 3. (See § 443.)

Rem. 59. The ABLATIVE of PRICE (No. 6) is not confined to the verbs mentioned, and in some constructions must be replaced by the GENITIVE of price. See 266 foll.

Rem. 60. The word opus in the connection opus est (it is necessary, there is need of) is an indeclinable predicate-noun. Its construction is either personal or impersonal (which is more frequently the case). In the personal construction, that which is necessary is placed as subject in the nominative, the copula esse agreeing in number with the subject, as: Amicorum auxilium opus est; but Libri opus sunt.—If impersonal, that which is necessary is placed in the ablative,<sup>1</sup> the copula always being in the third pers. sing.: Non multis verbis opus est, not many words are necessary (there is no need of many words).—If that which is necessary is expressed by a VERB, the construction of the latter is either (a) by a subject-infinitive, or (b) by an infinitive-clause, or (c) by the ablative neuter of the past participle, or (d) by the second supine (the construction with ut being ante-classical). The person to whom something is necessary is always placed in the dative (of the interested person):

(a) Quid opus est, de Dionysio tam valde affirmare. Cic. Att. 7, 8.—(b) Nunc opus est, te animo valere, ut corpore possis. Cic. Fam. 16, 14.—(c) Maturato<sup>2</sup> opus est. Liv. 8, 13.—(d) Non longius quam quoad<sup>3</sup> scitu opus est, procedetur. Cic. Inv. 1, 20.

Rem. 61. According to the analogy of opus est, the rare phrase usus est (there is use of, there is need of), is likewise construed with the ablative of the thing needed. It is mostly confined to poets, and never occurs in Cicero<sup>4</sup> or Caesar: Ut Octavius reduceret navis quibus consuli usus non esset, Liv. 30, 41 (for which the Consul had no use).

Rem. 62. Rare ablative constructions are: 1) the ablative, dependent on canere, in the meaning 'to play on a musical instrument,' as fidibus canere, to play on a stringed instrument (modern Latinists thus express the playing on the violin); 2) the ablative dependent on litare and immolare, to offer a sacrifice, denoting the victim, as victimā, hostiis immolare or litare. But generally the victim sacrificed is placed in the accusative; 3) the ablative dependent on pluere, to rain, as sanguine, lapidibus pluit, it rains blood, stones.

<sup>1</sup> The cause of this construction is difficult to explain. The ancient Latins considered it themselves as an anomaly. See Gell. 7, 2.—<sup>2</sup> to hasten.—<sup>3</sup> as far as.—<sup>4</sup> The passage Leg. 3, 4, 10, cited in the lexicons, rests on a bad conjecture, and occurs in a passage in which archaic language is used on purpose.

VI. VERBS CONSTRUED WITH COMPOUND OBJECTS IN OBLIQUE CASES.

§ 480. Only transitive verbs admit of a second completing object, so that in a completing compound object one of the cases must be an accusative.

Rem. 63. There are only a few exceptions to this rule: 1) The phrase interdicere alicui aliquā re, to exclude, prohibit somebody from something, as alicui aquā et igni interdicere, to exclude one from water and fire (i. e. to banish him). Arioristus omni Galliā Romānis interdixit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 46.—Interdictum mari Antiāti populo est. Liv. 8, 14.—Magistratibus sacrōrum curatiōne interdictum. Ib. 9, 43. Rarely the accusative occurs for the ablative (locum alicui interdicere), and very rarely the accusative is found instead of the dative (loco aliquem interdicere). 2) The phrases Alicui dicto audientem esse (§ 474, note); Mihi venit alicujus in mentem (Rem. 53); Mihi aliquā re opus est (R. 60); Alicui aliquā re cedere. Cic. Mil. 27.

Rem. 64. An apparent exception to the same rule is the construction with two datives, one of which is a PREDICATE-DATIVE (§ 469 and Rem. 33). A similar construction occurs after verbs implying an action which may be directed to a certain purpose, when the action is conceived as an advantage to a PERSON, as: I send an army for assistance to the besieged, exercitum obsessis auxilio mittere. In this construction the dative expressing the purpose (auxilio) must be considered an ACCESSORY PREDICATE, in which a participle (being a help) is understood (§ 461). By a peculiar attraction this accessory predicate agrees in case with the 'dative of the interested person' (obsessis), instead of agreeing with its logical subject (exercitum).

Rem. 65. Verbs requiring this double dative are: accipere, dare, deligere, dicere, mittere, relinquere, ire, venire. The predicate-dative after these verbs is generally translated by as, to, for, or without any connecting word.

1. Cæsar quinque cohortis castris præsidio relinquit. Cæs. B. G. 7, 60.—2. Pausanias, quos Byzantii ceperat regis propinquos<sup>1</sup> tibi muneri misit. Nep. 4, 2.—3. Pausanias venit Atticis<sup>2</sup> auxilio. Nep. 8, 3.—4. Pars Sabinis eunt subsidio,<sup>3</sup> pars Romānos adiuvantur. Liv. 2, 53, 2.—5. Fabio, nobilissimo homini, laudi non est datum,<sup>4</sup> quod pingeret.<sup>5</sup> Cic. Tusc. 1, 2.—6. Vitio mihi dant,<sup>6</sup> quod mortem hominis necessariū<sup>7</sup> graviter fero.<sup>8</sup> Cic. Fam. 11, 28.

Sometimes the dative of the interested person is understood, as receptui canere, to give the signal for retreat (i. e. exercitui for the army). From such phrases as these the grammarians have invented 'a dative of purpose,' which, since it is strictly limited to the phrases described above, has led many to the erroneous opinion that the dative case is a general exponent of the relation of purpose.

§ 481. If to a transitive object another completing object is added, the former is called the NEAR OBJECT, the latter, the REMOTE OBJECT. Remote objects may be, 1) a dative, 2) a genitive, 3) an ablative, 4) another accusative.

<sup>1</sup> relatives.—<sup>2</sup> inhabitants of Attica.—<sup>3</sup> assistance.—<sup>4</sup> considered.—<sup>5</sup> to paint, to practise painting.—<sup>6</sup> to find fault with.—<sup>7</sup> near relatives.—<sup>8</sup> am greatly afflicted by.

Rem. 66. All such compound objects may be transformed into a PERSONAL (never an impersonal) PASSIVE construction, by leaving the remote object unaltered, and changing the near object (according to the general rules) into a passive subject:

|                                 |                                  |
|---------------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Act. Alicui librum dare. | Pass. Alicui liber datur. |
| Aliquem furti accusare.  | Aliquis furti accusatur.  |
| Aliquem oculis privare.  | Aliquis oculis privatur.  |

Only when the transitive accusative has another accusative as remote object, special rules must be observed. See Rem. 73.

§ 482. By far the most numerous cases of compound objects are the combinations of transitive verbs with objects in the DATIVE, the accusative generally denoting a THING, the dative denoting a PERSON, or a thing which may be replaced by a person.

Rem. 67. If in English two objective cases complete the idea of the same verb, the corresponding Latin construction is generally (see, however, § 486) a transitive verb with a remote object in the DATIVE (he sends me a present, donum mihi mittit; he promised him help, auxilium ei pollicitus est). Sometimes the English remote object with to corresponds to the Latin remote object in the DATIVE (as: fugæ se mandare, to betake one's self to flight; gratias alicui agere, to return thanks to some one). But generally the constructions in both languages are widely different, and, while English objects with to frequently are expressed by Latin cases other than the dative (as 'to accustom somebody to a thing,' aliquem aliquā re assuefacere), or by prepositions (§ 427), Latin constructions with the dative must very frequently be entirely recast in English (as: mandare aliquid alicui, to charge somebody (alicui) with something (aliquid); bellum alicui inferre, to make war on somebody; præficere aliquem exercitui, to place some one at the head of the army, etc.)

Since such instances of idiomatic Latin dative constructions are almost inexhaustible, only some of the principal differences in idiom can be mentioned here, practical proficiency in the correct use of Latin constructions being attainable only by a long and careful reading of the Latin classics.

Rem. 68. Verbs signifying 'to take something away from a person' are generally TRANSITIVE in respect to the thing taken, adding the losing person in the form of a 'dative of the interested person' (dative of disadvantage). Such verbs are demere, adimere, eripere, surripere, detrahere, exuere, subducere, interciperere, auferre (to carry away), abigere (to drive away), furari (to steal). We either translate such phrases by a verb of 'taking away' with the preposition from (corresponding here to the Latin dative), or we recast the construction, substituting a verb of 'depriving,' make the PERSON the near object, and the THING the remote object with the preposition of, as: galeam militi eripuit, he snatched the helmet from the soldier, or 'he deprived the soldier of his helmet,' (literally: he snatched the helmet away to [the disadvantage of] the soldier.)<sup>1</sup>

1. Si vitam mihi fors<sup>2</sup> ademisset. Cic. Planc. 42, 101.—2. Ferrum et arma iratis et pugnare cupientibus militibus adimuntur. Liv. 22, 44.— 3. Nil<sup>1</sup> demit laudi gloria nostra tua. Ov. Pont. 7, 20.— 4. Hæc si falsa sunt, eripies mihi hunc errorem. Cic. Att. 10, 4.— 5. Cæsar Dejotaro detraxit Armeniam a senatu datam. Cic. Div. 2, 37.— 6. Quod auri habui, id mihi tu, C. Verres, eripui et atque abstulisti. Cic. Div. in Cæc. 5, 19.— 7. Qui eorum cuiquam<sup>2</sup> qui unum latrocinantur<sup>3</sup> furatur aliquid aut eripit, is sibi ne in latrocinio<sup>4</sup> quidem relinquit locum. Cic. Off. 2, 11, 40.

<sup>1</sup> If that from which something is taken away, is not a person, and not conceived as such, the prepositions ab, de, ex are used. See § 441, Rem. 48.—<sup>2</sup> chance.

Rem. 69. A great difference between Latin and English construction is observable in those compound objects which depend on verbs compounded with the PREPOSITIONS mentioned Rem. 45, especially præ and in. Thus 1) præficere and præponere signify 'to raise somebody to the command (præ) of something,' as præficere aliquem legioni, to make one chief of a legion; 2) inferre, imponere, imperare, injicere, inungere, aliquid alicui, generally express transitive ideas, completed in English by the preposition on, as: injuriā alicui inferre, to inflict an injury on some one; imponere alicui conditiones, to impose conditions on; injicere manus alicui, to lay hands on one. Imperare aliquid alicui is especially used of military requisitions, as frumentum, pecuniam, militēs alicui imperare, to order some one to furnish corn, money, soldiers.

Many of the Latin transitives compounded with the prepositions mentioned, cannot be construed with the dative as remote object, but take prepositional objects often different from those with which they are compounded. (See § 427 foll.) Thus the English phrase 'to bestow something on somebody' is expressed either by conferre aliquid in aliquem, or by deferre aliquid alicui.

1. Darius classi Datim præfexit et Artaphernem. Nep. Milt. 4.— 2. Cæsar singulis legionibus singulos legatos<sup>5</sup> et quæstorem præfexit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 52.— 3. Cæsar hibernis<sup>6</sup> Labienum præposuit. Ib. 54.— 4. Postulavit Cæsar, ne Ariovistus aut Æduis aut eorum sociis bellum inferret. Ib. 43.— 5. Hannibal magnum terrorem injecit<sup>7</sup> exercitui Romanorum. Nep. Hann. 5.— 6. Ariovistus respondit, se stipendium<sup>8</sup> capere jure belli, quod victores victis imponere consueverint.<sup>9</sup> Cæs. B. G. 1, 44.— 7. Metellus Jugurthæ imperat argenti pondo ducenta millia. Sall. Jug. 62, 5.— 8. Cæsar provincie toti quam maximum potest militum numerum imperat. Cæs. B. G. 1, 7.

§ 483. The verbs donare,<sup>10</sup> adspergere and inspergere,<sup>11</sup> intercludere,<sup>12</sup> impertire,<sup>13</sup> induere,<sup>14</sup> exuere,<sup>15</sup> and circumdare are construed either with the accusative of the thing and the dative of the person, or with the accusative of the person and the ablative of the thing.

1. Ciceroni populus Romanus æternitatem<sup>16</sup> immortalitatemque<sup>17</sup> donavit. Cic. Pis. 3.— 2. Atticus Atheniensis universos frumento donavit. Nep. Att. 2.— 3. Vatinius Miloni, clarissimo viro, nonnullam laudatione<sup>18</sup> suā lubeculam<sup>19</sup> aspersit. Cic. Vat. 17.— 4. Pythagoras ne Apollini quidem Delio hostiam<sup>20</sup> immolare<sup>21</sup> voluit, ne aram sanguine aspergeret. Cic. N. D. 3, 36.— 5. Ignis naturis omnibus salutem impertit calorem. Cic. N. D. 2, 10.— 6. Attici pater omnibus doctrinis, quibus puerilis ætas

<sup>1</sup> Inst. of nil.—<sup>2</sup> quispiam, a synonym of quisquam, is especially used in general conditional clauses, or such clauses as have the force of these (§ 357, R. 4).—<sup>3</sup> to practise highway robbery.—<sup>4</sup> in latrocinio, instead of inter latrones, among the robbers.—<sup>5</sup> lieutenants commanding.—<sup>6</sup> hiberna, Gen. drum, (pl. tantum), winter-quarters.—<sup>7</sup> to throw.—<sup>8</sup> tribute.—<sup>9</sup> inst. of consueverint, from consuesco, which has the meaning and construction of solvere.—<sup>10</sup> to present somebody with.—<sup>11</sup> to strew something with, to asperse somebody.—<sup>12</sup> to exclude somebody from.—<sup>13</sup> to impart, to bestow something upon.—<sup>14</sup> to clothe somebody with, to put something on somebody.—<sup>15</sup> to strip somebody of. The dative constructions of exuere and circumdare belong to poetry and post-classical prose.—<sup>16</sup> eternity.—<sup>17</sup> immortality.—<sup>18</sup> eulogy.—<sup>19</sup> a kind of taint.—<sup>20</sup> a victim.—<sup>21</sup> to sacrifice.

impertiri debet, filium erudit. Nep. Att. 1.— 7. Pontis atque itinerum angustiae<sup>1</sup> multitudinē fugam intercluserant. Cæs. B. G. 7, 11.— 8. Galli comitatibus<sup>2</sup> nostros intercludere instituunt<sup>3</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 3, 23.— 9. Dejanira Herculi sanguine Centauri tinctam<sup>4</sup> tunicam<sup>5</sup> induit. Cic. Tusc. 2, 8, 20.— 10. Pomis<sup>6</sup> se induit arbor. Virg. Georg. 4, 143.

§ 484. The combination of the accusative with GENITIVE objects occurs in several constructions, in which the genitive denotes a fact from which the action of the governing verb is derived, the accusative being in the relation of a logical subject; namely:

1. With the verbs admonere, commonere, commonefacere aliquem alicujus rei, to remind somebody of something;<sup>7</sup> 2. with verbs denoting ACCUSATION, CONVICTION, and ACQUITTAL of CRIME or faults, and CONDEMNATION for crime: accusare, arguere, insimulare, convincere, damnare, condemnare, absolvere, liberare,<sup>8</sup> 3. with the impersonal expressions, miseret, pœnitet, piget, pudet, tædet (pertæsum est) me alicujus rei. These are rendered by personal expressions (miseret me alicujus), I pity somebody (or something); pœnitet me, I repent something; piget, I am weary of; pudet, I am ashamed of; tædet, I am sick of, I am disgusted with.

1. Admonēbat Catilina alium egestatis,<sup>9</sup> alium cupiditatis<sup>10</sup> suæ, compluris periculi aut ignominie. Sall. Cat. 21.— 2. Grammaticos<sup>11</sup> officii sui commonemus. Quint. 1, 5, 7.— 3. Quum ipse te veteris amicitie commonefaceres, commotus es?<sup>12</sup> Auct. Her. 4, 24.— 4. Miltiades proditiōnis<sup>13</sup> est accusatus. Nep. 1, 7, 5.— 5. Majores nostri, si quam unius peccati<sup>14</sup> mulierem damnabant, (eam) multorum malefactorum<sup>15</sup> convictam (esse) putabant. Auct. Her. 2, 13.— 6. Eorum nos magis miseret, qui nostram misericordiam non requirunt<sup>16</sup>, quam qui illam efflagitant.<sup>17</sup> Cic. Mil. 34, 92.— 7. Numquam primi consilii Deum pœnitet. Sen. Ben. 6, 23.— 8. Me non solum piget stultitiæ meæ, sed etiam pudet. Cic. Dom. 11, 20.

Rem. 70. Aliquem capitis accusare means 'to accuse one of a capital crime;' absolvere capitis, to acquit one of a capital crime. The death-penalty to which somebody is condemned is placed in the genitive or ablative (capitis or capite, not mortis but morte).<sup>18</sup> A fine to which somebody is condemned is always placed in the ablative.

§ 485. The constructions of transitive verbs with the ABLATIVE are mainly of two kinds, 1) those whose remote object may be conceived as a MEANS or INSTRUMENT; 2) those which imply the idea of SEPARATION from the remote object.

Rem. 71. To the former class belong 1) verbs signifying to PROVIDE one with something, taken in the widest sense of the word, as vestire aliquem aliquā re, to clothe one with something; circumdare aliquem aliquā re, to surround one with something; remunerari, to reward; instruere, to furnish, to provide, to prepare; explere, complere, replere, to fill; ornare, to adorn; onerare, to charge, to burden. To the same conception belongs the verb assuefacere aliquem aliquā re, to accustom some one to something

<sup>1</sup> Narrowness.—<sup>2</sup> comitatus, supplies.—<sup>3</sup> to begin.—<sup>4</sup> tinged with.—<sup>5</sup> garment.—<sup>6</sup> pomum, fruit.—<sup>7</sup> Verbs of reminding are also construed with de in regard to the object reminded.—<sup>8</sup> All these verbs are also construed with de or the mere ablative.—<sup>9</sup> poverty.—<sup>10</sup> cupidity.—<sup>11</sup> grammarian.—<sup>12</sup> to be affected.—<sup>13</sup> treason.—<sup>14</sup> offence.—<sup>15</sup> misdeed.—<sup>16</sup> require.—<sup>17</sup> demand.—<sup>18</sup> See Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 5.

(that to which one is accustomed, being conceived as the cause and instrument of the habit). Here belongs the general verb afficere aliquem aliquā re, which is used of producing affections of the mind, while modern languages generally express both the affection produced and the act of producing by the verb itself, as gaudio aliquem afficere, to gladden somebody; dolore afficere, to afflict; admiratione afficere, to astonish, to surprise; honore, premio afficere, to honor, to reward. 2) Verbs of ESTIMATING and JUDGING, as judicare aliquem aliquā re, to judge somebody by something; estimare, to estimate; definire, to determine; metiri, to measure.

1. Natura oculos tenuissimis membranis<sup>1</sup> vestivit et sepsit<sup>2</sup>. Cic. N. D. 2, 57.— 2. Curavit Verres ut convivium<sup>3</sup> omnibus rebus instructum et paratum esset. Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 27.— 3. Deus bonis omnibus explēvit mundum, mali nihil admisit<sup>4</sup>. Cic. Tim. 3.— 4. Marius comēditu, stipendio<sup>5</sup>, armis, aliis utilibus (rebus) navis onerat. Sall. Jug. 86.— 5. Suevi a pueris nullo officio aut disciplina<sup>6</sup> assuefacti, nihil omnino contra voluntatem faciunt. Cæs. B. G. 4, 1.— 6. Non enim hac exceptione unus afficitur beneficio, sed unus privatur injuria (Rem. 72). Cic. Agr. 2, 4.— 7. Qui non T. Annium maximū<sup>7</sup> latitū populi Romani, cunctam<sup>8</sup> Italiam, nationes omnes affecisse et dicat et sentiat? Cic. Mil. 28.— 8. Vos tanti sceleris ultorem<sup>9</sup> non modo honoribus nullis afficietis, sed etiam ad supplicium<sup>9</sup> rapi<sup>10</sup> patiemini? Ib. 29.— 9. Magnos homines virtute metimur non fortuna. Nep. 18, 1, 1.— 10. Quod rectum est, nec magnitudine estimatur, nec numero, nec tempore. Sen. Ep. 74.

Rem. 72. To the latter class belong 1) verbs of REMOVING, as: aliquem loco movere, to remove one from a place; pellere, to drive; prohibere and arcere, to keep from; intercludere and excludere, to exclude; 2) verbs of DEPRIVING, as privare aliquem aliquā re, to deprive one of a thing; <sup>11</sup> orbare, to bereave; spoliare, to rob; 3) verbs of FREEING, as liberare, solvere.

1. Caesar satis habebat<sup>12</sup> in presentia hostem rapinis, pabulationibus<sup>13</sup>, populationibusque<sup>14</sup> prohibere. Cæs. B. G. 1, 15.— 2. Ariovistus castra fecit eo consilio, ut frumento comēditūque<sup>15</sup> Caesarem intercluderet. Cæs. B. G. 1, 48.— 3. Themistocles Cyprium obsidione liberavit. Nep. Them. 5.— 4. Demetrius dicitur oculos se privasse. Cic. Fam. 5, 29.— 5. Gravius est spoliari fortuna, quam non augeri dignitate. Cic. Fam. 9.

§ 486. Both the near and the remote object are placed in the ACCUSATIVE with the verbs docere and edocere (to teach), and celare (aliquem aliquid), to conceal (something from somebody); and sometimes with the verbs poscere, flagitare (aliquem aliquid), to demand (a thing of one), rogare and interrogare (aliquem aliquid), to ask, question somebody about a thing.

Celare aliquem (without aliquid) means either 'to conceal', or to 'mislead' somebody by concealing something (aliquis celatur=some one is deceived). Instead of celare aliquem aliquid, also celare aliquem de aliquā re occurs. Cic. Fam. 7, 20, 3.

1. Fortuna belli artem victos quoque docet. Curt. 7, 7, 1.— 2. Philosophia nos quum ceteras res omnis, tum, quod est difficillimum, docuit ut nosmet ipsos nosceremus<sup>16</sup>. Cic. Leg. 1, 22.— 3. Catilina juventutem, quam illexerat<sup>17</sup>, mala facinora edocebat. Sall. Cat. 16.— 4. Eumenes iter quod habebat omnis celavit. Nep. Eum. 8.— 5. Non te celavi hunc sermonem. Cic. Fam. 2, 16, 3.— 6. Verres parentis pretium pro sepultura<sup>17</sup> liberorum poscebat. Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 3.— 7. Caesar Aduos frumentum, quod polliciti erant, flagitabat. Cæs. B. G. 1, 16.— 8. Pusionem<sup>1</sup> quendam Socrates apud Platōnem interrogat quædam geometrica<sup>2</sup> de dimensione<sup>3</sup> quadrati. Cic. Tusc. 1, 24.

<sup>1</sup> Membrane.— <sup>2</sup> sepsire, to surround.— <sup>3</sup> banquet.— <sup>4</sup> to mix with.— <sup>5</sup> money.— <sup>6</sup> the whole of, synonym of totus.— <sup>7</sup> avenger.— <sup>8</sup> death.— <sup>9</sup> rapere aliquem, to hurry one.— <sup>10</sup> If the depriving refers to things which are separated by taking them away, a verb of taking away, but not privare, must be used.— <sup>11</sup> to deem, (see R. 74, C.).— <sup>12</sup> foraging.— <sup>13</sup> plundering.— <sup>14</sup> to become acquainted with, to know.— <sup>15</sup> illicere, to allure.— <sup>16</sup> burial.

Rem. 73. In good Latinity docere is not used in a passive construction if it is accompanied by an accusative denoting the thing taught. We can say Aliquis docetur ab aliquo, somebody is taught by a person, but not: Aliquis docetur aliquam rem (somebody is taught a thing). Instead of it the active expression: aliquis rem discit, must be used. Only to the past participle doctus the thing taught is added in the accusative, as Legiones Latinæ militiam Romanam edoctæ. Liv. 6, 32.— Celare, in the passive, likewise has the active accusative of the person as passive subject, but adds the thing concealed by means of the preposition de (celor de aliquā re).— The verbs of asking and demanding, in the passive construction, have the person who is asked, or from whom something is demanded, as passive subject, and retain the accusative of the thing asked (Sempronius rogatus est sententiam). But verbs of demanding, in the passive voice, more generally take the construction flagitare (poscere) aliquid ab aliquo (§ 441, R. 48).— All verbs of saying and feeling, construed with that-clauses, or those governing an object-infinitive, may take the neuter accusative of a pronoun or form-adjective in place of the clause or the infinitive, and, if transitive, may thus be construed with two accusatives as objects, as hoc te horret; id te cogo. This neuter accusative remains in the passive construction, as Omnia quæ monemur.

§ 487. Certain verbs, along with their transitive accusative, take a SECOND ACCUSATIVE (either of a noun or adjective) as COMPLETING PREDICATE of the action (§ 462). This predicate-accusative has the transitive accusative for its logical subject, and, if an adjective, agrees with it in number and gender. In the passive construction the logical subject-accusative becomes the grammatical subject-nominative, and the predicate-accusative is changed into a predicate-nominative:

1. Active: Populus Romanus Ciceronem consulem creavit.

Passive: Cicero a populo Romano consul creatus est.

2. Active: Hanc legionem Caesar fortissimam judicavit.

Passive: Hæc legio a Cesare fortissima judicata est.

Rem. 74. These verbs, which are generally called FACTITIVE VERBS, are:

A. Those signifying 1) to MAKE SOMEBODY SOMETHING, facere, efficere, reddere, ingere (to form, to represent by means of sculpture, picture, or poetry); se præbere, to show one's self; se præstare, to prove (to be); 2) to CREATE or ELECT somebody something (creare, eligere); 3) to PROCLAIM somebody something (declarare, renuntiare); 4) to INSTALL somebody as something (instituere).

1. Pœni Hamilearem imperatorem<sup>4</sup> fecerunt. Nep. Ham. 2.— 2. Themistocles perissimos belli navalis fecit Atheniensis. Nep. Them. 2.— 3. Deos placatos<sup>5</sup> pietas efficit et sanctitas. Cic. Off. 2, 3.— 4. Homines cæcos reddit cupiditas et avaritia. Cic. Rosc. Am. 35.— 5. Ancum Marcium regem populus creavit. Liv. 1, 32.— 6. Thebani Philippum, Macedoniæ regem, ducem eligunt. Just. 8, 2.— 7. Ciceronem universa civitas consulem declaravit. Cic. Pis. 1.— 8. Cicero Lucium Murænam consulem renuntiavit. Cic. Mur. 1.— 9. Serrius Tullius magno consensu<sup>7</sup> rex est declaratus. Liv. 1, 46.— 10. O miserum et infelicem illum diem quo consul omnibus centuriis<sup>8</sup> P. Sulla renuntiatus est. Cic. Sull. 32.— 11. Tiresiam<sup>9</sup> sapientem fingunt poætæ; at vero Polyphemum Homerus immānem<sup>10</sup> finxit. Cic. Sen. 17.— 12. Te dignum tuis majoribus præbes. Cic. Fam. 2, 18.

<sup>1</sup> A lad.— <sup>2</sup> geometrical matters (or questions).— <sup>3</sup> measurement.— <sup>4</sup> quadratum, the square.— <sup>5</sup> commander in chief.— <sup>6</sup> placatus, propitious.— <sup>7</sup> with great unanimity.— <sup>8</sup> centuria, a century, a division of the Roman people.— <sup>9</sup> Nom. Tiresias, first (Greek) declension.— <sup>10</sup> monstrous.

Of these verbs reddere is not used in the passive voice. Instead of it ferri or effici is used.

B. Verbs signifying 'to CALL:' dicere, appellare, vocare, nominare (to name), inscribere, to entitle (give a name to a book).

1. Hostis apud majores nostros is dicebatur quem nunc peregrinum<sup>1</sup> dicimus. Cic. Off. 1, 12.—2. Polycratem Samium<sup>2</sup> felicem appellabant. Cic. Fin. 5, 30.—3. Summum consilium majores nostri appellabant senatum. Cic. Sen. 6.—4. Cato sapiens cellam penariam<sup>3</sup> reipublice nostrae, nutricem<sup>4</sup> plebis Romane Siciliam nominavit. Cic. Verr. 2, 2.—5. Aliquid de oratoris arte paucis præcipiunt<sup>5</sup> libellis<sup>6</sup> eosque rhetoricos inscribunt. Cic. Or. 3, 3.—6. Iustitia erga deos religio dicitur, erga parentis pietas.<sup>7</sup> Cic. Part. 22.—7. Tempus actionis<sup>8</sup> opportunum<sup>9</sup> appellatur ocasio. Cic. Off. 1, 40.—8. Apud Lacedæmonios ei qui amplissimum<sup>10</sup> magistratum<sup>11</sup> gerunt,<sup>12</sup> nominantur senes. Cic. Sen. 6.—9. Quam copiose<sup>13</sup> a Xenophonte agricultura laudatur in eo libro qui Economicus inscribitur! Cic. Sen. 17.

C. Verbs signifying 'to BELIEVE, CONSIDER, HOLD, DEEM, JUDGE,' habere, ducere, putare, existimare, arbitrari, judicare.

1. Natura insculpsit<sup>14</sup> in mentibus nostris, ut deos æternos et beatos haberemus. Cic. N. D. 1, 17.—2. Timoleon eam victoriam præclaram ducbat, in qua plus esset clementie quam crudelitatis.<sup>15</sup> Nep. Tim. 2.—3. Nemo credit, nisi<sup>16</sup> ei quem fidelem<sup>17</sup> putat. Cic. Rosc. Am. 39.—4. Nihil mihi stultius videtur, quam existimare eum studiosum tui<sup>18</sup> quem non noris.<sup>19</sup> Cic. Pet. 7.—5. Socrates totius mundi se incolam et civem arbitrabatur. Cic. Tusc. 5, 37.—6. Multi sæpe, versutos<sup>20</sup> homines et callidos admirantes, malitiam<sup>21</sup> sapientiam judicant. Cic. Off. 2, 3.—7. Scytharum gens antiquissima semper habita est. Just. 2, 1.—8. Omni in re. consensio<sup>22</sup> omnium gentium lex naturæ putanda est. Cic. Tusc. 1, 13.—9. Universus hic mundus una civitas hominum recte existimatur. Cic. Leg. 1, 7.—10. Socrates ab Apollinis oraculo est omnium sapientissimus judicatus. Cic. Sen. 21.

The active voice of habere in the factitive meaning 'to deem,' 'to hold' is rarely used with a predicate-accusative.<sup>23</sup> Instead of it, the completing predicate is connected with pro. See Rem. 75.

Rem. 75. The factitive verbs ducere, putare, and habere are sometimes construed with pro in place of the predicate-accusative (see page 35, Rem. 61), as: Ariovistus Cæsari respondit sese illum non pro amico sed pro hoste habere. Cæs. B. G. 1, 44 (that he would hold him, not in the place of a friend, but in that of a foe). Here belongs the phrase aliquid pro nihilo putare or ducere, to esteem something for nothing. Instead of pro often the expression in numero with a genitive is used: aliquem in hostium numero habere, to treat (consider) somebody as an enemy.

Rem. 76. In regard to verbs of MAKING (§ 487, A. 1) two peculiarities must be noticed: 1) They may take a predicate-genitive (possessive, p. 77) instead of a predicate-accusative or nominative: Scipio omnem oram Romane ditionis facit. Liv. 21, 60.—Tota Asia populi Romani facta est. Cic. L. Ag. 2, 15.—2) The transitive accusative is sometimes understood if denoting INDEFINITE PERSONS (homines), the second accusative being a predicate-adjective. Such adjectives are placed in the ACCUSATIVE PLURAL MASCULINE (agreeing with the transitive accusative homines understood): Vacuus animus beatos efficit, a free heart makes happy. Cic. Tusc. 4, 17.—Nihil est quod tam miseris faciat quam scelus. Ib. Fin. 4, 24.—Nihil magis facit iracundos quam educatio mollis. Sen. Ira. 2, 21. Rarely the accus. sing. is used: Memoria gratum facit. Sen. Ben. 3, 4.

For the use of accessory predicate-accusatives with verbs not factitive (invenire etc.) see p. 252, R. 23.

VII. CONSTRUCTION OF VERBS WITH THE INFINITIVE.

§ 488. Verbs take the Infinitive either as Subject-infinitive

<sup>1</sup> foreigner.—<sup>2</sup> of Samos.—<sup>3</sup> storehouse.—<sup>4</sup> the feeder, the nurse.—<sup>5</sup> aliquid præcipere, to give brief rules.—<sup>6</sup> libellus, a little book.—<sup>7</sup> piety.—<sup>8</sup> action.—<sup>9</sup> right, opportune.—<sup>10</sup> the highest.—<sup>11</sup> magistracy.—<sup>12</sup> to hold.—<sup>13</sup> with what fullness.—<sup>14</sup> insculpere, to engrave.—<sup>15</sup> cruelty.—<sup>16</sup> except.—<sup>17</sup> safe.—<sup>18</sup> attached to thee, interested in thee.—<sup>19</sup> fut. of norisse (inst. of noris).—<sup>20</sup> shrewd.—<sup>21</sup> malice.—<sup>22</sup> agreement.—<sup>23</sup> But in the meaning 'to have' the active habere is frequently construed with a double accusative, which, however, belongs to the accessory predicates: Omne illud tempus habeat per me solitum ac liberum, as far as I am concerned, he may have all that time unoccupied and free. Cic. Verr. 2, 12. Ut reliquas civitatis stipendiarias haberent, that they should hold (not 'consider') the other communities as tributary ones. Cæs. B. G. 1, 30.

or as Object-infinitive. Both are distinguished from substantive subjects and objects by always having a LOGICAL SUBJECT, either expressed or understood.

§ 489. The OBJECT-INFINITIVE is either a simple object of its governing verb, or it forms a compound object together with a case-object of the same verb. The logical subject of a simple object-infinitive is always the grammatical subject of the governing verb.

Rem. 77. Those classes of verbs which may be construed with an object-infinitive are enumerated § 80. In addition to the single verbs, mentioned there, several others belonging to the same classes must be noticed, as assuescere and consuescere (synonyms of solere); maturare and festinare (synonyms of properare), cœpisse, destinare, laborare, cunctari, meditari, insistere, instituere, constituere, meminisse, odisse, and the expressions non dubitare (not to hesitate), in animo habere<sup>1</sup> (to intend), in animum inducere (to prevail upon one's self), assuetum esse (to be accustomed), consilium cupere, supersedere (Liv. 21, 40), non curare (Cic. Fam. 3, 8, 7), and some similar verbs.

Rem. 78. Of these verbs and of those mentioned § 80, some must always be construed with an object-infinitive, as posse, neguire, cœpisse, solere; others (as velle, nolle, desinere) are almost always construed so. But the great majority admit of other constructions, either with case-objects, infinitive clauses, or other dependent sentences. Other verbs, not mentioned here, occur with object-infinitives only in rare and peculiar meanings, as occupare, which, with an infinitive, means 'to be the first to do a thing,' 'to forestall another in doing a thing' (bellum facere occupare, to be ahead of the enemy in beginning a war. Liv. 1, 14). Thus Sallust (Cat. 52) construes conjurare (as if conjurando statuere) with an object-infinitive: conjurare nobilissimi cives patriam incendere. Habere is construed with an infinitive in the phrase Nihil habeo scribere, I have nothing to write (Cic. Att. 1, 22), which is a Greek construction. But there are a number of verbs which, with an object-infinitive, occur only in the poets or in later Latinity<sup>2</sup>, as valere, callere, sustinere (instead of posse); expetere (instead of velle); fugere and parcere (instead of nolle); querere, ardere, trepidare (instead of studere); pugnare (instead of laborare or parare); perstare (instead of perseverare); optare (instead of cupere). Part of these verbs, improperly or poetically used with an object-infinitive, are never, in good prose, construed with any completing object; part require other constructions, as optare (which, in classical prose, is construed mostly with ut), while præoptare (to prefer) has Cæsar's sanction for being construed with an infinitive (Cæs. B. G. 1, 25). Thus dare, which Livy construes only in the phrase dare bibere (11, 47) with an object-infinitive, is in later prose frequently construed with an infinitive in the meaning 'to permit.'

Rem. 79. From the rule in § 489 it follows that if the object-infinitive is a verb requiring a completing predicate (esse, fieri, dici, etc., § 462), the predicate-nouns and adjectives must agree with the grammatical subject of the governing verb (§ 463, 2).

§ 490. Verbs can generally not be used in the passive voice when their dependent object-infinitives accompany them.

Rem. 80. These verbs cannot form PERSONAL passives, since they are without transitive objects, nor can they form IMPERSONAL passives, because in this case the infinitive would lose its subject, which would be against §§ 488 and 489. Hence such phrases as proficisci cupitur, dormire festinatur, are grammatical impossibilities.<sup>1</sup> Nevertheless the verbs cupisse and desinere take a passive form (either personal or impersonal), when their object-infinitives are passives. But this is only a formal exception, since the passives of these verbs have strictly the same meanings as their actives: De republica consuli cepti sumus, men commenced to consult us about the republic. Cic. Div. 2, 2, 27. See the examples § 460, Rem. 11.

<sup>1</sup> Instead of in animo habere, the impersonal expressions 'alicui in animo est,' or 'alicui est animus,' are frequently used. By this construction the object-infinitive becomes grammatically a subject-infinitive.—<sup>2</sup> Such verbs ought to be separately noticed, and should not indiscriminately swell the lists of verbs with object-infinitives, which grammarians are in the habit of copying one from the other, or of crowding together out of different lists from all text-books within their reach.

Rem. 81. But, while the governing verb must be an ACTIVE, the object-infinitive may be a PASSIVE, either personal or impersonal, with posse, solere, debere, (cupisse, and desinere), and PERSONAL (never impersonal), with any of the other verbs, so far as their meanings admit a passive complement, as: Melui cupiunt, meluique timent. Sen. Agam. 5, 73.—Si sibi purgati esse vellent. Cæs. B. G. 1, 28. But in most instances CLAUSES are substituted for passive infinitives dependent on these verbs: Dixit non recusatūrum, se confodiri manibus ipsorum. Suet. Claud. 26.—Sapientem civem me et esse et numerari volo. Cic. Fam. 1, 9.

Rem. 82. The object-infinitive after posse is frequently understood, especially a verb of general import, as facere, in which case the object of facere is directly connected with posse, being mostly a quantitative neuter adjective, as plurimum, multum, quantum, plus, etc. It assumes, then, the meaning 'to have power,' as plurimum posse, to be most powerful. Cæs. B. G. 1, 3. Thus the object-infinitive of scire is understood in the phrase scire Latine (instead of scire loqui Latine), to know Latin.

§ 491. About twelve transitive verbs, and a few intransitives, admit of a case-object (accusative or dative) along with an object-infinitive, so that the case-object is the logical subject of the infinitive (§ 101).

Rem. 83. These verbs are 1) the TRANSITIVES docere, assuefacere, jubere, vetare, sinere, arguere (to accuse of), insimulare<sup>2</sup> (to charge with), cogere, pati, impedire, prohibere, and (poetically and in later prose) detertere, to deter, all of which admit or prefer other constructions<sup>3</sup>; 2) the INTRANSITIVES permittere (alicui), concedere (alicui), and (poetically and in later Latin) suadere, imperare, dare (Grajis dedit ore rotundo Musa loqui. Hor. A. P. 223. Mihi datur reum prospere defendere. Tac. Dial. 7).

Rem. 84. The transitives mentioned above admit of the regular change into the passive voice, the transitive object becoming the passive subject, while the object-infinitives remain the objects of the passive voice, by which change the passive subject becomes their logical subject. They have, then, exactly the same grammatical relations as the verbs of the first class (Rem. 77): Dux hostis fugere cogit; Pass.: Hostes fugere coguntur (almost the same as Hostes fugere debent). Detertere, which in the active voice is not construed thus in good prose, has Cicero's authority for the construction of the passive voice with an object-infinitive.

1. The passive construction of these verbs occurs not only in the form of a predicative phrase, but may have the form of an ATTRIBUTIVE phrase, so that the verb is used as passive (perfect) PARTICIPLE. In this instance the participle becomes the ATTRIBUTE of the noun which, in the passive predicative phrase, would have been the passive subject, as: Prætor ad exercitum proficisci jussus, the prætor (being) directed to proceed to the army. The governing noun may be required by the construction to be in any case, the participle always agreeing with it in case, gender, and number, as: GEN. Prætoris ad exercitum proficisci jussi. Thus the phrase may take the form of the

<sup>1</sup> Such constructions, however, are sometimes found when the impersonal passive is a gerund (§ 512), as Vivere totā vitā discendum est, et totā vitā discendum est mori. Sen. Brev. Vit. 7. In such constructions, the infinitive is logically an object-infinitive with an uncertain person as subject, but grammatically a subject-infinitive.—<sup>2</sup> It is doubtful whether the verbs insimulare and arguere belong here, or whether their constructions must be considered as real accusatives with the infinitive.—<sup>3</sup> Monere and hortari, which, by some grammarians, are added to these verbs, are sometimes found with object-infinitives, but never when they are accompanied with their transitive objects.

Ablatives Absolute, as: Prætorē ad exercitum proficisci jussu, after the prætor had been directed to proceed to the army.—Relicuissem causam inaugurari coacti flaminis, I should have passed in silence the case of the priest compelled to inaugurate. Liv. 27, 8.—Gajo Lælio cum sociis navalibus urbem custodire jussu, after G. Lælius had been ordered to guard the city together with our naval forces. Liv. 26, 48.

2. A second kind of passive construction in regard to these verbs is generally repugnant to the English idiom. It takes place if the transitive object of these verbs is altogether omitted, the transitive object of the OBJECT-INFINITIVE being made the subject or governing word of the passive construction. In this instance the object-infinitive must take a passive form. In English such constructions must often be expressed actively, as: ACTIVE: Prætorē urbem custodire jubent. PASSIVE: Urbs (a prætorē) custodiri jussa est, directions were given to guard the city (literally: the city was directed to be guarded).—Exercitus ex Sicilia dimitti jussus est, the army was directed to be dismissed from Sicily (the army was ordered to evacuate Sicily). Liv. 26, 28.—Antiochus, subdūci navibus jussis, in hiberna Antiochiam concessit, Antiochus, after the ships had been ordered to be drawn on land (after ordering the ships to be drawn on land), went to Antiochia into winter-quarters. Liv. 33, 41.

Rem. 85. The intransitives (Rem. 83) admit of a change into IMPERSONAL passives only, the object-infinitive becoming a SUBJECT-INFINITIVE, being treated according to the rules of § 494: Præceptor discipulo abesse concedit; Pass.: Discipulo abesse conceditur (about the same as Discipulo abesse licet). Only imperare (in good prose) assumes the form of a PERSONAL passive, as if it were a transitive verb, being treated according to the rules in Rem. 84: Imperator aliquid facere (the same as jubeor aliquid facere).

1. Magister tuus te magnā mercēde nihil sapere<sup>1</sup> docuit. Cic. Phil. 2, 4.—2. Lex peregrinum<sup>2</sup> vetat in murum ascendere. Cic. Or. 2, 24.—3. Nolani<sup>3</sup> muros portasque adire vetiti sunt. Liv. 23, 16.—4. Improbitas<sup>4</sup> numquam eum respirare<sup>5</sup>-init. Cic. Fin. 1, 16.—5. Accusare eum non est situs. Cic. Sest. 44.—6. Insimulant hominem fraudis causā discussisse.<sup>6</sup> Cic. Verr. 2, 24.—7. Mulier me arguit, hanc domo a se surripuisse. Plaut. Men. 5, 2, 62.—8. Pericles auctor illius injuriæ fuisse arguebatur. Cic. Verr. 1, 33.—9. Cæsar ceteras nationes imperio populi Romāno parere assuefecit. Cic. Prov. Cons. 13.—10. Servis quoque pueros hujus ætatis verberare<sup>7</sup> concedimus. Curt. 3, 26.—11. Quinctio ne perire quidem tacite conceditur. Cic. Quinct. 15.—12. Isti in Lautumias<sup>8</sup> Syracusanas deduci<sup>9</sup> imperantur. Cic. Verr. 5, 27.—13. Nefarias ejus libidines commemorare pudore<sup>10</sup> deterreor. Cic. Verr. 1, 5.—14. Ego numquam quemquam ad te sine meis litteris ire patiar. Cic. Fam. 15, 17.

OBSERV. If this class of object-infinitives take completing predicates, the latter should agree (in the accusative) with the transitive objects of their governing verbs, and with their passive subjects (in the nominative) if these verbs are in the passive voice.

But constructions of jubere, arguere etc. with infinitives of the copula occur only in connections, which hardly admit these infinitives to be considered as object-infinitives, as: Quod judicium de compromisso factum est, id irritum jussit esse; He ordered the judgment which was passed on the compromise to be null and void. Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 27. Here 'id' cannot be taken as a transitive object of jussit; but 'id irritum esse' evidently is an infinitive clause. So: Post Numæ mortem Tullum Hostilium regem (esse) populus jussit; The people commanded that T. H. should be king. Liv. 1, 30.—Servio Tullio jubet (rex) populum dicto audientem esse; It is the will of the king that the people should obey the orders of S. T. Liv. 1, 41.—The INTRANSITIVES mentioned above should take the completing predicates of esse in the DATIVE; but examples of such constructions do not occur in classical prose.<sup>11</sup>

§ 492. Many verbs of SAYING and BELIEVING with infinitive

<sup>1</sup> To be an ignoramus.—<sup>2</sup> foreigner.—<sup>3</sup> inhabitants of Nola.—<sup>4</sup> his wickedness.—<sup>5</sup> to draw breath.—<sup>6</sup> to have left the city.—<sup>7</sup> to inflict corporal punishment on.—<sup>8</sup> The stone-quarries, a renowned prison in Syracuse.—<sup>9</sup> to be sent.—<sup>10</sup> shame.—<sup>11</sup> Perhaps such a dative construction is contained in Animo nunc jam otioso esse impero, (Ter. Andr. 5, 2, 1) though the passage is generally interpreted differently.

clauses, when used in the passive voice, instead of the regular impersonal construction according to § 460, 1, assume the same construction as transitive verbs with object-infinitives (§ 491, R. 84), the subject-accusative of the clause being changed into the subject-nominative of their passive, and the predicate-infinitive of the clause into their object-infinitive. This is called the construction of the NOMINATIVE WITH THE INFINITIVE, as:

ACTIVE: Dicunt, Gajum advenisse, they say that Gajus has arrived.

REGULAR IMPERSONAL PASSIVE FORM: Dicitur, Gajum advenisse, it is said that Gajus has arrived.

NOM. WITH INF.: Gajus advenisse dicitur, Gajus is said to have arrived.

Rem. 86. The construction of transitive verbs with object-infinitives (§ 491) bears a strong resemblance to the construction of intransitive verbs of saying and believing with infinitive clauses, and the grammarians sometimes assign the same verb (for inst. jubere, valere, arguere) to the one or the other of these classes, according to their different views. Thus, in the sentence jubeo te valere, the accusative te is by some considered as the transitive object, and the infinitive valere as the object-infinitive of jubeo, while others take te valere as an infinitive clause with te as subject-accusative, and valere as predicate-infinitive. In the passive voice, however, both kinds of construction essentially differ from each other. If te valere is an infinitive clause, the sentence in the passive voice would take an IMPERSONAL PASSIVE FORM (jubetur a me, te valere), while if te is a transitive object, and valere an object-infinitive, the sentence in the passive voice would have a PERSONAL PASSIVE FORM, treated according to Rem. 81. (Tu valere juberis). But the idiom of the language treats many intransitive verbs of saying and believing exactly according to this latter form, as if they were transitive verbs with object-infinitives. Thus the active construction Dicunt, Aristem inventorem olei esse (they say that Aristens is the discoverer of the olive-tree) cannot be changed into the impersonal passive Dicitur, Aristem inventorem olei esse (it is said that Aristens, etc.) but must assume the personal form Aristens inventor olei esse dicitur (Aristens is said to be the inventor, etc.) so that the infinitive esse is treated as an object-infinitive of dicitur.

Rem. 87. The passives of videre (in the meaning 'to seem'), of dicere, narrare, putare, existimare, and of tradere, ferre, and perhibere, which in the passive assume the meaning 'to be said,' 'to be reported (by hearsay),' almost always assume the construction of the 'Nominative with the infinitive.' Other verbs of saying and thinking, as nuntiare, indicare, memorare, audire, reperire, scribere, demonstrare, ostendere, cognoscere, intelligere, perspicere are either construed in the same way, or have the regular impersonal construction according to Rem. 86. Thus we may say either Gajus mortuus esse nuntiatur, or Nuntiatur, Gajum mortuum esse; either: Provinciae rebellare audiuntur, or Audiuntur provincias rebellare.

1. Non ita generati<sup>1</sup> a natura sumus, ut ad ludum et jocum facti esse videamur. Cic. Off. 1. 29.— 2. Lectitaris<sup>2</sup> Platonem studiose, audivisse etiam, Demosthenes dicitur. Cic. Brut. 31.— 3. Aristides unus omnium<sup>3</sup> justissimus fuisse traditur. Cic. Sext. 67.— 4. Romulus Amulium regem interemis<sup>4</sup> fertur. Cic. Rep. 2. 3.— 5. Tyndaridae<sup>5</sup> fratres non modo adulescentes<sup>6</sup> in proeliis victoriae populi Romani, sed etiam nuntii fuisse perhibentur. Cic. Tusc. 1. 12.— 6. Atticus prudens esse in jure<sup>7</sup> civili putabatur. Cic. Am. 2.— 7. Disciplina Druidarum<sup>8</sup> in Britannia reperta<sup>9</sup> atque inde<sup>10</sup> in Galliam transiata esse existimatur. Cæs. B. G. 6, 13.— 8. Mihi nuntiabatur, Parthos transisse Euphratem. Cic. Fam. 15, 1.

Rem. 88. If these verbs are in any tense except future, present or imperfect, they must be construed IMPERSONALLY, except videri, which even in these tenses takes a PERSONAL construction.

<sup>1</sup> begotten.— <sup>2</sup> to read repeatedly.— <sup>3</sup> unus omnium before superlatives means 'of all others.'— <sup>4</sup> to kill.— <sup>5</sup> the Tyndarian brothers, i. e., sons of Tyndareus, namely, Castor and Pollux.— <sup>6</sup> helpers.— <sup>7</sup> law.— <sup>8</sup> the Druids, Celtic priests.— <sup>9</sup> discovered.— <sup>10</sup> thence.

§ 493. The tense of the object-infinitive is almost always the present, if the infinitive is a simple object (R. 77). This, also, is generally so in regard to object-infinitives which take a transitive or intransitive object along with them (§ 491). Only insimulare, arguere, and, of course, the verbs mentioned R. 87, may take perfect infinitives (See R. 85, Ex. 6. 7. 8).

Hence English object-infinitives in the perfect ('he could have done', 'he ought to have been') are not generally expressed 'fecisse potuit', 'fuisse debuit', but 'facere potuit', 'esse debuit'. To this rule there are the following exceptions:

1. The English perfect infinitive after 'can', 'may' (could, might) (i. e. the perfect and pluperfect of the potential with 'can' etc.), denoting 'it is possible that', with a preterite, is either expressed by the circumlocution with 'fieri potest ut', or 'fieri potuit ut' (see p. 618, Obs. 2, 1), or (more rarely) by the perfect potui with a present infinitive, as: Potuit esse innocens Falcula, It is possible that Falcula was innocent (F. may have been innocent). Cic. Clu. 41. But sometimes the Latin uses exactly the same perfect infinitive as we do in English, as: Excessisse pugna ad Trebiam in hunc annum non potest; The battle at the Trebia cannot have fallen in this year. Liv. 21, 15.— Potuit aliqui ab initio non redisse, et tamen Oppianicum gratis condemnasse; Some (of the judges) might not have been sitting in the beginning, and yet might have condemned Oppianicus. Cic. Clu. 41, 113.— Quum hæc scriberem, Pompejus jam Brundisium venisse poterat; Pompey can have arrived at Brundisium (epistolary tense, p. 356). Cic. Att. 8, 4, 9.

2. Sometimes (very rarely) a perfect infinitive with posse and debere has a force similar to a future-perfect infinitive, as: Bellum quod ante biennium perfecisse possumus; a war which we may have finished before next winter. Liv. 37, 19.— Tametsi statim vicisse debeo, tamen de meo jure decedam; Although it is a necessity that I should directly beat my adversary ('should have beaten'; see about the meaning of vici, p. 303, Obs. 2). Cic. R. A. 27, 73.

3. Sometimes velle, especially if connected with a negation, takes an object-infinitive in the perfect, to represent the will as more decided by giving to its object the form of a completed action (Compare the perfect participle after velle in infinitive clauses, p. 592, 3. a), as: Ne quis quid fugæ causâ vendidisse neve emissee vellet. Liv. 39, 17.— Neminem notâ ignavi militis notasse volui. Ib. 24, 16.— Quia pepercisse vobis voluit, committere vos cur peratis non patiuntur. Ib. 32, 21.

4. Poets occasionally use object-infinitives in the perfect with the force of a present infinitive: Tendentes opaco Pelion imposuisse Olympo (striving to place etc.). Hor. Carm. 3, 4, 51.

§ 494. Subject-infinitives (P. I., § 76; P. II., p. 75) may be in the present, or perfect, both in the active and passive voices.

Rem. 89. The following predicates are used impersonally with subject-infinitives: 1) The copula (including esse and videtur) with predicate-adjectives or predicate-nouns. To the latter belong the expressions fas est (it is lawful); nefas est (it is a crime); tempus est (it is time); operæ pretium est (it is worth while). 2) The copula with impersonal predicate-geritives (§ 466, 2. and R. 25): 3) the following impersonal verbs, mentioned P. I., § 76: conducit, decet, expedit, juvat, libet, (iustum est), licet, (licitum est), placet, displicet, prestat, prodest; to which must be added: oportet (it behooves), opus est (p. 95, R. 64), prodest (it does not matter), convenit (it is convenient), contingit, evenit, accidit, venit in mentem (R. 55), and sometimes interest and revert (P. I., p. 312, R. 77); 4) the impersonals piet, pudet, pavet, tudet, with which the subject-infinitive takes the place of their geritive-objects. For complete particulars about the construction of these impersonals see p. 273, Obs. 2, and p. 615 foll.—All these impersonals may become object-infinitives of the verbs potest, aequit, debet, copit, desinit, videtur (see P. I., § 95; § 133), which, in this instance, become themselves impersonal.

Rem. 90. Impersonal predicates are often accompanied by the logical subjects of their actions, denoting persons, which take the grammatical form of their objects (mihi licet, me tudet). The following impersonals require their logical subjects in the accusative: piet, pudet, pavet, tudet, oportet, attinet, decet, juvat. The dative is required with contingit, convenit, evenit, accidit, venit in mentem, licet, placet, displicet, prodest.

Rem. 91. If the subject-infinitive used with any of the above-mentioned impersonals consists of the copula and a completing predicate, this completing predicate must be in the accusative sing. (p. 75, § 463, 1), and if it is an adjective, it is in the masculine gender (p. 75, R. 18). But sometimes (rarely) the accusative plural of the masculine is used: Esset egregium non querere externa, domesticis esse contentos (but to be satisfied with domestic examples). Cic. Orat. 7, 22.

Rem. 92. If the copula est denotes 'definition,' it may take along with its subject-infinitive another infinitive as impersonal predicate, as: Vivere est cogitare, to live is (means) to think. Cic. Fam. 6, 1.—Nescire quid, antequam natus sis, acciderit, id est semper esse puerum. Ib. Orat. 34, 120.

Rem. 93. Subject-infinitives may be employed as subjects in infinitive-clauses, in place of a subject-accusative, in which case their impersonal predicate must, of course, be likewise in the infinitive, as: Bene sentire recteque facere puto satis esse ad bene vivendum, I believe that meaning well and acting rightly is sufficient for a happy life. Cic. Fam. 6, 1.

1. Grave est a deterioribus honore anteiri.<sup>1</sup> Sen. Prov. 3.— 2. Miserum est exturbari<sup>2</sup> fortunis omnibus, miserius est injuria.<sup>3</sup> Acerbum est ab aliquo circumventi.<sup>4</sup> acerbius a propinquo. Calamitosum<sup>5</sup> est bonis everti.<sup>6</sup> calamitosius cum dedecore. Funeustum<sup>7</sup> est a forti atque honesto viro jugulari.<sup>8</sup> funestius ab eo, cujus vox in praecio quaestu<sup>9</sup> prostitit.<sup>10</sup> Indignum est a pari vinci aut superiore, indignius ab inferiore. Luctuosum<sup>11</sup> est tradi alteri<sup>12</sup> cum bonis, luctuosius inimico. Cic. Quinct. 31.— 3. Illorum calamitatem augere nolo, quibus liberos conjugesque<sup>13</sup> suas ab istius petulantia<sup>14</sup> conservare non licitum est. Cic. Verr. 1, 5.— 4. Fas est et ab hoste doceri. Ov. Met. 4, 428.— 5. Nulli contigit impune<sup>15</sup> nasci. Sen. Cons. 15.— 6. Oportet te, non de eo quod detractum<sup>16</sup> est queri, sed de eo gratias agere, quod collegisti.<sup>17</sup> Sen. Ib. 11.— 7. Ab Lysone Apollinis signum<sup>18</sup> ablatum (esse) certe non oportuit. Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 17.— 8. Nihilne tibi venit in mentem existimationi<sup>19</sup> tuae consulere? Verr. 2, 3, 57.— 9. Homines sapientis,<sup>20</sup> ex quibus rebus maxime res publica laborat, eis maxime mederi convenit. Cic. Rosc. Am. 53.— 10. Quem non poeniteat hoc pretio estimasse virtutem? Sen. Prov. 3.— 11. Non intelligis satis esse viris fortibus didicisse quam hoc pulcrum sit? Cic. Phil. 2, 46.— 12. De quo quid sentiam nihil attinet dicere. Cic. Div. 4, 7.— 13. Tedet jam audire eadem millies. Ter. Ph. 3, 2, 2.— 14. Semper esse felicem, et sine morsu animi transire vitam, ignorare est rerum naturae alteram partem. Sen. Prov. 4.— 15. Profecto nihil aliud est bene et beate vivere nisi<sup>21</sup> honeste et recte vivere. Cic. Part. 1, 4.— 16. Quid est iudicium corrumpere, si hoc non est, testis auctoritate<sup>22</sup> deterrere? Ver. 1, 10.

Rem. 94. The connection of subject-infinitives with other verbs than the impersonals mentioned above, is rare and unusual, as: Invidere non cadit in sapientem. Envy does not enter (the mind) of the wise. Cic. Tusc. 3, 10.— Hos omnes eadem odisse, eadem metuere in unum coegit. Hating and fearing the same things brought all these men together. Sall. Jug. 31.— Didicisse artis, emoluit mores. Ov. Pont. 11, 9, 58. See p. 623, Obs. 7.

Rem. 95. Impersonal predicates often take neuter determinatives, or general nouns along with determinatives (as haec res, haec ratio), to introduce the subject-infinitive by them: 1. Fuit hoc quondam proprium<sup>23</sup> populi Romani longe a domo bellare. Cic. Fonteij. 12.— 2. Semper haec ratio accusandi fuit honestissima (This was always the most honorable method of prosecuting as accuser) pro sociis inimicitias suscipere (to make enemies in behalf of those under our protection). Cic. Div. in Caec. 19.— 3. Quibusdam totum hoc displicet philosophari (to occupy one's self with philosophy). Cic. Fin. 1, 1.

From such constructions arose the method of combining neuter form-adjectives in the singular as attributes with an infinitive, as if the latter were a neuter noun: Me, cum huc veni, hoc ipsum nihil agere delectat, after I came here, this very doing nothing has been my delight. Cic. Or. 2, 6. See § 495.

§ 495. Sometimes the infinitive is used with the force of a noun in any of its functions, as transitive object, as attribute, as completing predicate, and even after prepositions. This free use of the infinitive occurs oftener in poetry and late prose than in classical Latinity, where it is confined to a few exceptional phrases which do not admit of being generalized.

<sup>1</sup> anteire, to surpass.— <sup>2</sup> to be stripped of.— <sup>3</sup> supply. exturbari.— <sup>4</sup> to be circumvented.— <sup>5</sup> calamitous.— <sup>6</sup> to be turned out of.— <sup>7</sup> mournful.— <sup>8</sup> to be slain.— <sup>9</sup> praecio quaestus, the trade of a public crier.— <sup>10</sup> proflare, to stand forth.— <sup>11</sup> grievous.— <sup>12</sup> alter must always be used for the English another, if the action can only be conceived to be between two persons.— <sup>13</sup> wife.— <sup>14</sup> frivolity.— <sup>15</sup> Impune is used here pregnantly, 'without paying the penalty for it.'— <sup>16</sup> taken away.— <sup>17</sup> to collect, to save.— <sup>18</sup> statue.— <sup>19</sup> character.— <sup>20</sup> Sapientis may be taken for an accusative dependent on convenit, or for a subject-accusative.— <sup>21</sup> but.— <sup>22</sup> influence.— <sup>23</sup> peculiar to, a peculiarity of, a quality of.

1. Beate vivere (i.e., beatam vitam) alii in alio, Epicurus in voluptate ponit.— 2. Mori (i.e., morlem) nemo sapiens miserum duxit. Cic. Fam. 6, 3.— 3. Demis nobis necessitudinem<sup>1</sup> illum persequi (of pursuing). Sall. Jug. 102.— 4. Ipsam illud quod vocatur mori (i.e., more) brevius est, quam ut<sup>2</sup> sentiri possit. Sen. Prov. 6.— 5. Deinde alii quaestus<sup>3</sup> instituuntur<sup>4</sup>: accipere<sup>5</sup> a civitatibus<sup>6</sup> pecuniam; pretio certo miseros<sup>7</sup> facere nautas, missorum omne stipendium lucrari; reliquis quod debetur<sup>8</sup> non dare. Cic. Verr. 2, 5, 24.— 6. Adimam cantare strictis (I shall stop the strict from singing). Hor. Ep. 1, 19, 9.— 7. Aristo et Pyrrho inter optime valere (i.e., optimam valetudinem) et gravissime aegrolare (i.e., gravissimum morbum) nihil prorsus ducebant interesse<sup>9</sup>. Cic. Fin. 2, 13.— 8. Multum interest inter dare et accipere. Sen. Ben. 5, 2.— 9. Nihil praeter plorare<sup>10</sup>. Hor. Sat. 2, 5, 69.

EXERCISES.

IMPERSONAL PASSIVES (§ 456 – § 460). 1. The very air of the place is tainted<sup>11</sup> in which sacrifices are offered<sup>12</sup> to pleasure.— 2. Before the argument of the defence was opened [Translate: Before speaking<sup>13</sup> (impers.) had been commenced (impers.) by the defendant<sup>14</sup>], the trial<sup>15</sup> was adjourned<sup>16</sup> to (in) the following day.— 3. Let us proceed<sup>17</sup>, not by that road where (qua) people are in the habit of going, but [by that] where they ought<sup>18</sup> to go.— 4. Often those are envied who are more unhappy than [those] who envy them.— 5. It was announced to Caesar that on the mountain a fight had taken place (pugnare) between his [troops] and a cohort of the cavalry of the Gauls.— 6. There was a rush<sup>19</sup> to arms, but a doubt arose<sup>20</sup> whether it was preferable to march immediately<sup>21</sup> against the enemy, or to wait<sup>22</sup> the reinforcements of the other states.

PREDICATE-NOMINATIVE (§ 461 – § 463). 1. Agathocles, not satisfied<sup>23</sup> with having suddenly<sup>24</sup> become rich [transl.: that (quod) he had suddenly become rich] practised<sup>25</sup> piracy<sup>26</sup> against his country.— 2. Caesar wrote that all Gaul now<sup>27</sup> seemed quiet<sup>28</sup> and had become tributary<sup>29</sup> to the Roman people.— 3. Did you hear that our friend had turned admirer<sup>30</sup> of republican institutions<sup>31</sup>?— 4. Vercingetorix was called King by his [followers].— 5. Many would rather (malle) be considered bad than foolish.— 6. Cicero wrote to Atticus that he had unanimously<sup>32</sup> been elected Consul.— 7. To be called (dicere) a victor in the Olympic games<sup>33</sup> was the highest praise amongst the Greeks.— 8. Catiline, after Cicero had been elected Consul, resolved to destroy<sup>34</sup> the constitution<sup>35</sup> by force.

PREDICATE-GENITIVE (§ 464 – § 467). 1. Viriathus was of so great bravery and integrity<sup>36</sup> that every common<sup>37</sup> soldier seemed richer than (abl.) the chief commander<sup>38</sup>.— 2. He complains<sup>39</sup> that the property<sup>40</sup> which belonged (esse) to Roscius, has become thine.— 3. Be not disturbed<sup>41</sup> by those [things] which it is not in our power<sup>42</sup> to avoid.— 4. How can virtue control<sup>43</sup> pleasure? For to follow is the mark of one that obeys<sup>44</sup>, and to control [is that] of one who commands.— 5. The other part of my speech will be very brief<sup>1</sup>, and will contain very little matter for dispute<sup>2</sup>.— 6. It is the duty of a good judge to make conclusions<sup>3</sup> from the smallest circumstances<sup>4</sup>.— 7. It is arrogant<sup>5</sup> to read<sup>6</sup> one's own writings<sup>7</sup> as (pro) evidence<sup>8</sup>.

<sup>1</sup> Necessity.— <sup>2</sup> literally 'than that.' This construction must be recast in English: too short to be felt.— <sup>3</sup> ways of making money.— <sup>4</sup> to try.— <sup>5</sup> this infinitive has the force of a noun in apposition to quaestus, 'that of accepting,' etc.— <sup>6</sup> communities.— <sup>7</sup> factitive predicate: 'to make the sailors dismissed ones,' i.e., to dismiss them.— <sup>8</sup> what he was owing to them.— <sup>9</sup> Interesse, there is a difference: 'hold that there was no difference.'— <sup>10</sup> to weep, to cry.— <sup>11</sup> contaminare.— <sup>12</sup> to offer sacrifices.— <sup>13</sup> parentare.— <sup>14</sup> dicere.— <sup>15</sup> defensor.— <sup>16</sup> causa actionis.— <sup>17</sup> praerogare.— <sup>18</sup> pergere.— <sup>19</sup> abire.— <sup>20</sup> concurrere.— <sup>21</sup> dubitare.— <sup>22</sup> respectare.— <sup>23</sup> in eo.— <sup>24</sup> continere.— <sup>25</sup> repente.— <sup>26</sup> exercere.— <sup>27</sup> piratam.— <sup>28</sup> iam.— <sup>29</sup> potius.— <sup>30</sup> stipendiarius.— <sup>31</sup> admirator.— <sup>32</sup> republican institutions, libera respublica.— <sup>33</sup> transl.: by the consent (consensus), 4. decl. of ad.— <sup>34</sup> Olympica (pl. t.).— <sup>35</sup> evertere.— <sup>36</sup> respublica et leges.— <sup>37</sup> continentia.— <sup>38</sup> gregarius.— <sup>39</sup> imperator.— <sup>40</sup> queri.— <sup>41</sup> bona.— <sup>42</sup> perturbare.— <sup>43</sup> potestas. Translate by the genitive. To what class belongs this genitive?— <sup>44</sup> regere.— <sup>45</sup> one that obeys (parere), by the participle.

PREDICATE-DATIVE, AND IDIOMS WITH esse (§ 468 – § 470). 1. Do you believe that Crassus would have (pluperf. subj.) spurned<sup>9</sup> greater riches, if they by chance (forte) had belonged to him?— 2. Honest poverty<sup>10</sup> has (by esse) great power<sup>11</sup> over<sup>12</sup> insolent wealth.— 3. In my camp no traitor<sup>13</sup> ever had a place.— 4. I believe that nothing else can be of [any] help<sup>14</sup> (abstract dative) to me.— 5. Our arrival<sup>15</sup> gave (esse) nobody [any] trouble<sup>16</sup> or expense<sup>17</sup>, either (transl. neither) publicly or (nor) privately<sup>18</sup>.— 6. What protection<sup>19</sup> have you been to our fleet?— 7. There were mines<sup>20</sup> in Attica from which a great quantity<sup>21</sup> of silver flowed<sup>22</sup> into the treasury<sup>23</sup>.— 8. I know that there are a great many (§ 314) who belittle<sup>24</sup> in all ways<sup>25</sup> the good qualities<sup>26</sup> of others.— 9. There will be always [those] who refuse to do of their own accord<sup>27</sup> what<sup>28</sup> the laws direct them to do.

SIMPLE OBJECT-ACCUSATIVE (§ 471 – § 473). 1. Who will mourn for<sup>29</sup> the downfall<sup>30</sup> and destruction of a thoroughly<sup>31</sup> corrupted state?— 2. Phaëton, because he had asked for<sup>32</sup> too great [things], miserably perished.— 3. We, on our part, do not wish for<sup>33</sup> ill-begotten<sup>34</sup> wealth and unrighteous<sup>35</sup> power<sup>36</sup>, but for the love<sup>37</sup> and praise of our fellow-citizens.— 4. Do not lose courage in adversity<sup>38</sup>, but hope for better [things].— 5. Remember that I speak Spanish<sup>39</sup>, [and] not Roman.— 6. O, the fallacious hope and frail<sup>40</sup> fortune of men, and the empty<sup>41</sup> altercations<sup>42</sup> of ours! (§ 272, Rem. 3).

SIMPLE DATIVE (§ 474 – § 477). 1. To obey God is freedom.— 2. Epaminondas did not obey that imprudent decree<sup>43</sup> of the people, and induced<sup>44</sup> his colleagues to do the same.— 3. I cannot pardon the silence of Dolabella.— 4. No wise [man] has ever trusted<sup>45</sup> a traitor.— 5. Fontējus ruled over a province, justly<sup>46</sup> praised by all for [its] extraordinary<sup>47</sup> fertility<sup>48</sup>.— 6. A republic must and will be such<sup>49</sup> that (ut) an enemy can neither be wanting to the wicked<sup>50</sup>, nor be an obstacle<sup>51</sup> to the good<sup>52</sup>.— 7. He will be convinced<sup>53</sup> of (de) what thou wilt be convinced.— 8. Is there anything else against<sup>54</sup> Roscius, but that (nisi quod) his father's property<sup>55</sup> has been sold<sup>56</sup>?— 9. I often envy the mute<sup>57</sup> if I reconsider<sup>58</sup> what I have spoken.— 10. How can a man preoccupied<sup>59</sup> by pleasure, struggle<sup>60</sup> with labor and danger?— 11. A firm<sup>61</sup> man will easily resist the attacks of those that tempt<sup>62</sup> [him].— 12. Our soldiers will refuse obedience<sup>63</sup> to those commands<sup>1</sup> which tend<sup>2</sup> to make them swerve from their duty<sup>3</sup>.— 13. Live for others<sup>4</sup> if thou meanest<sup>5</sup> to live for thy own interest.— 14. I judge that our armies cannot be resisted by the enemy.— 15. They worked [imperfect] as long as<sup>6</sup> they understood that they were sowing<sup>7</sup> and investing<sup>8</sup> their labor in their interest and in that of the Roman people.— 16. Thou hast raised<sup>9</sup> thy children not only for thyself, but also for thy country.— 17. Nobody errs merely to his [own] disadvantage, but is the cause and author of the errors (sing.) of others (§ 357, Rem. 6).

<sup>1</sup> Perbrēvis.— <sup>2</sup> transl.: will be of no great dispute (contentio).— <sup>3</sup> conjectura.— <sup>4</sup> res.— <sup>5</sup> arrogans.— <sup>6</sup> recitare.— <sup>7</sup> littere.— <sup>8</sup> testimonium.— <sup>9</sup> spernere.— <sup>10</sup> egestas.— <sup>11</sup> potentia.— <sup>12</sup> transl. against.— <sup>13</sup> proditor.— <sup>14</sup> adjumentum.— <sup>15</sup> adventus.— <sup>16</sup> labor.— <sup>17</sup> sumptus.— <sup>18</sup> privatim.— <sup>19</sup> (abstract dative) praedium.— <sup>20</sup> metallum.— <sup>21</sup> copia.— <sup>22</sup> redire imperio.— <sup>23</sup> aerarium.— <sup>24</sup> detractare.— <sup>25</sup> modus utriusque.— <sup>26</sup> good quality.— <sup>27</sup> sponte.— <sup>28</sup> § 355, Rem. 10; § 351, Rem. 27.— <sup>29</sup> to mourn for.— <sup>30</sup> ingere aliquid.— <sup>31</sup> occasus.— <sup>32</sup> propterea.— <sup>33</sup> petere aliquid.— <sup>34</sup> concupiscere.— <sup>35</sup> partus.— <sup>36</sup> injustus.— <sup>37</sup> potentia.— <sup>38</sup> caritas.— <sup>39</sup> res adversa.— <sup>40</sup> Hispanus.— <sup>41</sup> fragilis.— <sup>42</sup> inanitas.— <sup>43</sup> contentio.— <sup>44</sup> scitum.— <sup>45</sup> persuadere.— <sup>46</sup> credere.— <sup>47</sup> jure.— <sup>48</sup> eximius.— <sup>49</sup> fertilitas.— <sup>50</sup> ejusmodi.— <sup>51</sup> nocens.— <sup>52</sup> to be against, obstare.— <sup>53</sup> bona.— <sup>54</sup> to be sold, vendere.— <sup>55</sup> mutus.— <sup>56</sup> recogitare.— <sup>57</sup> occupare.— <sup>58</sup> resistere.— <sup>59</sup> constans.— <sup>60</sup> particeps.— <sup>61</sup> tentare.— <sup>62</sup> to refuse obedience, dicto audientem non esse.

SIMPLE GENITIVE AND ABLATIVE (§§ 478, 479). 1. What gladder day of thy whole life canst thou remember (recordari)?— 2. I wish thou wouldst (§ 414, Rem. 62) remember<sup>10</sup> the Acilian law of thy father<sup>11</sup>.— 3. Do not forget those men to whom our republic owes all its glory.— 4. I remember well (probe) the teachers who instructed<sup>12</sup> [us in] our youth.— 5. Not even those hesitated<sup>13</sup> to resist the attack who were without a hope of victory.— 6. Alcibiades, because he had not practised<sup>14</sup> faithfully the teachings<sup>15</sup> of Socrates, became unmanageable<sup>16</sup> and reckless<sup>17</sup>.— 7. This was always done as long as thou wast in the habit of using our assistance.— 8. I have always had the most friendly intercourse<sup>18</sup> with this man.— 9. [Those] who glory in vice, and praise what others blush<sup>19</sup> at [transl.: those (things) at which, etc.], have lost the only good [thing] which is in evil.— 10. [Those] that abandon<sup>20</sup> principles to pleasure are destitute of either<sup>21</sup>, for they lose their virtue, and, for the rest, do not have pleasure, but pleasure has them.— 11. If you need help, look<sup>22</sup> first whether you cannot find it within (in) yourself.— 12. What (must) we think<sup>23</sup> of thy innocence, when thou hast sold (indic.) property (bona) worth<sup>24</sup> 100,000 sesterces for 10,000?— 13. The treasury of the Athenians was filled to overflowing<sup>25</sup> with the contributions<sup>26</sup> of their allies.— 14. Sicily abounded in products<sup>27</sup> of that kind<sup>28</sup> which the Roman people could not easily dispense<sup>29</sup> with.— 15. Africa overflowed<sup>30</sup> with the blood of the very soldiers by whom she was oppressed.

COMPOUND OBJECTS (§ 480 – § 487). 1. Can highwaymen<sup>31</sup> assert<sup>32</sup> that they have given life to those from whom they have not taken (demere) [it]?— 2. It can hardly be believed that more should have been<sup>33</sup> taken<sup>34</sup> from these men than they have earned<sup>35</sup>.— 3. Cæsar made my brother chief of that province which, of all others, he coveted<sup>36</sup> most.— 4. Gaius Fufius, whom Cæsar had made superintendent<sup>37</sup> of the supplies<sup>38</sup>, was a Roman knight in whose integrity<sup>39</sup> all placed the greatest confidence<sup>40</sup>.— 5. Do not imagine<sup>41</sup> that those things which only serve for thy pleasure<sup>42</sup> are necessary<sup>43</sup> to thee.— 6. This event<sup>44</sup> relieved<sup>45</sup> our minds<sup>46</sup> from all fear.—

<sup>1</sup> Jussum.— <sup>2</sup> id agitare ut.— <sup>3</sup> transl.: that they swerve (deficere) from their duty.— <sup>4</sup> alter in the singular. All others are here considered as one party, so that the action lies only between two; hence alius cannot be used. The singular (and not the plural alteri) must be used, because it is supposed that each single act concerns only one. It is like the English 'my neighbor.'— <sup>5</sup> vale.— <sup>6</sup> as long as, quamdiu.— <sup>7</sup> serere.— <sup>8</sup> impendere.— <sup>9</sup> suscipere.— <sup>10</sup> venire in mentem.— <sup>11</sup> paternus.— <sup>12</sup> erudire.— <sup>13</sup> dubitare.— <sup>14</sup> uti.— <sup>15</sup> disciplina (sing.).— <sup>16</sup> terro.— <sup>17</sup> superbus.— <sup>18</sup> transl.: to use most friendly.— <sup>19</sup> confutissim.— <sup>20</sup> erubescere.— <sup>21</sup> tradere.— <sup>22</sup> uterque.— <sup>23</sup> ceterum.— <sup>24</sup> vendere.— <sup>25</sup> existimare, subj.— <sup>26</sup> translate: valued (estimare) at.— <sup>27</sup> to be filled to overflowing, redundare.— <sup>28</sup> stipendium.— <sup>29</sup> fructus.— <sup>30</sup> ejusmodi.— <sup>31</sup> carere.— <sup>32</sup> adhaere, imperf.— <sup>33</sup> lapso.— <sup>34</sup> proferre.— <sup>35</sup> the English potential mood in potest.— <sup>36</sup> transl.: than was born (nasco) to them.— <sup>37</sup> concupiscere.— <sup>38</sup> by profit.— <sup>39</sup> res frumentaria.— <sup>40</sup> honestas.— <sup>41</sup> transl.: whom all convicted (imperf.) greatly.— <sup>42</sup> fingere.— <sup>43</sup> by the abstract dative.— <sup>44</sup> opus.— <sup>45</sup> res.— <sup>46</sup> liberare.— <sup>47</sup> sing. in Latin.

7. We could not prevent the enemy from ravages<sup>1</sup> and plunder<sup>2</sup>.— 8. As soon as<sup>3</sup> I heard<sup>4</sup> of this disaster, I sent a body<sup>5</sup> of picked<sup>6</sup> soldiers to Scipio's help (double dative).— 9. The farmers<sup>7</sup> were ordered to furnish<sup>8</sup> more grain than they had raised<sup>9</sup>.— 10. Do you not see of what sort (qualis) is a virtue which is in need<sup>10</sup> of a guard?— 11. Epaminondas effected<sup>11</sup> by his eloquence that the Lacedæmonians were deprived<sup>12</sup> of the help of their allies.— 12. The judges condemned Alcibiades in his absence<sup>13</sup> for sacrilege<sup>14</sup>.— 13. At Thebes Alcibiades heard that he was condemned to death.— 14. While (cum) Hamilcar waged<sup>15</sup> war in Sicily, he was condemned for treason<sup>16</sup> by his fellow-citizens.— 15. Brutus freed the republic from royal<sup>17</sup> rule<sup>18</sup>.— 16. Doest thou not pity those whom, by thy cupidity,<sup>19</sup> thou hast stripped<sup>20</sup> of [their] property?— 17. I confess that I was not a little<sup>21</sup> ashamed of my rash suspicion.— 18. This triumph honored Pompey so much<sup>22</sup> as (§ 301) nobody before him was yet honored (affected) within the memory of men.

(DOUBLE ACCUSATIVE.) 19. By these means (res) Alcibiades effected that he was held (habere) dearest by his fellow-citizens.— 20. The ancients (vetus) called (appellare) Spain Iberia from the river Ibērus, and afterwards Hispania from the Hispanic sea<sup>23</sup>.— 21. What will you do with a man who has made light<sup>24</sup> with the prayers<sup>25</sup> and representations<sup>26</sup> of his very best friends? (§ 355).— 22. Do you believe any shore so deserted<sup>27</sup> that (quo) the fame of that day should<sup>28</sup> not have arrived?<sup>29</sup>— 23. We call (dicere) that man happy for whom there is no good and evil except a good and evil soul.— 24. To make Virtue the handmaid<sup>30</sup> of pleasure is the mark of [one] who<sup>31</sup> conceives<sup>32</sup> nothing great in his mind.— 25. All votes having been<sup>33</sup> counted, the delegates (legatus) proclaimed Abraham Lincoln President<sup>34</sup> of the Republic.— 26. I never wished (velie) to conceal this disaster from you. [Transform the object-infinitive 'conceal' with its objects into a passive construction, after having translated it actively.]— 27. Do not ask me for such a dereliction<sup>35</sup> of all principles which I formerly professed.— 28. Do not ask of me those [questions] which I am neither able nor willing to answer.— 29. We teach our scholars Latin and Greek.— 30. We teach our scholars the Latin and Greek languages (§ 119, Rem. 5). [Transform the last two sentences into passive constructions or their equivalents, after having translated them actively.]

INFINITIVE (§ 488 - § 495). [Translate the sentences Nos. 1-10 into Latin with personal constructions, if an impersonal one is not admissible; and with both personal and impersonal constructions if both are admissible.] 1. It seems that thou art experienced<sup>36</sup> above (§ 436) the others in this matter (res).— 2. It seems that Cicero was not very modest.— 3. It is said (dicere) that both Pomponius and his son have been killed by robbers.— 4. It is said (ferre) that the goddess Egeria was king Numa's wife.— 5. It is reported (tradere) that the gens Julia derived<sup>37</sup> its origin from Julius, son of Ænēas.<sup>38</sup>— 6.

<sup>1</sup> Populatio.— <sup>2</sup> rapinæ.— <sup>3</sup> as soon as, ubi.— <sup>4</sup> certiorē fieri, p. 76.— <sup>5</sup> manus.— <sup>6</sup> delectus.— <sup>7</sup> cultor.— <sup>8</sup> by imperare.— <sup>9</sup> exarare.— <sup>10</sup> opus.— <sup>11</sup> perficere.— <sup>12</sup> privare.— <sup>13</sup> transl.: the absent Alcibiades.— <sup>14</sup> sacrilegium.— <sup>15</sup> gerere.— <sup>16</sup> proditio.— <sup>17</sup> regius.— <sup>18</sup> dominatus.— <sup>19</sup> avaritia.— <sup>20</sup> spoliare.— <sup>21</sup> not a little, al quantum.— <sup>22</sup> transl.: 'affected' (afficere) Pompey with so great honor.— <sup>23</sup> the Spanish sea, Hispanum (sc. mare).— <sup>24</sup> transl.: 'held' (ducere) light.— <sup>25</sup> preces.— <sup>26</sup> admonitio.— <sup>27</sup> desertus.— <sup>28</sup> subjunctive of the main verb.— <sup>29</sup> pervadere.— <sup>30</sup> ancilla.— <sup>31</sup> participle.— <sup>32</sup> concipere.— <sup>33</sup> ablat. abs.— <sup>34</sup> princeps.— <sup>35</sup> desertio.— <sup>36</sup> expertus.— <sup>37</sup> ducere.— <sup>38</sup> Gen. Ænēas (Greek declension).

6. It is supposed (putare) that Romulus never existed<sup>1</sup>.— 7. It is believed (existimare) that Cæsar took part<sup>2</sup> in the Catilinarian<sup>3</sup> conspiracy.— 8. It is announced that Pompējus is absent from home.— 9. It is understood (intelligere) that Cicero cannot have written<sup>4</sup> this oration.— 10. I am commanded (imperare) to be present at the games.

11. Epaminondas allowed his colleagues to place<sup>5</sup> the whole responsibility upon himself.— 12. Epaminondas did not refuse<sup>7</sup> to suffer<sup>8</sup> the penalty of the law.— 13. The first settlers<sup>9</sup> of Italy were the Aborigines whose king Saturnus is reported to have been of so great justice that not only had there been no slaves<sup>10</sup> under him, but [that] everything had been common and undivided<sup>11</sup> for all.— 14. If Antonius were present, he would<sup>12</sup>, perhaps, teach me, or rather you, O conscript<sup>13</sup> fathers, to defend Cæsar's acts<sup>14</sup>.— 15. Diomedon asked<sup>15</sup> Epaminondas<sup>16</sup> to allow him (ut sibi liceret) to leave<sup>17</sup> the city in safety (safely), and take out<sup>18</sup> all his [property].— 16. It will not behoove you to be angry<sup>19</sup> with me for<sup>20</sup> speaking in behalf of the republic.— 17. Demosthenes said that it is often more difficult to keep<sup>21</sup> property (bona) than to acquire<sup>22</sup> [it].— 18. To live without literature is to be buried alive<sup>23</sup>.— 19. Do you think (putare) [it] more glorious to be feared by one's [own] citizens, than to be praised [by them]?— 20. The true glory is, to be equal<sup>24</sup> to all others<sup>25</sup> in liberty, [but to be their] better<sup>26</sup> in regard to (by) dignity.— 21. I believe that every one ought (oportet) to know with what<sup>27</sup> insolence that man has plundered<sup>28</sup> the public property.— 22. Do you think that performing judicial duties<sup>29</sup> is a heavy and intolerable<sup>30</sup> burden?— 23. I believe (arbitror) that prizes<sup>31</sup> and crowns ought (oportet) to be awarded<sup>32</sup> to these men.

CHAPTER THIRD.

CONSTRUCTION OF ADJECTIVES.

§ 496. Adjectives, both attributive and predicative, may have either completing or incidental objects like the verb, as: consciens sceleris, privy to a crime (completing object); ferox in bello, comis et benignus in pace, savage in war, kind and benignant in peace (incidental objects).

Rem. 96. In regard to meaning and construction, ADJECTIVES are analogous to, although not always identical with, VERBS, both denoting either states or actions. Adjectives denoting a state correspond to the neuter verbs or to passives, as: validus, strong = valere, to be strong; timidus = timere; perspicuus = quod perspicitur. The transitive and intransitive verbs correspond to analogous adjectives, as cupere, to desire = cupidus, desirous; fidus = fidere; plenus = implere; noxius = nocere. The latter class of adjectives admits completing objects, like corresponding verbs.

<sup>1</sup> esse.— <sup>2</sup> to take part in something, participem esse alicujus rei.— <sup>3</sup> Catilinarius.— <sup>4</sup> scribere non potuisse, not scripsisse non posse. See § 493.— <sup>5</sup> transferre.— <sup>6</sup> culpa.— <sup>7</sup> recusare.— <sup>8</sup> subire.— <sup>9</sup> cultor.— <sup>10</sup> transl.: that neither any one had served under him.— <sup>11</sup> indivisus.— <sup>12</sup> imperf. subj. of the main verb.— <sup>13</sup> Conscriptus.— <sup>14</sup> actum.— <sup>15</sup> rogare.— <sup>16</sup> acc. Epaminondam (Greek declension).— <sup>17</sup> exire.— <sup>18</sup> efferre.— <sup>19</sup> irasci.— <sup>20</sup> translate either according to § 393, Rem. 29, or (more elegantly): 'angry with me, speaking (partic. of dicere) for the republic.' § 394.— <sup>21</sup> tueri.— <sup>22</sup> parare.— <sup>23</sup> vivus, accessory predicate.— <sup>24</sup> par.— <sup>25</sup> transl.: 'to the others.'— <sup>26</sup> princeps (in the positive).— <sup>27</sup> quantus.— <sup>28</sup> spoliare.— <sup>29</sup> to perform judicial duties; judicare.— <sup>30</sup> intolerabilis.— <sup>31</sup> palma.— <sup>32</sup> tribuere.

Rem. 97. PARTICIPLES, representing the action of the verb either in the form of an attribute, or of an accessory predicate (p. 245; p. 246, R. 18), have the nature of both adjectives and verbs, being declined like the former, and construed like the latter. But some participles, from their frequent attributive use, have passed over into mere adjectives, and are construed like these (§ 499), but may also retain the construction of the corresponding verb, if they are used in a meaning fully corresponding to that of the verb, as: Amans tui, fond of thee; but amans te, loving thee; laboris patiens, hard-working; but laborem patiens, suffering hardships.

Rem. 98. ADVERBS, generally, cannot take OBJECTS, except in the following instances: 1) Some adverbs formed from PARTICIPLES (convenienter, congruenter, constanter) may take the same objects as the verbs from which they are derived: Convenienter (in harmony with) natūre vivere. Cic. Off. 3, 13.—Congruenter natūre vivere. Ib. Fin. 3, 7.—Sibi constanter dicere (consistently with one's self). Ib. Tusc. 5, 9. Similarly: Hec collēge obsequenter facta; This was done in obedience to his colleague. Liv. 41, 10.— 2) Rarely the adverbs formed from adjectives of DIMENSION take the same objects as their adjectives (tris pedes alte); see Ex. 4, 7, p. 117. So: Locum delēgit ab Avarico longe (at a distance of) millia passuum sedecim. Cæs. B. G. 7, 16.— 3) Rarely adverbs are construed with GERUNDIAL DATIVES (p. 163 foll.): Opportūne venit irritandis animis. Liv. 31, 5.— 4) Some adverbs (SEMI-PREPOSITIONS) are occasionally treated like prepositions, taking either the accusative or ablative, according to the analogy of kindred prepositions. Here belong clam (secretly, with ABL. or ACC.), palam (in sight of, with ABL.), simul (together with), intus (within), usque (p. 13), procul, and the comparative and superlative propius and proxime. Also prope and coram may be reckoned here. Ex.: Clam vobis, without your knowledge (Cæs. B. C. 2, 32); clam patre (Plant. Truc. 2, 1, 37); clam matrem (Plant. Mil. 2, 1, 34).—Palam populo (Liv. 6, 14).—Simul his (= simul cum his, Hor. Sat. 1, 10, 86); Magnetibus simul (Tac. A. 4, 55; so Ib. 3, 64; 6, 9).—Intus cellā (Liv. 27, 11, the reading being doubtful; so Lucr. 6, 1169).—Procul, generally, takes ab with ABL. (p. 219 foll., OBS. 7); but sometimes a mere ablative: Haud procul seditione, Liv. 6, 16; procul dubio (= sine dubio). Quint. 1, 5, 14.—Propius and proxime take ACC. or ABL. (§ 498): Exercitum habere quam proxime hostem, Cic. Att. 6, 5, 3; propius urbem, Ib. Phil. 7, 9.— 5) The adverb ergo (probably from e and an obsolete noun belonging to the root rēg. = e rego, from the direction of), in anteclassical and publicistic language, is used in the meaning 'on account of', as: Rjus rei ergo, Cato R. R. 139; formidinis ergo, Lucr. 1, 1245; funeris ergo (quoted by Cic. Leg. 2, 25, from the XII. Tab.); donum virtutis ergo (quoted by Livy 25, 12, from an old S. C.); eius legis ergo (quoted from a contemporary law by Cic. Att. 3, 23, 2).

Rem. 99. Adjectives are rarely construed with ADVERBS, except participles. But any adjective may be qualified by an adverb of INTENSITY (P. I., § 313; P. II., p. 261, R. 30), or by adverbs virtually intensive (ridicule inconstans, = adeo inconstans ut ridiculus sit, Cic. R. Com. 6), or by adverbs used with the force of emphatic particles: Vere honestum, truly virtuous. Cic. Off. 3, 4, 17.

§ 497. The completing objects of adjectives are 1) SUBSTANTIVES (nouns or pronouns) in the Accusative, Genitive, Dative, or Ablative; 2) some PREPOSITIONAL Objects (see Chapter I.); 3) INFINITIVES (rarely and exceptionally); 4) the SECOND SUPINE; 5) sometimes GERUNDS and Gerundive phrases (p. 161).

Rem. 100. The adjectives governing the dative and ablative generally correspond to the VERBS requiring the same case. Thus the reason that utilis governs the dative is the same as the reason why prodesse requires the dative; and liber is construed with the ablative case from no other reason than liberare. This is different with the accusative case, and adjectives corresponding to transitive verbs regularly require their object in the GENITIVE. See § 499. The accusative case of the objects of adjectives is confined to a few instances in which the accusatives of SPACE and TIME are applied to dimensions and age.

§ 498. The following adjectives require objects in the ACCUSATIVE case: 1) The adjectives longus (long), latus (broad, wide), altus (high or deep), and crassus (thick), requiring the numeral units of the measure whose DIMENSIONS or DIRECTIONS they define, to be either in the ACCUSATIVE or GENITIVE; 2) the participial adjective natus, in the meaning 'old,' requiring the measure-units of LIFE (annus, mensis, dies) to be in the accusative, as: decem annos natus, ten years old; 3) the comparative and superlative adjectives and adverbs formed from prope (propior—propius, nearer; proximus—proxime, next), which have their objects either in the accusative, or dative, or are construed with the preposition ab.

Rem. 101. The units of measure used by the Romans were 1) pes, foot, consisting of a little less than an English foot; 2) palmus, hand, one fourth of a foot; 3) digitus, digit, one fourth of the palmus, about 5-sevenths of an English inch; 4) cubitus, cubit, one foot and a half; 5) passus, pace, five feet used only for measure of distance, a mile being expressed by mille passus. Besides these, denoting definite lengths, there is an expression for RELATIVE or PROPORTIONAL units of measure, which, in sciences and arts, is frequently employed as standard, or basis in regard to the proportions of length. This is the 'modulus,' which may generally be translated by 'unit.' In architecture the modulus in respect to columns was determined by a certain portion of their height (from one eighth to one fifteenth), and in music modulus denotes 'the measure' or bar.

Rem. 102. The measure by which the DIMENSIONS of objects are numerically defined, is expressed by one of the following methods: 1) By the four ADJECTIVES mentioned above, with the measure-unit in the ACCUSATIVE or GENITIVE (rarely in the ablative), as: columna duodecim pedes longa, or duodecim pedum longa, a column twelve feet high; tubulus duo digitos crassus, or crassus digitorum, a tube two digits thick; flumen sex pedes profundus, or profundus pedum, a river six feet deep. This is the only method admissible, if the adjectives of dimension are used in the adverbial form, as: they dug three feet deep, this pedes alte fodimus. 2) By using instead of the adjectives of dimension, NOUNS of this pedes alte fodimus. 3) By using instead of the adjectives of dimension, NOUNS of dimension longitudo, latitudo, altitudo, crassitudo. These nouns are either made substantives or transitive objects of the sentence according to the requirements of the construction, or they are placed in the ABLATIVE. In either case the numerical measure is placed in the GENITIVE, analogous to the genitive of quality, § 466. (rarely in the accusative, as: latitudo columnae fuit triginta pedum, the width of the building was thirty feet thick. Columnas fecit crassitudinem habentis decem pedum, he made columns of ten feet thickness. Columna viginti pedum altitudine est, the column is twenty feet in height. 4) By forming adjectives in alis, from the nouns pes, etc., denoting the units of measure, prefixing the numerals in an adverbial form, as bipedalis, two feet long, semidigitalis, half a digit thick, sesquipedalis, one foot and a half thick. Since no adjectives of dimension can be used with this expression, the kind of dimension (whether length, thickness, etc.) must be clear from the connection. 5) By OMITTING the adjectives of dimension, leaving the construction (accusative or genitive), as it would be with them. The connection must show here, likewise, what kind of dimension is meant: Columna est pedes viginti (pedum viginti), the column is twenty feet (high). 6) If the numeral measure is between two given numbers, it is connected with the prepositions ab and ad, the measure-unit being expressed with ab, and understood with ad (if the units are the same), as: Vides a triginta pedibus ad quadraginta lata, a house between thirty and forty feet wide.

Rem. 103. The expressions of numeral measure may be connected in two ways with COMPARATIVES: 1) with the comparative of LIMITATION, which indicates that the measure is greater or smaller than a certain number (§ 312), or 2) the measure may be represented as an EXCESS of one measure over another (ablative of difference, § 311).

A. In the former case three different constructions may be employed: 1) The construction with plus or minus according to § 312, Rem. 14. If this case the numeral meas-nre keeps the same construction which it would have without plus or minus, as: Ædes est plus (quam) triginta pedes (pedum, pedibus) lata (or latitudine), the temple is more than thirty feet wide; or Ædium latitudo est plus (quam) triginta pedum (or pedes), the width of the building is more than thirty feet. 2) The comparative adverbs plus or minus may be changed into the comparative adjectives major or minor, attaching them as attributes to the nouns of dimension, and keeping the construction of the numerical measure, as: Ædium latitudo est major (minor) [quam] triginta pedum (rarely pedes or pedibus). 3) The adjectives of dimension may be BLENDED with the comparatives plus and minus into COMPARATIVE ADJECTIVES (instead of plus longus, etc.): longior, altior, lterior, crassior. With minus we connect longus, latus, and altus without change; instead of minus crassus we say tenuior or gracilior. The numeral measure with these comparatives, is generally placed in the ABLATIVE or GENITIVE: Ædes latioribus sunt triginta pedibus or pedum (hardly ever latioribus triginta pedes). Columna crassior (gracilior, tenuior) est triginta digitis or digitorum (hardly ever digitos).

B. In the case of a definite excess, the forms of the comparative are the same as in the former case, and the excess of measure is always expressed by the ablative of difference: Hæ columnæ quartâ parte (quatuor digitis) tenuiores sunt quam istæ, these columns are thinner by one fourth (four digits thinner) than those.

Rem. 104. SQUARE measure has the same words for units as lineal measure. To give to these words the meaning of square measure, either the genitive aræ (of surface) is added, or the participial adjectives quadratus or multiplicatus, as: nine square feet, pedes aræ novem, or quadrati (multiplicati) pedes novem. The English 'square' after numerals is either likewise expressed by the addition of aræ (if the connection shows that no square measure can be meant), or by various circumlocutions, as: a spot three feet square, locus trium aræ pedum, or locus quadratus trium pedum utroque latere (Vitruv.), or tris pedes longus et tantundem latus (Vitruv.). CUBIC measure is expressed by the addition of quoquoversus: saxum trium pedum quoquoversus, a block of stone three feet each way.

Rem. 105. The regular way of expressing fractions is by circumlocution with pars, and an ordinal numeral (§ 256). But those fractions that may be reduced to a form with the denominator 12 are often (generally in the case of absolute or abstract fractions) expressed by the parts of the Roman As. These are:

|  |   |
|--|---|
| $\frac{1}{12}$ = uncia (expressed by the symbol F).                  | $\frac{7}{12}$ = septunx (FS).  |
| $\frac{2}{12}$ ( $\frac{1}{6}$ ) = sextans (F, with a line over it). | $\frac{8}{12}$ ( $\frac{2}{3}$ ) = bes (FZ with a line over it).              |
| $\frac{3}{12}$ ( $\frac{1}{4}$ ) = quadrans (Z).                     | $\frac{9}{12}$ ( $\frac{3}{4}$ ) = dodrans (SZ).                              |
| $\frac{4}{12}$ ( $\frac{1}{3}$ ) = triens (FZ).                      | $\frac{10}{12}$ ( $\frac{5}{6}$ ) = dextans or decunx (of doubtful notation). |
| $\frac{5}{12}$ = quincunx (of doubtful notation).                    | $\frac{11}{12}$ = deunx (of doubtful notation).                               |
| $\frac{6}{12}$ ( $\frac{1}{2}$ ) = semis (S).                        |   |

These expressions are applied to numeral measure only when the measure-unit is understood, as Sexta in laminas non crassiores dextante, cut into leaves not thicker than five-sixths (of a digit). If the measure-unit is mentioned, fractions cannot be expressed by these terms, except one half (semis, G. semissis). Semis is generally used by co-ordination, dropping its case-endings when the conjunction et is omitted, as Longus quinque pedes semis (or quinque pedes et semissem), five feet and a half long. If not co-ordinate to other numerals, it is often compounded with the measure-units in the form semi, the attributive adjective dimidiatus having the same meaning (half a foot, semipes or pes dimidiatus). The fraction  $\frac{1}{2}$  is frequently expressed by sesqui in composition with the measure-units (sesquipes, one foot and a half; sesquipedalis, one and a half foot thick).

Rem. 106. The adjectives mentioned above are the only ones which are used in connection with numeral expressions as objects. Such English expressions as worth a certain sum, a thousand men strong, cannot be rendered into Latin by means of adjectives. See p. 176 foll.

Rem. 107. Poets, imitating a Greek idiom, frequently use adjectives and passive participles with objects in the accusative, assigning to such accusatives the force of a limiting ablative, as celer pedes (inst. of pedibus), quick in regard to the feet (quick-footed); altus colorem (white of color); labefactus animum (wearied in soul), etc. Even in Livy this construction is found in regard to the past participle indutus: Longam induta vestem. Liv. 21, 37.

1. In hac basilicâ<sup>1</sup> mediâ<sup>2</sup> testudo<sup>3</sup> inter columnas est longa pedes CXX., lata pedes LX.; porticus inter parietes et columnas est lata pedes viginti. Vitruv. 5, 1.—

<sup>1</sup> a basilica, a public building of peculiar architecture.— <sup>2</sup> inner.— <sup>3</sup> arched ceiling.

2. Columnæ habent post se parastaticas<sup>1</sup> altas pedes viginti, latas pedes duos semis, crassas pedem unum semis; suprâque eas sunt aliæ parastaticæ pedum decem et octo, latæ binum<sup>2</sup>, crassæ pedem. Vitruv. Ib.— 3. Hoc instrumentum habeat<sup>3</sup> in superiore parte canalem<sup>4</sup> longum pedes quinque, latum digitum, altum sesquidigitum. Vitruv. 8, 5.— 4. Campestris<sup>5</sup> locus alte duos pedes et semissem infodiatur<sup>6</sup>. Colum. 3, 13.— 5. Unum laterum<sup>7</sup> genus est longum sesquipede, latum pede. Vitruv. 2, 3.— 6. Hoc genus laterum, quod est quoquoversus quinque palmorum, pentadōron<sup>8</sup> dicitur. Vitruv. Ib.— 7. Durior est per ramorum<sup>9</sup> nodos<sup>10</sup> ea pars abietis<sup>11</sup>, quæ alte circiter pedes viginti præfisa est<sup>12</sup>. Vitruv. 2, 9.— 8. Majorem turrim ait fieri oportere altam cubitorum CXX., latam cubitorum viginti trium. Vitruv. 10, 13.— 9. Supra epistylum<sup>13</sup> sunt triglyphi<sup>14</sup> alti unius et dimidiati moduli, lati in fronte<sup>15</sup> unius moduli.— 10. Supra postis<sup>16</sup> erant traves<sup>17</sup> crassæ semissem et quartam pedis partem. Vitruv. 10, 15.— 11. Hoc interval- lum<sup>18</sup> sit<sup>19</sup> trium columnarum crassitudine; ipsarum columnarum altitudo sit modu- lorum octo et dimidiæ moduli partis. Vitruv. 3, 3.— 12. Quæ columna ab triginta pedi- bus ad quadraginta alta erit, (ejus) ima<sup>20</sup> crassitudo dividatur in partibus septem et di- midiam. Vitruv. 3, 4.— 13. Gradus<sup>21</sup> spectaculorum<sup>22</sup> ubi subcellia<sup>23</sup> componantur<sup>24</sup> ne minus alti sint p<sup>25</sup>linipede<sup>26</sup>, ne plus pede et digitis sex; latitudines eorum ne plus pedes duos semis, ne minus pedes duo constituentur. Ib. 5, 6.— 14. Ejus pulpiti<sup>27</sup> altitudo sit ne plus pedum quinque. Ib.— 15. Crassitudines eorum graduum ita fiantur ut neque crassiores<sup>28</sup> dextante, neque tenuiores<sup>29</sup> dodrante sint collocatæ<sup>30</sup>. Vitruv. 3, 4.— 16. Su- pra id pluteum<sup>31</sup> columnæ quartâ parte minore altitudine sint quam inferiores. Vitruv. 5, 6.— 17. Bubulum<sup>32</sup> latitudines debent esse nec minores pedum denum, nec majores quin- denum, ut singula juga (bovm) ne minus occupent pedes septēnos. Vitruv. 6, 6.— 18. Qua- dratus locus, qui erit longus et latus pedes denos, efficit aræ pedes centum. Vitruv. 9, præf.— 19. Si singula quadrata paribus lateribus<sup>33</sup> describuntur, quod erit pedum trium latus, aræ habebit pedes novem; quod erit quatuor, sedecim; quod quinque erit, vigin- ti quinque. Vitruv. Ib.— 20. Imponito trabem latam pedes duo, crassam pedem unum, longam pedes triginta septem. Cato R. R. 18.— 21. Alcibiades annos circiter quadraginta natus diem obiit supremum<sup>34</sup>. Nep. Alc. 10.— 22. Duodequadraginta annos tyrannus Syracusanorum fuit Dionysius, quum quinque et viginti annos natus domi- natus<sup>35</sup> occupavisset<sup>36</sup>. Cic. Tusc. 5, 20.— 23. Ubii proximi Rhenum incolunt<sup>37</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 1, 54.— 24. In Africa proximi Hispaniam Mauri sunt. Sall. Jug. 49, 1.— 25. Cum jumenta proxime ianem<sup>38</sup> stabulantur<sup>39</sup>, horrida<sup>40</sup> fiunt. Vitruv. 6, 6.— 26. Cæsar cognovit magis quam avaritia animos hominum exercebat, quod tamen vitium propius virtutem erat. Sall. Cat. 11, 1.— 28. Exi-timabant illi, sua sibi pericula propiora esse, quam mea. Cic. Sext. 18.— 29. Cæsar quam proxime potest hostium castris castra com- munit<sup>41</sup>. Cæs. B. C. 1, 72.

§ 499. The following adjectives govern the GENITIVE: 1) the (present) PARTICIPIAL ADJECTIVES derived from transitive verbs, if used in the meaning of PERSONAL QUALITIES corresponding to the verbal idea, as diligens, careful of; negligens, neglectful of; 2) adjectives expressing DESIRE and STRIVING; CONTROL, KNOWLEDGE, and CAPACITY.

Rem. 108. To the participial adjectives governing the genitive belong appetens, eager for; efficiens, gerens, instrumental of; perferens, patiens, apt or willing to endure, undergo; fugiens, afraid of, shy of; amans, fond of; observans, full of respect for, sitiens, etc. Participial adjectives, derived from intransitive verbs, generally govern the cases of their verbs, as obediens, (dicto audiens), obedient; imminens, (alicui or alicui rei), threatening; flagrans aliqua re, burning with.

<sup>1</sup> Pillar.— <sup>2</sup> instead of binorum. In numeral expressions the genitive plural of the second declension is generally formed in um inst. of orum. Qu. Why is the distributive numeral used here?— <sup>3</sup> should have.— <sup>4</sup> groove.— <sup>5</sup> level.— <sup>6</sup> should be tr-nched.— <sup>7</sup> later, a brick.— <sup>8</sup> to be considered as a proper name.— <sup>9</sup> branch.— <sup>10</sup> knot.— <sup>11</sup> fir-tree.— <sup>12</sup> cut.— <sup>13</sup> architrave.— <sup>14</sup> a triglyph (in the frieze of the Doric order).— <sup>15</sup> in front.— <sup>16</sup> post.— <sup>17</sup> beam.— <sup>18</sup> interval.— <sup>19</sup> should be.— <sup>20</sup> lower.— <sup>21</sup> step.— <sup>22</sup> in the amphitheatre.— <sup>23</sup> bench.— <sup>24</sup> to place.— <sup>25</sup> a foot and a quarter.— <sup>26</sup> platform.— <sup>27</sup> here high.— <sup>28</sup> here low.— <sup>29</sup> to place.— <sup>30</sup> parapet.— <sup>31</sup> bubile, cattle-stable.— <sup>32</sup> latus G. eris, a side.— <sup>33</sup> diem supremum obire, to depart life, to die.— <sup>34</sup> supreme power.— <sup>35</sup> to seize.— <sup>36</sup> to live, to dwell.— <sup>37</sup> fire-place.— <sup>38</sup> stabulâri (dep.) to be stabled.— <sup>39</sup> shaggy.— <sup>40</sup> ambi- tion.— <sup>41</sup> to fortify.

Rem. 109. Among the adjectives expressing DESIRE are: avidus<sup>1</sup>, cupidus, studiosus<sup>2</sup>. The other class, expressing CONTROL and CAPACITY (mental and otherwise), is very large. Here belong peritus and consultus<sup>3</sup>, gnarus<sup>4</sup>, consciens<sup>5</sup>, certior (in the phrase certiorem aliquem facere alicujus rei) prudens<sup>6</sup>, memor, particeps, potens and compos, plenus, secundus and their contraries, insciens and nescius<sup>7</sup>, rudis, insuetus<sup>8</sup>, immemor, oblitus<sup>9</sup>, expers, impotens and impos<sup>10</sup>, egens, inops.

Rem. 110. Several of these adjectives, as consciens, are also construed with a dative (especially the reflexive dative sibi, which is redundant in English), or with an ablative, as consultus (juris or jure consultus, a jurist), and plenus (alicujus rei or aliqua re). Refertus (full of, filled with) is almost always construed with an ablative. Some, as rudis (alicujus rei or in aliqua re) are construed with a genitive or with a preposition.

Rem. 111. In poetry and later prose, many adjectives and participles take a genitive, which, in good prose, are either not used at all (as præ-sagus, abstemius, præsciens), or which have different constructions, or take no object at all (as integer, cæcus, ambiguus, docilis, sapiens, and a great many others). Here belong the adjectives in æ formed from verbs, as edax, gluttonous; ferax, fertile; fugax, fugitive. These adjectives, which in classical prose are extremely rare, and still more rarely occur with objects in the genitive (in Cicero perhaps only the adjective capax in a single passage), are very frequent in poetry and post-classical prose, and regularly construed with a genitive, as tempus edax rerum, time, the devourer of things.

1. Romani semper appetentes gloriæ præter ceteras gentis atque ardi laudis fuerunt. Cic. Man. 3.—2. Cyrenaici<sup>11</sup> philosophi omne bonum in voluptate posuerunt, virtutemque censuerunt ob eam rem laudari oportere quod efficiens esset voluptatis. Cic. Off. 3, 33.—3. Epaminondas adeo fuit veritatis diligens, ut ne joco quidem mentiretur. Nep. Ep. 3.—4. Multi contentiōnis sunt cupidiores quam veritatis. Cic. Or. 1, 11.—5. Pythagoras sapientiæ studiosos appellat philosophos. Cic. Tusc. 5, 3.—6. In omnibus rebus est aliquid optimum, etiamsi<sup>12</sup> latet, idque ab eo potest qui ejus rei gnarus est judicari. Cic. Or. 11.—7. Solus homo ex tot animantium<sup>13</sup> generibus rationalis est particeps et cogitationis<sup>14</sup>. Cic. Leg. 1, 7.—8. Omnes virtutis compotes beati sunt. Cic. Tusc. 5, 13.—9. Sitientem me virtutis tuæ deserui. Ib. Planc. 5.

§ 500. The adjectives denoting NECESSARY (to somebody), USEFUL, ACCEPTABLE, FIT (for something), NEAR, SIMILAR, EASY, and their contraries, are construed with the DATIVE.

Rem. 112. The dative objects of almost all these adjectives may be considered as 'DATIVES OF THE INTERESTED PERSON.' Their number, on account of the great diversity of interest, is extremely large, so that they cannot be all enumerated in lists. The most usual adjectives belonging to this class, are:

Necessarius, utilis, inutilis, salutaris, nocivus, perniciōsus, juvenculus and gratus, injunctus and ingratus, acceptus<sup>15</sup>, amici, accommodatus<sup>16</sup>, idoneus<sup>17</sup>, habilis<sup>18</sup>, aptus<sup>19</sup>, similis, dissimilis, par, dispar, propinquus, vicinus<sup>20</sup>, limitatus, affinis<sup>21</sup>, præsens, facilis, difficilis, gravis, molestus, intentus<sup>22</sup>, satis (sufficient).

<sup>1</sup> Eager for.—<sup>2</sup> striving for somebody (i. e., attached to him).—<sup>3</sup> skilled in.—<sup>4</sup> having a knowledge of.—<sup>5</sup> conscious of.—<sup>6</sup> skilled in.—<sup>7</sup> ignorant of.—<sup>8</sup> unaccustomed to.—<sup>9</sup> forgetful.—<sup>10</sup> having no control over.—<sup>11</sup> Cyrenaic.—<sup>12</sup> even if.—<sup>13</sup> animals, a living being.—<sup>14</sup> thought.—<sup>15</sup> acceptable.—<sup>16</sup> accommodated.—<sup>17</sup> fit.—<sup>18</sup> skilful.—<sup>19</sup> equal.—<sup>20</sup> neighboring.—<sup>21</sup> related.—<sup>22</sup> intent on.

Here belongs the construction with the dative of several perfect participles, as perspectus, probatus, exploratus, certus (originally perf. part. of cernere); Mihi perspecta est (I thoroughly know) magnitudo animi tui. Cic. Att. 1, 17, 5.—Cui quum fuerit probatus omnibus (since he was highly satisfied with him). Ib. Planc. 11.—Mihi exploratum est (I am convinced) ita esse ut scribis. Ib. Fam. 2, 16, 6. For 'mihi certum est' see p. 612, n. 2.

Rem. 113. Some adjectives take either a DATIVE or GENITIVE: 1) similis<sup>1</sup>; 2) par, generally takes a DATIVE, but sometimes a GENITIVE; 3) proprius (peculiar), in Cic. generally with a GENITIVE<sup>2</sup>, else also with a DATIVE; 4) communis, contrarius, superstes; 5) sacer (sacred to) generally with DATIVE, but sometimes with GENITIVE<sup>3</sup>.

Rem. 114. Many of the adjectives governing the dative, when used absolutely, are often treated entirely as substantives, taking their objects in the form of attributes in the genitive, as æquus, a contemporary (alicujus), but 'equal' (alicui); familiaris, a friend (alicujus), but 'intimate with' (alicui); amicus (with the same meaning and construction as familiaris). Even the superlative amicissimus, the best friend, is sometimes construed with a genitive attribute. Thus necessarius, a relative, takes a genitive attribute or a possessive (necessarius tuus, Qui necessarius), but if meaning 'related' or 'necessary,' it is construed with an object in the dative.

1. Senatori necessarium est nosse rempublicam. Cic. Leg. 3, 18.—2. Lacedæmonii id potius intuebantur quod ipsorum dominationi<sup>4</sup>, quam quod universæ Græciæ utile esset. Nep. Them. 7.—3. Romulus multitudine gratior<sup>5</sup> fuit quam patribus<sup>6</sup>, (sed) longe ante alios acceptissimus militum animis. Liv. 1, 15.—4. Nihil est naturæ hominis accommodatius beneficentiæ et liberalitate. Cic. Off. 1, 14.—5. Voluptatibus maximus fastidium<sup>7</sup> finitimum est. Cic. Or. 3, 35.—6. Plures Romuli quam Numæ similes fuerunt reges. Liv. 1, 20, 2.—7. Num deos esse tui similes putas? Plaut. Am. 1, 1, 124.—8. Nam quid illi simile bello fuit? Cæs. B. G. 7, 77.—9. Id est cujusque proprium quo quisque fruatur atque utitur. Cic. Fam. 7, 30, 2.—10. Vetus verbum hoc quidem est, communis esse amicorum inter se omnia. Ter. Ad. 5, 3, 18.—11. Omni ætati mors est communis. Cic. Sen. 19.—12. Totos dies precabantur<sup>8</sup> ut sibi liberi superstites essent. Cic. N. D. 2, 28.—13. Utinam<sup>9</sup> te non solum ritæ, sed etiam dignitatis meæ superstitem reliquisset. Cic. Qu. fr. 1, 3, 1.—14. Satis esse Italiæ unum consulem censēbat. Liv. 34, 43.

§ 501. The OBJECT-ABLATIVE, dependent on adjectives, connects with these 1) the idea of INSTRUMENTALITY and ORIGIN, and 2) with a few adjectives (as liber, free from; aliēnus, foreign to) the idea of SEPARATION. (See § 485.)

Rem. 115. In some adjectives, as onustus (laden with) and præditus (endowed with), the ablative denotes DIRECT instrumentality, similar to the passive agent of verbs. The adjectives and participles belonging here, are in several respects noteworthy. Præditus is often used to paraphrase English derivative adjectives or similar expressions, as virtuous, virtute præditus; in modest circumstances, parvis opibus præditus (Cic.). Here belong the participles ductus, motus, permotus, adductus, inductus, impulsus, perterritus (with expressions of fear), corresponding to 'prompted by' or to the preposition from, denoting a motive, as: Feci hoc metu permotus, I have done this from fear. It is unusual that motives are expressed by the mere ablative, without any of the mentioned participles.

Rem. 116. The ablative connected with most adjectives must be conceived as denoting INDIRECT instrumentality, corresponding to very different English prepositions. Thus the instrument of the action is conceived 1) as producing HABIT, SATISFACTION, and CONFIDENCE, with the adjectives assuetus aliqua re (accustomed to), contentus (satisfied with), fretus (relying on); 2) as producing FULLNESS or DEFECT, with plenus aliqua re (full of—see Rem. 110), refertus (filled with), opulentus (rich in), fecundus (fertile in), præstans, excellens, celeber, præclārus (distinguished for), par alicui (a match for somebody in something), pauper, nudus, vacuus, orbis (destitute of); claudus (lame in), æger (sick with respect to).

<sup>1</sup> Similis always takes GENITIVE if the object is a pronoun, and almost always in Cic. if it is a person (mei similis, patris similis, also veri similis). Others use either case.—<sup>2</sup> as for inst. Cic. R. A. 8; L. M. 16.—<sup>3</sup> as: Insula eorum deorum sacra. Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 18. So Ib. Leg. 2, 18.—<sup>4</sup> power.—<sup>5</sup> popular with.—<sup>6</sup> Senate.—<sup>7</sup> surfeit.—<sup>8</sup> pray.—<sup>9</sup> would that.

Rem. 117. The adjective dignus (worthy of) takes the object of which somebody is worthy in the ablative. In regard to the explanation of this construction opinions differ.

It is probable that here an intermediate idea must be supplied. The Romans do not seem to have received the ablative object of dignus as an immediate object of 'worthy,' but as the object of a passive verb dependent on dignus, so that dignus aliquā re would have to be explained by dignus aliquā re ornari or præditum esse. The other constructions of dignus are 1) a relative clause; 2) a clause with ut; 3) the infinitive; 4) the second supine (digna dictu, Liv. 35, 1: 25, 1); 5) with the genitive. Of all these constructions only two are normal, that with the ablative, and that with a relative clause. (See p. 557, Obs. 3.)

Rem. 118. Here belong: 1. The construction of the vocative macte (pl. macti) with an ablative, mostly virtute (macte virtute esto, which is used as a phrase of praise and congratulation, 'Well done! Let me congratulate you for your bravery!'). Macte is a defective adjective, occurring only in the vocative, and belonging to the root mag (magnus, and the English 'might, may').

2. The ablative natu (literally by birth), added to major, maximus, and minor, minimus, and indicating that these adjectives refer to the age of men (major natu, older; minor natu, younger, etc.).

1. Orgetorix, cupiditate regni<sup>1</sup> inductus, conjurationem nobilitatis<sup>2</sup> fecit<sup>3</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 1, 2.— 2. Cæsar per exploratores<sup>4</sup> cognovit, Considium timore perterritum, (id) quod non vidisset pro viso<sup>5</sup> sibi renuntiasset. Cæs. B. G. 1, 22.— 3. Lacedæmonii pertimuerunt, ne caritate<sup>6</sup> patriæ ductus Alcibiades aliquando<sup>7</sup> ab ipsis descisceret<sup>8</sup> et cum suis in gratiam rediret<sup>9</sup>. Nep. Alc. 5.— 4. Dubia spe impulsus certum in periculum se commisit. Cic. Fam. 3, 8.— 5. Varus homo est summâ religione et summâ auctoritate<sup>10</sup> præditus. Cic. Clu. 53.— 6. Alienum<sup>11</sup> est magno viro, quod alteri præceperit<sup>12</sup>, id ipsum facere non posse. Cic. Brut. 9.— 7. Perge<sup>14</sup> hinc<sup>15</sup> omni liber metu, teque et exercitum serva. Liv. 7, 34.— 8. Contentum suis rebus esse maxime sunt certissimeque divitiæ. Cic. Par. 6, 3.— 9. Cimon Thasios opulentia fretos suo adventu fregit. Nep. Cim. 2.— 10. Homines labore assidue<sup>16</sup> et quotidiano<sup>17</sup> assueti, quum tempestatis causâ opere prohibentur, se ad aliquem ludum conferre<sup>18</sup> solent. Cic. Or. 3, 15.— 11. Maxima quæque domus servis est plena superbis. Virg. Æn. 9, 26.— 12. Quæ pars Numidiæ Mauretaniam attingit<sup>19</sup>, agro rarisque opulentior est. Sall. Jug. 19.— 13. Reddet<sup>20</sup> ille, qui nunc sceleribus suis præclârus<sup>21</sup> est, merarum miseriarum pœnas. Sall. Jug. 14.— 14. Huic tradita urbs est, nuda præsidio, referta copiis. Cic. Att. 7, 13.— 15. Quum sumus necessariis negotiis curisque vacui, tum (then) avemus<sup>22</sup> aliquid videre, audire, addiscere<sup>23</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 4, 13.— 16. Agesilaus fuit claudus altero pede. Nep. Ag. 8.— 17. Ancus regnavit annos quatuor et viginti, cuilibet<sup>24</sup> superiorum (former) regum belli pacisque et artibus et gloria par. Liv. 1, 35.— 18. Dignum laude virum Musa vetat mori. Hor. Od. 4, 7, 28.— 19. Nihil est laudabilius (praiseworthy), nihil magno et præclâro viro dignius clementia. Cic. Off. 1, 25, 88.— 20. Macti virtute, milites Romani, estote. Liv. 7, 36.— 21. Ennius fuit major natu quum Plautus et Naevius. Cic. Tusc. 1, 3.— 22. A Datame Scismas, maximus natu filius, describit<sup>25</sup>. Nep. 14, 7.— 23. Hoc prelio facto majores natu omnium consensu<sup>26</sup> legatos ad Cæsarem miserunt. Cæs. B. G. 2, 28.

<sup>1</sup> The same idea must be supplied with the ablative of quality (Rem. 27). The supplying of such intermediate ideas is sweepingly condemned by many. These utterly mistake the spirit of the language, which frequently makes objects and attributes dependent on ideas that are felt more than expressed. Such objects and attributes cannot be correctly understood without finding out the governing idea.— <sup>2</sup> royal power.— <sup>3</sup> nobility.— <sup>4</sup> to form.— <sup>5</sup> scout.— <sup>6</sup> instead of a predicate-accusative (visum), 'as seen by him, as if he had seen it.'— <sup>7</sup> love.— <sup>8</sup> once.— <sup>9</sup> desert.— <sup>10</sup> cum aliquo in gratiam redire, to be reconciled to one.— <sup>11</sup> influence (translate by adjectives).— <sup>12</sup> not becoming.— <sup>13</sup> command.— <sup>14</sup> go.— <sup>15</sup> from here.— <sup>16</sup> hard.— <sup>17</sup> daily.— <sup>18</sup> se conferre, to betake one's self, to resort to.— <sup>19</sup> to border on.— <sup>20</sup> to pay.— <sup>21</sup> conspicuous.— <sup>22</sup> avere, to be eager.— <sup>23</sup> to learn in addition.— <sup>24</sup> any.— <sup>25</sup> describere, to fall off.— <sup>26</sup> consent.

§ 502. The INFINITIVE, in classical prose, is not used as an object of adjectives, except sometimes with past participles derived from verbs which take an object-infinitive, as paratus venire, ready to come; assuetus scribere, accustomed to writing.

Rem. 119. Dignus very rarely is construed with an object-infinitive in Livy (p. 557, Obs. 3), also in Vitruv. (for inst. 9, præf.), but never in Cic., Cæs., Sall.—Poets and writers of the silver age quite often construe adjectives, both attributive and predicative, with an infinitive, as Contentus titulum provincie retinere (Vellej.); dignus eligi (Plin. Pan.); peritus regere (Tac.); apta regi (Or.); cupidus attingere (Prop.); callidus condere (Hor.). In classical language, adjectives requiring an action as completing object, are construed either with verbal nouns (as res cognitione dignæ, subjects worth knowing. Cic. Off. 1, 6), or with clauses (p. 557, 3), or with gerunds (p. 157, foll.), or with supines (§ 503).

Rem. 120. That predicate-adjectives are most frequently construed with a SUBJECT-INFINITIVE has been repeatedly mentioned. Such infinitives must not be mistaken for object-infinitives dependent on the adjective, an error into which beginners are often led by the position of the words, as: Quorum quanta mens sit, difficile est existimare, the greatness of whose mind, (literally, whose mind how great it is), [it] is often difficult to estimate. Cic. Tusc. 1, 24. Constructions of this kind are generally made personal in English, making the subject-infinitive the object-infinitive of the predicate-adjective. This is generally not allowed in Latin. (See Rem. 123, 124.)

§ 503. Many adjectives, especially those denoting POSSIBILITY (easy and difficult), and those denoting an AFFECTION OR MORAL CONDITION of the mind (pleasant, bitter, terrible, disgraceful, honorable), may take the SECOND SUPINE as object, as res difficilis factu, a thing difficult to be done (to do). See § 352.

Rem. 121. The second supine (which, in its stem, is identical with the passive participle) must be considered as the case of a noun of the fourth declension, either the dative (with the ending u, see § 221), or the ablative, most of the nouns of this declension being past participles with abstract meaning. In its regular (personal) construction, it has always a PASSIVE meaning, although it is most frequently rendered by an English active infinitive (§ 352). There are comparatively few verbs, all transitive, that form second supines: dictu, factu, auditu, cognitu, inceptu, incentu, memoratu, perpessu, scitu, toleratu, probatu, visu, aditu, transitu, tractatu, existimatu, responsu, gustatu, and perhaps a few more. The adjectives, in classical prose construed with second supines, are especially facilis and difficilis. More rarely are found jucundus, injucundus, incredibilis, molestus, suavis, dulcis, acerbus, turpis, foedus, honestus, crudelis, nefarius, terribilis, optimus, brevis, dignus. To these must be added the substantive expressions (with adjective force), fas est, nefas est, opus est.

Rem. 122. The adjectives on which the supine depends, may be either attributive or predicative, as Opus turpe inceptu, a work disgraceful to undertake; opus inceptu turpe est, the work is disgraceful to undertake. Often, especially in the poets, it is used in elliptical sentences, the governing adjective being used absolutely, as: Cui tris animas Feronia mater (horrendum dictu) dederat, to whom his mother Feronia (horrible to say) had given three souls. Virg. Æn. 8, 565.

Rem. 123. The predicative construction of the second supine is either PERSONAL OR IMPERSONAL. The FORMER is employed to give a personal form to sentences consisting of transitive subject-infinitives with impersonal predicate-adjectives. This is effected by changing the active subject-infinitive into a second supine (with passive force), and making the transitive object of the former the personal subject of the predicate-adjective. The adjective becomes thus a PERSONAL predicate, and must agree with its subject-noun, according to the general rules:

IMPERSONAL CONSTRUCTION. Hunc laborem facere difficile est, it is difficult to do this work.

PERSONAL CONSTRUCTION. Hic labor factu difficilis est, this work is difficult to be done (to do).

The personal subject of the sentence is always at the same time the logical subject of the supine. The use of a passive infinitive in place of a supine is not admissible. (See Rem. 120.)

Rem. 124. The IMPERSONAL construction of the supine, in classical prose, takes place 1) if an INTERROGATIVE CLAUSE is used as subject of the sentence, in which case the second supine (mostly a verb of saying) may always be replaced by an active infinitive, as: Difficile dictu est, quanto opere conciliet homines comitas affabilitasque sermonis, it is difficult to say how much comity and affability of speech reconciles men. Cic. Off. 2, 14, (instead of Dicere, quanto—conciliet, difficile est).—Qua quisque in te fide sit et voluntate, difficile dictu est de singulis, it is difficult to say in regard to each, taken singly, of what faith and sentiment he is toward you. Cic. Fam. 1, 7, 2, (inst. of Dicere de singulis, qua fide, etc., quisque sit, difficile est). Thus in the sentence, quoted Rem. 120, the active infinitive existimare might be changed into a second supine.—2) If the supine (especially dictu) depends on the expressions fas est, nefas est, opus est, infinitive clauses may be used as their subjects, as nefas est dictu, miseram fuisse talem senectutem, it is criminal to say that such an old age was unhappy. Cic. Sen. 5.—3) Sometimes the supine is used redundantly, merely to strengthen the idea of the governing adjective. In such a case the predicate-adjective may be used impersonally with an infinitive as subject, and the supine may have active force, as: (Orgetorix) perfacile factu esse illis probat conata perficere, O. proved to them that to accomplish the undertaking was very easy (to do). Cæs. B. G. 1, 3.—4) Later writers sometimes use the second supine with impersonal predicates without any of these restrictions, employing impersonal verbs or predicate-nouns in place of the regular predicate-adjectives, as: Pudet dictu. Tac. Agr. 32, 3.—Quod dictu scelus est. Prud. Apoth. 822, 1.)

1. Quid est tam jucundum cognitu atque auditu quam sapientibus sententiis gravibusque verbis ornata oratio? Cic. Or. 1, 8.—2. Dubitant (homines) honestumne factu sit an turpe id quod in deliberationem cadit? Cic. Off. 1, 3, 9.—3. O multa dictu gravia, perperam aspera! Cic. Tusc. 3, 3, 5.—4. Postridie homines mane conveniunt (assemble): querunt quid optimum factu sit? Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 27.—5. Culvis facile scitu est quam fuerim miser. Ter. Hec. 3, 1, 15.—6. Hi postquam in una mœnia convenire incredibile dictu est quam facile coaluerint. Sall. Ca. 6, 2.—7. Proccedit in tumultum facilimum visu insidiantibus.—8. Humanus animus cum alio nullo nisi cum ipso Deo, si hoc est fas dictu, comparari potest. Cic. Sen. 5.—9. Si non longius quam quod scitu opus est in narrando procedetur. Cic. Inv. 1, 20.—10. Principes Britannie optimum factu esse duxerunt, frumento comæatque nostros prohibere. Cæs. B. G. 4, 30.—11. Judicium horum hominum difficile factu est non probare. Cic. Off. 1, 21, 71.—12. Omnia hæc visu quam dictu fœdiora, terrorem renovarunt. Liv. 21, 32.—13. O rem quam auditu crudelem tum visu nefariam! Cic. Plane. 41, 99.—14. Annem transitu difficilem pro munimento habuit. Liv. 44, 8.—15. Crebra magis quam digna dictu prælia fecit. Liv. 35, 1.

1 Madwig tries to prove that Cicero thus uses the second supine with the force of an active infinitive, without restricting it to the cases mentioned under No. 1 and No. 2, referring to the following passage: Ad has (societates) non est facile inventu qui descendant, it is not easy to find persons who would descend to such society. Cic. Læl. 17. But this reading, which is not supported by good manuscripts, must be unquestionably rejected. The proper reading is, Non est facile inventus qui descendant, there is not easily any one found who should descend. Rules, especially if containing false grammar, should not be founded on solitary passages of (to say the least) doubtful reading.—2 The subjects of their deliberations.—3 perpeti, to suffer.—4 to flock together.—5 coalescere, to become one body.—6 a hill.—7 insidiari, to be in ambush.—8 but.—9 quod, as far as.—10 in the narrative.—11 stream.

EXERCISES.

1. Babylon was sixty miles in circumference<sup>1</sup>, and was surrounded with walls two hundred feet high and fifty wide.—2. Lay out<sup>2</sup> three plots<sup>3</sup>, each sixty feet long and ten feet wide.—3. The leaves<sup>4</sup> of this tree are about three digits long, and one digit and two-thirds (parts of the As) wide.—4. Let the boards<sup>5</sup> be ten feet long, twelve digits and a half wide, and one and a half thick.—5. The depth of the river was about nine feet.—6. Most renowned are the plane-trees<sup>6</sup> in the walk<sup>7</sup> of the Academy<sup>8</sup> at Athens, which are twenty-three feet high from the root to the lowest<sup>9</sup> branches<sup>10</sup>.—7. This kind of pepper<sup>11</sup> is a small shrub<sup>12</sup> no more than a cubit and a half in height.—8. Turn<sup>13</sup> the furrows<sup>14</sup> about three hands deep.—9. The thickness of the shell<sup>15</sup> is less than one-sixth [of a digit].—10. The garden behind my house measures (esse) four thousand square feet.—11. The surface<sup>16</sup> of the lake contains (esse) about two millions of square feet.—12. The roots of this herb enter the earth less than a cubit in depth.—13. The length of the tongue of the purple fish<sup>17</sup> is one and a half digits (by the adjective).—14. The thickness of the bricks<sup>18</sup> of the sidewalks<sup>19</sup> shall be not less than one third [of a foot] (by the fractions of the As).—15. Thou hast made these tubes<sup>20</sup> too thick; they ought to be thinner by at least<sup>21</sup> one fourth.—16. Terentia Cicero<sup>22</sup> died one hundred and three years old.—17. Nearest to the Gauls live (esse) the Belgians, who border<sup>23</sup> on the sea.—18. Of all stars is Mercury (§ 112) nearest to the sun.—19. I believe that the battle between Cæsar and Ariovistus took place (esse) ten miles nearer to the Rhine than it is generally thought<sup>24</sup>.—20. To have<sup>25</sup> respect for the laws is the mark of a good citizen.—21. This man, believe me, was always most attached to thee.—22. [Those that are] eager for glory are very often neglectful of their [families].—23. He who has no control over his anger ought not to teach youth.—24. Man, because he has (shares in)<sup>26</sup> reason, sees [into] the causes and development<sup>27</sup> of things.—25. When Metellus came to the army, he found<sup>28</sup> that the soldiers were almost unaccustomed to discipline.—26. This will be of the greatest assistance<sup>29</sup> not only to [those that are] unacquainted<sup>30</sup> with Greek literature, but also to the learned.—27. Cæsar was far more popular<sup>31</sup> with his soldiers than Pompey.—28. I cannot find any instrument fit<sup>32</sup> for this work.—29. I shall particularly<sup>33</sup> begin<sup>34</sup> with the subject<sup>35</sup> which will be most adapted<sup>36</sup> to thy age and my authority.—30. This was peculiar to the Roman Senate and people that (ut) they never made peace when they had suffered<sup>37</sup> a defeat from the enemy.—31. The examination<sup>38</sup> of truth<sup>39</sup> belongs<sup>40</sup> especially<sup>41</sup> to man.—32. This question, indeed, is common to all philosophers.—33. Themistocles was most similar in character<sup>42</sup> to Lysander.—34. The forest next<sup>43</sup> to my estate is full of the finest fir-trees<sup>44</sup>.—35. Publius Scipio, the son of the elder<sup>45</sup> Africanus,

1 Circuitus, 4 decl.—2 demetiri.—3 area.—4 folium.—5 assis, m.—6 platanus.—7 ambulatio.—8 Academia.—9 imus.—10 ramus.—11 piper, 3 decl.—12 frutex.—13 convertere.—14 sulcus.—15 testudo.—16 area.—17 purpura.—18 later, 3 decl.—19 ambulatio lateralis (modern Latin).—20 tubulus.—21 not less than.—22 transl. Terentia of Cicero.—23 to border on something, attingere aliquid.—24 existimare.—25 esse.—26 to share, participem esse.—27 progressus (plur.).—28 cognoscere.—29 adjumentum (abstract dative).—30 rudis.—31 acceptus, gratus.—32 idoneus.—33 § 405.—34 ordiri.—35 the subject, id.—36 aptus.—37 accipere.—38 inquisitio atque investigatio.—39 verum.—40 proprium esse.—41 § 405, R. 47.—42 inuoles.—43 finitimus.—44 abies.—45 major.

survived all his sons.— 36. Since the building of the city<sup>1</sup>, the Romans had been contented with the use of [that] water (plur.) which they drew<sup>2</sup> either from the Tiber, or from wells<sup>3</sup>, or from springs<sup>4</sup>.— 37. Curtius voluntarily<sup>5</sup> suffered<sup>6</sup> death from love of his country.— 38. Many commit crimes from eagerness for<sup>7</sup> wealth.— 39. The citizens, when they saw that the enemy had scaled<sup>8</sup> the walls, surrendered (themselves) from fear of harsh treatment<sup>9</sup>.— 40. The ancient Romans considered him most worthy of praise who lived<sup>10</sup> not for himself, but for [his] country.— 41. Cæsar, relying on the bravery and zeal of his [soldiers], did not hesitate to begin<sup>11</sup> the battle.— 42. All the neighboring states were filled with fugitive<sup>12</sup> slaves.— 43. It is reported that Arabia was rich in frankincense<sup>13</sup> and sweet-scenting<sup>14</sup> herbs.— 44. Who can say that he is superior<sup>15</sup> or even a match<sup>16</sup> for this man in eloquence?— 45. There are those who wish to be free and loose<sup>17</sup> from all restraint<sup>18</sup> of the laws.— 46. My oldest brother is six feet and three digits and two-thirds in height.— 47. Who was younger, Cicero or Cæsar?— 48. It makes little difference whether thou art younger or older than the others (sing.), as long as<sup>19</sup> you enjoy better health [than they].— [The following sentences are to be rendered by using second supines.] 49. Nothing is more difficult to ascertain<sup>20</sup> than the thoughts<sup>21</sup> and sentiments<sup>22</sup> of men.— 50. I think that the song of the nightingale<sup>23</sup> is more pleasant to hear than that of any other bird.— 51. It is easy to know from what motives<sup>24</sup> this man has refused to serve<sup>25</sup> under that general.— 52. It is very difficult to tell<sup>26</sup> the real subject of the discussion<sup>27</sup>.— 53. What is sinful<sup>28</sup> to say cannot be righteous<sup>29</sup> to do.

CHAPTER FOURTH.

THE VERBAL ADJECTIVES AND THE PERIPHRASTIC CONJUGATION.

I. FORMATION OF THE VERBAL ADJECTIVES

§ 501. VERBAL ADJECTIVES in a wider sense are all adjectives derived from Verbs; but in a narrower sense only those are called Verbal Adjectives which belong to the regular forms of the verb, and which by certain inflectional endings may generally be derived from any given verb. These are the verbal adjectives in dus and urus, to which must be added the PARTICIPLES of the PRESENT and PERFECT when they are treated as adjectives.

<sup>1</sup> Transl. Since the built (condere) city.— <sup>2</sup> haurire.— <sup>3</sup> puteus.— <sup>4</sup> fons.— <sup>5</sup> ultro.— <sup>6</sup> obire.— <sup>7</sup> aviditas (with gen.).— <sup>8</sup> ascendere.— <sup>9</sup> harsh treatment, sævitia.— <sup>10</sup> subjunct. imperf.— <sup>11</sup> committere.— <sup>12</sup> fugitivus.— <sup>13</sup> tins, 3 decl.— <sup>14</sup> odoratus.— <sup>15</sup> comp. of præstans.— <sup>16</sup> par.— <sup>17</sup> solutus.— <sup>18</sup> vinculum (plur.).— <sup>19</sup> as long as, dum.— <sup>20</sup> cognoscere.— <sup>21</sup> cogitatio.— <sup>22</sup> sententia.— <sup>23</sup> luscinia.— <sup>24</sup> translate: induced by what cause this man, etc.— <sup>25</sup> militare.— <sup>26</sup> dicere.— <sup>27</sup> translate by an indirect question: 'what was that on which it was disputed.'— <sup>28</sup> nefas.— <sup>29</sup> fas.

Rem. 125. All adjectives derived from verbs are, by particular terminations, distinguished from such adjectives as are derived from other parts of speech. These are the terminations idus, ax, uus, bundus, and cundus, which are generally attached to the stem of the PRESENT system (those with a vowel-initial absorbing the vowel-characteristics of the system), and ilis, bilis, lorus, and icius, which generally are attached to the stem of the PERFECT or SUPINE. Each of these terminations is attached to the stems of a limited number of verbs. Thus facere takes only the termination ilis (facilis); timere only the termination idus (timidus); novisse only the termination bilis (nobilis); ferre, the terminations ilis and ax (fertilis and ferax); nasci, only the termination urus (nativus). The termination bundus may be attached to most verb-stems belonging to the first conjugation, but only to a very few of the other conjugations (errabundus, moribundus), and many verbs do not admit any of these particular terminations. But the verbal adjectives properly so called (in dus and urus), aside from a few special exceptions, may be generally formed from any given verb, both active and deponent.

Rem. 126. The verbal adjective in urus (also called the ACTIVE PARTICIPLE OF THE FUTURE<sup>1</sup>), is formed from the supine-stem, and in the deponents from the perfect-stem (see P. I., p. 361 foll.).

|         |   |             |        |   |             |
|---------|---|-------------|--------|---|-------------|
| amāre   | — | amatūrus;   | monēre | — | monitūrus;  |
| legere  | — | lectūrus;   | audire | — | auditūrus;  |
| hortāri | — | hortatūrus; | egredi | — | egressūrus. |

Hence no verb lacking the supine (posse, velle, malle, nolle, meminisse, novisse), or the whole perfect system (as most of the neuter verbs of the second conjugation, as albēre, etc.) can form a verbal adjective in urus.

Rem. 127. Several verbs form SUPINES (perf. participles), but no verbal adjectives in urus in classical prose, as many verbs in uere (sup. ūtam), minuere, suere, induere, imbuere (imbutūrus is quoted by Non.), and several verbs of the first conjugation with consonant stems in the perfect system (P. I., p. 361, 6), as cubare, tonare, velare. Of domare, and lavare, no adjectives in urus occur in classical prose (domitūrus, Virg. G. 4, 102; lacatūrus and lotūrus, poetical or postclassical). The poets and postclassical writers form adjectives in urus of some of these classes of verbs, and of some other verbs, by adding tūrus, sūrus, or itūrus to the PRESENT STEM, as:

| Infinitive Present. | Perf. Participle.     | Verbal Adjective.                |
|---------------------|-----------------------|----------------------------------|
| agnoscere           | agnitus               | agnotūrus (quoted by Priscian).  |
| arguere             | argutus               | argutūrus (quoted by Priscian).  |
| abnuere             | —                     | abnuitūrus (quoted by Priscian). |
| discere             | —                     | discitūrus (quoted by Priscian). |
| luere               | —                     | luitūrus (Cicilian).             |
| nasci               | natus                 | nascitūrus (postclassical).      |
| oriri               | ortus                 | oritūrus (Horace).               |
| parere              | partus                | paritūrus (Sulpic. ad Cic.).     |
| pinsere             | pinus, pistus, pin-   | pinūrus (alleged by Diomedes).   |
|                     | sus (all postclass.). |                                  |
| ruere               | rutus                 | ruitūrus (poetical).             |
| secare              | secus                 | secatūrus (Columella).           |
| sonare              | sonitus               | sonatūrus (Horace).              |

In some verbs this method of formation has classical authority, as frui (perfect stem frug, see P. I., p. 378)—fruitūrus (Cic. Tusc. 3, 17); juvatūrus (Sall. Jug. 47; but adjutūrus, Liv. 34, 37); refrigitūrus (Cic. Att. 12, 18, 1). præstatūrus (the supine being præstatum, both in Cic. and Liv.). Of mori, moritūrus (from the present stem, never mortuūrus) is frequent in classical prose (Liv. 21, 12; 24, 3; 25, 6; Cic. Div. 2, 25; 2, 47; Fat. 6, 12), although the lexicons and KÜHNER assign moritūrus to the poets.

Rem. 128. The verb esse, with its compounds, forms the verbal adjective from its perfect fui (futūrus, defutūrus, profutūrus, etc.). For the infinitive fore and its derived forms, see p. 130, R. 140.

<sup>1</sup> Neither meaning nor form of the adjective in urus warrant the name FUTURE PARTICIPLE. Its meaning (being 'intention' or 'destiny') implies MORE than is contained in the idea of the future tense, and its grammatical FORM belongs to a system entirely foreign to the FUTURE. It is true that since the Augustan age some of the FUNCTIONS of a participle have been assigned to it, but even this was unknown to the old language, and cannot justify the appellation 'participle,' since every descriptive adjective may, in certain circumstances, perform the functions of a participle.

Rem. 129. The verbal adjective in dus (often called the passive participle of the future<sup>1</sup>) is formed from the stem of the present participle, both active and deponent, by changing the genitive ending tis into dus, as:

|                      |                      |                      |
|----------------------|----------------------|----------------------|
| amantis—amandus;     | hortantis—hortandus; | monentis—monendus;   |
| legentis—legendus;   | cupientis—cupiendus; | audientis—audiendus; |
| morientis—moriendus; | tuentis—tuendus;     | euntis—eundus.       |

Those verbs which form no present participles, as esse, posse, nolle, malle, quīre, nequīre, fieri<sup>2</sup>, the perfect verbs meminisse, etc., most impersonal verbs, and the verb rēri, to calculate, do not form a verbal adjective in dus; nor does velle, although it forms a present participle.

Rem. 130. The original stem-ending unt of the present participle in the third and fourth conjugations (§ 324, R. 2) has been preserved in several verbal adjectives in dus, especially in potiundus (which has equal authority with potiendus), and a number of other verbs of which the verbal adjectives are occasionally formed in undus, as dicundus, faciundus, gerundus, ferundus, repetundus. In certain solemn, particularly legal, phrases, the forms in undus are the usual ones, as decemviri legibus ferendis; actio pecuniæ repetundæ. The verbal adjective oriundus, sprung, descended, (construed with the ablative case or with ab or ex) always occurs in this form, but it has a force different from the other verbal adjectives in dus, having assumed the meaning of the participle ortus.

II. THE VERBAL ADJECTIVES AS PREDICATES.

(PERIPHRASTIC CONJUGATION.)

A. THE PERIPHRASTIC CONJUGATION IN GENERAL.

§ 505. The verbal adjectives are used either ATTRIBUTIVELY, or PREDICATIVELY in connection with the copula esse (or vidēri). In either case they assume peculiar forms and meanings which, in many respects, differ from those of ordinary adjectives and participles. The system of their inflection in connection with the copula is called 'PERIPHRASTIC CONJUGATION.'

Rem. 131. The present participles occur as predicate-adjectives only if they have in every respect the meaning and force of ordinary adjectives (§ 496, R. 97), as obedientem esse, to be obedient; appetentem esse, to be eager; sapientem esse, to be wise. They can NEVER be used in the sense of the English progressive form with the present participle and 'to be' (§ 333). But the PERFECT PARTICIPLE, if used predicatively as a verbal adjective, has a peculiar relation to the similar forms of the compound tenses of the passive voice, which require a number of special rules about its periphrastic conjugation. Hence there are to be distinguished: 1) the periphrastic conjugation of the PERFECT PARTICIPLE (PERIPHRASTIC PARTICIPLE); 2) the periphrastic conjugation of the adjective in urus (PERIPHRASTIC FUTURE); 3) the periphrastic conjugation of the adjective in dus (PERIPHRASTIC GERUND and GERUNDIVE).

<sup>1</sup> The verbal adjective in dus has no greater claim to the name 'passive participle of the future' than the adjective in urus to that of 'active participle of the future.' Only in the rarest cases they are to each other in the relation of active and passive, and we can NEVER change the active construction of the one into a passive construction of the other, as is always the case with the other tenses and moods of verbs.—<sup>2</sup> Fieri forms neither a present participle nor a verbal adjective in dus; but the verbal adjective belonging to it, in meaning, is formed from facere (faciendus).

B. THE PERIPHRASTIC PARTICIPLE.

§ 506. The PERIPHRASTIC PARTICIPLE expresses a STATE which is conceived to be produced by some previous act identical with the idea of the verb, as Oppidum munitum est, the town is fortified (i. e., in a state of fortification, from the previous act of fortifying it), but oppidum munitur, the town is fortified (is being fortified). Vires exhaustæ sunt, the strength is exhausted (in a state of exhaustion, from previous acts of exhaustion); but vires exhauriuntur, the strength is being exhausted (the acts producing the exhaustion taking place at the time spoken of).

Rem. 132. The conjugation of the periphrastic participle is the same as that of a predicate-adjective with the copula (§ 64. § 335. § 339, 1):

|              |   |                                     |                    |
|--------------|---|-------------------------------------|--------------------|
| PRESENT      | IND. Armātus sum,                                       | I am armed (have arms);             | SUBJ. armātus sim. |
| IMPERF.      | " armātus eram,   | I was armed (had arms);             | " armātus essem.   |
| PERFECT      | " armātus fui,  | I was (have been) armed (had arms); | " armātus fucri.   |
| PLUPERF.     | " armātus fueram,                                       | I had been armed;                   | " armātus fuisset. |
| FUTURE       | " armātus ero,  | I shall be armed (shall have arms); | " — — —            |
| FUTURE PERF. | " armātus fuero,  | I shall have been armed;            | " — — —            |
|              | PRESENT INFINITIVE, armātum esse, to be armed;          |                                     |                    |
|              | PERFECT INFINITIVE, armātum fuisse, to have been armed. |                                     |                    |

Rem. 133. The form of the periphrastic present is the same as that of the ordinary PERFECT PASSIVE, but both are different in meaning, and armātus sum, if a periphrastic present, means 'I am armed,' but, if it is an ordinary perfect passive, it denotes 'I was (have been) armed.' The connection of the text alone can show in what sense the perfect participle with sum must be taken. Thus the beginning of Cæsar's Gallic war, 'Gallia est omnis divisa in partes trīs,' (all Gaul is divided into three parts) contains a periphrastic present, and not an ordinary perfect passive. But the sentence, 'Post pugnam præda divisa est' (after the battle the booty was divided) contains an ordinary perfect passive.

The student's attention should be directed to both the different rendering of the LATIN 'armātus sum,' and to the different rendering of the English passive into Latin. There are certain verbs in English with whose passives we always connect the meaning of a STATE, as 'the work is finished,' 'the street is paved,' 'they are united.' In rendering such passives into Latin, the periphrastic present must be used, and not the ordinary present of the passive voice: opus finitum est, via strata est, conjuncti sunt (not opus finitur, via sternitur, conjunguntur, which would mean 'the work is being finished, the street is being paved, they are being united [are uniting]'). On the other hand, those English passives by which the action itself is represented as taking place at the time spoken of, are to be expressed only by the ordinary passive, as 'he is called king,' rex appellatur (not appellatus est).

Rem. 134. The IMPERFECT of the periphrastic conjugation of the participle has the form of the ordinary pluperfect passive, and armātus eram may mean 'I was armed' or 'I had been armed.' The same rules which have been given for the present apply also to this form, only that they refer to a time past: Illo tempore oppidum munitum erat, at that time the town was fortified (munitur, would mean 'was being fortified').

Rem. 135. The PERFECT (and the remainder of the tenses, except the first future) of the periphrastic conjugation has a form of its own, not occurring in the ordinary paradigm, (armatus fui, 'I was armed,' or 'I have been armed'). Jani templum bis post Numæ regnum clausum fuit, the temple of Janus was twice closed after Numa's reign. Liv. 1, 19.— Amor ille in me tuus quo semper affectus fuisti, that love of thine towards me by which thou hast always been affected.

¶ In the use of the PERIPHRASTIC PERFECT there are two relations to be noticed: 1) its relation to the ordinary perfect passive; 2) its relation to the periphrastic imperfect. As to the former point, the difference is the same as that of the periphrastic present from the ordinary present passive, the periphrastic perfect indicating a STATE existing at some former time, while the ordinary perfect passive denotes the act AS SUCH. Jani templum bis clausum est (clausum est taken as PERFECT) would simply refer to the two ACTS of closing, after which the temple might have remained in a closed state, or not.

To the second point the general rules on the distinction of the imperfect and perfect tenses must be applied (see p. 302, 305). So far as these rules apply to the periphrastic conjugation, the student will notice here that the IMPERFECT is used:

1. If the state described is represented as a HABIT, as 'Athenienses litteris et artibus dediti erant (not fuerunt), the Athenians were devoted to literature and arts.

2. If the state described is represented to have continued WHEN ANOTHER EVENT TOOK PLACE, as '(Cæsar's adventu) ripa erat acutis sudibus prefixis munita', At Cæsar's arrival the shore was fortified by pointed posts fastened in front of it. Cæs. B. G. 5, 18.

The PERFECT, without referring to any other event, simply represents the state to have existed during some period before the time of the SPEAKER, i. e., before the time at which the sentence was written or uttered.

Rem. 136. The pluperfect of the periphrastic participle represents the action as a STATE which had PASSED BEFORE another event happened: Eos qui in opere occupati fuerant querere instituit, he began to examine those who had been occupied in the work.

¶ In this sentence the periphrastic pluperfect occupati fuerant expresses a STATE which formally had existed, but did no longer exist when another event (the examining) took place. The ordinary pluperfect occupati erant would be improper here, because it might be taken for a periphrastic IMPERFECT, which would imply that the workmen were still employed in the work when the examining took place. To avoid such ambiguities the periphrastic pluperfect is not rarely used, when not a state, but a momentary action is referred to, as: 'Arx Crotōnis, situ tantum naturali quondam munita, postea et muro cincta est, quā ab Dionysio per dolum fuerat capta, the Croton Castle, formerly fortified only by its natural site, was afterwards enclosed with a wall where it had been captured by Dionysius. Liv. 24, 3. Thus Liv. 29, 6 and often.

Rem. 137. The two FUTURES of the periphrastic conjugation of the participle, which are of very rare occurrence, and of which the future-present has the same form as the ordinary future-perfect, are used of future STATES, the FUTURE-PERFECT denoting a state on which another future state is made dependent, as Quibus rebus domus tua instructa fuerit, domus erit ornata mea, my house will be provided with the same things with which thy house will have been furnished.

¶ The future-perfect of the periphrastic conjugation is hardly ever found without another sentence in which a future-present is contained. But future-presents of the periphrastic conjugation are oftener used alone.

Rem. 138. The infinitives of the periphrastic conjugation are subject to the rules of predicate-adjectives, and the use of the tense, if they are predicate-infinitives in infinitive clauses, is determined by the rule in § 390, as: Scribit Pompejum circumvallatum esse, he writes that Pompey is locked up within the walls. Scriptum Pompejum circumvallatum esse, he wrote that Pompey was locked up. Scriptum Pompejum circumvallatum fuisse, he wrote that Pompey had been locked up.

¶ The subjunctives of the periphrastic conjugation are regulated by the rules on the consecution of tenses, the same as the ordinary verb.

1. Natio<sup>1</sup> est omnis Gallorum admodum dedita<sup>2</sup> religionibus<sup>3</sup>, atque ob eam causam qui sunt affecti<sup>4</sup> gravioribus morbis administris Druidibus<sup>5</sup> utuntur. Cæs. B. G. 6, 16.— 2. Bestiæ aliæ coriis<sup>6</sup> tectæ sunt, aliæ villis<sup>6</sup> vestitæ. Cic. Nat. D. 2, 47.— 3. Ita ejus confusa<sup>7</sup> est oratio, ita perturbata<sup>8</sup> ut nihil sit primum, nihil secundum. Cic. Or. 3, 13.— 4. Multa consuetudine<sup>9</sup> conjuncti inter nos sumus. Cic. Att. 1, 16.— 5. Porticus tota patet, et columnæ politæ sunt<sup>10</sup>. Cic. Q. Fr. 3, 1, 1.— 6. Oculi nimis arguti<sup>11</sup> quemadmodum<sup>12</sup> animo aff-cti sumus loquuntur. Cic. Off. 3, 5.— 7. Non coronâ<sup>13</sup> consessus<sup>14</sup> vester cinctus<sup>15</sup> est, ut solēbat; non usitatâ frequentia<sup>16</sup> stipendi<sup>17</sup> sumus. Cic. Mil. 1, 1.— 8. Cæsar animadvertit<sup>18</sup> collem qui ab hostibus tenebatur nudatum<sup>19</sup> (esse) hominibus, Cæs. B. G. 7, 44.— 9. Quamquam (Antoni) non adest, tamen sic (so) animati es<sup>20</sup> debētis ut si<sup>21</sup> adesset. Cic. Phil. 9, 5.— 9. Jubes eum mihi esse aff-ctum<sup>22</sup> tamquam<sup>23</sup> magistro. Cic. Qu. Fr. 3, 1, 6.— 10. Venetorum<sup>24</sup> naves ad hunc modum factæ armatæque erant. Cæs. B. G. 3, 13.— 11. Luce primâ<sup>25</sup> Equi jam circumvallati<sup>26</sup> ab dictatore erant. Liv. 3, 28.— 12. Detestabilis<sup>27</sup> est istorum immanitas<sup>28</sup> qui in exitio patriæ occupati<sup>29</sup> et sunt et fuerunt. Cic. Off. 1, 17.— 13. Te vero moneo ut omnem gloriam ad quam a pueritia<sup>30</sup> inflammatus<sup>31</sup> fuisti, omni curâ atque industria consequare<sup>32</sup>. Cic. Fam. 1, 7, 9.— 14. Ager qui neque villam<sup>33</sup> habuit neque ex ulla parte fuit cultus, nunc est cultissimus cum optimâ villâ. Cic. Rosc. Com. 12.— 15. Tibi autem multo notior<sup>34</sup> meus in te animus esset, si hoc tempore omni quo disjuncti<sup>35</sup> fuimus, Romæ fuissēmus. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 1.— 16. Constat<sup>36</sup> Mithridatis copias illo tempore omnibus rebus ornatas<sup>37</sup> atque instructas<sup>38</sup> fuisse. Cic. Man. 8, 20.— 17. Arma, quæ fixa<sup>39</sup> in parietibus fuerant, humi<sup>40</sup> inventa sunt. Cic. Div. 1, 34.— 18. Lyeortas, quia Philopemēnis, auctoris omnium quæ Lacedæmone<sup>41</sup> facta fuerant, factionis<sup>42</sup> erat, ita respondit. Liv. 39, 35.— 19. Quocirca<sup>43</sup> sapiens eodem modo erit affectus erga amicum quo<sup>44</sup> in se ipsum. Cic. Fin. 1, 20.— 20. Non ista quidem erunt meliōra, sed certe condita<sup>45</sup> jucundius. Cic. Mur. 31.— 21. Quod tibi fuerit persuasum huic erit persuasum, quod tibi fuerit probatum huic erit probatum. Cic. Rosc. Com. 1.

C. THE PERIPHRASTIC FUTURE.

§ 507. The PERIPHRASTIC FUTURE contains the combination of two ideas, namely, 1) that of the VERB, which is represented as a FUTURE act (in the active voice), being expressed by the verbal adjective in urus; and 2) that of the CONCEPTION of this act, which is represented as different in time from the former, being expressed by all the various forms of the copula esse. The usual English equivalents of the periphrastic future are objective phrases with 'I am (was, etc.) going to,' 'I am about to,' 'I am to,' and sometimes the future tense or potential mood with 'would': Profecturus sum, I am going to depart, am about to depart, am to depart.

Rem. 139. While in the ordinary future the verbal idea is represented as a future one in regard to the SPEAKER's time, the periphrastic future represents the verbal idea as future

<sup>1</sup> Nation.— <sup>2</sup> dedere, to give, to devote.— <sup>3</sup> religious rites.— <sup>4</sup> literally, use the Druids as ministers, i. e., make use of their ministry (agency, interposition).— <sup>5</sup> corium, skin, hide.— <sup>6</sup> villus, bristle, shaggy hair.— <sup>7</sup> confundere, to confuse.— <sup>8</sup> perturbare, to disturb, to entangle.— <sup>9</sup> great intimacy.— <sup>10</sup> polire, to polish.— <sup>11</sup> bright.— <sup>12</sup> how, as.— <sup>13</sup> the circle of the audience.— <sup>14</sup> platform.— <sup>15</sup> to surround.— <sup>16</sup> by the usual throng.— <sup>17</sup> to crowd.— <sup>18</sup> perceived.— <sup>19</sup> nudare, to denude.— <sup>20</sup> animare, to animate.— <sup>21</sup> as if.— <sup>22</sup> affigere, to fasten on.— <sup>23</sup> as if.— <sup>24</sup> the Veneti, a Gallic tribe.— <sup>25</sup> at daybreak.— <sup>26</sup> circumvallare, to encircle, to enclose.— <sup>27</sup> abominable.— <sup>28</sup> brutality.— <sup>29</sup> occupare, to engage.— <sup>30</sup> boyhood.— <sup>31</sup> inflammare, to inflame.— <sup>32</sup> consequi, to reach, to pursue.— <sup>33</sup> a dwelling (in the country).— <sup>34</sup> notus, known.— <sup>35</sup> disjungere, to separate.— <sup>36</sup> it is known.— <sup>37</sup> ornare, to provide.— <sup>38</sup> instruere, to furnish.— <sup>39</sup> figere, to fix, to fasten.— <sup>40</sup> on the ground.— <sup>41</sup> Nom. Lacedæmon, Greek 3 decl.— <sup>42</sup> faction.— <sup>43</sup> therefore.— <sup>44</sup> as.— <sup>45</sup> condire, to spice.

in regard to the time of the SUBJECT, but separates from it the CONCEPTION of the act, referring its time to that of the SPEAKER. The sentence, 'Gajus is going to depart,' represents the act of DEPARTING as FUTURE in regard to the subject Gajus, but indicates at the same time that the conception of the act is PRESENT in regard to the SPEAKER's time. In the sentence, 'Gajus was going to depart,' the conception of the act of departing is represented as a PAST one in regard to the SPEAKER's time. Thus in Latin, in the sentence, 'Gajus profecturus est (erat),' the verbal adjective in urus expresses that the time of departing is future in regard to the SUBJECT Gajus, and the copula est (erat) indicates that the conception of the act is a present or a past one in regard to the SPEAKER.

The periphrastic future is conjugated after the following scheme:

|            |      |   |       |                     |
|------------|------|---|-------|---------------------|
| PRESENT    | IND. | scripturus sum, I am going to write, am about to write.           | SUBJ. | scripturus sim.     |
| IMPERFECT  | "    | scripturus eram, I was going (was about, etc.) to write.          | "     | scripturus essem.   |
| PERFECT    | "    | scripturus fui, I was going, etc., to write (would have written). | "     | scripturus fuero.   |
| PLUPERFECT | "    | scripturus fueram, I had been going, etc., to write.              | "     | scripturus fuisset. |
| FUT. PRES. | "    | scripturus ero, I shall be going, etc., to write.                 | —     | —                   |
| FUT. PERF. | "    | scripturus fuero, I shall have been about, etc., to write.        | —     | —                   |

PRESENT INFINITIVE. Scripturus esse, that I am (was) going to write (will write).

PERFECT INFINITIVE. Scripturus fuisse, that I would have written.

Rem. 140. The copula esse, and the compounds of esse as an independent verb, in the periphrastic future, take the form futurus sum (eram, fui, etc.), I am going to be, am to be, etc. (profecturus sum, I am going to benefit). These forms of the copula are mostly used with predicate-adjectives and nouns, but also with such completing predicates as may be connected with the copula (§ 464 foll.), and as independent verbs, in the meaning 'to exist, to be the case,' etc. (§ 470), as Sapiens futurus sum, I am going to be wise; sapiens futurus eram, etc.; hoc futurum est ei, etc., this will be the case if, etc. Instead of the present infinitive futurus esse, there is a collateral form fore, (afore, prefore, etc.), which, in connection with predicate-adjectives and nouns, is more usual than the regular form, futurus esse, as Spero eos contentos fore, I hope they will be satisfied. Instead of the imperfect subjunctive futurus essem, esses, etc., there are also the collateral forms forem, foret, forent (no foremus, foretis), which Sallust, Livy, and later writers often use in the meaning of essem, esses, etc., as quot millia capta forent, how many thousands had been captured. Liv. 45, 2.

Rem. 141. The PRESENT TENSE of the periphrastic future represents an act, FUTURE to the SUBJECT, as conceived at a time PRESENT to the SPEAKER. The present conception is represented either 1) as an INTENTION (resolution, expectation) by the activity of the SUBJECT, or as an ANTICIPATION of what is to be. This anticipation may be 2) a merely EXTERNAL one (the IMPENDING of something), or 3) a LOGICAL one (PRESUPPOSITION), representing the future act as a RESULT of some present activity. For the first case we generally use the English equivalents, 'I intend to', 'I am going to', 'I am resolved upon', 'I wish, expect to'. (See examples 1-7.) For the second case the usual equivalents are 'I am about to', 'I am on the point of', 'I am to', 'I am going to'. (Ex. 8-14.) For the third case there are the equivalents 'I am to', 'I am expected to', 'I want to', (Ex. 15-20); as:

(a) Se ab officio illo abdicaturus est, he intends (is going, etc.) to resign this position.
 — (b) Navis quae jam in portum invecitura est, a ship that is about to (on the point of, etc.) enter the port. — (c) Instrumentum quo usurus sum, ad laborem accommodatum esse oportet, an instrument which I am (expected) to use must be fit for the work.

For the copula esse, the passive videri, to seem, may be substituted to express that the future act seems to be conceived in a certain manner, as: Profecturus videris, thou seemest to be on the point of departure (it seems that you are about to depart). But the periphrastic future with videri may also be considered as a construction of the nominative with the infinitive. (See Rem. 147.)

1. Nihil de eorum sententiâ dicturus sum qui turpissimam servitutem<sup>1</sup> deditiōnis<sup>2</sup> nomine appellant. Cæs. B. G. 7, 77. — 2. Qui reipublicae profuturi sunt, duo illa Platōnis præcepta teneant. Cic. Off. 1, 25. — 3. Viris nostras cum rebus quas tentaturi sumus comparare oportet. Sen. Tranq. 5. — 4. Injuriam qui facturus est jam facit. Sen. Ira 1, 1. — 5. Quotusquisque (§ 261, R. 16) tam patiens est, ut velit discere quod in usu non sit habiturus? Plin. Ep. 8, 14, 3. — 6. A capessentibus<sup>3</sup> rempublicam adhibeatur tranquillitas animi, siquidem<sup>4</sup> nec anxii<sup>5</sup> futuri sunt, et cum dignitate victuri<sup>6</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 21. — 7. Facite quod vobis libet, daturus non sum amplius. Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 19. — 8. Bellum scripturus sum quod Populus Romānus cum Jugurthā gessit. Sall. Jug. 5. — 9. Quum exāmen<sup>7</sup> apium exilurum est, solent prætere<sup>8</sup> signa; quum jam evolutura sunt<sup>9</sup>, consonant<sup>10</sup> vehementer. Varro R. R. 3, 16. — 10. Catuli<sup>11</sup> qui jam dispecturi sunt<sup>12</sup>, cæci æque et<sup>13</sup> ei sunt qui modo<sup>14</sup> nati. Cic. Fin. 4, 23. — 11. Placet, quoniam<sup>15</sup> omnis disputatio<sup>16</sup> de officio futura est, antea defini quid sit officium. Cic. Off. 1, 2. — 12. Si unā<sup>17</sup> interiturus est animus cum corpore, vos tamen memoriam nostri pie inviolatēque<sup>18</sup> servabit. Cic. Sen. 22. — 13. Quid timeam si aut non miser post mortem, aut beatus etiam futurus sum? Cic. Sen. 19. — 14. Cum tali hoste pugnaturi estis, milites; reliquias extremas hostium, non hostem habetis. Liv. 21, 40. — 15. Tu vero, Varro, bene meriturus mihi videris de (for) tuis civibus, si eos auxeris<sup>19</sup> copiā verborum. Cic. Acad. 1, 7. — 16. Quia non labōro<sup>20</sup> quam valde ea quæ dico probaturus sim, eo minus<sup>21</sup> conturbor. Cic. Fam. 1, 7. — 17. Cum his versare<sup>22</sup> qui te meliorem facturi sunt, eos admitte quos tu potes facere meliores. Sen. Ep. 7. — 18. Quis bonus dubitat<sup>23</sup> pro patriā mortem oppetere<sup>24</sup>, si ei sit profuturus? Cic. Off. 1, 17. — 19. Meā quidem sententiā paci quæ nihil habitura sit insidiarum<sup>25</sup> semper consulere oportet. Cic. Off. 1, 11. — 20. Respersas<sup>26</sup> manus sanguine paterno iudices videant oportet, si tantum facinus tam immanē<sup>27</sup> credituri sunt. Cic. Rosc. Am. 24.

Rem. 142. The periphrastic future, being subject to the law of consecution (§ 349), requires its subjunctive mood to be in the IMPERFECT if the principal predicate is one of the past tenses.

1. Orgetorix perfacile esse probavit<sup>28</sup>, conata<sup>29</sup> illa perficere, quod ipse suæ civitatis imperium obtenturus esset. Cæs. B. G. 1, 3. — 2. Civitates illas reddi mihi æquum censuam<sup>30</sup>, non quia magna accessio<sup>31</sup> ea regni futura esset, sed quia, etc. Liv. 39, 38. — 3. Lacedæmonii, Philippo minitante per litteras, se omnia quæ conarentur prohibitorum<sup>32</sup>, quæsiiverunt num se etiam esset mori prohibitorum? Cic. Tusc. 5, 42. — 4. Quævis fuisse Priamo, si ab adolescentiâ scisset, quos eventus senectutis esset habiturus? Cic. Div. 2, 22.

Rem. 143. The IMPERFECT and PERFECT tenses of the periphrastic future are used 1) to represent an event which is FUTURE in regard to the SUBJECT, as having been conceived or impending at a time PAST to the SPEAKER, as Athenienses ducem classis ejus quam in Siciliam erant missuri creaverunt Alcibiadem, the Athenians elected Alcibiades leader of the fleet which they were about to send to Sicily. — Nunc jam quod creditur is fui omne credidi, now I have entrusted all (to thee) that I was going to entrust. Plaut. Most. 2, 2. — 2) as a collateral form of the ordinary pluperfect subjunctive of hypothetical clauses (§ 350), denoting that an event WOULD have taken place if (or if not) another event had happened, as Regem occisurus fui si in sententiā mansisset, I would have killed the king if (in the case that) he had retained his opinion. — Si agendo armentum in speluncam compulisset, ipsa vestigia quærentem dominum eo deductura erant, if he had taken the herd by driving into the cavern, the

1 slavery. — 2 deditio. — 3 rempublicam capessere, to aspire to public offices. — 4 if else. — 5 full of cares. — 6 Both vivere and vincere form the verbal adjective victurus. The connection must decide which of the two verbs is meant. — 7 swarm. — 8 precede. — 9 to fly out. — 10 to make a strong noise. — 11 a young dog. — 12 dispicere, to see. — 13 æque et, the same as. — 14 just. — 15 since. — 16 discussion. — 17 together. — 18 untarnished. — 19 aliquem copiā verborum augere, to increase one's stock (store) of words. — 20 to care. — 21 the less. — 22 to associate. — 23 to hesitate. — 24 to seek, to meet. — 25 secret treachery. — 26 respersus, dripping. — 27 enormous. — 28 In the text of Cæsar stands probat as 'historical present' with the force of probavit. — 29 conatum, an undertaking. — 30 to deem. — 31 accession. — 32 that he would prohibit.

in regard to the time of the SUBJECT, but separates from it the CONCEPTION of the act, referring its time to that of the SPEAKER. The sentence, 'Gajus is going to depart,' represents the act of DEPARTING as FUTURE in regard to the subject Gajus, but indicates at the same time that the conception of the act is PRESENT in regard to the SPEAKER's time. In the sentence, 'Gajus was going to depart,' the conception of the act of departing is represented as a PAST one in regard to the SPEAKER's time. Thus in Latin, in the sentence, 'Gajus profecturus est (erat),' the verbal adjective in urus expresses that the time of departing is future in regard to the SUBJECT Gajus, and the copula est (erat) indicates that the conception of the act is a present or a past one in regard to the SPEAKER.

The periphrastic future is conjugated after the following scheme:

|            |      |  |       |                     |
|------------|------|--|-------|---------------------|
| PRESENT    | IND. | scripturus sum, I am going to write, am about to write, am to write. | SUBJ. | scripturus sim.     |
| IMPERFECT  | "    | scripturus eram, I was going (was about, etc.) to write.             | "     | scripturus essem.   |
| PERFECT    | "    | scripturus fui, I was going, etc., to write (would have written).    | "     | scripturus fuierim. |
| PLUPERFECT | "    | scripturus fueram, I had been going, etc., to write.                 | "     | scripturus fuissem. |
| FUT. PRES. | "    | scripturus ero, I shall be going, etc., to write.                    | —     | —                   |
| FUT. PERF. | "    | scripturus fuero, I shall have been about, etc., to write.           | —     | —                   |

PRESENT INFINITIVE. Scripturum esse, that I am (was) going to write (will write).
PERFECT INFINITIVE. Scripturum fuisse, that I would have written.

Rem. 140. The copula esse, and the compounds of esse as an independent verb, in the periphrastic future, take the form futurus sum (eram, fui, etc.), I am going to be, am to be, etc. (profuturus sum, I am going to benefit). These forms of the copula are mostly used with predicate-adjectives and nouns, but also with such completing predicates as may be connected with the copula (§ 464 foll.), and as independent verbs, in the meaning 'to exist, to be the case,' etc. (§ 470), as Sapiens futurus sum, I am going to be wise; sapiens futurus eram, etc.; hoc futurum est, etc., this will be the case if, etc. Instead of the present infinitive futurum esse, there is a collateral form fore, (a fore, praefore, etc.), which, in connection with predicate-adjectives and nouns, is more usual than the regular form, futurum esse, as Spero eos contentos fore, I hope they will be satisfied. Instead of the imperfect subjunctive futurus essem, esses, etc., there are also the collateral forms forem, fores, foret, forent (no foremus, foretis), which Sallust, Livy, and later writers often use in the meaning of essem, esses, etc., as quot milia capta forent, how many thousands had been captured. Liv. 45, 2.

Rem. 141. The PRESENT TENSE of the periphrastic future represents an act, FUTURE to the SUBJECT, as conceived at a time PRESENT to the SPEAKER. The present conception is represented either 1) as an INTENTION (resolution, expectation) by the activity of the SUBJECT, or as an ANTICIPATION of what is to be. This anticipation may be 2) a merely EXTERNAL one (the IMPENDING of something), or 3) a LOGICAL one (PRE-SUPPOSITION), representing the future act as a RESULT of some present activity. For the first case we generally use the English equivalents, 'I intend to', 'I am going to', 'I am resolved upon', 'I wish, expect to'. (See examples 1-7.) For the second case the usual equivalents are 'I am about to', 'I am on the point of', 'I am to', 'I am going to'. (Ex. 8-14.) For the third case there are the equivalents 'I am to', 'I am expected to', 'I want to', (Ex. 15-20); as:

- (a) Se ab officio illo abdicaturus est, he intends (is going, etc.) to resign this position.
(b) Navis quae jam in portum invecitura est, a ship that is about to (on the point of, etc.) enter the port.
(c) Instrumentum quo usus sum, ad laborem accommodatum esse oportet, an instrument which I am (expected) to use must be fit for the work.

For the copula esse, the passive videri, to seem, may be substituted to express that the future act seems to be conceived in a certain manner, as: Profecturus vidēris, thou seemest to be on the point of departure (it seems that you are about to depart). But the periphrastic future with videri may also be considered as a construction of the nominative with the infinitive. (See Rem. 147.)

1. Nihil de eorum sententiā dicturus sum qui turpissimam servitutem<sup>1</sup> deditiōnis<sup>2</sup> nomine appellant. Cæs. B. G. 7, 77.— 2. Qui reipublicae praefuturi sunt, duo illa Platonis praecepta teneant. Cic. Off. 1, 25.— 3. Viris nostras cum rebus quas tentaturi sumus comparare oportet. Sen. Tranq. 5.— 4. Injuriam qui facturus est jam facit. Sen. Ira 1, 1.— 5. Quotusquisque (§ 261, R. 16) tam patiens est, ut velit discere quod in usu non sit habiturus? Plin. Ep. 8, 14, 3.— 6. A capessentibus<sup>3</sup> rempublicam adhibeatur tranquillitas animi, siquidem<sup>4</sup> nec anxii<sup>5</sup> futuri sunt, et cum dignitate victuri<sup>6</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 21.— 7. Facite quod vobis libet, daturus non sum amplius. Cic. Verr. 2, 2, 19.— 8. Bellum scripturus sum quod Populus Romanus cum Jugurtha gessit. Sall. Jug. 5.— 9. Quum examen<sup>7</sup> apium exiturum est, solent praefere<sup>8</sup> signa; quum jam evoluturae sunt<sup>9</sup>, consonant<sup>10</sup> vehementer. Varro R. R. 3, 16.— 10. Catuli<sup>11</sup> qui jam dispecturi sunt<sup>12</sup>, caeci aequae<sup>13</sup> ei sunt qui modo<sup>14</sup> nati. Cic. Fin. 4, 23.— 11. Placet, quoniam<sup>15</sup> omnis disputatio<sup>16</sup> de officio futura est, antea definiri quid sit officium. Cic. Off. 1, 2.— 12. Si unā<sup>17</sup> interiturus est animus cum corpore, vos tamen memoriam nostri pie inviolatēque<sup>18</sup> servabitis. Cic. Sen. 22.— 13. Quid timeam si aut non miser post mortem, aut beatus etiam futurus sum? Cic. Sen. 19.— 14. Cum tali hoste pugnaturi estis, milites; reliquias extrēmas hostium, non hostem habetis. Liv. 21, 40.— 15. Tu vero, Varro, bene meritis mihi vidēris de (for) tuis civibus, si eos auxeris<sup>19</sup> copia verborum. Cic. Acad. 1, 7.— 16. Quia non labōro<sup>20</sup> quam valde ea quae dico probaturus sim, eo minus<sup>21</sup> conturbor. Cic. Fam. 1, 7.— 17. Cum his versare<sup>22</sup> qui te meliorem facturi sunt, eos admitte quos tu potes facere meliores. Sen. Ep. 7.— 18. Quis bonus dubitat<sup>23</sup> pro patriā mortem oppetere<sup>24</sup>, si ei sit profuturus? Cic. Off. 1, 17.— 19. Meū quidem sententiā paci quae nihil habitura sit insidiarum<sup>25</sup> semper consulere oportet. Cic. Off. 1, 11.— 20. Respersas<sup>26</sup> manus sanguine paterno iudices videant oportet, si tantum facinus tam immae<sup>27</sup> credituri sunt. Cic. Rosc. Am. 24.

Rem. 142. The periphrastic future, being subject to the law of consecution (§ 349), requires its subjunctive mood to be in the IMPERFECT if the principal predicate is one of the past tenses.

1. Orgetorix perfacile esse probavit<sup>28</sup>, conata<sup>29</sup> illa perficere, quod ipse suae civitatis imperium obtenturus esset. Cæs. B. G. 1, 3.— 2. Civitates illas reddi mihi aequum censui<sup>30</sup>, non quia magna accessio<sup>31</sup> ea regni futura esset, sed quia, etc. Liv. 39, 38.— 3. Lacedaemonii. Philippo minitante per litteras, se omnia quae conarentur prohibitorum<sup>32</sup>, quaeviserunt num se etiam esset mori prohibitorum? Cic. Tusc. 5, 42.— 4. Quae-vita fuisset Priamo, si ab adolescentiā scisset, quos eventus senectutis esset habiturus? Cic. Div. 2, 22.

Rem. 143. The IMPERFECT and PERFECT tenses of the periphrastic future are used 1) to represent an event which is FUTURE in regard to the SUBJECT, as having been conceived or impending at a time PAST to the SPEAKER, as Athenienses ducem classis ejus quam in Siciliam erant missuri, creaverunt Alcibiadem, the Athenians elected Alcibiades leader of the fleet which they were about to send to Sicily.—Nunc jam quod crediturus fui omne credidi, now I have entrusted all (to thee) that I was going to entrust. Plaut. Most. 2, 2.— 2) as a collateral form of the ordinary pluperfect subjunctive of hypothetical clauses (§ 350), denoting that an event WOULD have taken place if (or if not) another event had happened, as Regem occisurus fui si in sententiā mansisset, I would have killed the king if (in the case that) he had retained his opinion.—Si agendo armentum in speluncam compulisset, ipsa vestigia quarentem dominum eo deductura erant, if he had taken the herd by driving into the cavern, the very tracks would have led thither the owner when searching. Liv. 1, 7.

<sup>1</sup> slavery.— <sup>2</sup> deditio.— <sup>3</sup> rempublicam capessere, to aspire to public offices.— <sup>4</sup> if else.— <sup>5</sup> full of cares.— <sup>6</sup> Both vivere and vincere form the verbal adjective victurus. The connection must decide which of the two verbs is meant.— <sup>7</sup> swarm.— <sup>8</sup> precede.— <sup>9</sup> to fly out.— <sup>10</sup> to make a strong noise.— <sup>11</sup> a young dog.— <sup>12</sup> dispicere, to see.— <sup>13</sup> aequae et, the same as.— <sup>14</sup> just.— <sup>15</sup> since.— <sup>16</sup> discussion.— <sup>17</sup> together.— <sup>18</sup> untarnished.— <sup>19</sup> dignem copia verborum augere, to increase one's stock (store) of words.— <sup>20</sup> to care.— <sup>21</sup> the less.— <sup>22</sup> to associate.— <sup>23</sup> to hesitate.— <sup>24</sup> to seek, to meet.— <sup>25</sup> secret treachery.— <sup>26</sup> respersus, dripping.— <sup>27</sup> enormous.— <sup>28</sup> In the text of Caesar stands probat as 'historical present' with the force of probavit.— <sup>29</sup> conatum, an undertaking.— <sup>30</sup> to deem.— <sup>31</sup> accession.— <sup>32</sup> that he would prohibit.

Rem. 144. In their ordinary non-hypothetical use, perfect and imperfect are distinguished according to the general rules on tenses (p. 305 foll.). Generally the IMPERFECT of the periphrastic future represents the contemplation or impendence of an action as definitely continuing at a given past time: Postulabat P. Ciceronem, quod et ad aedilem petitoris erat (who, at that time, was contemplating to become also a candidate for the aedileship). Liv. 25, 5. Ex. 1-3, 6. So when the intended act is represented as indefinitely repeated (Ex. 4).—But the PERFECT represents the contemplation or impending as a completed past event without reference to any particular time: Quid horum opus fuit suscipi, si urbem relicturni fuimus? ('if we were to leave the city'; not merely referring to the time spoken of). Liv. 5, 52. Ex. 5, 7-9. In Ex. 6 the two tenses are significantly contrasted with each other: consociatūri fuistis, without reference to contemporary action; habituari eritis referring to the time of consociatūri.

The hypothetical use of the preterite tenses of the periphrastic future arose from frequently representing events in contemplation as not coming to pass: Comitia, quod res armis prohiberetur erat, sustulerunt; They revoked the assembly, which the act would have been going to prevent by arms (i. e. he did not prevent it, but would have done so if they had not been revoked). Liv. 25, 4. If so conceived, the IMPERFECT represents 1) the action as really intended or impending, and that it would have come to pass but for some other event: Offerendum ultra rati quod amissuri erant, thinking they should voluntarily offer what they were going to lose, and what they would have lost had they not offered it. Liv. 1, 17. See Ex. 10, 11, and p. 329, Obs. 27.—2) that an action would have been impeding under an assumed, but not real, condition, as in Liv. 1, 17, quoted R. F. E. and Ex. 14.—The PERFECT denotes what would have happened under such a condition, being not distinguished from an ordinary hypothetical pluperfect subjunctive: Quod facturi fuimus (=fecissemus) si aedes nostra deflagrasset, which we would have done if our houses had burned down. Liv. 5, 53. See Ex. 13, 15, 16.—Sometimes the pluperfect subjunctive of the periphrastic future occurs with a similar force, but combining the hypothetical conception with that of a DESTINY (Ex. 17), or that of a contemplated action (Ex. 19).

Rem. 145. If a hypothetical sentence referring to the past is made dependent on another predicate requiring the SUBJUNCTIVE (see the Index), the hypothetical principal predicate generally assumes the form of a periphrastic future in the subjunctive effect of the perfect or pluperfect, in lieu of an ordinary pluperfect subjunctive (see p. 443, Obs. 3, 4). The perfect is used if the governing predicate is a present: Assiduas, quod Philippus, a virisset, facturus fuerit; we do not know what Phil. would have done if he had been living. Liv. 41, 24 (Ex. 20, 22). If the governing predicate is in a past tense, the pluperfect subjunctive is used according to the law of consecution: Seditiosi coram animam, quam nam modo tolerabilis futura Etruria fuisset, si quid in Samnio adversa evenisset (how Etruria would have been tolerable if etc.). Liv. 10, 45.—Admonente fortuna, quid, si hostem habuissemus, casurum fuisset. Ib. 38, 46. See Ex. 18, and the passages quoted pp. 443 and 444. If, however, the hypothetical sentence is a modal clause (introduced by ut, 'so that', quin, 'that', 'but that', or an equivalent relative), or in the instance mentioned p. 419, Obs. 7, the perfect subjunctive is used instead of a pluperfect, setting aside the law of consecution, as: Ea res tantum tumultum prebuit ut, nisi castra extra urbem fuissent, effusura se omnis multitudo fuerit. Liv. 26, 10.—Si vita suppetisset, haud dubium fuit quin eum in possessione regni relicturnus fuerit. Ib. 40, 56.—(Dixit). Cum illam, cuius erisilium ruina urbis seculura fuerit, damnari se a civibus passum esse. Ib. 25, 4. See Ex. 23, and p. 444.—For the use of the subjunctive of the periphrastic future with the force of a future subjunctive see p. 448 foll.

1. Helvetii frumentum omne, praeterquam quod secum portatūri erant, combūrun<sup>1</sup>. Caes. B. G. 1, 5.—2. Quo die id plebis concilium futurum fuerat, consul clam in Siciliam abiit. Liv. 27, 5.—3. Legati Darii petierunt a Carthaginiensibus auxilia adversus Graeciam, cui illatūrus bellum Darius erat. Sen. Clem. 1, 18.—4. Qui occisurus fratrem fuit, habeat iratos paternos deos; qui peritūrus fraterno scelere fuit, perfugium in patris misericordia habeat. Liv. 40, 10.—5. Quod consilium vestrum fuerit scire velim. Cum hostibus nostris consilia communicastis et arma consociatūri fuistis. Seditiosi illi qui Vibellium sequebantur, Rhegium urbem opulentam, habituari perpetuam sedem erant, nec populum nec socios Populi Romani ultro (on their part) lacessituri. Suetonemne vos domicilium habituari eratis? Ubi si vos relinquerem, deos implorare debebatis, quod non rediretis domum. Viam consilii scelerati exsequi volo; Hispaniam provinciam

1 Except.—2 to burn.—3 to throw before.—4 murena, a murena, a large fish, a favorite delicacy of the ancients.—5 brotherly; here used instead of fratris.—6 Scipio addresses a band of soldiers of the army in Spain who had risen in arms against their officers, under the lead of some demagogues.—7 consilia communicare, to treat.—8 arma consociare, to make common cause.—9 Scipio refers to another military insurrection under Vibellius, a military tribune.—10 Suero, a small Spanish town.—11 domicile.—12 criminal.—13 to trace up.

Populo Romano erepturi eratis. Liv. 28, 29.—7. Veniebatis igitur in Africam, provinciam maxime infestam. Quero quid facturi fuistis? Quamquam quid facturi fueritis dubitem<sup>2</sup> quum videam quid feceritis? Cic. Lig. 8.—8. Furium et Aemilium, si tribuni me triumphare prohiberent, testis (witness) citatūrus fui rerum a me gestarum. Liv. 28, 47.—9. Ad supplicium depoposcunt<sup>3</sup> nos Romani: deditos ultimis cruciatus affecturi fuerunt. Liv. 21, 44.—10. Conclave illud ubi Dejotarus erat mansurus, si ire perrexisset, proxima nocte corruit<sup>4</sup>. Cic. Div. 1, 15.—11. Illi ipsi aratores qui remanserunt<sup>5</sup>, relicturni omnes agros erant, nisi ad eos Metellus Romae litteras misisset. Cic. Verr. 3, 52.—12. Explica utrum aperte an elam<sup>6</sup> te aggressuri fuerimus. Liv. 40, 14.—13. Quero, iudices, si illo die gens ista Clodiāna<sup>7</sup> quod facere voluit effecisset, fuistisne ad arma ituri? Fuistisne vos ad patrium animum majorumque virtutem (civis) excitaturi? Fuistisne aliquando reipublicam a funesto latrone repetituri? Cic. Sest. 28.—14. Si ego morerer, necum exspiratura<sup>8</sup> respublica, necum casurum imperium Populi Romani erat? Liv. 28, 28.—15. Quid enim futurum fuit, si illa pastorum<sup>9</sup> convenarumque<sup>10</sup> plebs agitari<sup>11</sup> cepta esset tribuniciis<sup>12</sup> procillis<sup>13</sup>? Liv. 2, 1, 3.—16. Mazenus, si transeuntibus<sup>14</sup> flumen supervenisset<sup>15</sup>, haud dubie oppressurus fuit incompósitos<sup>16</sup>. Curt. 4, 9.—17. Aut non fato interit<sup>17</sup> Flaminii exercitus, aut, si fato (interit), etiam si obtemperasset auspiciis<sup>18</sup>, idem eventurum fuisset. Cic. Div. 2, 21.—18. Appruit, quantum excitatura molem<sup>19</sup> vera fuisset clades, quum vanus rumor<sup>20</sup> tantas procillas excivisset<sup>21</sup>. Liv. 28, 24.—19. 'Recepti in provinciam non sumus.' Quid si essetis? Caesarne eam tradituri fuissetis, an contra Caesarem retenturi? Cic. Lig. 7. (See No. 7).—20. Neque ambigitur<sup>22</sup> quin<sup>23</sup> Brutus pessimo exemplo id facturus fuerit, si priorum regum alicui regnum extorsisset<sup>24</sup>. Liv. 2, 1, 3.—21. An potest quisquam dubitare quin si Ligurinus in Italia esse potuisset, in eadem sententia fuerit<sup>25</sup> futurus in qua fratres fuerunt? Cic. Lig. 12.—22. Et sic loquor, tanquam sine duce Hispaniae<sup>26</sup> futurae fuerint (i morerer). Liv. 28, 23.—23. Adeo citato<sup>27</sup> agmine<sup>28</sup> ducti sunt ut, si via recta essent, haud dubie eos assecuturi<sup>29</sup> fuerint. Liv. 28, 16.

Rem. 146. The INDICATIVE PLUPERFECT of the periphrastic future denotes what was impending BEFORE a time which is past in regard to the speaker (He had intended to, he had been about to, etc.). See Ex. 1, 2, 3. But poets use it in the principal sentences of hypothetical clauses with the force of an ordinary pluperfect subjunctive (Ex. 4).

1. Victor<sup>1</sup> (Aemilius Paullus) columnas illas quibus (sacerdotes) statuas regis Persei imposituri fuerant, suis statuis destinavit. Liv. 45, 27.—2. M. Valerium consulem omnes sententiae (votes) centuriaeque dixere (nominated), quem senatus dictatorem dici iussurus fuerat. Liv. 10, 11.—3. Hoc cum nuntiatum Alexandro esset, mille navis longas sociis imperare praeceperat, excursurusque<sup>2</sup> cum valida manu<sup>3</sup> fuerat Athenas. Just. 13, 5.—4. Teucras<sup>4</sup> fuerat mersura<sup>5</sup> carinas<sup>6</sup>, nisi prius<sup>7</sup> in scopulum<sup>8</sup> transformata<sup>9</sup> foret. Ov. Met. 14, 72.

Rem. 147. The TWO FUTURE TENSES of the periphrastic future are rarely used, denoting what will be or will have been the intention, or impending at some future time (Ex. 1-3). Sometimes this form is used with the force of a potential future in general precepts (p. 351 foll., Obs. 5), referring to actions intended at any time: Ea, quae demissurus eris, sumito pavo acerbiore; Take those which you (=any one) are going to let etc. Cato R. R. 101. See Ex. 4.

1 Cicero addresses Tubero and others, who, during the civil war, had gone to Africa to operate there against Caesar, but who were denying now their hostile intentions.—2 Can I doubt?—3 to summon.—4 death.—5 to demand.—6 the participle has the force of a conditional clause 'if we had surrendered.'—7 extreme.—8 torment.—9 apartment.—10 to fall.—11 farmer.—12 remain.—13 secretly.—14 gens Clodiāna, the tribe of Clodius's followers.—15 a brigand.—16 to reclaim.—17 to expire.—18 pastor, a herdsman.—19 strangers coming from all quarters.—20 to agitate.—21 belonging to the tribunes, political.—22 storm.—23 the participle has the force of a clause, 'then while they were crossing.'—24 supervenire alicui, to surprise somebody.—25 them in disorder (literally, the disordered ones).—26 even if.—27 the auspices.—28 monstrous mass (here: earthquake).—29 rumor.—30 excipere, to call forth, to raise.—31 ambigere, to doubt.—32 but that.—33 extorquere, to extort.—34 Some manuscripts have 'fuisset'. Why is fuerit the proper reading?—35 as if.—36 the two Hispanias.—37 so.—38 rapidly marching. Transl. 'by so rapid marches.'—39 column.—40 assequi, to overtake.—41 the conqueror.—42 excurre, to make an expedition.—43 force.—44 Teucrican, i. e., Trojan (ships).—45 mergere, to drown, to engulf, to swallow.—46 carina, vessel.—47 inst. of nisi.—48 before.—49 rock.—50 to transform.

1. Degustare<sup>1</sup> oportet oratorem eorum apud quos aliquid agat aut acturus erit mentis sensusque<sup>2</sup>. Cic. Or. 1, 52.— 2. Fodas in hac verba cum Antiocho conscriptum<sup>3</sup> est: Ne quem exercitum qui cum Populo Romano sociasse bellum acturus erit rex per finis regni sui transire sinite. Idem ne pluri quam decem navis habito ex bello causam quod ipse illatus erit. Liv. 38, 38.— 3. Sapiens non vivet si fuert sine homine victurus<sup>4</sup>. Sen. Ep. 9, 14.— 4. Aliquando et non reddam beneficium, quum possim: si plus mihi detractus ero quam inde comatus. Sen. Ben. 4, 40.

§ 508. The two INFINITIVES of the periphrastic future are only used as predicates of infinitive clauses, both in the construction of the accusative with the infinitive, and in that of the nominative with the infinitive (§ 492). The infinitive of the PRESENT (scripturus esse) is used if the infinitive clause, changed into an independent sentence, would have a predicate either in the present tense of the periphrastic future, or in the ordinary future. It is generally rendered by the English future tense (if the principal predicate is a present), or by the potential with 'would' (if the principal predicate is a preterite). The infinitive of the perfect (scripturus fuisse) has ALWAYS a HYPOTHETICAL force, and is rendered by the potential with 'would have.'

Rem. 148. According to § 390, the predicate-infinitive is placed in the PRESENT if its time is either coincident with or later than that of the principal verb. As to the question whether this present infinitive is to be taken from the ORDINARY conjugation, or from the conjugation of the PERIPHRASTIC FUTURE, the following rules must be observed:

1. The verbs of SAYING and BELIEVING (the most usual of which are mentioned § 393, R. 26)—except jubeo—take the predicate-infinitive in the present of the periphrastic future if the time of the clause is conceived to be later than the time of the principal verb. It is generally rendered by 'will' or 'would' according to the tense of the principal predicate, but may also be rendered by 'going to,' etc., if the connection shows that it has the force of an ordinary periphrastic future. It is thus frequently connected with conditional clauses in any of the four tenses of the subjunctive. For this construction see p. 631, Obs. 7.—The infinitive of the copula esse is very frequently left out.

Existimo te victurum esse, I believe that thou wilt conquer art going to conquer.—Dixit se scripturum esse, he said that he would write (was going to write).—Scriptum se venturum esse si hoc negotium perficere, he wrote that he would come if he had performed this business.

2. Verbs of HOPING, PROMISING, and THREATENING, which in English may be construed with an object infinitive, are in Latin construed with an infinitive clause in which the predicate-infinitive is the present infinitive of the periphrastic future.

Spero me venturum, I hope to come.—Minutus est se cum accitum esse, he threatened to compel him.—Polluebantur se regi obtemperaturos esse, they promised to obey the king.

3. If posse and velle are predicate-infinitives dependent on such verbs, they remain in the ordinary present-infinitive: Spero te venire posse (etc.), I hope you will be able to come.

4. Other verbs forming no verbal adjective in urus except posse and velle, if dependent on the verbs mentioned No. 2, cannot remain in the ordinary present infinitive. In such instances the construction of the clause is made impersonal by means of the periphrastic infinitives futurum esse or fore with ut (literally: that it will be the case that etc.). The verb is placed in the subjunctive present or imperfect according as the principal predicate is a present or preterite<sup>1</sup>:

<sup>1</sup> to ascertain.—<sup>2</sup> sentiment.—<sup>3</sup> conscribere to draw up.—<sup>4</sup> if he shall have been reduced to a situation to, etc.—<sup>5</sup> to (upon) the other, i.e. the one who has bestowed a benefit on me.

Existimat fore (futurum esse) ut hostes effugiant, he believes that the enemy will escape.—Speravit fore ut cives jus suum agnoscerent, he hoped that the citizens would acknowledge his right.

5. The potential mood with 'would' or 'should' which is frequently employed in English That-clauses dependent on other verbs than those mentioned No. 1, is not rendered by a periphrastic future in Latin, but by ordinary present infinitives, or by ordinary subjunctives, if clauses with ut are used. For more particular rules, p. 631, Obs. 6.

Te cras venire cupio (Velim venias cras), I wish (that) you would come to-morrow.—Necesse est (opus est) te hoc negotium perficere, it is necessary that you should finish this business.—Velim favemus, te tua virtute frui cupimus, we favor you, and wish you would enjoy your merits. Cic. Brut. 97.—Senatui placet Crassum Syriam obtinere, it pleases the Senate that Crassus should obtain Syria. Cic. Phil. 11, 12.—Miror te ad me nihil scribere, I wonder that you should have written nothing to me. Cic. Att. 8, 12.

For the translation of 'should' by the gerund, see § 511, R. 162.

6. The verbal adjective in urus, if used as predicate-infinitive, agrees, according to the rules for predicate-adjectives, in gender, number, and case with the subject-accusative.

Rem. 149. The periphrastic infinitive, like ordinary predicate-infinitives, is also employed in the construction of the NOMINATIVE WITH THE INFINITIVE (§ 492), in which case the verbal adjective in urus agrees with the subject-nominative in gender, number, and case:

Amicus tuus brevi rediturus (esse) dicitur, it is said that thy friend will soon return.—Civitates fidem servaturas (esse) videbantur, it seemed that the states were going to keep their faith.

Rem. 150. If the verb esse, either as an independent verb, or with completing predicates, is used as a present predicate-infinitive of the periphrastic future, it takes either the form futurum (esse), or fore. The verbal adjective futurus agrees in this construction, like other verbal adjectives, with its subject-accusative or subject-nominative in gender, number, and case:

Vos beatos fore (or futuros) speramus, we hope you will be happy.—Hæc res magno mihi usui futura (fore) videbatur, it seemed that this thing would be of great use to me.

Rem. 151. The construction of the PERFECT INFINITIVE of the periphrastic future is determined by the same rules as that of the present infinitive; but it has ALWAYS a HYPOTHETICAL signification, corresponding to the potential 'would have,' the hypothetical clause being either expressed or understood. The copula fuisse is rarely left out, which is only the case if the connection clearly shows the hypothetical force of the verbal adjective:

Dixit se idem facturum fuisse (not facturum without fuisse), he said that he would have done the same.—Existimabat, Tuberonem Cesaris jussis obtemperaturum fuisse, si fuerit admissus, he believed Tubero would have obeyed Cesar's commands if he had been admitted.—Rediturus fuisse videbatur, si veniam impetrasset, it seems that he would have returned if he had obtained the permission. See p. 633, Obs. 8.

1. Promitto tibi atque confirmo<sup>2</sup>, me pro tua dignitate in hac provincia imperatoris suscepturum<sup>3</sup> officia atque partis. Cic. Fam. 3, 10, 1.— 2. Flumen neque ipse transire habebat in animo, neque hostis transituros existimabat. Cæs. B. G. 6, 7.— 3. Talia te quum videam studia habiturum esse innumerabilia, plane<sup>4</sup> dubitare non possum, quin<sup>5</sup> tibi amplius ista sollicitudo futura sit. Cic. Fam. 3, 10, 3.— 4. In litteris scribit, se cum legionibus celeriter adfore. Cæs. B. G. 5, 48.— 5. Sulpicius pronuntiavit<sup>6</sup>, nocte proximā ab horā secundā usque ad quartā horā noctis lunam defectūr in esse<sup>1</sup>. Liv. 44, 37. — 6. Locrenses<sup>2</sup> moritūros se affirmābant<sup>3</sup> citius<sup>4</sup> quam immixti<sup>5</sup> Brutiis in aliēnos mores verterentur<sup>6</sup>. Liv. 24, 3. — 7. Romāni, reditūros se ad eos dicentes esse, proficiscuntur. Liv. 24, 6. — 8. Appius dixit, si licitum esset legem curiātam<sup>7</sup> ferre<sup>8</sup>, sortitūrum cum collēgā provinciam<sup>9</sup>. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 25. — 9. Dixit Ariovistus, si discessisset<sup>10</sup> Caesar, magno se illum prēmio remuneratūrum. Cæs. B. G. 1, 44. — 10. Per paucis lustris<sup>11</sup> futūrum esse ait ut deserta oppida nullum militem dare possent. Liv. 41, 8. — 11. Caesar, etsi fore vidēbat ut hostes celeritāte periculum effugerent, tamen legiōnes in acie pro castris constituit<sup>12</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 4, 35. — 12. Video te velle in cælum migrāre<sup>13</sup>, et spero fore ut contingat id nobis. Cic. Tusc. 1, 34. — 13. Nullam unquam mutatiōnem<sup>14</sup> hac hominum aetate res habitūra esse videtur. Cic. Fam. 1, 8, 1. — 14. Otium nobis gratissimum erit quod ei qui potiuntur rerum prastatūri<sup>15</sup> videntur. Cic. Fam. 1, 8, 4. — 15. Aetolōrum in semet ipsos versus furor ad interneciōnem adductūrus<sup>16</sup> videbatur gentem. Liv. 4, 25. — 16. Caesar, quod<sup>17</sup> milites signa<sup>18</sup> non latūri dicerentur, nihil (not) se de eā re commoveri<sup>19</sup> dixit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 40. — 17. Ita delicta<sup>20</sup> sua occultidra fore existimavit. Sall. Jug. 38. — 18. Quēlūm fore videbatur reliquum aetatis (summer) tempus. Liv. 22, 21. — 19. Illi tum se consilia imperio dicto audientes futūros esse dicebant. Liv. 41, 10. — 20. Caesar ex eo<sup>21</sup> quod obsides dare intermiserant<sup>22</sup>, fore id quod accidit suspicabatur. Cæs. B. G. 4, 31. — 21. Caesar pollicitus est, sibi eam rem curae futūram. Cæs. B. G. 1, 33. — 22. Vercingetorix dixit, copias se omnis pro castris habitūrum et terrōri<sup>23</sup> hostibus futūrum. Cæs. B. G. 7, 66. — 23. Quis unquam crederet mulierum adversarium Verrem futūrum? Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 41. — 24. Galli, hanc adepti victoriam, in perpetuum<sup>24</sup> se fore victōres confidēbant. Cæs. B. G. 5, 39. — 25. Caesar respondit, se Eduatūcorū civitatē conservatūrum (fuisse), si priusquam murum (eorum) aries<sup>25</sup> tetigisset, se dedidissent<sup>26</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 2, 32. — 26. Catulus dixit, non tantopere fuisse homines tribuniciam<sup>27</sup> potestatem<sup>28</sup> desideratūros<sup>29</sup>, si senātus Populi Romāni existimatiōni<sup>30</sup> satisfacere voluisset. Cic. Verr. 1, 15. — 27. Nuntiātum<sup>31</sup> est nobis a Varrōne, Atticum nostrum, nisi de via fessus esset, continuo<sup>32</sup> ad nos ventūrum fuisse. Acad. Post. 1, 1. — 28. Gloriamini per me licet, eos provinciam fuisse se Cæsari traditūros. Cic. Lig. 8, 24. — 29. Milites contendērunt<sup>33</sup>, incolumi exercitu Romāno<sup>34</sup>, Germānos castra oppugnātūros non fuisse. Cæs. B. G. 6, 41. — 30. Hoc totum omitto, ne<sup>35</sup> Tubero quod nunquam cogitāvit factūrus fuisse videatur. Cic. Lig. 8.

<sup>1</sup> The same form (with futurum est ut) is sometimes employed as a circumlocution of the finite verb, in the case that a verb does not form an adjective in urus, as Futurum est ut sapiam, I am going to be wise. Sen. Ep. 117.—<sup>2</sup> confirmare, to pledge one's self.—<sup>3</sup> suscipere aliquid, to charge one's self with something.—<sup>4</sup> plane non, not at all.—<sup>5</sup> but that.—<sup>6</sup> greatness.—<sup>7</sup> distress.—<sup>8</sup> declare.

§ 509. Predicates with periphrastic futures do not admit a change into the PASSIVE VOICE, except PREDICATE-INFINITIVES in infinitive clauses, which are made passive by one of the following circumlocutions: 1) by the FIRST SUPINE with the passive infinitive iri (both personal and impersonal); 2) by the impersonal infinitive futūrum esse ut or fore ut (R. 148, 4) with the subjunctive passive of the verb; 3) by the impersonal infinitive futūrum fuisse ut with the imperfect subjunctive of the passive; 4) by the personal infinitive fore with the perfect participle of the verb.

<sup>1</sup> deflere, to be eclipsed. — <sup>2</sup> inhabitants of Locri. — <sup>3</sup> declare. — <sup>4</sup> rather. — <sup>5</sup> mixed up. — <sup>6</sup> vertere, to turn. Comparative clauses, dependent on infinitive clauses have either their predicates in the infinitive, or in the subjunctive of the finite verb. We generally render such predicates by infinitives. — <sup>7</sup> a law of the Curias, which were political bodies of the Patricians. — <sup>8</sup> to pass. — <sup>9</sup> sortiri provinciam, a political phrase: 'to cast lots for the province'. — <sup>10</sup> to march off. — <sup>11</sup> lustrum, a period of five years. Connections of this kind must be recast in English: 'in ten or fifteen years'. — <sup>12</sup> to draw up. — <sup>13</sup> go to. — <sup>14</sup> change. — <sup>15</sup> grant. — <sup>16</sup> ad interneciōnem adducere, to exterminate. — <sup>17</sup> quod, as to the fact that. — <sup>18</sup> signa ferre, to carry the flags, i. e., to make the attack. — <sup>19</sup> commoveri, to be impressed. — <sup>20</sup> offence. — <sup>21</sup> abl. of id (from the fact). — <sup>22</sup> to neglect. — <sup>23</sup> terror. — <sup>24</sup> for ever. — <sup>25</sup> battering-ram. — <sup>26</sup> dedere, surrender. — <sup>27</sup> of the tribunes. — <sup>28</sup> power. — <sup>29</sup> to miss. — <sup>30</sup> public opinion. — <sup>31</sup> to announce. — <sup>32</sup> directly. — <sup>33</sup> contendere, to maintain, to argue. — <sup>34</sup> construction of ablatives absolute with the force of an hypothetical clause 'if the army were intact'. — <sup>35</sup> lest.

Rem. 152. The finite verb in the conjugation of the periphrastic future admits of a passive form only in the subjunctive imperfect, by means of forem etc. (R. 140) in connection with the perfect participle of the verb. This combination has the force of a perfect future subjunctive, and is rendered 'would have been', as: Dixerunt arcem se eis traditūros si remissi forent, they said that they were willing to surrender them the fort if they would have been sent back. Liv. 29, 6.

Rem. 153. The FIRST SUPINE with iri serves as the passive voice of the infinitive PRESENT of the periphrastic future. It is frequently used in infinitive clauses, but rarely in the construction of the nominative with the infinitive. The supine, being indeclinable, remains unchanged, and does not agree with the subject-accusative, as: Carnūtes cum longius eam rem ductum iri existimarent etc., the Carnutes, since they thought that this affair would be protracted for a great while. Cæs. B. G. 7, 11.

The supine with iri originates in the use of the active verb ire with the first supine, in the meaning 'in order to' (§ 351). Such phrases, especially in anteclassical language, are sometimes used with the force of the active periphrastic future, as: Si opulentus ille petitum pauperioris gratiam, if a rich man is going to (literally goes in order to) apply for a favor of a poorer man. Plaut. Aul. 2, 2, 29. — Suas quoque injurias ultum irent, they ought to think also (literally 'go to') of revenging their own wrongs. Liv. 2, 6. — Qui paucis sceleratis pareunt, bonos omnis perditum eunt, those who spare a few villains, are going to destroy all good citizens. Sall. Cat. 52, 12.

Rem. 154. The impersonal circumlocution with futūrum esse ut or fore ut, is the same as that employed for active verbs which form no adjective in urus (Rem. 147, 4), except that the verb is placed in the subjunctive of the PASSIVE voice. The tense of the verb is either the present or the imperfect, according as the principal verb is in the present, or in one of the past tenses. Since the construction is impersonal, it cannot be applied to infinitive clauses construed by the nominative with the infinitive. English That-clauses with predicates in the future or potential PASSIVE, in order to be cast into this construction, must be first remodelled impersonally (that they will be destroyed = That it will be the case [futūrum esse or fore] that they are destroyed), as:

He thinks that Gajus will be defeated, existimat fore ut (futūrum esse ut) Gajus vincatur. — He thought that Gajus would be defeated, existimavit fore ut (futūrum esse ut) Gajus vinceretur.

Rem. 155. The impersonal circumlocution with futūrum fuisse ut is construed in the same way as the present futūrum esse ut, except that the verb is always placed in the IMPERFECT subjunctive. In meaning, it closely corresponds to the ACTIVE perfect infinitive of the periphrastic future, being always hypothetical. It is rendered by the English potential with 'would have been', as:

He thinks that Gajus would have been defeated if, etc., existimat futūrum fuisse ut Gajus vinceretur si, etc. — He said that the life of the prisoner would have been preserved, if he had surrendered sooner, dixit futūrum fuisse ut vita captivi conservaretur, si se citius dedidisset.

Rem. 156. The personal form fore with a perfect participle is used instead of the forms with iri and futūrum esse ut if the future action is conceived as a STATE or CONDITION, as: Provinciam brevi subactam fore existimavit, he thought that the province would soon be subjected (i. e., a subjected one). Fore with a perfect participle is impersonally used only in the case that the perfect participle has the meaning of an IMPERSONAL PASSIVE, as: Carthaginienses debellatum mox fore rebantur, the Carthaginians reckoned that the war would soon be over. Liv. 23, 118 (debellātum est, the war is over). Fore may also be connected with the perfect participle of a deponent verb, and has then altogether the force of a future perfect. See Ex. 19.

ne. P. R. 19.
1. Ne sī occupātus tumulus<sup>1</sup> ab Hannibale foret, velint<sup>2</sup> in cervicibus habērent hostem.
Liv. 27, 26.— 2. Si tantum militum Romanorum fuisset, ut et Chalcis et Euripus<sup>3</sup> tenēri, et non deseri præsidiū<sup>4</sup> Athenarum potuisset, Chalcis et Euripus adempta regi forent. Liv. 31, 23.— 3. Alcibiades pollicētur legātis Atheniensium amicitiam regis, si respublica a populo translata ad senātum foret. Just. 5, 3.— 4. An Cn. Pompejus censens tribus suis consulatibus tribus triumphis latatūrum fuisse, si scisset se in solitudine<sup>5</sup> Ægyptiorum trucidātum iri? Cic. Div. 2, 22.— 5. Scībat sibi crimini datum iri pecuniam accepisse. Cic. Verr. 5, 29.— 6. Hi arbitrantur, se beneficis<sup>6</sup> in suis amicos visum iri si locupletent<sup>10</sup> eos quacunque ratione. Cic. Off. 1, 14.— 7. Numquam Populus Romanus me consulem fecisset, si (me) vestro clamore perturbātum iri arbitraretur. Cic. Rab. 6.— 8. Ipsi vero nihil noctūm iri respondit. Cæs. B. G. 5, 36.— 9. Vejentes<sup>11</sup> prædicēbant, fore ut brevi a Gallis Roma caperetur. Cic. Div. 1, 44, 100.—
10. Valde suspicio fore ut infringatur<sup>12</sup> hominum improbitas<sup>13</sup>. Cic. Fam. 1, 10.—
11. Illud tibi affirmo, si rem ex sententiā<sup>14</sup> gesseris<sup>15</sup>, fore ut a multis collaudare<sup>16</sup>. Cic.
Fam. 1, 7, 5.— 12. Divitiacus dixit, futurum esse paucis annis ut omnes Galli ex finibus suis pellerentur<sup>17</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 1, 31.— 13. Ego fide meā spondeo<sup>18</sup> fore ut omnia longe ampliora<sup>19</sup> quam a me prædicantur<sup>20</sup> invenias. Plin. Ep. 1, 4.— 14. Audita vox est a luco Vestæ, ut muri et portæ recederentur; futurum esse, nisi provsum<sup>21</sup> esset, ut Roma caperetur. Cic. Div. 1, 45, 101.— 15. Nisi eo tempore nuntii de Cæsaris victoriā essen-t alii, existimābant perique futurum fuisse ut oppidum amitteretur. Cæs. B. C. 3, 101.—
16. Theophrastus moriens accusasse naturam dicitur, quod hominibus tam exiguum vitam dedisset; nam si potuisset esse longinquior<sup>22</sup>, futurum fuisse ut omnes artes perficerentur. Cic. Tusc. 3, 28.— 17. Frater meus existimat, adjuncto isto fundo, patrimonium<sup>23</sup> suum fore per te constitutum<sup>24</sup>. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 24.— 18. Aristoteles dixit se vidēre, brevi tempore philosophiam plane<sup>25</sup> absolutum<sup>26</sup> fore. Cic. Tusc. 3, 69.— 19. Hoc dico, me satis adeptum fore, si ex tanto periculo nullum in me periculum redundarit<sup>27</sup>.
Cic. Sull. 3.

§ 510. The verbal adjective in ūrus, in anteclassical language, and in the prose of Cæsar and Cicero, occurs only as a predicate-adjective. But the writers of the Augustan age, and more frequently the post-classical prose-writers use the adjective in ūrus as an ATTRIBUTIVE adjective, or as an accessory predicate (§ 461) with the force of a PARTICIPLE.

🔍 In Cicero's letters the adjective in ūrus occurs twice attributively: Quid agentī, quid actūro? to him going to do 'what'? Cic. Att. 8, 9, 2 — Tarde tibi reddītūro, since you are to answer late. Ib. 5, 15. — Exitūrus in Qu. Fr. 2, 5, is a conjecture.

Rems. 157. If the adjective in urus is used ATTRIBUTIVELY, it either corresponds to an English attribute with 'about to', 'going to', 'in a condition to', or must be resolved into a relative clause (Ex. 1. 2. 3. 9).

Cito subveniātis homini peritūro, you should come quickly to the assistance of a man about to perish (in a critical condition).—Accēpit ille donum sibi exito futūrum, he accepted a gift that was to be fatal to him.

Adjectives in vrus are sometimes used as absolute adjectives with the force of nouns (§ 354 foll.), as :

Interfectōres interfectūris jubentur obijci, the murderers are placed before their future murderers (before those who are to murder them in their turn). Sen. Ep. 7. See Ex. 19, 20.

- hill.—<sup>2</sup> as it were, p. 748, 7.—<sup>3</sup> the straits between Boeotia and Eubœa.—<sup>4</sup> præsidium deserere, to abandon the protection.—<sup>5</sup> solitude.—<sup>6</sup> Ægyptius, an Egyptian.—<sup>7</sup> to assassinate.—<sup>8</sup> § 480. R. 64. 65.—<sup>9</sup> beneficent.—<sup>10</sup> enrich.—<sup>11</sup> inhabitants of Veji.—<sup>12</sup> to break, to check.—<sup>13</sup> wickedness.—<sup>14</sup> successfully.—<sup>15</sup> rem gerere, to carry out a business, to act.—<sup>16</sup> collaudare, to praise.—<sup>17</sup> to drive out.—<sup>18</sup> fide sua spondere, to warrant, to pledge one's self.—<sup>19</sup> greater.—<sup>20</sup> prædicare, to profess, to represent.—<sup>21</sup> providere aliquid, to make provision for something.—<sup>22</sup> longer.—<sup>23</sup> property.—<sup>24</sup> constituere, to establish.—<sup>25</sup> entirely.—<sup>26</sup> absolvere, to perfect.—<sup>27</sup> to arise.

Rem. 158. If the adjective in ûrus is used as a PARTICIPLE, it has either the force of an ACCESSORY PREDICATE (Ex. 4. 5. 6. 17. 21), or the force of a CLAUSE (Ex. 7. 8. 9. 22. 23. 24), especially such as denotes PURPOSE, but also of time-clauses, conditional, and causal clauses, and even of a mere co-ordination (Ex. 10). The English equivalents are either an object-infinitive with 'in order' expressed or understood, or participial expressions such as 'being about', 'going to', or conjunctions (since, when, but, and). In all these instances the adjective in ûrus agrees with its logical subject in gender, number, and case :

Nam non leges sublatūrus, I have not come to destroy the laws. — Galli, oratōrem probatūri, armis conceperunt, the Gauls, when they meant to applaud an orator, clashed their arms together. — Alexander Bessam Ecbatanā duci jussit, interficere Dario penas capite persolutūrum, Alexander directed Bessus to be taken to Ecbatana in order to pay with his life the penalty for having slain Darius. Curt. 7, 10, 10.

Rem. 159. Sometimes the verbal adjectives in ūrus has a hypothetical meaning, as if it were a participle of the hypothetical perfect—ūrus fui (R. 143. 2), or of the hypothetical infinitive—ūrum fuisse (R. 150), as: Martialis dedit mihi quantum potuit, deditūrus amplius si potuisset, Martialis gave me as much as he could, and would have given more if it had been in his power. Plin. Ep. 3. 71. (Ex. 9. 10. 11. 24.)

Very rarely the adjective in arsus is used as a participle in the construction of the ablative absolute, as: Antiochus Ephesi secūsus admodum de bello Romāno erat, tamquam non transitūris in Asiā Romānis (as if the Romans were not going to cross over into Asia). Liv. 36. 41.—Rex apium nisi migratōrio agmine foras non procēdit, the queen of the bees does not leave the hive, except when the swarm is going to move. Plin. H. N. 11, 16. Comp. Liv. 4, 18; 41, 19; 44, 11.

1. Jugurtha cedens<sup>1</sup> urbe fertur dixisse 'O urbem venālem<sup>2</sup> cito<sup>3</sup> peritūram si emp-tōrem invenerit.' Liv. Ep. 64.— 2. Horatius Cocles ausus est rem plus famae habitūram quam fideli. Liv. 2, 10.— 3. Regnum Syracusarum ad Hieronymum translatum est, puerum vixdum<sup>4</sup> liberatē nedom<sup>5</sup> dominationem<sup>6</sup> modice<sup>7</sup> latūrum<sup>8</sup>. Liv. 24, 4.— 4. Hoc indicium<sup>9</sup> est, se nec ago<sup>10</sup> nec urbi vim allatūros<sup>11</sup> venisse. Liv. 39, 54.— 5. Video vos, Carthaginienses, quom ob patriam tum ob iram justissimam pugnātūros. Liv.
21, 44.— 6. Inferimus bellum Italiae, audacius fortiusque pugnātūri quam hostis. Liv.
21, 44.— 7. Herculem Germani, itūri in prelium, canunt<sup>12</sup>. Tac. Germ. 3.— 8. Magna pars hominum est quae navigatūra<sup>13</sup> de tempestate non cogitat. Sen. Tranq. 11.— 9. Ingeniosus<sup>14</sup> vir fuit, magnam Romāe datūrus eloquentiae exemplum, nisi enervass<sup>15</sup> eum felicitas<sup>16</sup>. Sen. Ep. 19.— 10. Librum misi exigenti<sup>17</sup> tibi, missūrus etsi non exegisses. Plin. Ep. 3, 13.— 11. Egreditur castris Romānus<sup>18</sup>, vallum invasūrus<sup>19</sup>, ni exegisses. Plin. Ep. 3, 13.— 12. Navem conscendunt<sup>21</sup> tamquam reditūri Thesoplia<sup>20</sup> pugnae fieret. Liv. 3, 60.— 13. Navem conscendunt<sup>21</sup> tamquam reditūri Thesalonfem. Liv. 40, 4.— 13. Alexander ad Jovem Hannōnem pergit<sup>22</sup> consultūrus et de eventu<sup>23</sup> futurōrum et de origine suā. Just. 11, 11.— 14. Ad prima signa veri Hannibalis exercitum in Etruriam ducit, eam quoque gentem<sup>24</sup> aut vi aut voluntate<sup>25</sup> adjunc-tūrus<sup>26</sup>. Liv. 21, 58.— 15. Alexander Hephestionem<sup>27</sup> misit, commētūsus<sup>28</sup> in hiemem paratūrum<sup>29</sup>. Curt. 8, 2, 13.— 16. Hæc sunt beneficia certa, perpetua permanētia. Sen. Ben. 6, 3.— 17. Pater filio vitam dedit peritūram. Sen.
Ben. 3, 35.— 18. Cæsar Cadurnium, Pi-trōis filiam, succēssūri sibi in consulatū, duxit uxōrem. Suet. Cæs. 21.— 19. Imperatōrus omnibus eligi debet ex omnibus. Plin. Pan.
7.— 20. Magna pars peccatōrum<sup>30</sup> tolli tur<sup>31</sup>, si peccatōris testis assistat<sup>32</sup>. Sen. Ep.
11.— 21. Cieonia<sup>33</sup> abidūra congregantur<sup>34</sup> in loco certo. Plin. H. N. 10, 23.— 22. Stultus est qui equum impitūrus non ipsum in-picit, sed stratum<sup>35</sup> ejus ac frenos. Sen. Ep. 47.
— 23. Timōri praecepit Darius, ut omnis peregrinos milites a Pharnabazo acciperet,

1 to leave.— 2 venal.— 3 quickly.— 4 hardly yet.— 5 much less, to say nothing of.— 6 royal power.— 7 with moderation.— 8 to bear.— 9 proof.— 10 adjacent country.— 11 rim afferre alcuti, to use force against one.— 12 canere aliquem, to chant songs to the praise of somebody.— 13 to sail.— 14 ingenuous.— 15 to encrivate.— 16 felicity.— 17 to request (on thy request).— 18 collective singular, with the force of a plural.— 19 invadere, to enter.— 20 opportunity.— 21 go to ship, embark.— 22 to proceed to.— 23 about the issue of future things, i.e. about future events.— 24 the people, here 'the country'.— 25 their own will.— 26 to unite with one's self.— 27 Bactrian.— 28 supplies.— 29 pro- cure.— 30 crime.— 31 to remove.— 32 assistere, to stand by, to be present.— 33 alconiu, a stork.— 34 congregāri, to assemble, to gather.— 35 saddle.

operi egerum usurus in bello. Curt. 3, 3, 1.—24. De prædâ parcius<sup>1</sup> quam speraverant milites ex tantis regis opibus dederunt, nihil reliqueris<sup>2</sup> si avaritiâ<sup>3</sup> indulgeretur. L. 45, 35.

D. THE PERIPHRASTIC GERUND AND GERUNDIVE.

§ 511. The periphrastic conjugation of the GERUND and GERUNDIVE is formed by the verbal adjective in dus in connection with the different tenses and moods of the copula (PREDICATE-GERUND). It presents the verbal idea as an act that MUST BE performed, the tenses of the copula indicating the TIME at which the necessity of the performance is said to exist or to have existed: Vincendus sum, I must be defeated; vincendus eram, I was to be defeated.

Rem. 160. In both the periphrastic future and the periphrastic gerund, FUTURE acts are represented as present or past in regard to the speaker's time. The periphrastic future represents the act as ACTIVE and as INTENDED or IMPENDING; the periphrastic gerund represents it as PASSIVE, and as one that MUST be performed or MUST happen. On account of this difference in meaning, the relation of the periphrastic future to the periphrastic gerund is not exactly the same as the relation of an ordinary active verb to its passive voice, so that the one can generally not be changed into the other without affecting the sense. There are instances, however, in which periphrastic futures are almost identical in meaning with a periphrastic gerund. Thus pugnaturus esis and vobis pugnandum est may both be rendered by 'You are to fight'. Periturus sum may be translated the same as pereundum mihi est (I am to perish). In such instances the meaning of necessity is not contained in the periphrastic future as such, but is implied in the situation which is described. The rules on the use of the tenses, and on the construction of the predicate-gerund, have a strong analogy to those on the periphrastic future, especially in regard to the hypothetical meaning of the indicative of the past tenses, in regard to the restriction of the infinitives to infinitive clauses, and to the similar use of both the periphrastic future and the gerund as accessory predicates.

Rem. 161. The periphrastic gerund and the second supine are the only forms of DEPONENT verbs with passive meanings (aside from a few perfect participles), as Milites hortandi sunt, the soldiers must BE EXHORTED, although milites hortantur means 'the soldiers exhort', and not 'are exhorted'.

Rem. 162. The predicate-gerund signifies NECESSITY in the widest sense of the word, without distinguishing among the different degrees and modes of necessity. By the gerund a DUTY, an EXPEDIENCY, an UNAVOIDABLE FACT, or a RULE may be represented. Hence the English equivalents to be applied in rendering the gerund are various, and must be selected according to the requirements of the sense; as: Vincendus sum, I must be defeated, I have to be, am to be, ought to be, should be, am bound to be defeated, or 'it is necessary that I should be defeated.' With negations the gerund often assumes the meaning 'cannot' or 'need not', (Ex. 14, 22), as dubitandum non est, it cannot be doubted; nihil tibi timendum est, you need not be afraid; cavendum non est, no precautions need be taken.

Rem. 163. To express the idea of NECESSITY, there are, aside from the predicate-gerund, many other expressions at the disposition of the Latin language, namely debere, and the impersonals necesse est, oportet, opus est. Debere is of general import, similar to the gerund, and is mainly employed to vary the expression, or for such actions which cannot assume passive forms, especially for the copula with predicative adjectives and nouns, although even these may often be replaced by verbs, and then assume the form of gerunds (cavendum est tibi = cautus esse debes; letandum tibi est = letus esse debes). Debere is also used in lieu of a gerund with a negation, when the latter would assume the meaning of possibility, as misericiordiâ certe vinci non debeo. Liv. 40, 15.

<sup>1</sup> parcus, sparing.—<sup>2</sup> literally: 'to those that would have left nothing behind'; i. e., since they would have left nothing behind.—<sup>3</sup> greediness.

Oportet means an act MORALLY necessary, i. e., an act the non-performance of which would involve the disregarding of some moral, social, or other RULE, either particular or general: Oportet nos parentis amâre, legibus obedire, fidem servare. Compare Cic. Div. 2, 11: Hoc ego philosophi non esse arbitror testibus uti; argumentis et rationibus oportet (he is bound by the rules of his science, it would be unphilosophical to use witnesses). See Cic. Off. 3, 29, 107; Or. 22, 74.

Necesse est implies a PHYSICAL or LOGICAL necessity, i. e., such as cannot be disregarded at all: Necesse est mori (not oportet). Eam qui hoc dixit, doctum esse necesse est (it cannot be otherwise). See Cic. Off. 3, 11, 52, 53; Ib. 16, 64; 23, 71. Cic. Sext. 40, 86. Cic. Verr. 2, 1, 31; 4, 29, 84.

Opus est means a necessity conceived as EXPEDIENT, i. e., which would subject the one disregarding it to some INCONVENIENCE, as: Emas non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est. Sen. Ep. 94.—Legem Curiatam consuli ferri opus esse, necesse non esse; That a lex Curiata would not be absolutely necessary, but advisable. Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 25.

These expressions are generally not interchangeable without affecting the conception of the speaker. But the predicate-gerund is a GENERAL expression of necessity which may serve as a synonym of oportet, necesse est, and opus est (Mori necesse est = moriendum est; parentis amâre oportet = parentes amandi sunt; hoc negare tibi opus erit = hoc tibi negandum erit).

§ 512. The periphrastic Gerund, like all passive verbs, has either a personal or an impersonal form, the latter being rendered by some of the general methods of expressing Latin impersonal passives (§ 460, R. 10.). The PERSONAL forms of the periphrastic Gerund are called the 'PREDICATE-GERUNDIVE', while to the IMPERSONAL forms the term 'PREDICATE-GERUND'* (in a narrower sense) is applied.

Rem. 164. The equivalents of the gerund, which are mentioned in R. 161, cannot be applied alike for each tense and mood of the predicate-gerund and gerundive. Thus in English the auxiliary 'must', being merely considered as one of the signs of the potential mood, admits of no modification by tense or mood, the perfect 'he must have been defeated' implying a conception very different from the present potential 'he must be defeated', if the latter is taken in the ordinary sense 'we must defeat him'. Hence the English potential with 'must' can only be used for the PRESENT tense of the predicate-gerund and gerundive, while to the other tenses and moods different expressions must be applied.

* The terms gerund and gerundive are not very felicitously chosen, and many grammarians have adopted a different (though not better) terminology. We have abstained from the easy task of proposing new terms, considering mere names as harmless, and being unwilling to increase the confusion prevailing on the subject, by introducing terms different from all those in practical use. Our terminology is preciser than many of those adopted by other grammarians. By 'Gerund' we always understand the IMPERSONAL form, whether it is a predicate, or an absolute participle generally designated by the grammarians as 'neuter of the passive future participle' (ars scribendi). By 'Gerundive' the PERSONAL form is always understood. Besides this distinction, there is only one more to be observed, namely, that between PREDICATE-gerunds and gerundives, and between ATTRIBUTIVE gerunds and gerundives. These four categories, which agree with our general theory on 'phrases', exhaust all possible forms which the verbal adjective in dus may assume. The gerund and gerundive are comprised by the general term 'GERUNDIAL'.

SYNOPSIS OF THE PERIPHRASTIC GERUND AND GERUNDIVE.

1) GERUNDIVE.

|                         |   |       |                    |
|-------------------------|---|-------|--------------------|
| PRESENT IND.            | Laudandus sum, I must be praised, ought to be praised, am to be praised, etc., or it is necessary to praise me.      | SUBJ. | laudandus sim.     |
| IMPERF.                 | laudandus eram, I was to be praised, it was necessary to praise me, or I ought to have been praised.                 |       | laudandus essem.   |
| PERFECT                 | laudandus fui, (I was to be praised). I ought to have been praised, it was (would have been) necessary to praise me. |       | laudandus fuim.    |
| PLUPERF.                | laudandus fueram, I ought to have been praised.  |       | laudandus fuisset. |
| FUTURE <sup>1</sup>     | laudandus ero, I shall have to be praised, it will be necessary to praise me.  |       |                    |
| PRESENT INFINITIVE (me) | laudandum esse, that I must be praised.  |       |                    |
| PERFECT INFINITIVE (me) | laudandum fuisse, that I ought to have been praised, that it would have been necessary to praise me.                 |       |                    |

2) GERUND. (Impersonal.)

|              |  |       |                    |
|--------------|--|-------|--------------------|
| PRESENT IND. | Bellandum est <sup>2</sup> , a war must be waged (literally: it must be waged).                 | SUBJ. | bellandum sit.     |
| IMPERF.      | bellandum erat, a war was to be waged, ought to have been waged; it was necessary to wage, etc. |       | bellandum esset.   |
| PERFECT      | bellandum fuit, a war ought to have been waged, etc.  |       | bellandum fuerit.  |
| PLUPERF.     | bellandum fuerat, a war ought to have been waged, etc.  |       | bellandum fuisset. |

FUTURE. bellandum erit, it will be necessary to wage a war.

PRESENT INFINITIVE. bellandum esse, that a war must be waged.

PERFECT INFINITIVE. bellandum fuisse, that a war ought to have been waged or that it would have been necessary to wage a war.

<sup>1</sup> The forms of a subjunctive imperfect laudandus forem and of a conditional infinitive laudandum fore frequently occur in hypothetical sentences dependent on another sentence. See Book VI.

§ 513. 1. Only TRANSITIVE verbs can be used as gerundives, while neuter verbs, intransitive verbs, and transitives used without a passive subject (transitive object) must take the (impersonal) form of the gerund. The gerundive and gerund, in this respect, as in almost all other relations, are exactly treated as the passive voice in the ordinary conjugation. While the verbal adjective in -us, in the form of the gerundive, always agrees with its subject in gender, number, and case (the same as the compound tenses of the passive voice), it takes, in the form of the gerund, always the neuter singular in -um.

Militum virtus laudanda est, the bravery of the soldiers must be praised. — Militum virtutem laudandam esse censeo, I am of opinion that the bravery of the soldiers should be praised. — Milites laudandi sunt, the soldiers must be praised. — Milites laudandos esse censeo, I am of the opinion that the bravery of the soldiers should be praised. — Pugnandum est, a battle must be fought. — Dicendum esse existimo quid censeas, I believe that it must be said what you are thinking.

<sup>1</sup> A future-perfect laudandus fore is given in the grammars; but this is a mere theory, an example of its actual use in the Latin authors having not been found yet.

<sup>2</sup> The rendering and treatment of the impersonal gerund, if it has a subject infinitive, or a clause as subject, is not different from that of the personal gerundive in the third person singular of the neuter (with it): optandum est hoc evenire, it must be wished that this should happen.

2. In both the gerund and the gerundive, the PASSIVE AGENT or doer of the action, instead of being in the ablative with ab, as in the ordinary passive, is placed in the DATIVE CASE.

Discipulus mihi laudandus est, the student must be praised by me. — Ementibus cavendum est ne decipiantur, by those who buy, care must be taken lest they be deceived.

Rem. 165. Latin intransitives, requiring a completing object in the genitive, dative, or ablative, must take the form of the GERUND<sup>1</sup>:

Aut reipublice mihi, aut mei meorumque obliviscendum est (I must forget either the republic, or myself and mine). Liv. 8. 7. — Succurrendum est D. Bruto (D. Brutus must be aided). Cic. Phil. 6. 3. — Suo cuique iudicio utendum est (Every one must use his own judgment). Ib. N. D. 3. 1.

Rem. 166. In Varro and Lucretius TRANSITIVE verbs often take the impersonal form of the gerund even if they are accompanied by a transitive object in the accusative, as: Dandum operam est (inst. of danda opera est). Varro R. R. 1. 12. — Certe, ut opinor, eam faciendum est sensibus auctam (instead of ea facienda est aucta). Lucr. 3. 627. — Canes potius paucos et acris habendum (est) quam multos (instead of Canes pauci habendi sunt). Varro R. R. 1. 21. In Caesar and Livy no examples of this construction are found<sup>2</sup>: in Cicero only two examples of it are extant (de Sen. 2, and Scaur. 2, 13). But in the former of these passages the reading is doubtful.

Rem. 167. Very rarely the agent of the periphrastic gerund takes the ordinary form ab with the ablative, especially with verbs governing a dative, when it might be doubtful which of the two datives is meant to be the agent, and which is meant to be the object of the verb: Admonendum potius te a me quam rogandum puto. Cic. Div. 15. 4. — Aquantur bona multorum civium quibus a vobis est consulendum, the property of many citizens is at stake whose interests (quibus) must be provided for by you (a vobis). Cic. Man. 2. Sometimes the placing together of the two datives is avoided by a circumlocution of the gerund with faciendum est ut (similar to that with fore ut), as Faciendum mihi putavi ut tuis litteris brevi responderem. I believed that I ought to answer thy letter soon. Cic. Fam. 3. 8 (instead of tuis litteris mihi brevi respondendum putavi). But generally, when no ambiguity can arise, the two datives are used along with each other: Ut hac lege utar non conceditur ab eo cuius voluntati mihi obtemperandum est (by him whose will must be respected by me). Cic. Clu. 57. 158. The same is the case when only one dative is used which, by the sense, is clearly pointed out to be the dative of the agent, as: Eum qui imperat cogitare oportet, brevi tempore sibi esse parendum. Cic. Leg. 3. 2.

Rem. 168. When the gerund or gerundive is accompanied by the dative of the agent, the English construction is regularly made active, in order to avoid the awkward passive circumlocutions which are generally repugnant to our language. The Latin dative of the agent must then be changed into an English subject-nominative, as mihi moriendum est, I must die. Castra militibus facienda sunt, the soldiers must make a camp. In this active construction several expressions of necessity may be used which in the passive would not be admissible, as: 'it is the duty', 'I am obliged', 'it is necessary for me': Hec actio amico tuo instituenda fuit, it was thy friend's duty (it was incumbent on him) to institute this action. Mihi fugiendum erat, I was obliged (compelled) to flee. Illis vincendum fuit, for them it was (would have been) necessary to be victorious. Even if to the gerund no dative of the agent is added, the sentence is often rendered into English as if such a dative were expressed, as: Moriendum certe est, at id incertum, an eo ipso die (we must certainly die, etc.). Cic. Sen. 74. Si in alterutro peccandum est, malo videri nimis timidus quam parum prudens (if I am to err on one side, etc.). Cic. Marc. 21.

Rem. 169. The rules of the consecution of tenses (§ 349) are applied to the periphrastic

<sup>1</sup> Some grammarians except from this rule the verbs uti, frui, fungi and potiri, stating that, in the gerundive construction, they may be treated as transitives. But such a usage occurs with those writers only who use these verbs in their ordinary forms as transitives. In Cicero only a trace of this construction is found (Cic. Fin. 1. 1). — <sup>2</sup> The passages that were formerly adduced from these authors in proof of this usage of the gerund, have been critically emended, so as to be read now with gerunds. (Cæs. B. G. 1. 32. Liv. 37. 49.)

gerunds in the present and imperfect, the same as to ordinary verbs: Dubitat sociisne subveniendum sit, (he doubts whether the allies ought to be assisted). Dubitant sociisne subveniendum esset (he doubted whether the allies ought to be assisted). For the subjunctive of the perfect and pluperfect see R. 172 foll.

Rem. 170. In order to translate English sentences with phrases expressing 'necessity' into Latin sentences with gerundive construction, they must (if active) always be turned into passives, and if they have no transitive object, the impersonal form of the gerund must be given to them, the active subjects taking the form of the 'dative of the agent', as:

1. ACTIVE: The soldiers must undergo dangers; PASS.: Dangers must be undergone by (to) the soldiers—Militibus pericula subeunda sunt.

2. ACTIVE: You must take care that you do not arrive too late; PASS.: Care must be taken by (to) you that etc.—Curandum tibi est ne tardius advenias.

3. ACTIVE: Thy friend should obey the commands; PASS.: It should be obeyed by (to) thy friend to the commands—Amico tuo jussis obediendum est.

1. Liber est existimandus qui nulli turpitudini<sup>1</sup> servit<sup>2</sup>. Auct. Her. 4, 24.— 2. In omnibus rebus, priusquam aggrediare<sup>3</sup>, adhibenda est preparatio<sup>4</sup> diligens. Cic. Off. 1, 21.— 3. Tacite magis et occulte inimicitie timende sunt quam indicie<sup>5</sup> et aperte. Cic. Verr. 2, 5, 71.— 4. Sordidi sunt putandi qui mercantur<sup>6</sup> a mercatoribus<sup>7</sup> quod statim vendant<sup>8</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 42, 150.— 5. Fortes et magnanimi sunt habendi non qui faciunt, sed qui propulsant<sup>10</sup> injuriam. Cic. Off. 1, 65.— 6. Tria videnda<sup>11</sup> sunt oratori, quid dicat, et quo loco, et quo modo. Cic. Or. 43.— 7. Differendum nobis est, inquit (Cæsar), iter in presentia. Cæs. B. C. 3, 85.— 8. Existit questio subdificilis<sup>12</sup>, num quando<sup>13</sup> amici novi veteribus sint anteponendi. Cic. Am. 19, 67.— 9. Vobis carenda ac fugienda quam primum (§ 315. R. 18) amenitas<sup>14</sup> est Asiae. Liv. 38, 17.— 10. Ex his perspicit<sup>15</sup> potest quid sit propter turpitudinem fugiendum, quid iccirco<sup>16</sup> fugiendum non sit, quod omnino turpe non est. Cic. Off. 3, 7, 33.— 11. Ego vestros patres vivere arbitror, et eam quidem vitam quæ est sola vita nominanda. Cic. Sen. 21, 77.— 12. Philosophi Epicuri<sup>17</sup> omnia res quæ sunt homini expetende<sup>18</sup> voluptate metiuntur<sup>19</sup>. Cic. Pis. 68.— 13. Gesta<sup>20</sup> Romanorum neque cum Græcis<sup>21</sup>, neque ullâ cum gente sunt conferenda<sup>22</sup>. Cic. Tusc. 1, 2.— 14. Nemo in auctorem sui (§ 284) cohortandus est<sup>23</sup>. Sen. Ben. 4, 17.— 15. Nihil innocenti tam optandum (est) quam æquum judicium. Cic. Clu. 7.— 16. Si iero ad fratrem, moriendum est. Liv. 40, 10.— 17. Quum tempus necessitasque<sup>24</sup> postulat, decertandum<sup>25</sup> manu est, et mors servituti<sup>26</sup> turpitudinique anteponenda. Cic. Off. 1, 23.— 18. Aut negandum est deum esse, aut qui deum esse concedant, eis falendum est eum aliquid agere. Cic. Nat. D. 2, 76.— 19. Quis ad gubernacula<sup>27</sup> sedeat<sup>28</sup>, summâ curâ providendum<sup>29</sup> et præcavendum<sup>30</sup> vobis est. Liv. 24, 8.— 20. Etiam in secundisimis rebus<sup>31</sup> maxime est utendum consilio amicorum. Cic. Off. 1, 26.— 21. Aut assentiendum est<sup>32</sup> nullâ cum<sup>34</sup> gravitate<sup>35</sup> paucis<sup>36</sup>, aut frustra<sup>37</sup> dissentiendum. Cic. Fam. 1, 8, 3.— 22. Quæ more (according to usage) agentur institutisque civilibus, de eis nihil est præcipiendum<sup>38</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 41, 148.— 23. Resistendum, Læli et Scipio, senectuti est, ejusque vitia<sup>39</sup> diligentia compensanda<sup>40</sup> (sunt); pugnandum tanquam<sup>41</sup> contra morbum sic<sup>42</sup> contra senectutem; habenda ratio<sup>43</sup> valetudinis, utendum exercitationibus<sup>44</sup> modicis, tantum<sup>45</sup> cibi et potitionis<sup>46</sup> adhibendum<sup>47</sup> ut reficiantur vires, non opprimantur, nec vero corpori soli subveniendum est, sed menti atque animo multo magis. Cic. Sen. 11, 35.— 24. Multis casibus didici, quando pugnandum, quando abstinendum pugnâ sit<sup>48</sup>. Liv. 44, 36.— 25. Civitatis vestre tyrannum talem esse inter omnis constat, ut de penâ ejus magis quam de amicitia nobis cogitandum sit. Liv. 38, 14.— 26. Quin<sup>49</sup> resistendum sit impugnantibus<sup>1</sup>, ne is quidem dubitat qui spe victoria caret. Just. 38, 4.

<sup>1</sup> Disgrace, vice.— <sup>2</sup> to be a slave.— <sup>3</sup> to begin.— <sup>4</sup> preparation.— <sup>5</sup> pronounced.— <sup>6</sup> to purchase.— <sup>7</sup> dealer.— <sup>8</sup> instead of vendituri sunt.— <sup>9</sup> magnanimous.— <sup>10</sup> to ward off.— <sup>11</sup> to see to three things.— <sup>12</sup> rather difficult.— <sup>13</sup> sometimes, inst. of aliquando. See § 357, R. 4. § 359, R. 11.— <sup>14</sup> the charms.— <sup>15</sup> perspicere, to see (clearly).— <sup>16</sup> iccirco quod, for the reason that.— <sup>17</sup> Epicurean.— <sup>18</sup> expetere, to desire.— <sup>19</sup> metiri, to measure.— <sup>20</sup> deeds.— <sup>21</sup> those of the Greeks. Instead of the form mentioned § 307, 1, the attributive genitive is often directly compared with the governing word of the attribute that forms the first member of the comparison. This is called 'comparatio compendiaria'.— <sup>22</sup> conferre, to compare. (The gerund means here 'do not allow', 'do not admit').— <sup>23</sup> to exhort.— <sup>24</sup> necessity.— <sup>25</sup> decertare manu, to fight with the hand, i. e., to make use of arms.— <sup>26</sup> slavery.— <sup>27</sup> gubernacula, pl. t., helm.— <sup>28</sup> subjunctive, with the force of a gerund.— <sup>29</sup> to provide for.— <sup>30</sup> to consider with care.— <sup>31</sup> in the greatest prosperity.— <sup>32</sup> assentiri alicui, to endorse somebody's opinions.— <sup>33</sup> without any.— <sup>34</sup> dignity.— <sup>35</sup> paucis is the object of both, assentiendum and dissentiendum.— <sup>36</sup> without effect, to no purpose.— <sup>37</sup> præcipere aliquid, to lay down rules.— <sup>38</sup> defects.— <sup>39</sup> to make up.— <sup>40</sup> as if.— <sup>41</sup> so.— <sup>42</sup> rationem habere alicujus rei, to have due regard for something.— <sup>43</sup> exercise.— <sup>44</sup> only so much.— <sup>45</sup> drink.— <sup>46</sup> to take.— <sup>47</sup> for this deviation from the law of consecution, see p. 426 foll., Obs. 2.— <sup>48</sup> that.

§ 514. The IMPERFECT INDICATIVE (more rarely the Perfect, see Ex. 17. 18) of the periphrastic gerund or gerundive, indicates that a necessity of some future action existed at a time anterior to the speaker's time, as Regis litteræ in senātu legendæ erant, the king's letter had to be read in the Senate. The PERFECT (more rarely the Imperfect) is used in a HYPOTHETICAL sense (contrary to reality), indicating that an action ought to have been done, or that, in a certain contingency, it would have been necessary to do the action: Hoc non pollicendum fuit (more seldom erat), this ought not to have been promised. Hoc faciendum fuit si etc., it would have been necessary to do this if etc.

Rem. 171. Rarely the imperfect indicative refers hypothetically to a PRESENT necessity (inst. of a subj. imp.), Quodsi Cn. Pompejus Romæ privatus esset, hoc tempore tamen ad tantum bellum is erat (inst. of esset) eligendus (ought to be elected). Cic. Leg. M. 17. For the particulars of this construction see p. 727 foll., Obs. 24, 26.—The English PERFECT POTENTIAL with 'must' is not expressed by the periphrastic gerundials, but by oportet, or necesse est, with a perfect subjunctive: Quoniam habes istum equum, aut emeris oportet, aut munere acciperis, aut, si horum nihil est, surripueris necesse est; You must have either bought the horse, or received it as a gift, or must have stolen it. Cic. Inv. 1, 45.

Rem. 172. In the SUBJUNCTIVE mood the IMPERFECT of the gerund or gerundive is subject to, or exempt from the rules of consecution in the same way as ordinary verbs (§§ 349. 350), as: Præcepit senatui quid esset decernendum, he directed the Senate what to decree (what was to be decreed). See Ex. 9.— Si hoc faciendum esset, equidem recusarem, if this were to be done, I should refuse. See Ex. 10. 11. Instead of the gerund or gerundive with essem, the gerund or gerundive with forem is sometimes employed. But generally it performs the office of the lacking future subjunctive of the periphrastic conjugation, indicating a necessity that will arise at some future time. See Ex. 12. 13.

Rem. 173. The PERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE of the periphrastic gerundials hardly ever occurs in any other than hypothetical meaning, denoting either what ought to have been done (Ex. 21. 22), or what would have been necessary or unavoidable if some other action had or had not happened (see the Ex. below). The law of consecution, in this form, is subject to the same exceptions as in regard to the periphrastic future (p. 132, R. 145): Ita gesta res est ut, si adfuissent Etrusci, accipienda clades fuerit (that a defeat would have been unavoidable). Liv. 10, 27.—A necessary action, really performed, if a subjunctive must be used, is not expressed by the perfect gerundial, but by circumlocution with debere, oportet, etc.

Rem. 174. The PLUPERFECT INDICATIVE is generally applied with the force of the hypothetical perfect (ought to have been). See Ex. 23, but also in its proper meaning, to denote the necessity of an action as past in regard to a past time. See Ex. 24. The PLUPERFECT SUBJUNCTIVE, the same as in ordinary verbs, is used in hypothetical periods (§ 350), either in the principal sentence, or in the clause. Si hoc mihi faciendum fuisset, recusassem, if I should have had to do this, I would have refused. Hoc mihi faciendum fuisset, nisi litteræ tuæ venissent, I would have been obliged to do this if not thy letter had arrived. See Ex. 25. 26.

☞ In the use of the future of the gerund or gerundive no anomaly is to be noticed.

1. Cæsari omnia uno tempore erant agenda: vexillum<sup>2</sup> proponendum<sup>3</sup>, signum tubæ<sup>4</sup> dandum, ab opere revocandi milites, acies instruenda<sup>5</sup>, milites cohortandi. Cæs. B. G. 2, 20.— 2. Romanis iter per regnum nostrum dedi, et per Thraciam, ubi pax præstanda<sup>6</sup> barbaris<sup>7</sup> erat. Liv. 39, 28.— 3. Dilectibus<sup>8</sup> intra paucos dies—neque enim multi milites legendi<sup>9</sup> erant—perfectis, consules in provincias proficiscuntur. Liv. 37, 51.— 4. Civitatem Eburonum suâ sponte<sup>10</sup> populo Romano bellum facere ausam (esse), vix erat credendum. Cæs. B. G. 5, 28.— 5. Militibus simul et de navibus desiliendum et in fluctibus<sup>11</sup> consistendum<sup>12</sup> et cum hostibus erat pugnandum. Cæs. B. G. 4, 24.— 6. Apud Pythagoram<sup>13</sup> discipulis quinque annis tacendum erat. Sen. Ep. 52.— 7. Cum montem hostes cepissent, et locum munito se tenèrent, eundem ad hostis erat, si vincere vellem.

<sup>1</sup> impugnare, to attack.— <sup>2</sup> The flag.— <sup>3</sup> to bring up.— <sup>4</sup> the tuba.— <sup>5</sup> to draw up.— <sup>6</sup> to warrant, to keep.— <sup>7</sup> A barbaris is not the passive agent, but means 'on the part of'. See § 445, R. 55.— <sup>8</sup> dilectus, 4th decl., a draft.— <sup>9</sup> to draft.— <sup>10</sup> of their own accord.— <sup>11</sup> waves.— <sup>12</sup> to stand.— <sup>13</sup> Nom. Pythagoras, Greek decl.

Quid<sup>1</sup> si urbem cum mœnibus eo loco tenèrent? Nempe<sup>2</sup> oppugnandi<sup>3</sup> erant, Liv. 38, 49.—8. Armatus quadrifas<sup>4</sup> in primâ acie locaverat<sup>5</sup> rex, quia si in extrêmo aut in medio locatæ forent, per suos (milites) agendæ<sup>6</sup> erant, Liv. 37, 41.—9. Hi mihi non id videbantur accensare quod esset accusandum, Cic. Sen. 3.—10. Damon vas<sup>7</sup> factus est Phintias<sup>8</sup>, ut si hic non ad diem certam revertisset (§ 344), moriendum esset sibi, Cic. Off. 3, 10, 45.—11. Si pro alio dicendum<sup>9</sup> esset, tempus ad meditando<sup>10</sup> sumpsissem, Liv. 40, 15.—12. Periculum esse dixit ne victi magis timendi forent quam bellantes fuissent, Liv. 39, 35.—13. Patres consulis copias minui<sup>11</sup> nolébant, metu ne cum Gallis foret bellandum, Liv. 37, 51.—14. Utinam<sup>12</sup>, inquit C. Pontius Samnis<sup>13</sup>, 'tum essem natus si quando Romani dona accipere cepissent!' Næ illi multa<sup>14</sup> sæcula<sup>15</sup> expectanda fuerunt! Cic. Off. 2, 21, 75.—15. Promissum potius non faciendum quam tam tætrum facinus admittendum fuit<sup>16</sup>, Cic. Off. 3, 25, 95.—16. Hoc quidem præceptum falsum est; illud potius præcipiendum fuit, ut ne quando amare inciperemus eum quem aliquando odisse possimus, Cic. Am. 16, 60.—17. Cum Aristonico bellum gerundum fuit P. Licinio et L. Valerio consulibus, Cic. Phil. 11, 8.—18. Quo tandem animo fuisse illos arbitramini quibus his de rebus non modo audiendum fuit, verum etiam iudicandum! Cic. Clu. 10, 29.—19. Quamobrem<sup>17</sup> aut exigendi<sup>18</sup> reges non fuerunt, aut plebi re<sup>19</sup>, non verbo<sup>20</sup>, danda libertas, Cic. Leg. 3, 10, 25.—20. Maxime fuit oplandum M. Scauro, iudices, ut sine offensione<sup>21</sup> cuiusquam retinere<sup>22</sup> familie sue dignitatem, Cic. Saur. 1, 1.—21. Dubitari potest, adhibendumne<sup>23</sup> fuerit hoc genus<sup>24</sup>, an plane<sup>25</sup> omittendum, Cic. Off. 3, 2, 9.—22. Quis est qui dubitet, quin hac re compertâ aut obeunda<sup>26</sup> mors Cluentio aut suscipienda<sup>27</sup> accusatio<sup>28</sup> fuerit? Cic. Cluent. 17, 48.—23. Totus<sup>29</sup> est nunc ab eis a quibus tuendus fuerat, relictus, Cic. Fam. 1, 9, 17.—24. Consul, perfectis (eis) quæ Romæ agenda fuerant, profectus in Galliam est, Liv. 31, 22.—25. Si hoc mihi per me efficiendum fuisset, non me penitèret ita esse molitum, Cic. Fam. 6, 12, 2.—26. Nisi revertisset Dejotarus, in eo conclavi<sup>30</sup> ei cubandum<sup>31</sup> fuisset quod proximâ nocte corruit<sup>32</sup>, Cic. Div. 2, 8, 20.—27. Et mores ejus erunt spectandi<sup>33</sup> in quem beneficium confertur, et animus erga nos, Cic. Off. 1, 14.—28. Si Galli bellum facere conabuntur, excitandus<sup>34</sup> erit ab inferi<sup>35</sup> C. Marius, Cic. Font. 26.—29. Imprimis videndum erit ei qui rempublicam administrabit, ut<sup>36</sup> suum quisque teneat, Cic. Off. 2, 21.

§ 515. The two INFINITIVES of the Gerund and Gerundive are used only in infinitive clauses, whether these are construed with a subject-accusative, or with a subject-nominative. In this construction the present infinitive of the copula (esse) is frequently dropped. The perfect infinitive has almost always a (past) hypothetical meaning: Hoc faciundum fuisse putavit, he thought that this ought to have been done.

Rem. 175. The most usual verbs after which infinitive clauses with the gerund or gerundive are used, are those of THINKING and DECREERING (existimare, putare, iudicare, censere, decernere, statuere and especially videri with a nominative with the infinitive). It is a remarkable exception to the general rules that verbs of DECREERING, DEMANDING, and other verbs which, according to § 393, R. 27, are construed with ut, must be construed with an infinitive clause, if the dependent predicate is a gerund or gerundive. The verb censere (to believe, to deem), if it is thus construed with a gerundive infinitive clause, generally means 'to decree', 'to pass a resolution', or 'to move, to propose a resolution'.

Cato Carthaginem delendam censuit, Cato moved that Carthage be destroyed.—Patres diem unum adjiciendum ludorum censuerunt, The Senate passed a resolution that one day of the games be added. Liv. 39, 7.—Sibi quisque deposcit, pellendos inde hostis, Every one demands on his own account that the enemy must be driven away. Liv. 22, 28.—Legati domum mittendi (esse) videntur, it seems that the envoys ought to be sent home.—

How.—<sup>2</sup> of course, surely.—<sup>3</sup> to attack.—<sup>4</sup> chariots (with four horses).—<sup>5</sup> to place.—<sup>6</sup> to drive.—<sup>7</sup> bail, surety.—<sup>8</sup> Nom. Phintias.—<sup>9</sup> to speak.—<sup>10</sup> for deliberation.—<sup>11</sup> minuire, to diminish.—<sup>12</sup> would that.—<sup>13</sup> the Samnite.—<sup>14</sup> in an ironical sense = pauca.—<sup>15</sup> centuries. This sentence is remarkable, on account of an accusative of time being made the passive subject. The construction ought to have been impersonal.—<sup>16</sup> The second member of the comparison corresponds in grammatical form to the first. We employ here in English the infinitive.—<sup>17</sup> therefore.—<sup>18</sup> to expel.—<sup>19</sup> in reality.—<sup>20</sup> in words.—<sup>21</sup> offence.—<sup>22</sup> to maintain.—<sup>23</sup> to admit.—<sup>24</sup> subject.—<sup>25</sup> altogether.—<sup>26</sup> to undergo.—<sup>27</sup> to undertake, to commence.—<sup>28</sup> accusation.—<sup>29</sup> wholly.—<sup>30</sup> apartment.—<sup>31</sup> to sleep.—<sup>32</sup> to fall, to be destroyed.—<sup>33</sup> spectare, aliquid, to look for something, to take something into consideration.—<sup>34</sup> excitare, to rouse.—<sup>35</sup> inferi, the lower gods; here used instead of the 'lower world', the abode of the dead.—<sup>36</sup> videre is construed with ut, if it means 'to see that something be done'.

Legati domum mittendi fuisse videntur, it seems that the envoys ought to have been sent home.—Sempronio abeundum fuisse putavit, he believed that Sempronius ought to have left.

Rem. 176. Rarely the perfect infinitive of the Gerund or Gerundive refers to a past necessity without a hypothetical meaning, as: Non eatis mihi attendere videtis, Pompejo non solum quid esset optimum videndum fuisse, sed etiam quid necessarium (that it was Pompey's duty etc.). Cic. Lig. 3, 11, 26.—The gerund or gerundive with fore has likewise a hypothetical force referring to a future. It is used if a sentence whose predicate would be in the future of the gerund, must assume the form of an infinitive clause, as: Dixit si id factum esset, urbem hostibus tradendam fore (that it would be necessary to deliver the city to the enemy).

1. Rutilius, et si damnatus est, videtur mihi tamen inter viros optimos atque innocentissimos esse numerandus, Cic. Fonte. 17.—2. Difficile fuit iudicare, uter utri (§ 421, R. 73) virtute antefereendus<sup>1</sup> videretur, Cæs. B. G. 5, 44.—3. Regulus captivos reddendos in senatu non<sup>2</sup> censuit, Cic. Off. 1, 14.—4. Cæsar partiendum<sup>3</sup> sibi ac latius distribuendum exercitum putavit, Cæs. B. G. 3, 10.—5. Cæsar has tantularum<sup>4</sup> rerum occupationes<sup>5</sup> Britannicæ<sup>6</sup> anteponendas non iudicabat, Cæs. B. G. 4, 22.—6. Ariovistus tantos sibi spiritus<sup>7</sup> tantamque arrogantiam sumpserat<sup>8</sup> ut ferendus<sup>9</sup> non videretur, Cæs. B. G. 1, 33.—7. Quum multi delendum Atheniensium nomen, urbemque incendio consumendam censerent, negarunt se Spartani ex duobus Græciæ oculis alterum erudros<sup>10</sup>, Just. 5, 8.—8. Exules<sup>11</sup> vociferabant<sup>12</sup>, priusquam tali federe obligarentur<sup>13</sup>, noxios<sup>14</sup> puniendos esse, Liv. 38, 33.—9. Eis qui se occultaverant<sup>15</sup> rerum omnium inopiâ pereundum videbatur, Cæs. B. G. 6, 43.—10. Nec vero audiendi<sup>16</sup> qui graviter irascendum<sup>17</sup> inimicis putabant, Cic. Off. 1, 25.—11. Quis non videt, illis promissis standum<sup>18</sup> non esse quæ coactus quis<sup>19</sup> metu promiserit? Cic. Off. 1, 10.—12. Germanico<sup>20</sup> bello confecto Cæsar multis de causis statuit<sup>21</sup> sibi Rhenum esse transeundum, Cæs. B. G. 4, 16.—13. Segestani<sup>22</sup> prætoris imperio parendum esse decreverunt, Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 34.—14. Mithridates oplandum sibi fuisse ait, ut [de eo] liceret consulere bellumne sit<sup>23</sup> cum Romanis an pax habenda, Trog. Pomp. in Just. 38, 4.—15. Maxime assentior eis qui negant eum locum<sup>24</sup> a Panætio consulto<sup>25</sup> relictum<sup>26</sup>, nec omnino scribendum fuisse, Cic. Off. 3, 2, 9.—16. Scipio Nasica dixit, si id factum esset, non magis (§ 412) Corneliæ<sup>27</sup> familie quam urbi Romæ (Part I, p. 142, note 31) fore erubescendum, Liv. 38, 59.

§ 516. The predicative gerundive, similar to the adjective in urus (§ 510) is used without the copula 1) in place of a clause of purpose; 2) instead of a relative clause, as:

Hanc rem tibi conservandam dedi, I gave you this thing to preserve it, i. e., 'in order that you may preserve it' (literally 'to be preserved').—Nullam rem novi magis fugiendam quam hanc, I know nothing which ought to be more shunned than this.

✎ In these constructions the gerundive has the grammatical form of a completing or accessory predicate, or that of an attribute. But such gerundives must be distinguished from the attributive gerundives properly so called, which have a peculiar function of their own, losing altogether the idea of necessity. See R. 185.

Rem. 177. The predicate gerundive, denoting purpose (also called PARTICIPIAL GERUNDIVE, being a real participle of the periphrastic conjugation) is attached 1) to transitive objective phrases; 2) to passive predicative phrases; 3) (very rarely) to predicative phrases formed by neuter verbs. It always agrees in gender, number, and case with its logical sub-

<sup>1</sup> To prefer.—<sup>2</sup> The negation is taken out of the infinitive clause to which it logically belongs, and is connected with the principal verb. See § 411.—<sup>3</sup> to divide.—<sup>4</sup> tantulus, so trifling.—<sup>5</sup> occupation with.—<sup>6</sup> to the expedition to Britain.—<sup>7</sup> airs.—<sup>8</sup> sibi sumere, to assume.—<sup>9</sup> the gerund denotes here possibility (it seemed to be impossible to bear with him).—<sup>10</sup> to tear out.—<sup>11</sup> exile.—<sup>12</sup> to clamor.—<sup>13</sup> obligare, to bind.—<sup>14</sup> the guilty.—<sup>15</sup> to hide.—<sup>16</sup> to listen to.—<sup>17</sup> graviter irasci, to feel very angry.—<sup>18</sup> stare aliquare, to abide by a thing.—<sup>19</sup> inst. of aliquis.—<sup>20</sup> German, adj.—<sup>21</sup> verbs of decreeing may be construed with infinitive clauses containing gerundive predicates even if the subject of the clause and that of the principal sentence are the same. In English we use in this case object-infinitives in lieu of a clause.—<sup>22</sup> inhabitants of Segesta.—<sup>23</sup> for the deviation from the law of consecration see p. 420.—<sup>24</sup> subject.—<sup>25</sup> on purpose.—<sup>26</sup> to skip.—<sup>27</sup> Cornelian.

III. THE REVERSED PHRASES AND THE GERUNDIALS.

A. REVERSED PHRASES IN GENERAL.

§ 517. An attributive phrase, consisting of a substantive (noun or pronoun) as governing word and a passive participle or verbal adjective in dus as attribute, is called a REVERSED PHRASE, when the grammatical relation of the members of the phrase must be REVERSED in order to translate them into English, that is if the Latin PASSIVE ATTRIBUTE must be changed into an English ACTIVE participial or infinitive as the governing word of the Latin substantive, as Carthago delenda (delēta), 'the destroying of Carthage', or 'destroying Carthage', or 'to destroy Carthage'.

Rem. 183. The Latin language has introduced these reversed phrases, from its inability to decline the infinitive. It would be impossible for it to use phrases, corresponding to our 'of destroying Carthage', 'to destroying Carthage', 'by destroying Carthage' etc., if the participials in ing were expressed by Latin infinitives. Hence the Latins reverse the phrases by making them passive, placing thereby the object 'Carthage' in the position as subject of the phrase, so that the declension of the phrase required by the construction (see § 28) may be performed by declining its governing substantive. Thus instead of 'We are delighted by reading books' the Latin says 'We are delighted by books being read'.

Rem. 184. The Latin passive attribute in reversed phrases, corresponding to our participials in ing (or other verbal nouns) as governing words in transitive objective phrases, is either a perfect passive participle, or a verbal adjective in dus (gerundive), according to the rules given below. Thus we form the following phrases:

1. By giving advice we benefit, consilio dato prosumus (literally: 'by advice given we benefit'), or consilio dando prosumus (literally: 'by advice to be given we benefit').
2. The advice of undertaking a war, consilium belli suscipiendi (literally: 'the advice of a war to be undertaken').
3. The charge of having undertaken a war, belli suscepti crimen (literally: 'the charge of a war having been undertaken').

Rem. 185. The gerundive, in reversed phrases, loses its primary idea of necessity which it has as predicate-gerundive, assuming the force of a present or future PASSIVE PARTICIPLE. Attributive phrases with gerundives sometimes, but very rarely, are not reversed phrases (see Rem. 182), which is always clear from the connection. In this case they retain the idea of necessity. But aside from these rare instances, considered Rem. 182, a given phrase with an attributive gerundive must be considered as REVERSED. Thus apparatus urbium oppugnandarum (Liv. 43, 48) is not an apparatus of cities which are to be besieged (according to the literal acceptance of the phrase), but an apparatus for besieging cities. Phrases with PERFECT PARTICIPLES, however, have more generally the force of ordinary phrases, and the connection of the sentence alone can decide whether they must be taken as reversed phrases or not. This is often clear from the phrase itself. Thus 'crimen Romani presidii recepti' (the charge of having received a Roman garrison) can only be conceived as a reversed phrase, while 'dux presidii recepti' (the leader of the received garrison), makes sense only if taken for an ordinary phrase. Sometimes, however, the phrase itself may have either meaning, and the ulterior connection of the discourse must determine its force. Thus in the sentence Marcellus urbem ingressus omnis ad arma excitavit (Liv. 25, 24) the phrase Marcellus ingressus seems to be an ordinary participial phrase (Marcellus, having entered the city, excited all to take up arms).

Nevertheless the connection with the previous and following sentences places it beyond doubt, that the phrase was meant by the author to be a reversed one, and that the sentence is to be rendered: 'The entering of Marcellus into the city excited all to take up arms against him'.

§ 518. The oblique cases of the IMPERSONAL GERUND (in the neuter singular) are employed to express those relations which are assigned to the English participial in ing if it is either without any object, or with objects which in Latin are INTRANSITIVE. Since the nominative of the English participial in ing generally corresponds to the Latin (subject)-infinitive, the oblique cases of the impersonal gerund are generally considered as equivalent to the cases of the infinitive, as: NOM. legere, reading; GEN. legendi, of reading; DAT. legendo, to reading; ACC. legendum or legere, reading; ABL. legendo, by reading.

Ex. 1. (without objects). The art of sailing, navigandi ars.—We are delighted by sailing, navigando delectamur.

2. (with intransitive objects). The habit of envying one's rivals, mos æmulis invidendi (invidere governing the dative).—The advice of seizing the camp, castris potiundi consilium.—They employed their time with lying in wait for the enemy, tempus hostibus insidiando absumebant.

Rem. 186. This gerund is called the GERUND ABSOLUTE, when it is necessary to distinguish it from other gerundial forms. It has the same relation to the attributive gerundive as absolute adjectives to ordinary attributive adjectives (§ 358. R. 9). Both, the gerund absolute and the attributive gerundive are comprised by the general name 'gerundials'.

Rem. 187. The gerund (absolute) must be considered as a participle of an IMPERSONAL PASSIVE, having an ACTIVE meaning, as all impersonal passives have when used without clauses as subjects. Vincitur, vincendum est etc., do not mean 'one is defeated', 'one must be defeated', but 'one defeats', 'one must defeat'. Thus ars navigandi must be conceived as ars qua navigatur (an art by which it is sailed); desiderium nocendi is an equivalent of desiderium quo nocetur. In this sense Caesar (B. G. 6, 34) says: ut potius in nocendo aliquid ommitteretur, quam cum aliquo militum detrimento noceretur.

Sometimes, indeed, absolute gerunds are used with the meaning of a PERSONAL PASSIVE; but such very rare usages must be considered as marks of inaccuracy, as: Spes restituenti nulla erat, there was no hope of being restored. Nep. Att. 9.—Cum populum nec persuadendo nec cogendo regi posse videret, when he had seen that the people could neither be governed by suasion (by being persuaded), nor by compulsion (by being compelled). Cic. Fam. 1, 9.—A perspicendo excludebatur, he was excluded from being seen. Cic. Acad. 2, 17, 53.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The theory of the gerundials, advanced by the author, is different from that of most grammarians, and entirely opposed to the theory of those who assign to the gerund an originally active meaning, without making any attempt of explaining the passive nature of the GERUNDIVE. The principal argument against the passive nature of the gerund absolute is taken from the fact that in many instances it is used as governing word of transitive objects (§ 519). But this shows only that those who used the language from the regular use of the impersonal gerund in relations logically active, had been gradually accustomed to feel it as an active, and having forgotten its original passive force, to assign in several important relations active functions to it. This usage is an anomaly, but one which has many analogies in Latin and in other languages, especially in the whole deponent verb, which is active in office, although unquestionably the deponent verbs have been once passives, both in form and meaning. If we take the active meaning of the gerund absolute (as an equivalent of the oblique cases of the infinitive) for the original one, the very existence of the reversed phrases, which would have been perfectly superfluous, could not be accounted for. On the other hand the analogy of the predicate-gerund which unquestionably has a passive impersonal nature, § 519. Usage has allowed the construction of the gerund absolute with transitive objects, in place of a reversed phrase with a gerundive 1) when the gerundive phrase is in the GENITIVE; 2) when it is in the ABLATIVE without a preposition. In other instances the use of the gerund with transitive objects is either unusual or inadmissible.

Thus the reversed phrase Spes urbis capiendæ, the hope of taking the city, may also be expressed by a gerund with a transitive object, literally answering to the English construction (Spes urbem capiendi). The sentence Hostis agris vastandis vexavit (he injured the enemy by devastating their fields) may be expressed Hostis agros vastando vexavit.

Rem. 188. Intransitive and neuter verbs, since they form no personal passives, cannot be used as gerundives in reversed phrases, except the verbs uti, frui, fungi, and potiri with their compounds (abuti, perfrui, perfungi, defungi), which may be used as gerundives, their ablative objects being made the governing words of the gerundive phrase, as: Justitiæ fruendæ causâ (inst. of justitiâ fruendi causâ), for the sake of enjoying justice. Cic. Off. 2, 12. Tempus libertatis potiundæ (inst. of libertate potiundi), the time for seizing (i. e., asserting) their liberty. Liv. 24, 14. But these verbs occur also in the gerund with intransitive objects, as Eâ lege male utendo, by making a bad use of that law. Liv. 41, 8 (the gerundive form would be eâ lege male utendâ).

§ 520. When a gerund is construed with a transitive accusative, the latter is sometimes changed by ATTRACTION into the case of the gerund if it is in the genitive, as agrôrum donandi causâ, instead of agros donandi causâ. This is called THE GERUND WITH AN ATTRACTED CASE.

Rem. 189. Hence the form of gerundials is fourfold: 1) the gerundive phrase (ars causarum dicendarum); 2) the gerund absolute (ars dicendi); 3) the gerund with a transitive accusative (ars causas dicendi); 4) the gerund with an attracted case (ars causarum dicendi). The first two are the regular grammatical forms of gerundials, the last two being exceptional forms.

Rem. 190. The form of participles is twofold: 1) that of the attributive participle (in reversed phrases), as crimen læsæ majestatis, the crime of offending the majesty; adjuncto fundo patrimonium augere, to increase one's property by (after) adding an estate; 2) that of the impersonal participle, which occurs rarely and exceptionally, and almost always in the ablative case, namely (a) in the construction of the impersonal ablative absolute (debellato, after the war had been finished); (b) dependent on opus est, as maturato opus est, it is necessary to hurry; (c) dependent on prepositions, and the fact that the connection of the gerund absolute with transitive objects, is only allowed in exceptional cases, go to show that the original meaning of the gerundials is a passive one, and that the function of the gerund as an active verb, in the cases where usage allows it, is an encroachment on a province originally belonging to the gerundive alone. The whole question is merely one of theory, having not the slightest bearing on the practical use of the gerundials.

especially pro, as pro viso aliquid referre, to report something as having been seen; pro præjudicâto aliquid ferre, to consider something as decided.

§ 522. Reversed phrases (gerundive and participial) and gerunds are used as members of sentences and phrases in the same way as ordinary substantives, and may perform all the offices of the latter. They are employed 1) as subjects (almost exclusively confined to participial phrases); 2) as predicate-nouns; 3) as attributive genitives and appositions; 4) as case-objects; 5) as prepositional objects and attributes. But in all these respects they are distinguished from ordinary nouns by special restrictions. The rules about these restrictions form the theory of gerundial and participial construction, being the most idiomatical chapter, and one of the most important subjects of Latin grammar.

Rem. 191. Reversed phrases are grammatically treated and analyzed like other attributive phrases, but they cannot, logically, be severed in the same way. Thus in the sentence Dio consilium Dionysii expellendi cepit the words consilium Dionysii must be grammatically considered as an attributive phrase. But they cannot be separately rendered by 'the plan of Dionysius', since Dionysii expellendi is a REVERSED phrase in which the grammatical attribute expellendi is logically the governing word to be joined with consilium. Grammatically, however, the combination consilium expellendi would be false. Hence reversed phrases must be analyzed and conceived as single words, and may in this respect be compared to compound nouns, from which they differ, however, by the perfect freedom with which each member of the combination, independently of the other, combines with other phrases and words (R. 193). Compare the word jusjurandum.

Rem. 192. The gerunds (of course always in the neuter singular), and the impersonal participles take the same case-inflection as ordinary nouns would in their place. The reversed phrases take these inflections by means of their governing substantives with which the gerundive or participle has to agree. Hence the cases, genders and numbers of the gerundives and attribute-participles are always DERIVED ones, being dependent on, and identical with the cases of their governing substantives.

Rem. 193. While the gerundials and participles are treated as nouns, respectively adjectives, in their inflection, they are CONSTRUED like VERBS in respect to the objects which they may govern. They may govern phrases of all kinds and even clauses (finite, infinitive, or participial).

When gerundials or participles have complicated objects, or when clauses are dependent on them, grammatical analysis according to the rules § 83 to § 105 should be resorted to. In this respect it is, first of all, necessary to separate the gerundial or participle with all its dependencies from the rest of the sentence, in order not to confound adjuncts belonging to the gerundial with those belonging to the principal predicate, the position of the words being frequently such as to induce the reader to make false connections in this respect. Beginners, who in reading such a sentence do not directly understand its general meaning, will often be obliged to make a TRIAL-ANALYSIS, it often being doubtful at first sight, where certain adjuncts or clauses belong. For this purpose examples of complicated gerundial constructions with most of the different kinds of objects and clauses are added here, (the gerundials and their adjuncts being marked by Italics):

1. GERUNDS WITH COMPLETING AND ADVERBIAL CASE-OBJECTS: Romani pluribus locis quatiendo arietibus muros aliquantum urbis nudaverunt, the Romans laid bare some not inconsiderable part of the city by shaking the walls at several places by means of rams. Liv. 38, 7.

2. GERUNDS WITH PREPOSITIONAL OBJECTS: Jussa ac vetita populorum vim habent ad recte facta cogendi et a peccatis deterrandi, the commands and prohibitions of the (different) peoples have the force of prompting the citizens to good actions, and of recalling them from evil deeds. Cic. Leg. 2, 4.

3. GERUNDS AND GERUNDIVES WITH ADVERBIAL OBJECTS: Aliquot dies disceplando palam de legibus, noctesque emittendis clam e castris Carthaginiensibus absumpti sunt, several days were spent in discussing openly about the conditions, and (several) nights in letting out secretly Carthaginian soldiers from the camp. Liv. 26, 17.

4. GERUNDS WITH OBJECT-INFINITIVES: Vidērent decemviri ne velando in curiā libere homines loqui extra curiam etiam rogerent vocem, the decemvirs should be careful lest, by forbidding men to talk freely in the council-hall, they might raise their voice outside the council-hall. Liv. 3, 39, 6.

5. GERUNDIVES WITH OBJECT-INFINITIVES: Aequi se ad prohibenda circumdare opera parabant, the Aequi prepared for preventing the works from being surrounded. Liv. 3, 28, 7.

6. GERUNDS WITH INTERROGATIVE CLAUSES: Unus ex Romanis, ex propinquo murum contemplans, numerando lapides, aestimandoque quid in fronte patērent anguli, altitudinem muri, quantum proxime conjectura poterat, permensus est, one of the Romans, taking a near view of the walls, by counting the stones, and by estimating what size each of them had in front, measured the height of the wall as nearly as he could do by guess. Liv. 25, 23.

7. GERUNDS WITH THAT-CLAUSES: Lucium Valerium proditum memoriae est, postulando ut de republicā liceret dicere, prohibentibus decemviris, tumultum excivisse, it is reported that L. Valerius had raised a tumult by demanding free speech (literally: that it should be allowed to speak about the republic), the decemvirs forbidding it. L. 3, 39.

8. GERUNDS WITH INFINITIVE-CLAUSES: Rhodii patiēdo rursus regem in Hellespontum trahere, occupantemque Thraciae opportuna loca vires colligere, bellum aluere; the Rhodians encouraged the war by suffering that the king should again cross over to Hellespontus, and that he should gain strength by occupying favorable positions in Thrace. Liv. 31, 15.

Rem. 194. Regarding the grammatical functions of the reversed phrases and gerunds in the sentence, the following general rules are to be noticed:

1. Gerunds can never be used as SUBJECTS. Participial reversed phrases are frequently used as subjects. In regard to gerundive phrases, the grammarians deny their use as subjects of a sentence; but it can be shown that even gerundive phrases, in certain constructions, are employed in the relation of subjects. (See R. 198.)

2. Gerundive phrases (never participial phrases, and gerunds only in one single connection) are used as PREDICATE-GENITIVES and PREDICATE-DATIVES (see R. 208).<sup>1</sup>

3. Gerunds and reversed phrases of both kinds very frequently occur as ATTRIBUTES of nouns, both as attributive genitives and as prepositional attributes. They are treated in this respect altogether as substantives would be in their places.

4. The APPORTIONAL relation of reversed phrases and gerunds is confined to that kind which, in English, we connect by 'namely' (explanative apposition), as:

(a) Numquam ingenium idem ad res diversissimas, parendum atque imperandum habilis fuit. Never was a mind more able to perform the most opposite things, namely obeying and commanding. Liv. 21, 4.—(b) Non immemore jus, quod initio consulatus imbiberat, reconciliandi animos plebis. Being not unmindful of that (disposition) which he had contracted in the beginning of his consulship, namely of reconciling the hearts of the people. Liv. 2, 47.—(c) Plebs gravabatur postquam et ad alia traducebantur opera, foras in circo faciendos, cloacamque maximam sub terram agenda. The Plebs felt wronged when they were misused also for other works, namely to construct seats (for the Patricians) in the Circus, and to make the underground channel for the great sewer. Liv. 1, 56, 2.

The English apposition by which verbal ideas as such are quoted, in the form of a participial in ing, or of an infinitive, being attached to the general terms 'word', 'verb', etc., are in Latin expressed by an attributive genitive-gerund dependent on the expressions nomen or verbum, as: The word suffering, patiendi verbum.—Triste est nomen ipsum currendi, the very word 'to want' is sad. Cic. Tusc. 1, 36, 87. If dependent on prepositions, the general governing words verbum or nomen are usually omitted in Latin, the quoted verb taking the same form as the noun omitted should have taken, as: A scribendo fit scriptor, from the verb scribere is derived the noun scriptor. Varro L. L. p. 117.

<sup>1</sup> Gerundives (but not gerundive PHRASES), and participles (but not participial PHRASES) are frequently used as predicates, namely in the periphrastic conjugation and in the ablatives absolute. But these forms do not belong here, since we consider here only those cases where a whole phrase stands in the relation of a predicate-noun.

5. When gerunds or reversed phrases are in the relation of OBJECTS, they denote mostly ADVERBIAL objects, especially those of PURPOSE (with the preposition ad, or the DATIVE and of CAUSE and INSTRUMENTALITY (by the ablative). See § 538, § 528, § 529. Here belongs the relation of TIME, expressed by participial phrases in the ablative (ablative absolute). See Rem. 215.

6. Considerably less frequent are the instances that COMPLETING OBJECTS are expressed by gerunds and reversed phrases. They occur most frequently as case-objects in the genitive, dependent on adjectives requiring an object in the genitive, as cupidus videndi, desirous of seeing. See R. 208. But they are also made dependent on verbs construed with the dative, the ablative and prepositional objects. (See § 528, 529, R. 239.) We even maintain, against the assertion of our grammarians that gerundive phrases occur as TRANSITIVE OBJECTS of verbs (see R. 198). Reversed participial phrases occur (though rarely) as completing objects of verbs in every one of the oblique cases, as:

Carthaginienses Caput amissa Tarentum captam aquabant, the Carthaginians set off the taking of Tarentum with the losing (the loss) of Capua (aequare rem rei). Liv. 26, 37.—Minecius non Hannibale magis a se victo quam Fabio gloriari, Minucius boasted not so much of his having defeated Hannibal as (of his having defeated) Fabius. Liv. 22, 27. gloriari adepta rei.—Scipio pecunia ab rege capta damnatus est, Scipio was condemned for having accepted money from the king. condemnare aliquem alicujus rei. Liv. 28, 56.—Faelis capitis supererunt Latiis, Latiis came immediately upon the performance of the marriage ceremony (supererunt alicui rei, to come upon something). Liv. 30, 12.—His orationibus scriptis ipse interfui. Cic. Br. 207.

Rem. 195. Not only nouns, but also pronouns and absolute adjectives (both descriptive and form-adjectives) may be the governing words in reversed phrases, as me conservando, by preserving me; ad ea efficienda, for effecting these things; quibus efficiendis (effectis), by the effecting of which things.

§ 523. The perfect participle and the gerundive in reversed phrases are distinguished by the idea of TIME which is attached to them in relation to the time of the principal predicate of the sentence. If the time of the action in the reversed phrase is represented as past in regard to the principal action, the reversed phrase takes a PERFECT PARTICIPLE; but if the time is conceived as coincident or as a future in regard to the principal action, the phrase is formed by a GERUNDIVE.

Gloriam capta nobilissime urbis dei tibi dedērunt, the gods gave to thee the glory of taking (having taken) the noblest city. Liv. 25, 29. But: gloriam capiende urbis expectant, they expect the glory of taking the city.—Culpam classis amissa in duces contulerunt, they laid the responsibility for the loss of the fleet (for having lost the fleet) on the leaders. But: Summum fuit periculum totius amittendae classis, there was the greatest danger of losing the whole fleet.—Legati de Messēne receptā exposuerunt (Liv. 24, 20), the ambassadors reported about the retaking of Messēne (indicating that Messēne had been captured at the time). Legati de Messēne receptandā exposuerunt would mean that the retaking was in contemplation at the time.

Rem. 196. Often both the participial and a gerundive phrase may be applied with equal propriety, when merely the consequences of a past action are spoken of. Thus Cicero says (P. R. 8, 4, 8): nihil egit nisi ut me conservato vestram dignitatem sanciret, he did nothing except that by preserving me (by my preservation, by having preserved me), he strengthened your dignity. Here a gerundive phrase (me conservando) might have been used with equal propriety. We may say navibus junctis flumen transiit (Cæs. B. G. 1, 8), By the latter expression the crossing is represented as a consequence of a previous act; by the former the joining of the ships is represented as the means by which the crossing was effected.

Rem. 197. Often both a perfect participle and a gerundive are pointedly opposed to each other to represent the same act as past and as present or future in regard to another action, as: Quia milites et capiendā urbe tantum labōris adissent, et captā cum eis qui in arcem confugerant, pugna-sent, since the soldiers had met with such hardships in capturing the city, and after its capture had fought with those who had fled to the fort. Liv. 26, 48.—Metellus dixit, non presentem solum dictatōrem obstitisse rei bene gerendae, sed absentem etiam gestae obstāre, that not only had the dictator, when present, opposed the achieving of future success, but was in his absence opposing the success that had been achieved. Liv. 22, 5.—Qui, partis honoribus, eisdem gessi labōres quos pelendis. Cic. Phil. 6, 6.

B. THE REVERSED PHRASES AS SUBJECTS AND TRANSITIVE OBJECTS.

§ 521. Gerundive phrases can generally not be used as subjects or transitive objects, and when English participials in ing are employed in this relation, they cannot be rendered by gerundive phrases, but must generally be expressed by subject-infinitives, by object-infinitives, or participial phrases (§ 525).

Rem. 198. The only case in which gerundive phrases may be used as transitive objects or subjects occurs with some of those verbs which are construed with a participial gerundive of purpose (§ 516, R. 176). Here belong the verbs curāre, locāre, conducere, attribuere, assignāre, and poscere, as oleam legendam curāre, to give out (on contract) the gathering of olives (Cato R. R. 144); pontem faciendum curāre, to cause the building of a bridge; alicui statuam transportandum assignāre, to assign to somebody the task of transporting a statue (Liv. 5, 22, 4); pellendos hostis sibi deposcere, to claim the office of driving out the enemy (Liv. 22, 28). When these verbs are in the passive, the gerundive phrases are in the relation of SUBJECTS, as olea legenda curatur etc.

Rem. 199. In all these examples the governing noun of the gerundive cannot be considered as the transitive object of the verbs mentioned, but it is the action contained in the gerundive which is the real object of the verb. Hence the phrases in which these gerundives occur must be taken for REVERSED phrases which must be considered as the transitive objects of the verbs mentioned. Most of the instances, however, in which gerundives are thus attached to the verbs enumerated § 516, must be taken for constructions of the participial gerundive of purpose. We may regard this participial gerundive as the boundary between the predicate-gerundive and the attribute-gerundive in reversed phrases. Some of these combinations belong to the one, and some to the other side of the limit, and several stand on the line itself, so that they may with equal propriety be considered as belonging to either side. Comp. sistendam puellam promittere. Liv. 3, 45.

§ 523. Reversed PARTICIPIAL phrases are used both as subjects and transitive objects of a verb, with the force of an English verbal noun to which the Latin governing noun is added as an attribute with 'of', as:

Receptus post fugam Antiochi Hannibalis Prusiam regem suspectum fecit et Romanis, the reception (receiving) of Hannibal after Antiochus's flight made king Prusias suspected by the Romans. Liv. 39, 57. — Angustus Hannibalem Siciliae stridulae angustiae, the loss (closing) of Sicily and Sicily itself caused anguish to Hannibal. Liv. 21, 1.

For examples of participial phrases as transitive objects see R. 194, 5.

Rem. 200. These subject-phrases may become passive agents in the ablative when the principal predicate is changed into a passive. They thus assume the form of ablatives absolute (Recepto Hannibale Prusias suspectus fidebat. Angēbatur Hannibal Sicilia Sardiniaque amissis). Such ablatives frequently occur, as: Ego autem nobilium vita victaque mutato mores mutari civitatum puto, but I believe that by a change of the life and diet of the nobility the social conditions of states are changed. Cic. Leg. 3, 14.— Sublata benevolentia amicitiae nomen tollitur, by taking away benevolence, the name of friendship is destroyed. Cic. Am. 5, 19. When these constructions are made active, the participial phrases become the subjects of the sentence (vita victusque mutatus . . . mutat; sublata benevolentia . . . tollit).

Rem. 201. Reversed participial phrases are rarely used as subjects by Cicero, but more frequently by Livy, and very often by the writers of the silver age. Livy, in a few passages, has even attempted to introduce impersonal perfect participles as subjects, a harsh construction, which has not been received into the language, as: Pronuntiatum repente ne quis praeter armatos violaretur, reliquam omnem multitudinem armis exiit, the sudden announcing that etc. made the rest deliver their arms. Liv. 4, 59. Similarly are used audium (28, 26); tentatum (7, 22); degeneratum (1, 53); peritatum (7, 8).

1. Dubitabat nemo quin (that) violati hospites<sup>1</sup>, legati necati, socii nefario bello lacerati, fanat verat<sup>2</sup>, hanc tantam efficerent vastitatem<sup>4</sup>. Cic. Pis. 35, 85.— 2. Nulla res Lacedaemoniis magis erat damno quam disciplina Lycurgi, cui per septingentos annos assueverant<sup>5</sup>, sublata. Liv. 33, 34.— 3. Hannibalem ante omnia angēbat quod Capua pertinacius<sup>6</sup> oppugnata ab Romanis quam defensa ab se, multorum Italiae populorum animos averterat<sup>7</sup>. Liv. 26, 38.— 4. Quum Tarentum amissum Romanis damno<sup>8</sup> et dolore, tum arx cum praesidio relenta praeter spem gaudio fuit. Liv. 26, 37.— 5. Consulatu Ciceronis non mediocriter<sup>9</sup> adjecit decus<sup>10</sup> natus eo anno Divus Augustus. Vell. 2, 36.— 6. Proderit discipulis alicuius oburgata<sup>11</sup> desidia vel laudata industria. Quint. 1, 2, 21.— 7. Lentulo gloriae fuit bene tolerata<sup>12</sup> paupertas. Tac. A. 4, 44.— 8. Terra mutata non mutat mores. Liv. 37, 54.— 9. Occisus dictator Caesar aliis pessimum, aliis pulcherrimum facinus videbatur. Tac. A. 1, 8.— 10. Invidia erat amissum Cremerae praedium. Liv. 2, 52.

C. REVERSED PHRASES AND GERUNDS IN THE GENITIVE.

§ 526. The genitive of gerundials is used 1) as an ATTRIBUTE of all nouns with which attributive genitives may be connected, as desiderium gloriae obtinendae, a desire for obtaining glory; cupido discendi, eagerness for learning.— 2) as a COMPLETING OBJECT of most of the adjectives construed with an object in the genitive (§ 499), as cupidus urbis expugnandae, desirous of taking the city; insuetus navigandi, unaccustomed to sailing.— 3. Gerundive phrases (not gerunds) are used as PREDICATE-GENITIVES of quality (§ 466, 3) as hoc dissolvendae disciplinae est, this is apt (will lead) to dissolving (the dissolution of) discipline.—Neither gerunds nor gerundive phrases are used as completing objects of verbs governing the genitive.

Rem. 202. FORM OF THE GERUNDIAL GENITIVE. Whether a gerundial genitive must assume the form of a gerund or of a gerundive phrase, is determined by the general rules (§§ 517, 518, 519). If the verb is transitive, and accompanied by its transitive object, both forms, that of a gerundive phrase, and that of a gerund-genitive with a transitive object in the accusative are admissible, without discrimination in meaning, although gerundive phrases are more frequently employed than gerunds with an accusative. Thus the phrase 'the promise of delivering the hostages' may be rendered either promissum obsides tradendi, or promissum obsidum tradendörum. But when the transitive object of the gerund is a personal pronoun, a gerundive phrase cannot be used (R. 205).

<sup>1</sup> Guest-friend.— <sup>2</sup> fanum, temple.— <sup>3</sup> to plunder.— <sup>4</sup> destruction.— <sup>5</sup> assuescere, to become accustomed.— <sup>6</sup> pertinax, obstinate.— <sup>7</sup> to avert.— <sup>8</sup> injury.— <sup>9</sup> non mediocriter, not a little.— <sup>10</sup> ornament.— <sup>11</sup> to rebuke.— <sup>12</sup> brave endurance.

Rem. 203. When the Latin verb has an intransitive object, the form of the gerund alone is admissible, as consuetudo æqualibus invidendi (not æqualium invidendorum), the habit of envying one's equals. But gerundial genitives of the verbs uti, frui etc. take either the form of a gerund or that of a gerundive phrase. See R. 188.

Rem. 204. Sometimes the transitive genitive gerund takes the form of a gerund with an attracted case (§ 520). This is, generally, the case only if the object is a noun in the plural number, as Penarum solvendi tempus est aduultum, the time of paying the penalty has come. Lucr. 5, 1225. See Ex. D, 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. But when the transitive object is one of the personal pronouns, this form is used also when the pronouns are in the singular, as Tui (a female) videndi est copia, there is an opportunity of seeing thee. Plaut. Truc. 2, 4, 19.—Ejus (Philumenæ) videndi cupidus, desirous of seeing her. Ter. Hec. 3, 3, 12.

Rem. 205. When the pronouns me, te, se, nos, vos are transitive objects of the gerund, the use of a gerundive phrase (for inst. nostri videndorum cupidus) is inadmissible, and the gerundials, in this case, must either take the form of a transitive gerund with their pronominal objects in the ACCUSATIVE, or that of the gerund with an ATTRACTED GENITIVE (§ 520). The same is generally the case with the pronouns is, ea, id.

The same is generally the case with the pronouns is, ei, de.
 Germani ad Caesarem venerunt sui plur.) purganti (not purgantem) causā. the Germans came to Caesar for the sake of cleansing themselves. (Cæs. B. G. 4, 13. - Non vestri adhortandi causā magnificē loquor. I do not speak in an exalted tone for the sake of exhorting you. Liv. 2, 41. - Omnia facias eorum quae secundum naturam sunt adpli- scendi causā. You must do all for the sake of obtaining those things which are agreeable to nature. Cic. Fin. 5, 7. - Multis illi in urbibus reficiendi se potestas fuit.
 he had the power to restore himself in many cities. Cic. Phil. 9, 3, 6.

Obs. 1. The German grammarians (Zumpf, Madvig, Kühner, Meiring etc.) take these gerunds with attracted cases (as vestri authoritatis causa) for gerundive phrases. In order to account for the non-agreement in number and gender of the gerundal with the governing pronoun, Madvig has invented the paradox theory that the Latin personal pronouns lack the genitive case, and that where such a case is required, the SETTER SINGULAR of the possessive adjective (of meum etc.) is borrowed with the force of a personal pronoun in all genders. Zumpf considers the non-agreeing gerundive an original blunder, legalized by habit. The others try to explain this anomaly by the remark that the genitives of the personal pronouns were 'originally' neuter possessives.

All these theories are refuted by the following reasons :

1. It is extremely doubtful whether the genitive of the personal pronouns was 'originally' the genitive neuter of the possessives, which adjectives are, on the contrary, derived from the root of the personal pronouns.

2. Even granting this, it would fail to account for the neuter gender of the gerundial, since there is not the slightest doubt that, at the time of the literary use of the language, the Romans both considered and felt these genitives as the cases of PERSONAL PRONOUNS, not as the cases of NEUTER POSSESSIVES. All Roman grammarians represent mei etc. as the regular genitives of ego etc., assigning to them the COMMON GENDER, not the NEUTER gender. We can imagine a logical agreement which is ungrammatical, or a grammatical agreement which is illogical, but an agreement both illogical and ungrammatical is an impossibility.

3. The theory of the German grammarians in no way accounts for the use of ejus (referring to a woman) with a neuter gerundive.

4. Nor will this theory account for the use of a reflexive phrase in the form of a (passive) gerundive (for inst. sui purgandi causâ). It is grammatically incongruous to consider purgandi as a PASSIVE gerundive governed by sui, since reflexive verbs cannot be changed into passives, it being impossible to give to the phrase 'Germāni se purgant' a passive form. It is true that 'reflexive gerundives' (very rarely) occur with the accusative and ablative se; but only from the reason explained in OBS. 2.

5. If the theory of the German grammarians be adopted, three different grammatical anomalies must be accounted for, while our theory assigns these apparent anomalies to one regular form, that of the gerund with an attracted case, which has so many analogies in the language that it can hardly be considered as an anomaly.

Obs. 2. According to our theory even such forms as mei custodiendi causâ, where the gender and number of the gerundial are the same as those of the pronoun, must be considered as gerunds with attracted cases, and not as gerundives. We must assume that this form was chosen because it was generally repugnant to the Latin idiom to connect adjective attributes with pronouns (§ 276). Hence, in the construction of the gerundial dative, gerundive constructions with personal pronouns never occur, and in the ablative, the gerundive form was probably admitted on account of the identity in form of the accusative with the ablative in most of the pronouns, which would make an attraction of the case unrecognizable.

Rem. 206. The gerundial attributive genitive is either 1) virtually a COMPLETING OBJECT of ABSTRACT nouns in regard to the verbal or adjective idea contained in them (OBS. 1); or it is 2) attached to PERSONAL nouns denoting the DOERS of such actions (OBS. 2); or it has 3) the force of RESTRICTING and specifying the general abstract nouns of CAUSE, TIME and MODALITY (OBS. 3).

MODALITY (OBS. 3).

OBS. 1. The abstract nouns to which the gerundial genitive is in the relation of a completing object are either derived from verbs, requiring completing objects, or from adjectives admitting a subject-infinitive, or they correspond to such verbs or adjectives in their MEANINGS. Such nouns are spes, desiderium, cupidō, promissum, simulatio, species (pretext, appearance), studium, cogitatio, suspicio, libido, testimonium, consilium, voluntas, potestas, consueitudo, initium, exercitatio, scientia, amor, desperatio, melus, signum, scientia, ars, jus, audacia, facultas, difficultas, necessitas, diacritas, dulcedo. The gerundial genitives dependent on such nouns are rendered by participles in ing after 'of' or other prepositions, especially in or for, and sometimes by object-infinitives, as consilium belli inferendi, the advice to commence a war; necessitas pugnandi, the necessity of fighting; audacia resistendi, boldness in resisting; studium plebis tuendæ, the zeal for protecting the common people; signum dat invadendi, he gives the signal for attack. Liv. 22, 4.

ORR. 2. To the personal nouns construed with gerundial genitives belong testis, auctor, princeps, dux, auxiliis, reus, vas, doctor, artifex. The English equivalents of such nouns cannot generally be construed with participials in ing, and the Latin phrase must be often recast in rendering, as Aeneas semper auctor revertendæ Helene erat (Aeneas had always advised the returning of Helena (literally 'was always an adviser of returning')). Liv. 1, 1. Testis pugnandi, a witness to the fight. Reus causam dicendi, a defendant in the trial. Doctor dicendi, a teacher in the art of speaking. Princeps fugiendi, the foremost in the flight.

most in the flight.

Obs. 3. To the nouns denoting TIME, CAUSE, and MODALITY, which may be restricted by gerundial genitives, belong tempus, dies, spatium, mora, otium, causa, ratio, ocasio, locus (in the general meaning 'situation', 'condition', 'occasion'), fortuna (fortunate situation or condition), fatis, modus, genus, as Tempus quiescendi, time for rest (resting situation or condition); mora deliberandi, a time for deliberation (a delay or respite that might be applied to deliberation). Here belong the prepositional ablatives causâ, gratiâ, and the anteclassical ergo, in the meaning 'on account of', 'for the sake of', which are very frequently construed with gerundial genitives, as sui purgandi causâ, for the sake of clearing himself (herself, themselves); pacis faciendâ gratiâ, for the sake of making peace. These nouns are often, as subjects, connected with esse as an independent predicate, in the meaning 'there is', giving thus to the gerundial genitive the appearance of a subject-infinitive, as Tempus non fuit tela mittendi, there was no time to throw the darts.—Quod in eo causa peccandi non erat, because there was no reason to injure him.—Cæs. B. G. I. 47. Scribendi otium non erat, there was no leisure for writing. Cic. Off. 2. 1. 4. If, however, such nouns, together with the copula esse form an impersonal predicate, the verbal action must be expressed by a subject-infinitive, and not by the gerundial genitive, as Nunc corpora curare tempus est, now is the (right) time for refreshing the body. Liv. 21. 64 tempus est = convenit, expedit, it is timely).—Nulla est ratio amittere ejusmodi occasionem, there is no reason why such an opportunity should be lost. Cic. Cæc. 5, 15 (nulla ratio est = it is unreasonable).

A. GERUNDIVE PHRASES.— 1. Cæsar praelii committendi<sup>1</sup> signum dedit. Cæs. B. G. 2, 21.— 2. Cassius et Manlius propter suspicionem regni<sup>2</sup> appellendi<sup>3</sup> sunt necati. Cic. Phil. 2, 114.— 3. Caesar non existimabat, Helvetios, data facultate<sup>4</sup> per provinciam itineris faciendi<sup>5</sup> ab injuria et maleficio temperaturos. Cæs. B. G. 1, 7.— 4. Hostibus eadem de causa spes potiundi oppidi<sup>6</sup> decessit. Cæs. B. G. 2, 7.— 5. Philippus per speciem auxilii Byzantii ferendi profectus, Thraces uno praelio devicit. Liv. 39, 35.— 6. Hannibalem ingens cupido<sup>7</sup> inceserat<sup>8</sup> Tarenti potiundi. Liv. 24, 13.— 7. Legati ad arcessendum Hannibalem cum haud dubio promisso tradenda urbis venerunt. Ib.— 8. Initia sunt consilia urbis delenda, civium trucidandorum<sup>11</sup>, nomini Romani exstinguendi. Cic. Mur. 37.— 9. Audacia decemvirali<sup>12</sup> magna permittitur potestas<sup>13</sup> corrumperendarum<sup>14</sup> tabularum publicarum<sup>15</sup>, flagrandorumque<sup>16</sup> sententiarum<sup>17</sup> republicarum<sup>18</sup> reus, quam facta sunt. Cic. Leg. Agr. 2, 11, 37.— 10. Catilina, pecuniarum repetundarum<sup>19</sup> reus, prohibitus erat consulatum petere<sup>20</sup>. Sall. Cat. 18.— 11. Perfuga nuntiat Brutis. Aristomachus esse principem plebes, tradendaque auctorem urbis. Liv. 24, 2.— 12. Princeps omnium Pansa praelii faciendi<sup>21</sup> et cum Antonio confidendi<sup>22</sup> fuit. Cic. Phil. 14, 9, 26.— 13. Vas factus est Damon quis sistendi<sup>23</sup>, ut si ille non revertisset, moriendum esset sibi. Cic. Off. 3, 10, 45.— 14. Omnia iudicia<sup>24</sup> aut distrahendorum<sup>25</sup> controversiarum aut puniendorum malificorum<sup>26</sup> causa reperti<sup>27</sup> sunt. Cic. Cæs. 2.— 15. Germani celeritate adventus nostri, neque consilii habendi<sup>28</sup>, neque arma capiendi spatio dato<sup>29</sup>, perturbantur. Cæs. B. G. 4, 14.— 16. Fortuna vobis oblata est, pro tantis Populi Romani beneficiis gratie referenda<sup>30</sup>. Liv. 5, 44, 3.

B. GERUNDIS ABSOLUTE.— 1. Nostri expectabant si<sup>31</sup> ab hostibus initium transeundi fieret. Cæs. B. G. 2, 9.— 2. Hos homines spes predandi<sup>32</sup> et studium bellandi ab agri cultura et quotidiano<sup>33</sup> labore revocabat. Ib. 3, 17.— 3. Summa erat in hoc mari navigandi difficultas. Ib. 3, 12.— 4. Quid aliud percussit<sup>34</sup> Gracchum nisi quod potestatem<sup>35</sup> intercedendi<sup>36</sup> colligere abrogavit? Cic. Leg. 3, 10.— 5. Apud Romanos vetustissimus mos erat victis parandi. Liv. 33, 12.— 6. Parsimonia est scientia re familiaris<sup>37</sup> moderate utendi. Sen. Ben. 2, 34.— 7. Non illa contemno que Graeci dicendi artifices et doctores reliquerunt. Cic. Or. 1, 6.— 8. Natura optima bene<sup>38</sup> vivendi est dux. Cic. Am. 5.— 9. Quem honorem habes<sup>39</sup> dicendi magistris? Plin. Pan. 47.— 10. Tanta est ducendo<sup>40</sup> ex alienis fortunis predandi<sup>41</sup>. Liv. 6, 41, 11.— 11. Aliud<sup>42</sup> tempus est potendi<sup>43</sup>, aliud persequendi<sup>44</sup>. Cic. Mur. 21, 44.— 12. Est ulciscendi et puniendi modus<sup>45</sup>. Cic. Off. 1, 11.— 13. Titurius dixit, brevem esse consulendi occasionem. Cæs. B. G. 5, 29.— 14. Caesar loquendi<sup>46</sup> finem fecit<sup>47</sup>, seque ad suos recepit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 46.— 15. Hac ignominia accepta<sup>48</sup> ceteris tribunis praeiit justam causam resistendi colligere. Liv. 4, 53, 4.— 16. Multa saepe ad te cohortandi gratia scripsimus. Cic. Off. 3, 2.

C. TRANSITIVE GERUNDIS.— 1. Locus ipse praesidio erat barbaris; neque ex<sup>49</sup> occulto insidiandi<sup>50</sup> et dispersos circumvenendi<sup>51</sup> singulis deerat audacia. Cæs. B. G. 6, 34.— 2. Romanos invasi<sup>52</sup> inane studium superuacui<sup>53</sup> discendi. Sen. Brev. Vit. 13.— 3. Germani petebant ut sibi potestatem faceret<sup>54</sup> Caesar in Ubios legatos mittendi. Cæs. B. G. 4, 11.— 4. Ulciscendae injuriae facilior ratio<sup>55</sup> est quam beneficia remunerandi. Cic. P. R. Q. 9, 22.— 5. Hostes ita celeriter procurrerunt<sup>56</sup> ut spatium<sup>57</sup> pila<sup>58</sup> in hostis conficiendi<sup>59</sup> non daretur. Cæs. B. G. 1, 52.

D. GERUNDIS WITH ATTRACTED CASE.— 1. Agitur<sup>60</sup> utrum M. Antonio facultas detur opprimendae reipublicae, caedis faciendae honorum, diripiendae urbis, agrorum suis latronibus<sup>61</sup> condonandi<sup>62</sup>, populum Romanum servitute opprimendi, an horum ei

<sup>1</sup> To commence.— <sup>2</sup> royal power.— <sup>3</sup> to aspire to.— <sup>4</sup> permission.— <sup>5</sup> iter facere, to march.— <sup>6</sup> to refrain.— <sup>7</sup> spes decedit alicui, the hope leaves some one, is taken away from somebody.— <sup>8</sup> under the pretext.— <sup>9</sup> eagerness.— <sup>10</sup> to overcome somebody. (The sentence must take a passive form in English.)— <sup>11</sup> to slaughter.— <sup>12</sup> decemviral (transl. : of the decemvirs).— <sup>13</sup> power.— <sup>14</sup> falsify.— <sup>15</sup> public records, especially the public account-books.— <sup>16</sup> to forge.— <sup>17</sup> pecuniae repetundae, literally : 'the demanding back of money'; a technical phrase denoting the trial for embezzlement of public money.— <sup>18</sup> to be a candidate for.— <sup>19</sup> to engage in battle.— <sup>20</sup> to fight.— <sup>21</sup> aliquem sistere (i. e., in judicio) to make somebody appear for his trial.— <sup>22</sup> trials.— <sup>23</sup> to settle.— <sup>24</sup> offence.— <sup>25</sup> are established.— <sup>26</sup> to hold.— <sup>27</sup> since time was given.— <sup>28</sup> to show your gratitude (literally : to return the favor).— <sup>29</sup> whether.— <sup>30</sup> to make booty.— <sup>31</sup> daily.— <sup>32</sup> percellere, to crush, to ruin.— <sup>33</sup> right.— <sup>34</sup> intercedere alicui, to interpose one's veto against the decrees of somebody.— <sup>35</sup> property.— <sup>36</sup> happy.— <sup>37</sup> honorem habere, to pay honor or respect.— <sup>38</sup> sweetness.— <sup>39</sup> to prey upon.— <sup>40</sup> there is one time for . . . , another for etc.— <sup>41</sup> to apply.— <sup>42</sup> to prosecute.— <sup>43</sup> a limitation, a limit.— <sup>44</sup> finem facere alicuius rei, to break something off, to cease doing something.— <sup>45</sup> loqui, to debate.— <sup>46</sup> to suffer, to undergo.— <sup>47</sup> in secret; see § 443, 3.— <sup>48</sup> to lie in wait.— <sup>49</sup> to cut off.— <sup>50</sup> to seize.— <sup>51</sup> superfluous.— <sup>52</sup> to give permission.— <sup>53</sup> the method.— <sup>54</sup> to advance (by running).— <sup>55</sup> time.— <sup>56</sup> pilum, a dart.— <sup>57</sup> to throw.— <sup>58</sup> it is the question.— <sup>59</sup> a brigand.— <sup>60</sup> to bestow (as a present).

facere nihil liceat. Cic. Phil. 5, 3.— 2. Ex majore copia nobis quam illis fuit exemplorum eligendi potestas. Cic. Inv. 2, 2.— 3. Reliquorum siderum<sup>1</sup> quae causa collocandi<sup>2</sup> fuerit, in alium sermonem<sup>3</sup> differendum est. Cic. Un. 9.— 4. Multi principes cives Romae non tam sui conservandi quam tuorum consiliorum reprimendorum<sup>4</sup> causam profugerunt. Cic. Cat. 1, 3, 7.— 5. Subito omnibus portis eruptione<sup>5</sup> facta neque cognoscendi<sup>6</sup>, neque sui colligendi<sup>7</sup> hostibus facultatem relinquunt. Cæs. B. G. 3, 6.— 6. Finem feci offerendi mei ne forte mea credulitas<sup>8</sup> aut insidiōsa<sup>9</sup> aut impudens<sup>10</sup> videatur. Cic. Leg. Agr. 2, 5, 12.

Rem. 207. Most of the adjectives governing the genitive of substantives (§ 499) may take the genitive of gerundials in any of the four forms as completing objects. Such adjectives are cupidus, insuetus, peritus, studiosus, memor, gnarus, ignarus, particeps, potens, impotens (Liv. 35, 11), sciens, conscius. Verbs, however, cannot take gerundials in the genitive as completing objects. Hence it would be false grammar to say Poenitet me hujus rei dicendae (I am ashamed of saying this), or commonefecit eum irae continendae (he reminded him of restraining his anger).

1. Affirmabat lacrimans non se cupidiorem esse civitatis<sup>12</sup> retinendae quam existimationis<sup>13</sup>. Cic. Clu. 52, 144.— 2. Timotheus rei militaris peritus, neque minus civitatis<sup>14</sup> regendae fuit. Nep. Tim. 1.— 3. Zeno perpressus est omnia potius quam conscios<sup>15</sup> delendae tyrannidis<sup>16</sup> indicaret. Cic. Tusc. 2, 52.— 4. Verum est, si quis ignarus sit faciendae ac poliendae<sup>17</sup> orationis, eum<sup>18</sup> non posse id ipsum quod sciat diserte dicere. Cic. Or. 1, 63.— 5. Ita componenda<sup>19</sup> est pax<sup>20</sup> ut Graecia, etiam absentibus Romanis, satis potens<sup>21</sup> tutendae simul pacis libertatisque esset. Liv. 33, 12.— 6. Ancus, non minus regni sui firmandi quam augendae<sup>22</sup> reipublicae memor, centum<sup>23</sup> in<sup>24</sup> patres<sup>25</sup> legit<sup>26</sup>. Liv. 1, 35, 6.— 7. Scaurus, vir regendae reipublicae scientissimus<sup>27</sup>, si audierit<sup>28</sup> te, huc<sup>29</sup>, credo, veniat<sup>30</sup>. Cic. Or. 1, 49.— 8. Ei qui hereditatis illius diripiendae particeps fuerant, statuum illam faciendam curaverunt. Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 100.— 9. Docti non solum vivi<sup>31</sup> atque praesentes studiosos discendi erudiunt atque docent, sed hoc idem etiam post mortem monumentis litterarum<sup>32</sup> assequuntur. Cic. Off. 1, 44.— 10. Titus Augustus equitandi peritissimus fuit. Suet. Tit. 3.— 11. Dumnorix petivit ut in Gallia relinqueretur, quod insuetus navigandi mare timeret. Cæs. B. G. 5, 6.— 12. Hae res detinebant avidos invadendi<sup>33</sup> deserta moenia milites. Liv. 10, 34.— 13. Euathlus eloquentiae discendae causarumque orandi<sup>34</sup> cupiens<sup>35</sup> fuit. Gell. N. A. 5, 10.

Rem. 208. The genitive of a GERUNDIVE PHRASE (not of a gerund in any of its forms) is used with the copula esse as a predicate-genitive. While the ordinary qualitative genitive (§ 466, No. 3), assigns to the subject a quality directly expressed by the genitive, the gerundial predicate-genitive describes this quality by the CONSEQUENCES it must produce. The gerundive genitive is rendered either by apt with an infinitive, or by conducive to with a participial, or by instrumental of, or by verbal expressions, as 'to serve to'; as :

Tribuni plebis concordiam ordinum timent, quam dissolvendae maxime tribuniciae potestatis reitur esse, the tribunes of the people dread the harmony of the ranks, which they believe to be especially apt to destroy the tribunitian power. Liv. 5, 3.— Regium imperium initio conservandae libertatis atque augendae reipublicae fuerat, royalty, in the beginning, had served (had been conducive) to preserve liberty, and to increase the strength of the republic. Sall. Cat. 6.

Obs. Later writers use the genitive of a gerundive phrase with the meaning of PURPOSE, where the classical writers would add the ablative causa or gratia, as Unum e sedi-tionis vinciri jubet, magis usurpandi juris, quam quia unus culpa foret (for the sake of showing his right, instead of usurpandi juris causa). Tac. Hist. 4, 25. The same authors use genitive gerundials with the force of subject-infinitives or object-infinitives, as: ma-

<sup>1</sup> Star.— <sup>2</sup> to assign a (their) place.— <sup>3</sup> discussion.— <sup>4</sup> to repress.— <sup>5</sup> to flee.— <sup>6</sup> a sally.— <sup>7</sup> to inform themselves.— <sup>8</sup> se colligere, to collect one's self, to form the ranks.— <sup>9</sup> credulity.— <sup>10</sup> deceitful.— <sup>11</sup> impudent.— <sup>12</sup> citizenship.— <sup>13</sup> character.— <sup>14</sup> state.— <sup>15</sup> those that were privy to.— <sup>16</sup> Greek nom. tyrannis, the government of the tyrant, or the despotic form of government.— <sup>17</sup> to polish.— <sup>18</sup> subject infinitive-clause.— <sup>19</sup> to draw up.— <sup>20</sup> the treaty of peace.— <sup>21</sup> powerful.— <sup>22</sup> increase the strength of.— <sup>23</sup> supply: 'new members'.— <sup>24</sup> to.— <sup>25</sup> the senate.— <sup>26</sup> to appoint.— <sup>27</sup> sciens, learned.— <sup>28</sup> should hear.— <sup>29</sup> hither.— <sup>30</sup> would come.— <sup>31</sup> when alive and present.— <sup>32</sup> literary.— <sup>33</sup> to take possession of.— <sup>34</sup> to plead.— <sup>35</sup> desirous.

 Zumpt enumerates among the verbs construed with gerundial datives the phrase tempus consumere, which is an error, the gerundives construed with this phrase being ablatives. Compare: Eo tempore aptandā classe absumpto. Liv. 21, 49.

1. Claudii legati, qui omnibus gerendis rebus (apud duces Campānos) adfuerant, in senātu videbantur. Liv. 26, 16.— 2. Senātus, quum de Cicerōnis reditu egit<sup>1</sup>, decrevit, ne quis de eā re ferret<sup>2</sup>, ne quis disputaret<sup>3</sup>, ne loqueretur, ne scribendo adesset. Cic. P. R. 8, 4, 8.— 3. Crassum (in senātu) scribendo adfuisse auctoritatibus praescriptis<sup>4</sup> exstat<sup>5</sup>. Cic. Or. 3, 2.— 4. Tunc, Erfici, praesesse agro colendo flagitium putas? Cic. Rose. Am. 18.— 5. Quum Vesta quasi focum<sup>6</sup> urbem complexa sit<sup>7</sup>, ei colendae virgines praesint. Cic. Leg. 2, 12, 29.— 6. Respondit Verres, navi illi aedificandae publice Mamertinum senatorem praefuisse. Cic. Verr. 2, 4, 8. See ib. 2, 4, 83.— 7. Valerius proconsul tulandae circa Siciliam maritimae orae praefuerat. Liv. 28, 10. See ib. 25, 12.— 8. Nec consul Romanus tentandis<sup>8</sup> urbibus, si spes aliqua se ostendisset, deerat. Liv. 26, 38.— 9. Hannibalis nullo labore aut corpus fatigari aut animus vinci poterat; id tempus quod gerendis rebus superesset, quieti datum est. Liv. 21, 4.— 10. Ut villicus<sup>9</sup> nativam agri novit, sic noster hic rector<sup>10</sup> studuit sane juri<sup>11</sup> et legibus cognoscendis. Cic. Rep. 5, 3, 5.— 11. Cui rei studere vis? Patrimonione<sup>12</sup> augendo? Cic. Or. 2, 55.— 12. Vos ne hoc quidem loco contumelias (abuses) in illos viros dicendis paritis. Liv. 26, 31.— 13. Nec solum<sup>13</sup> modo vastum hostibus relictum, sed vicis etiam illatus ignis; urbibus (vero) oppugnandis temperatum est. Liv. 10, 12.— 14. Nihil reliquum est unde<sup>14</sup> comestibus<sup>15</sup> sufficiamus<sup>16</sup> praebentis<sup>17</sup>. Liv. 28, 41.— 15. Tanto quisque certamine<sup>18</sup> aurum et argentum conferunt, ut nec triumviri accipiundo nec scribae<sup>19</sup> referendo<sup>20</sup> sufficerent<sup>21</sup>. Liv. 26, 36.— 16. Cicero componere<sup>22</sup> aliqua de iuris scientia coeperat, ut appareat posse oratorem non discendo tantum juri<sup>23</sup> vacare, sed etiam docendo. Qu. 12, 3, 10.— 17. Consul placandis Romae dis habendisque<sup>24</sup> dilectui dat operam. Liv. 22, 2.— 18. Hasdrubal loquendo plura<sup>25</sup>, scribendoque<sup>26</sup> quae in rem non essent<sup>27</sup> dedit operam. Liv. 26, 17 (see ib. 3, 34, 1).— 19. Vix eis rebus quas constituerant duces collocandis<sup>28</sup> atque administrandis tempus est datum. Caes. B. G. 3, 4.— 20. Scipio operibus aspiciendis<sup>29</sup> tempus dabat. Liv. 26, 51. (See ib. 3, 69, 7).— 21. Masinissa, dala dextrā in id quod petebatur obligandae<sup>30</sup> fidei, in regiam<sup>31</sup> concessit<sup>32</sup>. Liv. 30, 12.— 22. Mihi non est integrum<sup>33</sup> ut meum laborem hominum periculis sublerandis<sup>34</sup> non impertiam. Cic. Mur. 4, 8.— 23. Manubiae Pometinae<sup>35</sup> perducendo<sup>36</sup> ad culmen<sup>37</sup> operi destinatae erant. Liv. 1, 65, 7.— 24. Omnes Voleionem verandis consulibus permissum tribunatum<sup>38</sup> credabant. Liv. 2, 56, 2.— 25. Tu regis pecuniae deportandae<sup>39</sup> et bello gerendo Marcum Catonem praefecisti? Cic. Dom. 8, 20.— 26. Populus Papirium Semproniumque censui agendo<sup>40</sup> praefecit. Liv. 4, 8, 7.— 27. Magna animi contentio<sup>41</sup> adibenda est explicando Aristotelem<sup>42</sup>. Cic. Fragm. Hort. 69.— 28. Numa rex sacerdotibus creandis animum adiecit. Liv. 1, 20.

Rem. 210. Only a few of the ADJECTIVES which govern a dative case are, in good prose, construed with a gerundial dative, and even these few are more generally construed with a prepositional gerundial (R. 240). The form of this gerundial is mostly a gerundive phrase, more rarely an absolute gerund, and extremely seldom (Ex. 6) a gerund with a transitive object.

Obs. 1. In Cicero the participial adjective accommodatus only (Ex. 1) is construed with a gerundial dative. Most frequently this construction occurs in Livy, and even in Livy less than thirty examples (all told) of adjectives construed with gerundial datives are extant. He thus construes aptus (adapted to), intentus (bent, intent on), satis (enough for), promptus and paratus (ready to), opportūnus (convenient for), propior (nearer to). Later writers construe communis, religius, idoneus, habilis, utilis, and several other adjectives with a gerundial dative.—Pugnando par, equal to the contest, occurs Caes. B. G. 5, 34.—Victoriae temperandae impar. Tac. H. 4, 1. In 'disserendo par' (equal in discourse, Cic. Or. 1, 56) the gerund, which Kühner considers as a dative, is an ablative.

<sup>1</sup> To deliberate.— <sup>2</sup> to make a report.— <sup>3</sup> to oppose.— <sup>4</sup> in the regular minutes of the resolutions.— <sup>5</sup> to be extant, to be on record.— <sup>6</sup> a hearth.— <sup>7</sup> to embrace.— <sup>8</sup> to tempt.— <sup>9</sup> the farm-overseer.— <sup>10</sup> chairman.— <sup>11</sup> jurisprudence.— <sup>12</sup> property.— <sup>13</sup> the soil.— <sup>14</sup> whence.— <sup>15</sup> supplies.— <sup>16</sup> satisfy.— <sup>17</sup> to distribute.— <sup>18</sup> contest.— <sup>19</sup> clerk.— <sup>20</sup> to enter on the books.— <sup>21</sup> to be sufficient.— <sup>22</sup> to compose.— <sup>23</sup> to make a draft.— <sup>24</sup> to make several remarks.— <sup>25</sup> in rem esse, to be pertinent.— <sup>26</sup> to arrange.— <sup>27</sup> to inspect.— <sup>28</sup> fidem obligare, to pledge one's word.— <sup>29</sup> palace.— <sup>30</sup> to betake one's self.— <sup>31</sup> integrum esse, to be allowed.— <sup>32</sup> to relieve.— <sup>33</sup> the booty of Pometium.— <sup>34</sup> to lead, to carry.— <sup>35</sup> the end.— <sup>36</sup> tribunate.— <sup>37</sup> to transport.— <sup>38</sup> to hold the census.— <sup>39</sup> magna contentio, an intense attention.— <sup>40</sup> Recent editions have changed this reading into Aristotelem, on account of the transitive gerund. But see Ex. 18.

Obs. 2. With some adjectives the gerundial dative is connected as an ADVERBIAL object of PURPOSE, or in the loose signification 'concerning'. These relations, more usually, are expressed partly by the second supine, partly by a gerundial in the accusative after ad. Thus are used facilis, felix (Liv. 3, 17), sollemnis (regular), asper (hard to), solitus (usual), exiguus (in the meaning too small for), parum (antecl.), matūrus, immatūrus, firmus (in the meaning strong enough for), bonus (good for). Sometimes, but very rarely, the gerund-datives dependent on such adjectives have a PASSIVE meaning (Ex. 11). Pliny regularly uses in this way gerund datives, dependent on utilis and similar adjectives, as Aqua nitrosa utilis est bibendo (instead of bibentibus, or ad bibendum). H. N. 36, 6. See lb. 13, 12; 19, 11 and often.

1. Ver ostendit fructus futuros; reliqua tempora dementendis<sup>1</sup> fructibus et percipiendis<sup>2</sup> accommodata sunt. Cic. Sen. 19.— 2. Antiochus post navalem ad Corycum pugnam classi maxime reparandae<sup>3</sup> intentus fuerat. Liv. 37, 8. (See Liv. 23, 35; 1, 53; 1, 66; 4, 37, 4; 30, 8).— 3. Hispania aptior erat bello reparando quam ulla pars terrarum<sup>4</sup>. Liv. 28, 12. (See Ib. 21, 37; 23, 4; 32, 10; 38, 3; Varro R. R. 3, 10).— 4. Querimus quando eis quae rhetorice<sup>5</sup> praecipit percipiendis<sup>6</sup> puer matūrus esse videatur. Quint. 2, 1, 7.— 5. Spatium<sup>7</sup> haud magnum vulneribus curandis supplendoque<sup>8</sup> exercitui satis erat. Liv. 2, 17.— 6. Hic locus equites quoque legendo satis latebrosus<sup>9</sup> erat. Liv. 21, 54. (See Ib. 23, 27).— 7. Flavius dixit, nullam umquam gentem promptiorem veniae danda<sup>10</sup> fuisse quam Romanos. Liv. 25, 16.— 8. De supplicio<sup>11</sup> Campāni senatus facilis impetrandae veniae<sup>12</sup> Claudius, Fulvio durior sententia erat. Liv. 25, 11.— 9. Appius propior interdum petendo<sup>13</sup> quam gerendo<sup>14</sup> magistratui erat. Liv. 3, 35.— 10. Negarunt consules, se ante Idus Decembris, sollemnem ineundis magistratibus diem abituros<sup>15</sup> esse. Liv. 5, 9, 3 (Ib. 3, 36, 3).— 11. His rebus consules asperiores<sup>16</sup> domando multitudinem fecerunt. Liv. 3, 69, 4.— 12. Camillo, jurare parato in verba<sup>17</sup> excusandae valetudinis<sup>18</sup> solita, consensus<sup>19</sup> populi restitit. Liv. 6, 22, 7.— 13. Brutticus ager exiguis tanto alendo exercitui erat. Ib. 28, 12.— 14. Milites vallum<sup>20</sup> secum portabant, ut parati omni loco castris praecitis<sup>21</sup> essent. Ib. 33, 6.— 15. Id tempus rebus gerendis immatūrum<sup>22</sup> erat. Ib. 36, 13.— 16. Testa<sup>23</sup> quae non in teetis<sup>24</sup> poterit pati laborem<sup>25</sup>, ea non potest in structura<sup>26</sup> operi ferenda<sup>27</sup> esse firma. Varr. 2, 8, 19. (See Livy 2, 5).— 17. Ager alto<sup>28</sup> conserpandus<sup>29</sup> locus est qui in ventum Favonium spectat<sup>30</sup>. Caro. R. R. 6. (See Liv. 29, 31).— 18. Ihd ediscendo scribendoque<sup>31</sup> curandus est, ut ique plurimum conferre<sup>32</sup> animum cogitationibus animi liberum. Quint. 11, 2, 35.— 19. Haec vitia nisi aberunt<sup>33</sup>, rebus<sup>34</sup> servandis centuplex murus parum<sup>35</sup> est. Plaut. Pers. 4, 4, 11.

Rem. 211. The dative of a gerundive phrase (rarely of a gerund), is added as an ADVERBIAL OBJECT to PHRASES and expressions consisting of a NOUN AND A VERB, in order to indicate the PURPOSE for which the NOUN is intended. These phrases and expressions are:

1. TRANSITIVE OBJECTIVE, or PASSIVE PREDICATIVE phrases, as locum capere, triumvirum creare:

Locum castris faciendis c. pti, he selected a spot for making a camp.—Locus castris faciendis capitur, a spot is chosen for making a camp.—Triumvires colonia deducende creantur, they elected triumvirs for the sending of a colony.—Triumviri colonie deducendae creantur, triumvirs are elected for the sending of a colony. See Ex. 1-16.

2. PREDICATIVE PHRASES, with neuter verbs, as iter patet, dies venit:

Dies comitiis habendis venit, the day arrived for holding the assembly.—Iter patet frumento transportando, the road is open for the transportation of grain. See Ex. 17-25.

<sup>1</sup> To harvest.— <sup>2</sup> to gather.— <sup>3</sup> to repair, to renew.— <sup>4</sup> with the force of a singular. Terra in the meaning 'the earth' is placed in the plural if conceived as an aggregate of countries.— <sup>5</sup> rhetorical, Greek decl.— <sup>6</sup> to understand.— <sup>7</sup> time.— <sup>8</sup> to complete.— <sup>9</sup> shady.— <sup>10</sup> to grant pardon.— <sup>11</sup> punishment.— <sup>12</sup> concerning.— <sup>13</sup> to apply for.— <sup>14</sup> to obtain.— <sup>15</sup> to hold (office).— <sup>16</sup> to lay down an office.— <sup>17</sup> stubborn.— <sup>18</sup> jurare in verba, to take an oath according to a prescribed formula. The known phrase of Horace 'jurare in verba magistri', to swear to the words of the teacher, is used pregnantly, representing the teacher's words as formulas which the pupils would be willing to confirm by taking an oath.— <sup>19</sup> unanimous opinion. The sentence must be expressed passively.— <sup>20</sup> the palisades for constructing a camp.— <sup>21</sup> too early.— <sup>22</sup> material for bricks.— <sup>23</sup> on the roofs, i. e., in the form of tiles.— <sup>24</sup> laborem pati, to stand the weather.— <sup>25</sup> in the inner structure.— <sup>26</sup> to bear the burden, i. e., to stand the strain.— <sup>27</sup> olive-yard.— <sup>28</sup> to plant.— <sup>29</sup> to be exposed to. The wind Favonius (the Zephyros of the Greeks) was the west-wind, one of the principal four winds.— <sup>30</sup> to do most in both, to be most efficient for either. Animum is subject-accusative.— <sup>31</sup> unless they are absent, i. e., are kept out.— <sup>32</sup> property.— <sup>33</sup> not enough, insufficient.

3. PREDICATES consisting of a predicate-noun and the copula,* as :

Demosthenes curātor muris refectis fuit, Demosthenes was a commissioner for repairing the walls. Cic. Opt. G. O. 7, 19. See Ex. 26-29.—So with predicate datives, the gerundial taking the place of the dative of the interested person: Nec tamen id impedimento rebus gerendis fuit. Liv. 26, 24.

Obs. 1. In these phrases, which furnish the most frequent examples of gerundial datives, the idea of purpose, expressed by the gerundial, is attached to the noun, and not to the governing verb. Hence they must be, logically, considered as ATTRIBUTES of these nouns, although they are, grammatically, the objects of the verbs with which the nouns are combined, and in which they are merged, as it were. But in a few instances such gerundial datives must, even grammatically, be considered as the attributes of nouns. This is especially the case with the numeral compounds of vir, denoting officers (§ 49, R. 2), and the noun comitia, as: Nobilitas Tiberium Gracchum, triumvirum colonis deducendis, ferro necavit, the nobility killed Tib. Gracchus, a triumvir for the sending of colonies (a colonial commissioner), by the sword. Sall. Jug. 42, 1.—Ut in manu ejus essent comitia rogando collega, that the meeting for the choice of his colleague might be in his hands. Liv. 22, 35.† See Liv. 4, 4.—Sometimes it is doubtful whether such gerundials are genitive-attributes, or dative-objects, as: Ut aliquam mihi materiem praebeas agenda tuae apud senatum causae. Liv. 42, 40.

Obs. 2. As to the use of this construction, the following rules must be noticed:

(a). It must be considered an indispensable condition for applying a gerundial dative of purpose, that there should be a SUBSTANTIVE represented as being applied to the purpose expressed by the gerundial. Examples where gerundial datives of purpose are attached to bare verbs without referring to a substantive are extremely rare, and must be considered as harsh anomalies, as: Scipio curvis civitatum cognoscendis Tarracōnem rediit (inst. of ad causas cognoscendas), Scipio returned to Tarraco to examine the cases concerning these states. Liv. 28, 16. In such connections either an accusative gerundial after ad, or a genitive gerundial with causā must be used, as: Ipse ad conventus agendos (not conventibus agendis) in ceteriorem Galliam profectus est. Cic. B. G. 1, 59.

(b). If an object of purpose is to be expressed by a gerund absolute, it either takes the form of an accusative after ad, or of a genitive, as diem ad deliberandum sumere (not deliberando). Cic. B. G. 1, 7; spatium ad respirandum (not respirando) dare. Liv. 27, 40. Attici nobis propositi sunt ad imitandum (not imitando). Cic. O. G. O. 4, 13. For an exceptional example of such gerunds in the dative, see Ex. 17.

(c). Even gerundive phrases, if expressing an object of purpose, assume more frequently the form of an accusative after ad, than that of a gerundial dative. (See R. 237.) Only if the governing phrase contains one of the nouns denoting officers, offices, or the noun comitia, a gerundial dative is the REGULAR form for the object of the purpose for which these officers etc. are appointed. Such official expressions are especially the compounds of vir (see No. a), as triumvir, decemvir etc., but also other general designations, applicable to more than one kind of offices, as dux, curātor, dictātor. But even in this connection gerundial expressions with ad, or in the form of an attributive genitive are not unusual, as: Triumviri creati sunt ad supplendum colonorum numerum. Liv. 31, 49.—Consulis subrogandi comitia habita sunt. Liv. 10, 11.

(d). Aside from the case mentioned No. (c), gerundive datives most frequently occur with phrases containing nouns of time, (dies, feriae, tempus) or place (locus) to indicate the purpose for which a time or place is appointed, as diem alicui rei faciendae edicere, to appoint a day for doing something; locum capere, locum relinquere, inventire etc.

(e). With other phrases gerundive datives are either used to vary the expression (especially when other gerundives with ad occur in the same sentence, see Ex. 12, 13), or they are pregnantly employed to enclose peculiar dative relations, for inst. that of a dative commodi or incommodi, which would be lost by the preposition ad (see Ex. 13, 14).

Obs. 3. A gerundive dative of purpose may depend on the verb esse in three different relations:

(a) if esse has the force of a neuter verb (§ 470, 2), being translated by there is, there are, as: Comitia fuerunt magistratibus creandis, there was a (public) meeting to elect officers. Mora fuit agmini expediendo, there was a delay in making the detachment ready for combat (Ex. 21-24).

* We must remember that predicate-nouns with the copula have the grammatical value of verbs, and may govern objects like these. § 61.

† For modern Latinity we may notice here the phrase 'Presidential election', comitia principi rogando (the President being only 'asked', not directly chosen by the people).

(b) if esse is used as copula with a predicate-noun (R. 211, No. 3). See Ex. 26-29.

(c) if a gerundive is used as predicate dative (see R. 212).

In the cases No. (a) and (b) it is more usual to apply an attributive genitive gerundial.

A. GERUNDIAL DATIVES GOVERNED BY TRANSITIVE PHRASES. 1. Patres quinque-viros Pomptino agro dividendo et triumviros Nepete colonia deducenda creaverunt. Liv. 6, 21, 4.—2. Decrevērunt patres ut praetor decemviros agro Samniti metiendo dividendōque crearet. Liv. 31, 4.—3. Talis vir dictātor deligendus exercendis quaestionibus fuit. Ib. 9, 26.—3. Metellus dixit, non convenire quem modo civitas recuperanda Hispania delegerit ducem, eum repente ex provinciā revocari. Ib. 29, 20.—4. Decretum est ut consules comparent inter se, ut censoribus creandis haberet comitia. Ib. 24, 10.—5. Comitia consuli uni rogando edicuntur<sup>11</sup>. Ib. 23, 31.—6. Concilium legi perferenda habitum est, advocato populo ab armis. Ib. 3, 16.—7. Ambiorix dixit omnibus hibernis Caesaris oppugnandis hunc esse dictum diem. Cic. B. G. 5, 27.—8. His avertendis terroribus in triduum<sup>14</sup> serae<sup>15</sup> indictae sunt. Liv. 3, 5, 14.—9. Galli haud procul inde ubi nunc Aquileja est, locum oppido condendo<sup>17</sup> cepērunt<sup>18</sup>. Ib. 39, 22.—10. Numa multa loca sacris faciendis dedicavit. Ib. 1, 21.—11. Consul vias communitibus subrehendis<sup>21</sup> ex Thessalia muniri<sup>22</sup> jubet. Ib. 44, 9.—12. Caduceator regis venit ad petendam<sup>24</sup> veniam legatis mittendis. Ib. 33, 11.—13. Castris direptis Apolloniatae tormenta<sup>26</sup> quae oppugnandae urbi comparata<sup>27</sup> erant ad tuenda<sup>28</sup> moenia devexere<sup>29</sup>. Ib. 24, 40.—14. Multitudo incolarum libertinorumque et opificum urbi frequentandae<sup>31</sup> retenta est. Ib. 26, 11.—15. Tertium exercitum tuendis parari<sup>32</sup> finibus fama erat. Ib. 10, 32.—16. Placuit averruncandae deorum irae victimas<sup>34</sup> caedi<sup>35</sup>. Ib. 8, 6. [For similar constructions see Liv. 1, 21; 3, 35; 3, 37; 6, 23; 10, 41; 21, 47; 25, 7; 26, 40; 27, 15; 31, 6; 42, 3; 43, 14. Cic. Or. 2, 55; Cic. Mur. 11, 25; Plaut. Rud. 5, 3, 18.]

B. GERUNDIAL DATIVES GOVERNED BY PREDICATIVE PHRASES WITH NEUTER VERBS, OR THEIR EQUIVALENTS. 17. Praetor ad opprimendam (lo oppress) servorum conjurationem missus alios, jam congregatos<sup>36</sup> pugnando, vicit, alios verberatos<sup>37</sup> crucibus<sup>38</sup> affixit<sup>39</sup>. Liv. 33, 36.—18. Quum dies venisset rogationi<sup>40</sup> ex senatusconsulto ferendae, concursabat<sup>41</sup> totus ille grex Catilinae. Cic. Att. 1, 14, 5.—19. Philo Romae juri dicendo<sup>42</sup> urbana sors evenit<sup>43</sup>. Liv. 22, 35.—20. Neque receptus<sup>44</sup> Romanis in Thessaliam, neque commeatibus<sup>45</sup> pervenhendis<sup>46</sup> eo patuit iter. Ib. 41, 6.—21. Comitia consulibus rogandis fuere. Ib. 40, 18.—22. Secundum poenam nocentium<sup>47</sup> ut in utramque partem<sup>48</sup> arcendis<sup>49</sup> sceleribus exemplum nobile<sup>49</sup> esset, indicio<sup>50</sup> libertas et civitas<sup>51</sup> data est. Ib. 2, 5, 9.—23. Non exercitus, non dux scribendo exercitus<sup>52</sup> erat. Ib. 4, 43, 24. Senectuti ornandae quod honestius potest esse perfugium quam juris interpretatio<sup>53</sup>? Cic. Or. 1, 45.—25. Editum<sup>54</sup> ab decemviris est ut supplicatio<sup>55</sup> prodigiis<sup>56</sup> expiandis<sup>57</sup> fieret<sup>58</sup>. Liv. 42, 2. (See Liv. 25, 3.)

C. GERUNDIAL DATIVES DEPENDENT ON esse WITH PREDICATE-NOUNS.—26. Decretum est ut Capua esset locus comportandis<sup>59</sup> condendisque<sup>60</sup> fructibus. Cic. L. Agr. 2, 32.—27. Datum hoc nostro generi<sup>61</sup> est, inquit Decius, ut tuendis<sup>62</sup> periculis publicis

1 The Pomptinian district.—2 Nepete, n., an Etruscan town.—3 to survey.—4 quaestiones exercere, to preside at the trials.—5 impersonal.—6 just.—7 Might not this be a genitive? And to which rule would it belong, if it were a genitive?—8 suddenly.—9 to settle.—10 rogare, to elect; properly meaning 'to ask', because the Senate had originally the appointing power, the people being only entitled to 'ask for the appointment'.—11 to fix, to appoint.—12 to carry.—13 hiberna, pl. t., winterquarters.—14 for three days.—15 days of prayer.—16 literally: not far from thence where (not far from where).—17 to build.—18 locum capere, to select a spot, is a technical phrase, taken from the augural ceremonies.—19 sacra facere, to perform religious services.—20 supplies.—21 to transport.—22 viam munire, to mend a road.—23 a herald.—24 for asking leave.—25 inhabitants of Apollonia.—26 artillery.—27 intended for.—28 ad tuenda, to defend.—29 devexere, to carry away.—30 opifex, an artisan.—31 frequentare, to people.—32 to organize. Parari is the predicate-infinitive of a subject-clause.—33 to appease (by religious exercises).—34 victim.—35 caedere, to slaughter.—36 assembled.—37 after scourging them.—38 crux, cross.—39 affigere, to nail.—40 rogationem ferre, to take a vote.—41 to flock together.—42 jus dicere, to preside over the jurisdiction.—43 Sors evenit alicui, literally: The lot falls to somebody. The Roman high magistrates of the same category divided their departments by lot. Translate 'To him fell the department'. Urbana, belonging to the city, must be rendered by compounding it with 'jurisdiction'.—44 retreat.—45 to convey.—46 the guilty.—47 on each side.—48 to keep down.—49 notable.—50 informer.—51 citizenship.—52 to enroll the army.—53 expounding.—54 to proclaim.—55 day of prayer.—56 prodigy.—57 expiare aliquid, to expiate something.—58 to take place.—59 to forward.—60 to store.—61 race.—62 luere aliquid, to atone for something.

piacula<sup>1</sup> simus. Liv. 10, 28.—28. Hæc spolia insignia<sup>2</sup> sint publicis locis decorandis<sup>3</sup> Ib. 10, 39.—29. Sempronius hoc maximum continendis<sup>4</sup> in fide sociis vinculum esse censēbat. Ib. 21, 52.

Rem. 212. Rarely gerundials occur as PREDICATE-DATIVES, and in classical language (except in the phrase solvendo esse) always as gerundives, the copula denoting ability, or fitness to perform an action, as oneri ferendo esse, to be able to bear a burden.

Obs. 1. In anteclassical language the dative of the gerund is made dependent on the copula with the force of an ordinary verbal noun, as: Quid modus est ductando, amando? Plant. Asin. 1, 3, 17 (= Qui modus est ductationi et amoris, or quem modum habet ductatio, etc.; see p. 81, no. 1).—In classical prose the following gerundive phrases occur as predicate-datives: Oneri ferendo esse (Liv. 2, 9; Ov. Met. 15, 403; Sen. Ep. 71; Ib. Ben. 7, 9; Ib. Qu. N. 6, 22); honori ferendo esse to be able to bear an honor, Liv. 4, 35; gratias referendæ esse, to be able to return a favor, Liv. 28, 25; restituendo igni esse (used of things, adapted to extinguish a fire, Liv. 30, 6); certamini tolerando esse, to be able to maintain a combat, Liv. 10, 5; æri alieno solvendo esse, to be able to pay one's debts, Liv. 31, 13; the gerund solvendo esse, to be solvent (Cic. Fam. 3, 8, 2; Att. 13, 10, 3; Off. 2, 22, 79); censui censendo esse, to be subject to assessment in the census, Cic. Flacc. 32, 80<sup>6</sup>. Post-classical authors, especially Pliny, use gerunds as predicate-datives in a passive sense, as Radix scolymæ vescendo est, the root of the scolymus is fit to be eaten (Plin. H. N. 21, 56, and often). Such usage is extremely rare in classical prose.

Obs. 2. DIFFERENCE BETWEEN THE PREDICATE-GENITIVE, AND THE PREDICATE-DATIVE OF GERUNDIALS. In both the real predicate is an idea understood (§ 466, 2). In the predicate-genitive of a gerund it is the idea of instrumentality or means, such as the noun instrumentum or causa, of which the gerundial genitive must be considered an ATTRIBUTIVE. In the predicate-dative the idea understood is an ADJECTIVE, such as idoneus (fit or able), of which the gerundial dative is an OBJECT, as: Decretum est ut ad tributum conferrent divites qui oneri ferendo essent, it was resolved that the rich who were able to bear the burden should contribute to the taxes, Liv. 2, 9. Sometimes either of these two forms may be used with equal propriety, as for instance in respect to medical remedies which may be represented as being apt to heal, or able (i. e., having the power to heal). Emplastrum quod puri movendo est, Cels. 5, 19 (a plaster good for removing an ulceration), where the genitive puri movendi would be equally proper. But generally the one case cannot be used in place of the other. In a number of passages the reading is unsettled, some manuscripts giving a genitive, others a dative. In other passages the genitive, if of the first declension, cannot be distinguished in form from the dative. The correct reading, or the case, respectively, may be easily determined according to the rules laid down above. Thus the passage Liv. 30, 9: Pro se quisque quæ diuinæ obsidioni (or obsidionis, according to other manuscripts) tolerandæ sunt ex agris convellere (every one took from the surrounding country what was for sustaining a long siege). All our grammarians give this passage with the dative reading, to illustrate the use of the gerundial dative. This is evidently erroneous, since Livy certainly did not mean to convey the idea that the things taken by the inhabitants were able to sustain a siege. He meant to say that these things were a MEANS for the inhabitants to sustain the siege, and hence the genitive obsidionis is the only possible reading in the passage. Thus the passage quoted above (p. 162, Ex. 8): Ambitiones evertendæ reipublice solent esse (Cic. Verr. 2, 53) is by some grammarians, for instance Kühner, erroneously taken for a dative.

Obs. 3. The expression solvendo esse is best explained by supplying the words æri alieno (debts), which are actually added Liv. 31, 13. Thus it would become a gerundive phrase, and thereby the gerundial predicate-dative, for classical prose, would be exclusively assigned to the gerundive PHRASES. Most grammarians assert that the phrase only occurs with a negation (non solvendo esse, to be insolvent). But this is contradicted partly by the passage of Livy, partly by the use of the Roman jurists, who, in innumerable passages, use the phrase without a negation. See Ex. 7.

1. Experiendum est sitne aliquis plebæus ferendo magno honori. Liv. 4, 35.—
2. Aures mulierum exercitatus oneri ferendo sunt. Sen. Ben. 7, 9.—3. Dictator fretus erat, legatum<sup>1</sup> etiamnunc<sup>2</sup> certamini<sup>3</sup> tolerando esse. Liv. 10, 5.—4. Hispani lætatos se dixerunt, Scipionem deorum benignitate<sup>4</sup> esse gratias referendæ. Liv. 28, 25.—5. Oppidani ea modo quæ restinguendo igni forent portantes, in agmen<sup>5</sup> Romanum ruēbant. Ib. 30, 6.—6. Noli mirari quod Magius sponsor<sup>7</sup> Sunii factus est. Nimtrum<sup>8</sup> id fuit: Solvendo non erat. Cic. Att. 13, 10, 3.—7. Quum inter fidejussores<sup>9</sup> quidam solvendo esse dixerunt, ea res<sup>10</sup> ad onus<sup>11</sup> ejus qui solvendo est non pertinet. Papin. Dig. 46, 1, 51.

<sup>1</sup> A sin-offering.—<sup>2</sup> insigne, a badge.—<sup>3</sup> to decorate.—<sup>4</sup> to keep.—<sup>5</sup> The import of this phrase is misunderstood by all the interpreters of this passage. The meaning assigned to it above is not the original one.—<sup>6</sup> to try by experience.—<sup>7</sup> to exercise.—<sup>8</sup> The passage may be understood in two ways; by taking exercitatus for an attribute of aures (the exercised ears, i. e., by ear-rings), or by taking exercitatus sunt for a perfect passive. In the former way, oneri ferendo would be a predicate-dative; in the latter, not.

E. REVERSED PHRASES AND GERUNDS IN THE ABLATIVE.

1, Gerundial Ablative.

§ 529. The regular meaning of the gerundial ablative is that of the MEANS and INSTRUMENT of an action. Exceptionally and very rarely it is used as a COMPLETING OBJECT of some of the verbs construed with an ablative case. But more frequently it denotes some of the adverbial ideas related to that of instrumentality, being especially used to indicate the relation of MODALITY. The form of the gerundial ablative is either that of a GERUNDIVE PHRASE, or that of a GERUND ABSOLUTE, or that of gerund with a TRANSITIVE OBJECT.

Rem. 213. The use of the gerundial ablative as an ablative of the direct instrument or means is very frequent in all periods of the language. It is rendered by an English participial in ing, or by an abstract noun, after the preposition 'by', as Orator rem angere potest laudando, vituperandoque rursus adfigere, an orator can exalt a thing by praising (by praise), and lower it by censuring (by censure). Cic. Brut. 12, 47.—Orationem Latinam nostris legendis efficit plenior, you will, by reading our writings increase your command of the Latin language. Cic. Off. 1, 1. (literally: make the Latin language fuller).

If a gerundial ablative is dependent on a passive predicate, it often performs the functions of a passive agent, as:

Homini mens discendo alitur et cogitando, the mind of man is nourished by learning and thinking. Cic. Off. 1, 30.—A sentence like this may in English be expressed actively by making the participial in ing the active subject (Thinking nourishes the mind). But in Latin a gerundial ablative can neither be changed into a subject-nominative, nor into a subject-infinitive. Hence English active sentences of this kind must always assume a passive form in Latin, unless a verbal noun exists which may be used as subject. [The sentence above we may express: Cogitatio alit mentem. But of the verb discere a noun cannot be formed.]

Obs. 1. The logical subject of the gerundial ablative must always be the same as the grammatical subject of the governing verb. But if the governing verb is a passive, either its grammatical or its logical subject (the doer of the action, or passive agent) may be the logical subject of the gerundial, as Fulvius fallendo impetravit, Fulvius succeeded by deceiving (i. e., he himself was the person deceiving). Milites muniendo occupantur, the soldiers are occupied by fortifying (they fortify). Urbs prodendo tradita est, the city was surrendered by treason (the citizens surrendered, and were those that committed the treason). Hence English sentences in which the subject of the participial and of the principal predicate are different cannot be rendered by gerundials. Thus the sentence 'He perished by the sinking of a ship' cannot be rendered by Nave demergendā periit unless the person expressed by the subject has sunk the ship.

<sup>1</sup> His lieutenant.—<sup>2</sup> still.—<sup>3</sup> contest.—<sup>4</sup> mercy.—<sup>5</sup> the lines.—<sup>6</sup> to rush.—<sup>7</sup> surety.—<sup>8</sup> Ironical particle: 'The fact is' etc.—<sup>9</sup> bondsman.—<sup>10</sup> fact.—<sup>11</sup> ad onus pertinet, falls to the charge.

Obs. 2. Hence, when words referring to the logical subject of the gerundial, as quisque and ipse, are combined with it, they do not agree with the gerundial in the ablative, but are placed in the nominative case, if the grammatical subject of the governing verb is in that case: Callicrates, agendo ipse Romane societatis causam, efficit ut qui ab se dissen- serit adversus Romanos dicere videretur: Callicrates, by pleading, himself, the cause of the Roman alliance, made those who disagreed with him appear to speak against the Romans. Liv. 41, 24.

1. Ludi et dies festi<sup>1</sup> quid haberent voluptatis carendo magis intellexi quam fructuendo. Cic. P. R. Q. 1, 3.— 2. Multi patrimonium<sup>2</sup> effuderunt<sup>3</sup> inconsulte<sup>4</sup> largiendo<sup>5</sup>. Cic. Off. 2, 15, 54.— 3. Hannibal scripsit, Campanos tolerando paucos dies, totam soluturos<sup>6</sup> obsidionem. Liv. 26, 7.— 4. Blaesius, docendo quam ea res patriae salutaria<sup>7</sup> esset, per- vicit<sup>8</sup> ut praesidium Punico Marcello traderetur. Liv. 26, 38.— 5. Homines ad deos nulla re propius accedunt (approach), quam salutem hominibus dando<sup>9</sup>. Cic. Lig. 12, 38.— 6. Caesar dando, sublevando<sup>10</sup>, ignoscendo; Cato nilil largiendo<sup>11</sup> gloriam adeptus est. Sall. Cat. 54, 3.— 7. Unam legem tollendo<sup>12</sup> ceteras infirmabit. Liv. 34, 3.— 8. Dux ille ex bellis bella serendo<sup>13</sup> vivit. Liv. 21, 10.— 9. Sic ulciscar<sup>14</sup> ea hominum genera singula, quemadmodum<sup>15</sup> a quibusque sum provocatus<sup>16</sup>; malos civis, rempublicam bene gerendo; perfidos amicos, nilil credendo, atque omnia cavendo; invidos, virtuti et gloriae ser- viendo<sup>17</sup>; mercatores<sup>18</sup> provinciarum, revocando (eos) domum, atque ab eis provinci- arum rationes<sup>19</sup> repetendo<sup>20</sup>. Cic. P. R. Q. 9, 21.— 10. Gratiam nos infre<sup>21</sup> a Caesare de- fendenda pace arbitramur. Cic. Fam. 4, 2.— 11. Milites fatigati per diem totum via faciendâ, a Bojorum rege proelio victi sunt. Liv. 33, 36.— 12. Consul, occupatus op- pugnandis Aetolicis urbibus, Philippum ad Thessalorum civitates misit. Liv. 39, 24.— 13. L. Marcius omne tempus muniendis castris convehendisque<sup>22</sup> commensalibus<sup>23</sup> con- sumpsit. Liv. 35, 37.

Rem. 214. When the adverbial relation of MODALITY is expressed by the gerundial ablative, it generally has the force of a present participle used as an accessory predicate (§ 461, R. 12), as Hannibal vincendo senex factus est (as if 'vincens' senex factus est) Liv. 30, 38, Hannibal, grew old as a con- queror, in the midst of victories, conquering. (See Ex. 1-4.) Here belongs the combination of the gerundial ablative with negations, when it is some- times an equivalent of the English participial after 'without', as: Litteras dedit non scribendo, he composed a letter without writing. See Ex. 10.

Obs. 1. In this relation the gerundial ablative has often a pregnant meaning, combin- ing that of an ABLATIVE ABSOLUTE (of which it, sometimes, is almost an equivalent) with that of a gerundial. It may, then, often be resolved into clauses with conjunctions, for instance by while (Ex. 5, 6, 7), since (Ex. 8), after (Ex. 9). Sometimes it is chosen in place of an ablative absolute to impart the idea of necessity to the action, as: Tarde inde ad Maleam pervenit, trahendis plerumque remulco navibus quae cum committu se- quebantur. Liv. 32, 16 (From there he came late to Malea, since the ships which followed with the supplies had mostly to be towed).

Obs. 2. The gerundial ablative is (rarely) used instead of quam with a subject-infini- tive, after comparatives, having thus the full force of a declined infinitive: Nullum offi- cium r-ferendâ gratiâ magis est necessarium, Cic. Off. 1, 15; no duty is more necessary than that of returning a favor (inst. of quam gratiam referre).

Obs. 3. The gerundial ablative is very rarely used as a completing object of verbs, or as a limiting object of predicate-nouns or adjectives: Abstulit continuando magistratum, he desisted from prolonging his office, Liv. 9, 34.— Contentus possidendis agris, satisfied with holding lands, Liv. 6, 14.— Ut et doctrinae studiis et regendâ civitate princeps esset (the first in the art of governing the state). Cic. Leg. 3, 6.— Cura censorum non se tenuit equestri ordini regendo, the care of the censors was not confined to disciplining the equestrian order. Liv. 24, 18.— Generally verbs and adjectives governing an ablative as completing object, cannot be construed with a gerundial ablative. Constructions such as 'prohibere aliquem diripiendo (instead of rapinis), or 'perpetrando opes est', or 'impe- rando dignus est', never occur.

1. Invidiosus<sup>24</sup> nominibus utebatur consul, seditionem muliebrem<sup>25</sup> appellando. Cic.

<sup>1</sup> festival.— <sup>2</sup> patrimonium, fortune.— <sup>3</sup> effundere, to waste.— <sup>4</sup> injudicious.— <sup>5</sup> lar- giri, to be liberal.— <sup>6</sup> solvere, to raise.— <sup>7</sup> beneficial.— <sup>8</sup> to prevail.— <sup>9</sup> salutem alicui dare, to make somebody happy.— <sup>10</sup> to relieve.— <sup>11</sup> to grant.— <sup>12</sup> to set aside.— <sup>13</sup> to raise.— <sup>14</sup> ulcisci aliquem, to take revenge on somebody.— <sup>15</sup> as.— <sup>16</sup> to provoke.— <sup>17</sup> to live for.— <sup>18</sup> merchant.— <sup>19</sup> account.— <sup>20</sup> to require.— <sup>21</sup> gratiam inire ab aliquo, to oblige somebody.— <sup>22</sup> to convey.— <sup>23</sup> supplies.— <sup>24</sup> odious.— <sup>25</sup> womanish.

Off. 2, 4.— 2. Bocchus, reputando<sup>1</sup> quae sibi duobus praeliis evenerant, quinque ex necessariis<sup>2</sup> delēgit quorum fides cognita erat. Sall. Jug. 103.— 3. Rex exerendo quotidie milites hostem opperiebatur<sup>3</sup>. Liv. 33, 3.— 4. Camillus Ardea dis hominibusque accusandis senescēbat<sup>4</sup>. Liv. 5, 43, 7.— 5. His rebus efficitur<sup>5</sup> ut dando et accipiendo, mutuan- tis- que facultatibus<sup>6</sup> et commodandis<sup>7</sup> nulla re egeamus. Cic. Off. 2, 4.— 6. Magistratus domum ne danto neve petendâ<sup>8</sup> neve gerendâ<sup>9</sup> neve gestâ potestate. Cic. Leg. 3, 4.— 7. Medici toto corpore curando<sup>10</sup> minimae etiam parti medentur. Cic. Tusc. 3, 34.— 8. Hannibal, recordando quae ipse in transitu Alpium tolerasset, nequāquam<sup>12</sup> facilem transitum expectabat. Liv. 27, 39.— 9. Denique Bomilcar, omnia tentando, socium sibi adjungit Nabdalsam. Sall. Jug. 70.— 10. Qui est qui nullis officii praeceptis tradendis<sup>13</sup> philosophum se audeat dicere? Cic. Off. 1, 2.

2) Ablatives absolute.

§ 530. The ABLATIVES ABSOLUTE (§ 395 foll.) must be con- sidered as one of the various forms which the Latin language has assigned to the PREDICATIVE PHRASES of several classes of dependent clauses. By this form the dependence of the clause is indicated, the ablative case of the phrase having the force of a SUBORDINATING CONJUNCTION. The subject of this pred- icative phrase is called SUBJECT-ABLATIVE, and the predicate, PREDICATE-ABLATIVE.

For the agreement of the predicate-ablative with the subject-ablative see § 396, and R. 35.

Rem. 215. The ablatives absolute are, by their original conception reversed participial phrases, expressing, like the gerundial ablative, and true to the fundamental meaning of the ablative case the CAUSE or MEANS of an action. In this original meaning the ablatives absolute very frequently occur in all periods of the language, as: Neutram partem volēbant potentiorem alterâ oppressâ fieri, they wished neither party to become the stronger by the crushing of the one. Liv. 42, 30.

The cause and means of an action existing always previous to the action as such, this grammatical form (with a perfect participle) was eminently adapted to indicate a TIME ANTERIOR to the main action and such relations which are analogous to those usually expressed by the ablative of substantives. Thus the ablatives absolute gradually be- came a regular form for the predicative phrases of temporal, causal, conditional and modal clauses, and, in general, for all relations usually expressed by the English parti- ciple absolute.

Rem. 216. The ablatives absolute are divided into five classes accord- ing to the different forms of their predicate-ablatives: 1) Ablatives absolute with PERFECT PARTICIPLES of transitive verbs, the subject-abla- tive being the transitive object of the active verb,* as legātis dimissis, after the ambassadors had been dismissed; 2) with PERFECT DEPONENT PARTI- CIPLES, as legātis profectis, after the ambassadors had departed; 3) with a PRESENT PARTICIPLE (active or deponent), as militibus sequentibus, while the soldiers followed; 4) with a PREDICATE-NOUN, or a PREDICATE-ADJEC- TIVE, as Cicerōne consule, while Cicero was (is) Consul; fratre incolumi, while (my) brother was (is) safe; 5) with IMPERSONAL PERFECT PASSIVE PARTICIPLES of neuter verbs, as debellato, after the war had been finished.

<sup>1</sup> To consider.— <sup>2</sup> relative.— <sup>3</sup> to await.— <sup>4</sup> to grow old.— <sup>5</sup> it follows.— <sup>6</sup> to borrow.— <sup>7</sup> (our mutual) means.— <sup>8</sup> to lend.— <sup>9</sup> to apply for.— <sup>10</sup> to hold.— <sup>11</sup> to cure.— <sup>12</sup> by no means.— <sup>13</sup> tradere officii praecepta, to give rules on human duties.

* This form of the ablatives absolute is always a sure evidence of the verb, employed as participle, being transitive, the same as with all reversed phrases with perfect parti- ciples or gerundives.

To these may be added the participles of the three periphrastic conjugations. For the use of the gerundial ablative with the force of an ablative absolute see R. 213, Obs. 1. For the use of the participle in ūrus as abs. abl. see R. 159. For the use of the perfect participle with the force of a periphrastic participle, see § 534.

Obs. 1. The grammatical value of the two tenses in which the predicate-ablative may appear, is not to be taken as ABSOLUTE (in regard to the SPEAKER), but depends, as in infinitive clauses, on its relation to the principal predicate:

(a) If the time of the action expressed by the participle is conceived as COINCIDENT with the time of the action indicated by the principal predicate, the PRESENT PARTICIPLE is used, and the construction must be active (but see Obs. 3 (a).)

(b) If the time of the participial action is conceived as ANTERIOR to that of the principal predicate, the participle must be in the PERFECT, and the construction is PASSIVE (but see Obs. 3 (b).)

The English equivalent of the PRESENT PARTICIPLE, if it is rendered by a participial construction, is likewise a present participle; but if it is rendered by a finite clause, the tense agrees with that of the principal predicate, as: Celtibēri quīeti manent, Titurio obtinente provinciam, the Celtiberians remain quiet while Titurius holds (is holding) the province, (or Titurius holding the province); but: Celtibēri quīeti manēbant (or manserant) Titurio obtinente provinciam, the Celtiberians remained (had remained quiet) while Titurius held (was holding) the province.

The English equivalent of the PERFECT PARTICIPLE (being likewise a PERFECT participle if a participial construction is chosen) is generally a PLUPERFECT*, as: Concilio dimisso legātī audītī sunt, after the council had been dismissed, the envoys were heard (or 'the council having been dismissed etc.').

Obs. 2. Since ablatives absolute cannot generally be used to express coincident time passively, nor to express anterior time actively, English active constructions, in order to be rendered into Latin ablatives absolute, must frequently be changed in regard to voice. (See § 531.)

Obs. 3. EXCEPTIONS TO THE RULES IN OBS. 1 (a) and (b).

(a) COINCIDENT time may be expressed passively, if the action is conceived as a STATE, produced by some former action. In this instance the PERFECT PARTICIPLE may be used in the quality of periphrastic present (§ 506), as: Consule in Campaniā occupāto bellum tarde geritur, while the consul is occupied in Campania, the war proceeds slowly. (Here the participle occupāto must be resolved into the periphrastic PRESENT occupātus est.) If the principal predicate is a perfect (gestum est) the participle occupāto is to be resolved into a periphrastic imperfect (occupātus erat, while he was occupied).

(b) ANTERIOR time may be expressed actively by means of a few of the DEPONENT verbs. Thus are used the deponents mori, proficisci, transgredi, egredi, regredi, ingredi, and oriri, as: morituo Tullo (Liv. 1, 32).—Prætoribus in provinciam profectis, after the prætors had departed for their provinces (Liv. 42, 18).—Per transgressis eis, when they had hardly crossed (Liv. 43, 21).—Egressis Tiburtibus, after the Tiburtians had gone out (Liv. 7, 11).—Ipsis regressis in castra, after they had themselves returned to the camp (Liv. 22, 60).—Ingresso ere, after spring had commenced (Lucan. 10, 221).—Orta luce, after daybreak (Liv. 24, 38; frequent in Cic.); prolio orto, after the battle had commenced (Liv. 42, 50).

Obs. 4. Rarely deponent perfect participles in the construction of ablatives absolute, and in ordinary participial constructions, are used with PASSIVE meanings, as depopulātis agris (Cæs. B. G. 1, 11); libertātis dulcedine expertā (Liv. 1, 17); transgressis Apenninū (Liv. 10, 27). Thus are used adeptus (Cic. Sen. 2); ultus (Liv. 2, 17) and several others.

Rem. 217. RELATION OF THE ABLATIVES ABSOLUTE TO THE PRINCIPAL SENTENCE. The Ablatives Absolute in regard to the principal predicate of the sentence must be considered as one single term (the same as all reversed phrases, § 191), of which the predicate of the sentence (principal predicate) is the governing word. The relation of the Ablatives Absolute to this governing predicate is always OBJECTIVE, and if they have the grammatical value of clauses, such a clause must be considered as the object of the principal predicate. This objective relation is almost always an ADVERBIAL one, being that of TIME, MEANS, CAUSE, or CONDITION. Rarely reversed phrases with participial ablatives are used as COM-

* In freer style a past tense is frequently substituted for this pluperfect. But a past tense, thus used, may always be replaced by a pluperfect.

PLETING OBJECTS of the verbs or adjectives construed with the ablative case.

Obs. 1. To the verbs and adjectives which are sometimes construed with such participial ablatives as completing objects belong gloriārī, gaudēre, opus est, contentus, and perhaps a few more, as: Nullā re magis gloriāntur quam decepto per indutias rege, they boast of nothing more than of having deceived the king by the armistice. Liv. 42, 47.—Si leges iniquæ sunt, sequitur ut commutātis nobis opus sit legibus, if the laws are unjust, it follows that there is a necessity of our changing the laws. Cic. Clu. 55, 150.—Si contentus bene re gestā quiescet eo die; if, satisfied with having done [the thing] well (with his success), he would have rested on that day. Liv. 42, 59. Sometimes such constructions may be considered both as ordinary, or as reversed phrases, as: Civitātes compositæ cum Philippo pace gaudēbant, the states were delighted with the peace made with Philip; or 'the states were glad that they had made peace with Philip'. Liv. 31, 15.

Obs. 2. The nature of the adverbial relation which ablatives absolute have in regard to their principal predicate, must generally be inferred from the requirements of the discourse, the same as in the English participles absolute. The rules about the conjunctions which have to be used if ablatives absolute are to be rendered by clauses, are modified according to the different CLASSES of the ablatives absolute (see R. 224, 228). In this respect it is a rule, common to all clauses, that conjunctions cannot generally be used in connection with Latin ablatives absolute, but must be understood and supplied. Exceptions to this rule occur, in good prose, in regard to the CONCESSIVE conjunctions etsi, quamquam (although), quavis (however), and in regard to the comparative conjunctions quam (than, as), sicut (as), quasi, velut, tamquam (as if) and nisi (except if), which are added to the ablatives absolute, the same as to finite clauses, if the relation of the ablatives absolute would be obscure or ambiguous without them, as: Cum in expectatione senātus esset, bello etsi non indicto, tamen jam decreto, qui regum suam, Persei qui secutūri amicitiam essent, when the senate—the war being already decreed although not yet declared—was expecting which of the kings would follow its cause, and which (would follow) that of Persens. Liv. 42, 19.—Velut dis simul cum patriā relictis, as if their gods had been abandoned (by them) together with their country. Liv. 1, 31.—Quod quasi deo teste, promiseris, id tenendum est, what one has promised as if in the presence of God, must be kept.—Quamvis causā temere insitūtā, however rashly the matter may have been decided upon. Cic. Att. 9, 6. See Cic. Verr. II. 5, 25; Att. 14, 14; Cæs. B. G. 5, 4; B. C. 1, 37; 2, 13; Liv. 33, 39. See B. VI. under the conjunctions mentioned.

Obs. 3. The double function of ablatives absolute as grammatical objects, and as clauses, is blended in a peculiar and idiomatic manner if the subject-ablative is either an INTERROGATIVE or a RELATIVE form-adjective. In this instance the ablatives absolute are not confined to their own relation to the principal predicate, but (in the same manner as interrogative and relative objects) perform functions which affect the grammatical form of the whole sentence, i. e., they make their own governing sentence a relative clause, or an interrogative sentence, or an interrogative clause. If, in such instances, the ablatives absolute may be rendered by verbal nouns, the construction can generally be imitated in English. But if, as it is often the case, such ablatives absolute must be rendered by CLAUSES or by PARTICIPIALS ABSOLUTE, the sentence must be often recast in English either by assigning the relative or interrogative function to a member of the principal sentence, or by making the ablatives absolute the principal sentence, and reducing the principal sentence to the form of a clause:

1. RELATIVE CONNECTIONS: Ea est conātus, quibus patefactis nullam sibi in posterum dignitātis locum reliquit, he undertook things which, if known, would leave to his character no chance for the future (literally: He undertook those things after which having been made known, he left to himself no chance for the future). Cic. Fam. 1, 92.—Movebatur Cæsar misericordiā civium, quibus salvis atque incolumibus rem obtinere malēbat, Cæsar was seized with pity for the citizens whom he preferred to preserve while at the same time accomplishing his purpose (literally: while who being safe and unhurt, he preferred to accomplish his purpose (rem obtinere). Cæs. B. C. 1, 72. See p. 535, R.

2. INTERROGATIVE CONNECTIONS: Tu, quibus rebus gestis, quo hoste superāto concionem donandi causā advocāre ausus es? What have you done, what enemy have you conquered, to entitle you to call a meeting for decreeing presents to you? (literally: After doing what things, after conquering what enemy did you dare to call etc.) Cic. Verr. 3, 80.

[Try to render the following sentences, both literally and idiomatically, according to the rules given above]: 1. Quā frequentia omnium generum prosequente, creditis nos

<sup>1</sup> Make the ablatives absolute the principal sentence.—<sup>2</sup> crowd.—<sup>3</sup> to accompany.

Capnā profectos? Liv. 7. 30.— 2. Vidēmus, quibus<sup>1</sup> extinctis<sup>2</sup> oratoribus quam in paucis spes, quanto in paucioribus facultas quam in multis sit audacia. Cic. Off. 2. 19.— 3. Grave ipsius conscientiae pondus est, quā sublātā<sup>3</sup> jacent<sup>4</sup> omnia. Cic. N. D. 3. 35, 85.

Obs. 4. The principal predicate on which ablatives absolute depend, is not always a finite verb; it may be an infinitive or participle, which may be itself a predicate-ablative, so that two different ablatives absolute may be dependent one on the other. Such participial constructions, being dependent one on the other, must be generally recast in English either by transforming the governing participial construction into a finite clause, or by giving to the dependent construction the form of a prepositional object. In these instances, as in all complicated constructions with ablatives absolute, grammatical analysis ought to be applied, as indicated for reversed phrases in general (R. 193).

Eū in constitūtā nullo ordine ex castris egressi, fecerunt ut consimilis fugae profectio videretur. Having, according to these resolutions literally: after resolving this thing, left the camp in disorder, they made their march appear like a flight. Cæs. B. G. 2. 11. —Servius, conciliatū coluntib<sup>5</sup> plebis agro rīrīm dīcīso, ausus est ferre ad populum, Servius, having won the favor of the plebs by dividing the land in equal shares, dared to apply to the governing ranks* etc. Liv. 1. 16.

Often two different sets of ablatives absolute are not subordinate, but co-ordinate to each other, which it is often difficult to distinguish, the co-ordination very frequently being asyndetic, as: Helvetii rejecto nostro equitū phalanxē facta sub primam aciem nostram successerunt, the Helvetians, after routing our cavalry and having formed a phalanx, came almost up to our first ranks. Cæs. B. G. 1. 24.

Rem. 218. The subject-ablative can never denote the same person or thing as the subject of the governing predicate. This subject cannot appear in the one of the two propositions as a noun, and in the other as a pronoun. Thus the sentence 'Sempronius came after he had been informed that etc.' could not be rendered Sempronius venit, eo certiōre facto etc. Nor, if the sentence had the form 'After Sempronius had been informed, he came', could we render it 'Sempronio certiōre facto, venit'. In such constructions ablatives absolute cannot be used at all, but the participle must be added as an attribute to the subject-nominative, agreeing with it in gender, number and case: Sempronius, certior factus, venit (Sempronius, having been informed, came). This construction of the participle, in order to distinguish it from the attribute-participle in reversed phrases, is called 'DIRECT PARTICIPIAL CONSTRUCTION'.

Obs. 1. Our grammarians forbid the use of ablative absolutes even when pronouns are objects or attributes of the principal predicate, laying down the rule that such pronouns are not permitted if they denote the same person or thing as is indicated by the subject-ablative. They require direct participial constructions for all such cases. Thus they declare the following construction as inelegant: 'Cæsare certiōre hac de re facto, legati ad eam venerunt etc. after Cæsar had been informed of it, envoys came to him). Such constructions, however, are quite frequent in the very best writers, as:

1. Scuto<sup>6</sup> ad Cæsarem relātō<sup>7</sup> inventa sunt in eo foramina<sup>8</sup> CXX. Cæs. B. G. 3. 53.—
2. Nec is<sup>9</sup> tantum fuit Cato, cujus<sup>10</sup> lingua rītorū<sup>11</sup> viguerit<sup>12</sup>. Liv. 39. 40.— 3. Sacerdotibus<sup>13</sup> nostris Helvetii nostros circumvenire cepērunt. Cæs. B. G. 1. 25.— 4. Cæsar convocātis Aduōrum principibus graviter eos accūsāt, quod deestitutus sit<sup>14</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 1. 16.

<sup>1</sup> About the double interrogatives see § 421, R. 73. Translate by finite and co-ordinate interrogative clauses, without subordinating conjunctions. The idea expressed by the abl. abs. must be indicated by introducing the attribute 'of the survivors', to be attached to paucis.— <sup>2</sup> extingui, to be extinguished, to depart life.— <sup>3</sup> by the noun removal.— <sup>4</sup> to lie prostrate.— <sup>5</sup> shield.— <sup>6</sup> referre, to bring.— <sup>7</sup> forāmen, hole.— <sup>8</sup> such a man.— <sup>9</sup> that his.— <sup>10</sup> in his life-time.— <sup>11</sup> should have flourished.— <sup>12</sup> to follow.— <sup>13</sup> left destitute.

* In the earlier times populus was not the whole people, but only the Patricians.

† The omission of co-ordinating conjunctions in such participial constructions generally indicates that one of the two constructions (either the first or the second) is conceived as prior in time to the other.

- 5. Nemo erit qui credat, te invitō<sup>1</sup> provinciam tibi esse decretam. Cic. Phil. 11. 10.— 6. Jugurtha, fratre meo interfecto, regnum ejus sceleris sui prædam fecit. Sall. Jug. 14.— 7. Me libente<sup>2</sup> eripies mihi errorem. Cic. Att. 10. 4.— 8. Cæsar obsidibus imp-rātis centum, hos Aduis custodiendos tradit. Cæs. B. G. 6. 4.— 9. Cæsar principibus Trevirōrum ad se convocātis hos singillatim (singly) Cingetorigi conciliavit. Cæs. B. G. 5. 4.

Obs. 2. But more usually, especially in the Latinity of the silver age, direct participial constructions are used in place of ablatives absolute to which pronominal objects or attributes of the principal sentence refer. In order to change into this construction, we strike out the pronoun in the principal sentence replacing it by the noun which is in the form of the subject-ablative, and to which the grammatical form of the dropped pronoun is given. With this noun, the predicate-ablative is made to agree. Hence sentence No. 4 would be thus transformed: Cæsar convocātis Aduōrum principes graviter accūsāt. In sentences in which the subject-ablative is itself a pronoun, this pronoun must be substituted for that of the principal sentence. Thus the sentence No. 2 would be changed in the following manner: Cato cujus vivi lingua viguerit.

Latin sentences construed according to this form must generally be rendered into English as if a construction of ablatives absolute were employed, as: (Conantibus (eos) dicere prohibuit Ariovistus. Cæs. B. G. 1. 47, when they were trying to speak, Ariovistus prohibited them (as if the construction were 'conantibus eis dicere Ariovistus prohibuit eos')).

DIRECT PARTICIPIAL CONSTRUCTIONS IN PLACE OF ABLATIVES ABSOLUTE.— 1. Nemo dubitavit quid interelūso<sup>3</sup> ab Thessalia exercitui patendum fuerit. Liv. 44. 7.— 2. Parantibus jam oppugnare supervēnit<sup>4</sup> a Cressa prætor. Liv. 42. 56.— 3. Orgetorigem damnatum<sup>5</sup> poena sequi oportebat ut igni cremaretur. Cæs. B. G. 1. 4.— 4. Hæsitantibus<sup>6</sup> in responso<sup>7</sup>, ut curia excederet<sup>8</sup> dictum (est). Liv. 42. 16.— 5. Progressis<sup>9</sup> quatuor millia passuum nihil optabilius<sup>10</sup> erat quam redire. Liv. 44. 5.— 6. Ex Corsicā subactā Cicerējus in Sardiniam transmisit<sup>11</sup>. Liv. 42. 7.— 7. Ludos spectanti<sup>12</sup> (Alexandro) nuntius lætus affertur, Persas a suis esse superatos<sup>13</sup>. Curt. 3. 7. 4.— 8. Hæc dicentis (Cliti) latus<sup>14</sup> hastā transfixit<sup>15</sup> Alexander. Curt. 8. 1. 57.— 9. Alexander descendit in flumen, vixque ingress<sup>16</sup> subito horrōre<sup>17</sup> artus rigere<sup>18</sup> cepērunt. Curt. 3. 5. 3.— 10. Mendaci<sup>19</sup> homini ne verum quidem dicenti credere solēmus. Cic. Div. 2. 146.— 11. Cassandro defuncto<sup>20</sup> Philippus filius succēdit. Just. 15. 4.— 12. Talia agentem<sup>21</sup> atque meditantem (Cæsarem) mors prævenit<sup>22</sup>. Suet. Cæs. 44.— 13. Hannibal Gracchum in insidias inductum<sup>23</sup> sustulit<sup>24</sup>. Nep. 23. 5.— 14. Cæsar imperavit ut Helvetii reducerentur<sup>25</sup>; reductos in hostium numero habuit<sup>26</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 1. 28.

Rem. 219. GRAMMATICAL FORM OF THE SUBJECT-ABLATIVE. Any word that may be used as subject-nominative (nouns, pronouns, absolute or disjunct adjectives) may be used as subject-ablative. Even indeclinable nouns and form-adjectives occur as subject-ablatives, as mille occisis, centum fere captis (Liv. 43, 23). But neither subject-infinitives, nor subject-clauses can be used as subject-ablatives, except some kinds of clauses which may perform the functions of a subject-ablative with impersonal passives as predicate-ablatives (see § 536, R. 234). Personal pronouns, which are often understood as subject-nominatives, cannot be dropped as subject-ablatives. Thus dico, I say, must take the form me dicente (not dicente alone) if it assumes the form of ablatives absolute.

EXCEPTIONS. Nouns of general import, such as may be supplied with absolute adjectives (§ 353), pronouns of the third person, and absolute demonstratives, are sometimes understood as subject-ablatives, especially when they are determined by a RELATIVE CLAUSE, which has then the force of an ABSOLUTE ADJECTIVE, as missis qui regem certidrem facerent, after persons had been sent who were to notify the king. Cognitis quæ transacta erant (inst. of cognitis eis rebus), after those things had been ascertained which had been transacted (after ascertaining what had been transacted).

<sup>1</sup> against thy will.— <sup>2</sup> with my ready permission.— <sup>3</sup> When they would have been cut off.— <sup>4</sup> supervenire alicui, to surprise somebody.— <sup>5</sup> when condemned.— <sup>6</sup> when they hesitated . . . they were told.— <sup>7</sup> responsum, answer.— <sup>8</sup> see § 440, Rem. 45, 3 note 1.— <sup>9</sup> progredi, to advance.— <sup>10</sup> desirable.— <sup>11</sup> crossed his army.— <sup>12</sup> to witness, to be a spectator at.— <sup>13</sup> to defeat.— <sup>14</sup> latus G. eris, side.— <sup>15</sup> transfigere, to pierce.— <sup>16</sup> when the governing words of the participles are pronouns they are frequently dropped in this construction, and must be supplied in the translation.— <sup>17</sup> a chill.— <sup>18</sup> rigere, to be paralyzed.— <sup>19</sup> mendacious.— <sup>20</sup> defungi, to die.— <sup>21</sup> to agitate.— <sup>22</sup> to overtake.— <sup>23</sup> to lead.— <sup>24</sup> to crush.— <sup>25</sup> to take back.— <sup>26</sup> treated them as.

1. Hæc parantibus his<sup>1</sup>, decem regii lembi<sup>2</sup> intrarunt urbem per fluvium. Liv. 44, 12. — 2. Compluribus his (populis) præliis<sup>3</sup> pulsis<sup>4</sup>, Cæsar in finis<sup>5</sup> Vocontiorum pervenit. Cæs. B. G. 1, 10. — 3. Caralitani<sup>6</sup>, simul<sup>7</sup> ad se Valerium mitti audierunt, nondum profecto<sup>8</sup> ex Italia, sua sponte<sup>9</sup> ex oppido Cottam ejiciunt. Cæs. B. C. 1, 30. — 4. Tertio die cum pervenisset ad Citium montem, vix transgressis<sup>10</sup> propter altitudinem nivis, locum castris<sup>11</sup> invenit. Liv. 43, 21. — 5. Adeo<sup>12</sup> secreto regis curatio<sup>13</sup> fuit, admittentibus<sup>14</sup> neminem, ut fama mortuum (eum esse) perferret<sup>15</sup>. Ib. 42, 16. — 6. Romæ imperator, Popillio relicto in custodia<sup>16</sup> jugi<sup>17</sup>, præmissis<sup>18</sup> qui repurgarent<sup>19</sup> iter, ipse cum legionibus agmen<sup>20</sup> ducit. Ib. 44, 4. — 7. Legati senatum accendunt<sup>21</sup>, relictis ordine<sup>22</sup> quæ vidissent. Ib. 42, 25. — 8. Marcus et Acilius peractis quæ agenda in Græciâ erant, principio<sup>23</sup> hiemis Romam redierunt. Ib. 42, 41. — 9. Cæsar, depositis<sup>24</sup> qui erant ex vulneribus ægri, per Epirum iter facere<sup>25</sup> cepit. Cæs. B. C. 3, 78.

Rem. 220. ADJUNCTS OF THE SUBJECT-ABLATIVE AND PREDICATE-ABLATIVE. Both members of the ablatives absolute may take adjuncts, either attributes or objects, the same as the members of an ordinary predicative phrase. The attributes of the subject, if they are adjectives or appositions, must be placed in the ablative (but see Obs. 1). The predicate-ablative may be construed with completing objects, adverbial objects, object-infinitives, and with clauses, finite, participial, or infinitive. The completing and accessory predicates which may be connected with the predicate-ablative must be placed in the ablative, agreeing in gender and number with the subject, as Statu eodem manente, the condition (state) remaining the same. Muræna consule creâto, Muræna having been elected consul. Eumene pacatiore invento, after Eumenes had been found more peaceable. Liv. 37, 45.

Obs. 1. When quisque or perique, with the force of a partitive apposition (see § 375, R. 36) is combined attributively with the subject-ablative, these words take the form of the NOMINATIVE, not that of the ablative (see R. 213, Obs. 2). The same is the case if the predicate-ablative has a reflexive object which is emphasized by ipse, as:

Exercitus Herculis, amisso duce, ac nullis sibi quisque imperium petentibus, brevi dilabitur, the army of Hercules, after the loss of the leader, and since many claimed the command, each for himself, was soon dissolved. Sall. Jug. 18, 3. — Qui acie refugerant milites, missis perique armis, de castrorum defensione non cogitabant, the soldiers who had fled from battle, the most of them leaving behind their arms, did not think of a defence of the camp. Cæs. B. C. 3, 95. — Q. Sempronius, causâ ipse pro se dictâ, quindecim millibus æris damnatur, Q. Sempronius, after having himself defended his cause (having been his own defender), is condemned to fifteen thousand ases. Liv. 4, 44. — Dis auctoribus in spem suam quisque acceptis, After each had accepted the authority of the gods for his hope. Liv. 21, 45.

Obs. 2. The adjuncts of predicate-ablatives are often very complicated. Combinations of this kind often belong to the most perfect specimens of Latin style (especially Cæsar being unsurpassed in the elegant and masterly use of this construction), while they are sometimes so repugnant to the English idiom that a literal rendering would make the period almost unintelligible. In such instances the Latin sentence must be regularly recast, by separating the ablatives absolute and all their adjuncts from the principal part of the sentence, and by rendering the whole complex of the ablatives absolute as an independent sentence. We add an example of this kind:

Helvetii, (c) sen quod timore perterritos Romanos discedere a se existimarent, (e) eo magis quod pridie (f) superioribus locis occupatis prælum non commisissent, (d) sive eo quod re frumentariâ intercedi posse confiderent, (b) commutato consilio atque itinere converso, (a) nostros a novissimo agmine inæqui ac lacessere cepèrunt. Cæs. B. G. 1, 23.

<sup>1</sup> Supply 'persons'. — <sup>2</sup> small boats. — <sup>3</sup> abl. of means: in several battles. — <sup>4</sup> pellere, to rout. — <sup>5</sup> finis (plur.), territory. — <sup>6</sup> inhabitants of Caralis, the modern Cagliari. — <sup>7</sup> as soon as. — <sup>8</sup> supply eo, i. e., Valerio. — <sup>9</sup> of their own accord. — <sup>10</sup> transgredi, to cross; supply eis, i. e., the soldiers. — <sup>11</sup> for a camp; i. e., faciemus. — <sup>12</sup> so. — <sup>13</sup> the cure. — <sup>14</sup> supply 'his friends', 'those about him'. — <sup>15</sup> perferre, to report. — <sup>16</sup> for the guarding. — <sup>17</sup> jugum, mountain-chain. — <sup>18</sup> to send ahead. — <sup>19</sup> to clear. — <sup>20</sup> the army. — <sup>21</sup> accendere, to inflame. — <sup>22</sup> in succession. — <sup>23</sup> beginning. — <sup>24</sup> to leave behind. — <sup>25</sup> to march.

On the principal sentence (a) are first dependent the ablatives absolute (b) commutato . . . converso (after having modified their plan and changed the direction of their march). The disjunctive co-ordinate clauses (c) and (d) sen quod timore perterritos . . . existimarent, and sive eo quod . . . confiderent, are causal clauses dependent on the ablatives absolute (having changed the plan either because they believed that the Romans were turning their march from fear, or because they trusted that they, the Romans, might be cut off from their supplies). The clause (e) eo magis quod . . . commisissent, is a causal clause subordinate to the first of the co-ordinate clauses (c) (the more because they had not accepted a battle). The ablatives absolute (f) superioribus locis occupatis (although they had occupied commanding positions), is a concessive clause, dependent on the second co-ordinate clause (d). — This period literally rendered would make a harsh English construction. Evidently the ablatives absolute (b) must be separated from the rest of the sentence, and be made independent of it, because several clauses, partly subordinate one to the other, are dependent on it, and these in a literal translation, might be taken for dependencies of the principal predicate. * The Helvetians, either because they supposed the Romans were retreating from fear, especially since on the previous day, although in possession of commanding positions, they had declined battle, or because they were confident that they would cut them off from their supplies, modified their plans, and changed the direction of their march. Soon they began to press on our troops, and to engage them in their rear.

Rem. 221. Ablatives absolute of all classes are rendered in one of the following three ways: 1) by the English participles absolute; 2) by finite clauses with a conjunction; 3) by prepositional expressions with a verbal noun, either the participial in ing or an ordinary substantive.

Thus the phrase navibus amissis may be respectively rendered 1) having lost the ships; the ships having been lost; 2) after (when, since, because, if, although) the ships had been lost; 3) after (by, on account of, considering) the loss of the ships.

§ 531. In ablatives absolute of the first class (with perfect passive participles, R. 216), the Latin PASSIVE construction is generally changed into an English ACTIVE one if the passive agent (logical subject with 'by') of the participle denotes the same person or thing as the GRAMMATICAL subject of the principal predicate.

Rem. 222. The passive agent of the predicate-ablative, if it denotes the same thing or person as the grammatical subject of the principal predicate, is always UNDERSTOOD in Latin, being never indicated by pronouns or form-adjectives referring to the subject (such as ab eo, ab his etc.). In this instance the English idiom requires a change of the Latin passive into an active construction, as: Divico hoc responso dato discessit, Divico left after he had given (or having given) this answer, or Having given this answer, Divico left (literally: after this answer had been given [by him]). Cæs. B. G. 1, 14. This form, in historical style, is the most usual one in which ablatives absolute occur.

Obs. If English active participial constructions (or their equivalent clauses) whose subject is the same as that of the principal predicate, must be rendered by Latin perfect participles (R. 216, Obs. 1), we must distinguish whether the English participles have transitive objects (in the LATIN sense), or not.

1. If the English participle is WITHOUT a transitive object, it cannot be rendered by ablatives absolute, the attempts of some ancient Latin writers to introduce for this purpose a construction with impersonal ablatives absolute having proved abortive. (See R. 234.) We must in this instance either use a DIRECT participial construction (R. 217, Obs. 2) if a DEPENDENT verb is available, or else employ a clause in lieu of a participial construction, as: CATILINE, having returned to the city, assembled his followers, Catilina, ad urbem regressus (from the deponent regredi) suos convocavit. Here we can neither say Catilina regresso (which would be against R. 218), nor Catilina ad urbem redito, nor Catilina ad urbem reditus (both of which expressions would contain personal passives formed of neuter verbs). But we may say Calpurnia postquam ad urbem rediit, which form must be used if there is no deponent verb available.

2. If the participle has a transitive object (the subjects being the same), a participial construction may be employed in two ways: (a) when a deponent verb is available, we use a DIRECT participial construction (the same as in the case No. 1), but not an ablative absolute, as: Cæsar having promised help, SENT AN ENVOY TO ARIOVISTUS, Cæsar auxilium pollicitus (from the deponent, polliceri) legatum ad Ariovistum misit (not auxilio pollicito, which would give to the deponent participle a passive meaning). (b) When no deponent verb is available, we must change the construction of the participial clause passively by turning the transitive object into a subject, the active subject becoming the passive agent. Thus, by using the verb promittere instead of polliceri in the proposed sentence, we change its construction into 'Cæsar, help having been promised by him, SENT AN AMBASSADOR'. Leaving out the passive agent ab eo (by him) according to R. 222, we translate: Cæsar auxilio promisso legatum misit. We may, indeed, even here employ a clause with postquam, which form may often be preferable from rhetorical reasons. Such a reason may be found in a logical impropriety to make the transitive object a passive subject. Thus the following sentence 'THE CONSUL, after (upon) perceiving the enemy, ORDERED A RETREAT' may be expressed either: Consul, conspicatus hostis, receptui canere jussit (using the deponent conspicari), or, Consul, postquam hostis conspexit, receptui etc. But it would be less elegant to use ablatives absolute (by means of the transitive active conspicere): Consul hostibus conspectis, although the construction would be perfectly correct from a merely GRAMMATICAL point of view.

1. Cæsar, necessarii rebus imperiis, ad legionem decimam devenit<sup>1</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 2, 21. — 2. His rebus celeriter administratis ipse ad exercitum contendit<sup>2</sup>. Ib. 3, 9. — 3. Compluribus expugnatis oppidis Cæsar statuit expectandam classem. Ib. 3, 14. — 4. Fama percubuerat Cæsarem fugere, pene omnibus copiis amissis. Ib. B. C. 3, 79. — 5. Cæsar Voluseno mandat ut, exploratis omnibus rebus, ad se quam primum revertatur. Ib. B. G. 4, 21. — 6. His Cæsar cognitis milites aggerem<sup>7</sup> comportare<sup>8</sup> jubet. Ib. B. C. 3, 62.

Rem. 223. If the passive agent of the predicate-ablative is not the same with the grammatical subject of the principal sentence, the Latin passive construction is retained in English. Even in this instance the passive agent is generally understood in Latin. If, for the sake of clearness, it is required to mention the doer of the action, the passive agent takes its usual form with ab and the ablative.

Legationibus dimissis (i. e., a senātu) Harpalus in Macedoniam regressus est, the ambassadors having been dismissed, Harpalus returned to Macedonia. Liv. 42, 15. Preoccupatis animis ab Eumene rege, omnis defensio legatorum respuebatur, the minds being (having been) preoccupied by king Eumenes, all defence of the envoys was rejected. Liv. 42, 14.

1. Omni Gallia pacata<sup>9</sup>, ab eis nationibus quæ trans Rhenum incolabant<sup>10</sup> legati ad Cæsarem missi sunt. Cæs. B. G. 2, 35. — 2. Cretensibus<sup>11</sup> cum hoc responso dimissis, Chalcidenses<sup>12</sup> vocati sunt. Liv. 43, 7. — 3. Tejis<sup>13</sup> capitis sex tribunos militum consulari potestate<sup>14</sup> insequens<sup>15</sup> annus habuit. Liv. 5, 24. — 4. Signo dato undique<sup>16</sup> simul clamor ingens oritur. Sall. Jug. 57, 3. — 5. Hac oratione<sup>17</sup> habita<sup>18</sup> mirum in modum conversæ<sup>19</sup> sunt omnium mentes. Cæs. B. G. 1, 41. — 6. Interfecto Indutimaro, ad ejus propinquos a Trevis imperium deferitur<sup>20</sup>. Cæs. B. G. 6, 2. — 7. Hac oratione ab Divitiaco habitâ omnes auxilium a Cæsare petere cœperunt. Cæs. B. G. 1, 32. — 8. Confirmatâ re ab exploratoribus<sup>21</sup> omnem equitatum (Cæsar) præmisit<sup>22</sup>. Ib. 2, 11.

Obs. It is unusual to refer by pronouns or demonstratives dependent on the predicate-ablative to the grammatical subject or other members of the principal sentence. Such pronouns or demonstratives are regularly left out, and must be supplied according to the requirements of the text.

1. Hannibal spe potiundæ Noke ademptâ (i. e., ei) Acerras recessit. Liv. 23, 17. — 2. Legati, eâ re permissâ (i. e., eis) diem concilio constituerunt. Cæs. B. G. 1, 30. —

<sup>1</sup> Devenire ad, to go to meet. — <sup>2</sup> administrare aliquid, to attend to something. — <sup>3</sup> to hasten. — <sup>4</sup> percrebescere, to become frequent, to be multiplied, to be spread about. — <sup>5</sup> to examine. The passive agent is identical with the subject of revertatur, being contained in the verb. — <sup>6</sup> The subject of the principal predicate is sometimes placed between the two terms of the ablative absolute, if it is identical with the passive agent understood. — <sup>7</sup> material for the rampart. — <sup>8</sup> to carry. — <sup>9</sup> pacare, to reduce (lit. 'to make peaceful'). — <sup>10</sup> to live. — <sup>11</sup> the Cretans. — <sup>12</sup> those of Chalcis. — <sup>13</sup> § 38, 3. — <sup>14</sup> military tribunes with consular power. — <sup>15</sup> next. — <sup>16</sup> everywhere. — <sup>17</sup> address. — <sup>18</sup> to deliver. — <sup>19</sup> convertere, to change. — <sup>20</sup> to confer, § 427, R. 11. — <sup>21</sup> scout. — <sup>22</sup> to send in advance.

3. Anaxagoram ferunt, annunciatâ (i. e., ei) morte filii dixisse: Sciëbam me genuisse mortalem. Cic. Tusc. 3, 30.

§ 532. The clauses by which ablatives absolute with perfect participles may be rendered, or by which English participial constructions, employed in rendering the ablatives absolute, may be replaced, are 1) TEMPORAL, 2) CAUSAL, 3) CONDITIONAL, 4) CONCESSIVE.

Rem. 224. The TEMPORAL CLAUSES, corresponding to such ablatives absolute, take the conjunctions after or when (properly with a pluperfect). To this class belong most of the instances of ablative absolute construction.

If the ablatives absolute are the exponents of CAUSAL CLAUSES, the conjunctions since or because (with a pluperfect, or respectively a perfect) are employed, as

